During this feeding of the people the schoolmaster singeth the Agnus Dei three times slowly. But where the communicants are so many that the three Agnus Deis will not reach until all have been served, then a Latin thanksgiving is sung thereto, as the most fitting can be found in the gradual.

Hof lists what was to be added "for the multitude of communicants". Hof's sequences in Latin and German come first, then Discubuit, then four German hymns, and then, if still needed, the short hymns otherwise sung after the sermon. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 426):

> His propter communicantium multitudinem non sufficientibus, addantur eodem modo, quo ad organa et choros, germanicae cantilenae NB. Item sequentiae notae, in lingua latina et germanica compositae ad festa praecipua. Praeterea responso[…]rium Discubuit Jesus, in secunda parte missalis latini. 1. Jesus Christus unser Heiland, Johann Hussens. 2. Ich dank dem Herrn von ganzem herzen. 3. Erbarm dich mein, o Herr Gott. 4. Es wolt uns Gott genedig sein. Alles nach zal und meng der communicanten, also das auch folgende gesanglein (welche sonsten am sontag, desgleichen mittwoch und freitag nach vollendter predigt gesungen werden) zu end der communion mit hinangehenk[et werden können].

These not sufficing because of the multitude of communicants, let German songs be added in the same manner as regards organ and choirs. Note: item the known sequences, composed in the Latin and German tongues, for the chief feasts. Moreover the responsory Discubuit Jesus, in the second part of the Latin missal. 1. "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," John Hus's. 2. "I thank the Lord with all my heart." 3. "Have mercy on me, O Lord God." 4. "May God Bestow on Us His Grace." All according to the number and multitude of the communicants, so that the following little songs also (which are otherwise sung on Sunday, and likewise Wednesday and Friday, after the sermon is ended) [may be] hung on at the end of the communion.

Wittenberg lists hymns "until the communion is over", including festal hymns. Wittenberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 705):

> Weil das volk communicirt, singt man sanctus; agnus dei; Jesus Christus unser heiland; got sei gelobt; das deutsch confitebor tibi; pange lingua lateinisch und dergleichen, auch deutsche gesenge vom feste etc. bis die communion aus ist.

While the people communicate, one singeth the Sanctus; the Agnus Dei; "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior"; "O Lord, We Praise Thee"; the German Confitebor tibi; Pange lingua in Latin, and the like; also German songs of the feast, etc., until the communion is over.

8.14.3 The song stops when the communion ends

Bugenhagen's orders stop the hymn at the end of the distribution, even in mid-hymn, and go straight to the German Agnus Dei. Pomerania, Kirchenordnung, 1535 (Sehling 4, p. 341):

> De wile de communicatio waret, schal de kerke singen ein agnus dei latinisch eder düdesch: O lam gades etc., Jesus Christus etc., Godt si gelavet etc., den psalm confitebor; overst nicht lenger den de communicatio waret, wenn de lüde sind tom sacrament gangen, so singet me ein ander düdesch agnus dei: Christe, du lam gades etc.

While the communion lasteth, the church shall sing an Agnus Dei in Latin or German, "Lamb of God, Pure and Holy," etc., "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc., the psalm Confitebor; but no longer than the communion lasteth. When the people have gone to the sacrament, another German Agnus Dei is sung, "Christ, thou Lamb of God," etc.

The appendix of the same order is sharper still: "all other singing shall then straightway cease, notwithstanding that a song begun be not sung out with all its verses" (Sehling 4, p. 344):

> Dat dudesche agnus dei; so balde de lüde communiceret hebben, alle andere sank sal denne flux uphören, unangesehn ein angehaven leed mit allen verschen nicht utgesungen si: Christe, du lam gades, de du drechst de sund der werld, vorbarm di unser.

The German Agnus Dei: as soon as the people have communicated, all other singing shall then straightway cease, notwithstanding that a song begun be not sung out with all its verses: "Christ, thou Lamb of God, that bearest the sin of the world, have mercy upon us."

Mecklenburg, Ordeninge der misse, 1545 (Sehling 5, p. 155):

> Me schal ock nicht lenger singen, alse de berichtinge waret, wen de uthe is, schal ock de sank uphören. Unde denne also vort in den steden und dörperen schal me anfangen: O lam gades unschüldig dre mal, edder Christe, du lam gades.

One shall also not sing longer than the communion lasteth; when that is out, the singing also shall cease. And then forthwith in the towns and villages one shall begin "Lamb of God, Pure and Holy," three times, or "Christ, thou Lamb of God."

Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 91):

> So hevet de Scholemeister vort an: Jhesus Christus, unser Heiland etc., Edder wat anders, dat dem gelick ys. Wen de berichtinge uthe ys, so höret ock up de Sanck.

Then the schoolmaster beginneth forthwith "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., or something else that is like it. When the communion is out, the singing also ceaseth.

Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 5, p. 553):

> Wenn nu de communicanten gan tom altare schollen de gesänge vam sacramente gesungen werden: Jesus Christus etc., Godt sie gelavet etc. effte na gelegenheit der feste süss ein gude gesang, doch also, dat de organiste stedes mank her spele, und dat de chore gelickwoll alle verse singe. Up den festen, wen dar veele communicanten sin, unde ock sünst up den sondagen, schall men mehr singen dat agnus dei latine, underwilen ock düdesch, Christe du lamme gades etc. Wenn nu de communion geschehen, schall dat chor uphören to singen.

When now the communicants go to the altar, the songs of the sacrament shall be sung, "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc., or, according to the occasion of the feasts, else a good song; yet so that the organist play always in between, and that the choir nevertheless sing all the verses. On the feasts, when there are many communicants, and also otherwise on the Sundays, one shall sing more: the Agnus Dei in Latin, at times also in German, "Christ, thou Lamb of God," etc. When now the communion hath taken place, the choir shall cease singing.

In the Kurpfalz order the minister could stop the singing if the service ran too long. Kurpfalz, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 14, p. 165):

> Es were dann, das von wegen der communicanten anzahl oder anderer dergleichen zufälligen ursachen der actus etwas zu lang sein wolte, so mag der minister mit dem gesang abzubrechen bevehlen.

Unless it were that, by reason of the number of communicants or other such chance causes, the action would grow somewhat too long; then the minister may command the singing to be broken off.

8.14.4 Stanzas between the actions

In the earliest Low German Mass from Schleswig-Holstein the choir sang one stanza of "Jesus Christus unser Heiland" after the consecration of the bread, the next during the distribution of the bread, and then fell silent until the cup. Schleswig-Holstein, Deutsche Messe [after 1526] (Sehling 23, pp. 56–57):

> Nu hevet dat cor an to syngende: Jhesus Christus, unse hylant. Eyn versch dar van. Dar na kert sick de prester myt dem licham Cristi thom volchke.

Now the choir beginneth to sing "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," one verse thereof. Thereafter the priest turneth himself with the body of Christ to the people.

> Unde singet ßo lange, dat de licham Christi vordelet is. Dar na swicht dat chor stille. Unde de prester hevet vordan an, dat bloth Christi tho consecrerende.

And [the choir] singeth so long until the body of Christ is distributed. Thereafter the choir keepeth still, and the priest beginneth further to consecrate the blood of Christ.

Bugenhagen's Hamburg order has the same pattern for bread and cup: the song stops when the communicants have received the bread, and after the cup the rest of the hymn is sung, or more is begun. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 529):

> De wile singet dat volk: Jesus Christus etc., edder: God si gelavet und gebenediet etc. Wen averst de communicanten sin togegaen, so schall de sank uphoren und de prester neme den kelk und drege den bevel Christi vordtan.

Meanwhile the people sing "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., or "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc. But when the communicants have come forward, the singing shall cease, and the priest shall take the cup and set forth the command of Christ further.

8.14.5 The Latin pieces and the German hymns beside them

Brandenburg began with the Latin Discubuit Jesus and added German hymns if there were many communicants. One German hymn was to be sung after the communion in any case. Brandenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 70):

> Darauf sol angefangen werden das responsorium discubuit Jesus latinisch und ob der communicanten viel weren, das man damit nicht zureichen mocht, sol man dem volk deudsch anfahen zu singen, gott sei gelobet, oder Jesus Christus, unser heiland, welcher gesenge einer, ob auch gleich das discubuit zureichet, dennoch gleichwol nach der communion sol gesungen werden.

Thereupon the responsory Discubuit Jesus shall be begun in Latin; and if the communicants were many, so that it would not reach, one shall begin to sing German to the people, "O Lord, We Praise Thee," or "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior"; one of which songs, even though the Discubuit should suffice, shall nevertheless be sung after the communion.

Kurpfalz, provisional Kirchenordnung, 1546 (Sehling 14, p. 97):

> Under der communion singt das volck den gesang Jhesus Cristus, unser heilandt, oder Gott sei gelobet oder sonst ein cristlichen teutschen psalmen oder auch der chor das responsorium: Discubuit Jesus cum discipulis suis oder das teutsche pange lingua. Nach der communion singt der chor die agnus Dei.

During the communion the people sing the song "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," or "O Lord, We Praise Thee," or else a Christian German psalm; or the choir also the responsory Discubuit Jesus cum discipulis suis, or the German Pange lingua. After the communion the choir singeth the Agnus Dei.

Bremen, Kirchenordnung, 1534 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 460):

> Darna treden de Communicanten tho, Am ersten de menne, darna de frowen. Under middeler tidt singet de Scholemester: O sacrum convivium Unde Jhesus Christus unse Heilandt edder Sanctus unde Agnus Dei.

Thereafter the communicants come forward, first the men, thereafter the women. In the meantime the schoolmaster singeth O sacrum convivium and "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," or the Sanctus and Agnus Dei.

At Heilbronn the Latin and German Pange lingua were sung in alternation with "Gott sei gelobet". Heilbronn, Kirchenordnung, 1530 (Sehling 17/1, pp. 285–286):

> Darumb singt man den Himnum Pange lingua, latin und deutsch, mitt dem […] lobgesanng: Gott sey gelobett unnd gebenedeiet etc.

Therefore one singeth the hymn Pange lingua, Latin and German, with the song of praise "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc.

The Heilbronn song order of 1543 turns to the German and Latin Te Deum at great communions. Heilbronn, Ordnung des Kirchengesangs, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, p. 323):

> Unter dem Nachtmahl Sanctus oder Agnus dei (lat.) oder Pange lingua (lat./deutsch) mit Orgel. An hohen Festen oder bei viel Communicanten Te deum laudamus deutsch und latein und Orgel (1 Vers um den andern). Beschluß: Grates nunc omnes auf der Orgel.

During the Supper, the Sanctus or Agnus Dei (Latin), or Pange lingua (Latin and German), with the organ. On high feasts, or with many communicants, the Te Deum laudamus in German and Latin with the organ (one verse after the other). Conclusion: Grates nunc omnes on the organ.

8.14.6 Other hymns in the slot

Bugenhagen allowed "often" other hymns: "Nun freut euch", the baptism hymn, and German hymns of the feasts. Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 57):

> Dewyle singet dat volk: Jhesus Christus, unse heiland etc. Edder: Got sy gelavet und gebenediet etc. Edder den psalm: Confitebor düdesch etc. Men mach tho tyden und wol vaken ock andere ledere under der communio singen, also: Nu frouet ju etc. Item van der döpe etc. und gude ledere, psalme und hymnos düdesch van den festen.

Meanwhile the people sing "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., or "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc., or the psalm Confitebor in German, etc. One may at times, and well often, sing also other songs under the communion, as "Dear Christians, One and All, Rejoice," etc., item the one of baptism, etc., and good songs, psalms and hymns in German of the feasts.

Rostock, Conformitas ceremoniarum, c. 1560 (Sehling 5, p. 288):

> drauf sol der organist schlahen und die kirche singen Jesus Christus unser heiland, und dazu, wen der communicanten viel ist, gott sei gelobet und helf gott, das mirs gelinge.

thereupon the organist shall play and the church sing "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," and thereto, when the communicants are many, "O Lord, We Praise Thee" and "Help, God, that I may succeed."

Engerhafe, Liturgie, 1583 (Sehling 7/1, p. 681):

> Sub communione vero sive canatur: Was kan unß kommen an für not, od. O Christ, wir danken deiner güt, od. Jesus Christus, unser heyland, od. Nun freuet euch, lieben christengemein, et id genus alia cantica, sive ludatur organis.

But during the communion let there be sung either "What need can come upon us," or "O Christ, we thank thee for thy goodness," or "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," or "Dear Christians, One and All, Rejoice," and other songs of that kind; or let the organ be played.

At Ortenburg "at times also the Passion" was sung, according as the communicants were many or few. Ortenburg, 1563 (Sehling 13, p. 532):

> Unter solcher austailung aber hat der chor gesungen Jesus Christus, unser Herr, oder Jesus Christus unser Hailand, zu zeiten auch den passion, nachdem der communicanten vil oder wenig gewesen sind.

But during such distribution the choir hath sung "Jesus Christ our Lord," or "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," at times also the Passion, according as the communicants have been many or few.

Limpurg changed the communion hymn by season: the Passion in Lent and "Christ lag in Todesbanden" on Easter Day. Limpurg, Kirchenordnung, 1610 (Sehling 16, p. 620):

> Under dern Communion singe der Schuelmeister eintweder des Hussen gesang: Jesus Christus, unser haillandt etc. Oder: Nun frewet Euch, Lieben Christen gemain. Item: Gott sei gelobet und gebenedeyet. In der Fasten den Passion, am Ostertag: Christ lag inn todtes banden.

During the communion let the schoolmaster sing either Hus's song, "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., or "Dear Christians, One and All, Rejoice"; item "O Lord, We Praise Thee." In Lent the Passion; on Easter Day, "Christ Jesus Lay in Death's Strong Bands."

At Strasbourg Psalm 51 was sung at "great communions". Strasbourg, Gottesdienstordnung, 1577 (Sehling 20/1, p. 516):

> Under der communion singt man entweder: Jesus Christus, unser heyland, Johan Hussen lied, oder: Gott sey gelobet und gebenedeyet, oder wens grosse communion sind: O herre Gott, begnade mich, oder sonst ein gesang de tempore.

During the communion one singeth either "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," John Hus's song, or "O Lord, We Praise Thee," or, when there are great communions, "O Lord God, be gracious unto me," or else a song of the season.

In the village order of Veit Dietrich's Nürnberg Agendbüchlein, Sebald Heyden's "Als Jesus Christus unser Herr" was the first choice, with the shorter hymns "if that be too long". Nürnberg, Veit Dietrich, Agendbüchlein, 1545 (Sehling 11, p. 502):

> Inmittels sol die kirch singen den gesang Als Jesus Christus, unser Herr, oder, wo solches zu lang - Gott sei gelobet oder Jesus Christus unser Heiland.

Meanwhile the church shall sing the song "When Jesus Christ our Lord," or, where that is too long, "O Lord, We Praise Thee," or "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior."

The Kassel general synod of 1607, as Hesse turned Reformed, kept "Gott sei gelobet". Beside it stood Lobwasser's Psalms 23, 103 and 111, "according to the occasion and number of the communicants". Hessen-Kassel, Abschied der Kasseler Generalsynode, 1607 (Reformed; Sehling 9, p. 75):

> und, da coena Domini, under wehrender communion der gesang: Gott sey gelobt undt gebenedeiet etc. oder sonstenn als den Lobwasser der 23., 103., 111. psalm nach gelegenheitt undt anzall der communicanten.

and when the Lord's Supper is held, during the communion the song "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc., or else, as out of Lobwasser, the twenty-third, hundred and third, hundred and eleventh psalm, according to the occasion and number of the communicants.

8.14.7 Choir, people and organ

Brenz wanted the choir in Latin and the church in German by turns, so that the communicants were admonished "not only inwardly but outwardly by the understandable song". Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1527 (Sehling 17/1, p. 51):

> Hie zwuschen sol der Cor latheinisch und die kirch teutsch umbeinander singen, auff das die entpfaher des Sacraments und andere umbstender nit allein inwendig, sonder außwendig durch das verstendtlich gesang irs thuns ermant werden.

Herebetween the choir shall sing in Latin and the church in German by turns, that the receivers of the sacrament and others standing about may be admonished of their doing, not only inwardly, but outwardly through the understandable song.

Pomerania limited the organ during the communion, forbade worldly tunes on it, and had choir and people sing alternate verses so that the hymns would be learned by all. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 439):

> Under der communion singet men: Jesus Christus unser heiland etc., edder: Godt si gelavet etc., edder: O lam gades unschüldich etc., Christe du lam gades, item: Ick danke dem herren van ganzem herten etc. mit der note, de im düdischen sankboke steit, unde der geliken düdische senge, de sick up de communion rimen. Item, discubuit Iesus, item de latinischen agnus dei, choral, item o sacrum convivium etc. Wenn dise gesenge under der communion gesungen werden, schölen de organisten eren gesank mit der orgel deste körter maken, unde nene weltlike, lichtverdige gesenge slan. De pastor schal vorschaffen, dat de orgeln der maten modereret werden, dat men de düdischen psalme under der communion mit der gemeine ganz tom ende singe, unde dat de vörgesetteden gesenge ummeschichtich gesungen werden, dat dat chor unde dat volk einen vers umme den andern singe, up dat se alle to gelick den schölern unde der gemeine gebrücklick werden.

During the communion one singeth "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., or "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc., or "Lamb of God, Pure and Holy," etc., "Christ, thou Lamb of God," item "I thank the Lord with all my heart," etc., with the note that standeth in the German songbook, and the like German songs that rhyme with the communion. Item Discubuit Jesus, item the Latin Agnus Dei, in plainsong, item O sacrum convivium, etc. When these songs are sung during the communion, the organists shall make their song with the organ the shorter, and play no worldly, light songs. The pastor shall see to it that the organs be so moderated that the German psalms during the communion be sung wholly to the end with the congregation, and that the aforesaid songs be sung by turns, the choir and the people one verse after another, that they may all alike become familiar to the scholars and the congregation.

Schönburg let the organ play during the communion only on high feasts. Schönburg, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 2, p. 171):

> Sub communione mag man abwechselsweise singen das teutsche santus etc., als Jesus Christus, zuweilen das lateinische sanctus oder agnus dei novi testamenti. Der organista soll sub communione nicht schlagen, es sei denn an hohen festen.

During the communion one may sing by turns the German Sanctus, etc., as "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," at times the Latin Sanctus or Agnus Dei of the New Testament. The organist shall not play during the communion, unless on high feasts.

The organ's alternation with choir and people is treated in Chapter 9, §9.3.3.

8.14.8 How fixed the slot was Fixed core, open margin. Every order opens the slot with Hus's hymn, "Gott sei gelobet", the German Sanctus or Psalm 111. What changed from service to service was not the choice but the quantity, measured by the number of communicants. The hymns added at the margin were festal hymns on feasts, the Passion in Lent, Latin chants where there was a school, and psalms of penitence or thanks.

8.15 The Agnus Dei, the thanksgiving, and the close

Two German Agnus Dei hymns were sung, during the communion (§8.14) or after it. One was Luther's "Christe, du Lamm Gottes" (§8.15.1), the other Nikolaus Decius's "O Lamm Gottes unschuldig". Both kept the threefold form of the Latin. Decius's hymn was one stanza sung three times. The third time it ended with the prayer for peace instead of the prayer for mercy, as the third Agnus Dei ends with dona nobis pacem instead of miserere nobis. Neuenrade prints it so in Low German, after a plain German Agnus Dei with the same rubric. Neuenrade, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 22, p. 532):

> Ein ander Agnus: O Lam Godes, unschüldig am stam des Crützes geschlachtet. Allthijt gefunden düldich, Wiewol du wordest verachtet. Alle sünde heffstu gedragen, Sunst möste wy vertzagen. Erbarm dick unser, o Jhesu. Thom drüdden mal: Verlen uns frede, o Jhesu.

Another Agnus: O Lamb of God, innocent, slain on the stem of the cross, at all times found patient, although thou wast despised. All sins hast thou borne, else must we have despaired. Have mercy upon us, O Jesu. The third time: Grant us peace, O Jesu.

The other orders that show the form give the same three singings:

- Calenberg-Göttingen 1542 prints the one stanza with its notes. Sehling's editor notes that the order's Masses for the Passion, Easter, Ascension and Pentecost add "Gib uns deinen friden, o Jhesu!" (Give us thy peace, O Jesu!) (Sehling 6/2, p. 816, n. 52a; §7.13.3).
- Mecklenburg 1545 has it begun "three times" when the communion ends (§8.14.3).
- Engerhafe 1583 sings it the first, the second and the third time at three points of the rite (§8.13.2).
- Hof 1592 has it sung "three times, the last time with these words added: Gib uns dein fride, o Jesu" (Sehling 11, pp. 426, 429). On Maundy Thursday and Good Friday Hof divides it about a baptism, "the first stanza before one beginneth to baptize, and then after the baptism the other two stanzas" (Sehling 11, p. 431).

The longer form is not found. No order uses the longer five-stanza version of the hymn, which is not in the corpus and is cited here only to tell the two forms apart. It keeps Decius's stanza first, but the other four stanzas are new:

- two on the Passion, "O Lamm Gottes im Staube, / Mit Blut und Thränen bedecket" and "O Lamm Gottes, unschuldig, / Trugst du die herbe Verhöhnung";
- one of thanks and repentance, "Von Herzen wir dir danken";
- one of trust at the last hour, "Stärk in uns das Vertrauen", which closes the hymn with the prayer for peace, "Gieb uns dein Frieden, o Jesu".

Only the first and fourth stanzas end "Erbarm dich unser, o Jesu", so the stanzas no longer follow the three petitions of the Latin. None of the lines of the four new stanzas occurs in the corpus, and no order sings the hymn more than three times or counts more than three stanzas. Most orders name the hymn by its first line only and do not show the form. Those that show it give the short one.

8.15.1 "Christe, du Lamm Gottes" after the communion

In Bugenhagen's orders, and in those that followed them, the German Agnus Dei "Christe, du Lamm Gottes" was sung after all had communicated. It was sung three times, the third time ending "gib uns deinen Frieden". It served as the people's thanksgiving, addressed to Christ in heaven. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 529):

> Wen se averst alle communiceret hebben und sint up eren steden, so singen se und alle volk to Christo im hemele dat dudesche agnus dei dremal also: Christe, du lam gades, de du drechst de sunde der werldt, erbarm di unser; tom drudden: giff uns dinen frede. Amen.

But when they have all communicated and are in their places, they and all the people sing to Christ in heaven the German Agnus Dei three times, thus: "Christ, thou Lamb of God, that bearest the sin of the world, have mercy upon us"; the third time, "give us thy peace. Amen."

The Braunschweig order of 1528 has the same rubric (Sehling 6/1, p. 442). The Albertine order lets any of the German communion hymns be closed with "Christe, du Lamm Gottes". Saxony (Albertine), Kirchenordnung, 1539, variants A and B (Sehling 1, p. 275):

> so man der deutschen gesenge (als Jesus Christus unser heiland u. s. w., item, das deudsche sanctus, Esaia dem propheten das geschah, item den psalm ich danke dem herrn von ganzem herzen u. s. w.) eines oder mehr gesungen hat, mag man mit dem folgenden deutschen agnus dei beschliessen: [folgen die Noten zu Christe du lamb gottes, der du tregst die sünd der welt, erbarm dich unser. Verleih uns dein [fried].

when one or more of the German songs have been sung (as "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., item the German Sanctus, "Isaiah, Mighty Seer in Days of Old," item the psalm "I thank the Lord with all my heart," etc.), one may conclude with the German Agnus Dei following: [the notes follow to "Christ, thou Lamb of God, that bearest the sin of the world, have mercy upon us. Grant us thy peace."]

> Unter der communion singe man Jesus Christus, unser heiland. Item, Gott sei gelobet, Agnus dei, Esaia, dem propheten. Und so der communicanten viel sind, singe man den CXI. psalm: Ich danke dem herrn von ganzem herzen. Wie er im deudschen gesang buch stehet. Desgleichen andere deudsche geistliche lieder. Und zum beschlus: Christe, du lam gottes.

During the communion let "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior" be sung; item "O Lord, We Praise Thee," the Agnus Dei, "Isaiah, Mighty Seer in Days of Old." And when the communicants are many, let the hundred and eleventh psalm be sung, "I thank the Lord with all my heart," as it standeth in the German songbook; likewise other German spiritual songs. And at the close, "Christ, thou Lamb of God."

At Suhl the boys sang songs of the season or of the sacrament during the communion, "and it is commonly concluded with the song Christe du Lamm Gottes". Suhl, Ordnung des predigamts, 1562 (Sehling 2, p. 351):

> Communio sub quam canunt pueri de tempore aut sacramento, und wird gemeiniglich mit dem gesang: Christe du lamb gottes beschlossen.

The communion, during which the boys sing [songs] of the season or of the sacrament; and it is commonly concluded with the song "Christ, thou Lamb of God."

Neuenrade has "Agnus Dei Düdsch" as the communicants go to the altar and "Gott sei gelobet" after. Neuenrade, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 22, p. 519):

> Als dan singet man Agnus Dei Düdsch, und gan de Communicanten thom Altar. Na dem Agnus Dei singet man: God sy gelovet, etc.

Then one singeth the Agnus Dei in German, and the communicants go to the altar. After the Agnus Dei one singeth "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc.

8.15.2 "Gott sei gelobet" as the thanksgiving

Luther's Formula missae already wanted "Gott sei gelobet" sung after the communion. He dropped the stanza about receiving the sacrament at the hour of death "from the hands of the consecrated priest". Wittenberg, Luther, Formula missae, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 9):

> Interim placet illam cantari post communionem: ‘Gott sei gelobet und gebenedeiet, der uns selber hat gespeiset etct.’ Omissa ista particula: ‘Und das heilige sacramente, an unserm letzten ende, aus des geweieten priesters hende’.

Meanwhile it pleaseth [me] that this be sung after the communion: "God be praised and blessed, who himself hath fed us," etc.; that little part being left out, "And the holy sacrament at our last end, out of the consecrated priest's hands."

The Albertine order ends the service with it: "and therewith go home" (Sehling 1, p. 275):

> So mag man das volk singen lassen den gesang: gott sei gelobet und gebenedeiet und damit heim gehen.

Then the people may be let sing the song "O Lord, We Praise Thee," and therewith go home.

Rothenberg, Vereinigung, 1618 (Sehling 13, p. 550):

> Unter derselben sing man psalm und gesäng, so darzu gehören. Nach vollendter communion sing man zur danksagung für dieselbe: Gott sei gelobet und gebenedeiet etc.

During the same let psalms and songs be sung that belong thereto. After the communion is ended let "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc. be sung for thanksgiving for the same.

8.15.3 The closing hymn

The last hymn of the service was one of a small group: "Gott sei gelobet", "Dank sagen wir alle", "Sei Lob und Ehr mit hohem Preis" (the last stanza of "Es ist das Heil"), "Erhalt uns" with "Verleih uns Frieden", Da pacem, "Es woll uns Gott genädig sein", or a festal hymn. Where the Mass ended with the Benedicamus, in Latin or German, these hymns followed it or, in some orders, stood in its place (§§8.16.8–8.16.9). Tecklenburg closes with thanksgiving. Tecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 22, p. 244):

> Endtlich sal dat volck den heren loven und dancken em van ganßen herten mit dem gesange: Danck seggen wy alle etc., Mit fride und [frouwden of dergelichen duischer danckseggingе].

At the last the people shall praise the Lord and thank him with all their heart with the song "Thanks say we all," etc., "In Peace and [Joy I Now Depart," or the like German thanksgiving].

Northeim closes with the prayer for peace, because "for temporal peace we are bound to pray at all times". Northeim, Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Sehling 6/2, p. 926):

> Wir sehen auch fur gut an, das zu endlichem beschlus der gesang Da pacem, Domine in lateinischer oder deudscher sprache gesungen werde durch die knaben und schulmeister. Denn umb zeitlichen frid sind wir zu bitten allezeit schüldig.

We also think good that for the final close the song Da pacem, Domine be sung in the Latin or German tongue by the boys and schoolmaster. For we are bound at all times to pray for temporal peace.

In Mecklenburg priest, communicants and congregation knelt for "Erhalt uns" and "Verleih uns Frieden". Mecklenburg, Ordeninge der misse, 1545 (Sehling 5, p. 155):

> Unde denne schal sick de prester vor dat altar up de knee setten. De ganze gemene schal ock so don, unde heven an: Erholt uns here bi dinem worde, de dre versche, unde denn: Vorlene uns frede gnedichlick, here godt etc.

And then the priest shall set himself upon his knees before the altar. The whole congregation shall also do so, and begin "Lord, Keep Us Steadfast in Your Word," the three verses, and then "Grant Peace, We Pray, in Mercy, Lord," etc.

Buxtehude closed with Da pacem or "Verleih uns Frieden", sung without the organ, or "a psalm fitting the present need", such as "Mitten wir im Leben sind". Buxtehude, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 7/1, p. 76):

> To beschlute schall dat de chorr allene ahne de orgel singen: Da pacem, edder dudesch Vorlene uns frede, edder sunst einen psalm, de na ahnliggende nodt darto bequeme, alse Midden wy im levent sint, edder andere dem gelick.

At the close the choir alone, without the organ, shall sing Da pacem, or in German "Grant Peace, We Pray, in Mercy, Lord," or else a psalm fitting thereto according to the present need, as "In the Very Midst of Life," or others like it.

Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 5, p. 553):

> Tom lesten schall dat chor Da pacem etc. singen effte düdesch vorlene uns frede etc. up sünderlicke feste averst einen andern gesank, de sick darbi wil schicken.

At the last the choir shall sing Da pacem, etc., or in German "Grant Peace, We Pray, in Mercy, Lord," etc.; but on special feasts another song that will fit thereto.

Hoya gives the festal closing hymns. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1150):

> Darnach singet man Es wol uns Gott genedig sein etc. An den festen aber singet man, was die fest mit sich bringen, als auf Weynachten Gelobet seystu, Jhesu Christ, sampt den folgenden versen, auf Ostern das kurze Jhesus Christus, unser heyland, der den tod uberwand, auf Pfingsten Kom, heiliger Geist, Herre Gott etc.

Thereafter one singeth "May God Bestow on Us His Grace," etc. But on the feasts one singeth what the feasts bring with them, as at Christmas "We Praise You, Jesus, at Your Birth," with the verses following; at Easter the short "Jesus Christ, Who Came, Us to Save"; at Pentecost "Come, Holy Ghost, God and Lord," etc.

Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 439):

> Tom beslute wert gesungen: Si loff unde ehre etc., edder: Erholt uns herre etc., Vorlene uns frede etc., O godt wi danken diner güde etc. unde der geliken.

At the close is sung "Praise and honour," etc., or "Lord, Keep Us Steadfast in Your Word," etc., "Grant Peace, We Pray, in Mercy, Lord," etc., "O God, we thank thee for thy goodness," etc., and the like.

Hildesheim (Stift), Kirchenordnung für Steuerwald und Peine, 1561 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 783):

> wan das gescheen, singet der opferman mit dem volke zum lesten aus: Sei lob und ehr mit hohem preis.

when that is done, the sexton with the people singeth at the last, to the end: "Praise and honour with high price."

In the Braunschweig villages two closing hymns alternated, one holy day after the other (Sehling 6/1, p. 473):

> Und zum besluß schal dan der opferman mit dem volk singen ein fiertag umb den andern: Es wolt unß Godt genedig sein und: Erhalt uns, Her, bei deinem wort.

And at the close the sexton shall sing with the people, one holy day after the other, "May God Bestow on Us His Grace" and "Lord, Keep Us Steadfast in Your Word."

8.15.4 The closing hymn covers the priest's devesting

In the Hildesheim city order the closing hymn was sung while the celebrant took off his vestment and knelt again at the altar to give thanks privately. Hildesheim (city), Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 855):

> So hevet de scholmester an einen düdeschen, korten psalm, edder wat öhme gefellich unde darmede ein ende etc. Dewile överst de sank waret, tüt sick de prediger ut unde lecht dat missgewand tohope, kneet wedder nedder vor dem altare unde danket Godde hemehck vor sick sülvest.

Then the schoolmaster beginneth a German short psalm, or what pleaseth him, and therewith an end, etc. But while the song lasteth, the preacher undresseth himself and layeth the Mass vestment together, kneeleth down again before the altar, and thanketh God secretly for himself.

8.15.5 A custom found and left alone

A Henneberg pastor found "Verleih uns Frieden" sung at the very end in his parish. He left it, since it could not be faulted. Wasungen (Henneberg), pastor's report, 1566 (Sehling 2, p. 356):

> So nu die communion geschehen, beschleust man mit der collecta und dem segen. Verleihe uns friden mit der anhengten collecta hab ich hie also gefunden, das mans gar am ent gesungen und damit beschlossen, welches weil es nit zu strafen, hab ichs auch nit endern wollen.

When now the communion is done, one concludeth with the collect and the blessing. "Grant Peace, We Pray, in Mercy, Lord," with the collect appended, I have found here thus: that it was sung at the very end and therewith concluded; which, since it is not to be blamed, I also would not change.

8.15.6 How fixed the slots were Fixed, with a handful of choices and festal exchange. The post-communion Agnus was "Christe, du Lamm Gottes" or "O Lamm Gottes". The thanksgiving was "Gott sei gelobet", "Dank sagen wir alle" or "Sei Lob und Ehr". The close was the prayer for peace and the word ("Verleih uns Frieden", Da pacem, "Erhalt uns"), or Psalm 67. At the high feasts the festal hymn of the day took the closing slot.

8.16 Vespers, matins, the catechism and the weekday services

8.16.1 Office hymns: only of the season, and only if pure

The Latin office hymn (hymnus) of matins and vespers stayed where there was a school. The rule was that it be "of the season" and "pure". Hymns to the saints were dropped, and single stanzas that invoked the saints or the cross were cut. Transylvanian Saxons, Kirchenordnung, 1547 (Sehling 24, p. 224, Latin; p. 245, German):

> Hymnos praeterquam de tempore nullos admittimus.

We admit no hymns save those of the season.

> Die hymnos helt man auch nach der zeit und keine andern.

The hymns also are kept according to the season, and no others.

Schleswig-Holstein warns against hymns that speak of the merit and invocation of the saints. It names the O crux ave stanza of Vexilla regis. Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 143):

> So erfordert ock de Godtsalicheit unde Christlike Gelove, Dat wy uns vor de Hymnos waren scholen, Darynne van vordenst unde Anropinge der Hilligen geschreven steit, den wol wolde hernamals ein Hölten Crütze upheven unde den godtlosen sang singen: O Crux, Ave spes unica etc.?

So also godliness and the Christian faith require that we beware of the hymns wherein is written of the merit and invocation of the saints. For who would hereafter lift up a wooden cross and sing the godless song, O Crux, ave spes unica, etc.?

The Ansbach chapter order of 1533 made the same cut. Brandenburg-Ansbach, Ordnung singens und lesens bei den Stiften, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 316):

> dominica in passione Domini: In hymno Vexilla Regis soll der vers O crux, ave spes ausgelassen werden.

On Passion Sunday: in the hymn Vexilla Regis the verse O crux, ave spes shall be left out.

The Heilbronn song order of 1543 cuts the Marian stanza of the Candlemas hymn. Heilbronn, Ordnung des Kirchengesangs, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, p. 322):

> Lichtmeß: Hymnus: Quod chorus vatum (vor Tu libens votis, ist auszulassen).

Candlemas: hymn Quod chorus vatum (before Tu libens votis, which is to be left out).

At Hof the hymns of John the Baptist and the apostles were sung in the text "corrected in Lossius". Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 423):

> H: Ut queant laxis (correctus in Lossio].

Hymn: Ut queant laxis (corrected in Lossius).

At Regensburg the vesper hymn of the season was sung "if it be not godless". Regensburg, Kirchenordnung of Justus Jonas, 1553 (Sehling 13, p. 419):

> und alspald darauf bede chör den hymnum de tempore, so er nit gotlos ist.

and straightway thereupon both choirs [sing] the hymn of the season, if it be not godless.

8.16.2 One hymn for a whole season

The office hymn changed by season, not by day. Hof kept the German Te Deum at vespers from Michaelmas to Advent. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 447):

> Vesperi. Hymnus: Herr Gott, dich loben wir. NB. Hymnus iste retinetur usque ad Adventum Christi.

At vespers. Hymn: "Lord God, we praise thee." N.B.: This hymn is kept until the Advent of Christ.

Heilbronn kept O lux beata Trinitas from Trinity to Advent. Heilbronn, Ordnung des Kirchengesangs, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, p. 321):

> Trinitatis bis Advent: Zu gewöhnlichen christlichen Antiphonen Hymnus: O lux beata Trinitas zu singen.

Trinity until Advent: with the customary Christian antiphons the hymn O lux beata Trinitas is to be sung.

The Henneberg afternoon service opened with a seasonal hymn, played on the organ, then sung in figured music, and then followed by the German Magnificat of the whole congregation. Henneberg, Kirchenordnung, 1582 (Sehling 2, p. 310):

> und dann auf die hohe fest, als weinachten, das deutsche grates nunc omnes, und, Gelobet seistu Jesu Christ, bis ohngefehrlich umb purificationis, von dem sontage nach purificationis an, das deutsche Nunc dimittis, bis auf die fasten; durch die fasten bis auf ostern Christe der du bist tag und licht; von ostern bis zum auffarts tage Also heilig ist der tag, oder Christ ist erstanden, oder Christ lag in todes banden; vom auffarts tage an bis uf pfingsten, Christ fuhr gen himel; von pfingsten an, vom heiligen geist, bis aufs advent; im advent bis auf weinachten, Nu kom der heiden heiland, alle sontage nach mittage auf der orgel, wo die verhanden, geschlagen und darauf eben dasselbe als balden figuriret, als dann das magnificat durch den cantor und chor mit der ganzen gemeine gesungen werden.

and then on the high feasts, as Christmas, the German Grates nunc omnes and "We Praise You, Jesus, at Your Birth," until about the Purification; from the Sunday after the Purification, the German Nunc dimittis, until Lent; through Lent until Easter, "Christ, Everlasting Source of Light"; from Easter until Ascension Day, "This Is Such a Holy Day," or "Christ Is Arisen," or "Christ Jesus Lay in Death's Strong Bands"; from Ascension Day until Pentecost, "Christ Rose to Heaven"; from Pentecost, [a song] of the Holy Ghost until Advent; in Advent until Christmas, "Savior of the Nations, Come": all Sundays in the afternoon played upon the organ, where there is one, and thereupon the same straightway sung in figured music; then the Magnificat [shall be] sung by the cantor and choir with the whole congregation.

In the Pomeranian Agenda vespers opened, kneeling, with Veni sancte Spiritus or a Latin song of the season "pro ingressu vel egressu". The schoolmaster chose it with the pastor. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 435):

> Erstlick singet men flexis genibus: Veni sancte spiritus; edder den ersten vers: Veni creator spiritus; edder Adesto deus unus etc., edder wat süs pro tempore evenkömlick is: Alse im advent: Veni domine visitare nos in pace etc.; umme winachten: Puer natus in Bethlehem, In dulci iubilo, Resonet in laudibus, Nunc angelorum gloria; umme paschen: Surrexit Christus hodie; umme pingsten: Spiritus sancti gratia, Veni maxime spiritus etc. Alse sölckes de scholmeister edder cantor, mit rat des pastorn, wert vor gut anseen, wat pro ingressu vel egressu deenstlick is.

First one singeth on bended knees Veni sancte Spiritus, or the first verse Veni creator Spiritus, or Adesto Deus unus, etc., or what else is fitting for the season: as in Advent, Veni Domine visitare nos in pace, etc.; about Christmas, Puer natus in Bethlehem, In dulci jubilo, Resonet in laudibus, Nunc angelorum gloria; about Easter, Surrexit Christus hodie; about Pentecost, Spiritus sancti gratia, Veni maxime Spiritus, etc.: as the schoolmaster or cantor, with the counsel of the pastor, shall think good what is serviceable for the entrance or the going out.

8.16.3 Latin for the school, German for the people

Bugenhagen kept the Latin office for the school, and moved the German hymns to the times when the laity were present. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 524):

> Sulcke latinsche senge werden den leien ohre dudesche senge nicht vorhinderen, wente se werden gesungen werden, wen de leien in der karcken mit prediken tohorende nicht to schaffende hebben. Se werden doch sus genoch dudesch to singende krigen. Wente vor allen sermonen und na allen sermonen scollen [se dudesch singen].

Such Latin songs will not hinder the laity in their German songs, for they will be sung when the laity have nothing to do in the church with hearing preaching. They will get enough to sing in German otherwise. For before all sermons and after all sermons they shall [sing in German].

Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 442):

> Düdesche hymnos in der Advente, imme Wynachten bet up purificationis, up Paschen bet up Pynxten, imme Pynxten, van den festen edder sus andere hymnos mach me wol singen des hilgendages in der vesper, wen de leyen dar [synt].

German hymns in Advent, at Christmas until the Purification, at Easter until Pentecost, at Pentecost, of the feasts, or else other hymns, may well be sung on the holy day at vespers, when the laity are there.

Hildesheim (city), Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 856):

> To den andern predigen ys ydt genoch, dat wy einen psalm vor unde einen psalm edder ledt na düdesch singen. Wenn överst unse scholkinder allene to der kercken komen, to singen unde to lesen, wat vorordent ys, so schal se nemandes vorhindern, latinisch to lesen unde to singen.

At the other sermons it is enough that we sing a psalm before and a psalm or song after in German. But when our school children come alone to the church, to sing and to read what is ordained, no one shall hinder them from reading and singing in Latin.

8.16.4 The German Te Deum sung verse by verse

The German canticles — the Te Deum, Magnificat, Benedictus and Nunc dimittis — were the congregational pieces of the offices. The Te Deum was sung by alternating halves, the choir one verse and the people the next. At Wittenberg a school usher stood in a stall in the middle of the church to lead the people "until the people grow used to it". Wittenberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 705):

> und ein schulgesell soll in dem schulerstul mitten in der kirchen mit dem volk auf alle halbe vers, wie es gemacht ist, antworten. Er mag auch zum ersten etliche knaben in den stul zu hulf nehmen, bis das volk sich gewent, solch te deum mitzusingen.

and a school usher shall, in the scholars' stall in the midst of the church, answer every half verse with the people, as it is made. He may also at first take some boys into the stall to help, until the people grow used to singing along such Te Deum.

Northeim, Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Sehling 6/2, p. 924):

> Und wiewol man die latinische sprache aus der kirchen gar nicht komen lassen sol, so ist aber doch fur gut angesehen, das das Te Deum, damit auch in der kirchen die gemeine nicht vergeblich sey, auf die Sontage und hei[…]ligen tage deudsch gesungen werde, doch also, das der chor einen vers, die ganze kirche den andern singe.

And although the Latin tongue shall by no means be let go out of the church, yet it is thought good that the Te Deum be sung in German on the Sundays and holy days, that the congregation too be not in the church in vain; yet so that the choir sing one verse, the whole church the other.

At Calenberg the sexton came out of the choir to lead the congregation's half. Calenberg- Göttingen, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 6/2, p. 792):

> Nach dem responsorio das Te Deum laudamus deutsch, also das der chor einen vers, die gemein haussen den anderen singe. Sonderlich aber mus der opferman aus dem chor hie tretten und die gemein, das sie fein ordentlich singe, regiren.

After the responsory the Te Deum laudamus in German, so that the choir sing one verse, the congregation outside the other. But especially here the sexton must step out of the choir and govern the congregation, that it sing finely in order.

8.16.5 The evening Salve replaced

The late-medieval evening devotion of the Salve Regina was abolished, or turned to Christ. Plauen, Ordnung der Ceremonien, 1529 (Sehling 2, p. 111):

> Ufn abend umb 5 ader 6 hor singen die knaben alle tage das „Salve Jesu Christe“ mit dem „Da pacem“ latinisch und einer deutschen collecta.

In the evening at five or six o'clock the boys sing every day the Salve Jesu Christe with the Da pacem in Latin and a German collect.

At Heilbronn a German hymn took the place of the Salve as an evening blessing. Heilbronn, draft Gottesdienstordnung, 1532 (Sehling 17/1, p. 302):

> Zu nacht umb salve zeytt: Das an statt des vorigen salve zu einem schlaff segen der schulmaister mit seinen knaben ain theutsch loblich gsang als die letany oder das Mitten wir im leben seind oder Da pacem domine und dergleichen singe und mit einer colect beschlossen.

At night, at Salve time: that in the stead of the former Salve, for a blessing before sleep, the schoolmaster with his boys sing a German song of praise, as the litany, or "In the Very Midst of Life," or Da pacem Domine, and the like, and conclude with a collect.

The Hohenlohe order of 1553 abolished the Salve Regina outright, "because it is flat against God's word and the honour of Christ" (Sehling 15, p. 74):

> Vom Salve Das Salve regina celi etc., so bißher gesungen worden, dieweyl es Gottes wort und der ehr Christi stracks zuwider, soll aller cüng abgetonn.

Of the Salve. The Salve regina coeli, etc., which hath hitherto been sung, because it is flat against God's word and the honour of Christ, shall be wholly done away.

In the Kraichgau order of Neckarbischofsheim it stayed, "turned upon Christ and put into German". Neckarbischofsheim, Kirchenordnung, 1560 (Sehling 16, p. 672):

> darauf singt der Schulmaister das magnificat teusch Luc. 1. Darauf folgt das Salve Regina coeli, uf Christum gezogen und verteuscht.

thereupon the schoolmaster singeth the Magnificat in German, Luke 1. Thereupon followeth the Salve Regina coeli, turned upon Christ and put into German.

8.16.6 The catechism service: the hymn of the chief part

The catechism service chose its hymn by the chief part being taught. This is the clearest case in the corpus of a hymn chosen by its doctrine, and it is nearly universal:

Chief part	Hymn
Ten Commandments	"Dies sind die heilgen zehn Gebot"; "Mensch, willst du leben seliglich"
Creed	"Wir glauben all"; "Ich glaub an Gott"
Lord's Prayer	"Vater unser im Himmelreich"
Baptism	"Christ unser Herr zum Jordan kam"

Chief part	Hymn
Lord's Supper	"Jesus Christus unser Heiland"; "Gott sei gelobet"
Keys / Confession	"Aus tiefer Not"; "Erbarm dich mein"; "So wahr ich leb"

Lippe, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 21, p. 386):

> Darauff singe die Kirche auch einen Christlichen deutschen Psalm, dem Artickel des Catechismi, so deßmals Tractirt, gemeß, Als Bey der Erklerung des Decalogi: Die Zehen Gebott, Item: Mensch, wiltu leben seeliglich etc., Des Symboli: Den Glauben und andere darzu dienliche Psalm, Des Vater unsers: Vater unser, der du bist im Himmel, leret uns Jhesus Christ; Item: Vater unser im Himelreich, Der Heiligen Tauffe: Durch Adams fall Und: Christ, unser Herr, zum Jordan kam etc., Des Hochwirdigen Sacraments des Altars: Was kan uns kommen an für not, Item: Jhesus Christus, unser Heilandt, Damit die Gesenge, darinnen die Heilige Göttliche schrifft mit schönen, runden Worten zusammengefasset, den Ungelerten und Jungen Leuten bekant und gemein werden.

Thereupon let the church also sing a Christian German psalm agreeable to the article of the catechism then treated: as at the exposition of the Decalogue, "The Ten Commandments," item "Wilt Thou, O Man, Live Happily," etc.; of the creed, "The Creed" and other psalms serving thereto; of the Our Father, "Our Father, who art in heaven, as Jesus Christ teacheth us," item "Our Father, Who from Heaven Above"; of holy baptism, "All Mankind Fell in Adam's Fall," and "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord," etc.; of the most worthy sacrament of the altar, "What need can come upon us," item "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior": that the songs, wherein the holy divine Scripture is summed up in fair round words, may become known and common to the unlearned and young folk.

Grubenhagen kept the same hymn for as long as the one chief part was being taught. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1046):

> Hierbey kan man auch allezeit etwas singen, das sich auf das stück des catechismi reimet, welchs erkleret worden, als, wenn man die zehen gebot ausleget und solang man damit umbgehet, kan man singen: Diss sind die heiligen zehen gebot etc., oder: Mensch, wiltu leben seliglich etc., und also fortan mit den andern, damit das junge volk die christlichen, geistreichen gesenge, die ihnen oft eine gute auslegung und herrlich liecht geben, auch im gedechtnis und herzen tiefer haften, mögen fassen.

Herewith one can also always sing something that rhymeth with the part of the catechism that hath been expounded: as when the Ten Commandments are expounded, and as long as one is busied therewith, one can sing "These Are the Holy Ten Commands," etc., or "Wilt Thou, O Man, Live Happily," etc.; and so forth with the others; that the young folk may grasp the Christian, spiritual songs, which often give them a good exposition and glorious light, and that they may cleave the deeper in memory and heart.

A Henneberg pastor did the same. Queienfeld (Henneberg), pastor's report, 1566 (Sehling 2, pp. 344–345):

> Singen erstlichen im anfang die zehen gepot, so lang man leret von den zehen gepoten und darnach von den dreien heubtartikel des glaubens, so lang man auch […] davon predigt, und also fortan bis zu ende des catechismi.

[We] sing first at the beginning the Ten Commandments, as long as the Ten Commandments are taught; and thereafter [the hymn] of the three chief articles of the creed, as long as that also is preached; and so forth to the end of the catechism.

In the Hoya villages the catechism service opened with Speratus's "Nun lasst uns Christen fröhlich sein", and then took the hymn of each chief part. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1150):

> anfahen, einen psalm zu singen von dem catechismo, welcher in dem psalmbüchlein gefunden wird und heist Nu last uns Christen frölich sein etc. Darnach, in der verhandlung des decalogi, singet man Diß sind die heiligen zehen gebot. In der tractation des glaubens singet man Wir gleuben. Uber dem Vater unser singet man Vater unser im himelreich. Uber der lehr von der taufe singet man Christ, unser Herr, zum Jordan kam; in der verhandlung des nachtmals Jhesus Christus, unser heyland; auch zu zeiten andere feine lutherische psalmen, auf das die leute einen psalm nach dem andern lernen sin[gen].

[they shall] begin to sing a psalm of the catechism, which is found in the psalm book and is called "Now let us Christians be joyful," etc. Thereafter, in the treating of the Decalogue, one singeth "These Are the Holy Ten Commands"; in the treating of the creed, "We All Believe in One True God"; over the Our Father, "Our Father, Who from Heaven Above"; over the teaching of baptism, "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord"; in the treating of the Supper, "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior"; and at times also other fine Lutheran psalms, that the people may learn to sing one psalm after another.

Hohenlohe opened the catechism "with a song of that chief part which the pastor has in hand to treat" (Sehling 15, p. 654):

> Es soll auch der catechismus mit einem gesang angefangen werden von demjenigen hauptstuck, so der pfarrherr zu tractieren fürhanden.

The catechism also shall be begun with a song of that chief part which the pastor hath in hand to treat.

The Kurland order taught the Latvian peasants the catechism hymns first, one before and one after, "until the un-German people can learn and profit more". Kurland, Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 91):

> Es sollen aber für allen andern psalmen sich die undeutschen pfarherren der ordnung des catechismi befleissigen und den leuten singen leren. 1. Die zehen gebot, Dis sind die heiligen zehen gebot. 2. Den glauben, Wir gleuben all einen gott. 3. Das vater unser, Vater unser im himmelreich. 4. Die taufe, Christ, unser herr, zum Jordan kam. 5. Das sacrament des altars, Jesus Christus, unser heiland. Gott sei gelobet. 6. Das gloria. Allein gott in der höhe sei ehr. Dis sollen sie ersten nacheinander, das eine stücke für, das ander nach, singen leren, und in den gebrauch bringen, bis das undeutsch v[olk mehr lernen und proficirn mag].

But the pastors of the un-German [the Latvians] shall, before all other psalms, apply themselves to the order of the catechism and teach the people to sing: 1. The Ten Commandments, "These Are the Holy Ten Commands." 2. The creed, "We All Believe in One True God." 3. The Our Father, "Our Father, Who from Heaven Above." 4. Baptism, "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord." 5. The sacrament of the altar, "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," "O Lord, We Praise Thee." 6. The Gloria, "All Glory Be to God on High." These they shall first teach them to sing one after another, the one piece before, the other after, and bring them into use, until the un-German people may learn and profit more.

Wertheim calls "Nun freut euch" a good paraphrase of the whole creed. Wertheim, Kirchenordnung, c. 1555 (Sehling 11, p. 716):

> Das auch der catechismus im schwang gehe, soll man für der predigt singen die zehen gebot, nemblich in schöner paraphrasi darüber. […] Auch so tut das lied: Nun freut euch lieben Christen gemein genugsam verlesung von allen artikeln des glaubens und ist auf den glauben ein gut paraphrasis.

That the catechism also may be in practice, the Ten Commandments shall be sung before the sermon, namely in the fair paraphrase thereof. […] Also the song "Dear Christians, One and All, Rejoice" doeth sufficient rehearsal of all the articles of faith, and is a good paraphrase upon the creed.

The catechism service itself, its hour, length and order, is treated in Chapter 10, §10.10.

8.16.7 Weekday services: reusing the Sunday hymn

At Hof, the Wednesday service repeated the hymn of the Sunday before. On Friday the German hymn of the Sunday vespers was sung again. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 429):

> II. Die Mercurii per duos choros plerumque repeti[…]tur cantilena diei dominici vel festi pracedentis. Die Veneris hymnus germanicus ad vespertinas preces praecedentis dominicae vel festi cantatur.

II. On Wednesday the song of the preceding Sunday or feast is for the most part repeated by two choirs. On Friday the German hymn of the evening prayers of the preceding Sunday or feast is sung.

Regensburg sang a German psalm on weekdays "for the people's sake, that the people may learn the same and in time sing along". Regensburg, Kirchenordnung of Hieronymus Noppus, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 408):

> Das alda erstlich gesungen werd ein psalm oder sünst ein gesang zu teutsch, umbs volks willen, das das volk dieselben lerne und mit der zeit mitsingen müge, darzu sie den sollen in der predigt zuweilen vermanet werden.

That there first be sung a psalm or else a song in German, for the people's sake, that the people may learn the same and in time may sing along; whereto they shall at times be exhorted in the sermon.

In wartime Neuenstein held a daily prayer service at noon. After the prayer it sang one of seven psalm-hymns of trust and defence, in fixed order, "one each day, and no other". Neuenstein, Befehle wegen des Gebetsgottesdienstes, 1588–1594 (Sehling 15, p. 540):

> volgents umgewechselter weiß alweg nach dem gebett diser psalmen einen. als nembhchen: 1. Ein veste burg ist unser Gott etc., 2. Gib fridt zu unser zeit etc., 3. Erhalt unß, Her, bey deinem wort etc. und Verleyhe uns friden gnediglich etc., 4. Wo Gott der Herr nicht bey uns helt etc., 5. Wer Gott nicht mit uns dise zeit etc., 6. Ach Gott, vom himel silie darein etc., 7. In dich hab ich gehoffet herr etc. nachsingen laßen und daruf mit dem segen beschheßen, also clas allen tag in der gantzen wochen einer umb den andern in obgesatzter ordnung nach dem gebett und sonst kein anderer gesungen werde.

following that, changing about, always after the prayer [let] one of these psalms be sung after, namely: 1. "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," etc.; 2. "Give peace in our time," etc.; 3. "Lord, Keep Us Steadfast in Your Word," etc., and "Grant Peace, We Pray, in Mercy, Lord," etc.; 4. "If God Were Not upon Our Side," etc.; 5. "If God Had Not Been on Our Side," etc.; 6. "O Lord, Look Down from Heaven, Behold," etc.; 7. "I Trust, O Lord, Your Holy Name," etc.; and thereupon conclude with the blessing; so that every day in the whole week one after the other in the order set above be sung after the prayer, and no other.

The Hohenlohe Gesangsordnung of 1596 likewise rotated Lobwasser's Psalms 20, 61 and 79 on the Friday prayer days, the last "because of the present great need of the Turk", "one Friday after the other in order" (Sehling 15, pp. 655–656).

8.16.8 The Benedicamus: kept, graded and put into German

The versicle Benedicamus Domino, with its response Deo gratias or Deo dicamus gratias, ended matins and vespers. After Luther's Formula missae it also ended the Mass. Some Lutheran sources outside the church orders sing a festal Latin song, such as Puer natus in Bethlehem, with the Benedicamus or in its stead: a troped or substituted Benedicamus. This pass searched the corpus for that practice in three ways:

- every mention of the Benedicamus (411 passages);
- the incipits of the medieval Benedicamus tropes;
- the incipits of the old festal songs: Puer natus in Bethlehem, In dulci jubilo, Resonet in laudibus, Nunc angelorum gloria, Dies est laetitiae, Joseph lieber Joseph mein, Surrexit Christus hodie.

The result is this:

- No order in the corpus prescribes a troped Benedicamus. No order names a Benedicamus trope. None puts a festal song inside the versicle, or between versicle and response.
- The orders keep the Benedicamus, grade it by season and put it into German (this section). They also let a figured motet or a German hymn take its place (§8.16.9).
- Puer natus in Bethlehem* and the other festal songs are found, but at other places. They come after the Magnificat, just before the collect and Benedicamus; at the entrance or going out of festal vespers; for the introit; and after the catechism or the sermon (§8.16.10).

If the troped Benedicamus was sung in these churches, the orders do not record it. It may have lived in the cantionals that several orders impose (Lossius, Spangenberg; §8.18.6), which are not part of this corpus.

At the end of the Mass. Luther put the Benedicamus in the place of Ite missa est. He allowed the alleluia to be added, and the melodies of the vesper Benedicamus to be borrowed. Wittenberg, Luther, Formula missae, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 6):

> Loco ‘Ite missa’ dicatur: ‘Benedicamus domino’, adiecto (ubi et quando placet) alleluia in suis melodiis. Vel ex vespertinis ‘Benedicamus’ mutuentur.

In the stead of Ite missa let there be said Benedicamus Domino, with alleluia added (where and when it pleaseth) in its own melodies. Or let the Benedicamus [melodies] be borrowed from those of vespers.

The first Nürnberg Mass ends "mit dem Benedicamus Domino, dominicaliter", followed by "Es woll uns Gott genädig sein" (Nürnberg, Form und Ordnung einer christlichen Messe, 1525, Sehling 11, p. 57).

In German. Müntzer's Allstedt offices (Radical Reformation) end every matins with a German Benedicamus. It is plain in Advent and the Passion, with a threefold alleluia at Easter. Allstedt, Thomas Müntzer, Deutsch kirchenampt, [1523], end of Easter matins (Radical Reformation; Sehling 1, p. 491):

> Das benedicamus. […] Last uns gesegnen den herren alleluia alleluia alleluia. Got sei ewiglich dank alleluia alleluia.

The Benedicamus. […] Let us bless the Lord, alleluia, alleluia, alleluia. God be thanked for ever, alleluia, alleluia.

The Advent form is on p. 475 and the Passion form on p. 485. Müntzer's Deutsch evangelisch messe of 1524 (Radical Reformation) ends each Mass with the same words (Sehling 1, pp. 501–503), and so does the Erfurt Deutsches Kirchenamt of 1525 (Sehling 2, pp. 376, 380). In Franconia the German form closed the Mass after the thanksgiving collect. Brandenburg-Ansbach, Auctuarium, 1548 (Interim order; Sehling 11, p. 330):

> Darnach spricht der priester: Laßt uns gebenedeien den Herrn! antwort das volk: Gott sei gelobet! mit volgendem segen, wie in der ordnung verfast.

After that the priest saith: "Let us bless the Lord!" The people answereth: "God be praised!" with the blessing following, as it is set down in the order.

Hof printed a melody for it. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 426):

> Deinde addit diaconus Benedicamus germanicum, hac melodia observata. […] Last uns gebenedeien den Herren. Chorus: Gott sei gedankt.

Then the deacon addeth the German Benedicamus, this melody being kept. […] "Let us bless the Lord." Choir: "God be thanked."

The Wolfenbüttel convents might close their hours "mit dem Benedicamus deudsch oder lateinisch" (Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1569, Sehling 6/1, p. 261).

Graded by season. Like the Kyrie and the Sanctus (§§8.6, 8.12), the Benedicamus had its own melodies for the seasons and ranks. They were named after the Latin chants: in adventu, angelicum, dominicale, paschale, festivale, feriale. Hof gives the fullest scheme, with notes, in its register of vespers. The rule comes first. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 411):

> IX. Benedicamus Domino; de tempore, bini vel terni pueri: Deo dicamus gratias: totus chorus vel choraliter vel figuraliter.

IX. Benedicamus Domino, of the season, [sung by] two or three boys; Deo dicamus gratias, the whole choir, either in plainsong or in figured music.

The grades then follow:

- in adventu (p. 412);
- angelicum at Christmas (p. 412), which Sehling notes is the name of a melody;
- dominicale from Septuagesima to Easter (p. 414), and again from the fifth Sunday after Trinity (p. 420);
- two Easter forms with a threefold alleluia (p. 417);
- the Pentecost form with alleluia (p. 419);
- festivale seu feriale (p. 422).

The Easter forms are these (Sehling 11, p. 417):

> Benedicamus paschale primum: [Noten] Benedicamus Domino | Alleluia, alleluia, alleluia. Deo dicamus gratias | [Ende der Noten]. […] Haec per vices cani solent.

The first Easter Benedicamus: Benedicamus Domino, alleluia, alleluia, alleluia. Deo dicamus gratias. […] These are wont to be sung by turns.

The northern orders name the grade without the notes. Pomerania closes Sunday matins so. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 437):

> Dar up lest de capellan eine collecte, unde dat chor singet benedicamus domino, dominicale vel de tempore.

Thereupon the chaplain readeth a collect, and the choir singeth Benedicamus Domino, the Sunday [melody] or [that] of the season.

- At Lübeck two children sang the benedicamus dominicale after the collect (Lübeck, Kirchenordnung, 1531, Sehling 5, pp. 348, 351).
- At Lüneburg, when the thanksgiving day of 1575 fell on a Sunday, morning prayer ended with the Benedicamus angelicum. Sehling's note calls it especially elaborate (Lüneburg, Kirchenordnung, 1575, Sehling 6/1, p. 663).

The long melodies rejected. Neuenrade printed the plain and the Easter forms. It dropped the long melismatic ones, for they had "few words and [little] devotion". Neuenrade, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 22, p. 540):

> Benedicamus Domino. Deo dicamus gratias. Benedicamus Domino, alleluia, alleluia, alleluia. Deo dicamus gratias, alleluia, alleluia, alleluia. De Benedicamus mit den velen noten sal man bliven laten, wente se maken veel geschreies und hebben wenig worde und andacht.

Benedicamus Domino. Deo dicamus gratias. Benedicamus Domino, alleluia, alleluia, alleluia. Deo dicamus gratias, alleluia, alleluia, alleluia. The Benedicamus with the many notes shall be let alone, for they make much crying, and have few words and [little] devotion.

The Benedicamus as the dismissal of the Mass is treated in Chapter 2, §2.13.1.

8.16.9 The Benedicamus replaced: motets and German hymns

Motets. Where figured music was sung, Hof let a motet stand in the place of the Benedicamus. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 411):

> NB. In figurali tamen cantu motecta (nos mutetam vocamus) aliqua conveniente loco Benedicamus concluduntur preces vespertinae.

N.B. In figured music, however, the evening prayers are concluded with some fitting motet (we call it a mutet) in the stead of the Benedicamus.

Hof's calendar of figured music for the chief feasts names the motets. The text of each belongs to the feast:

- the eve of Advent: Jerusalem plantabis vineam (Lasso, for 5 voices) (p. 456);
- Christmas Eve: Angelus ad pastores ait (Lasso, for 5) (p. 457);
- the eve of the Circumcision: Postquam consummati sunt dies octo (Joachim a Burck, for 5) (p. 458);
- the eve of the Epiphany: Videntes stellam (Lasso, for 5) (p. 458);
- the eve of the Annunciation: Speremus meliora omnes (Wert, for 5) (p. 460);
- the eve of the Ascension: Tempus est ut revertar (Lasso, for 6) (p. 462).

The plainsong Benedicamus of the grade stays as the alternative. Christmas Eve reads so (Sehling 11, p. 457):

> Magnificat quinti toni. A 5. Orlandi. Benedicamus angelicum infra [nicht abgedruckt!] notatum, vel loco ejus: Angelus ad pastores ait. A 5. Orlandi.

Magnificat of the fifth tone, for 5, of Orlando. The Benedicamus angelicum noted below [not printed!], or in its stead: Angelus ad pastores ait, for 5, of Orlando.

German hymns in its place. Ostfriesland allowed a German psalm for the Benedicamus at both vespers and matins. Ostfriesland, Kirchenordnung, 1535 (Sehling 7/1, p. 380):

> Und darna synge man Magnificat myt eynen christlicken antiffen ut godtlicker scrift myt eyner christlicken collecten, to latyn offt to duedsche, darna dat Benedicamus effte an syn stadt eyn duedschen psalm.

And thereafter let one sing the Magnificat with a Christian antiphon out of godly Scripture, with a Christian collect, in Latin or in German; thereafter the Benedicamus, or in its stead a German psalm.

At Christmas the hymn in its place was "Dank sagen wir alle", the German form of the Christmas sequence Grates nunc omnes (§8.8.3). Nördlingen used it in the festal service held in place of matins. Nördlingen, Ordnung der ceremonien at St George's, 1555 (Sehling 12, p. 321):

> 6. Darauf versikel und collect vom fest, aus dem gesangbuechlin Lutheri. 7. Zum beschluß Danksagen wir alle zu Weihnachten, sonsten das Benedicamus.

6. Thereupon the versicle and collect of the feast, out of Luther's little songbook. 7. For the close, "Thanks say we all" at Christmas; otherwise the Benedicamus.

The Wolfenbüttel convents made the same choice at morning prayer, all the year round. Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1569 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 260–261):

> darauf eine reine […] collect deudsch oder lateinisch singen und letzlich mit dem Benedicamus oder Danksagen wir alle etc. beschliessen.

thereupon sing a pure collect in German or Latin, and lastly conclude with the Benedicamus or "Thanks say we all," etc.

- Pfalz-Zweibrücken closed both the morning and the afternoon service of Christmas Day with "Conclussio: Danckh sagen wir" (§8.16.10; Sehling 18, p. 340).
- Hof closed its Christmas matins, after the German collect, with a Leise in the place of the conclusion. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 413):

> Last uns bitten etc. Conclusionis loco canitur: Ein kindelein so löbelich, vel: Gelobet seistu, Jesu Christ, cum versu ultimo Das hat er alles uns getan.

"Let us pray," etc. In the place of the conclusion is sung "To Us Is Born a Blessed Child," or "We Praise You, Jesus, at Your Birth," with the last verse, "All this hath he done for us."

In the Neumark the Königsberg order of 1586, printed by Sehling only in extract, had "Verleih uns Frieden" sung instead of the Latin Benedicamus after the lessons and the weekday sermons (Sehling 3, pp. 236–237).

German hymns after it. More often the Benedicamus stayed, and a German hymn followed it. In Pomerania this was the prayer for peace, sung kneeling. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 435):

> Dar na lest de prester eine collecte düdisch edder latinisch, unde beslüt dat chor mit dem benedicamus, unde singet dar up, da pacem domine, flexis genibus, latinisch edder düdisch.

After that the priest readeth a collect in German or Latin, and the choir concludeth with the Benedicamus, and singeth thereupon Da pacem Domine on bended knees, in Latin or German.

At Regensburg it was a penitential psalm. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, 1567 (Sehling 13, p. 461):

> Nach dem Magnificat singt der diaconus ein deudsche collecten, darauf etliche knaben, für dem altar knieend, Benedicamus Domino und der chor: Deo gratias und fort ein deudschen psalmum poenitentialem, das Miserere oder De profundis, Erbarm dich mein usw., O Herre Gott, begnade mich. Aus tiefer not oder Durch Adams fall usw.

After the Magnificat the deacon singeth a German collect; thereupon certain boys, kneeling before the altar, [sing] Benedicamus Domino, and the choir Deo gratias; and forthwith a German penitential psalm, the Miserere or De profundis: "Have mercy on me," etc., "O Lord God, be gracious to me," "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee," or "All Mankind Fell in Adam's Fall," etc.

The Wolfenbüttel village vespers followed it with "Erhalt uns, Herr, bey deinem wort" (Sehling 6/1, p. 154). The Nürnberg Mass of 1525 followed it with "Es woll uns Gott genädig sein" (above).

8.16.10 Puer natus in Bethlehem and the festal songs

The old Latin songs of the feasts were kept in the schools, often "latin unde düdesch". They were sung in Latin by the scholars and in German by the girls or the people, verse about. The corpus puts them at four places. None of these is the Benedicamus itself.

After the Magnificat. At Naumburg the ordinary Sunday vespers ended with the Magnificat and its antiphon, "or else a short song of the season", and then the collect and Benedicamus. Naumburg, St Wenzel, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1537/1538 (Sehling 2, p. 72):

> 6. Das magnificat mit seiner antiphon, Christus unser heiland, oder sonst ein kurz gsang nach der zeit und haben zue diesem mal drei ton sextum, septimum et peregrinum. 7. Darnach concludirt man mit der collecten und benedicamus.

6. The Magnificat with its antiphon, "Christ our Saviour," or else a short song according to the season; and they have at this time three tones, the sixth, the seventh and the peregrinus. 7. After that one concludeth with the collect and Benedicamus.

At Christmas that short song was Puer natus in Bethlehem or one of its fellows (Sehling 2, p. 76):

> Zur vesper. Christum wir sollen loben schon, vor der predigt. Magnificat sexti toni nach der predigt. Auf das magnificat, In dulci jubilo oder Vom himmel hoch oder Puer natus in Bethlehem. Dergleichen helt man es auch circumcisionis, epiphanae und purificationis.

At vespers: "From East to West, from Shore to Shore," before the sermon; the Magnificat of the sixth tone after the sermon; upon the Magnificat, In dulci jubilo, or "From Heaven Above to Earth I Come," or Puer natus in Bethlehem. The like is kept also at the Circumcision, the Epiphany and the Purification.

Nördlingen copied the passage word for word in 1555 (Sehling 12, p. 321). This is the nearest the corpus comes to Puer natus at the Benedicamus. It is the last chant before the collect and the Benedicamus, in the place of the Magnificat antiphon, but it does not replace or trope the Benedicamus. At Brieg the Christmas song was joined to the Magnificat itself. Brieg, Kirchenordnung, 1592 (Sehling 3, p. 445):

> darauf die predigt, nach gehaltener predigt das Magnificat resonet in Laudibus, und mit dem Benedicamus beschlossen.

thereupon the sermon; after the sermon is held, the Magnificat [with] Resonet in laudibus; and concluded with the Benedicamus.

The order does not say whether Resonet was sung between the verses of the Magnificat or after it. Either way the Benedicamus follows unchanged.

At the entrance and the going out. The Pomeranian Agenda let the schoolmaster choose Puer natus in Bethlehem, In dulci jubilo, Resonet in laudibus or Nunc angelorum gloria "pro ingressu vel egressu" at Christmas vespers (§8.16.2; Sehling 4, p. 435). Sung for the going out, such a song came after the Benedicamus and Da pacem (§8.16.9). At Hof the three days of Christmas vespers opened with a different Latin song each day, with the German sung alongside. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 433):

> Vesperi. Primo die: In natali Domini. Secundo: Parvulus nobis nascitur. Tertio: Puer natus in Bethlehem quatuor vocum, ita ut latinum scholastici :germanicum puella cantent. Deinde subiungatur hymnus: Christum wir sollen loben schon.

At vespers. On the first day, In natali Domini; on the second, Parvulus nobis nascitur; on the third, Puer natus in Bethlehem in four voices, so that the scholars sing the Latin, the girls the German. Then let the hymn "From East to West, from Shore to Shore" be joined to it.

Epiphany vespers began the same way ("Initio: Puer natus in Bethlehem: A 4", p. 434). Hof's calendar of figured music puts the song at the moment the scholars came into the church, and does the same at Easter (Sehling 11, pp. 458, 461):

> Vesperi. Intrantibus scholasticis in templum canitur: Puer natus in Bethlehem A 4, ita ut puellae germanicos versus accinant.

At vespers. As the scholars enter the church, Puer natus in Bethlehem is sung for 4, so that the girls sing the German verses to it.

> Vesperi. Inter introeundum, primo anno: Surrexit Christus hodie, A 4, secundo: surrexit Christus Dominus, A4, quibus germanica puellae addunt.

At vespers. While they go in, in the first year Surrexit Christus hodie, for 4; in the second, Surrexit Christus Dominus, for 4; to which the girls add the German.

In the school. The Pomeranian order made the children learn these songs. Pomerania, Kerckenordeninge, 1569 (Sehling 4, pp. 401–402):

> Item, de olden cantica van den festen. Up winachten. Puer natus in Bethlehem, latin unde düdesch. Nunc angelorum gloria. Resonet in laudibus. Joseph lever Joseph min. In dulci iubilo. Dies est, laetitiae. […] Up paschen. Surrexit Christus hodie, mit dem düdeschen : Erstanden is de hilige christ etc. Up pingesten. Spiritus sancti gratia, latin unde düdesch, unde wat der geliken olde gesenge mer sint, de schölen den kindern vlitich geleret werden.

Item, the old songs of the feasts. At Christmas: Puer natus in Bethlehem, Latin and German; Nunc angelorum gloria; Resonet in laudibus; "Joseph, dear Joseph mine"; In dulci jubilo; Dies est laetitiae. […] At Easter: Surrexit Christus hodie, with the German "Arisen is the holy Christ," etc. At Pentecost: Spiritus sancti gratia, Latin and German. And whatever other old songs there are of the like, these shall be diligently taught to the children.

The Lüneburg convent orders also name Puer natus, In dulci jubilo and Dies est laetitiae among the "christliche gesenge" of the high feasts (Sehling 6/1, pp. 614, 621).

For the introit, and after the catechism or sermon. At Sulzfeld (1566) the choir sang "Ein Kind geboren zu Bethlehem" in the place of the Christmas introit (§8.5). A late Bischofswerda order, printed from a letter of the council to the cantor of 1676, opens every Sunday with a song of the season "zum introitu". Bischofswerda, *Gottesdienst-Ordnung (Sehling 2, p. 106):

> 1. Zum introitu im advent: Nun komm' der heiden heiland. Weihnacht: Puer natus in Bethlehem. Fastnacht: Christus, der uns etc. Ostern: Surrexit Christus etc. Pfingsten : Spiritus s. gratia. Trinitatis: Gott der vater wohn etc.

1. For the introit: in Advent, "Savior of the Nations, Come"; at Christmas, Puer natus in Bethlehem; at Shrovetide, "Christ, who [maketh] us," etc.; at Easter, Surrexit Christus, etc.; at Pentecost, Spiritus sancti gratia; at Trinity, "Triune God, Be Thou Our Stay," etc.

Pfalz-Zweibrücken spread the Christmas songs over the afternoon service. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Ordnung der Kirchengesänge, 1565 (Sehling 18, p. 340):

> Nachmittag. Introitus: Von himel hoch, da kham ich her etc. Gelobet seistu etc. Post Catechismum: Puer natus in Betlehem. Post Concionem: In dulci iubilo. Conclussio: Danckh sagen wir etc.

Afternoon. Introit: "From Heaven Above to Earth I Come," etc.; "We Praise You, Jesus, at Your Birth," etc. After the catechism: Puer natus in Bethlehem. After the sermon: In dulci jubilo. Close: "Thanks say we," etc.

At Hof the Christmas weekday services put In dulci jubilo, Resonet in laudibus and Nunc angelorum gloria before or after the sermon. They were sung "wechsels weis", Latin and German by turns (Sehling 11, pp. 433–434).

Summary.

- The Benedicamus was kept as a short versicle and response. Its melody was graded by season: in adventu, angelicum at Christmas, dominicale, and with alleluia at Easter and Pentecost.
- Where it was enlarged, this was done in two ways. Figured music could put a motet of the feast "loco Benedicamus". A German hymn could take its place, at Christmas "Dank sagen wir alle". Neither is a trope inside the Benedicamus.
- Puer natus in Bethlehem and the other festal songs stood next to the Benedicamus, not in it. They came upon the Magnificat, at the entrance or going out of vespers, for the introit, and after the catechism or sermon, with Latin and German verses alternating.
- The one judgement on the long Benedicamus melodies in the corpus rejects them (Neuenrade 1564).

8.17 Hymns at the occasional rites

The rites outside the Sunday service had their own small sets of hymns. Each rite drew on a fixed handful. The choice within the handful was left to the pastor or schoolmaster, or to the family's wishes and purse.

Rite	Hymns named
Baptism	"Christ unser Herr zum Jordan kam"; "Vater unser"; stanzas of "Durch Adams Fall"; "Herr, schaff uns wie die kleinen Kind"
Wedding	Ps 128 "Wohl dem, der in Gottes Furcht steht"; Ps 127 "Wo Gott zum Haus nicht gibt sein Gunst"; "Nun bitten"; Te Deum; "Dein Eh sollst du bewahren rein" (the sixth commandment)
The sick and dying	"Aus tiefer Not"; "Mit Fried und Freud"; "Nun freut euch"; the baptism and communion hymns
Burial	"Mitten wir im Leben sind" (with or after Media vita); "Mit Fried und Freud"; "Aus tiefer Not"; "Nun lasst uns den Leib begraben"; "Wir glauben all"; Si bona suscepimus; Jam moesta quiesce
Ordination and installation	"Nun bitten" or "Komm heiliger Geist"; "Wir glauben"; Te Deum or "Dank sagen wir alle"; Veni creator; Veni sancte Spiritus
Thanksgiving days	Te Deum; Ps 124 "Wo Gott der Herr nicht bei uns hält"; Ps 127

The rites themselves are treated in Chapter 13: baptism in §13.3, marriage in §13.7, the sick in §13.8, burial in §13.9, and ordination and installation in §§13.10–13.11.

8.17.1 Baptism

Hof gives a reason for singing at baptism at all: so that two actions do not follow each other without a song, with an unaccustomed silence between them. Before a baptism at the weekday service, the hymn stanza sung was the one that matched the catechism lesson just read. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 430):

> soll nach geendter lection zu den festen und sontägen zur vesper (nun mehr stracks nach der predigt) etwas gesungen werden, uf das nicht zwen actus ohne ein gesang, ufeinander folgen und ein ungewöhnlich stillschweigen sich dazwischen zutrage. Und weil man an den zehen geboten lieset, soll allweg dasselbig gebot aus den lengeren zehen geboten gesungen werden, von welchem in gedachter lection gehandelt worden. Weil man an dem glauben lieset, soll bei dem ersten artikel gesungen werden: Gott der Vater wohn uns bei, bei dem andern: Jesus Christus wohn uns bei, bei dem dritten: Heiliger Geiste wohn uns bei etc. Weil man von dem Vaterunser lieset, soll zu einer iden bit ein gesetz aus dem Vaterunser doctoris Martini gesungen werden. Wann von der tauf gelesen wird, soll gesungen werden das gesetz aus dem gesang Christ unser Herr zum Jordan kam, so die ordnung der erklerung mit sich bringt. Wann man vom ambt der schlüssel oder absolution lieset, soll gesungen werden: So war ich leb.

after the lesson is ended, on the feasts and Sundays at vespers (now straightway after the sermon), something shall be sung, that two actions may not follow one upon the other without a song, and an unaccustomed silence fall between. And while the Ten Commandments are being read, that same commandment out of the longer Ten Commandments shall always be sung which was treated in the said lesson. While the creed is being read, at the first article shall be sung "God the Father be with us"; at the second, "Jesus Christ be with us"; at the third, "Holy Ghost be with us," etc. While the Our Father is being read, to every petition a stanza out of Doctor Martin's Our Father shall be sung. When baptism is read of, that stanza out of the song "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord" shall be sung which the order of the exposition bringeth with it. When the office of the keys or absolution is read of, "'As Surely as I Live,' God Said" shall be sung.

Through the rest of the year the baptism hymn ran on from one baptism to the next. One stanza was sung before the baptism and the next after it, and when the hymn was finished it began again (Sehling 11, p. 431):

> Hernach durchs ganze jahr: Christ unser Herr zum Jordan kam, (ein gesetz vor, das andere nach der tauf und, wann es aus ist, widerumb forne angehaben). Zum beschlus des actus diurni mag man bisweilen die ubrigen gesetz an diesem gesang bis zum end singen.

Thereafter through the whole year, "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord" (one stanza before, the next after the baptism, and when it is out, begun again from the front). At the close of the daily service one may at times sing the remaining stanzas of this song to the end.

Ysenburg-Birstein, Kirchenordnung, 1588 (Sehling 10, p. 628):

> So soll der Schulmeister erstlich einen Tauffgesang singen, Als: Christ, unser Herr, zum Jordan kam, oder: Herr, schaff uns wie die kleinen Kind etc.

Then the schoolmaster shall first sing a baptismal song, as "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord," or "Lord, make us as the little children," etc.

Mansfeld, Kirchen-Agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 236):

> Bei der taufe pfleget man an etlichen orten auf dem lande zu singen. Vater unser im himmelreich. Oder. Christ unser herr zum Jordan kam. Oder. Etliche vers aus dem gesange, Durch Adams fall ist ganz verderbt etc.

At baptism it is the custom in some places in the country to sing "Our Father, Who from Heaven Above," or "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord," or some verses out of the song "All Mankind Fell in Adam's Fall," etc.

Cochstedt, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1556 (Sehling 2, p. 484):

> Zur taufe wird gesungen durch die schüler: Christ unser herr zum Jordan.

At baptism the scholars sing "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord."

In Lüneburg, children were baptized between the epistle and the gospel of the Sunday Mass. The litany-hymn "Nim von uns" was then left out (§8.8.9).

8.17.2 Weddings

The wedding psalms were Psalm 127 and Psalm 128, in their metrical forms. Saxony (Albertine), Kirchenordnung, 1539, variants (Sehling 1, p. 274):

> Erstlich, das man singe den 127. psalm, oder den 128. Nach dem psalmen sol eine lectio aus eim evangelisten, oder S. Paulus episteln einer gelesen werden, die hiezu dienet, als nemlich, das evangelium Johannis am 2. capitel, es ward ein hochzeit zu Cana in Galilea etc. item zun Ephesern am 5. capitel, oder dergleichen. Darnach singe man, nu bitten wir den heiligen geist.

First, that the hundred and twenty-seventh psalm be sung, or the hundred and twenty-eighth. After the psalm a lesson shall be read out of one of the evangelists or of St Paul's epistles that serveth hereto, namely the gospel of John in the second chapter, "There was a marriage in Cana of Galilee," etc., item to the Ephesians in the fifth chapter, or the like. Thereafter let "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray" be sung.

Ysenburg-Birstein, Kirchenordnung, 1588 (Sehling 10, p. 632):

> Vor der Predigt soll man den 127. Psalmen: Wo Gott der Herr nicht gibt sein gunst etc. unnd den Christlichen Glauben singen. Darauff folget die Predigt mit dem Gebett, wie sonst die gewöhnlichen Wochenpredigt gehalten werden. Nach gehaltener Predigt singt man den 128. Psalmen: Wol dem, der in Gottes Forchte stehet etc.

Before the sermon shall be sung the hundred and twenty-seventh psalm, "Where God the Lord giveth not his favour," etc., and the Christian creed. Thereupon followeth the sermon with the prayer, as the customary weekday sermons are otherwise held. After the sermon is held, the hundred and twenty-eighth psalm is sung, "Happy the Man Who Feareth God," etc.

In Hof, and in the Henneberg village of Goldlauter, the sixth commandment was sung after the marriage, from Luther's Ten Commandments hymn, with its last stanza. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 430):

> vor der copulation gesungen: Wol dem, der in Gottes furchten steht, post copulationem: Wo Gott zum haus nicht gibt sein etc. oder aber: Dein eh soltu bewahren rein ex decalogo germanico Lutheri addito ultimo Das helf uns der Herr Jesu Christ.

before the marriage is sung "Happy the Man Who Feareth God"; after the marriage, "Where God to the house giveth not his," etc., or else "Thy marriage shalt thou keep pure," out of Luther's German Decalogue, with the last [stanza] added, "Help us to this, Lord Jesu Christ."

Goldlauter (Henneberg), Kirchen-Ordnung, 1566 (Sehling 2, p. 333):

> so pfleg man erstlich zu singen das Veni sancte in kurzer melodei und halt darauf Ein feste burg und darnach den glauben, unterdes gehen die leut zum opfer. Demnach thue ich ein hochzeitpredigt auf der canzel. Nach der predigt singt man: Wol dem der in gottes furchten stehet und werden beide eheleut […] zusamen gegeben […] Zum beschluss singt man wider das sechste gebot: Dein ehe soltu bewaren rein, und Das helfe uns der herr Jesus Christ.

then it is the custom first to sing the Veni sancte in the short melody, and thereupon "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," and thereafter the creed; meanwhile the people go to the offering. Then I hold a wedding sermon in the pulpit. After the sermon is sung "Happy the Man Who Feareth God," and both spouses are joined together […]. At the close is sung again the sixth commandment, "Thy marriage shalt thou keep pure," and "Help us to this, the Lord Jesus Christ."

Osnabrück sang the German or Latin Te Deum and Psalm 128 before the bridal Mass. Osnabrück (Stift), Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 7/1, p. 225):

> Und so de brudt worde tor kercken gahn, soll men vor der brudtmisse singen: Te Deum laudamus dudesch effte latein und den psalm Woll dem, de in Gades fruchten steit etc.

And when the bride goeth to church, there shall be sung before the bridal Mass the Te Deum laudamus in German or Latin, and the psalm "Happy the Man Who Feareth God," etc.

In Hamburg the families could hire the organist and cantor for more. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 516):

> Dar machme denne in der karcken up den orgelen spelen und singen mit den scholeren Te deum laudamus, edder wat anders van gade, edder ock in figurativis etc., wo de lude idt denne mit dem organisten und cantoren vor ohre drankgelt hebben bestellet.

There one may then in the church play upon the organs and sing with the scholars Te Deum laudamus, or something else of God, or also in figured music, etc., as the folk have then ordered it with the organist and cantor for their drink-money.

Hohenlohe gave a wedding set for weekday weddings. Hohenlohe, Schul- und Gesangsordnung, 1596 (Sehling 15, p. 656):

> Zun hochzeiten in der wochen Fur der predigt soll gesungen werden: Nun welche hie etc., Es sind doch seelig alle, die etc. Nach der predigt für der eheeinleitung: Es woll uns Gott genädig sein etc. oder ein Gloria. Nach einleitung der ehe: Woll dem, der in Gottes forcht etc.

At weddings in the week: before the sermon shall be sung "Now they that here," etc., "Blessed are all they that," etc.; after the sermon, before the marriage, "May God Bestow on Us His Grace," etc., or a Gloria; after the marriage, "Happy the Man Who Feareth God," etc.

8.17.3 The sick and the dying

The Regensburg order gives a short list of hymns for those who attended the dying: "grounded psalms and songs", not "old erroneous prayers and sayings". Regensburg, Kirchenordnung of Hieronymus Noppus, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 410):

> inen das vaterunser und den glauben fürsprechen und, wus zeit hat, gegründete psalm und geseng, als: Aus tiefer not schrei ich zu dir etc., In fried und freud ich far dahin, Nun freut euch, lieben christen gemein, von der tauf, vom sacrament des leibs und bluts etc., nicht alte, irrige gebet und spruch.

[they shall] say the Our Father and the creed before them, and, where there is time, grounded psalms and songs, as "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee," etc., "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart," "Dear Christians, One and All, Rejoice," [the songs] of baptism, of the sacrament of the body and blood, etc.; not old, erroneous prayers and sayings.

8.17.4 Burial

The burial hymn named first everywhere is Luther's "Mitten wir im Leben sind", often after the Latin Media vita. The Saxon Visitation Articles of 1528 already ask for it. Saxony (Ernestine), Unterricht der Visitatoren, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 170):

> und bei dem begrebnis, das deudsche gesang, mitten in dem leben, singen lassen.

and at the burial let the German song "In the Very Midst of Life" be sung.

Brandenburg sets the hymns by the course of the procession: "Mitten wir im Leben" on the way, "Aus tiefer Not" if the way was long, and Simeon's song on the return to church. Brandenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 81):

> so man die leiche tregt, mag man singen, media vita und die drei deutsche vers, mitten wir im leben sind, und so der weg zu lang, das deudsche deprofundis, aus tiefer not, oder sonst das responsorium libera me domine. Und so man vom begrebnis widerum in die kirchen gehet, alsdenn mag man singen, mit fried und freud ich fahr dahin.

when the corpse is carried, one may sing Media vita and the three German verses, "In the Very Midst of Life," and, if the way be too long, the German De profundis, "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee," or else the responsory Libera me Domine. And when one goeth again from the burial into the church, then one may sing "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart."

Hof adds "Aus tiefer Not" "with the slow melody" when needed, and graded its funerals by the number of school classes that attended. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 475):

> Hinc germanicae sequuntur cantilenae, etiam in particularibus funeribus, quibus tertiani, quartani et quintani, in hieme, ast in aestate etiam sextani intersunt cantore duce, usurpandae videlicet: Mitten wir im leben sind. Gott der Vater wohn uns bei. Mit fried und freud ich fahr dahin Lutheri. Item si necessitas postulat, praenotatis, antequam pueri templum d. Laurentii ingressi sunt, finitis adiiciuntur: Aus tiefer not, mit der langsamen melodie zu singen. Erbarm dich mein, o Herre Got.

Hence follow German songs, to be used also at private funerals, at which the third, fourth and fifth classes attend under the cantor's lead in winter, and in summer the sixth also, namely: "In the Very Midst of Life"; "Triune God, Be Thou Our Stay"; Luther's "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart." Item, if need require, when the aforesaid are finished before the boys have entered St Lawrence's church, there are added "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee," to be sung with the slow melody, and "Have mercy on me, O Lord God."

Several orders split the burial hymn around the sermon. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1543/1615 (Sehling 17/1, p. 174):

> soll man singen: Nun laßt Uns den Leib begraben etc. biß auff den Verß: Nun lassen wir Ihn hie schlaffen etc. Darauff soll der Kirchendiener Einer, an den es begeret worden, ein Christliche, gebürliche unnd dem gegenwertigen Handel gemäße Leichpredigt thuon.

one shall sing "This Body in the Grave We Lay," etc., until the verse "Now let we him sleep here," etc. Thereupon one of the ministers, of whom it hath been desired, shall hold a Christian, fitting funeral sermon, agreeable to the present business.

Limpurg, Kirchenordnung, 1610 (Sehling 16, p. 623):

> In der Kirchen zu Münster, wan die gemain sich versamblet, eintweder das gesang: Mitten wir im Leben sind etc. wider ganz und nach der Predigt: Nun last uns den leib begraben etc. Oder diß Gesang vor der Predigt biß auff die zwei lezste gesäz: Nun lassen wir ihn hie schlaffen etc. Und dieselbige als dann nach der Predigt.

In the church at Münster, when the congregation assembleth, either the song "In the Very Midst of Life," etc., again wholly, and after the sermon "This Body in the Grave We Lay," etc.; or this song before the sermon until the two last stanzas, "Now let we him sleep here," etc., and the same then after the sermon.

Hohenlohe, Schul- und Gesangsordnung, 1596 (Sehling 15, p. 656):

> In der proceßion hinauß mit der leich biß zum grab und in die kirchen hinein für der predigt soll man singen: Mitten wir im leben etc., Mit fridt und freyd etc., Gott der Vatter wohn uns bey etc., Wenn mein stundlein vorhanden ist etc. Nach der predigt aber soll man bey dem grab singen: Nun last unß den leib etc.

In the procession out with the corpse to the grave, and into the church before the sermon, shall be sung "In the Very Midst of Life," etc., "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart," etc., "Triune God, Be Thou Our Stay," etc., "When My Last Hour Is Close at Hand," etc. But after the sermon "This Body in the Grave We Lay," etc. shall be sung at the grave.

Schwarzburg, Kirchenordnung, 1574 (Sehling 2, p. 136):

> Als dan wird der cörper in die erde begraben, die schul knaben singen, weil man begrebt, den gesang Lutheri: Nu last uns den leib begraben.

Then the body is buried in the earth; the school boys sing, while it is being buried, Luther's song "This Body in the Grave We Lay."

The Kurland order lists the hymns for before the funeral sermon, "as many as it pleaseth". Kurland, Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 105):

> Mit fried und freud ich fahr dahin. Erbarme dich meiner, o herre gott. Aus tiefer noth. Mitten wir im leben. Das responsorium. Si bona suscepimus et similia. Ich gleub an gott vater, almechtigen. Wir gleuben. Diese psalmen und gesengen brauchet man so viel für der leichpredigt als gefellig.

"In Peace and Joy I Now Depart." "Have mercy on me, O Lord God." "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee." "In the Very Midst of Life." The responsory Si bona suscepimus and the like. "I believe in God the Father Almighty." "We All Believe in One True God." These psalms and songs one useth before the funeral sermon, as many as it pleaseth.

Rostock, Conformitas ceremoniarum, c. 1560 (Sehling 5, p. 290):

> Bei den leichen der frommen christen sollen gesungen werden lateinisch und deutesch, si bona suscepimus. Media vita. Scio quod redemptor meus. Mit fried und freud. Aus tiefer not. Erbarm dich meiner. Nu last uns den leib begraben.

At the funerals of godly Christians shall be sung, in Latin and German, Si bona suscepimus, Media vita, Scio quod redemptor meus, "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart," "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee," "Have mercy on me," "This Body in the Grave We Lay."

The words "of godly Christians" matter. Singing was an honour, and it could be withheld. A later Nürnberg regulation, printed with the Brandenburg-Nürnberg order, forbids the hymns of Christian hope for those who died unrepentant, because of the offence. It gives them the penitential hymns instead. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533, later appendix (Sehling 11, p. 202):

> denen können die ordentliche lieder: Mit fried und freud ich fahr dahin nach Gottes willen etc. und andere dergleichen christliche gesänger, so sich auf solche fälle nicht schicken, für dem haus und im fortgehen, ärgernis zu vermeiden, nicht gesungen werden. Sondern für der tür wäre zu singen: Mitten wir im leben sind etc., in fortgehen aber: So wahr ich lebe, spricht dein Gott etc. item, andere bußlieder.

for these the ordinary songs, "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart," etc., and other such Christian songs as fit not such cases, cannot be sung before the house and in the going forth, to avoid offence. But before the door there might be sung "In the Very Midst of Life," etc., and in the going forth, "'As Surely as I Live,' God Said," etc., item other songs of repentance.

At Strasbourg there was no singing unless it was asked for, and then no funeral sermon either. Strasbourg, Gottesdienstordnung, 1577 (Sehling 20/1, p. 518):

> vor und nach der predigt singt entweder: Mitten wir im leben sind, oder: Mit fried und freud ich fahr dahin, item: Nun last uns den leib begraben. Wo es aber nit begert wird, gleich wie man nicht singt, also thut man auch keine leichpredigt.

before and after the sermon is sung either "In the Very Midst of Life," or "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart," item "This Body in the Grave We Lay." But where it is not desired, even as one singeth not, so one also holdeth no funeral sermon.

The Leiningen order abolished the old "singing over" the dead with holy water, but allowed the scholars to sing German hymns. Leiningen-Westerburg, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Sehling 19/1, p. 267):

> alles Bäpstisch gepreng mit Weywasser, Besingen und andern etc. abgeschaffen sein. Dann solches nicht allein ohne Gottes wort, sondern auch wider Gottes wort angerichtet, als sol es zur seligkeit fürderlich sein. Wo nun schulen sindt, mögen die schüler wol etliche teutsche Gesang singen, Als: Mitten wir im leben sind, Nun lessest du deinen diener im friede fahren etc.

all popish pomp with holy water, singing over [the dead], and other things, etc. [shall] be done away. For such was set up not only without God's word but also against God's word, as though it should be furthersome to salvation. Now where there are schools, the scholars may well sing some German songs, as "In the Very Midst of Life," "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," etc.

The Goslar order of 1528 left the whole matter to "a godly, reasonable, learned pastor". Goslar, Amsdorf, Vom teglichen gots dinst, 1528 (Sehling 7/2.2, pp. 237–238):

> Das eyn caplan, der custer, ouch dy schuller mit gehen, las ich gescheen, und singen deutzsch und lateyn Media vita, eyn psalm etc. Daß alles stehet bey eym frommen, vornunfftigen, gelerten pfarhern zu […] myndern und zu meren, das ehrs orden, wys am besten und nutzten dem volck seyn wirt.

That a chaplain, the sexton and also the scholars go along, I allow to be done, and [that they] sing in German and Latin Media vita, a psalm, etc. All this standeth with a godly, reasonable, learned pastor to lessen and to increase, that he order it as it shall be best and most profitable for the people.

8.17.5 Ordination and installation

The ordination and installation rites of the Württemberg family open with "Nun bitten". The creed is sung after the sermon, and the service closes with the Te Deum or the German Grates. Württemberg, Synodalordnung, 1547 (Sehling 16, p. 159):

> Unnd so das volgkh inn der kirchen versamlet, soll man annfangen unnd singen: Nun piten wier den hailgen gaist, etc. Uf dis gesanng solle der dechan oder einer der Consiliariis uffsteen unnd ein Predig thun von Ministerio verbi […] Nach der Predig soll gesungen werdenn der Glaub.

And when the people are assembled in the church, one shall begin and sing "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray," etc. After this song the dean or one of the councillors shall stand up and hold a sermon of the ministry of the word […]. After the sermon the creed shall be sung.

Lippe (1571) copies the rite, and the superintendent steps before the altar during the creed (Sehling 21, p. 438):

> so das Volck in der Kirchen versamblet, anfangs singen: Nu bitten wir den Heiligen Geist etc., Auff diß Gesang der Superintendens oder sein Adjunct auffstehen und ein Predigt thun vom Ministerio verbi.

when the people are assembled in the church, [they shall] sing at the beginning "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray," etc.; after this song the superintendent or his adjunct [shall] stand up and hold a sermon of the ministry of the word.

Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 408):

> Das volk sol zuvor in der kirchen vorsamlet, etliche psalmen absingen, und darnach zu letzt darauf folgen: Nu bitten wir den heiligen geist. Oder: Kom heiliger geist, herre gott.

The people, first assembled in the church, shall sing some psalms, and thereafter at the last there shall follow "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray," or "Come, Holy Ghost, God and Lord."

The Brandenburg installation adds Psalm 67 and the Te Deum. Brandenburg, Visitations- und Consistorialordnung, 1573 (Sehling 3, p. 109):

> nach gesprochenen vater unser sol die gemeine singen: Nun bitten wir den heiligen geist, und Es wolt uns gott gnedig sein und seinen segen geben etc., item das te deum laudamus etc.

after the Our Father is spoken the congregation shall sing "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray," and "May God Bestow on Us His Grace," etc., item the Te Deum laudamus, etc.

The Hessian ordination (Philippist) closes with the Te Deum "where there are schools", or "Dank sagen wir alle". Hessen, Agende, 1574 (Philippist; Sehling 8, p. 455):

> Zum beschluß soll die gemeine singen Te Deum laudamus, teutsch, oder latinisch, wo schulen vorhanden sein, oder Danksagen wir alle, Gott unserm Herrn Christo etc., oder einen andem dergleichen lobgesang.

At the close the congregation shall sing Te Deum laudamus, in German, or in Latin where there are schools, or "Thanks say we all to God our Lord Christ," etc., or another such song of praise.

The Merseburg draft for Luther's ordinations has Veni creator sung while ordinator and ordinands kneel. Merseburg, Ordinations-Ordnung, 1545 (Sehling 2, p. 7):

> Credo in unum. Populus: wir glauben. Chor: Veni creator, unter dem der herr ordinator sampt dem ordinanden fur den altar zugleich niederknien solten.

Credo in unum. The people: "We All Believe in One True God." The choir: Veni creator, during which the lord ordinator together with the ordinands should kneel down together before the altar.

8.17.6 Days of thanksgiving and extraordinary occasions

Michaelmas in Schleswig-Holstein was a harvest thanksgiving, with the Te Deum after the sermon. Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 95):

> De dach Michaelis ys eine gemene danckseggínge vor alle fruchte, de wy des Jars gesamlet und entfangen hebben. Darumme schal de gantze vorsamlinge vorth na der predigen singen tho der danckseggínge mit groter andacht: Te Deum Laudamus etc.

The day of Michael is a common thanksgiving for all the fruits which we have gathered and received in the year. Therefore the whole congregation shall, straight after the sermon, sing for the thanksgiving with great devotion Te Deum Laudamus, etc.

Lüneburg kept an annual day for the city's deliverance. On it hymns took the place of the propers: Psalm 127 (figural) and Psalm 124 after the epistle, and Psalm 124 again with Psalm 3 at matins. Lüneburg, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 6/1, p. 663):

> Ad missam: 4. Introitum: Benedicite de angelis, 5. das Kyrie figuraliter, item: Et in terra pax, darnegst: Alleine Godt in der hohe sey ehr, 6. post lectionem epistolae: Nisi Dominus aedificaverit domum, 7. Wo Godt nicht mit uns ist, 8. canitur evangelion, 9. Nun bitten wir den heiligen Geist, 10. fit contio sacra, 11. post concionem canitur litania.

At the Mass: 4. the introit Benedicite of the angels; 5. the Kyrie in figured music, item Et in terra pax, next "All Glory Be to God on High"; 6. after the reading of the epistle, Nisi Dominus aedificaverit domum; 7. "If God Had Not Been on Our Side"; 8. the gospel is sung; 9. "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray"; 10. the holy sermon is held; 11. after the sermon the litany is sung.

At Nördlingen's thanksgiving day on 7 January, Psalm 124 could be sung instead of a figured piece, "that the congregation also may have cause to thank God". Nördlingen, Kirchenordnung, 1579 (Sehling 12, p. 388):

> Singet der chorus ein stuck figuraliter oder, damit die gemein auch Gott zu danken ursach habe, kan der psalm Wo Gott der Herr nicht bei uns helt etc. gesungen werden.

The choir singeth a piece in figured music; or, that the congregation also may have cause to thank God, the psalm "If God Were Not upon Our Side," etc. may be sung.

At an execution in Regensburg the crowd sang "Nun bitten" while the condemned man began to recite the creed. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung of Justus Jonas, 1553, with the order for the condemned (Sehling 13, p. 426):

> Deinde ut palam profiteatur fidem ac recitet symbolum apostolicum: Credo in Deum Patrem etc. Sub illius autem inchoatione cantabit turba circumstans cantilenam: Nun bitten wir den Heilgen Geist.

Then that he openly profess the faith and recite the Apostles' Creed, Credo in Deum Patrem, etc. But at the beginning of it the crowd standing about shall sing the song "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray."

8.18 How hymns were chosen: the reasons given

The orders seldom explain a single choice. They often state the rules by which choices were to be made. Ten kinds of reason recur. They are gathered here with the quotations not already given in the sections on the slots.

8.18.1 From Scripture, and "pure"

The first test is always the text. Anything sung, Latin or German, must come from Scripture or be proved by it. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529, section "Van singende" (Sehling 5, p. 516):

> Alle singent dudesch und latinsch, wo gesecht, schall ut de hilligen schrift sin, edder mit gades klare worde und dem christliken loven beweret, alse Paulus singen leret, Ephes. 5. Alse ock de olden christene doctores gesungen hebben und singen laten, done me vam salve regina und andere unchristliken sengen nicht wuste.

All singing, German and Latin, as hath been said, shall be out of the holy Scripture, or proved by God's clear words and the Christian faith, as Paul teacheth to sing, Ephesians 5; as also the old Christian doctors sang and caused to be sung, when men knew nothing of the Salve regina and other unchristian songs.

Buxtehude applies the test to the Latin chants. It keeps those "agreeable to divine Scripture" and drops the rest. Buxtehude, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 7/1, p. 77):

> Alle latinische gesenge, godtliker schrift gemete, de wente anher in der kercken in der misse, metten und vesper to besunder tydt gesungen, scholen beholden, gebruket und to ohrer tydt gesungen werden. De averst undenstlick, godtliker schrift ungemete unde unrecht, scholen nicht gesungen werden.

All Latin songs agreeable to divine Scripture which have hitherto been sung in the church at Mass, matins and vespers at their special time shall be kept, used and sung at their time. But those that are unserviceable, not agreeable to divine Scripture, and wrong, shall not be sung.

Worms admits hymns as well as psalms, because Paul commended both. But no new hymn is to be brought in without the superintendent and preachers. Worms, Agendbüchlein, 1560 (Sehling 19/1, p. 208):

> Dieweil der heilige Apostel Paulus nicht allein die Psalmen Davids, sondern auch andere Geistliche [...] Lieder und Lobgesäng den Christen hat commendirt und befohlen, So verwerffen wir dieselbigen auch nicht, doch so ferne sie Christlich und inn der Heiligen Schrifft gegründet seien. Allein das man keinen newen Gesang ohne der Supperattendenten und Predicanten rhat und vorwissen inn der Kirchen einführe.

Since the holy apostle Paul hath commended and enjoined to Christians not only the psalms of David but also other spiritual songs and hymns of praise, we also reject them not, yet so far as they be Christian and grounded in holy Scripture. Only that no new song be brought into the church without the counsel and foreknowledge of the superintendents and preachers.

In Württemberg every communion hymn beyond the named ones had to be "examined and admitted" by the superintendents first. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 16, p. 109):

> oder andere lobgesang, die rein [...] unnd vorhin von den superattendenten besichtiget, examiniert und zugelassen seien.

or other songs of praise which are pure [...] and have been beforehand viewed, examined and admitted by the superintendents.

8.18.2 Fitting the feast and the season

The Saxon Visitation Articles of 1528 thought it "unseemly that the songs are quite alike at all feasts". Saxony (Ernestine), Unterricht der Visitatoren, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 169):

> Dieweil es auch ein ungestalt ist, das die gesang gar gleich sind an allen festen, were gut, das man an den herrlichsten festen sünge, die lateinische introitus, glor[ia].

Since it is also unseemly that the songs are quite alike at all feasts, it were good that on the most glorious feasts one sang the Latin introits, Gloria [etc.].

Bugenhagen asked the schoolmasters to see that "the songs rhyme finely with the feasts". Where no proper song existed, they were to take "the most joyful psalms or songs". Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 442). The same sentence recurs in Mecklenburg (1545):

> De scholemeystere scholen darup sehn, dat de senge sick fyn rymen mit den festen, wen se neyne senge darto hebben, so nemen se de frolikesten psalmen edder lede unde sehn jo darup, dat de gesenge uth der reynen scrift syn unde reyn unde lustich unde vorstentlick vor de leyen uth Gades wörde gemaket.

The schoolmasters shall see to it that the songs rhyme finely with the feasts. When they have no songs for them, let them take the most joyful psalms or songs, and see always that the songs be out of the pure Scripture, and pure and pleasant and understandable for the laity, made out of God's word.

The Kurpfalz order of 1556 wants the songs to follow "the teaching and the order of the season", so that the church is reminded of the necessary articles "both with preaching and singing". Kurpfalz, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 14, p. 165):

> Man soll sich auch fleissigen, das sich die gsang nach der leer und zeitordnung richten, als nemlich: auf den Christag und nachvolgenden festen von der geburt Christi, zur Ostern von der urstend Christi, damit die kirch der nötigen stuck der leer des christlichen glaubens, beid, mit predigen und singen, wol erinnert werde.

One shall also be diligent that the songs be ordered after the teaching and the order of the season: namely, on Christmas Day and the feasts following, of the birth of Christ; at Easter, of the resurrection of Christ; that the church may be well reminded of the necessary pieces of the teaching of the Christian faith, both with preaching and singing.

The Sayn Kirchenzuchtordnung of 1582 repeats this almost word for word (Sehling 19/1, p. 369). Hanau-Lichtenberg (1573) opens its three rules with the same point (§8.11.5).

The Württemberg court church order of 1560 made the court preachers settle the hymns with the choirmaster, so that the singing followed the season and not "his own nod". Württemberg, Hofkirchenordnung, 1560 (Sehling 16, p. 428):

> Es sollen auch allwegen die Hof Prediger sich mit dem Cappell maister vergleichen, was er singen solle, unnd das sich das gesannge de tempore, obgemellter Ordnung nach, schickhe unnd nit, wie bißher beschehen, ad nutum ipsius gesungen werdenn.

The court preachers shall also always agree with the choirmaster what he shall sing, and that the singing fit the season according to the order above, and be not sung at his own nod, as hath hitherto been done.

8.18.3 Fitting the gospel and the sermon

The later orders go further. The hymn is to agree with the gospel and "the chief teaching of the sermon". Öhringen, Kirchen- und Schulordnungen, 1582, the German school order (Sehling 15, p. 503):

> Er soll sich vermög unser kirchenordnung jedertzeit soviel muglich befleissen, solche psalmen zu singen, die mit den gewöhnlichen evangeliis und der haubtlehr der predigt ubereinstimmen. Er soll sich auch am sontag mit dem organisten zuvor underreden und vergleichen, was er singen wöll, damit es kein confuss und unordnung geb.

He shall, according to our church order, be diligent at all times as much as possible to sing such psalms as agree with the customary gospels and the chief teaching of the sermon. He shall also on the Sunday speak beforehand with the organist and agree what he will sing, that there be no confusion and disorder.

The Hohenlohe Gesangsordnung of 1596 gives the reason in its closing paragraph. When the hymns are fitted to the sermons, the common man will feel that the singing is "no superfluous or vain ceremony" but "a short summary and pleasant instruction". It also forbids cutting psalms off in the middle. Hohenlohe, Schul- und Gesangsordnung, 1596 (Sehling 15, p. 657):

> das die pfarrherr mit guettem bedacht, sovil müglich, alle gesang vor und nach auf die predigten richten wöllen, damit der gemein man vermittelst göttlicher gnaden in seinem hertzen empfinde, das das gesang nicht ein übrige oder vergebenliche ceremonia, sonder ein kurtzer begriff und lustige underweißung ist, dardurch uns allerley, so zur seeligkeit zu wissen nottwendig, gantz schön und lieblich zue hertzen gefurt werde.

that the pastors, with good consideration, as much as possible, will direct all songs before and after to the sermons; that the common man, by means of divine grace, may feel in his heart that the singing is not a superfluous or vain ceremony, but a short summary and pleasant instruction, whereby all manner of things necessary to be known for salvation are brought home to our hearts most fairly and lovely.

The Kassel general synod of 1607 (Reformed) asked for the hymn numbers to be posted on a board at the church doors, and for an order of hymns "by the seasons of the year and fitted to the texts that are to be preached". Hessen-Kassel, Abschied der Kasseler Generalsynode, 1607 (Reformed; Sehling 9, pp. 75–76):

> das die psalmen, so in der versamblung gesungen werden sollen, jederzeitt von dem glöckner oder opfferman, der sich des psalmens bei dem, so die predig halten wirdt, zuevorderst zuerkundigen hette, auff ein tefflein, an den pforden der

that the psalms which are to be sung in the assembly be at all times marked with their number by the bell-ringer or sexton (who should first inquire of the psalm from him that is to hold the sermon) upon a little board at the doors of the church, or as it might otherwise be fitly done according to the condition of the church.

> das es nicht undienlich wehre, das die psalmen undt andere christliche geseng in eine gewiesse ordnung nach den zeitten des jahrs undt die sich auff die textus, wel[…]che gepredigt werden solten, accommodirt, verfast undt den pfarhern, sonderlich auff dem landt, communicirt wurden.

that it were not unserviceable that the psalms and other Christian songs be drawn up into a certain order according to the seasons of the year, and accommodated to the texts which should be preached, and communicated to the pastors, especially in the country.

8.18.4 That the people may learn them: few, familiar, often repeated

A second group of reasons concerns the congregation's knowledge. The fewer the hymns, the sooner they are learned. The Sponheim order uses the longest hymns before the sermon and the shortest after it. It also prints a short list of hymns to be used "often and before others". Hintere Grafschaft Sponheim, Kirchen- und Zensurordnung, 1590/91 (Sehling 18, p. 657):

> Inn stetten und flecken, do schulen sein, mag man in den kirchen die lieder und psalmen fast gebrauchen, die in der kirchenordnung zu finden, doch mit diesem gemeinen bescheidt, das annfangs und vor der predig die lengste, nach der predig aber die kurzste gesungen werden. Und damit das gemein volck mit vielen gesangen nit beschwert, sondern desto eher mit singen lernen, ist vonnöten, das etlich furnembste psalmen und lieder zum offtermahlen und fur andern, schweren und ihnen uhntauglichen liedern gebraucht werden. Und sollenn demnach volgende lieder offt und fur andern gebraucht werden, doch wo etwan ein gemein albereit etliche mehr lieder, so in der kirchenordnung begrieffen, gelernet hette, sollen dieselbe hiemit uhnverbotten sein.

In towns and market towns where there are schools, the songs and psalms that are found in the church order may for the most part be used in the churches; yet with this common direction, that at the beginning and before the sermon the longest, but after the sermon the shortest be sung. And that the common people be not burdened with many songs, but the sooner learn to sing, it is needful that some chief psalms and songs be used oftener and before others, [rather than] hard songs unfit for them. And accordingly the following songs shall be used often and before others; yet where a congregation hath already learned more songs contained in the church order, these shall hereby not be forbidden.

Danzig wanted the same hymns used "two [Sundays] running", especially those that contained the parts of the catechism. Danzig, Kirchenordnung, 1557, as summarised and quoted by Sehling (Sehling 4, p. 168):

> Ein Psalm, 2 oder 3 „nach der zeit gelegenheit, welche die ganze kirche auch lernen und mitsingen sol und darum oft sollen einerlei gesenge etliche zwei nach einander gebraucht werden, namentlich diejenigen, in welchen die stücke des catechismi ordentlich gefasset“.

A psalm, two or three, "according to the occasion of the season, which the whole church also shall learn and sing along; and therefore the same songs shall often be used some two [times] one after another, namely those in which the pieces of the catechism are orderly comprised."

Mecklenburg sang German hymns before and after the weekday sermons "that they may become known and common to the people, and hearts be thereby stirred to prayer". Mecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 201):

> An solchen tagen sollen vor und nach der predigt deudsche geistliche lieder gesungen werden, damit sie dem volk bekant und gemein werden, und die herzen dadurch zum gebet erwecket werden. Als sonderlich: Vater unser im himelreich, Wo gott der herr nicht bei uns wer, Ein feste burg etc.

On such days German spiritual songs shall be sung before and after the sermon, that they may become known and common to the people, and hearts be thereby stirred up to prayer; as especially "Our Father, Who from Heaven Above," "If God Were Not upon Our Side," "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," etc.

Reutlingen listed the psalm-hymns that had once been "common and known in the church" and wanted all of them brought back. The feast hymns it did not list, "for they are otherwise known well enough". Reutlingen, Ordnung der Schule und des Kirchengesangs, 1565/1566 (Sehling 17/2, p. 51):

> Dise psalmen seind alle sampt in der kirchen gemain und bekant gewesen, sollen derowegen alle wider darein gebracht werden. Die geseng uf die sonderliche hohe fest haben wir nit hieher verzaichnen wöllen, dan sie sonst gnugsamlich bekant seind.

These psalms have all been common and known in the church; they shall therefore all be brought back into it. The songs for the special high feasts we have not wished to list here, for they are otherwise known well enough.

Hesse (Moderate Reformed) wanted the sung psalms explained in sermons, "for what one understandeth not goeth slowly to the heart". Hessen, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 255):

> sonderlich aber gehets ohn frucht nit abe, wenn die psalmen ausgelegt werden, zuvoraus die, so von der ganzen gemein gesungen; denn also verstehen sie alles besser, was in der h. versamlung von der kirchen verricht wird. Es werden auch die gemüter under dem singen desto mehr zur andacht und gottseliger betrachtung entzündet; denn was man nit verstehet, gehet einem langsam zu herzen.

But especially it goeth not off without fruit when the psalms are expounded, above all those that are sung by the whole congregation; for so they understand the better all that is done by the church in the holy assembly. The minds also are the more kindled to devotion and godly meditation under the singing; for what one understandeth not goeth slowly to the heart.

Sayn, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1582 (Sehling 19/1, p. 369):

> sollen die pastorn das volck ermahnen, das sie die christliche lieder unndt psalmen lehrnen unndt mit gemeinen kirchengesang unsern hern Gott helffen loben unndt preisen, das sie durch die geseng gottlichs worts, so darinnen verfaßet, erinnert unndt daraus ahn rechten erkendnus Gottes, ahn glaube, liebe, gedult unndt ahn allen andern tugenden gebeßert werden. Unndt damit eine guete ordnung unndt gleichheit in den gesengen getroffen werde, sollen die lieder furnemblich, so doctoris Martini Luther[i sind] [...].

the pastors shall exhort the people to learn the Christian songs and psalms and to help praise and extol our Lord God with the common singing of the church, that through the songs they may be reminded of God's word that is comprised therein, and thereby be bettered in the right knowledge of God, in faith, love, patience and all other virtues. And that a good order and uniformity may be kept in the songs, the songs chiefly that are Doctor Martin Luther's [shall be used] [...].

8.18.5 Luther's hymns first

From the 1560s several orders put Luther's hymns ahead of all others. The Prussian order of 1568 gives the reason: in them "the whole holy catechism" is set out "with rich, fair and mighty exposition". Prussia, Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 75):

> Es sollen aber nicht allerlei deutsche lieder gesungen werden in der kirche, in dörfern sowohl als in stedten, sondern vornehmlich Lutheri psalmen behalten und getrieben werden, denn darinnen hat man gar schön den ganzen heiligen catechismum mit reicher, schöner und gewaltiger auslegung, erstlich der zehn gebot in zweien gesengen: Dies sind die heiligen zehn gebot etc. und: Mensch, willst du leben seliglich etc.; zum andern, die artikel unsers christlichen glaubens im: Wir glauben all' an einen gott etc., zum dritten das gebet im: Vater unser im himmelreich etc., den ganzen schatz der heiligen taufe im: Christ, unser herr, zum Jordan kam etc., und denn allen nöthigen bericht von dem heiligen abendmahl im: Jesus Christus, unser heiland etc., und: Gott sei gelobet etc. Wer denn das summa summarum sammt dem nutzen und frommen darvon kurz beisammen haben will, der singe: Nu freut euch, lieben christen gemein etc., oder D. Sperati gar schönen psalmen: Es ist das heil uns kommen her etc.

But not all manner of German songs shall be sung in the church, in villages as in towns, but chiefly Luther's psalms shall be kept and used. For in them one hath most fairly the whole holy catechism with rich, fair and mighty exposition: first, of the Ten Commandments in two songs, "These Are the Holy Ten Commands," etc., and "Wilt Thou, O Man, Live Happily," etc.; secondly, the articles of our Christian faith in "We All Believe in One True God," etc.; thirdly, the prayer in "Our Father, Who from Heaven Above," etc.; the whole treasure of holy baptism in "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord," etc.; and then all needful instruction of the holy Supper in "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior," etc., and "O Lord, We Praise Thee," etc. Whoso then will have the sum of sums, together with the use and profit thereof, briefly together, let him sing "Dear Christians, One and All, Rejoice," etc., or Doctor Speratus's most fair psalm, "Salvation unto Us Has Come," etc.

> Dass also nicht von nöten ist, allerlei neue lieder aufzuraffen und in die kirchen zu bringen, wir haben sie gottlob gut, als sie künden gemacht werden, und mangelt nirgend an, denn dass man des teuren schatzes müde und überdrüssig ist, lust und liebe hat, was neues vorzunehmen, bis man endlich schier gar von den herrlichen psalmen Lutheri kömmet und ein jeder sein eigen gedicht furtreget, welches doch Luthero nicht kan das wasser reichen in genere dictionis oder ponderibus rerum. Darum sollen die pfarherren zusehen, den schulmeistern nicht gestatten, ihres gefallens zu singen, sondern daran sein, dass die gesenge droben gehalten und fleissig getrieben werden.

So that it is not needful to snatch up all manner of new songs and bring them into the churches. We have them, God be praised, as good as they can be made, and there is lack nowhere, save that men are weary and tired of the precious treasure and have lust and love to take up something new; until at last they come away almost wholly from the glorious psalms of Luther, and everyone bringeth forward his own poem, which yet cannot hold a candle to Luther in the kind of diction or the weight of matter. Therefore the pastors shall see to it that they suffer not the schoolmasters to sing at their own pleasure, but take care that the songs above be kept and diligently used.

Hoya says the same, and warns that where everyone wants to be a poet, error easily takes root. It also places boys among the people to teach them. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1151):

> Die pastorn sollen mit fleis erhalten die psalmen, so vom Doctore Luthero gemacht und man von anfang des evangelii gehabt und gesungen, und dieselben fleissig treiben und grossen fleis dran wenden, das die leute in der kirchen stets den andern verß singen mögen und der chor so lang schweigen. Zu solcher beförderung kan man ein bar knaben unter dem volk stehen oder sitzen lassen, die da singen und sich die leute bey denselben also zum singen gewehnen. Man mag auch wol andere christliche gesenge, sofern sie rein und Gottes wort gemeß sein, gebrauchen, doch der neuerung nicht zuviel machen noch die alten geseng verwerfen. Dann es befindet sich, wo jederman tichter sein und seine eigene geseng machen und gebrauchen wil, das leichtlich irrung mit einwurzeln mögen.

The pastors shall diligently keep the psalms that were made by Doctor Luther and that have been had and sung from the beginning of the gospel, and use them diligently, and bestow great diligence that the people in the church may always sing the second verse and the choir meanwhile keep silence. For the furtherance of this a pair of boys may be made to stand or sit among the people, who sing, so that the people accustom themselves to singing along with them. Other Christian songs also may well be used, so far as they be pure and agreeable to God's word; yet let not too much novelty be made, nor the old songs rejected. For it is found that where every man will be a poet and make and use his own songs, error may easily take root therewith.

Harlingerland, Kirchenordnung, 1573/74 (Sehling 7/1, p. 738):

> Der zwölfte articul. Sectio prima. Von den gesängen, so man in der kirchen gebrauchen soll. Ordnen wir, daß die psalmen, so von Doct. Luthero, sel. gedechtniß, gemacht und in den psalmboeken gefunden werden, vor andern am meisten sollen gesungen und gebrauchet werden. Jedoch wollen wir hiemit an die löbliche gesenge, latein oder teutsch, auf den hohen festtagen bestimpt und in dem göttlichen worte fundiret, nit verworfen haben.

The twelfth article, first section: of the songs which shall be used in the church. We ordain that the psalms which were made by Doctor Luther of blessed memory and are found in the psalm books shall be sung and used most of all, before others. Yet hereby we will not have rejected the praiseworthy songs, Latin or German, appointed for the high feast days and grounded in the divine word.

The same order forbids schoolmasters and sextons to sing hymns "at their pleasure" without the pastor's knowledge. It forbids songs the people are not used to, and songs "that have the same tune as worldly songs", at which the common man might take offence (Sehling 7/1, p. 739):

> auch den scholemeistern und kostern befehlen, daß sie ohne furwißen der pastorn ihres gefallenß die psalme nit singen, dazue noch das kaspelsvolk nit gewehnet, noch sonsten die, so weltlicher lieder gleiche weiße haben, doran sich der

also command the schoolmasters and sextons that they sing not the psalms at their pleasure without the foreknowledge of the pastors, [nor such] as the parish folk are not yet used to, nor otherwise those that have the same tune as worldly songs, whereat the common man might be offended.

Mansfeld built its seasonal hymn plan from Luther's songbook. It marked with an asterisk the hymns in that book by "other excellent men". It did not bind other territories to its order. Mansfeld, Kirchen-Agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 235):

> haben demnach d. Luthers deutsches gesang büchlein für uns genomen, und dieselben gesenge so darinnen verfasset sein, auf die festa und gemeinen sontage und sonst auf andere tage abgetheilet, wie wir vermeinen nach unserem einfalde, das sie zu den predigten am bequemesten und den leuten aufs beste einzubilden sein solten. Weil aber in dem gesang büchlein Lutheri, auch anderer fürtrefflicher leute gute und geistreiche gesenge mit einverleibet seind, haben wir dieselben nicht aussen lassen wollen, sondern an gelegene orter mit hinzu gesetzet, und zum unterscheid von doct. Luthers gesengen mit diesem zeichen * notiren wollen.

We have therefore taken Doctor Luther's German songbook before us, and divided the songs contained therein among the feasts and common Sundays and otherwise other days, as we suppose in our simplicity that they should be most fitting to the sermons and best to be impressed upon the people. But because in Luther's songbook good and spiritual songs of other excellent men also are incorporated, we would not leave them out, but have set them in at fitting places, and to distinguish them from Doctor Luther's songs we have marked them with this sign: *.

The same Mansfeld article explains why hymns had spread so fast: "as all men are by nature inclined to sing and have pleasure in music" (Sehling 2, p. 235):

> Wie nu alle menschen natürlich zu singen geneiget sein und zur musica lust haben, also haben sie solche gesenge mit grosser begirde angenomen und aus denselben den grund der warheit fest und stark gefasset.

As now all men are naturally inclined to sing and have pleasure in music, so have they received such songs with great desire, and out of them grasped the ground of the truth firmly and strongly.

At Langenburg in Hohenlohe the question became a dispute in 1592. The pastor there, Mögner, objected that singing only Luther's hymns would mean giving up long-used songs by Spengler, Speratus, Kreuziger, Jonas and others. He appealed to the last paragraph of the 1578 order, to sing "at all times what is serviceable and answerable to the matter" (Sehling 15, p. 625):

> so wöllen wir, laut des letzten paragraphi hei den gsengen j ederzeit singen, was zur sach dienstlich und verantwortlich.

so will we, according to the last paragraph on the songs, sing at all times what is serviceable and answerable to the matter.

8.18.6 Against private choice and novelty; the authorized books

Hof defended its whole plan against any "unskilled scholar" who might change it at his pleasure. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 455):

> sintemal nicht einem iden unverstendigen schuler geburen will, in unser schönen und wolbedachten kirchenordnung seines gefallens umbzusturen und, was ime in seinem namen gutdeucht, in der gemein Gottes zu singen, sintemal die alten auch leut gewesen und freilich ohn großen vorbedacht nichts furgenommen haben.

since it will not become every unskilled scholar to overturn at his pleasure our fair and well-considered church order, and to sing in the congregation of God what seemeth good to him in his own name; since the old ones were also men, and surely undertook nothing without great forethought.

Pfalz-Zweibrücken closed its songbook with a ban on novelty, "that constant uniformity be kept, as well in singing as in preaching". Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Kirchenordnung, 1557, songbook (Sehling 18, p. 255):

> Diser obgesetzten Kirchengeseng sollen sich die Pfarrherr und Kirchendiener gebrauchen und ferner kein newerung einfüren, damit so wol im Gesang alß in der Predig und teglichen lehre Christliche, bestendige gleychheyt gehalten werde.

These church songs set above the pastors and ministers shall use, and bring in no further novelty, that Christian, constant uniformity be kept as well in singing as in preaching and daily teaching.

Grubenhagen tied the whole service to Johann Spangenberg's cantional. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1048):

> sollen dieselben mit gebürlicher modestien und bescheidenheit ordentlich und gleichstimmig gehalten und nichts neues von jemands erdacht oder fürgenommen werden. Wann denn lange zeit hero das cantional oder missal des alten herrn Johan Spangenberges in unserm fürstenthumb ublich gewesen und dasselbe jeder kirchen in verwahrung und brauch beygelegt worden, sol ein jeder auf die Sontag, fest und aposteltage in haltung des kirchenampts mit lectionen, singen, collecten, introiten, Kyrie, Patrem, praefationen, hymnis, und was dergleichen mehr ist, nach ordnung der zeit sich vleissig richten.

the same shall be held with due modesty and discretion, orderly and with one voice, and nothing new be devised or undertaken by anyone. Since, then, the cantional or missal of the old master Johann Spangenberg hath long been customary in our principality, and the same hath been given to every church for keeping and use, every one shall diligently order himself by it on the Sundays, feasts and apostles' days in holding the office, with lessons, singing, collects, introits, Kyrie, Patrem, prefaces, hymns and whatever more there is of the like, according to the order of the season.

Oldenburg required "a right, pure cantional", Spangenberg's or Lossius's, with Luther's German songbook. Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1085):

> Zu der behülf ist vonnöten, das in allen kirchen und schulen ein rechtes, reines cantional stetigs zur hand sey, als nemlich des alten herrn Johan. Spangebergii oder Lucae Lossii sampt dem deudschen gesangbuch D. Martini Lutheri.

For the furtherance of which it is needful that in all churches and schools a right, pure cantional be always at hand, as namely that of the old master Johann Spangenberg or of Lucas Lossius, together with the German songbook of Doctor Martin Luther.

It adds that the Luther songbook must be one "printed at no suspect place and unfalsified". This was aimed at the Reformed-leaning printings of the 1560s and 1570s (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1087):

> und mag vor der prediger [!] ein deudschen psalm aus Lutheri gesangbuch, das an keinen verdechtigem ort gedruckt und unvorfelschet ist gesungen werden.

and before the sermon a German psalm may be sung out of Luther's songbook, [one] that is printed at no suspect place and is unfalsified.

Rostock required Lossius in every church, and one melody everywhere. Rostock, Conformitas ceremoniarum, c. 1560 (Sehling 5, pp. 288–289):

> Es wird für gut angesehen und notig eracht, das man in allen kirchen halten sol Lucae Lossii psalmodia und sol sich das chor darnach richten.

It is thought good and needful that Lucas Lossius's Psalmodia be kept in all churches, and the choir order itself thereby.

> Es sollen sich auch die schulmeister und cantores bevleissigen, das in allen gesengen musste einerlei melodia gehalten werden.

The schoolmasters and cantors also shall be diligent that in all songs one melody be kept.

The Pomeranian Agenda ordered every church to buy Lossius's cantional (§8.8.6).

8.18.7 Latin and German

The orders agree that the congregation sings in German. They differ on how much Latin to keep, and why. Bugenhagen defended the Latin chants for the sake of the Latin school children. He reproved those who would have "all things and singing in German, as though it were wrong to sing a Latin word". Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 438):

> Wy laven overs nicht, ock schelden nicht, sonder seggen, dat de id eyn weynich to nowe nemen, de alle dink unde sank so willen düdesch hebben, gelick efft id unrecht were, eyn latinisch wort edder eyn ander to syngen. Dewile doch Paulus > recht, me schal mit tungen reden nicht vorbeden. Wen de leyen de düdesche misse hebben, so scholen se den latinischen kynderen unde andern to gude holden, dat se to tiden singen eyn latinisch Gloria in excelsis, eyn Haleluja, Sanctus, Agnus unde sundergen sank, alse sequentien in den dren groten festen, doch düdesch dar mank edder darneven gesungen.

We praise not, nor do we chide, but say that they take it a little too strictly who will have all things and singing in German, as though it were wrong to sing a Latin word or another; since Paul saith rightly that one shall not forbid to speak with tongues. When the laity have the German Mass, they shall bear with the Latin children and others, that these sing at times a Latin Gloria in excelsis, an alleluia, Sanctus, Agnus, and special songs, as sequences on the three great feasts; yet with German sung in among them or beside them.

East Frisia kept the Latin "because we will that the Latin tongue, together with all good arts, as music, be kept in honour". Ostfriesland, Kirchenordnung, 1535 (Sehling 7/1, p. 380):

> Wente wy willen, dat de latinische sprake sampt alle gude kunsten, alze de musica, in den kercken und scholen in eheren geholden werden.

For we will that the Latin tongue, together with all good arts, as music, be held in honour in the churches and schools.

Hohenlohe kept the Latin for the schools and added German "for the unlearned and those inexperienced in the Latin tongue". Hohenlohe, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 15, p. 60):

> umb derselbigen willen die lateinische gesang im prauch behalten und darneben auch die teutsche gesang vonwegen der ungelerten und d[er lateynischen sprach unerfahren].

for its sake keep the Latin songs in use, and beside them also the German songs, because of the unlearned and those inexperienced in the Latin tongue.

Hesse (1574, Philippist) reasoned from 1 Corinthians 14: whoever does not understand cannot say Amen. It allowed Latin only before the congregation had gathered, and at vespers when few were there. It also limited the singing before the sermon to half an hour on feast days and a quarter of an hour on weekdays. Hessen, Agende, 1574 (Philippist; Sehling 8, p. 411):

> Wie kann aber einer Amen sagen, zu dem, das er nicht verstehet und nit weiß, was damit gemeint ist? 1. Cor. 14. Derhalben, gleich wie alle predigten, gebet und danksagung in bekanter teutscher sprach geschehen, also soll auch der gesang, wann der ganze gemeine hauf beieinander ist, teutsch sein. Dieweil aber doch in stedten, da mancherlei leut seind, viel erfunden werden, so in schulen erzogen und das latein verstehen, dergleichen oftmals frembde leut, welchen diese sprach wol bekant, zu den gemeinen versamblungen sich verfügen, mag underweilen im anfang, ehe die ganze gemein zusammenkompt, und zur vesper, wann ohn das wenig leut vorhanden, ein lateinischer psalm oder introitus gesungen werden, doch daß auf den dorfen durchaus, in stedten aber mehrerteils allein teutsche gesenge im gemeinen brauch seien und bleiben. Es söllen auch die gesenge aufs kürzest angestellet und vor der predigt auf die feiertage über eine halbe, auf die werktage aber über ein vierteil stunde aufs höchste nicht erstreckt werden, damit das volk nicht aufgehalten und, ehe dann die predigt angehet, zum überdruß verursacht werden möge.

But how can one say Amen to that which he understandeth not and knoweth not what is meant thereby? 1 Corinthians 14. Therefore, as all sermons, prayer and thanksgiving are done in the known German tongue, so also the singing, when the whole common multitude is together, shall be German. But since in towns, where there are many kinds of people, many are found who were brought up in schools and understand Latin, and likewise strangers often come to the common assemblies to whom this tongue is well known, a Latin psalm or introit may be sung at times at the beginning, before the whole congregation cometh together, and at vespers, when few people are present anyway; yet so that in the villages wholly, and in the towns for the most part, only German songs be and remain in common use. The songs also shall be set as short as may be, and before the sermon shall not be stretched on feast days over half an hour, and on working days over a quarter of an hour at the most, that the people be not held up, and be caused to weariness before the sermon beginneth.

Sayn called Latin singing in the papacy "a special punishment of God", citing Isaiah 28 and 1 Corinthians 14 (Sehling 19/1, p. 369):

> das es bißher beschehen im bapstumb, vor ein sonderlich straff Gottes zu achten, wie Esaias 28 unndt S. Paulus 1. Corinth. 14 bezeugen. Unndt hatt das ansehen, das solch kirchen gesangh, so in unbekanter sprach beschehen, soll that it hath hitherto happened in the papacy is to be counted a special punishment of God, as Isaiah 28 and St Paul, 1 Corinthians 14, bear witness. And it hath the appearance that such church singing, done in an unknown tongue, was supposed by the merit of its work to reconcile God's wrath.

8.18.8 Length

Long singing was to be avoided "that such Christian and wholesome ceremonies may remain pleasant to the people and not become tedious". Pomerania, Kirchenordnung, 1535 (Sehling 4, p. 341):

> Lange singent dar etlike prestere lust to hebben, schal ut orsake vormeeden werden, dat sulke christlike unde heelsamen ceremonien dem volke lüstich bliven, unde nicht vordreetlick werden.

Long singing, wherein some priests have pleasure, shall for this cause be avoided: that such Christian and wholesome ceremonies may remain pleasant to the people and not become tedious.

Two, or at most three, pieces of figured music at one service are enough, "that the people also may have room to praise God with song". Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 54):

> Twe gude stücke edder thom högesten dre in figurativis sind up eine tidt genoch, dat dat volk ock rhum hebbe, Got mit sange tho lavende, besundergen under der communion, alse Christus secht: Sülck doht tho myner gedechtnisse.

Two good pieces, or at the most three, in figured music are enough at one time, that the people also may have room to praise God with song, especially during the communion, as Christ saith: "This do in remembrance of me."

Schönburg held weekday singing and preaching together to one hour, "so the people are kept willing to go to the sermon and can also come home to work". Schönburg, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 2, p. 171):

> Summa, dass allezeit in der wochen, an werktagen alles singen und predigen in einer stunde geschehen und nicht darüber. Se behält man das volk willig zur predigt gehen und kan auch anheimb kommen zur arbeit.

In sum, that always in the week, on working days, all singing and preaching be done in one hour and not beyond. So the people are kept willing to go to the sermon, and can also come home to work.

8.18.9 The organ

The organ was allowed, "neither commanded nor forbidden". It was not a way of serving God, but like a trumpet that moves people to pray, hear the word, and come to church. Bremen, Kirchenordnung, 1534 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 461):

> Orgelen unde Musica, de fry syn, noch gebaden noch vorbaden, mach me gebruken, nicht darumme, Godt darmede tho denende unde Affgöderye tho stercken unde den rechten Gades denst tho weren, alse de Papisten don, sunder alse eine trammete edder süs ein geschrey, dar de minschen mede beweget werden unde orsake averkamen, unde tho bidden unde flitich Gades wort tho hören, gelick alse Helizeus an der Harpen wyssagede, unde yn de Kercken tho ghande unde tho blivende.

Organs and music, which are free, neither commanded nor forbidden, may be used; not in order to serve God therewith and to strengthen idolatry and hinder the right service of God, as the Papists do; but as a trumpet or else a cry, whereby men are moved and get occasion both to pray and diligently to hear God's word, even as Elisha prophesied at the harp, and to go into the church and abide there.

Heilbronn grounded the organ in the Psalms and in the pleasure of melody, which stirs the heart. Heilbronn, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, p. 317):

> unnd dieweil gott in allen dingen in Orgeln, Cimbalen unnd Saitenspielen globt werden soll, wie in den hailligen psalmen geschriben ist, und auch der menschen hertz nicht allein durch solche liebliche melodey erfreyt und erwechkt, die gottlichen gutthaten zu berichten.

and since God is to be praised in all things, in organs, cymbals and stringed instruments, as is written in the holy psalms, and the heart of men also is not only gladdened and awakened by such lovely melody to tell of the divine benefits [...].

The organist was to play only after the choir or church had begun, and to agree with the schoolmaster beforehand. Buxtehude, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 7/1, p. 78):

> schall der organiste in der misse, metten und vesper spelen, dat de chorr edder de ganze kercke vorher anhevet und singet. Der schulmeister schall sick stedes vorher mit dem organisten des sanges halven vorgliken, alle unschicklicheit und confusion to vorhodende.

the organist shall play at Mass, matins and vespers that which the choir or the whole church first beginneth and singeth. The schoolmaster shall always agree beforehand with the organist touching the singing, to prevent all unseemliness and confusion.

Harlingerland forbade organists to play worldly songs. Harlingerland, Kirchenordnung, 1573/74 (Sehling 7/1, p. 739):

> Und nachdeme an örtern, daselbst örgeln sind, die organisten unfieisig werden befunden und weltliche lieder schlagen, dorauß ergerniß erfolgen, aber gleichwoll in der heiligen schrift dieselben nit verbotten, sondern damit den allmechtigen zu loben und preisen, ordnen wir, daß die organisten mit ernste ihreß dienstes wahrnehmen und herrliche geistliche stucke, der hilligen schrift einhell[ig, schlagen].

And since in places where there are organs the organists are found unfaithful and play worldly songs, whereof offence followeth, although these [organs] are not forbidden in holy Scripture, but [given] to praise and extol the Almighty therewith, we ordain that the organists attend to their service earnestly and [play] glorious spiritual pieces, agreeing with holy Scripture.

In polyphonic settings for the court chapel of Württemberg the familiar tune was to be kept in the tenor or another voice, so the people could recognize it. Württemberg, Hofkirchenordnung, 1560 (Sehling 16, p. 427):

> Zum beschluß soll man alwegen ein teutschen Psalmen singen unnd sich in Compositionibus befleissenn, daß die gewonlichen, gepreuchige Melodi uff den Tenor oder ein anndere Stim gerichtet werde.

At the close a German psalm shall always be sung, and in the compositions care shall be taken that the customary, familiar melody be set in the tenor or another voice.

The organ's silence in certain seasons and the limits on what the organist might play are treated in Chapter 9, §§9.3.6–9.3.7.

8.18.10 Freedom

Many orders end their rules on singing with a clause of freedom, or leave the choice to the pastor, and some say plainly that such ceremonies are not laws. Northeim: "such things must be free and subject to no law" (§8.8.1). Goslar (1528) left the burial singing to "a godly, reasonable, learned pastor" (§8.17.4). Mansfeld did not bind others to its plan (§8.18.5). Nördlingen's St George's order (1555), after Naumburg, lets the Gloria be dropped when the hymns after the epistle are long, "for such ceremonies shall at all times be free for the pastor to change according to the people's convenience". Nördlingen, Ordnung der ceremonien at St George's, 1555 (Sehling 12, p. 322):

> Man mag auch wol das Gioria in excelsis außen lassen, wenn die geseng nach [der] epistel etwas lang sind; denn solche ceremonien sollen one das dem pfarher nach des volks bequemhait zu endern alle zeit frei stehen.

One may also well leave out the Gloria in excelsis when the songs after the epistle are somewhat long; for such ceremonies shall at all times be free for the pastor to change according to the people's convenience.

Appendix 8.A The chief hymn (Hauptlied) of each Sunday and feast in the old sources

This appendix condenses the Compare by day sheet of `hymns.xlsx`. That sheet lists every hymn that any witness in `hymns.db` assigns to a day, with the number of witnesses for each. Here the same evidence is cut down in two ways, so that the hymn of each day can be read at a glance:

- Only the old sources are counted. These are the church orders and hymnals of 1537–1694, the Leipzig usage of Bach's time, and the modern studies that do nothing but collate those older sources. The modern lists, from 1800 onward, are left out.
- Only the hymns with significant support are given. A day with one clear hymn shows that hymn alone. A day where support is divided shows each hymn with good support, and none of the hymns with only a few witnesses.

The word Hauptlied is later terminology and does not occur in the corpus (see §8.8 and the Introduction, The hymn database). The tables these witnesses keep are tables for the hymn of the day, which the orders place between the epistle and the gospel (§8.8.7) or before the sermon (§8.10.3).

8.A.1 The witnesses counted

Of the 54 witnesses in `hymns.db`, 33 are counted as old.

Group	Witnesses
Sehling church orders (12)	Naumburg 1537/38; Heilbronn 1543; Nördlingen 1544/1555; Anhalt 1551; Pirna 1555–1569; Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1565; Pomerania, Agenda, 1569; Weissenfels 1578; Nördlingen 1579; Mansfeld 1580; Hof 1592; Hohenlohe 1596
Hymnals collated in Liliencron's de tempore concordance (15)	Spangenberg 1545; Keuchenthal 1573; Selnecker; Gesius 1601; Leipzig Geistliche Lieder 1605; Stiphelius 1607; Augsburg 1619; Liegnitz 1625–30; Helmstedt 1626; Schein 1627; Erhardi, Frankfurt 1659; Schleswig-Holstein 1665; Darmstadt 1687; Goslar 1687; Leipzig Kirchenandachten 1694
Other single orders and schemes (4)	Ludecus, Ordo cantionum Germanicarum, 1589; Carpzov (the hymns on which he preached); the de tempore plan of c. 1700 printed by Graff; Bach's Leipzig usage (the chorales of his Sunday and festival cantatas)
Modern studies that collate older sources (2)	Stiller (the Leipzig, Weissenfels and Dresden hymn schedules of Bach's time); Thompson, dissertation, Appendix 2 (Ludecus with twelve other 16th-century lists)

The other 21 witnesses are modern and are not counted. Krusemark explains his own lists on pp. 95–96 of `Hymns_ABC_Krusemark.pdf`. The modern witnesses are:

- Krusemark's own series: Years A, B and C, and, on the days the three-year series does not cover, a list for every year or one each for even and odd years;
- the lists of Stuckwisch, Reuning, Gehrke, Eckardt, Judisch, Zion (Detroit) and Redeemer;
- the LCMS Synod selections of 2016–17 and the LSB Hymnal Committee;
- Lutheran Worship (1982), Lutheran Service Book (2006) and the SELK hymnal;
- the Mecklenburg hymnal of 1855;
- two private schemes (MC, SD).

Some of the old witnesses reach `hymns.db` through modern compilations. Carpzov, Bach and the plan of c. 1700 come through Krusemark or the Hymn of the Day table, and Selnecker through all three. Each is counted once, as a witness, whichever book it was read from (Introduction, The hymn database).

St George's at Nördlingen took its list (1544/1555) from Naumburg, with a few changes. Both are counted, since each is the order of its own church.

Some of the old witnesses add nothing, or little, to the table, for these reasons:

- Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1565. Its table is a three-week rotating cycle, not tied to particular Sundays, so it falls outside this table.
- Anhalt 1551. It counts only for the feasts. After Trinity it keeps each hymn of a short list for about four Sundays, which ties none of them to a particular Sunday.
- Heilbronn 1543 and Hof 1592. They assign Latin office hymns. These count among the witnesses for their days but never reach the threshold. Nördlingen 1579 gives such hymns as well as its German list.

8.A.2 How the table was made

- Counting is by witness. A hymn's figure is the number of old witnesses that assign it to the day. "11 of 18" means that 11 of the 18 old witnesses that give any hymn for that day give this one.

- One hymn, one row. Spellings, Low German forms and English titles of the same hymn are joined, as in the workbook. English-only citations from Carpzov, Selnecker, Bach, the plan of c. 1700 and Thompson are joined to their German hymns. "The Day Is Surely Drawing Near", for example, is joined to Es ist gewisslich an der Zeit. The hymn database does this joining with its lexicon of hymns and its table of English titles, so `hymns.db` and the workbook group the hymns as this table does.

- Hymns with the same or a similar opening are kept apart:

    - Eber's Herr Gott, dich loben alle wir, on the angels, is kept apart from Luther's German Te Deum Herr Gott, dich loben wir. Liliencron himself insists on this distinction.
    - Luther's Easter hymn Jesus Christus, unser Heiland, der den Tod überwand is kept apart from his Communion hymn of the same opening. A source that prints only the opening words for an Easter occasion is read as meaning the Easter hymn.
    - Als Jesus Christus, Gottes Sohn is kept apart from Jesus Christus, wahrer Gottes Sohn.
    - Mag ich dem Tod nicht widerstahn is kept apart from Mag ich Unglück nicht widerstahn.
    - Als Jesus Christus, unser Herr, which Nördlingen 1579 gives for Palm Sunday, is kept apart from Luther's Communion hymn, whose opening words it contains.
    - Mansfeld's Nimm von uns, Herr Gott is kept apart from Martin Moller's later Nimm von uns, Herr, du treuer Gott.

- Grouped entries are shared out. An entry for "Lent 1–3", "Lent 5, Palm Sunday and Good Friday" or "Pentecost and the Monday" counts for each of the days it names. The last Sundays after Trinity are given together, as most of the hymnals give them ("Trinity 25–27").

- A season counts only for the feast at its head. An entry for a season that begins with a feast counts for that feast alone: "at Christmas and on until the Purification" for Christmas Day, "from the Purification to Septuagesima" for the Purification, and "from Easter to the Ascension" for Easter Day. So do Mansfeld's lists for the time "around and after" Christmas, Easter and Pentecost, to which its list for the Sundays and feasts sends those three feasts. Entries for a season with no feast at its head ("Advent", "Lent", "after Trinity"), entries for the feasts of the Virgin as a class, and the Pfalz-Zweibrücken cycle are not counted.

- Which hymns are shown. A hymn is shown for a day when it meets all three of these conditions:

    - it has at least three witnesses;
    - it has at least three fifths of the witnesses of the day's leading hymn;
    - it has at least a quarter of the witnesses that give any hymn for that day.

  On Advent 1, Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland has 20 witnesses and no other hymn more than 7, so it stands alone. On Advent 2, Gott hat das Evangelium (11), Es ist gewisslich an der Zeit (8) and Ihr lieben Christen, freut euch nun (8) are shown. Es wird schier der letzte Tag herkommen (6), Ach Gott, thu dich erbarmen (5) and Nun komm (4) are not.

- Days the witnesses leave open. On Quasimodogeniti, Maundy Thursday, Easter Monday and Pentecost Monday no hymn has three old witnesses. For these four days the table gives the hymn assigned by the editor of the corpus, marked ‡, with the number of old witnesses that do give it. The assignments are kept in a table of their own in `hymns.db`, and flagged "Assigned" in the Compare by day sheet. They are not prescriptions and are not counted as witnesses.
- Titles.
  - Original title: the hymn's standard spelling from the `hymns` lexicon.
  - Literal English: a word-for-word rendering of the incipit.
  - Common English title: the hymn's title in the English Lutheran hymnals, as the Lutheran Hymn Index gives it (Introduction, The Lutheran Hymn Index). Where the index lacks the hymn, the title of Matthew Carver's translation on his blog Hymnoglypt is given. A title that is Carver's, from Walther's Hymnal (2012), Liber Hymnorum (2016) or Hymnoglypt, is marked †. The title is "—" where the hymn has none.

† Title of Matthew Carver's translation, in Walther's Hymnal (2012) or on his blog Hymnoglypt; no older English hymnal has the hymn.

‡ Assigned by the editor; the old witnesses leave the day open (see §8.A.2). The figure is the number of old witnesses that do give this hymn.

8.A.4 Notes on the table

- Days not in the table. The saints' days not listed (St Paul, St Mary Magdalene, St Lawrence, St Martin, All Saints and others) have one old witness or two. Naumburg and Nördlingen 1544/1555 give Es ist das Heil uns kommen her for the feasts of the Virgin as a class, which is not counted for any one of them.
- The assigned days. Quasimodogeniti is the one Sunday the old witnesses leave open: Liliencron's concordance records only a single coincidence for it, and no hymn has more than two old witnesses. Mansfeld 1580 sends it back to the hymns of Easter without naming them. Only two or three old witnesses give a hymn for Maundy Thursday and the second feast days of Easter and Pentecost. The hymns assigned to these days (‡) are mostly the ones those few witnesses give: Luther's Communion hymn on Maundy Thursday (Carpzov, Selnecker), Ach bleib bei uns and Christ ist erstanden on Easter Monday (Bach's Leipzig), and Komm, Heiliger Geist on Pentecost Monday (Stiller, and Nördlingen 1579, which gives it for Pentecost and the Monday). O filii et filiae on Quasimodogeniti has no old witness, but it is the usual choice of the modern lists.
- Thin days. On some days the evidence is divided or sparse, and the "of" figure should be read with the count:
  - the Sunday after Christmas;
  - the Sunday after New Year (three witnesses in all);
  - Quinquagesima;
  - Lent 4 and 5;
  - Palm Sunday;
  - the apostles' days (five witnesses in all).

- One possible double count. Thompson's column collates Ludecus with twelve other lists and cannot be separated from Ludecus's own entries (Introduction, The hymn database). Where both support a hymn, Ludecus may be counted twice. Thompson is kept, because it is a modern study that collates old sources. Without it, the leading hymn of every day except Sexagesima would stay the same, and on Sexagesima the two leading hymns would tie. The hymns at the margin would change on 10 days. For example:
  - Advent 2 would gain Es wird schier der letzte Tag herkommen;
  - Ascension would gain Nun freut euch, Gottes Kinder, all;
  - Trinity 17 and 23 would gain Wär Gott nicht mit uns diese Zeit;
  - Palm Sunday would lose Nun freut euch, lieben Christen gmein.
- What the table shows.
  - The core of the old de tempore scheme is very stable. On 29 of the 65 days whose hymn the witnesses choose, one hymn has at least two thirds of the day's witnesses. Examples:
    - Advent 1, Nun komm;
    - Epiphany, Was fürchtst du, Feind Herodes;
    - Easter 5, the Lord's Prayer hymn;
    - Exaudi, Wo Gott der Herr;
    - Pentecost, Komm, Heiliger Geist;
    - Trinity Sunday, Gott der Vater wohn uns bei;
    - Trinity 6 and 13, Es ist das Heil;
    - Trinity 8, Ach Gott, vom Himmel;
    - Trinity 10, An Wasserflüssen Babylon;
    - the Purification, Mit Fried und Freud;
    - the Annunciation, the German Magnificat.
  - The same hymns return on several Sundays:
    - Wo Gott der Herr nicht bei uns hält on Epiphany 4, Lent 5, Exaudi and Trinity 17 and 23, with Wär Gott nicht mit uns beside it on Epiphany 4;
    - Vater unser and Warum betrübst du dich together on Lent 4 and Trinity 7 and 15;
    - Aus tiefer Not, Allein zu dir and Erbarm dich mein among Trinity 3, 11, 19 and 22.

Chapter 9. Organ, Instruments and Bells

This chapter covers instrumental music and sounded signals in the church orders of the sixteenth century printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts. It asks:

- The organ. Was it kept? Did the organist play a prelude before the service or before a hymn, interludes between the verses or the parts of the service, or a postlude after the blessing? When was it silent? What might the organist not play?
- Other instruments. Were instruments other than the organ played in church? If so, which, when, and by whom?
- Bells. Which bells were rung: tower bells, a choir bell, a little bell or handbell at the altar, a Sanctus bell? When were they rung: before church, at the canonical hours, at the consecration and elevation, at the Sanctus, during the Lord's Prayer, at the Gloria in excelsis on Easter Day, during certain hymns, for the dead, at baptisms and weddings, against storms?

How the chapter is laid out.

- §9.1 answers each question in brief, and §9.2 sets out the scope and sources.
- §9.3 covers the organ: its defence and its limits, the prelude, the alternation of organ and singers, the postlude, the seasons and rites in which it was silent, and the organist.
- §9.4 covers the other instruments: trombones, town pipers and fiddlers, the carillon and the tower-blower, and the minstrels of weddings.
- §9.5 covers the bells: their purpose, the summons to church, the daily and prayer bells, bells within the Mass, bells at hymns and the litany, the dead, baptisms and weddings, storms, and the lesser signals of sermon and alms.
- §9.6 is a table by order, and §9.7 a concordance of every order quoted.

Related chapters. Several passages are treated more fully elsewhere and are only cited here:

- the organ and polyphony at the introit and other propers: Chapter 4, §§4.4.5, 4.10.4–4.10.5;

- choir, people and organ in the hymns: Chapter 8, §§8.14.7, 8.18.9;
- figural music, the organ and bells as marks of feast rank: Chapter 12, §§12.10.5, 12.10.7;
- bell baptism and weather-ringing, and the organist's contract: Chapter 13, §§13.12.3, 13.15.5;
- the bell-ringer's appointment and pledge: Chapter 13, §13.12.2;
- the length of the sermon that the sermon glass measured: Chapter 11, §11.7.

9.1 Summary of findings

The organ

1. Kept by the Lutherans, kept out of the service by the Reformed. Luther would have "all the organs piped" if it served the young (1526). No Lutheran order abolishes the organ. Wittenberg's castle church in 1525 limits it to the Sunday Te Deum and German songs. Strasbourg in 1598 defends "singing and organ-playing" against the Reformed, who cast them out as "papistical leaven". Reformed Emden (1594) keeps its organ but uses it only before the service, while the people gather, and after it, as they leave (§9.3.1).
2. Preludes: yes, of two kinds (§9.3.2).
    - A voluntary while the people gather. At Strasbourg 1598 the organist begins "at the end of the last ringing"; at Emden 1594 (Reformed), "before nine o'clock, when the people gather".
    - Announcing each piece. The organist begins a chant or plays the first stanza of a hymn, and the choir or people take it up (Gelnhausen [1568], Naumburg 1537/38, Nördlingen 1555, Schweinfurt 1576, Hof 1592).
    - Strasbourg requires the prelude to be "even that which the congregation shall afterward sing", not "strange pieces and motets".
    - The practice of the organist "preambulating" before every item belongs to the seventeenth century (Bischofswerda 1676).
3. Interludes: yes, chiefly as alternation (§9.3.3).
    - The usual form. The organ plays a verse or stanza in turn with choir and people, and the verse it plays is usually not sung (Regensburg 1553, Naumburg, Nördlingen, Prussia 1568, Pomerania 1569, Hof). At Regensburg's Vespers, though, "all the verses [are] nevertheless sung wholly throughout, for the better understanding".

- Limits on the organ's share. Strasbourg allows "once or at the most twice" in a hymn; Reutlingen 1574, one stanza after every two sung. At Bergedorf 1544 the people first sing the whole psalm. Schleswig-Holstein 1542 has the German hymns sung "without organ".
- Pieces between the parts of the service. These are separate from the alternation (§9.3.4). Schönburg 1542 has them after the epistle, after the Creed, and after the sermon "until the priest come to the altar". Schweinfurt 1576 has one in place of the Et in terra.

4. Postludes: yes (§9.3.5).
   - After the blessing. Strasbourg allows "other pieces" or Latin motets for those who wish to stay.
   - Elsewhere. Gelnhausen: "Let the organist close with a little piece". Schönburg: "a good piece" after communion. Prussia 1568: a piece after the Nunc dimittis. Hamburg 1556: "before and after the sermon". Emden 1594 (Reformed): as the people leave.
5. Silent seasons and rites (§9.3.6).
   - Seasons. Lent or Passiontide (Hamburg 1529, Nördlingen 1555); Advent II to Christmas Eve (Hof 1592); Rogation week (Pomerania 1569); lower feasts (Henneberg 1582).
   - Rites. The litany (Henneberg 1582); communion (Wolfenbüttel 1543, Schönburg 1542 except on high feasts, Reutlingen 1574); baptism (Thorn 1560–1570).
   - Forbidden music. Worldly songs, love-songs, dances and galliards (Calenberg-Göttingen 1542, Hamburg 1556, Pomerania 1569, Stettin 1573, Emden 1577 (Reformed)) (§9.3.7).

Other instruments

6. Rare, and tied to figural music, courts, towns and weddings (§9.4).
   - Trombones. "Trombones and other such instruments" accompany the psalms at the Ansbach court in 1538, and at weddings in church.
   - Town pipers and fiddlers. Danzig in 1612 retains the town pipers (three masters, three journeymen) and three fiddlers "for the choir", to play whenever there is figural music.
   - Emden (Reformed). The organist-town-piper of 1577 serves with "Christian music and other instruments" on feast days, tends the carillon and blows from the town-hall tower. The editor's notes add trombone-playing "in the organ" (1579), and a tower-watchman's psalms on cornett and trombone (1679).
   - Wedding minstrels. Pipes, fiddles, drums and trumpets play the bridal party to the churchyard (Hamburg 1529). They must not disturb the sermon (Nassau-Dillenburg 1570, Herford 1532), and they are withheld from a bride who has lost her honour (Schwäbisch Hall 1543/1615).
   - Not found. No order names a lute, regal, cornett or trumpet in the service itself.

Bells

7. Purpose. Bells call people to the Word and to prayer, not to "the pomp of the feasts" (Wittenberg 1525, Saxe-Lauenburg 1585). Some orders curbed festal chiming (Danzig 1567, Bentheim 1601 (Reformed)); most kept more bells for greater days (Altenburg 1533, Danzig 1612) (§9.5.1).
8. Before church. The usual summons is three signs, the last "together", or three with one bell and a little bell last (Gelnhausen [1568], Esslingen 1540 (Moderate Reformed), Bentheim 1601 (Reformed)). Danzig 1612 names its seven bells and gives the full Sunday and weekday ringing (§9.5.2).
9. At the canonical hours and through the day (§9.5.3).
   - Morning and evening, and the prayer bell. The ringing at morning and evening was kept, even where no Matins or Vespers was held (Prussia 1544). It was reinterpreted as a bell pro pace, for peace, government and against the Turk. Many orders also rang at noon or eleven (Saxony 1528, Allstedt 1533, Meissen 1540, Wolfenbüttel 1543, Kurpfalz 1546, Lüneburg 1564, Hoya 1581, with its prayer). It also served as a time-signal for workers.
   - The Ave Maria and Salve. These names were dropped or the ringing recast (Heilbronn 1532, Coburg 1554/55, Lichtenberg 1579).
   - The Friday bell for the Passion. Kept by some (Kurpfalz 1546, Thüngen 1564), abolished with the Tenebrae ringing by others (Hohenlohe 1582).
10. At the elevation and consecration (§9.5.4).
    - A sign with the little bell before the consecration. Prussia 1525, Riga 1530 and Kurland 1570.
    - Ringing at the elevation. The Danish Ordinatio of 1537 allows it, "the bells meanwhile sounding according to custom". The Interim restored it at Ansbach (1548). At Hof it lasted until about 1560, "with a threefold pulse of the little bell".

11. At the Sanctus. Only Hatzkerode (1534?) rings a bell during the German Sanctus, and that is to call the communicants into the choir. There is no "Sanctus bell" in the corpus (§9.5.4).
12. During the Lord's Prayer. Not in the Mass. The Our Father is tied to the bell only in the daily prayer bells and the Friday bell (§9.5.4).
13. At the Gloria in excelsis on Easter. Not found (§9.5.4).
14. During hymns and chants (§9.5.5).
    - The Te Deum. Ringing to call the people to the sermon and Mass (Prussia 1544 and 1568). All the bells at the Christmas Te Deum (Hof 1592).
    - The litany. The greatest bell so that those in the field may join in (Hohenlohe 1582), or singing "under the ringing" (Regensburg 1567).
    - Not found. No order rings during a particular stanza.
15. For the dead (§9.5.6).
    - Kept as a call to the living. "That the living also may consider the hour of their own dying" (Meissen 1540).
    - Abolished. The Saturday ringing "for all faithful souls" (Zwickau 1529, Reuss 1552).
    - Regulated. Equality (Ulm, Moderate Reformed), fees by the number of bells (Danzig 1578), silence during sermons (Herford 1532).
    - Withheld. From despisers of the Sacrament (Zwickau 1533) and from unbaptized infants (Lippe 1571).
16. At baptisms and weddings (§9.5.7).
    - Baptism. A new evangelical custom: a sign with a bell, often the little bell, calls the congregation to a baptism held outside the regular service (Heilbronn c. 1529, Kurpfalz 1556, Ansbach 1556, Limpurg 1610).
    - Weddings. At Hof the bell is rung half an hour later than usual.
17. Against storms. Kept as a call to prayer by some, abolished by most (§9.5.8; see Chapter 13, §13.15.5).
18. Small bells. A little bell in the choir calls the scholars (Prussia 1568); a little bell calls communicants (Haldensleben 1564); a little bell ends the sermon when the hour-glass runs out (Zerbst 1545); and a hand-bell accompanies the alms collection during sermons (Brandis 1529). Little bells at the Sacrament were rejected by the Reformed (Micron) and at Transylvanian sick-communions (§§9.5.4, 9.5.9).

9.2 Scope, sources and method

Sources. The chapter draws on the whole of Sehling's edition as held in `eko.db`: volumes 1–24, including the half-volumes, with the editors' introductions and notes. Passages from an editor's introduction or note are marked as such, and so are witnesses later than about 1615, which are cited only for comparison: Bischofswerda 1676, and the Emden tower-watchman of 1679 (Reformed).

Searches. The corpus was searched for:

- The organ and organist: orgel, orgeln, organist, organicen, organum, präambulieren, schlagen near a chant or hymn.
- Other instruments: posaune/basune, zinke, pfeifer, fidler/geige, laute, trommete/trompete, pauke, bunge, saitenspiel, spielleute, instrument, klockenspil, cymbala.
- Bells: glocke, glöcklein, schelle, campana/campanula, leuten/läuten/lüden, beiern, puls, zeichen, pro pace, betglocke, Ave Maria, Salve, wetterleuten, tenebre, schiedung.

Because leuten ("ring") is spelled like Leute ("people") in many of the orders, ringing passages were found by searching for a bell word within a few words of a ringing verb, and of the Mass item in question (Sanctus, elevation, consecration, Pater noster, Gloria, Te Deum, litany, baptism, burial, wedding, storm).

Negative findings. Several things the chapter reports as "not found" were searched for directly:

- a "Sanctus bell" (Sanctusglocke or any compound), a Wandlungsglocke, a hand-bell (Handglocke);
- ringing during the Lord's Prayer of the Mass;
- ringing at the Easter Gloria in excelsis;
- ringing at a named stanza of a hymn;
- a regal, a lute, a cornett or a trumpet in the service.

A passage phrased in an unexpected way may have escaped these searches. The negatives mean only that no such passage was found.

What the chapter does not repeat. The chapter does not repeat what is quoted in full elsewhere; see the related chapters listed at the head of this chapter.

9.3 The organ

9.3.1 Kept, and defended

Luther. Luther's preface to the Deutsche Messe names the organ in the same breath as the bells, as means that may serve the teaching of the young. Luther, Deutsche Messe und ordnung gottis diensts, 1526 (Sehling 1, p. 11):

> umb solcher willen mus man lesen, singen, predigen, schreiben und tichten, und wo es hulflich und fodderlich dazu were, wolt ich lassen mit allen glocken dazu leuten und mit allen orgeln pfeiffen und alles klingen lassen, was klingen kunde.

for the sake of such must one read, sing, preach, write and make verses; and where it were helpful and furthering thereto, I would have all the bells rung thereto, and all the organs piped, and let sound everything that could sound.

Wittenberg 1525. The Wittenberg order for the castle church, a year earlier, is far more sparing. The bells are a signal, not festal pomp, and the organ, since it is already there, may sound only at the Sunday Te Deum and at German songs. Wittenberg, Wie es einer zeit mit den ceremonien der kirchen gehalten wirt, 1525 (Sehling 1, p. 699):

> Item campanis utantur ad signum quo significetur quando conveniendum sit ad cantum et quando ad audiendum verbum dei. Non vero utantur illis ad pompam illam festorum. Organis (quando iam illic sunt) possunt, si voluerint, uti solum dominica die ad te deum laudamus et si quando germanica carmina cecinerint.

Item, let them use the bells for a sign, whereby it may be signified when they are to come together to the singing and when to the hearing of the word of God. But let them not use them for that pomp of the feasts. The organs (since they are already there) they may use, if they will, only on the Lord's day at the Te Deum laudamus, and whenever they sing German songs.

The Lutheran norm. No Lutheran order in the corpus abolishes the organ. Where a church had one, the orders assume an organist and regulate him. Wolfenbüttel 1543 commends him as "honest, and good also for the service of the art of music", and lets the pastor, council and treasury pay him "more or less, according to the worth of his art, for organists are very unequal" (Sehling 6/1, p. 45).

Strasbourg 1598 against the Reformed. By the end of the century the organ had to be defended. The Strasbourg order of 1598 opens its chapter "Von dem Gesang und den Orglen" against those who would cast singing and organ out of the church as popish leaven. Sehling's editor notes that the Reformed are meant. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 1598 (Sehling 20/1, pp. 602–603):

> Gleich wie wir nit billichen könden noch sollen den vielfältigen Mißbrauch, welcher in dem Bapstumb mit dem Gesang und den Orglen getrieben worden, Also könden wir auch der jenigen Fürnemmen nit loben noch gut heißen, Welche das Gesang und das Orglen als eitel Bäpstischen Saurteig auß der Kirchen allerdings außmustern. […] Was aber die Musicam figuratam und die Orgeln anbelanget, Bringet es die Erfahrung selbst mit, das dadurch der Zuhörenden Hertzen und Gemüte ermuntert und erfrischet werden, Gott, den Herrn, auch mit ihrem Mund unnd Gesang desto frölicher zu loben und zu preisen. Jedoch soll in allweg dahin gesehen werden, Das solche figurata Musica und das Orglen weder das gemeine Gesang der gantzen Kirchen noch den ubrigen Gottesdienst mit Predigen und Betten verhindere und zulang auffhalte.

Even as we cannot nor ought to approve the manifold abuse which was practised in the papacy with singing and organs, so likewise can we not praise nor approve the purpose of those who cast singing and organ-playing wholly out of the church as mere papistical leaven. […] But as touching figural music and the organs, experience itself showeth that thereby the hearts and minds of the hearers are stirred up and refreshed to laud and praise God the Lord the more joyfully with their mouth and singing also. Yet shall it be in every way looked to, that such figural music and organ-playing neither hinder nor too long hold up the common singing of the whole church, nor the rest of the service with preaching and praying.

The Reformed. The Reformed orders went the other way. Micron's London order (Reformed) (German edition 1565) rejects "altars, lights, little bells, vestments" (§9.5.4). At Reformed Emden the organ survived in the great church, but it was kept out of the service altogether. Emden, Kirchenordnung, 1594 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 489):

> Des orgels is under dem gesang neen gebruck, ock by dem gadesdenst nicht, ahne allein des Sondages vor negen uhren, wenn sick dat volk samlet, und darna, wenn idt tor kercken wedder utgaet.

Of the organ there is no use during the singing, nor at the service, save only on Sunday before nine o'clock, when the people gather, and afterward, when it goeth out of the church again.

The editor adds that the Reformed synods of Dordrecht (1574, 1578) and Middelburg (1581) pressed for the abolition of organ-playing, and that in some Dutch towns the organ passed to the town council, which had the organist play at set hours to keep people out of the taverns (Sehling 7/1, p. 476, editor's note). The Emden order thus gives exactly the two places that Lutheran orders also gave the organ outside the singing: a prelude while the people gather and a postlude as they leave.

9.3.2 The prelude

The orders know two kinds of prelude: a voluntary while the congregation gathers, and the organist's announcement of each piece before it is sung.

While the people gather. Strasbourg has the organist begin as soon as the last bell has stopped and "a fair congregation" is there, and play nothing but what the people are about to sing. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 1598 (Sehling 20/1, p. 603):

> Darumb, wann man die Musicam figuratam und die Orgel gebrauchen will, Soll es folgender gestalt gehalten werden: Erstlich, das der Organista bei zeit anfange zu ende des letsten leutens, als bald ein zimliche Gemein versamlet ist, Wie dann deßgleichen die Senger in allen andern Predigten auch thun sollen, wann schon nit georglet oder figurirt wird. Zum andern, das er vor und unter dem Gesang der Kirchen nit frembde Stucke und Moteta schlage, Sondern eben das jenig, was hernach die Gemeine singen soll.

Therefore, when one will use figural music and the organ, it shall be held after the following manner. First, that the organist begin betimes, at the end of the last ringing, as soon as a fair congregation is assembled; as likewise the singers shall do at all other sermons, even when there is no organ-playing or figural music. Secondly, that before and during the singing of the church he play no strange pieces and motets, but even that which the congregation shall afterward sing.

The Emden order of 1594 (Reformed; §9.3.1) has the same voluntary "before nine o'clock, when the people gather".

The organ begins each piece. In the orders that describe the festal service in detail, the organ begins the hymn or chant and the singers take it up. At Gelnhausen the organist begins the Veni Sancte Spiritus, plays the first stanza of the German psalm, and plays "a little piece" after it. The editor glosses "schlage das erst gesetz" as "plays the first stanza". Gelnhausen, Kirchenordnung, [1568] (Sehling 9, p. 652):

> Nachdem man beydt, sommer und winter, umb sieben uhr das erst zeichen, das ander zu halben achten, und umb achte zusammen geleutet, hebe der organist (weil der furhanden) das veni sancte spiritus an, nachmals singe es der chor aus. Darauff fange der organist einen teutschen psalmen an, schlage das erst gesetz, nachmals singe in der chor aus, one abwechselung der orgel. Nach dem psalmen schlage der organist ein stucklein, darauff folget die collect und lection, darnach fange der organist zuweilen das: Nun bitten wir, zuweilen das: Wir glauben all an einen Got an, der chor singe es gar aus. […] Darauff folget die collect und benediction. Der Organist beschlies mit einem stucklein.

After the first sign hath been rung at seven o'clock, both summer and winter, the second at half past seven, and [all the bells] together at eight, let the organist (if there be one) begin the Veni Sancte Spiritus; afterward let the choir sing it out. Thereupon let the organist begin a German psalm, play the first stanza, [and] afterward let the choir sing it out, without alternation of the organ. After the psalm let the organist play a little piece; thereupon followeth the collect and lesson; after that let the organist begin sometimes "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray", sometimes "We All Believe in One True God", [and] let the choir sing it quite out. […] Thereupon followeth the collect and benediction. Let the organist close with a little piece.

Schweinfurt 1576 likewise has "the organist begin to play the Sunday Kyrie, which the choir singeth after", and at the Sunday introit the organist "beginneth to play the introit, which the choir singeth after, as is customary" (Sehling 11, pp. 647–648). At Hof the organist "always first plays the melody" of each verse of the German Magnificat (Sehling 11, p. 429; see Chapter 10, §10.11.4).

"Präambuliret der organist". The fullest late example is not a sixteenth-century order. It is a service order sent by the council of Bischofswerda to its cantor in 1676, printed by Sehling in a note. The organist "preambulates" before the Kyrie, after the epistle, after the Gospel and catechism, and before the blessing; at the noon service before the hymn, before the sermon hymn and before the hour of prayer (Sehling 2, p. 106). It shows where the practice of the sixteenth-century orders led, but it is late evidence and is cited here only for comparison.

9.3.3 Interludes and alternation

Alternation. The commonest use of the organ in the orders is alternatim: the organ takes a verse or stanza in turn with the choir or people, and the verse it takes is played, not sung. Regensburg is explicit. Sehling's editor glosses the first sentence "that is, these pieces are not sung", and the communion stanzas "as an interlude". Regensburg, Kirchenordnung of Justus Jonas, 1553 (Sehling 13, p. 421):

> So aber ein organist vorhanden ist, so schlecht er den introit sambt dem Kyrie eleison, Et in terra, Patrem, Sanctus und Agnus Dei auf der orgel, auch sub communione in den teutschen gesengen ein gesetz umb das ander. […] Und woe der organist verhanden, so schlecht er einen vers umb den andern auf der orgel, doch das gleichwol alle vers durchaus ganz gesungen werden umb bessers verstands willen.

But if an organist be present, he playeth the introit together with the Kyrie eleison, Et in terra, Patrem, Sanctus and Agnus Dei on the organ, and also under the communion, in the German songs, one stanza after another. […] And where the organist is present, he playeth [at Sunday Vespers] one verse after the other on the organ; yet so that all the verses be nevertheless sung wholly throughout, for the better understanding.

Three and four choirs. Naumburg's St Wenzel order sets out the German songs in alternation of schoolboys and people, each with its own cantor. When the organ plays there are three choirs, and when the maidens sing, four. Naumburg, Kirchen-Ordnung for St Wenzel, 1537/1538 (Sehling 2, p. 72):

> Und solche gesang alle die deuzsch sein, wen das volk versamlet ist, werden ein chor umb den andern gesungen, also der schüler chor ein gesetz singet und anhebt, darnach das volk den andern chor helt, welches auch seinen eigenen cantorem hat. Wan man aber orgel schlegt, werden drei chor gehalten, und hebt die orgel alwegen an, ausgenommen zum et in terra heben die knaben an und darnach die orgel, darauf der chor und dan das volk. Wan aber auch die jungfrauen zu chor singen, so werden vier chor gehalten, und singen die drei chor alle gesetz der deuzschen geseng, einen vers umb den andern, und schlegt der organist ad tonum darein.

And all such songs as are German are sung, when the people is assembled, one choir after the other: the scholars' choir singeth and beginneth a stanza, and after that the people keepeth the other choir, which also hath its own cantor. But when the organ is played, three choirs are kept, and the organ always beginneth, save that at the Et in terra the boys begin and after them the organ, thereupon the choir and then the people. But when the maidens also sing in choir, four choirs are kept, and the three choirs sing all the stanzas of the German songs, one verse after the other, and the organist playeth in between in the [same] tone.

The same passage, almost word for word, stands in Caspar Löner's Nördlingen order as revised in 1555 (Sehling 12, p. 320). Hof's three-choir introit with organ, boys, older boys and girls is quoted in Chapter 4, §4.4.5.

How much the organ might take. The orders that care most for the congregation's singing limit the organ's share:

- Strasbourg 1598: after intoning, the organist may play "not more than once or at the most twice" amid the church's singing (quoted in §9.3.5).
- Reutlingen 1574: two stanzas sung, then one played, "about as long as one of the sung stanzas", so that the young and the people learn the hymns. Reutlingen, Artikel der Schulvisitation, 1574 (Sehling 17/2, p. 58):

> zu anndern son- unnd feyertagen aber allwegen zwen vers oder zwey gesetz gesungen unnd darauff eins (das ohngevar so lang alls der gesungnen gesetz eins weren) georglet solle werden, damit der jugent unnd gemeinem volckh die > christliche kirchen geseng desto bekantter und sie desto eintrechtig unnd gevlißner mitzusingen angereitzt mögen werden.

but on other Sundays and holy days always two verses or two stanzas shall be sung, and thereupon one (which might last about as long as one of the sung stanzas) shall be played on the organ; to the end that the Christian church songs may be the better known to the youth and the common people, and they the more stirred up to sing along with one accord and diligently.

- Bergedorf 1544: the organ may play on feast days, but only after the people have sung the whole psalm, and only what has been sung. Bergedorf, Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 5, p. 389):

> Wahr ock orgelen in den kercken weren, die magh men woll an den virdagen gebruken, de psalme unde den vorgemelthen kercksangh darup spelen, doch also, dat dat volk de ganzen psalme thovoren singe, unde up den orgelen allene, wat gesungen is, spele.

Where also there be organs in the churches, one may well use them on the holy days, [and] play the psalms and the aforesaid church song thereon; yet so that the people sing the whole psalms first, and that on the organs only that be played which hath been sung.

- Schleswig-Holstein 1542: in the cathedral and collegiate churches the Latin Gloria alternates choir and organ, but the German Gloria, the German hymn in place of the sequence and the German Creed are sung by "the whole church" straight through "without organ". Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 146):

> Averst des Sondages edder yn den Festen, Wann de Prester gesungen hefft: Gloria yn Excelsis Deo, Darup de Chor unde nicht de örgeln Antwerden: Et yn terra Pax Hominibus Bona voluntas, so schal men gar unde gantz uphören, Darmit de gantze Kercke hernamals singen möge: Allene Godt yn der höge sy eer etc., Welcker gesanck ane underlath beth thom ende schal gesungen werden ane Orgelent. Darna so vart dat Chor unde orgelen vort tho singende: Laudamus te, Benedicimus te etc., beth thom ende, Darna Alleluia. Averst yn stede der Sequentien schal wedderumme singen de gantze Kercke einen düdeschen sanck ane underlath unde ock ane örgelen.

But on Sunday or on the feasts, when the priest hath sung Gloria in excelsis Deo, and the choir and not the organ hath answered Et in terra pax hominibus bonae voluntatis, then shall they stop altogether, that the whole church may afterward sing "All Glory Be to God on High", etc., which song shall be sung without break to the end, without organ-playing. After that the choir and organ go on to sing Laudamus te, Benedicimus te, etc., to the end; after that the Alleluia. But in the stead of the sequence the whole church shall again sing a German song without break and also without organ.

Organ and the people's hymn at communion. Pomerania's Agenda lets the organ play during the communion hymns, but only three times: once at the beginning, once in the middle and once at the end. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 439):

> Wenn dise gesenge under der communion gesungen werden, schölen de organisten eren gesank mit der orgel deste körter maken, unde nene weltlike, lichtverdige gesenge slan. De pastor schal vorschaffen, dat de orgeln der maten modereret werden, dat men de düdischen psalme under der communion mit der gemeine ganz tom ende singe, unde dat de vörgesetteden gesenge ummeschichtich gesungen werden, dat dat chor unde dat volk einen vers umme den andern singe, up dat se alle to gelick den schölern unde der gemeine gebrücklick werden, derwegen kan de organiste ein mal tom anfange, ein mal im middel, na gelegenheit, einmal tom ende, vor der collecta, orgelen.

When these songs are sung under the communion, the organists shall make their song on the organ the shorter, and play no worldly, light songs. The pastor shall provide that the organs be so moderated that the German psalms under the communion be sung with the congregation wholly to the end, and that the aforesaid songs be sung in turn, the choir and the people singing one verse after the other, so that they all be alike in use by the scholars and the congregation. Therefore the organist may play once at the beginning, once in the middle as occasion serveth, [and] once at the end, before the collect.

Hamburg 1556 lets the organist play "fittingly in between" the verses of the German psalm sung in place of the alleluia and sequence, "as elsewhere is customary, or, as the time allows, close the song with the organ" (Sehling 5, p. 552). Stettin forbids its organists to "fantasize on the organ while other good Christians sing the psalms with the congregation" (§9.3.7).

9.3.4 Organ pieces between the parts of the service

Beside the alternation, some orders give the organ a short piece of its own between the parts of the service. The fullest list is Schönburg's. Schönburg, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 2, pp. 170–171):

> Vor dem introitu kyrie eleison, soll der chor ein kyrie, ein christe und wiederum ein kyrie singen und der organista dazu schlagen. An oder für das letzte mag er auch ein gut kurz stücklein schlagen etc. […] 3. Nach der epistel schlägt der organist, darauf singt der chor das alleluja, zuweilen den sequenz, so fern der rein und christlich ist, darauf die ganze ecclesia einen teutschen psalmen oder christlich lied, was man will, wie im gesang-büchlein zu finden. 4. Nach dem evangelisten, dem patrem etc. lateinisch schlägt der organist, singet die kirche: Wir glauben etc. 5. Nach der predigt schlägt der organista etwas, bis der priester über den altar kommt, praeparavitque panem et calicem offerendum. […] 7. […] Der organista soll sub communione nicht schlagen, es sei denn an hohen festen; aber nach gehaltener communion mag er ein gut stücke schlagen.

Before the introit, [at the] Kyrie eleison, the choir shall sing one Kyrie, one Christe and again one Kyrie, and the organist play thereto. At or before the last he may also play a good short little piece, etc. […] 3. After the epistle the organist playeth; thereupon the choir singeth the alleluia, sometimes the sequence, so far as it is pure and Christian; thereupon the whole church [singeth] a German psalm or Christian song, whichever one will, as is found in the song-book. 4. After the Gospel [and] the Patrem, etc., in Latin, the organist playeth; the church singeth "We All Believe in One True God", etc. 5. After the sermon the organist playeth something, until the priest come to the altar and have prepared the bread and the cup to be offered. […] 7. […] The organist shall not play under the communion, except on high feasts; but after the communion is held he may play a good piece.

Schweinfurt 1576 puts an organ piece in the place of the Et in terra: "upon the Gloria, etc., and instead of the Et in terra, etc., the organist playeth some music" (Sehling 11, p. 647). Gelnhausen's "little piece" after the psalm (§9.3.2) is of the same kind.

9.3.5 The postlude

After the blessing. Strasbourg keeps the organist's freer music, and Latin motets, for the end of the service, when those who want to listen may stay and the rest may go about their business. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 1598 (Sehling 20/1, p. 603):

> Damit sich auch das Orgeln und Singen nit zu lang verziehe, Soll er, nach dem er intonirt, nit uber ein- oder zum höchsten zweimal unter das Gesang der Kirchen schlagen, Sondern derselben ihre zeit lassen, ihr Gesang mit gemeiner Stimme und Andacht zuverrichten. Wenn aber der Gottesdienst allerding verrichtet und dem Volck der Segen gegeben ist, Als dann mag der Organist auch andere Stucke schlagen oder auch Lateinische Moteta singen lassen, Dabei dann jederzeit ohn zweivel die jenige gern bleiben werden, die Lust und Anmut dazu haben. Und wird doch das gemeine Volck, welches lieber seinen Geschüften nachgeht, dadurch nit verhindert noch aufgehalten. Wann auch die Gesänge, welche das Volck singet, getheilet werden, das entweder der Organist dazwischen schlägt oder ein theil des Gesangs biß nach der Predigt gesparet wird, Welches letstere doch allein bei den längeren Gesängen geschehen soll, Soll man die Gesänge also theilen, das, was dem Verstand und innhalt nach zusammen gehöret, bei einandern bleibe und nit von einandern gerissen werde.

And that the organ-playing and singing be not drawn out too long, he shall, after he hath intoned, play not more than once, or at the most twice, amid the singing of the church, but leave it its time to perform its singing with common voice and devotion. But when the service is wholly performed and the blessing given to the people, then may the organist play other pieces also, or have Latin motets sung; whereat those will without doubt always gladly stay who have pleasure and liking thereto; and yet the common people, which would rather go after its business, is not thereby hindered nor held up. When also the songs which the people singeth are divided, so that either the organist playeth between, or a part of the song is kept until after the sermon (which latter yet shall be done only with the longer songs), one shall so divide the songs that what belongeth together in sense and content remain together and be not torn from one another.

- Gelnhausen [1568]: "Let the organist close with a little piece" (§9.3.2).
- Schönburg 1542: "after the communion is held he may play a good piece" (§9.3.4).
- Emden 1594 (Reformed): the organ only "when it goeth out of the church again" (§9.3.1).
- Prussia 1568: at Vespers the organist plays alternate verses of the Magnificat, and "after the Nunc dimittis" plays a piece. Prussia, Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 75):

> Wo man einen organisten hat, schlecht er einen vers um den andern, das nach dem magnificat der chor die deutsch antiphonam singet und der organist nach dem nunc dimittis ein stück schleget. Darauf schleusst man mit dem versikel, collekten und benedicamus domino.

Where there is an organist, he playeth one verse after the other, so that after the Magnificat the choir singeth the German antiphon, and the organist after the Nunc dimittis playeth a piece. Thereupon they close with the versicle, collects and Benedicamus Domino.

- Hamburg 1556: the organists are to play "before and after the sermon" on holy days and working days, and at Vespers on all holy eves and days. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 5, p. 547):

> Dat organisten, erer kunst wol erfaren, unde ehrlike menner angenamen werden, düsse schollen beide hillige dage unde werkeldage in den kerken, dar to acht schlägen geprediget wert, vor unde nah der predige, ock to der vesper in allen hilligen avenden unde dagen na des chores ordinarii meldinge up der orgelen spelen. De organisten schollen sick mit denen im chore des gesanges vergeliken, und eindrechtichlick, dat se im chore anfangen, up den orgelen spelen. De organisten schollen sick entholden, werltlike, schimplike unde untüchtige lede in den karken to spelende.

That organists well skilled in their art and honest men be taken on. These shall play on the organs, both on holy days and working days, in the churches where there is preaching at eight o'clock, before and after the sermon, also at Vespers on all holy eves and days, according to the direction of the choir's ordinarius. The organists shall agree with those in the choir about the singing, and play on the organs in accord with what they begin in the choir. The organists shall refrain from playing worldly, scurrilous and unseemly songs in the churches.

9.3.6 When the organ was silent

Seasons.

- Lent and Passiontide. Hamburg 1529 lets the organ "rest for a time, especially the fortnight over, when the Passion is preached" (Sehling 5, p. 513). Nördlingen 1555 lets the organ "remain out" in Lent until Easter, except on the Annunciation (Sehling 12, p. 320).
- Advent. Hof suspends the organ from the second Sunday of Advent to Christmas Eve. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 432):

> Nota. Hac dominica suspenduntur organa usque ad vigiliam Nativitatis Christi.

Note. On this Sunday the organs are suspended until the vigil of the Nativity of Christ.

- Rogation week. Pomerania 1569 has "no figural song nor organ" in Rogation week, except on the Ascension and its vigil (Sehling 4, p. 466; quoted in Chapter 12, §12.10.5).
- Lower feasts. Henneberg 1582 keeps the lower feasts "without organ", and Aschersleben 1575 sings the Vespers of apostles' days "without the organist" (cited in Chapter 12, §12.10.5).

Rites.

- The litany. On the Henneberg prayer day of 1582 the German litany is sung "without organ or figural music" (Sehling 2, p. 311).
- The communion. Wolfenbüttel forbids the organ after the sermon in the Mass, so that the Supper may be attended to "in remembrance of Christ". Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 45):

> Süst mach de organiste alle Sundage na willen des pastoris spelen. Overst in der misse schal men yd nicht lange maken, dat de predike nicht werde vorhindert und dat de leyen dar ock ruhm hebben, Christum mit düdeschem gesange to lavende. Doch na der predike in der misse schal men nicht up den orgelen spelen, sondern alleine des aventmals Christi dar wahrnemen tho Christi gedechtnisse.

Otherwise the organist may play every Sunday at the pastor's will. But in the Mass one shall not make it long, that the sermon be not hindered, and that the laity also have room there to praise Christ with German song. Yet after the sermon in the Mass one shall not play on the organs, but attend only to the Supper of Christ there, in remembrance of Christ.

Schönburg 1542 likewise keeps the organ silent under the communion except on high feasts (§9.3.4), and Reutlingen 1574 drops the organ "wholly" on communion days because the service is then longer (Sehling 17/2, p. 58).

- Baptism. At Thorn baptism is to be held when the church is quiet, not under the singing or the organ. Thorn, Kirchenordnung, 1560–1570 (Sehling 4, p. 230):

> Die taufe soll gehalten werden, wen es in der kirchen stille ist, nicht unterm gesang oder orgeln, mit aller andacht und ererbietung, und nicht mit unnützen geschwetz der beistehenden

Baptism shall be held when it is still in the church, not under the singing or organ-playing, with all devotion and reverence, and not with the idle chatter of the bystanders

At weddings, by private arrangement. Hamburg 1529 allows the organ and the scholars' Te Deum, or figural music, at a wedding, "as the people have arranged it with the organist and cantor for their drink-money" (§9.4.4).

9.3.7 The organist: what he might not play

The orders do not prescribe repertory beyond the hymns and chants. They forbid the secular:

- Calenberg-Göttingen 1542: organists are to set the spiritual songs themselves or obtain settings, "for love-songs and worldly songs are not at all fitting to be played in the congregation". Calenberg-Göttingen, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 6/2, p. 785):

> Desgleichen sollen auch vleis thun die organisten, das sie die geistlichen lieder entweder selbs absetzen oder von anderen abgesetzt uberkomen. Denn bulen und weltliche lieder wollen sich in der gemeine zu schlagen gar nicht gebüren aus ursachen, das nach der lere Pauli 1. Corint. am 14. alles zur besserung daselbs geschehen sol.

Likewise the organists also shall take diligence that they either set the spiritual songs themselves or obtain them set by others. For love-songs and worldly songs are not at all fitting to be played in the congregation, for this cause, that after the teaching of Paul, 1 Corinthians 14, all things there should be done unto edifying.

- Hamburg 1556: no "worldly, scurrilous and unseemly songs" (§9.3.5).
- Pomerania 1569: "no worldly, light songs" (§9.3.3).
- Stettin 1573: the visitation's articles for the organists. Stettin, Visitations-Abschied, 1573 (Sehling 4, p. 533):

> III. Weil auch unraht und schade daraus erfolget, wen fremde ohne unterscheid auf die orgel kommen, sollen sie niemand ohne vorwissen des pastoris darauf lassen […]. V. Zu rechter zeit dieselbigen stimmen und einrichten, nicht wen man beicht höret oder albereit hat angefangen zu singen. VI. Sie sollen auch nicht weltliche lieder oder tentze auf der orgel schlagen. […] IX. Mit den cantoribus sollen sie auch einmütig sein, nicht oftmals inen zu vordruss zu hoch stimmen oder sonst mit unterheulen oder wen andere gute christen die psalmen mitsingen in der gemeine auf den orgeln fantasiren. X. Die leute nicht ubersetzen in den hochzeiten, wan sie gefordert werden, das sie in den kirchen aufwarten, sondern nehmen, was verordnet ist. XI. Sie sollen sich nicht ausgeben vor gemeine spielleute, daraus vorachtung des ministerii folgt. XII. Das sie auch das ministerium in allen ehren halten und nicht von der orgel alsbald aus der kirchen laufen und gottes wort verachten und verseumen.

III. Since also mischief and harm follow when strangers come upon the organ without distinction, they shall let no one upon it without the pastor's knowledge […]. V. [They shall] tune and set the same at the right time, not when confession is being heard or the singing hath already begun. VI. They shall also play no worldly songs or dances on the organ. […] IX. They shall also be of one mind with the cantors, not often, to their vexation, pitch too high, or otherwise howl underneath, or fantasize on the organs when other good Christians are singing the psalms with the congregation. X. [They shall] not overcharge the people at weddings, when they are required to attend in the churches, but take what is appointed. XI. They shall not pass themselves off as common minstrels, from which contempt of the ministry followeth. XII. That they also hold the ministry in all honour, and do not run straight from the organ out of the church and despise and neglect God's word.

- Emden 1577 (Reformed): the town's organist, who was also the town piper, is forbidden "all galliards and other light dances" (§9.4.2).

Cantor, organist and pastor. The organist is subject to the pastor (Hamburg 1556, Stettin 1573) and is to agree with the choir about what is sung (Hamburg 1556). His appointment by contract is treated in Chapter 13, §13.12.3 (Hildesheim 1581).

9.4 Other instruments

In brief. Apart from the organ, the church orders mention instruments in church only rarely, and then for figural music on feasts, at a court, or at weddings. The instruments named are trombones (Posaunen, basunen), the town pipers' wind instruments (Pfeifer), fiddles (Fidler), and, outside the service, the carillon, the cornett and trombone of the tower-blower, and the drums, trumpets, pipes and strings of the wedding minstrels. No order in the corpus names a regal, a lute, a cornett or a trumpet in the service itself, and none names a "Sanctus trumpet" or any instrumental signal at the altar other than a bell.

9.4.1 Trombones at the Ansbach court, 1538

Margrave George's mandate of 1538 in defence of figural and choral singing tells the clergy that at his residence at Ansbach the psalms and other scriptural songs are not only sung but accompanied with trombones and other instruments, as is also done at weddings in church. Ansbach, Figural und coral zu ziemlicher zeit in der kirchen zu singen, 1538 (Sehling 11, p. 397):

> So lassen wir auch soliche geseng als nemblich psalmen und ander ding, aus heiliger gotlichen schrift gezogen, und nit weltliche, zu unzucht raizende liedle, hie zu Onoltzbach als in unserm furstlichen anwesen (zu geburlicher zeit) nit allain singen, sonder denselben gesengen mit pusaunen und andern dergleichen instrumenten beistand tun - nit zu unserm oder der unsern wollust, sonder zuvorderst, ja auch allein zu der ehre Gottes des Almächtigen, dahin auch solichs wie sonst alles anders entlich gerichtet und gemeint sein sölle -, wie auch hie zu allen hochzeiten in der kirchen nit unzimblich geschicht und gehalten wurdet.

So also do we cause such songs, namely psalms and other things drawn out of the holy divine Scripture, and not worldly ditties that provoke to lewdness, here at Onolzbach, as at our princely residence (at fitting time), not only to be sung, but also have these songs assisted with trombones and other such instruments (not for the pleasure of us or ours, but first of all, yea, solely to the honour of God Almighty, whereto this, like all else, shall in the end be directed and meant), as is also not unseemly done and observed here at all weddings in the church.

9.4.2 Emden (Reformed): the organist as town piper, the carillon and the tower

In 1577 the council of Emden engaged Paul Hanssen, already the town piper, as organist of the great church for a year. His contract binds him to the organ, to "Christian music and other instruments" on feast days, to the carillon, and to blowing from the town-hall tower with a journeyman and a pupil. Emden, Organistenvertrag, 1577 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, pp. 475–478):

> 3. Tom drudden soll he idt orgel mit flyte und guider voirsorge bedienen, und up den festdagen mit christlicher musica und anderen darin stemmenden instrumenten, sovele eme moeglich, bedienen. […] 4. Item idt klockenspil, alse syther beschehen, up gewonlichen tyden versorgen. […] 6. Und dewile he nu dit jair beide dienste togelycke werd bedenen, soll he up seinen kosten einen guiden gesellen beneffens sick tor stadt dienst holden, die mit eme und einen seiner discipulen, dairto bequem, alle weke twiemal van den raithuißtorn […] 8. Item alle galiarden und sunst lichtferdige danse soll he in gene wegen spelen, vele weiniger danzscholen holden.

3. Thirdly, he shall serve the organ with diligence and good care, and on the feast days serve with Christian music and other instruments according therewith, so far as he may. […] 4. Item, [he shall] tend the carillon at the customary times, as hath been done hitherto. […] 6. And whereas he will now this year serve both offices together, he shall at his own cost keep a good journeyman beside him for the town's service, who with him and one of his pupils fit thereto [shall] twice every week [blow] from the town-hall tower […] 8. Item, he shall in no wise play any galliards or other light dances, much less keep dancing-schools.

The sixth article goes on to have the tower-blowing done also "through the whole eight days" of the annual fairs. Sehling's editor adds from the church accounts that in 1579 Paul's brother Janken was paid "for that he adorned the church with trombone-blowing in the organ", that boys sang at the high feasts "in the organ" in 1584 and 1587, and that a tower-watchman engaged in 1679 had to blow "a psalm with cornett and trombone" at eleven and at sunset, and a verse of a psalm or hymn every hour of the night (Sehling 7/1, pp. 476–477, editor's notes). The last is a seventeenth-century witness, and the instruments in the organ were added to a Reformed service whose order of 1594 kept the organ out of the singing (§9.3.1).

9.4.3 Danzig: town pipers and fiddlers in the choir, 1612

The Danzig order of 1612 is the one order in the corpus that puts instrumentalists on the church's payroll for the service. Beside the choir-men and assistants, the town pipers (three masters and three journeymen) and three fiddlers are retained "for the choir", and must come "with their instruments" whenever there is figural music, and obey the Kapellmeister. Danzig, Kirchenordnung für Danzig, 1612 (Sehling 4, p. 212):

> Noch werden nebenst diesen chorgesellen und astanten der stadt pfeifer, nemlich drei meister und drei gesellen zu chor gehalten […]. Item, nebenst diesen pfeifern sein auch zu chor bestellet drei fidler; den gibt man semptlich alle quartal 9 M, thut das ganze jahr 36 M. Dess haben diese beiderlei spielleute auch zu geniessen, das sie auf hochzeiten für andere gefördert werden, und müssen ihnen keine frembde spielleute eingriff thun. […] Für diss salarium und accidentien seind beide, die pfeifer und fidler schuldig, allezeit, wen man figuriren soll, nebenst dem chorgesellen und astanten mit ihren instrumenten sich fruhzeitig einzustellen und auch nebenst ihnen den capellmeister in allen, wie es mit der musica verordnet, zugehorchen, und wer hierinnen nachlessig gefunden würde, soll nach erkenntnüss der kirchenväter gestrafet werden. Imgleichen sein sie auch zu brautmessen zeit aufzuwarten schuldig, sintemal sie von den breutigam ihre besoldunge dafür empfangen.

Further, beside these choir-men and assistants, the town pipers, namely three masters and three journeymen, are kept for the choir […]. Item, beside these pipers there are also engaged for the choir three fiddlers; to them together is given every quarter 9 marks, which maketh for the whole year 36 marks. Both these kinds of minstrels have also this benefit, that they are preferred before others at weddings, and no strange minstrels may encroach upon them. […] For this salary and these perquisites both the pipers and the fiddlers are bound, whenever there is to be figural music, to present themselves betimes with their instruments beside the choir-men and assistants, and with them to obey the Kapellmeister in all things, as is ordained for the music; and whoever is found negligent herein shall be punished at the discretion of the churchwardens. Likewise they are bound to attend at the time of nuptial Masses, since they receive their pay for it from the bridegroom.

The lutenists named in Danzig's ordinances on wedding feasts belong to the feast, not to the church (Sehling 4, p. 197).

9.4.4 Weddings: minstrels to the churchyard gate

The minstrels of a wedding procession played the bridal party to church. The orders let them play up to the churchyard and keep them out of the service.

Hamburg 1529. The minstrels play before the bride and bridegroom as far as the churchyard; in church there may be organ and singing by private arrangement. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 516):

> also dat vormiddage de brudegam mit den mans voran und dar na de brudt mit orer selschup na der karcken gaen, und de spellude spelen vor en her bet an den kerckhof. Dar machme denne in der karcken up den orgelen spelen und singen mit den scholeren Te deum laudamus, edder wat anders van gade, edder ock in figurativis etc., wo de lude idt denne mit dem organisten und cantoren vor ohre drankgelt hebben bestellet. Dar truwet me se denne vor dem hogen altar, wo wontlick so that in the forenoon the bridegroom with the men go before, and after them the bride with her company, to the church, and the minstrels play before them as far as the churchyard. There one may then in the church play on the organs and sing with the scholars Te Deum laudamus, or something else of God, or also in figural music, etc., as the people have then arranged it with the organist and cantor for their drink-money. There they are then wedded before the high altar, as is customary

Not during the sermon. Nassau-Dillenburg bids the wedding party come to church in time, so that the preacher is not disturbed by their music. Nassau-Dillenburg, Visitationsabschied, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 112):

> Es sollen sich auch breutgam unnd braut sampt iren freundtschafften unnd geladenen gesten zur bestimptten predigstunde zeitlich zur kirchen finden, damit der prediger, so er die predig schon angefangen hette, durch das pfeiffen, geigen unnd ander hochzeitlich spiel nicht geirret und andere unruig gemacht werden

The bridegroom and bride also, together with their kinsfolk and invited guests, shall be found at church in good time at the appointed hour of preaching, that the preacher, if he had already begun the sermon, be not put out, nor others made unquiet, by the piping, fiddling and other wedding music

Herford 1532 asks the council to keep everything silent near the church while the sermon is preached: bells, drums, trumpets and pipes. Herford, Kirchenordnung, 1532 (Sehling 21, p. 171):

> Id is ock van noden und themlick, dat se sick entholden und stille sin under dem prediken, Alle klocken, id sy den doden offt nicht, Item bungen und trometen, pipen und solckes, dat up dem kerckhove offt sus na by der kerken de predikers offt thohorers vorstoren mochte

It is also needful and seemly that they refrain and be still during the preaching: all bells, be it for the dead or not; item drums and trumpets, pipes and such things as might disturb the preachers or hearers on the churchyard, or otherwise near by the church

A sign of honour withheld. At Schwäbisch Hall a couple who had not waited for their wedding went to church without music. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1543/1615 (Sehling 17/1, p. 155):

> Braut und Bräutigam, die Ihrer Ehren nit erwartet, sondern darwider gehandelt, und diß außfindig worden, sollen ohne Saitenspiel und die Braut mit bedecktem Haupt zur Kirchen gehen.

Bride and bridegroom who have not waited for their honour, but have acted against it, and this hath been found out, shall go to church without string-music, and the bride with covered head.

Trumpets and kettledrums at the feast. The trumpets and drums named in the orders belong to the wedding procession and feast, and the sumptuary orders regulate or forbid them:

- Bremen 1546: all estates may use the council's minstrels, "the first two with the trumpets and the other two with pipes and drums" (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 496).
- Danzig 1590/1595: the wedding ordinances forbid trumpets, the military fanfare (Feldgeschrei) and kettledrums at weddings, as "no burgher's merriment" (Sehling 4, p. 195).
- Nordstrand 1605: trumpets are wholly forbidden at weddings, christening feasts and other feasts (Sehling 23, p. 411).
- Ulm 1531 (Moderate Reformed): according to the editor, the council's decree of 18 June 1531 on baptisms and weddings asked that weddings be blessed without any display, including music with drums, wind and string instruments (Sehling 17/2, p. 68, editor's introduction).

The organist as minstrel. Stettin 1573 forbids its organists to overcharge for playing at weddings, or to "pass themselves off as common minstrels" (§9.3.7). Ansbach 1538 (§9.4.1) and Danzig 1612 (§9.4.3) show instruments at weddings in church; Hof 1592 has figural music "before and after" the wedding (Sehling 11, p. 430).

9.4.5 Drums on the tower at Zwickau

The visitors at Zwickau stopped the drumming and carousing on the tower of St Mary's, like the fencing-school, during the Sunday afternoon sermon. Zwickau, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 723):

> Das pauken und queserei auf dem kirchenthurm zu unser liben frauen, desgleichen die fechtschul, soll under des nachmittags predigt des sontags und anderer feste absein und nicht gehalten werden bis noch vorendung derselben predigt.

The drumming and carousing on the church tower of Our Dear Lady, likewise the fencing-school, shall cease during the afternoon sermon of the Sunday and other feasts, and not be held until after the end of the same sermon.

9.5 Bells

9.5.1 What the bells are for

A signal to the Word and to prayer. The orders agree that bells exist to call people to the preaching of the Word and to common prayer. Wittenberg 1525 (§9.3.1) allows them "for a sign … when they are to come together to the singing and when to the hearing of the word of God", and not "for that pomp of the feasts". Saxe-Lauenburg sets out the same principle, then forbids weather-ringing and secular use of the bells. Saxe-Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 423):

> Und weil die glocken umb des gottesdienstes willen fürnemlich vorordnet worden, dass die leute damit zum gehör göttliches wortes und gemeinem gebete gefodert werden, und aber im bapstthumb greulicher missbrauch und aberglauben mit den glocken getrieben ist worden, als die schreckliche donnerwetter damit von einander zu treiben, so sol solches gottloses wesend hiemit genzlichen abgeschaffet, und bei peen und harter ungnade vorboten sein, und sollen auch die glocken zu keinem weltlichen gebrauch und sachen gerüret, noch gezogen werden, es geschehe denn, dass wegen des feindes oder feursnot, oder wenn die fronendienste den leuten angekündiget sollen werden, oder sonsten in nothwendigen gemeinen sachen das volk zusammen müste geleutet werden. Und sol solch leuten alles von niemand, denn von dem cüster geschehen, weil ihm die glocken amptes halben befohlen sein.

And since the bells were ordained chiefly for the sake of divine service, that the people be summoned by them to the hearing of God's word and to common prayer, and yet in the papacy horrible abuse and superstition have been practised with the bells, as to drive asunder the terrible thunderstorms with them, such godless doing shall hereby be wholly abolished, and forbidden on pain of penalty and heavy displeasure. And the bells shall not be touched nor pulled for any worldly use or matter, unless it be that the people must be rung together because of the enemy or of fire, or when the labour-services are to be announced to the people, or otherwise in necessary common affairs. And all such ringing shall be done by none but the sexton, since the bells are committed to him by virtue of his office.

Against pomp. Some orders cut back the festal ringing and chiming as a relic of the old feasts:

- Danzig 1567: "the ringing and chiming on the feasts and their vigils, which are not appointed and have no ground in God's word", is to be left off by the ringers, "to avoid papistical suspicion" (Sehling 4, p. 187).
- Bentheim 1601 (Reformed): the count renews his mandate against "the unnecessary, manifold ringing, and especially the superstitious chiming with the bells", on Sundays and feasts as at funerals. Bentheim-Tecklenburg, Mandat zum Glockenläuten, 1601 (Reformed; Sehling 22, p. 302):

> daß sie sich hinfürter deß beyerenß mit den glocken durchauß enthalten unnd auff den son-, auch den festagenn zu den predigten dreimahl vorher nacheinander nur mitt einer glockenn unnd, wan daß beschehen, zu ende uffs letzste mit einem [kl]einem glöckschen, sofern ein solchß verhandenn, leuten, auch zu begrebnuß der thodtenn bei der maß, so in ihrer g. kirchenordnung außtrücklich angedeütet, verbleiben, unnd sich deß anderen ubermessigen täglichen leütenß keineßwegß hinfürter zubrauchen eüsseren sollen that they [the sextons] shall henceforth wholly refrain from chiming with the bells, and on Sundays and also on feast days ring to the sermons three times beforehand, one after the other, with one bell only, and, when that is done, at the end, last of all, with a little bell, if there be one; and at the burial of the dead keep to the measure expressly set out in his Grace's church order; and shall in no wise henceforth make use of the other excessive daily ringing

Rank by bells. Most Lutheran orders, though, kept the festal ringing as a mark of the day. At the Altenburg castle chapter in 1533, working days are rung in with one great bell, and Sundays and feasts "with more bells, to distinguish the time" (Sehling 1, p. 516; quoted in Chapter 12, §12.10.7). Danzig 1612 chimes the great feasts with the three larger bells and the small feasts "with the Osanna" (ibid.).

9.5.2 The summons to church

Three signs. The usual summons is three spells of ringing, often with different bells, the last of them "together" (zusammen) with all the bells:

- Gelnhausen [1568]: the first sign at seven, the second at half past seven, and all together at eight (§9.3.2).
- Bentheim 1601 (Reformed): three times with one bell, then a little bell last (§9.5.1).
- Esslingen 1540 (Moderate Reformed): a forewarning with the bell used on working days for singing, then a second, short sign with the noon bell, after which the sermon begins at once. Esslingen, Läuteordnung für den Predigtgottesdienst, 1540 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, p. 394):

> das man hinfüro uff die sonntäg zu den dreyen predigen vor unnd nach mittags allwegen ain vorzaichen mit der singglocken, so man an wercktagen pflegt zu prauchen, ain gutte weil leutten und folgents, so man die predigen schier anfahen will, das annder zaichen mit der mittag glockenn unnd dasselbig ganntz kurtz leutten soll. Allso wann dasselbig ander zaichen mit der bemellten mittag glokken außgeleuttet, das alls balld die predigen angefangen werde.

that henceforth on Sundays, to the three sermons before and after noon, one shall always ring a fore-sign with the singing bell, which is wont to be used on working days, a good while; and afterward, when the sermons are about to begin, the second sign with the noon bell, and that quite short. So that when the same second sign with the said noon bell hath been rung out, the sermons be begun straightway.

Restored where it had been dropped. At Allstedt the visitors of 1533 restored the ringing to the sermon "where Thomas Müntzer abolished it" (Sehling 1, p. 511; quoted in §9.5.3).

Kept plain. Heilbronn's sexton was told around 1529 to ring only "for the early-Mass sermon and child baptism, but never more for the office of the Mass and Vespers" (Sehling 17/1, p. 226, editor's introduction; §9.5.7). Zwickau 1529 keeps the ringing to sermon, Mass and Vespers, but "to Vespers and for the dead, also early to the lesson", with one bell only (§9.5.6).

The sexton and the clock. Ringing was the sexton's office. Hamburg 1529 bids the sextons "take care that all the bells strike evenly and rightly" (Sehling 5, p. 512). Saxe-Lauenburg 1585 asks the pastors to get village churches a striking clock, or at least a sundial, "or that the sexton at least have a compass, whereby he may know how to order himself with the ringing and other things at the due time" (Sehling 5, p. 423).

The Danzig bells, 1612. The fullest description of a ring of bells and its use is the Danzig order of 1612 for St Mary's. Danzig, Kirchenordnung für Danzig, 1612 (Sehling 4, pp. 202–203):

> Art. 12. Wieviel glocken auf den kirchenthurm sein, und wie sie heissen, item, wie sie gebraucht werden. Die erste und grosseste glocke wird Ave Maria genant von alters, darumb das es die beteglocke ist. Sie wird auch Sigismundus und itziger zeit gemeiniglich die grosse glocke genant, wird von 12 mann gezogen. Die andere wird Osanna genant, auch die sturmglocke, und wird von fünf mann gezogen. Die dritte heisst Apostolica, darumb das auf die aposteltage damit gebeigert wird, wie hernach folget, und wird von fünf mann gezogen. Die vierte heisset Dominicalis, darumb das sie alle sonntage gebrauchet wird, von vier mann gezogen. Die fünfte wird Ferialis genandt, darumb das sie alle tage gebrauchet wird, von zwei mann gezogen. Die sechste heisst Sybilla oder Campana Cymbala, darumb das man alle zeit, wenn es von nöten damit signiert, und wird von einem manne gedeutet. Die siebende henget über diesen glocken allen und wird lange glocke genannt, darumb das sie zu gewisser zeit, entweder eine ganze stunde, oder zum kürzesten eine halbe stunde lang geleutet wird. Auch nennt man sie landglocke. Darumb das man sie umb die stadt herumb weit auf dem lande hören kan, dieselbe wird von einem mann gezogen. […] Am sonntage des morgens, wen der seger viere schleget, wird mit der Dominical ein puls von einem schock zügen oder ein wenig länger geleutet, und bald darauf die lange glocke, bis es fünfe schlaget, balde hernach wen es fünfe geschlagen, mit der Dominical und Ferial zusammen von zwei schock zügen, darnach wen es sechs geschlagen, wird mit der Osanna ein puls von zwei schock zügen zur morgen predigt, und den auf segers halb zwölf zu mittage mit der Osanna zur mittags predigt.

Art. 12. How many bells there are on the church tower, and what they are called; item, how they are used. The first and greatest bell is called of old Ave Maria, because it is the prayer bell. It is also called Sigismund, and nowadays commonly the great bell; it is pulled by twelve men. The second is called Osanna, also the storm bell, and is pulled by five men. The third is called Apostolica, because it is chimed on the apostles' days, as followeth hereafter, and is pulled by five men. The fourth is called Dominicalis, because it is used every Sunday; [it is] pulled by four men. The fifth is called Ferialis, because it is used every day; [it is] pulled by two men. The sixth is called Sybilla or Campana Cymbala, because one signals with it at all times when it is needful, and it is sounded by one man. The seventh hangeth above all these bells and is called the long bell, because at a set time it is rung either a whole hour or at the shortest a half hour long. It is also called the land bell, because one can hear it far out in the country round about the city; the same is pulled by one man. […] On Sunday in the morning, when the clock striketh four, a pulse of three-score pulls or a little longer is rung with the Dominical, and soon after the long bell, until it strike five; soon after, when it hath struck five, with the Dominical and Ferial together, of two score-and-sixty pulls [twice three-score]; after that, when it hath struck six, a pulse of twice three-score pulls is rung with the Osanna to the morning sermon; and then at half past eleven by the clock, at midday, with the Osanna to the midday sermon.

The article goes on to the afternoon, the working days, funerals (signalled with the Sybilla, then rung with the bells the family has paid for), the apostles' days, and the high and low feasts.

9.5.3 The daily bells: morning, noon and evening, and the prayer for peace

Kept for prayer. The morning and evening bell of the medieval Angelus (the "Ave Maria") and the evening Salve bell were nearly everywhere kept, but given a new meaning: a call to pray for peace (pro pace), for the government and against the Turk, and a time-signal for workers. The Prussian order of 1544 keeps the daily ringing in villages even where there is no Matins or Vespers. Prussia, Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 4, p. 67):

> Es ist nicht ein böser gebrauch, das man in dörfern und kleinen flecken nach alter gewonheit zu morgen und abends teglich leutet, ob man gleich da selbst weder metten noch vesper helt, sondern zur erinnerung dem volk, damit ein eusserlichs denkzeichen zum gebet gibt, es sei in heusern ader aufem felde, umb gemeinen frieden und allerlei wolfart zu bitten und zur danksagung für alle wolthat des herren gottes, darumb ist es für gut angesehen, das es auch also hinfurt teglich gehalten werde.

It is not an evil custom that in villages and small market towns one ringeth daily, after old custom, at morning and evening, although one holdeth there neither Matins nor Vespers, but for a reminder to the people, whereby an outward token is given to prayer, be it in the houses or in the field, to pray for the common peace and all manner of welfare, and for thanksgiving for all the benefits of the Lord God. Therefore it is thought good that it be kept daily so henceforth.

Saxony 1528. The Saxon visitors tell pastors not to quarrel with their people over the pacem ringing, but to teach them its right use. Saxony (Ernestine), Unterricht der Visitatoren, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 170):

> Viel pfarherr zanken sich auch mit den pfarrleuten umb unnötige und kindische sachen, als vom pacem leuten, und der gleichen. An solchen sachen sollen billich die pfarherr, als die vernunftigen, umb friedens willen, den leuten weichen, und sie unterrichten, wo solchs leuten unrecht gebraucht, das es nu fort wol gebraucht würde

Many pastors also quarrel with their parishioners about needless and childish matters, as about the ringing of the pacem and the like. In such matters the pastors, as the reasonable ones, should rightly give way to the people for peace's sake, and instruct them, where such ringing is wrongly used, that it be well used from now on Allstedt 1533. The pro pace ringing stays, but "the abuse with the Ave Maria" is gone, and the people are to pray for peace and give thanks. Allstedt, Ordnung der Visitatoren für die Stadt und das Amt Allstedt, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 511):

> Wo es auch in den dorfern gewonheit ist gewesen, das man des morgens oder des abents pro pace hat geleutet, do sollen es die pfarrer nochmals bleiben lassen, doch sollen sie das volk daneben vormanen, das sie als denn gott umb einen zeitlichen friede mit ernst und vleis bitten wollen, auch darneben fur alle gnade und wolthat danksagung thun, nachdem der misbrauch mit dem ave Maria abgethan, dann solch leuten nicht vor einen gottes dienst wie etwan gehalten wird, sondern das dadurch das volk zu danksagung und wie berurt umb friede zu bieten ermanet sei, und daran unterschied des tages zu erkennen. Wo auch Thomas Müntzer das leuten zur predigt abgeschaft, do sol man es, wie vor alters geschehen wiederumb anfahen und nicht unterlassen

Where also it hath been the custom in the villages to ring pro pace in the morning or the evening, there the pastors shall let it still remain; yet they shall withal admonish the people that they then pray God earnestly and diligently for temporal peace, and also give thanks for all grace and benefits, since the abuse with the Ave Maria hath been done away; for such ringing is not held for a divine service, as it once was, but that thereby the people be admonished to thanksgiving and, as aforesaid, to pray for peace, and thereby to know the division of the day. Where also Thomas Müntzer abolished the ringing to the sermon, there one shall begin it again as was done of old, and not leave it off

The Palatinate 1546: peace, workers and the Passion. Kurpfalz, provisional Kirchenordnung, 1546 (Sehling 14, p. 96):

> Es scheinet auch nutzlich, das morgens und abents die glocken pro pace geleut werde, wie auch die alten gethon haben, und das volck darbei erindert wurde, fur gemeinen friden Got zu bitten, und auch die tagloner bei solchem zaichen in und aus irer arbeit giengen, item uf den mittag zu ailfen oder zum wenigsten uf den freytag die glock geleut würdet, zu erindern das volck des leidens Cristi.

It seemeth also profitable that the bell be rung pro pace morning and evening, as the ancients also did, and that the people be thereby reminded to pray God for the common peace, and also that the day-labourers go to and from their work at such a sign; item, that the bell be rung at midday at eleven, or at the least on Friday, to remind the people of the sufferings of Christ.

Noon and the Turk. Wolfenbüttel moves the pro pace to eleven o'clock daily, as a prayer for peace, good government and against the Turk. Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 71):

> Pro pace. Alle middage, wenn de klocke elfen sleyt, schal men in jeweliker parkercken de klocke slan edder lüden pro pace, dat is, dat de lüde dardorch vermanet werden, tho biddende Got umme frede und gut regiment, darmit wy ock bidden vor de overicheit wedder unse vyende, wedder den Türken etc., darane is uns vele gelegen.

Pro pace. Every midday, when the clock striketh eleven, one shall strike or ring the bell in every parish church pro pace; that is, that the people be thereby admonished to pray God for peace and good government, whereby we also pray for the magistrates against our enemies, against the Turk, etc., wherein much lieth for us.

The three daily prayer bells. Lüneburg and Hoya ring morning, noon and evening. Lüneburg, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 6/1, p. 552):

> Weil auch gebreuchlich, das die betglocken abends, morgens und zu mittage geleutet werden, so sol das volk vermanet werden, wenn solchs geschicht, das sie ihr gebet zu Gott dem Herrn für friede und alle zeitliche und ewige wolfart thun und ihr gesinde auch darzu halten, sie sein im hause, im felde oder wo einer ist, und das sie sich des nicht schemen

Since it is also customary that the prayer bells be rung at evening, morning and midday, the people shall be admonished, when that is done, to make their prayer to God the Lord for peace and all temporal and eternal welfare, and to hold their household thereto also, whether they be in the house, in the field, or wherever one is, and that they be not ashamed of it

Hoya gives the prayer to be said "upon the ringing pro pace". Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1143):

> Beware uns, lieber himlischer Vater, und deine ganze christenheit diesen tag oder nacht und allezeit für allem ubel, für des leidigen teufels drauen, für einem schnellen, bösen, unversehenen todt, für greuliche plage unsers leibes, für feur und wassersnoth und für allen unsern feinden, als Türken, Moscowiter, babst und allen ketzern und tyrannen und für aller gefehrligkeit, verleihe gnediglich deinen segen und friede deinen kindern, erhalt auch unsere pastorn und obrigkeit sampt allen haushaltern, auf das wir dich recht erkennen, fürchten und vertrauen, in ruhe und friede leben und deinen segen bey uns entpfinden mögen. Amen

Keep us, dear heavenly Father, and thy whole Christendom, this day or night and at all times, from all evil, from the threatenings of the wretched devil, from a sudden, evil, unforeseen death, from grievous plague of our body, from fire and flood, and from all our enemies, as the Turks, Muscovites, the pope and all heretics and tyrants, and from all danger. Graciously grant thy blessing and peace to thy children; preserve also our pastors and magistrates, together with all householders, that we may rightly know, fear and trust thee, live in rest and peace, and feel thy blessing among us. Amen

The Ave and Salve abolished or recast.

- Coburg 1554/55: the three pulses morning and evening "which in the papacy were called the Ave Maria and Salve" are to cease, with the weather-ringing, "so that we be not counted papistical"; but the magistrate may have one pulse rung for workers or for shutting the gates. Coburg, Vorschaffung of the visitation, 1554/55 (Sehling 1, p. 544):

> Zum sibenden, das die drei puls mit der glocken zu morgends und abents, welchs man im babstumb das Ave Maria und salve genant, sol umb der frembden und benachbarten leute willen, domit man uns nicht vor bebstisch achte, desgleichen das geleut zum wetter vorbleiben. Do aber die obrikait zur morgenstunde umb der arbeiter leut willen oder zum thorschlissen einen puls wolten thuen lassen, sol inen frei stehen.

Seventhly, that the three pulses with the bell morning and evening, which in the papacy were called the Ave Maria and Salve, shall cease for the sake of strangers and neighbouring folk, so that we be not counted papistical; likewise the ringing for the weather. But if the magistrates would have one pulse rung at the morning hour for the sake of the working people, or for the shutting of the gates, it shall be free to them.

- Heilbronn 1532: the council abolished the evening Salve but kept the ringing at the same hour, followed by singing and prayer for peace, with a sign rung on the prayer bell. Heilbronn, Gottesdienstordnung, 1532 (Sehling 17/1, p. 305):

> Dweyll ain ersamer radt das salve zu abent zeyt abgestelt, hat ir weyßhait an die stat alle wercktag zur selben abent zeyt wie bißher zum salve zu leutten, und, so ußgeleut, die lateinischs und teutschs schulmaister oder ir vicarii und schuler erscheinen sollen, ain gesang umb gmain friden zu halten, darbey auch ain diacon erscheinen und das beyweßend volck, umb gmain friden zu bitten, ermanen, mittel sollichs bets mit der betglockhen ain zaichen alß bißher geleut werden solle.

Whereas an honourable council hath abolished the Salve at eventide, their wisdom hath [ordered] in its stead that every working day at the same evening hour one ring as hitherto to the Salve, and, when it hath been rung out, the Latin and German schoolmasters or their deputies and scholars shall appear to hold a song for the common peace; a deacon also shall appear thereat and admonish the people present to pray for the common peace; [and] in the midst of such prayer a sign shall be rung with the prayer bell, as hitherto.

- Lichtenberg 1579: the Ave bell is no longer to be a threefold pulse but one continuous pulse, a plain morning and evening bell. Lichtenberg, Dienstanweisung für die Pfarrer des Amtes Lichtenberg, 1579 (Sehling 18, p. 377):

> Zum Sechsten soll das Ave Mariae leutten, wie man es nennt, hinfürtter nicht ein trinus, sondern ein Continuus pulsus sein, das es für ein morgen und abent Glock oder leutten gehalten werde.

Sixthly, the Ave Maria ringing, as it is called, shall henceforth be not a threefold but a continuous pulse, that it be held for a morning and evening bell or ringing.

The Friday bell for the Passion. The Friday ringing at the hour of the crucifixion was kept by some orders, as at the Palatinate in 1546 (above). Thüngen, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 11, p. 741), having abolished weather-ringing:

> Aber das leuten, so am freitag zur gedechtnus des leidens und sterbens Christi geschickt, ist nicht zu verwerfen und, wes sich alle und jede christen dabei zu erinnern haben, soll weitleuftiger zu gelegener zeit durch den pfarrherrn vermeldet werden.

But the ringing which is done on Friday in remembrance of the suffering and death of Christ is not to be rejected; and what all and every Christian is to call to mind thereby shall be set forth more at large, at a fitting time, by the pastor.

Hohenlohe 1582, on the other hand, abolishes the Friday Tenebrae ringing outright and puts a ringing to the Friday litany in its place (§9.5.5).

Other examples.

- Breslau 1585: in time of plague the council asks those in the street, when the evening pro pace is rung, to kneel and pray, and orders the ringing lengthened (Sehling 3, pp. 405–406).
- Lippe 1571: the prayer bell at morning, noon and evening is kept "for many moving reasons", but not as though it must be kept; where it has lapsed it need not be restored. The preachers are to explain where the pro pace ringing came from, and how it fell into abuse under the papacy "as if it were a service done to the Virgin Mary" (Sehling 21, p. 442).

9.5.4 Bells within the Mass

The question. In the Roman Mass a small bell (Schelle, campanula) was rung at the Sanctus and at the elevation of the host and chalice, and the tower bell was often tolled as well. The evangelical orders dropped the Canon, but several kept the elevation for a time, and some kept the bell with it.

A bell sign before the consecration. The earliest Prussian and Livonian orders keep a sign with the little bell between the Preface and the consecration:

- Prussia, Artikel der Ceremonien, 1525 (Sehling 4, p. 32):

> Auf die volendeten prefation und consecration gibt man ein zeichen mit der schellen, darnach so bald elevirt der priester beideteil des sacraments ane mittel nacheinander. Unter des und so bald die prefation samt der evangelischen benediction aus ist, singet der chor sanctus deütsch oder lateinisch nach gelegenheit, mit wenig noten.

Upon the finished Preface and consecration a sign is given with the little bell; thereafter straightway the priest elevateth both parts of the Sacrament, without interval, one after the other. Meanwhile, and as soon as the Preface together with the evangelical blessing is ended, the choir singeth the Sanctus in German or Latin as occasion serveth, with few notes.

- Riga, Kirchenordnung, 1530 (Sehling 5, p. 16):

> Auf die predigt folget die prefatio, welche der priester deutsch singet bis auf das per Christum, inclusive. Da geb man bald ein zeichen mit eim glöcklein. Dar nach so bald sol der priester zum ersten das brot auf der pateen in die hand > nemen, und sich ob dem altar umkeren zum volck, und die wort der benedeiung oder consecration wol laut, deutsch und vernemlich sprechen.

Upon the sermon followeth the Preface, which the priest singeth in German as far as the per Christum, inclusive. Then let a sign be given straightway with a little bell. Thereafter straightway shall the priest first take the bread upon the paten into his hand, and turn himself at the altar to the people, and speak the words of blessing or consecration well aloud, in German and distinctly.

- Kurland, Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 90):

> Auf die praefation folget die consecratio gegen dem volke, wenn das zeichen mit dem glöcklein gegeben ist. Bald singt das chor sanctus, Esaiae dem propheten etc.

Upon the Preface followeth the consecration toward the people, when the sign with the little bell hath been given. Straightway the choir singeth the Sanctus, "Isaiah, Mighty Seer in Days of Old", etc.

Ringing at the elevation. The Danish Ordinatio of 1537, which stands behind the Schleswig-Holstein order of 1542, leaves the elevation to the minister's liberty, "the bells meanwhile sounding according to custom". Denmark, Ordinatio ecclesiastica, 1537, from Sehling's apparatus (Sehling 23, p. 90):

> Et subinde a verbis decenti elevatione, si ita visum fuerit ministro elevet sonantibus interim cymbalis iuxta consuetum. Nam in his servanda est libertas christiana, ita tarnen ut de hac populus ante satis praemoneatur et nihil horum mutetur sine consensu et mandato superintendentis.

And forthwith after the words let him elevate with a seemly elevation, if it so seem good to the minister, the bells meanwhile sounding according to custom. For in these things Christian liberty is to be kept; yet so that the people be sufficiently forewarned of it beforehand, and that nothing of these things be changed without the consent and command of the superintendent.

Under the Interim the Ansbach Auctuarium ordered both the elevation and the bell. Brandenburg-Ansbach, Auctuarium, 1548 (Interim order; Sehling 11, p. 327):

> Item es sollen auch die priester nach gewönlichem alten gebrauch die beede gestalt des heiligen sacraments aufheben und darzu leuten oder klingen lassen.

Item, the priests also shall, after the customary old usage, lift up both kinds of the holy Sacrament, and have [the bell] rung or tinkled thereto.

At Hof the elevation with a threefold pulse of the bell survived until about 1560. The order of 1592 records its passing. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 407):

> Elevatio autem benedicti panis et vini cum trino campanulae pulsu, qua maiores nostri ad insignem movebantur pietatem, pectora percutientes genuaque flectentes coram Christo Salvatore, quem pane et vino quasi velatum spectabant, ante annos ferme triginta, pastore tum d. doctore Johanne Streitbergero, abrogata est, quod haec ceremonia in caeteris marchionatus ecclesiis locum amplius non haberet.

But the elevation of the blessed bread and wine with a threefold pulse of the little bell, whereby our forefathers were moved to notable piety, beating their breasts and bending their knees before Christ the Saviour, whom they beheld as it were veiled in the bread and wine, was abrogated almost thirty years ago, Dr Johann Streitberger being then pastor, because this ceremony no longer had place in the other churches of the margraviate.

Anhalt in 1568 still kept the elevation on high feasts, without mention of a bell (Sehling 2, p. 570; quoted in Chapter 12, §12.10.6).

A bell to call the communicants. Two orders ring a bell in the Mass to call the communicants forward. At Hatzkerode the sign is given during the German Sanctus. This is the only bell in the corpus rung at the Sanctus. Hatzkerode, Kirchenordnunge, 1534(?) (Sehling 2, p. 587):

> Nach geschener predigt sol ein deutsch lied ader das deutsche sanctus Jesaia, dem propheten, das geschach nach gefallen des pfarhers, gesungen werden. Indes sol mit der glocke ein zeichen geben werden, alsdan sollen die > communicanten in den chor gehen und zur rechten die manne, zur linken die frauen und junkfrauen treten.

After the sermon is done, a German song or the German Sanctus, "Isaiah, Mighty Seer in Days of Old", shall be sung, as it pleaseth the pastor. Meanwhile a sign shall be given with the bell; then shall the communicants go into the choir, and the men stand on the right, the women and maidens on the left.

Haldensleben, Ordo caeremoniarum ecclesiae Haldenslebensis, 1564 (Sehling 2, p. 457):

> 6. Post concionem vero accedunt ad altare communicaturi per campanulam quandam a custode convocati.

6. But after the sermon those who are to communicate come to the altar, called together by the custos with a certain little bell.

A choir bell. At Königsberg in 1568 "the little bell in the choir" is rung after the early sermon to call the cantor and scholars (§9.5.5).

The Sacrament to the sick. The medieval viaticum went through the streets with light and bell. The orders divide:

- Baden 1533 still has the Sacrament carried to the sick "with light and bells going before" (Sehling 16, p. 510).
- Brandenburg-Ansbach 1556 lets a sign be given with the bell, "yet distinctly", when the minister goes to the sick (Sehling 11, p. 336, quoted in §9.5.7). The editor notes that this is neither the passing bell nor the Catholic bell that called the faithful to follow the Sacrament.
- Transylvania 1543: the minister goes to the sick "without candles, little bells and other pomp, which entice the unlearned to idolatry" (Sehling 24, p. 196).
- Micron 1554/1565 (Reformed) rejects "altars, lights, little bells, vestments" altogether. Micron, Ordinancien (1554), East Frisian German edition, 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 615):

> haben darumb keinswegs solche ceremonien angenomen, die eitel und unütz sind oder zu einiger abgötterey zihen und Christum Jesum in seinem priestertumb verfinstern, als da sind: altaren, lichten, schellen, kleider, denen etwas geheimnuß zugeschriben wird, und was dergleichen ding mehr sind.

[we] have therefore in no wise received such ceremonies as are vain and unprofitable, or draw to any idolatry and darken Christ Jesus in his priesthood: as are altars, lights, little bells, vestments, to which some mystery is ascribed, and whatever more such things there be.

Not found. The corpus has:

- No Sanctus bell as such. The word Sanctusglocke (or any compound of it) does not occur. The Hatzkerode bell during the German Sanctus calls the communicants; it does not mark the Sanctus.
- No ringing during the Lord's Prayer in the Mass. The Lord's Prayer is tied to bells only outside the Mass: the daily prayer bells (§9.5.3), and the Friday bell at eleven, at which, according to a later folk custom cited by the Hohenlohe editor, those in the field said an Our Father (Sehling 15, p. 452, editor's note).
- No ringing at the Gloria in excelsis, at Easter or otherwise. The festal bells of Easter belong to the summons and the chiming of the feast (§9.5.1), not to the Gloria.
- No altar bell at the words of institution after the elevation fell away. The bell before the consecration survives only in Prussia 1525, Riga 1530 and Kurland 1570.

9.5.5 Bells at the Te Deum, the litany and other chants

Ringing during the Te Deum. In Prussia the bell was rung during the German Te Deum at the end of Matins, to summon the people to the sermon and the Mass that followed. Prussia, Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 4, p. 67):

> darauf thut der diacon ader kirchendiener ein kurze ermanung vom heiligen sacrament für die, so communiciren wöllen, an stadt eines capitels; auf die ermanung singt die ganze kirche das deudsch Te deum laudamus, darunter wird zur predigt geleut und das lied Jesus Christus unser heiland, fur der predigt gesungen.

thereupon the deacon or minister of the church maketh a short exhortation concerning the holy Sacrament for those who will communicate, in the stead of a chapter; upon the exhortation the whole church singeth the German Te Deum laudamus, under which the bell is rung to the sermon, and the song "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior" is sung before the sermon.

The Prussian order of 1568 repeats it, and adds a choir bell. Prussia, Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 79):

> Sobald diese predig geschlossen, soll man mit dem kleinen glöcklein auf dem chor leuten und sich der cantor mit den schulgesellen und knaben in die kirche finden. [...] Nach dem symbolo lieset ein knabe eine lektion herniden fur dem altar gegen dem volk, wie alle lektiones sollen gelesen werden und folget darauf das Benedictus dominus deus Israel cum Antiphona, oder das deutsch Te deum laudamus Lutheri: O gott, dich loben wir, o gott, wir danken dir etc. Unterdess leutet man wiederum mit der grossen glocke und singet die ganze kirche nach dem Benedictus oder Te deum laudamus: Wir glauben etc.

As soon as this sermon is concluded, one shall ring with the little bell in the choir, and the cantor with the school assistants and boys shall betake themselves into the church. [...] After the Creed a boy readeth a lesson below before the altar toward the people, as all lessons shall be read, and thereupon followeth the Benedictus Dominus Deus Israel with the antiphon, or Luther's German Te Deum laudamus, O Gott, dich loben wir, o Gott, wir danken dir, etc. Meanwhile one ringeth again with the great bell, and the whole church singeth after the Benedictus or Te Deum laudamus: "We All Believe in One True God", etc.

All the bells at the Christmas Te Deum. At Hof's Christmas Matins the organ plays the responsory, the German Te Deum alternates between organ and choir, and all the bells are rung until it ends. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592, Christmas Day (Sehling 11, p. 413):

> II. Lectio ex novo testamento. Hac finita organicen more consueto modulatur responsorium, sequente choro. Verbum caro factum est. Mox concio habetur. Hanc excipt canticum sanctorum Ambrosii et Augustini germanicum: Herr Got, dich loben wir. Incipienten organicinem sequiitur totus chorus et ita per vices finitur cantus. Unter diesem gsang leutet man mit allen glocken bis zu end desselben.

II. The lesson from the New Testament. This being finished, the organist playeth the responsory in the customary manner, the choir following: Verbum caro factum est. Straightway the sermon is held. After it cometh the canticle of Saints Ambrose and Augustine in German, Herr Gott, dich loben wir. The organist beginning, the whole choir followeth, and so the song is finished in turns. During this song one ringeth with all the bells until the end of the same.

The litany. Hohenlohe rings the largest bell when the Friday litany begins, so that those in the field and at home may join in the prayer, and abolishes the Tenebrae ringing. Hohenlohe, Kirchen- und Schulordnung, 1582 (Sehling 15, p. 452):

> [12.] Von leiten deß Tenebre uf den freytag. Nachdem zum gemeinen gebett uf dem freytag nicht jederman kommen kan, sonder durch notwendige gescheft uf dem veld wie auch die bestelte taglöner darvon abgehalten werden, so wöllen, ordnen und bevehlen wir, sobald die letaney angefangen, das alsdann mit der grösten glocken ein gut zeichen geleitet, dardurch meniglich, so uf dem veld oder in den heußern, des gemeinen gebetts erinnert, uf das, ob sie woll bey der versambleten gemein in der kirchen mit dem leib nicht gegenwertig, doch nach dem geist und mit andechtigem gebett darvor nicht abgesondert seien, sonder dartzu ermanet werden. Dargegen soll das tenebreleuten in allen kirchen und an allen orten in unserer grafschaft gentzlichen abgeschaft sein und nicht mehr gestattet werden.

[12.] Of the ringing of the Tenebrae on Friday. Forasmuch as not every one can come to the common prayer on Friday, but [some] are kept from it by necessary business in the field, as also the hired day-labourers, we will, ordain and command that, as soon as the litany is begun, a good sign be rung with the greatest bell, whereby every one in the field or in the houses may be reminded of the common prayer; to the end that, although they be not present in body with the assembled congregation in the church, they may yet not be separated from it in spirit and in devout prayer, but be admonished thereto. On the other hand the Tenebrae ringing shall be wholly abolished in all churches and in all places in our county, and no longer be permitted.

At Regensburg the litany is sung under the ringing, while the people gather for the early sermon and communion. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, 1567 (Sehling 13, p. 461):

> Erstlich wird in beiden kirchen, der neuen pfarre und zu S. Oswald, unter dem leuten gesungen durch die deudschen schulen und gemein die preußisch letanei oder etwas de tempore deudsches.

First, in both churches, the New Parish and St Oswald's, the Prussian litany, or something German of the season, is sung by the German schools and the congregation under the ringing.

Hymn stanzas. No order prescribes ringing during a particular stanza of a hymn. What the orders have instead is ringing during a whole chant that ends one part of the service and leads into the next: the Te Deum at Matins (Prussia, Hof), the litany (Hohenlohe, Regensburg). The Hohenlohe editor records a later folk custom of ringing on Good Friday while "O Lamm Gottes" was sung (Sehling 15, p. 452, editor's note), but that is nineteenth-century evidence and is not in the order.

The Litany itself is treated in Chapter 13, §13.21.

9.5.6 Bells for the dead

Ringing at a death, as a reminder to the living. The Saxon visitors kept the bell rung for the dead, but gave it a new reason. Meissen, Ordnung der Visitatoren für die Stadt Meissen, 1540 (Sehling 2, p. 52):

> Vom leuten, so jemand gestorben ist. Es sol den toten geleutet werden, auf das die lebendigen auch bedenken die stund und zeit ires sterbens und ir leben besseren etc. Dieses anzeigen mit dem geleut sol bald nach irem sterben geschehen. Es sol auch forthin frue und des abends, wie bisher auch geschehen, pro pace geleutet werden, auf das das volk erinnert werde fur einen gemeinen fried der christenheit zu bitten. Leutgeld von toten. Es sol dem kirchner das leutgeld, wie fur lange gegeben ist, folgen.

Of ringing when any one hath died. The bell shall be rung for the dead, that the living also may consider the hour and time of their own dying, and amend their life, etc. This announcing with the bell shall be done soon after their death. Also henceforth the bell shall be rung pro pace early and at evening, as hath been done hitherto, that the people be reminded to pray for a common peace of Christendom. Ringing-money for the dead. The ringing-money shall go to the sexton, as it hath been given of old.

Saturday ringing for the souls abolished. The weekly ringing "for all faithful souls" went:

- Zwickau, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 721):

> Zur predigt, messe und vesper, auch den todten mag man leuten, doch das es zur vesper und den todten auch frue zur lection bei einem leuten mit einer glocken bleibe. Desgleichen mag man pro pace leuten, doch das das folk des wol bericht werde. […] Das leuten fur die seelen am sonnabent soll abgeen.

To the sermon, Mass and Vespers, also for the dead, one may ring; yet so that to Vespers and for the dead, also early to the lesson, it remain at one ringing with one bell. Likewise one may ring pro pace, yet so that the people be well instructed therein. […] The ringing for the souls on Saturday shall cease.

- Reuss, Kirchen-Ordnung of Heinrich IV, 1552 (Sehling 2, p. 156), which in the same article abolishes weather-ringing:

> Wetterleuten. Von diesem artikel ist sonderlich gehandelt, und eintrechtiglich beschlossen, weil das leuten an vielen orten unrichtigkeit gebirt, das solchs auch allenthalben sol abgethan sein und bleiben, doch sol solches mit vleis uf den canzeln praecavirt, und das volk one das zum gebet allezeit treulich vermanet werden. Das leuten am sonnabent allen gleubigen seelen soll auch abgeschafft werden, dann es ergerlich, und stinkt nach dem pabstumb.

Weather-ringing. This article was specially dealt with, and it was resolved with one accord that, since the ringing breedeth disorder in many places, it also shall be and remain done away everywhere; yet this shall be diligently forewarned of from the pulpits, and the people, without it, faithfully admonished at all times to prayer. The ringing on Saturday for all faithful souls shall also be abolished, for it is offensive and smelleth of the papacy.

Equality and fees. Ulm's undated visitation articles of the early 1530s (Moderate Reformed) ask "that in the ringing in memory of the dead equality be kept" (Sehling 17/2, p. 193). In practice the number of bells was a matter of fees. Danzig's burial order of 1578 sets the schoolboys' pay by the bells rung. Danzig, Begräbnisordnung, 1578 (Sehling 4, p. 191):

> das auf dem schlag zwei nachmittag die schüler fur der thuren sollen anfangen zu singen bis zu halb dreien, und dafur soll man ihnen geben, wan eine glocke gelautet wirdt, zehen groschen von zweien glocken zwanzig groschen, und wan alle glocken gelautet werden, 40 groschen.

that at the stroke of two in the afternoon the scholars shall begin to sing before the doors until half past two, and for that they shall be given, when one bell is rung, ten groschen; for two bells, twenty groschen; and when all the bells are rung, 40 groschen.

Not during the sermon. Herford 1532 silences "all bells, be it for the dead or not" while the sermon is preached (§9.4.4).

Burial without bells. The bell was withheld as a mark of exclusion or of grief:

- The despisers of the Sacrament. Zwickau, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 723):

> Wurd auch jemands so halstarrig und rohe sein, das es uber und wider gescheene vormanung und bedraung nicht zu kirchen gienge und wider gottes wort horet, noch das hochwirdige sacrament bei seinem gesund entpfinge, auch in seiner krankheit desselben nicht begeret und also on das hochwirdig sacrament sturbe, den soll man unbeleut und unbeleitet mit den schulern in still begraben.

If also any one were so stiff-necked and rude that, over and against admonition and threatening given, he went not to church, nor heard God's word, nor received the most worthy Sacrament in his health, nor desired it in his sickness, and so died without the most worthy Sacrament, him shall one bury in silence, without bells and without escort of the scholars.

- Unbaptized infants. Lippe, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 21, p. 432), which buries them in the churchyard "for the comfort of the sorrowing parents", but without bells:

> Sondern sollen zum Trost der betrübten Eltern auff die Kirchhöfe oder Sepulturn anderer Christen und getaufften Kinder begraben werden, Jedoch ohn Glockengeleuth und Gesenge der Kirchendiener und Schüler, Nicht der meinung, das wir die kleinen, ungetaufften Kinder, insonderheit, so von fromen, Christgleubigen Eltern im Heiligen Ehestande geboren sein, verdammen

But they shall be buried, for the comfort of the sorrowing parents, in the churchyards or burial places of other Christians and baptized children; yet without ringing of bells and singing of the ministers of the church and scholars: not in the meaning that we condemn the little unbaptized children, especially those born of godly, Christian-believing parents in holy wedlock

Limpurg 1610, by contrast, rings "the small bell" for children carried to burial "before or after baptism" in its village of Münster (Sehling 16, p. 623).

9.5.7 Bells at baptisms and weddings

Baptism. Where a child was baptized outside the regular service, a bell called the congregation to witness it:

- Kurpfalz, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 14, p. 121):

> Wir halten auch für nützlich, so ausserhalb der gemeinen predig oder kirchenversamlung ein kind getauft werden solle, in massen kurtz hievor gemeldet, daß ein zeichen mit einer glocken beschehe, damit andere leuth dardurch, zum taufhandel zu kommen, vermahnet werden.

We hold it also profitable, if a child is to be baptized outside the common sermon or assembly of the church, as was mentioned a little before, that a sign be given with a bell, that other people may thereby be admonished to come to the act of baptism.

- Brandenburg-Ansbach, Vereinbarungen der Theologen auf der Synode, 1556 (Sehling 11, p. 336):

> So man aber in kürchen taufet, soll man mit dem kleinen glocklin darzu leuten und das zeichen des creuzes auslassen. […] Bei den kranken kein corrock gebrauchen, tamen sit liberum in suis locis, und (doch underschidlich) mit der glocken ein zeichen gegeben werden.

But when one baptizeth in church, one shall ring thereto with the little bell, and leave out the sign of the cross. […] With the sick no surplice [is] to be used, yet let it be free in their places; and (yet distinctly) a sign [is] to be given with the bell.

- Limpurg 1610 settles a complaint by ordering the ringing before baptism with the small bell in all country churches. Limpurg, Kirchenordnung, 1610 (Sehling 16, p. 623):

> 1. Das Leuten bey der Künder Tauff. Solch Leutten soll hünfüro auff dem Landt bey allen Kürchen (außerhalb der Statt Gailendorff), es wer gleich hiebevor in einem oder andern Ortt inn gebrauch geweesen oder nicht, vor der Tauff mit dem klainen Glöckhlin beschehen unnd verrichtet werden.

1. Of the ringing at the baptism of children. Such ringing shall henceforth be done and performed in the country at all churches (except the town of Gaildorf), whether it was in use before in one place or another or not, before the baptism, with the small bell.

- Heilbronn, around 1529, kept the bell for "child baptism" when it stopped ringing for the Mass and Vespers (Sehling 17/1, p. 226, editor's introduction).

The Regensburg editor notes that a bell for baptism was unknown in the Middle Ages (Sehling 13, p. 436, editor's note), so this is a new evangelical use, not a survival.

Weddings. At Hof the bell for a wedding service is rung half an hour later than usual. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 430):

> Wann eine hochzeit vorhanden, wird ein halbe stund lengsamer geleutet, dann sönsten gebreuchlich

When there is a wedding, the bell is rung half an hour later than is otherwise customary

9.5.8 Bells against storms

The abolition of weather-ringing, with the bell baptism behind it, is treated in Chapter 13, §13.15.5, which quotes Saxony 1528 and 1580 and summarizes Hohenlohe 1582 and the other territories. The orders fall into three groups:

- Kept, re-explained as a call to prayer: Saxony 1528 (Sehling 1, pp. 170–171), the Upper Palatinate 1579 (one bell at night), Hohenlohe 1582 (one bell, not all, and not as long as the storm lasts), Limpurg 1610 (the great bell only, for a quarter of an hour).
- Abolished: Ulm (undated articles, Moderate Reformed, "as it hath begun"), Reuss 1552 (§9.5.6), Coburg 1554/55 (§9.5.3), Thüngen 1564, Saxony 1580, Saxe-Lauenburg 1585 (§9.5.1), and the Oldenburg visitations of 1609–1610, which keep the prayer bell instead (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1212).
- Asked about at visitation: Hohenlohe 1558 asks whether there is ringing against weather, fog, frost or heat (Sehling 15, p. 122).

9.5.9 Lesser signals: the sermon glass and the alms bell

The end of the sermon. At Zerbst the sexton turned an hour-glass when the preacher went up into the pulpit, and rang a little bell when it had run out. Zerbst, Vereinbarungen des gesammten Ministeriums, 1545 (Sehling 2, p. 593):

> Uf das aber solliches gehalten moge werden, soll ein seiger von drei virtel stunden vor dem canzel stehen, damit der prediger sehen moge, wann er schliessen soll, und der custer soll auch zween zaiger, einen von einer stunden, den andern von dreien virtel stunden bei sich behalten, und den saiger von einer stunden zur hochmessen, und den zeiger von dreien virtel stunden aber zu allen andern predigen gebrauchen und umkeren, so bald der predicant uf die canzel gehet, und wann also der seiger vor einer oder dreien virtel stunden ausgelaufen, so soll er mit einer darzu verordenten schellen clingen, damit der predicant schliesse und der gemeine urlauben moge.

But that this may be kept, a three-quarter-hour glass shall stand before the pulpit, that the preacher may see when he should conclude; and the sexton also shall keep by him two glasses, one of an hour, the other of three quarters of an hour, and use the hour-glass at High Mass and the three-quarter glass at all other sermons, and turn it as soon as the preacher goeth up into the pulpit; and when the glass of one hour or of three quarters hath run out, he shall tinkle with a little bell appointed thereto, that the preacher may conclude and dismiss the congregation.

The alms bell. At Brandis the churchwardens, or someone they appoint, go round "under all sermons, or before and after," with a little bell to collect alms. Brandis, Ordnung für die Stadt Brandis, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 533):

> darzu sollen sie under allen predigen, oder aber vor und nach, mit einem schellen glocklein umbgehn oder zu geen bestellen, und das almusen wie zu Grimme und anderswo von den leuten bitten, und den armen wie berurt widerumb austeilen.

thereto they shall go about, or appoint someone to go, with a little hand-bell during all the sermons, or else before and after, and ask the alms of the people, as at Grimma and elsewhere, and distribute it again to the poor, as aforesaid.

The Württemberg common-chest orders give the street collectors for the poor "a bell or little bell, whereby every one may be reminded to give alms" (Sehling 16, p. 96; repeated at Sehling 16, p. 202, and Sehling 6/1, p. 263). This was a street bell, not a church bell.

9.6 Table by order

- The orders are listed by date.
- "—" means that nothing on the point was found in the passages examined. It does not mean that the order forbids it.
- Each cell reports only what the order itself says. The § column gives the sections of this chapter where the evidence is quoted or cited.

Chapter 10. The Daily Office

This chapter follows the canonical hours (horae canonicae, die sieben Gezeiten, Tagzeiten) through the evangelical church orders printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts. The medieval cursus had eight offices:

- Matins (Mette, matutinae, with its nocturns);
- Lauds (laudes);
- Prime, Terce, Sext and None (the "little hours");
- Vespers;
- Compline (completorium).

Beside them the church sang an additional office for the departed, the Office of the Dead (officium defunctorum), which the orders call the vigil (§10.9).

The chapter asks:

- Did the Lutherans reduce the system to two offices, morning and evening, as Luther is often said to have done? Or did fuller forms survive, and where?
- Where was the system changed, and how?
- Who prayed the offices? Schoolboys, canons and vicars, nuns, the congregation, cathedral chapters?
- Were there prayer obligations on pastors, vicars or students?
- What did the offices look like? Do the orders set out their liturgy?
- Were they sung in Latin, German, or both?
- What became of the Office of the Dead, the vigil sung for the departed?
- What did the new catechism service look like? How long was it, and what was its order?
- Was the medieval chant kept, or were the pieces reset with new music?

How the chapter is laid out.

- §10.1 summarizes the findings, and §10.2 sets out the method and cautions.
- §10.3 gives Luther's own rulings of 1523 and 1526.
- §10.4 shows where the full cursus survived: collegiate churches and cathedrals, the remaining canons and monks, and the women's convents.
- §10.5 shows where the system was cut down to morning and evening, and why.
- §10.6 asks who prayed the offices, and what obligations were laid on whom.
- §10.7 describes the shape of the reformed offices, with the preces, suffrages and Litany (§10.7.5).
- §10.8 deals with language.
- §10.9 follows the Office of the Dead, the vigil sung for the departed: what it was, why and how it was abolished, and what of it survived at funerals.
- §10.10 describes the catechism service: its origins, hour and length, and its order in the Lutheran and Reformed churches, with a comparative table.
- §10.11 deals with the music.
- §10.12 gathers the ceremonial of the offices and the catechism service: kneeling, the Litany before the altar, the two choirs, the place of the lesson, the children set in order, and the sign of the cross.
- §10.13 is a table by order, and §10.14 a concordance.

10.1 Summary of findings

1. Luther did not reduce the office to two hours. He set two levels (§10.3).

- For the parish: two daily gatherings. In 1523 (Von ordenung gottis diensts) he proposed a morning and an evening gathering of an hour each, with a Bible lesson, its exposition, psalms, responsories and antiphons. In 1526 (Deutsche Messe) he set out daily Matins and Vespers for "towns where there are schools", sung by the boys in Latin with a German lesson. This is the root of the Lutheran two-office pattern.

- For chapters and convents: the full hours. In the same year, 1523, the Formula missae allowed Matins of three lessons, the little hours, Vespers and Compline de tempore, "nothing but the words of divine Scripture", shortened at the bishop's discretion. Luther's advice for the Saxon visitation (quoted by Sehling) was to let "convents and chapters" keep "the canonical hours and lessons". The parish schools were to sing psalms, lessons, Benedictus, Magnificat, Te Deum, Quicunque and Preces morning and evening.
- What was rejected was "praying the seven hours" as a work "to earn grace" (Unterricht der Visitatoren, 1528).

2. The full cursus survived in four kinds of place (§10.4).

- Collegiate churches and cathedrals, in Latin, corrected de tempore:
  - Wittenberg castle 1525 and Altenburg 1533;
  - Ansbach 1531–1533 and Feuchtwangen 1563;
  - Goslar 1534;
  - Brandenburg 1540, under each diocese's Breviary "out of the former choir books";
  - Naumburg cathedral c. 1541;
  - Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 and Heidelberg 1546;
  - Quakenbrück 1543 and Öhringen 1556;
  - Verden cathedral 1606, on weekends and feasts.
- Bugenhagen's order for the remaining canons and monks. The Pia ordinatio (Pomerania 1535) gives a full Latin cursus "according to the number of the hours hitherto customary". It passed into Denmark 1537, Schleswig-Holstein 1542 and Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1543.
- The women's convents. Nimbschen 1529, Spandau 1541, the Calenberg convents 1542 and Frankenberg 1542 keep the hours, purged and shortened; at Frankenberg they are voluntary. The Lüneburg convents keep all seven (1555, 1574), with a corrected Breviary of their own, the Emendatio Breviarii virginum of 1555. Keppel in Nassau (1570) kept all seven hours in German.
- Breslau (a report of 1557), where the choralists still sang the hours of the Passion and of the Visitation on weekday mornings.

3. Where the system was cut down (§10.5).

- In the parishes. Most town orders follow Bugenhagen (Braunschweig 1528, Hamburg 1529, Lübeck 1531, Pomerania 1535): morning and evening offices of a quarter to half an hour, sung by the school. These fold Matins, Lauds, an octonary of the Prime psalm, Vespers and on feasts Compline into two services. "With such singing … it is enough for the parish churches."
- Freed from the hours. Some orders free chapters and convents from the hours altogether: Lippe 1538, Mecklenburg 1552, and the Mecklenburg convents 1572.
- Decline. The little hours lapsed (Feuchtwangen 1563). Saxony 1580 moved the weekday office from the Latin to the German school.

4. Who prayed (§10.6).

- Schoolboys, above all. Their office was a school exercise in the Bible and in public speaking.
- Canons, vicars and altarists. Their benefices were turned into an obligation to sing the hours de tempore daily, on pain of losing the fief: Stendal 1540, Cölln 1540, Salzwedel 1541.
- Nuns in the evangelical convents, often with their pastor.
- The congregation: on Saturdays, Sundays and feasts, and at German Vespers in the villages.
- No breviary obligation on pastors. The Merseburg synod of 1544 complains that pastors "discharged of the burden of the canonical hours" think they need "neither pray nor read". It exhorts them to daily prayer and the psalter. What the orders impose on pastors is the public office, held "even if no one came" (Pfalz-Neuburg 1576).
- Students for the ministry. The Württemberg cloister schools (1559) keep preces at four or five, a morning office and an evening office daily. The Tübingen stipendiaries pray the psalter in course morning and evening.

5. The shape of the offices (§10.7). The orders lay the liturgy out in detail.

- Kept: psalms with antiphons, lessons with responsories, pure hymns, the gospel canticles, Te Deum, Quicunque, Kyrie, Our Father, collect, Benedicamus.

- Cut: saints' suffrages, homilies and legends, the preces, the blessings before the lessons, and in Bugenhagen even Deus in adiutorium.
- Intercession (§10.7.5): the full preces were dropped (Wittenberg 1525, Ansbach 1533), but a short kneeling form of Kyrie, Our Father and Ostende nobis stayed in the Bugenhagen orders, and the Mecklenburg convents (1572) kept a full German set. Of the suffrages only those for peace, for sins and for the ruler stayed (Ansbach 1533, Transylvania 1547). Luther's Latin Litany took the place of the Magnificat at Saturday and eve Vespers (Pomerania 1535, 1542, 1569; Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1543), and the German Litany was sung after Prime or the Benedictus in the convents.
- Added: the psalter and the Bible in course, German lessons with Dietrich's summaries, German hymns, and sermons joined to Vespers.

6. Language (§10.8).

- Latin in the chapters and schools. At Wittenberg 1533 the scholars were "not to sing in German, save when the people sing with them".
- German in the convents (Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 "teutsch psallirn in gewonlichem ton"; Remse 1533; Keppel 1570; Mecklenburg 1572) and in the villages (Lippe 1571).
- Both in many towns and convents: a Latin lesson repeated in German, and Latin and German psalms in the same hour (Lüneburg 1574).

7. The Office of the Dead (§10.9). Beside the hours the medieval church sang the vigil, an office of Vespers, Matins and Lauds for the departed, endowed and paid.

- Abolished. No evangelical order kept it as an office for the dead. The grounds:
  - it does not help the dead (Pomesania 1524; Saxony 1528; Heilbronn 1530);
  - it abuses the psalms and Job in the service of purgatory (Pomerania 1535; Schleswig-Holstein 1542);
  - it is against God's word and the merit of Christ (Lüneburg 1527; Calenberg-Göttingen 1542);
  - it was bought and sold (Hamburg 1529; Pomerania 1535).
- By stages. Wittenberg (1522) moved the vigil priests' income to the common chest and set them to visit the sick. Coburg (1524) left the vigil to the families, and Ansbach (1526) kept the old foundations until a council. At Mülhausen (1528, Reformed) the preachers would keep its psalms and Job lessons in Latin, stripped of their additions and sung with understanding.
- Chapters, convents and schools. The chapters and convents dropped the vigils when their hours were reformed (Goslar 1534; Frankenberg 1542; Bonnus 1543). The nuns were released from psalters vowed for the dead (Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1569; Mecklenburg 1572). Donauwörth (1545) freed the school from singing the vigils.
- What survived.
  - The name, for the singing at the grave (Ermsleben 1564). The vigil before the house of the dead was abolished only in the 1550s (Prenzlau 1557; Neubrandenburg 1559).
  - Its responsory Credo quod Redemptor meus vivit, sung before the bier (Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1543; Hildesheim 1544; Pirna 1555–1569; Rostock c. 1560), and the canticles of its Lauds (Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533; Pfalz-Neuburg 1543).
  - At Brandenburg (1540), a short office after the burial with lessons from Job and the Benedictus, and a yearly service on All Souls' Day "for the good of the living".
- What replaced it: the procession, a mention in the next day's service and comfort for the kin (Brenz 1527), and above all the funeral sermon, "instead of the vigils" (Wittgenstein 1555).

8. The catechism service (§10.10). The Reformation added a service the old cursus did not have.

- When. Usually Sunday at noon or one o'clock (Mecklenburg 1552; Neckarbischofsheim 1560; Lippe 1571); sometimes early in the morning (Schwäbisch Hall 1543), inside Vespers (Naumburg 1537; Sangerhausen 1555; Thorn 1575), or as a recitation of the bare text in the morning service (Strasbourg 1548, Moderate Reformed, on the Interim; Palatinate 1563, Reformed; Saxony 1580).
- How long. Half an hour for the exposition or the examination (Hesse 1566, Moderate Reformed; Thorn 1575; Emden 1565 and Palatinate 1601, Reformed), an hour at most for the whole (Rostock c. 1560; Hohenlohe 1596).
- The order. Bell; a catechism hymn; the Our Father or a prayer; the text of the chief parts said by the pastor or recited by boys; one part expounded in course; the children examined by question and answer; a prayer, often for the children; hymn and blessing (Neckarbischofsheim 1560; Hesse 1566, Moderate Reformed; Lippe 1571).

- The Reformed form. The Heidelberg Catechism was divided into Sundays; the youth recited the portion and the minister expounded the next, preaching it through yearly (Palatinate 1563). Hanau (1609, Reformed) examined the young in five classes, and kept the adults back behind shut doors.

9. Music (§10.11).

- The old chant kept. The chapters sang from their medieval books. The old reciting and lesson tones are prescribed, including the prophecy cadence.
- Reprinted. From the 1540s the chant was purged and reprinted in the Lutheran antiphoners of Spangenberg (1545) and Lossius (1553/1561). Mecklenburg c. 1560, Oldenburg 1573, Lohr 1588 and Hof 1592 require them.
- New pieces beside the old:
  - German psalms sung to the old tones (Keppel 1570, from the Leipzig psalm-books);
  - Luther's German Te Deum and the German Magnificat;
  - polyphony at Vespers (Wittenberg 1533, Hof 1592);
  - organ alternation (Pomerania 1569, Oldenburg 1573).

10. Ceremonial (§10.12). The orders prescribe little for the body in the office.

- Kneeling is the one gesture they ask for: for the short preces after the gospel canticle (Bremen 1534), for Veni sancte Spiritus and Da pacem at Vespers (Pomerania 1569), for the closing collects (Stolberg-Königstein 1552), and at the opening of the Reformed morning and evening prayer (Palatinate 1563, Reformed, softened to "humble ourselves" in 1601).
- The Litany was sung by two to four boys kneeling before the altar, the choir and people answering (Schwarzburg 1574; Waldeck 1556; Marggrabowa 1581).
- The choir sang from stalls set facing, verse about verse (Mecklenburg convents 1572); the lesson was read from the pulpit, a lectern or before the altar (Coburg 1545; Herpf 1566).
- The catechism service has the most stage directions: the minister at the altar, the children brought into the middle of the church, boys and girls apart (Henneberg 1582), set in facing pairs or "as it were in two choirs" (Schönburg 1542; Strasbourg 1598), standing on stools to recite (Regensburg 1567), or kneeling with folded hands to pray (Heilbronn 1543).
- Not found: bows at the Gloria Patri, standing for the canticles, incense, hats, and the sign of the cross in choir. The cross survives only in the household blessing of the Small Catechism, defended in Kurland (1570) and struck from the draft in Pfalz-Zweibrücken (1557).

10.2 Scope, sources and cautions

What was searched. The `eko.db` database was searched for the office by name, in Latin, German and Low German spellings:

- horae canonicae, horas canonicas, die sieben gezeiten, siben zeit, Tagzeiten;
- Mette, matutinae, laudes, prim, terz, sext, non, vesper, completorium, complet;
- Brevier, breviarium, psalmodia;
- precibus matutinis, preces vespertinae, frügebet.

It was also searched for the people who prayed the office (Stift, Domkapitel, Vicarien, Klosterjungfrauen, Schüler, Stipendiaten), for obligations (täglich … beten, Psalter), and for the books and music (Lossius, Spangenberg, Cantional, Noten, Ton, figuraliter, Orgel). For the catechism service (§10.10) it was searched for Katechismus, Kinderlehre, Kinderpredigt, Kinderfrag, examen catechismi and Fragstück within a short distance of singen, Gesang, Psalm, Gebet, Glocke, läuten, Uhr, Stunde and Segen. The passages were then read in context.

For the Office of the Dead (§10.9) it was searched for Vigilie, Vigilien, vigiliae, officium defunctorum, Totenoffizium, Seelmesse, Begängnis, Jahrtag, Dreißigster, Allerseelen and die animarum, for the names Placebo and Dirige, and for the chants Redemptor meus, Ego sum resurrectio, Si enim credimus and lectiones ex Hiob.

Cautions. Four things limit what the corpus can show:

- Church orders are not breviaries. Sehling prints the orders, not the books the choirs sang from. Where an order says "as hitherto" or "according to the Breviary", the detail is in books outside the corpus. Of the Emendatio Breviarii for the Lüneburg nuns, Sehling prints only the preface.
- Silence is not absence. Many town orders mention Matins and Vespers only in passing. Many chapters kept their hours without any order saying so. The corpus records reforms and disputes more often than settled custom.
- The convents and chapters are under-represented. Their own statutes and customaries are only partly in Sehling.
- Dates. Several texts survive in later copies or undated. Their dates are given as Sehling gives them, with his question marks.

10.3 Luther's rulings, 1523 and 1526

10.3.1 Von ordenung gottis diensts, 1523: a morning and an evening gathering

Two daily gatherings. Luther's first sketch of a reformed service, written for Leisnig, starts from the office and not from the Mass. Every day there should be two gatherings: one at four or five in the morning, and one at five or six in the evening. Each is to last an hour, with a lesson read in course from the Old Testament, its exposition, and then psalms, responsories and antiphons. Luther, Von ordenung gottis diensts in der gemeine, 1523 (Sehling 1, pp. 2–3):

> das man teglich des morgens eine stunde frue umb vier oder funfe zu samen keme und daselbs lesen liesse, es seien schuler oder priester, oder wer es sei, gleich wie man itzt noch die lection in der metten lieset. […] Wenn nu die lection und auslegung ein halb stund oder lenger geweret hat, sol man drauf in gemein got danken, loben und bitten umb frucht des worts etc. Dazu soll man brauchen der psalmen und etlicher guten responsoria, antiphon, kurz also, das es alles in einer stund ausgerichtet werde […]. Desselben gleichen an dem abent umb sechs oder funfe wider also zu samen.

that daily in the morning, early, at four or five, they should come together for an hour, and there let [a lesson] be read, be it scholars or priests or whosoever it be, even as the lesson is yet read at Matins. […] When now the lesson and the exposition have lasted half an hour or longer, then shall they together give thanks to God, praise him and pray for the fruit of the word, etc. For this shall be used the psalms and some good responsories [and] antiphons, briefly, so that it all be finished within one hour […]. Likewise in the evening at six or five come together again in the same manner.

Who comes. Luther did not expect the whole parish every day. Where it could not come, the office belonged to the priests and the schoolboys, above all to those who were to become preachers. They were to do it freely, not for reward. Luther, Von ordenung gottis diensts in der gemeine, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 3):

> Auch ob solchs tegliches gottis diensts vileicht nicht die ganze versamlunge gewarten kunde, sollen doch die priester und schuler und zuvor die ienigen, so man verhofft gute prediger und seelsorger aus zu werden, solchs thun. Und das man sie ermane, solchs frei, nicht aus zwang oder unlust, nicht umb lohn zeitlich noch ewig, sondern alleine gott zu ehren, den nehisten zu nutz zu thun.

And though perchance the whole congregation could not attend such daily service, yet shall the priests and scholars, and before all those of whom we hope that good preachers and pastors shall come, do it. And let them be exhorted to do it freely, not of constraint or with unwillingness, not for reward temporal or eternal, but only to the honour of God and the profit of their neighbour.

On Sundays, by contrast, "Mass and Vespers" were to be sung for the whole congregation, with a sermon at each (Sehling 1, p. 3). The proper texts of the office were to "lie still for a time, until they be swept", above all the antiphons, responsories and collects of the saints, "for there is grievous much filth therein" (Sehling 1, p. 3).

10.3.2 Formula missae, 1523: the hours may stay, shortened

Not two offices but all of them. The Formula missae of the same year allows much more. On weekdays, once the Masses are abolished, Luther "sees nothing that cannot be borne". Matins of three lessons, the little hours, Vespers and Compline de tempore are "nothing but the words of divine Scripture". The bishop may shorten them. Luther, Formula missae et communionis, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 9):

> In reliquis diebus, quas ferias vocamus, nihil video, quod non ferri possit, modo missae abrogentur. Nam matutinae trium lectionum et horae, tum vesperae et completorium de tempore (exclusis sanctorum feriis) nihil sunt nisi scripturae divinae verba. Et pulchrum, imo necessarium est, pueros assuescere legendis et audiendis psalmis et lectionibus scripturarum sanctarum. Verum si quicquam hic novari debet, prolixitas mutari potest arbitrio episcopi, ut tres psalmi pro matutinis, tres pro vesperis cum uno vel duobus responsoriis absolvantur.

On the other days, which we call ferias, I see nothing that may not be borne, if only the Masses be abolished. For Matins of three lessons and the hours, and Vespers and Compline de tempore (the feasts of the saints being excluded), are nothing but the words of divine Scripture. And it is a fair thing, yea, a needful one, that the boys be accustomed to read and to hear the psalms and the lessons of the holy Scriptures. But if anything here ought to be changed, the length may be altered at the discretion of the bishop, so that three psalms for Matins [and] three for Vespers, with one or two responsories, be gone through.

The psalter and the Bible in course. The bishop is to choose the best responsories and antiphons and order them week by week, "so that the whole psalter, distributed in parts, remain in use, and the whole Scripture, divided into lessons, continue in the ears of the church". Daily lessons are to be added, one in the morning and one in the evening, "with explanation in the vernacular" (Sehling 1, p. 9).

10.3.3 Deutsche Messe, 1526: a daily office for the schools

Matins and Vespers in towns with schools. The Deutsche Messe describes the weekday office as Luther wanted it "in towns where there are schools". In the morning the boys sing Latin psalms "as hitherto at Matins". Two or three boys read a chapter of the New Testament in Latin, one after another, and another boy reads it in German. A German lesson, a German hymn, the Our Father, a collect and the Benedicamus follow. Vespers is the same, with the Old Testament and the Magnificat. Luther, Deutsche Messe und ordnung gottis diensts, 1526 (Sehling 1, p. 14):

> Fur die knaben und schuler in der biblia zu uben gehets also zu. Die wochen uber teglich fur der lection singen sie etliche psalmen latinisch, wie bis her zur metten gewonet, denn, wie-gesagt ist, wir wollen die jugent bei der latinschen sprachen in der biblia behalten und uben. […] Desselbigen gleichen zur vesper singen sie etliche der vesper psalmen, wie sie bis her gesungen sind, auch latinsch mit einer antiphen, darauf einen hymnus, so er fur handen ist. […] Darauf das magnificat zu latein mit einer antiphen oder lied. Darnach ein vater unser heimlich und die collecten mit dem Benedicamus. Das ist der gottis dienst teglich durch die wochen in stedten, da man schulen hat.

For the boys and scholars, to exercise them in the Bible, it goeth thus. Daily through the week, before the lesson, they sing certain psalms in Latin, as hitherto was customary at Matins; for, as hath been said, we will keep and exercise the youth in the Latin tongue in the Bible. […] In like manner at Vespers they sing certain of the Vesper psalms, as they have hitherto been sung, also in Latin with an antiphon, thereupon a hymn, if one be at hand. […] Thereupon the Magnificat in Latin, with an antiphon or a hymn. Thereafter an Our Father secretly, and the collect with the Benedicamus. That is the daily service through the week in towns where there are schools.

What the "two offices" means. In 1526 Luther gives only Matins and Vespers, and he gives them to the school, in Latin, with a German lesson for any laymen who are present. This is the origin of the two-office pattern of the Lutheran towns (§10.5.2). But he never forbade the other hours. The Formula missae had allowed them in 1523 (§10.3.2), and his advice for the Saxon visitation let the chapters and convents keep them (§10.4.1).

10.3.4 The visitors of 1528: the hours as a work

What was rejected. The Unterricht der Visitatoren of 1528 names "praying the seven hours" among the human ordinances made "to earn grace for our sins". In that sense they are "contrary to God" and may be dropped. Ernestine Saxony, Unterricht der visitatoren an die pfarrherrn, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 167):

> Die dritte ordnung sind gemacht, damit gnade zu erwerben für unsere sunde, als gesetzte fasten, am freitag nicht fleisch essen, die sieben gezeiten beten, und der gleichen. Solche meinung ist wider gott, darumb mag man auch solche gebot fallen lassen [...].

The third [kind of] ordinances are made therewith to earn grace for our sins, as appointed fasts, eating no flesh on Friday, praying the seven hours, and the like. Such an opinion is against God; therefore one may also let such commandments fall [...].

The text passed into Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 171). The objection is to the hours as a meritorious obligation, not to singing psalms at fixed times. Rothenburg 1559 draws the distinction plainly. Its council keeps the daily "singing, praying and reading in the church", with the Latin chants, "not as was once done in the papacy with the seven hours, ... as a good work to atone and pay for sins", but because "not everyone can read the holy divine Scripture" (Sehling 11, p. 591).

10.4 Where the full cursus survived

10.4.1 Luther's advice: let the chapters and convents keep the hours

For the Saxon visitation. Sehling's introduction to Ernestine Saxony prints the deliberations drawn up for the first visitation. On the collegiate churches they propose to allow "the canonical hours on ferial days, but no Masses", and they quote Luther's own opinion. Ernestine Saxony, deliberations for the visitation, quoted in Sehling's introduction (Sehling 1, p. 38):

> Halt ichs fur gut, das man sie lasse (in clostern und stiften) horas canonicas und lectiones lesen, auf das sie nicht müssig und doch auch bei der schrift bleiben und sich uben. Allein das sie die messen nachlassen und was mer des gleichen greul ist. Wie es denn auch die visitatores angezeigt haben. Doctor Martinus Luthers meinung ist auch das man in pfarren morgens und abents die schuler lasse psalmen zween oder drei singen und lection lesen, item Benedictus, Magnificat, Te deum laudamus, Quicunque vult salvus esse, Preces, domit sie auch bei der schrift bleiben.

I hold it good that they be suffered (in convents and chapters) to read the canonical hours and lessons, that they be not idle, and yet abide by the Scripture and exercise themselves [therein]; only that they let the Masses go, and whatsoever more is such abomination. As the visitors also have shown. Doctor Martin Luther's opinion is also that in the parishes, morning and evening, the scholars be let sing two or three psalms and read a lesson, item the Benedictus, Magnificat, Te Deum laudamus, Quicunque vult salvus esse, [and] the Preces, that they also abide by the Scripture.

The two levels are already here: the full hours in chapters and convents, and two offices in the parishes, sung by the school.

The Wittenberg castle church, 1525. The order for the All Saints' foundation in the castle at Wittenberg, where there was no parish, abolishes the Mass there but keeps a full Latin office. Vespers and Compline are joined: after the Benedicamus the psalm Qui habitat and the Nunc dimittis are read without tone. Matins has a hymn verse, three psalms and three lessons from St Paul with three responsories, the Te Deum, and Lauds with the Benedictus. The little hours keep their structure, with a lesson from the Gospels in place of the chapter. Wittenberg, Wie es einer zeit mit den ceremonien der kirchen gehalten wirt, 1525 (Sehling 1, p. 699):

> Ad primam, terciam, sextam, nonam. Sine deus in adiutorium. Ab hymnis illis consuetis incipiatur, post cantetur psalmus beati immaculati etc. et dividatur in has quattuor horas more solito cum antiphonis ex psalterio vel de tempore. Post antiphonam loco capituli consueti legatur lectio ex evangelistis incipiendo a Matthia, ita ut unum caput dividatur in quattuor partes secundum istas quattuor horas [...].

At Prime, Terce, Sext [and] None. Without Deus in adiutorium. Let it begin with those customary hymns; after, let the psalm Beati immaculati etc. be sung, and let it be divided among these four hours in the accustomed manner, with antiphons from the psalter or de tempore. After the antiphon, in place of the customary chapter, let a lesson be read from the evangelists, beginning with Matthew, so that one chapter be divided into four parts according to these four hours [...].

The order is explicit that all this is free: "we will that consciences be not bound by these things, as if by precept under necessity of salvation" (Sehling 1, p. 699).

10.4.2 Collegiate churches and cathedrals

Brandenburg-Ansbach, 1531–1533. The Ansbach theologians' advice of 1531 lets the canons keep all seven hours, with only "the evil, offensive and uncertain" removed. It complains that the hours had been sung "with such haste that no choir heeded or waited for the other". Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Gottesdienstmandat, 1531 (Sehling 11, p. 312):

> Und bliben inen gleich wol ir horae, das ist tagzeit als mettin, prim, terz, sext, non, vesper und complet, wurde allain das bös, ergerlich und ungewis underlassen, welchs doch kain gutherziger gotzverstendiger strafen kunde. Nun ist auch meniglich bewust, das die horae von inen bisher ganz unordenlich und unfleißig gesungen sind worden mit solcher eil, das kain chor auf den andem gemerket und gewartet hat und oft der ander chor angefangen zu singen, ehe jener ausgesungen […].

And their hours would yet remain to them, that is, the times of day, as Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vespers and Compline; only the evil, offensive and uncertain would be left out, which no good-hearted man that understandeth God could blame. Now it is also known to everyone that the hours have hitherto been sung by them altogether disorderly and carelessly, with such haste that no choir heeded or waited for the other, and often the second choir began to sing before the first had finished […].

The Ordnung singens und lesens bei den Stiften of 1533 then goes through the Breviary hour by hour (Sehling 11, pp. 313–316):

- At Matins a whole chapter of the Old Testament is divided into the three lessons, so that the Old Testament is read through "in one or two years".
- Lauds is shortened to three psalms a day, each day with its own.
- Prime, Terce, Sext and None keep their hymns and psalms. At Terce a whole chapter of the Epistles replaces the chapter, beginning with Acts.
- The preces are dropped every day.
- Collects that sound of the saints or of merit are struck out one by one (see Chapter 5, §5.6.6).

Brandenburg, 1540. The electoral order of Joachim II keeps the whole Latin choir office in all chapters, convents and parish churches where it was customary, "according to each bishopric's Breviary". Brandenburg, Kirchen-ordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, pp. 71–72):

> Der chorgesang sol, wie bisanher, in allen stiften und klöstern, auch den pfarkirchen, wie. der gebreuchlich gewesen, latinisch gesungen und gelesen werden, zuvoran, so es de tempore ist, da sol nichts nachgelassen werden, es sei metten, prima, tertia, sexta, nona, vesper, complet oder was der mehr ist, ein iglichs, wie mans findet, nach seiner rubrica on alle leichtfertigkeit. Was aber de sanctis ist, sol von uns und unsern verordneten ubersehen und, wo es von nöten, corrigirt werden […]. Sonst sol offentlich in den kirchen gesungen und gelesen werden, beide früe und spat, nach eins jeden bistums brevir aus den vorigen sangbüchern […].

The choir chant shall, as hitherto, in all chapters and convents, and also in the parish churches where it hath been customary, be sung and read in Latin; above all, where it is de tempore, nothing shall be omitted, be it Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vespers, Compline or whatever more there is, each as it is found, according to its rubric, without any lightness. But what is de sanctis shall be looked over by us and those we appoint, and where needful corrected […]. Otherwise shall be sung and read publicly in the churches, both early and late, according to each bishopric's Breviary, out of the former choir books […].

Naumburg cathedral, c. 1541–1543. The cathedral chapter sent the elector an account of its daily worship. It keeps every hour and joins them to the evangelical preaching. Naumburg, Gottesdienst-Ordnung in der Domkirche, 1543 (1541?), printed in Sehling's supplement (Sehling 2, p. 596):

> Morgens in precibus matutinis werden gehalten drei psalm, drei lectiones mit responsoriis de tempore und von den festen, welcher historien in der heiligen schrift gegruendet. Unter dem Te deum laudamus geschiecht ein sonderlicher puels zu der teuzschen lection. Nach deme Te deum laudamus werden gehalten psalmi de laudibus mit dem cantico Zacharie, und concludirt mit der collecten de tempore die metten. Darauf wirt gelesen auf teuzschs ein capitel aus der biblien mit einem summario und das volk vormanet zum gebete, und mit einem deuzschen gesinge und collecten beschlossen. Umb die sechste stunde werden die prime und terz gehalten de tempore […]. Umb die neunde stunde werden gehalten sext und nona. Vespertine preces und completorium werden zwischen zweien und dreien gehalten.

In the morning, in the morning prayers, are kept three psalms [and] three lessons, with responsories de tempore and of the feasts whose histories are grounded in holy Scripture. During the Te Deum laudamus a special bell is rung for the German lesson. After the Te Deum laudamus are kept the psalms of Lauds with the Canticle of Zachary, and Matins is concluded with the collect de tempore. Thereupon a chapter out of the Bible is read in German with a summary, and the people are exhorted to prayer, and it is concluded with a German hymn and collects. About the sixth hour Prime and Terce are kept de tempore [...]. About the ninth hour are kept Sext and None. The evening prayers and Compline are kept between two and three.

On Sundays and feasts "the hours, as the morning prayers, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, are kept in order one after another", and the bell for the sermon and the Lord's Supper is rung under None (Sehling 2, p. 596).

Other chapters. The full Latin cursus is kept, corrected de tempore, in:

- Altenburg castle chapter, 1533: "the seven hours ... and briefly, with only one nocturn", so that the canons "go not altogether idle"; the "pure new Litany" replaces the preces (Sehling 1, p. 515).
- Goslar, St Simon and Judas, 1534: Sehling's introduction notes that Widensee "keeps the outward form of the office": the canonical hours stay in the choir, the length is not reduced, and Latin is kept. Only the Lord's Supper is in German (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 199).
- Pfalz-Neuburg 1543: where chapters, convents and parishes sing "some or all of the canonical hours, daily or only on certain feasts", they shall continue (Sehling 13, p. 77). The Heidelberg chapter of the Holy Spirit followed the same text in 1546 (Sehling 14, p. 91).
- Quakenbrück, 1543: Hermann Bonnus's "daily exercise in the Scriptures and in singing psalms, for collegiate churches where the Gospel is preached" (Sehling 7/1, p. 229; §10.6.2).
- Öhringen 1556: "the old and young persons of the chapter shall sing them daily in order" (Sehling 15, p. 102).
- Verden cathedral, 1606: Matins and Vespers on Saturdays, Sundays and feasts, "as the old order bringeth with it", with the pure antiphons, psalms, responsories and hymns, ending "with the Benedicamus or Compline" (Sehling 7/1, p. 153).

10.4.3 Bugenhagen's order for the remaining canons and monks

A complete Latin cursus. Bugenhagen's Pia ordinatio (Pomerania 1535) has a full order of hours "according to the number of the hours hitherto customary". It was made for the monks who could not leave and for "the canons, who are now of no use to the Church of Christ". It passed into the Danish order of 1537, the Schleswig-Holstein order of 1542 (in Low German) and Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1543 (Sehling 23, p. 142; 6/1, p. 81). Pomerania, Pia ordinatio caeremoniarum, 1535 (Sehling 4, p. 349):

> Eadem plane dicimus de canonicis, qui nullo iam usui sunt ecclesiae Christi. Possunt et ipsi residui, si non aliis offitiis necessariis sunt commodi, ita hisce scripturae exercitiis cantando pro suo tempore exerceri. Sic vero potest ordinari cantus cum lectionibus (si ita placet) secundum numerum horarum hactenus consuetarum: [...]

The same we say plainly of the canons, who are now of no use to the Church of Christ. They also that remain, if they be not fit for other necessary offices, may thus be exercised in these exercises of Scripture by singing, for their time. And thus may the chant with the lessons be ordered (if it so please), according to the number of the hours hitherto customary: [...]

The order then gives Matins (with Lauds), Prime, Terce, Sext, None and Vespers, and Compline recited "with a low voice without any tone" (§10.7.1). Its purpose is stated at the end: the psalms are to run on from day to day, and the whole Bible is to be read "twice or more in a year", for the consolation of those "who, hindered by age or otherwise, cannot now take up a better condition, until they render their spirit to God" (Sehling 4, p. 350).

10.4.4 The women's convents

The convents kept the hours longest. Most surviving women's houses became evangelical convents, and most of their orders keep the hours, purged and shortened:

- Nimbschen, 1529 (Katharina von Bora's former convent): on feasts "they shall sing Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext etc." (Sehling 1, p. 617).
- The Leipzig friaries, 1539: the remaining friars may keep the canonical hours de tempore "among themselves, yet without bells and with the church doors locked, in quiet" (Sehling 1, p. 589). The Gemeines Fürhalten of the same visitation allows the religious, "until further provision", to "read or sing the seven hours, yet only de tempore and what is agreeable to God's word, … as a church exercise" (Sehling 1, p. 590).

- Spandau, 1541: the nuns' Breviary was examined by the visitors and corrected. They keep Matins (three psalms, a chapter divided into three lessons with responsories, the Te Deum and Lauds), Prime, Terce, Sext and None, and between Prime and Terce one of them reads an article of the church order or the catechism aloud in the refectory (Sehling 3, p. 305).
- The Calenberg convents, 1542: Lauds only on Sundays and feasts; "Prima, tertia, sexta, nona … with the customary psalms, antiphons and collects"; Vespers and Compline "with the customary psalms, antiphons, hymns" (Sehling 6/2, p. 851).
- Frankenberg at Goslar, 1542: a Latin order in place of the hours, which the nuns "shall do freely and not under constraint", without sin "if they keep them less exactly or even leave them off altogether" (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 277).
- The Lüneburg convents, 1555: all seven hours, with a corrected Breviary (below).
- Keppel in Nassau, 1570: all seven hours, in German (§10.8.2).

Lüneburg, 1555. The Reformatio coenobiorum of 1555 orders the nuns of the Lüneburg convents to meet daily for all seven hours, with the chants and lessons corrected. Lüneburg, Reformatio coenobiorum ducatus Luneburgensis, 1555 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 611–612):

> Zum dritten sollen die klosterjungfrauen Gott mit lesen und singen loben und ehren und vor die zeitliche und ewige wolfart bitten, und derwegen soilen sie alle tage etliche zeit in der kirchen zusamenkommen und in den metten, prim, terz, sext, non, vesper und complet die christliche gesenge und lectiones de tempore und von den hohen festen, auch de sanctis, doch mit der christlichen correction und veranderung, wie die sonderlich beschrieben und verordenet sein, singen und lesen.

Thirdly, the convent virgins shall praise and honour God with reading and singing, and pray for the temporal and eternal welfare; and therefore they shall every day for some time come together in the church, and in Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vespers and Compline sing and read the Christian chants and lessons de tempore and of the high feasts, and also de sanctis, yet with the Christian correction and alteration, as the same are specially written down and ordained.

The "correction" is the Emendatio Breviarii virginum ordinis Sancti Benedicti in ducatu Luneburgensi of the same year, a revised Benedictine Breviary for the nuns. It marks what may be "read and sung piously" and what may be "omitted without any scruple of conscience" (Sehling 6/1, p. 624).

Breslau, 1557. A report of 1557 on the order of the Breslau churches says that in the Lutheran city the choralists still sang Little Hours of the medieval type every weekday morning: "the hours of the Passion of the Lord", and on Fridays "the hours of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary", before the Mass (Sehling 3, p. 405).

10.5 Where the system was cut down

10.5.1 The case against the hours

"Murmurings". The sharpest words come from Bugenhagen's Pia ordinatio. The monks are to be taught that Christ alone is their righteousness, and that "those murmurings of the canonical hours, and long and feigned prayers, are wearyings of the body and vexations of the conscience". Pomerania, Pia ordinatio caeremoniarum, 1535 (Sehling 4, p. 345):

> murmura vero illa horarum canonicarum et lougas simulatasque preces esse fatigationes corporum et vexationes conscientiarum. Deinde nihil canant aut legant publice, quod non sit ex sacra acceptum scriptura, id est ex veteri et novo testamento […].

but that those murmurings of the canonical hours, and long and feigned prayers, are wearyings of the body and vexations of the conscience. Further, that they sing or read nothing publicly that is not taken from holy Scripture, that is, from the Old and New Testament […].

Schleswig-Holstein 1542 has the same in Low German: "dat Murrent der tide, dat men nömet Horas Canonicas" (Sehling 23, p. 131). Yet the same order goes on to give the full cursus (§10.4.3). The objection is to the hours as a burden on the conscience, not to the psalms sung in course.

What "canonical hours" ought to mean. The Hamburg order of 1529 argues that the hours took their name from the reading of canonical Scripture. Rightly understood, they would be hours of lectures on the Bible, "as now in the high school at Wittenberg". Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 493):

> So hefft me etlike bestemmede stunden des dages gehat, dar inne me gelesen und gehöret hefft scripturam canonicam, alse nu in der hogen schole tho Wittenberch. Up de stunde hefft canonicus Petrus gelesen canonicam scripturam, up eine andere stunde canonicus Joannes etc., dar van sint solcke bestemmede stunden hore canonice genömet. In welcken so to lesende und scrift to utleggende, dat me gelerde pastores unde evangelistas mochte van den tohörers maken, were wol recht horas canonicas lesen.

So there were certain appointed hours of the day, wherein canonical Scripture was read and heard, as now in the high school at Wittenberg. At one hour the canon Peter read the canonical Scripture, at another hour the canon John, etc.; from this such appointed hours are named horae canonicae. In these so to read and to expound Scripture, that learned pastors and evangelists might be made of the hearers, were indeed rightly to read the canonical hours.

Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1543 repeats the etymology: "these are also horae canonicae, the hours in which canonical Scripture is read and treated" (Sehling 6/1, p. 49).

"Not burdened with the canonical hours". Several territorial orders free the chapters and convents from the hours altogether, and put preaching in their place. Mecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 196):

> sollen auch den stiften und klöstern ernstlich befehlen, das sie sich den pfarkirchen gleichformig machen, mit predigen, mit der communio und mit andern christlichen ceremonien, und mit abthuung der misbreuch, der opfermess, der heiligen anrufung, gelübden und kappen etc. Sollen auch nicht mit den horis canonicis beladen sein.

[They] shall also earnestly command the chapters and convents that they make themselves conformable to the parish churches, with preaching, with the communion and with other Christian ceremonies, and with the putting away of the abuses, the sacrificial Mass, the invocation of the saints, vows and cowls, etc. They shall also not be burdened with the canonical hours.

The Lippe order of 1538 has the same words in Low German: "Schollen oick nicht mit den horis canonicis beladen syn" (Sehling 21, p. 343). The Mecklenburg convent order of 1572 frees the nuns too: "none of the virgins shall be burdened with the canonical hours de tempore", for true prayer "is not bound to certain times and places" and does not please God "for the sake of the work, especially when it is babbled without understanding in the Latin unknown tongue" (Sehling 5, p. 257). In its place it sets a daily German office of its own (§10.8.2).

Hours displaced by preaching. Where the old clergy kept their hours beside the evangelical preachers, the orders protect the sermon:

- Herford 1532: while there is preaching, "no priests shall sing or read their hours in any church" (Sehling 21, p. 170).
- Zwickau 1545: "the singing of the hours in the hospital of St Margaret shall be abolished". The hospital preacher is instead to sing "a psalm or spiritual song" daily with the poor and read them a lesson from the Old or New Testament (Sehling 1, p. 725).

10.5.2 Two offices, sung by the school

Bugenhagen's argument. The commonest Lutheran form is Luther's 1526 pattern: Matins and Vespers, sung daily by the Latin school. Bugenhagen's Braunschweig order of 1528 gives the reason in terms that recur at Hamburg 1529 and Lübeck 1531. The old school custom of singing psalms, antiphons and responsories helped learned men "to learning and to memory". It had been spoiled only where "the canonical hours and other things without end" were sung and left to "drunken choirboys". Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 399):

> Vele, de gelert synt, möten bekennen, dat id en tor lere unde tor memorie geholpen hefft, dat se in der jöget mosten singen psalme unde etlike antiphen unde responsoria etc., welk ock plach mit guder meticheit gewönlick syn in kleynen steden unde ock in groten, alse noch, dar me nicht singet horas canonicas unde andere dink, des neyn ende is, dat ock vordretlick is geworden den presteren unde bevalen den drunkenen chorschöleren. Darumme wille wy sulke nutticheit unsen kynderen ock hebben, dat se avent unde morgen singen unde lesen alle dage, welk me plecht to nömen vesper unde metten.

Many that are learned must confess that it hath helped them to learning and to memory that in their youth they had to sing psalms and certain antiphons and responsories etc., which also was wont to be customary with good measure in small towns and also in great ones (as it yet is where they sing not the canonical hours and other things whereof there is no end), which also became irksome to the priests, and [was] committed to the drunken choirboys. Therefore we will have such profit for our children also, that they sing and read evening and morning every day, which is wont to be named Vespers and Matins.

Enough for a parish church. Bugenhagen's Pomeranian order of 1535 says the same in its own terms. The boys sing Latin psalms and lessons with the Benedictus in the morning, and psalms, lessons, a hymn and the Magnificat in the afternoon, each for no more than a quarter of an hour. Pomerania, Kirchenordnung, 1535 (Sehling 4, p. 342):

> An solckeme singende unde ceremonien is idt genoch vor de parrekercken, dat me nene horas canonicos (!) eder andere meer bedarf. Me schal de kindere des werkeldages in der kercken nicht över ein verndel van der stunde laten singen, dat se sick alse mit luste gewonnen to der hiligen schrift, unde ljkewol dar mede nicht vorsümet werden in erer scholekunst […].

With such singing and ceremonies it is enough for the parish churches, so that no canonical hours (!) or anything more be needed. On working days the children shall not be let sing in the church above a quarter of an hour, that they so with delight grow used to holy Scripture, and yet be not hindered thereby in their school learning […].

The towns. Matins and Vespers in this form, or Saturday and Sunday Vespers with Sunday Matins, are the rule in the town orders:

- Wittenberg 1533 (Sehling 1, pp. 701–705);
- Saxony 1539 and 1580 (Sehling 1, pp. 564, 368);
- Senftenberg 1555 (Sehling 1, pp. 671–672);
- Prussia 1568 (Sehling 4, pp. 74–75);
- Hoya 1581, Lüneburg 1575, Pomerania 1569 (§10.7.2).

Senftenberg is typical of a small electoral town. Senftenberg, Kirchen-Ordnung für die Stadt Senftenberg, 1555 (Sehling 1, pp. 671–672):

> Alle sontage, hohe festa und feiertage sol den morgen fru hora 5 wie gewonlich metten mit dem invitatorio, psalmodia, lection des evangelii, teutsch respons. et benedicamus beschlossen werden. […] Es sol auch in der wochen auf die werkeltage alle tage den morgen umb 7 hora eine metten mit psalmodi, teutscher lection aus dem alten testament sampt dem benedictus collecten und benedicamus, nachmittage aber umb 2 hora eine vesper mit ihrer psalmodi, lection aus dem neuen testa

All Sundays, high feasts and holy days, in the morning early at the fifth hour, Matins shall be held as is customary, with the invitatory, psalmody, the lesson of the Gospel, a German responsory, and concluded with the Benedicamus. […] Also in the week on the working days, every day in the morning about the seventh hour, [there shall be] a Matins with psalmody, a German lesson out of the Old Testament, together with the Benedictus, collects and Benedicamus; and in the afternoon about the second hour a Vespers with its psalmody, a lesson out of the New Testa[ment] […]

10.5.3 Decline and transfer

Moved from the Latin school to the German school. By 1580 the Saxon visitors thought the daily office kept the Latin scholars from their studies. In the great towns, on days without a sermon, it was handed to the German school and reduced to a psalm, a chapter and a collect. Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 370):

> Wo auch in grossen stedten gebreuchlich, das man teglich metten und vesper auf die tage, da man nicht prediget, zuhalten pfleget, dardurch die schüler in der lateinischen schulen an ihrem studiren nicht wenig verseumet werden, soll hinfort, soviel das gesang belanget, dasselbige durch die deutschen schulen versehen, und allezeit ein psalm vor und einer nach gesungen, darzwischen aber ein capitel aus der bibel, sampt dem summario durch den diaconum gelesen, und mit den gewönlichen collecten beschlossen werden.

Where also in great towns it is the custom to keep Matins and Vespers daily on the days when there is no preaching, whereby the scholars in the Latin schools are not a little hindered in their studies, it shall henceforth, so far as the singing is concerned, be provided by the German schools; and always a psalm shall be sung before and one after, but between them a chapter out of the Bible, together with the summary, read by the deacon, and concluded with the customary collects.

The little hours fall away. At Feuchtwangen in 1563 the chapter still sang Matins and Lauds daily, but Prime, Terce, Sext and None had lapsed for some years. They clashed with the parish sermon nearby, there were no scholars to sing, and "many spoke mockingly" of them. By then the four little hours were sung in rotation, one a day. Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Feuchtwangen, 1563 (Sehling 11, p. 402):

> und der communicanten, die in stift gehörig, wenig, darzue bis anher von solchem singen und lesen von vilen schimpflich geredet und gehalten worden, sein solche horae und communion der ursachen halben und nit aus faul- oder treghait etzliche jar her underlassen und nicht gehalten worden.

and the communicants that belong to the chapter [being] few, and moreover, many having hitherto spoken and held mockingly of such singing and reading, such hours and communion have for these causes, and not out of sloth or idleness, for some years been left off and not kept.

Other signs.

- Torgau 1529: the schoolmasters complained that at seven they had to sing "private hours" in the church while the school waited. The visitors gave the hours to the altarists, though the masters were to keep the stipend and help when they could (Sehling 1, p. 677).
- The Schönburg lordships: the "hour-priests" of the castle are to sing the hours daily "slowly and distinctly", though the reformer "would rather advise" one or two sermons in the castle "instead of such hours, since no one or very few are bettered by them". The Matins he then gives begins with "Deus in adjutorium in Latin" and has "Venite, 4 psalms in German" (Sehling 2, p. 170).
- Mülhausen 1524 (Reformed): Sehling's introduction notes that the council left the singing of Matins, Terce and Sext to the chaplains' discretion but kept None and Vespers (Sehling 20/2, p. 163).

10.6 Who prayed the offices, and under what obligation

10.6.1 The schoolboys

The office as school exercise. In the parishes the office belonged to the Latin school. The cantor led the boys in the choir, and the boys read the lessons. The orders give two reasons, practice in the Bible and practice in public speaking. Prussia, Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 75):

> Darauf soll ein knabe aus der bibel latine in usitato tono eine lectionem lesen, also lectio Jesaiae etc. prophetae, capite etc., und soll darauf, was solcher knabe latine gelesen, ein anderer deutsch lesen fur dem chor schlecht sine tono. Solche lectiones dienen dazu, dass die liebe jugend ein wenig den text der bibel fasse, denn es ja so gering nimmermehr abgehet, die liebe kinder behalten etwas davon. So ist es ihnen auch darzu nütze, das sie lernen und gewohnen in der kirchen nach ihrem berufe fur dem volke zu reden, und dasjenige, worzu sie erfordert werden, one furcht auszurichten.

Thereupon shall a boy read a lesson out of the Bible in Latin in the customary tone, thus: "Lectio Isaiae prophetae, capite" etc.; and thereupon what the boy hath read in Latin shall another read in German before the choir, plainly, without tone. Such lessons serve thereto, that the dear youth may grasp a little of the text of the Bible; for it never goeth off so slightly but the dear children retain something of it. So is it also profitable to them that they learn and grow used to speak in the church before the people, according to their calling, and to perform without fear that whereunto they are required.

The school's burden was weighed against its studies:

- At Wittenberg in 1533, if the boys had sung the Mass in the morning, "they shall sing no Vespers that day, that they be not too much hindered in their studies" (Sehling 1, p. 705).
- Saxony 1580 moved the weekday office from the Latin to the German school for the same reason (§10.5.3).

10.6.2 Canons, vicars and altarists: an obligation tied to the benefice

Hours instead of Masses. Where the endowed Masses fell away but the incomes remained, the orders turned the holders of benefices into a choir for the hours. At Stendal in 1540 the vicars keep their incomes on condition that they sing the hours daily and hear the sermons and theology lectures. Stendal, Verordnung für die übrigen Kirchen, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 310):

> Weil denn die privatmessen, darauf die vicarien instituirt gewesen, des offnen erkannten missbrauchs halben abgangen und dennoch den vicarien ihre einkommen davon bleiben, sollen sie hinfort, jede in ihren pfarrkirchen, täglich horas canonicas de tempore singen und in die predigt mit fleiss gehen, desgleichen auch die lectiones in theologia, die der superintendent allhier thun wird, visitiren. Dagegen sollen sie alle horas und memorien, die sie zuvor gesungen und gehalten, gänzlich fallen lassen.

Since now the private Masses, to which the vicars were instituted, have ceased by reason of their open and acknowledged abuse, and yet their incomes from them remain to the vicars, they shall henceforth, each in their parish churches, sing the canonical hours de tempore daily, and go diligently to the sermon, and likewise attend the lectures in theology which the superintendent here shall give. On the other hand they shall let fall altogether all hours and memorials which they formerly sang and kept.

The Brandenburg town orders enforce this obligation with the loss of the benefice:

- Cölln on the Spree, 1540: every priest holding a benefice in the two churches is to sing the canonical hours de tempore daily in St Nicholas; "whatever priest refuseth this shall be deprived of his fief" (Sehling 3, p. 156).
- Salzwedel, 1541: all vicars and commendists resident in the town are to sing the hours daily "every morning, winter and summer, at six o'clock", on pain of losing the vicarage (Sehling 3, p. 267).

Bonnus at Quakenbrück, 1543. Hermann Bonnus gives two reasons for keeping the daily office in the collegiate churches: the holders of prebends, "that they live not wholly in idleness", and the scholars. Stift Osnabrück, Ordinatio Magistri Hermanni Bonni, 1543 (Sehling 7/1, p. 229):

> Utile et necessarium in primis est, retinere in collegiatis ecclesiis exercitium sacrae scripturae et psalmorum: idque propter personas religiosas, quae possident praebendas et beneficia ecclesiastica, ne prorsus in otio vivant, deinde etiam propter scholasticos, quos plurimum conducit exercere diligenter in legendis et cantandis psalmis et lectionibus sacris quotidie.

It is above all useful and needful to retain in the collegiate churches the exercise of holy Scripture and of the psalms: and that for the sake of the religious persons who possess prebends and ecclesiastical benefices, that they live not wholly in idleness; and then also for the sake of the scholars, whom it greatly profiteth to be diligently exercised daily in reading and singing the psalms and the holy lessons.

10.6.3 The convents and their pastors

Daily office with the pastor. In the evangelical convents the pastor often led the office. At the Cistercian convent of Leeden in Tecklenburg (1585) the conventuals and the abbess are to meet "with their pastor every day in the morning at seven o'clock in the convent church". There they say the morning prayer, sing a psalm, and hear a chapter of the Bible read and briefly expounded by the pastor (Sehling 22, p. 247). At Keppel (1570) the preacher is to teach the nuns the melodies of the German psalms (§10.11.2).

10.6.4 The congregation

Sunday and feast-day offices for all. Luther meant the weekday office for "the smaller crowd" and the Sunday Mass and Vespers for "the whole congregation" (§10.3.1). The orders follow this:

- Saturday and Sunday Vespers, Sunday Matins and festal Matins are public services, with sermon or catechism.
- On weekdays the offices are attended by whoever comes. At Naumburg the people sing a psalm with the scholars, "one verse after the other" (Sehling 2, p. 596).
- Saturday Vespers is also the hour of confession for those who will communicate. Kurland 1570 explains Saturday Vespers as the time when servants and labourers are let off work "to prepare and make themselves ready" (Sehling 5, p. 83).

Village Vespers in German. In the villages there was no Latin school, and the orders give a German Vespers led by the pastor and the sexton. Lippe, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 21, p. 395):

> Erstlich soll die Vesper umb zween schlegen alle Son- und Festabendt angefangen werden. Und sol der Pfarrherr neben seinem Küster und den Knaben, so der Custos zu leren bey sich hat, und jetzt auff den Dörffern gewöntlich, einen teutschen Psalm singen, Drauff den Hymnum nach gelegenheit der Sontage und Feste, Darnach den Lobgesang der Jungfrawen Marien und die Collecten oder Gebett neben dem Benedicamus. Es sol aber alles Teutsch auff den Dörffern gesungen werden, damit die einfeltige, ungeschickte Schüler der Küster und Beichtkinder auff dem Lande der Gottseligen Psalmen gewohnen […].

First, Vespers shall be begun at two o'clock on every Sunday and feast eve. And the pastor, together with his sexton and the boys whom the sexton hath with him to teach (as is now customary in the villages), shall sing a German psalm; thereupon the hymn according to the occasion of the Sundays and feasts; thereafter the Song of the Virgin Mary, and the collect or prayer, with the Benedicamus. But all shall be sung in German in the villages, that the simple, unskilled scholars of the sexton and the penitents in the country may grow used to the godly psalms […].

Other village provisions:

- Prussia 1568: "in small parishes and villages", one or two German psalms and a short catechism instruction at Vespers (Sehling 4, p. 75).
- Lippe 1571 and Oldenburg 1573: since there can be no Matins in the villages in winter, the pastors are to gather the people early in the morning in summer, from Easter to Michaelmas (Sehling 21, p. 396; 7/2.1, p. 1111).
- Schwäbisch Hall 1543: village Vespers "with a short sermon and psalms" is left to each pastor's discretion (Sehling 17/1, p. 170).

10.6.5 The pastors

No breviary obligation. No Lutheran order in the corpus binds a pastor to recite the hours privately. The Unterricht of 1528 treats "praying the seven hours" as a human ordinance that binds no conscience (§10.3.4).

An exhortation instead. The Merseburg synodal decree of 1544 noticed the result. Some pastors, "now that they are discharged of the burden of the canonical hours, think they need neither pray nor read any more". It answers with an exhortation, not a rule: daily prayer and use of the psalter. Merseburg, synodal decree, 1544 (Sehling 2, p. 13):

> und dieweil sie nun der burde der horarum canonicarum entlediget, meinen, sie dürfen furder wider beten noch lesen, gehen die ganze woche mussig, ader warten der narung […]. Darumb sollen die pfarher ernstlich zum vleissigen teglichen gebet erinnert sein, dan so sie solches vorseumen, werden sie dem teufel raum lassen, und gottes und der obrickeit straf nicht empflihen. In sonderheit aber wollen sie sich im heiligen psalter vleissig uben, und den so vorechtlichen nicht liegen lassen.

and since they are now discharged of the burden of the canonical hours, they think they need from henceforth neither pray nor read; they go idle the whole week, or wait upon their livelihood […]. Therefore the pastors shall be earnestly admonished to diligent daily prayer; for if they neglect the same, they will give place to the devil, and not escape the punishment of God and of the magistrate. But especially let them exercise themselves diligently in the holy psalter, and not let it lie so despised.

The pastor's public duty. What the orders do impose on pastors is the public office:

- Pfalz-Neuburg 1576: Saturday and feast-eve Vespers must be held in towns, markets and villages. "In case that no one at all came into the church", the pastor shall still have the bell rung and read a chapter of the Bible with its summary (Sehling 13, p. 178). The order adds that this keeps him at home on Saturday evening, preparing his sermon.
- Saxony 1580: the deacons and preachers are to be present at "the daily early prayer" (teglichen frügebet) as well as the sermons (Sehling 1, p. 422).
- Hohenlohe 1588: in time of war the countess ordered a daily prayer service (das alltägliche Gebet) in every parish, and the pastors were to urge their people to attend (Sehling 15, pp. 538–550).

10.6.6 Students and future pastors

The Württemberg cloister schools, 1559. The Great Church Order of Württemberg turned the monasteries into schools for future ministers. Their day begins at four or five with preces: a psalm read in course by one of the students, and a Latin prayer for the Church, the emperor, the duke, the prelate and their studies. Württemberg, Ordnung der Klosterschulen, 1559 (Sehling 16, pp. 365–366):

> das alle Tag, es seien Feyer- oder Wercktag, vor Mittag, morgendts im Winter umb fünffe, im Sommer aber nach vier Uhrn, ungefahrlich, so sie durch des Klosters geleutte Glocken auffgemundert, Preces samentlich gehalten, und einer auß den Studiosen mit erhebter Stimm verstentlich einen Psalmen ex ordine, wie es die Ordnung geben würdt, lese. […] Hernach an einem jettlichen Wercktag alle Morgen, zu Sommers zeitten nach acht, Wintters zeit umb neun Uhr […], zween oder drey Psalmos, nach dem sie lang oder kurtz seind, mit den gewonlichen Christlichen Antiphonen de Tempore singen und darauff ein gantz Capitel auß dem alten Testament von anfang der Bibel nach seiner Ordnung verlesen und dasselbig mit dem Benedictus oder Symbolo Athanasii, alternis ein tag umb den andern, auch gewonlichen Christlichen Antiphonen de Tempore und Collect beschliessen.

that every day, be it holy day or working day, before noon, in the morning in winter at five, but in summer after four o'clock or thereabouts, when they are roused by the convent's ringing bells, they hold preces together, and one of the students read with raised voice, distinctly, a psalm in order, as the order shall give it. […] Thereafter on every working day, every morning, in summer after eight, in winter at nine o'clock […], [they shall] sing two or three psalms, according as they be long or short, with the customary Christian antiphons de tempore, and thereupon read a whole chapter out of the Old Testament in its order from the beginning of the Bible, and conclude the same with the Benedictus or the Athanasian Creed, alternately one day after the other, also with the customary Christian antiphons de tempore and a collect.

In the afternoon a chapter of the New Testament is read, with the Magnificat or the Nunc dimittis alternately (Sehling 16, p. 366). One student is appointed each week as hebdomadarius for the preces and another for the lessons (Sehling 16, p. 367).

The Tübingen Stipendium, 1559. The ducal stipendiaries at Tübingen, the theology students who were to become Württemberg's pastors, are bound by their statutes to pray "every day, morning and evening", reciting the psalms "one or two at a time until they are finished" and then a set prayer (Sehling 17/1, p. 562). The medieval obligation of the clergy to the psalter survives here as a rule of the seminary.

10.7 The shape of the reformed offices

10.7.1 What was kept, cut and added

The orders set out the liturgy. Many orders give the office in detail, hour by hour: Wittenberg 1525, Braunschweig 1528, Ansbach 1533, Goslar 1534, Pomerania 1535, Spandau 1541, Bonnus 1543, Württemberg 1559, Keppel 1570, Lüneburg 1574. Their common features are these.

Kept:

- the psalms with their antiphons, sung in two choirs "verse by verse";
- the lessons, with responsories after them at Matins;
- the office hymns, if "pure";
- the gospel canticles: Benedictus at the morning office, Magnificat at Vespers, Nunc dimittis at Compline;
- the Te Deum at Sunday and festal Matins;
- the Athanasian Creed at Sunday Prime (Ansbach 1533, Goslar 1534, Pomerania 1535);
- the Kyrie, Our Father, the versicle Ostende nobis, the collect de tempore and the Benedicamus;
- the invitatory and Venite at Matins (Senftenberg 1555, Frankenberg 1542, Keppel 1570).

Cut:

- everything de sanctis that asks for the saints' intercession, with the suffrages and the Marian antiphons;
- the homilies and legends at Matins, replaced by Scripture;
- the preces, which are dropped (Wittenberg 1525, Ansbach 1533) or replaced by the Litany (Altenburg 1533), though a short form survived (§10.7.5);

- the blessings before the lessons, Jube, domne, benedicere and Tu autem, Domine (Braunschweig 1528, Pomerania 1535, Frankenberg 1542);
- in Bugenhagen's orders, even the opening Deus in adiutorium and Domine, labia mea (Wittenberg 1525, Pomerania 1535, Bonnus 1543). Bugenhagen explains in a note added in the Danish version. He does not forbid the words ("who would forbid it?"), but they are prayed "against the persecutors of the Church", and those are now the very men "who say Deus in adiutorium so many times a day" (Sehling 4, p. 350, n. 1);
- the Office of the Dead, the vigils (Pomerania 1535; §10.9).

Shortened:

- three psalms for Matins and three for Vespers (Luther 1523; Bugenhagen; Spandau 1541);
- one nocturn instead of three (Altenburg 1533; Lüneburg 1574);
- the little hours run together (Naumburg: Prime with Terce, Sext with None) or rotated one a day (Feuchtwangen 1563);
- Vespers and Compline joined, with Compline reduced to Qui habitat and the Nunc dimittis read without tone (Wittenberg 1525, Pomerania 1535, Braunschweig 1528).

Added:

- the psalter in course, sung through in order from day to day rather than by the old weekly distribution: monthly at Feuchtwangen 1563 and in the Mecklenburg convents 1572;
- the Bible in course (lectio continua): Old Testament at Matins, New Testament at Vespers, or the reverse, read through "twice or more in a year" (Pomerania 1535), "in one or two years" (Ansbach 1533), or "the Old Testament once and the New Testament three times a year" (Mecklenburg 1572);
- a German lesson after the Latin one, or a German chapter with Veit Dietrich's summaries (Naumburg, Saxony 1580, Keppel 1570);
- German hymns and the German Litany, especially in the convents and village offices;
- in the evangelical towns, a sermon or catechism joined to Vespers.

10.7.2 Bible lessons in place of homilies

Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 gives the clearest rule for the Matins lessons. Where nine lessons are kept, three come from the historical books, three from the prophets, and the last three from the Epistles and the Gospel. Each day continues where the last left off. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, pp. 77–78):

> doch mit der maß, das man zur metten nicht homilias lese, sonder lectiones aus der biblia. Die mögen in den stiften und clöstern, da man teglich metten singt, also geordnet werden, das, wann man novem lectiones helt, drei aus den historischen büchern der bibel als Mose, Josua, Judicum, Ruth, Samuel, der Könige und Chronica, […] darnach drei aus den propheten und der letsten dreier die ersten zwo aus den episteln, die dritte und letsten aber aus dem evangelio gelesen werden. […] und sollen also aufeinander gehn, daß, wo man heut aufhöret, da sol man morgen wider anheben und also die heiligen schrift ordenlich nacheinander lesen, alweg ein zimlich lange lection, wie bis anher der brauch gewest ist.

yet with this measure, that at Matins no homilies be read, but lessons out of the Bible. These may be so ordered in the chapters and convents where Matins is sung daily, that when nine lessons are kept, three be read from the historical books of the Bible, as Moses, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, the Kings and Chronicles, […] thereafter three from the prophets, and of the last three, the first two from the Epistles, but the third and last from the Gospel. […] And they shall so follow upon one another, that where one leaveth off today, there one shall begin again tomorrow, and so read the holy Scripture orderly one after another, always a fairly long lesson, as hath been the custom hitherto.

The chapters of Prime, Terce, Sext, None and Compline are likewise to be read in course from the Bible, "so that where one leaveth off at Prime, there one shall begin again at Terce" (Sehling 13, p. 78).

10.7.3 A complete morning office: Braunschweig, 1528

The school Matins. Bugenhagen's Braunschweig order describes the boys' daily morning office in full. Two boys intone an antiphon and a Matins psalm, and the choirs sing it with one or two more and an octonary of Psalm 119, which is the psalm of the old little hours. Three boys read the Latin lesson in the Matins tone, and a fourth reads it in German. Then follow the Benedictus and the closing prayers (Sehling 6/1, pp. 400–401). Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 401):

> Balde darup schal de cantor alleyne singen dat erste halve versch vamme Benedictus nach deme tono der antiphen, de he gedenket, nach deme Benedictus to singen. Dat Benedictus schal geendet werden na gewänheit up beiden chören. Na der antiphen late me de kyndere up de kne vallen unde segge: Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison; Pater noster. De predicante spreke: Et ne nos. Ostende nobis, Domine, misericordiam tuam. Responsio: Et salutare tuum da nobis. Dominus vobiscum. Oremus cum collecta. Rursum: Dominus vobiscum. Darup singen twe kyndere Benedicamus. Dit alle, weme id gewanen wert, wert kume eyne halve stunde waren.

Straightway thereupon shall the cantor alone sing the first half verse of the Benedictus, in the tone of the antiphon which he thinketh to sing after the Benedictus. The Benedictus shall be finished, as is customary, in both choirs. After the antiphon let the children fall on their knees, and say: Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison; Pater noster. The preacher shall say: Et ne nos. Ostende nobis, Domine, misericordiam tuam. Response: Et salutare tuum da nobis. Dominus vobiscum. Oremus, with the collect. Again: Dominus vobiscum. Thereupon two children sing the Benedicamus. All this, when one is used to it, will scarcely last half an hour.

The evening office. The evening office is built the same way. It has the Vesper psalms, four Old Testament lessons, a ferial hymn ("the precious hymni feriales, every day one, or at times other fine hymns of Ambrose, Prudentius etc."), and the Magnificat. On feast eves and feasts the Nunc dimittis is added after the Benedicamus, "read slowly … without tone", followed by the Compline hymn Jesu redemptor saeculi (Sehling 6/1, p. 401). Matins, Lauds, the little hours, Vespers and Compline are all present in miniature, folded into two half-hour services.

10.7.4 Sunday Vespers in a Lutheran town, 1581

By the later century the town Vespers was a preaching service built on the old frame. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1150):

> Deß Sontags sol man umb ein uhr zur vesper leuten, und sol der schulmeister mit den knaben in den chor gehen und drey psalm Davids mit einer antiphen singen. Darauf sol ein knabe eine lateinische lection aus dem neuen testament und folgends ein ander knabe deudsch darauf lesen. Darnach sol der organist den hymnum schlagen. Nach dem hymno singet man einen deudschen psalm. Darauf folget die predigt. Nach der predigt singet man abermal einen deudschen psalm, darauf das Magnificat. Nach dem Magnificat die collect und das Benedicamus.

On Sunday one shall ring to Vespers at one o'clock, and the schoolmaster shall go with the boys into the choir and sing three psalms of David with an antiphon. Thereupon shall a boy read a Latin lesson out of the New Testament, and next another boy [read] it in German. Thereafter the organist shall play the hymn. After the hymn a German psalm is sung. Thereupon followeth the sermon. After the sermon a German psalm is sung again, thereupon the Magnificat. After the Magnificat the collect and the Benedicamus.

10.7.5 The preces, the suffrages and the Litany

What the old office had. Three kinds of intercession closed the medieval hours. The preces were a chain of Kyrie, Our Father, Creed and versicles said kneeling on ferias, chiefly at Lauds, Prime, Vespers and Compline. The editor of the Ansbach order glosses them as "intercessions (as in the Litany), inserted in a set, changing manner into the several orders of prayer" (Sehling 11, p. 313, n. 10). The suffragia were commemorations with antiphon, versicle and collect, chiefly of the saints, added after the collect of the day. The Litany of the Saints belonged to Rogation and to particular days. The orders treat the three differently: the full preces were cut, a short form was kept, the saints' suffrages were dropped, and the Litany came in, in Luther's corrected Latin and his German, as the new common intercession.

The full preces cut. Wittenberg's castle church dropped them in 1525. Wittenberg, Wie es einer zeit mit den ceremonien der kirchen gehalten wirt, 1525 (Sehling 1, p. 699):

> Ad primam vero legatur collecta vulgaris, preces (quas vocant) ubique omnino omittantur.

But at Prime let the common collect be read; the preces (as they call them) shall be wholly left out everywhere.

The Ansbach chapters were told the same in 1533, and in the same breath given the Litany and two suffrages. Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Ordnung singens und lesens bei den Stiften, 1533 (Sehling 11, pp. 313–314):

> Die preces sollen sie alle tag underlassen. […] Uns sehe auch fur gut an, das sie am wenigstens ain mal in der wochen als am freitag die letanei hielten, dieweil sant Paulus vermanet, man soll fur alle stend bitten, 1.Tim.2, [1f.], damit das gemain gebet auch in der kirchen plib. Alle suffragia de sanctis sollen sie underlassen; dann sie stellen das vertrauen in die hailigen wider das erst gebot Gottes. Allein mogen sie an den werktagen suffragia pro pace und pro peccatis halten.

The preces they shall leave off every day. […] It seemeth good to us also that at the least once in the week, as on Friday, they hold the Litany, since Saint Paul exhorteth that one should pray for all estates, 1 Timothy 2, that the common prayer may abide in the church also. All suffrages de sanctis they shall leave off, for they set trust in the saints, against the first commandment of God. Only on the working days they may hold the suffrages pro pace and pro peccatis.

The short preces kept. What survived in the Bugenhagen orders was the core of the old ferial preces, said kneeling after the gospel canticle: Kyrie, Our Father, Et ne nos, the versicle Ostende nobis, Dominus vobiscum, the collect and Benedicamus. Braunschweig 1528 is quoted above (§10.7.3). The same chain stands in Wittenberg 1525 after the Magnificat (Sehling 1, p. 698), Hamburg 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 523), Lübeck 1531 (Sehling 5, p. 348), the Pomeranian Pia ordinatio of 1535 after the Benedictus (Sehling 4, p. 349), Goslar 1534 (Sehling 7/2.2, pp. 263–264), Frankenberg 1542 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 277), Schleswig-Holstein 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 142), Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 50) and Hildesheim 1544 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 849). In the parish orders the children kneel and a preacher or one of the boys says the versicle.

A full German preces: the Mecklenburg convents. The Mecklenburg convent order of 1572 kept a complete set of preces in German after the Benedictus every day: Kyrie, Creed, Our Father, and a chain of versicles for mercy, the magistrates, the clergy, the people and peace, ending in three collects. Mecklenburg, Klosterordnung, 1572 (Sehling 5, pp. 258–259):

> Hierauf folgen diese gebete durch das ganze jahr: Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison. oder Herre erbarme dich, Christe erbarme dich, Herre erbarme dich. Darnach spricht die jungfrau, so das gebet angefangen, mit lauter stimme die bekäntniss des christlichen glaubens: Ich glaube in gott vater etc. und das Vater unser etc. Der chor antwortet: Sondern erlöse uns von dem bösen. Die jungfrau: Herr erzeige uns deine gnad Der chor: Und beweise uns deine hülfe. Die jungfrau: Herr hilf unser obrigkeit Der chor: Und höre uns, wen wir dich anrufen. Die jungfrau : Deine priester wollest mit gerechtigkeit kleiden Der chor: Und deine heiligen sollen frölig sein. Die jungfrau: Hilf deinem volke, herr Jesu Christ, Der chor: Und segne, was dein erbtheil ist. Die jungfrau: Verleihe uns frieden gnediglich, Herr gott zu unsern zeiten. Der chor: Den es ist kein ander nicht, Der für uns könnte streiten, Den du, unser gott, alleine. Die jungfrau: Schaff in uns gott ein rein herze. Der chor: Und nim deinen heiligen geist nicht von uns. Die jungfrau : Der herr sei mit euch Der chor: Und mit deinem geist. Lasset uns beten: Hierauf folgen täglich drei collecten: Die erste von der zeit, Die andere vom frieden. […] Die dritte für gottes wort und erhaltung in wahren glauben.

Hereupon follow these prayers through the whole year: Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison; or, Lord, have mercy; Christ, have mercy; Lord, have mercy. Thereafter the virgin who began the prayer saith with a loud voice the confession of the Christian faith, I believe in God the Father etc., and the Our Father etc. The choir answereth: But deliver us from evil. The virgin: Lord, show us thy grace. The choir: And show us thy help. The virgin: Lord, help our magistrates. The choir: And hear us when we call upon thee. The virgin: Thy priests wilt thou clothe with righteousness. The choir: And thy saints shall be joyful. The virgin: Help thy people, Lord Jesus Christ. The choir: And bless that which is thine inheritance. The virgin: Grant us peace graciously, Lord God, in our days. The choir: For there is none other that could fight for us, but thou, our God, alone. The virgin: Create in us, God, a clean heart. The choir: And take not thy Holy Spirit from us. The virgin: The Lord be with you. The choir: And with thy spirit. Let us pray. Hereupon follow daily three collects: the first of the season, the other for peace, […] the third for God's word and preservation in the true faith.

The versicles are the old preces of Lauds and Vespers in German: Ostende nobis, Domine salvum fac regem, Sacerdotes tui induantur iustitia, Salvum fac populum tuum, Da pacem and Cor mundum, with Luther's "Verleih uns Frieden" in place of Fiat pax. At Vespers the same order sets the Kyrie, Creed, Ten Commandments and Our Father before "Ostende nobis domine misericordiam tuam […] Domine salvum fac regem […] together with the other suffrages, in German (or in Latin, if the virgins understand it), as they are set down above at Matins" (Sehling 5, p. 259).

The saints' suffrages dropped. The Saxon visitors of 1529 close Vespers "with the customary versicles and collects, the suffrages of the saints excepted". Belzig, Ordnung der Stadt Belzig, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 527):

> darnach aber das magnificat mit den gewonlichen versikeln und collecten, suffragia sanctorum ausgenomen, und durch die kirchen etwan geistlich lied gesungen werden.

but thereafter the Magnificat with the customary versicles and collects, the suffragia sanctorum excepted, and some spiritual song be sung by the church.

The same clause stands in the visitation orders for Eilenburg (Sehling 1, p. 560) and Niemegk (Sehling 1, p. 616). Coburg 1545 ends Vespers with the collect of the season and Benedicamus, "so that all suffrages be left out" (Sehling 1, p. 543). Bonnus's order for the Osnabrück chapters (1543) puts the "Suffragia et invocationes sanctorum" with vigils and prayers for the dead among things "contrary to the word of God" (Sehling 7/1, p. 229).

Suffrages that stayed. Only intercessions for the living stayed. Ansbach kept pro pace and pro peccatis (above). The Transylvanian Saxons kept three suffrages, for the king, for the remission of sins and for peace, with their versicles and collects, after the Creed in the service that replaced the Mass when no one communed (Sehling 24, p. 223; Chapter 13, §13.21.1).

The suffrage for peace survived most widely as the Da pacem in Latin and German, with a collect pro pace, after the Magnificat (Dresden, Kreuzkirche 1574, Sehling 1, p. 555; Pomerania 1542, Sehling 4, p. 354).

The Litany at Vespers. The Litany most often took the place of the Magnificat or followed it, and the Saturday and feast-eve Vespers were its usual hour. Bugenhagen's Pomeranian order has the boys read Luther's Latin Litany after the Saturday Vespers lessons, but not on the eve of a feast. Pomerania, Kirchenordnung, 1535 (Sehling 4, p. 340):

> Balde up de lectiones schölen dree eder veere iungen, wo de scholmeisters will, de latinische letanie lesen ut dem sankbökeken doctoris Martini Luther. Unde dat chor schal stedes entwerden, wo im sankbökeken vorvatet is, dar up lest de predicant eine collect, pro ecclesia, unde na dem amen singe man benedicamus. Overst tor vesper, went idt des anderen dages sunderlick fest is, so schal me na den lectionibus nicht de letanie lesen, sundern dat magnificat latinisch singen mit einer antiphen

Straightway after the lessons shall three or four boys, as the schoolmasters will, read the Latin Litany out of Doctor Martin Luther's little song-book; and the choir shall always answer, as is set down in the song-book; thereupon the preacher readeth a collect pro ecclesia, and after the Amen let Benedicamus be sung. But at Vespers, when the next day is a special feast, one shall not read the Litany after the lessons, but sing the Magnificat in Latin with an antiphon.

Once a week the boys sang the German Litany with the people before the sermon instead of the office (Sehling 4, p. 342). The Pomeranian order of 1542 allows the Latin Litany in place of the Magnificat "when one keepeth plainly dominicaliter, as in Advent and Lent, and otherwise when one will", followed by the collect pro ecclesia and Da pacem (Sehling 4, p. 354). The Agenda of 1569 makes it monthly. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 435):

> Alle maente schal men in der vesper am viravende singen, ein mal loco magnificat, dat düdische magnificat, mit siner antiphen, Christum unsen heiland etc., unde ein mal de latinische letanie, loco magnificat. Dar na lest de prester eine collecte düdisch edder latinisch, unde beslüt dat chor mit dem benedicamus, unde singet dar up, da pacem domine, flexis genibus, latinisch edder düdisch.

Every month one shall sing at Vespers on the eve [of the holy day], once loco Magnificat, the German Magnificat with its antiphon, "Christum unsern Heiland" etc., and once the Latin Litany loco Magnificat. Thereafter the priest readeth a collect in German or Latin, and the choir closeth with the Benedicamus, and singeth thereupon Da pacem, Domine, on bended knees, in Latin or German.

Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel puts the Latin Litany after the hymn at the Vespers of holy eves, sung by two or three children, and leaves the German Litany for the weekday sermon. Brunswick- Wolfenbüttel, Christlike kerken-ordeninge, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 51):

> Na dem hymno scholen twe edder dre kindere balde de latinische litania singen. Darna eine collecten und Benedicamus. Overst de düdesche litania mach men in der weken einmal na der predike laten singen, dat de ganze kercke antwerde, wenn de parhere wil.

After the hymn shall two or three children straightway sing the Latin Litany; thereafter a collect and Benedicamus. But the German Litany one may let be sung once in the week after the sermon, that the whole church answer, if the parson will.

The Sunday and feast-day Vespers are to be held "without the litany" (Sehling 6/1, p. 53), and Hildesheim 1544 copies the rule (Sehling 7/2.1, pp. 850–851). Other places:

- Wittenberg 1533: the Latin Litany in the choir after the sermon at Saturday Vespers, closed with a Latin versicle, collect and Benedicamus (Sehling 1, pp. 703, 705);
- Bremen 1534: the German Litany after the Magnificat at the daily evening office of the schools (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 458);
- Osnabrück 1543: the German or Latin Litany at times "in the morning, also at Vespers, for all needs of body and soul that lie upon us" (Sehling 7/1, p. 256);
- Thorn 1575: on Fridays, in place of Vespers, on alternate weeks a figured Passion, or a figured piece followed by the Latin Litany with a collect (Sehling 4, p. 239).

The Litany at the morning office. The Litany was also joined to the morning office:

- Hamburg 1556: after the Benedictus "at times the Quicunque vult, at times the Litany in Latin or German cum oratione" (Sehling 5, p. 553);
- Danzig 1557: on Friday the weekday Matins "with the litanies to be sung besides" (Sehling 4, p. 181);
- Remse 1533 (with the Altenburg convent): the nuns hold the German Litany "every week on Wednesday and Friday after the Benedictus, before the collect" (Sehling 1, p. 652).

The Brandenburg convents sang it after Prime. Crevese, Visitations-Rezess for the Benedictine convent, 1541 (Sehling 3, p. 203):

> Doch schollen die junkfrowen alle sondage, mondage, middewoke und fridage die litanei, wo in drudde deil der ordnung to finden mit aller andacht des morgens na der prime singen und alle dartho kommen.

Yet the virgins shall every Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Friday sing the Litany, as it is to be found in the third part of the order, with all devotion in the morning after Prime, and all shall come thereto.

The visitors repeated the rule, for Monday, Wednesday and Friday, at Spandau in 1541 (Sehling 3, p. 305) and in the Salzwedel convent in 1579 (Sehling 3, p. 272).

The Litany in place of the preces and the Salve. At the Altenburg chapter in 1533 the canons were to hold "for the preces the pure new Litany" (§10.4.2). At Heilbronn in 1532 the evening Salve became "a blessing for sleep": the schoolmaster and his boys sing "a German song of praise, as the Litany, or Mitten wir im Leben sind, or Da pacem Domine", with a collect (Sehling 17/1, p. 302).

What was not found. No order keeps the Litany of the Saints with its invocations in any office, and no order uses suffragia in the liturgy for anything but the saints' commemorations or the three intercessions for peace, sins and the ruler. The Mass and the weekday prayer services, where the Litany was most at home, are treated in Chapter 13, §13.21.

10.8 Latin, German, or both

10.8.1 Latin: chapters, schools, and the towns

Latin for the learned. The full cursus in the chapters stayed Latin (§10.4.2):

- Brandenburg 1540 "in Latin … according to each bishopric's Breviary";
- Goslar 1534, where Widensee "holds fast to the use of the Latin language" (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 199);
- Naumburg cathedral, with a German lesson added;
- the canons' orders of Bugenhagen and Bonnus.

The schools. The school offices were Latin by design. Luther wanted "to keep and exercise the youth in the Latin tongue in the Bible" (§10.3.3). Wittenberg 1533 forbids German singing by the boys except when the people sing with them. Wittenberg, Kirchen-Ordnung für die Stadt Wittenberg, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 703):

> Der schulmeister soll mit den kindern nicht stets einerlei singen, sondern mancherlei antiphon, responsoria, hymnos und andere gesenge, so rein aus der heiligen schrift genomen sein. […] Distincte und verstendig soll man psalmen und lectiones lesen und nicht ungeschickt singen. Deutsch sollen die schüler nicht singen, on allein, wenn das volk mitsinget.

The schoolmaster shall not always sing one thing with the children, but divers antiphons, responsories, hymns and other chants that are taken purely out of holy Scripture. […] Distinctly and with understanding shall the psalms and lessons be read, and not sung unskilfully. In German the scholars shall not sing, save only when the people sing with them.

Understanding the Latin. Where Latin stayed, the orders tried to make it understood:

- Braunschweig 1528: "better diligence shall be applied, that the children learn to understand the Latin which they sing and read" (Sehling 6/1, p. 400).
- Lohr 1588: the Latin Vesper psalms "shall be explained in the school as far as needful, so far as it is possible to grasp them" (Sehling 11, p. 699).

10.8.2 German: convents and villages

German psalmody in the convents. Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 wants the women of the convents to psalm in German, on the old tones. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 78):

> Und dieweil die ganz biblia diser zeit fleißig verteutscht, zuvor aber der psalter dermaßen an tag gebracht, das er im teutschen liechter ist dann in andern sprachen, so sollen die frauen in den klöstern lernen teutsch psallirn in gewonlichem ton, wie sie lateinisch pflegen, und ire lectiones, capitula und collecten teutsch lesen, damit sie dester mer gebessert und zu reichlicher erkantnus Gottis worts mögen kommen.

And since the whole Bible hath at this time been diligently put into German, and the psalter above all hath been so brought to light that it is clearer in German than in other tongues, the women in the convents shall learn to psalm in German in the customary tone, as they are wont [to do] in Latin, and read their lessons, chapters and collects in German, that they may be the more edified and come to a richer knowledge of God's word.

German instead of the hours. Other convent orders replace the Latin hours with a German office of psalms, a chapter and a canticle. Kloster Remse, Ein kurze christliche ordnung in das junkfrau closter, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 652):

> so sollen sie hinfur an stat der metten, prim, terz, sext, non, lesen drei deutsche psalmen, ein capitel aus den evangelisten an Sant Mathes anzufahen, das benedictus und ein reine collecten von der zeit; fur die vesper desgleichen auch drei psalm, ein capitel aus Sant Pauls episteln, der zum Romern anzufahen, das magnificat und ein collecten alles deutsch.

they shall henceforth, in place of Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext [and] None, read three German psalms, a chapter out of the evangelists beginning at St Matthew, the Benedictus and a pure collect of the season; for Vespers likewise also three psalms, a chapter out of St Paul's epistles, beginning at that to the Romans, the Magnificat and a collect, all in German.

The seven hours in German. The Nassau-Dillenburg order for the convent of Keppel (1570) keeps all seven hours, Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vespers and Compline, but in German. It gives the reason that the old Church divided its spiritual exercises into set times "in remembrance of the bitter passion and death of our Lord Jesus Christ". Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 133):

> wöllenn wir, das dieselbige auch noch also gehalltenn werden, doch inn teutscher, verstendiger sprache, ihnen selbst unnd andern zur besserung und erbawung. Unnd sollenn derohalbenn alle closterjungfrawen deß morgens zur mettenzeit, darnach zur prim, tertz, sext unnd non, gegen abendt aber zur vesperzeit unnd complet, mit zucht unnd andacht miteinander inn den chor gehenn unnd inn gemein zu allenn zeiten erstlich die antiphon: Kom, heyliger geist, mit einem deutschenn verß unnd collect de spiritu sancto singenn.

we will that the same be still so kept, yet in the German understandable tongue, to their own and others' amendment and edification. And therefore all the convent virgins shall in the morning at the time of Matins, thereafter at Prime, Terce, Sext and None, but toward evening at the time of Vespers and Compline, go together into the choir with discipline and devotion, and at all times first sing together the antiphon "Komm, Heiliger Geist", with a German verse and the collect of the Holy Ghost.

The Matins that follows has a German Venite, three psalms in course "with a short summary before or after each", a German hymn "in place of the antiphon", an Old Testament lesson with Veit Dietrich's summary, and so on. On feasts the psalms and lessons are those "noted in their Breviary" (Sehling 10, pp. 133–134). Sehling's introduction notes an earlier Nassau order of 1558 that "prescribed the keeping of the seven hours in the German language" (Sehling 10, p. 31).

The Mecklenburg convents, 1572. The Mecklenburg convents read the whole psalter monthly and the Bible yearly, "in understandable German mother tongue" (Sehling 5, p. 257). Their daily office is led by the domina and the nuns in weekly turn. It opens with the German versicle "Herr thue meine lippen uf" and its Gloria Patri (Sehling 5, p. 257).

Villages. In the villages the office was German: "all shall be sung in German in the villages" (Lippe 1571, §10.6.4).

10.8.3 Both

Mixed Latin and German. Many orders mix the two languages within the same office.

- The lessons. Bugenhagen and his followers have the lesson read in Latin and then in German (Braunschweig 1528, Prussia 1568, Hoya 1581). Luther's Deutsche Messe had already done so (§10.3.3).
- The parishes in Pfalz-Neuburg, 1543. At Vespers "a whole German chapter out of the New Testament [is to be read] instead of the Latin, and concluded with a German collect". The same applies "in all the other hours that are sung in the parish churches", that "the lessons and chapters together with the collects be kept in the German tongue for the people's sake" (Sehling 13, p. 78).
- The Lüneburg convents, 1574. The convents mix Latin and German psalms in each hour. Lüneburg, Klosterordnung of Duke Wilhelm the Younger, 1574 (Sehling 6/1, p. 620):

> so sollen in der metten nicht mehr dan drei lateinische und ein teutscher psalmen und zwo lectiones, dero eine soll ein halb oder dritte teil von einem capittel im neuen testament teutsch sein, und die collect und was sonst mehr gewonlich und christlich ist, darbei zu singen, gesungen und gelesen werden. Wan aber sonst festtage sein, sollen sie vier lateinische und zwen teutsche psalmen und drey lectiones [...] singen und lesen.

there shall be sung and read at Matins no more than three Latin and one German psalm, and two lessons, whereof one shall be a half or a third part of a chapter of the New Testament in German, and the collect and whatever else is customary and Christian to sing therewith. But when there are feast days, they shall sing and read four Latin and two German psalms and three lessons [...].

Prime and Terce have "a Latin and a German psalm and a collect". Sext and None have "two Latin and one German psalm and a collect". At Compline the hymn "Christe, der du bist Tag und Licht" is sung "in German" (Sehling 6/1, p. 621). Matins is moved from midnight to four or five in the morning, "since the choir virgins grow daily older and more infirm" (Sehling 6/1, p. 620).

10.9 The Office of the Dead

Beside the eight hours of the day the medieval church sang an office for the departed, the Office of the Dead (officium defunctorum). The orders call it the vigil (Vigilie, vigilia; in Low German vigilie). It had three hours of its own: Vespers, Matins and Lauds. It was sung on the evening or in the night before a requiem Mass:

- before the burial;
- on the third, seventh and thirtieth days after it;
- at the anniversary.

Endowments paid for it, and priests, vicars and the school sang it. No evangelical order kept it as an office for the dead.

This section asks:

- what the orders and Sehling's editors say the vigil was (§10.9.1);
- on what grounds it was abolished (§10.9.2), and by what steps (§10.9.3);
- what became of it in the chapters, the convents and the schools (§10.9.4);
- what of it survived at funerals (§10.9.5), and what took its place (§10.9.6).

§10.9.7 gives a summary by order. The funeral as a whole is treated in Chapter 13, §13.9, the funeral sermon in Chapter 11, §11.4.6, and the bells for the dead in Chapter 9, §9.5.6.

10.9.1 What the vigil was

The orders do not describe it. They name the vigil only to abolish it, and none sets out its order. Of its content they say only that it was made of psalms and of "the words of blessed Job" (Pomerania 1535, §10.9.2), or of "the psalms and lessons out of holy Job that are sung in the vigil" (Mülhausen 1528, Reformed, §10.9.3).

Sehling's editors explain it. Their notes give this picture:

- An office of the Breviary. The vigil "is in this context the office of the dead, a prayer service of the Breviary, which is distinguished from the soul-Mass (missa de requiem) and like it was endowed to be repeated, mostly on the anniversary of the death" (Ansbach 1526, editors' note, Sehling 11, p. 94; repeated for Hohenlohe 1553, Sehling 15, p. 68).
- Three hours. "Since the early Middle Ages the custom had grown up in the monasteries of reading for the dead, beside the ordinary hours, a special office, which consisted of Vespers, Matins and Lauds" (Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1569, editors' note, Sehling 6/1, p. 312).
- The name. The vigiliae "are here offices of the dead held after the manner of a vigil (the eve of a higher feast)" (Nördlingen 1525, editors' note, Sehling 12, p. 305).
- When it was sung. The vigils were "held with antiphons, psalms and prayers in the night before the burial, at the coffin in the church, and repeated on the third, seventh and thirtieth day after the burial and on the anniversary" (Marienhafe 1593, editors' note, Sehling 7/1, p. 722). At Nuremberg the office was held "after the body had been brought into the church" (Veit Dietrich 1545, editors' note, Sehling 11, p. 528).
- The anniversary. "The anniversary was usually made up of the vigil and the anniversary Mass. Vigil was the name of the office of the dead held on the evening before the soul-Mass." After the office the grave was visited, if it lay in or by the church, and the Mass followed the next morning. The names of the dead were kept in "anniversary books" (Mülhausen 1524, Reformed, editors' note, Sehling 20/2, p. 197).

The Roman form. Sehling prints no text of the office. For orientation, the Roman form of it had the following (this is not from the corpus):

- Vespers is named Placebo from its first antiphon, Placebo Domino in regione vivorum (Psalm 116:9), and Matins Dirige from its first, Dirige, Domine Deus meus, in conspectu tuo viam meam (Psalm 5:8).
- The nine lessons of Matins are from Job. The first responsory is Credo quod Redemptor meus vivit (Job 19:25–27).
- Lauds has the canticle of Hezekiah (Isaiah 38:10–20), and ends with the Benedictus and the antiphon Ego sum resurrectio et vita (John 11:25–26).

The names Placebo and Dirige do not occur in the corpus. The responsory from Job and the canticles of Lauds reappear in the evangelical funeral (§10.9.5).

Brenz's account of its origin. Brenz explained the vigil from the first church, as a night watch at the grave that later ages took for a work for the dead. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1527 (Sehling 17/1, p. 60):

> Man hat biß hieher fur die todten vigilien und meß gehalten. Das hat wol zum tail in der ersten kirchen sein guten anfang gehapt, ist doch durch die aigennutzigen, unverstendigen in ein ergerlichen mißbrauch erwachsen, da anfengklich, wen einer auß den Cristen gemartert wurd oder sunst starb, auß großer lieb, so die Cristen zu einander trugen, pliben die lebendigen bey dem grab des mertlers oder abgestorbnen eins teils der nacht, daher es ein vigilia, zu teutsch ein wacht, genent ward. Morgens hielten sie in der kirchen by dem altar, darvon das Sacrament geraicht wurd, des abgestorbnen gedechtnus, sein seel bevelhend in die hendt gottes, welchs die nachvolgenden ersehen und gemeint haben, das wachen oder vigilien geschehe, die todten auß dem fegfewer zuerloßen. So doch es allein war ein werck der lebendigen lieb gegen dem abgestorben anzaigend, wie ytz by uns ist das geen mit der leicht, welchs wol dem todten kein nutz bringt, ist aber ein burgerlich werck, die lieb gegen dem abgestorben beweyssend.

Hitherto vigils and Masses have been held for the dead. This had indeed in part its good beginning in the first church, but it hath grown through self-seeking and ignorant men into an offensive abuse. For in the beginning, when one of the Christians was martyred or otherwise died, the living, out of the great love which the Christians bare one to another, abode by the grave of the martyr or of the departed a part of the night; whence it was called a vigilia, in German a watch. In the morning they held in the church, at the altar from which the Sacrament was given, the remembrance of the departed, commending his soul into the hands of God. This they that came after saw, and supposed that the watching or vigils were done to deliver the dead out of purgatory; whereas it was only a work of the living, showing their love toward the departed, as with us now is the going with the corpse, which bringeth indeed no profit to the dead, but is a civil work, showing love toward the departed.

Heilbronn 1530 gives the same account, in the confession that the city addressed to the Emperor (Confessio Heilbronnensis):

- The vigils came "out of the first church". When the dead were buried by night or early in the morning, the living watched, and were comforted "with psalms and divine sayings", that they should not grieve "as if there were no resurrection".
- Lights were burned "that one might see in the darkness", and alms were given to the poor through the deacons.
- "But such godly use of the first church is changed into an unprofitable service, to help the souls of the departed" (Sehling 17/1, pp. 278–279).

A paid office. The vigil was endowed, and those who sang it were paid:

- At Wittenberg each priest had about eight gulden a year "from the vigils which they hold" (1522; §10.9.3).
- At Mülhausen the clergy drew "presence money" for attending the anniversary Masses, the vigils and the canonical hours (editors' introduction, Sehling 20/2, p. 161). In 1528 the preachers would let the vigil psalms be sung only "without the desire of the presence money" (Sehling 20/2, p. 209).
- At Goslar the commons complained in 1525 that the presence money at the vigils for the dead had doubled, because the absent priests were counted in (editors' introduction, Sehling 7/2.2, p. 184).
- The school sang with the priests. Donauwörth in 1545 freed the schoolmaster and scholars from "the singing of the soul-Masses and vigils" (§10.9.4).

10.9.2 Why it was abolished

Luther. Luther's preface to his burial hymns of 1542 puts the evangelical case in two sentences. Sehling's editors quote it in a note to the Harlingerland order. Harlingerland, Kirchenordnung, 1573/74, editors' note quoting Luther (Sehling 7/1, p. 741):

> Demnach haben wir in unsern kirchen die bepstlichen greuel, als vigilien, seelmessen, begengnis, fegfeur und alles ander gaukelwerk, fur die todten getrieben, abgetan und rein ausgefegt. Und wollen unser kirchen nicht mehr lassen klagheuser oder leidestete sein, sondern, wie es die alten veter auch genennet, koemiteria, das ist, fur schlaffheuser und rugestete halten.

Accordingly we have in our churches done away and clean swept out the popish abominations, as vigils, soul-Masses, Begängnis, purgatory and all other jugglery practised for the dead. And we will no more let our churches be houses of wailing or places of mourning, but, as the old fathers also named them, coemeteria, that is, hold them for sleeping-houses and resting-places.

The orders give four grounds.

1. The dead are not helped.

- Pomesania 1524: "there shall henceforth be no ringing nor singing nor Mass nor vigils held over the dead; for it is of no profit to them, neither are they helped thereby". The next article forbids holding exequies or Begängnis over the dead, or praying for them (Sehling 4, p. 29).
- Saxony 1528: "if the soul-Masses, vigils and the like availed, one could put away sin by works" (Sehling 1, p. 164).
- Heilbronn 1530: the psalms and the prophets are given "for our comfort" by the Holy Ghost. But the dead can no longer be made fit for good by teaching and correction: "how then may that profit them which is read or sung for their sake in the vigils?" (Sehling 17/1, p. 278).
- Wolfstein 1574: no vigils, soul-Masses or Begängnis for the dead "to help the departed out of purgatory: for such is in vain" (Sehling 13, p. 586).

2. Scripture misused for purgatory. Bugenhagen made the charge in his order for the remaining canons and monks. Pomerania, Pia ordinatio caeremoniarum, 1535 (Sehling 4, p. 350):

> De vigiliis. Vigilias, quas vocant pro defunctis, non canant, quando nihil aliud sunt quam abusus sanctissimorum psalmorum et verborum beati Joh; et isto abusu verborum dei non alio respicitur quam in mendax illud et fictum purgatorium. Satis lusum est pro mercede iniquitatis et Judae loculis. Posthac non irritemus dominum.

Of vigils. Let them not sing the vigils, as they call them, for the dead, since they are nothing else than an abuse of the most holy psalms and of the words of blessed Job [the print has "Joh"]; and by this abuse of the words of God nothing else is looked to than that lying and feigned purgatory. Enough hath been played for the reward of iniquity and for the bag of Judas. Henceforth let us not provoke the Lord.

- Schleswig-Holstein 1542 repeats the ruling in Low German: the vigils are "nothing else than a misuse of the holy psalms and of the words of Saint Job" (Sehling 23, p. 144).
- Pomerania's church order of 1535 allows nothing to be sung in the chapters and cathedrals "of purgatory and of the redemption of souls through vigils and soul-Masses" (Sehling 4, p. 342).
- Hamburg 1529 traces the vigils to 2 Maccabees 12:43–45, where Judas sends money to Jerusalem for a sin offering for the fallen: "out of such ungrounded scripture the priests have made the most of their vigils, when they pray for the dead" (Sehling 5, p. 520).
- The Palatinate in 1556 bids the pastors use no more "the vigils, the papal lays and other such chants, though they be in part ill drawn out of holy Scripture" (Sehling 14, p. 112).

3. Against God's word and the merit of Christ. The Lüneburg articles put the vigils with the soul-Masses, the Kalande and the confraternities. Lüneburg, Artikelbuch, 1527 (Sehling 6/1, p. 515):

> De sösteynde artikel. Van vigilien, seelemyssen unde kalanden. Vigilien, seelemyssen, kalande unde fraternitates Sancte Marie, Jacobi, Anne etc., darümme dat se Goddes worde strackes entgegen synt, schollen nenerley wyse geholden werden. Desgelyken de drüttigesten unde jardage genzlick affgedaen wesen.

The sixteenth article. Of vigils, soul-Masses and Kalande. Vigils, soul-Masses, Kalande and the confraternities of St Mary, St James, St Anne, etc., because they are straight against God's word, shall in no wise be held. Likewise the thirtieth days and the anniversaries shall be wholly done away.

- Calenberg-Göttingen 1542 calls the soul-Masses "with their vigils a pure abomination before God" (Sehling 6/2, p. 760).
- Hohenlohe 1553: soul-Masses, vigils, Begängnisse and anniversaries "diminish and darken the suffering of Christ" (Sehling 15, p. 80).
- The Mecklenburg convent order of 1572: "it is also open idolatry to hold Begängnisse for the dead. For whoso hath fallen asleep in the Lord is already blessed" (Sehling 5, p. 254).

4. Money. After purgatory the commonest charge is money: Bugenhagen's "reward of iniquity" and "bag of Judas" (above). Hamburg 1529 says that grief for the dead "went not so much to the heart of their kin that they would bring much money, until purgatory came too". Then "they had to scream the pennies out of the purses, and lords and princes gave land and people thereto" (Sehling 5, p. 520).

Elsewhere. Other orders abolish the vigils in passing, among them:

- Nördlingen 1525, which puts away "the vigils for the dead and the Masses … from the church, the sink of the former blasphemy" (Sehling 12, p. 298);
- Strasbourg 1525 (Moderate Reformed), where the council abolished the soul-Masses and vigils (editors' introduction, Sehling 20/1, p. 45);
- Minden 1530: "that vigil, memorial and soul-Mass are against the Scripture" (Sehling 21, p. 144);
- Freiberg 1537 (Sehling 1, p. 466), Lippe 1538 (Sehling 21, p. 312) and Northeim 1539 (Sehling 6/2, p. 932);
- Wurzen 1542 (Sehling 2, p. 98) and Teschen 1584 (Sehling 3, pp. 462–463).

10.9.3 By stages

The early orders moved by steps. They took the money away, left the vigil to the families, kept the old foundations for a time, or kept the texts and dropped the purpose.

Wittenberg 1522: from the vigils to the sick. The Wittenberg order of January 1522 put the priests' vigil income into the common chest and gave them a new work for it. Wittenberg, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1522 (Sehling 1, p. 697):

> Item die priester, die wir jetzund haben, dieweil ir zins auch in den gemainen kasten gezogen seint, darvon sich jeder järlichen von den vigilien, die si halten, bei acht guldin gehabt haben, söllen mit sechs guldin järlich versehen werden; dieweil dann die mess und vigilien vergeen, mügent si für das selbig gelt arm krank leüt ersuchen, und in iren nöten trösten, doch sollen sie niemant zu testamentarien bestellen noch halten.

Item, the priests whom we now have, forasmuch as their rents also are drawn into the common chest, from which each hath had yearly about eight gulden from the vigils that they hold, shall be provided with six gulden yearly; and since the Masses and vigils pass away, they may for the same money visit poor sick folk and comfort them in their need; yet they shall appoint or keep no one as executor of a testament.

Coburg 1524: left to the families. The Coburg proposal for the services ends: "With the departed it shall be as each one's kinsfolk please, how they will hold and purpose burial, vigil and soul-Mass; yet it shall be according to holy Scripture, and none shall be compelled thereto" (Coburg, Gottesdienst-Ordnung, 1524, Sehling 1, p. 543).

Mülhausen 1524 (Reformed): unchanged for now. The council's first order for the services left "the vigils and anniversaries … unchanged for this time" (Sehling 20/2, p. 197). The order rested on the advice of Augustin Geschmus, chaplain of St Stephen's. He would have struck the anniversary Masses and vigils altogether, since Scripture tells nothing of offices for the dead. For the sake of "the weak" he advised for the time being only joining together the vigils that fell in one week. The council, unsure of the citizens, kept them all for the present (editors' introduction, Sehling 20/2, p. 163).

Ansbach 1526: kept until a council. The margrave's diet kept the old foundations of soul-Masses, vigils and confraternities "until further action and decision of a common Christian council or national assembly, or our further answer" (Sehling 11, p. 94). No one was to be compelled to hold a Begängnis (Chapter 13, §13.9.1).

Mülhausen 1528 (Reformed): the texts kept, the purpose dropped. Four years after the first order the preachers advised the council on the services. They would let the vigil's psalms and its lessons from Job stay in the church, in Latin, stripped of their additions and sung with understanding. No other text in the corpus goes so far. Mülhausen, opinion of the people's priest and the three preachers on the services, 1528 (Reformed; Sehling 20/2, p. 209):

> Darnach die Nonen und die Vesper, so man phlegt zu singen von der feria, auch daß Salve, so eß deuttet auff Christum, auch die psalmen und leczen auß dem heligen Job, die man singet inn der vigilien, on denn anderen ungegründten zusatz, mag man nitt verbietten, inn der kilchen auff lateinisch zu brauchen, aber doch mitt dem geding, daß manß nitt thue wie bißher, on allen glouben, verstand und andacht und mitt unseglichem eylenn und blapern, sunder mitt glouben, verstand und andacht, on die begird der presentz, aber mitt der begird zu Gott, und langsam, underschidlich und ordenlich.

Thereafter the None and the Vespers, which are wont to be sung of the feria, also the Salve, so far as it pointeth to Christ, also the psalms and lessons out of holy Job which are sung in the vigil, without the other ungrounded additions, one may not forbid to be used in the church in Latin; yet on this condition, that it be not done as hitherto, without all faith, understanding and devotion, and with unspeakable haste and babbling, but with faith, understanding and devotion, without the desire of the presence money, but with desire toward God, and slowly, distinctly and in order.

On Sundays one of the singers was then to read or expound to the people in German what had been sung in Latin (Sehling 20/2, p. 209). The weekday None, Vespers, vigil and Salve were to be held in the same way (Sehling 20/2, p. 210).

Heilbronn 1529: the bell stopped. On All Souls' Day a councillor told the boy who was about to ring for the vigils in the morning to stop. The sexton was told to ring only for the early sermon and for baptisms, and never for the Mass or Vespers (editors' introduction, Sehling 17/1, pp. 225–226).

Heidelberg 1546: suspended, the rents kept. The Palatine advice on reforming the collegiate churches decided that "all vigils and soul-offices shall henceforth stand still, until amendment be undertaken in this and in other things. Yet all rents and dues shall remain with the foundation", to be shared among those who served the church (Kurpfalz, Bedenken zur Reformation der Stiftskirchen, 1546, Sehling 14, p. 92).

10.9.4 Chapters, convents and schools

The chapters. The vigils were above all the work of the chapters and their vicars. The orders that reformed the hours in the chapters struck the vigils in the same breath:

- Goslar, St Simon and Judas, 1534: the council's order for the canons' hours ends by bidding them put away "all papist ceremonies and abuses, with vigils, soul-Masses and other Masses", on pain of losing their prebends (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 264; §10.4.2).

- Pomerania 1535: in the chapters and cathedrals nothing may be sung of the redemption of souls "through vigils and soul-Masses" (Sehling 4, p. 342), and the Pia ordinatio forbids the vigils (§10.9.2).
- Bonnus's order for the Osnabrück chapters, 1543: "vigils and prayers for the dead … are to be wholly omitted" (Sehling 7/1, p. 229; §10.7.5).
- Heidelberg 1546: suspended (§10.9.3).

The convents. The reform order for the nuns of Frankenberg at Goslar sets the old offices against "their hours". Goslar, Ordnung für das Frauenkloster Frankenberg, 1542 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 275):

> Ex hoc omnes papisticas et monasticas ceremonias, officia divina, vigilias, missas pro vivis et defunctis, omnem denique abusum intermittent; e contra autem suas horas legent aliasque ceremonias ex praescripto amplissimi magistratus Goslariensis, divinis literis et puro putoque dicto verbo conformes servabunt.

From this time they shall leave off all papist and monastic ceremonies, divine offices, vigils, Masses for the living and the dead, in short every abuse; but on the other hand they shall read their hours, and keep the other ceremonies, as the most honourable magistrate of Goslar hath prescribed, conformable to the divine Scriptures and to the pure and plain word.

- The Calenberg convents, 1542: "all corner-Masses, private Masses and soul-Masses shall be done away, with the vigils and all that hath hitherto been done for the dead, since holy Scripture maketh no mention at all of such things, and the right apostolic church knew nothing of them" (Sehling 6/2, p. 852).
- Schaumburg, 1562: the count bids the convents of Fischbeck and Obernkirchen leave off "forthwith the papist sacrifice-Masses, vigils, soul-Masses and all other superstitious chants and prayers that are contrary to the holy divine word" (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 60). The editors add that the convent order had forbidden the Salve regina, the Regina coeli, the vigils and the Masses for the dead (editors' introduction, Sehling 7/2.2, p. 35).

The psalter for the dead. In the convents the office of the dead went with psalters prayed for the departed, often promised under seal to the convent's benefactors. Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel releases the nuns from such vows in its report on the monasteries of 1569. The release is spoken as Christ's own, "from heaven", to the nuns. Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel, Christlicher und gründlicher bericht on the convents, 1569 (Sehling 6/1, p. 334):

> Item da eine jungfrau oder eine ganze samlung versprochen, auch deshalben brief und sigel von sich gegeben hette, das sie jerliches etliche psalter für einen todten oder lebendigen menschen beten wolten, wil ich sie hiemit auch von diesem gelübde absolvieren, das sie solches nicht zu thun schuldig. Denn der psalter ist nicht darumb aufgeschrieben, auch von Gott nicht darzu verordnet, das man denselben für die abgestorbenen sprechen und sie damit aus dem fegfeur erlösen solte.

Item, if a maiden or a whole convent had promised, and had given letter and seal for it, that they would pray yearly certain psalters for a dead or a living man, I will hereby absolve them also from this vow, so that they be not bound to do it. For the psalter is not written for this, neither ordained of God thereto, that one should say it for the departed and thereby deliver them out of purgatory.

The Mecklenburg convent order of 1572 makes the same charge. The nuns had been made to sing the psalter "in an unknown Latin tongue, without all understanding and devotion", whence the proverb "thou readest even as a nun the psalter". Worse, they had sung it to "atone for their own and other folk's sins, and help the souls out of purgatory" (Sehling 5, p. 253).

The schools. The school had sung with the priests at the vigils, and the reform freed it. Donauwörth, Kirchenordnung, 1545 (Sehling 12, p. 160):

> Damit dann der schulmaister und die schuler an der lere dest minder verhindert und die beste zeit nit ubel angelegt werde, so sollen weder schulmaister noch schuler furtan zu dem sang der seelmessen und vigilien verbunden sein.

So that the schoolmaster and the scholars be the less hindered in their learning, and the best time be not ill bestowed, neither schoolmaster nor scholars shall henceforth be bound to the singing of the soul-Masses and vigils.

The endowments. What had been given for the vigils went to the common chest, and the clergy who lost their fees were paid from it:

- Wittenberg 1522 (§10.9.3).

- Hamburg 1529: the preachers are to remind those who "had hitherto given money for certain Masses, vigils, wax lights" to turn it to the right service of God, "that is, to the profit of the poor and into this chest" (Sehling 5, p. 533).
- Württemberg 1536: the chest takes in all that was spent "on Masses, vigils, the eternal light" (Sehling 16, p. 96; Chapter 14, §14.5.4).
- Calenberg-Göttingen 1542: into "God's chest" falls "all that hath hitherto been ordained and founded for vigils, soul-Masses, memorials, soul-gifts, stations, candles, lights, lamps, doles and all confraternities" (instruction for the visitors, Sehling 6/2, p. 858).
- Perleberg 1542: the pastor had lost "a notable part of his living" from vigils, soul-Masses and other ceremonies. In its place he receives a measure of rye yearly and two gulden a quarter from the common chest (Sehling 3, p. 245).

10.9.5 What survived at the funeral

The office as an office did not survive. Its name, its place at the house of mourning, and some of its chants lived on in the funeral.

The name. At Ermsleben in 1564 the pastor still called the singing at the grave the vigil. Ermsleben, Kirchen-Ordnung der Stadt Ermsleben, 1564 (Sehling 2, p. 486):

> Die todten werden fein bekleidet und ehrlich durch die kirchendiener und alle schueler zu grabe mit lateinischen und teutschen sengen getragen, dan lest man sie eine kleine zeit beim grabe stehn und singt vor allem volk vigil und beschleust mit der collecte, dan setzt man die leich ins grab. Darnach thut man eine kurze leichpredigt

The dead are decently clothed, and carried honourably to the grave by the ministers of the church and all the scholars, with Latin and German songs; then they are let stand a little while by the grave, and the vigil is sung before all the people and concluded with the collect; then the corpse is set in the grave. Thereafter a short funeral sermon is made

At the house of the dead. The vigil and the night watch by the body lived on at the house of mourning. In the Mark and in Mecklenburg the vigil was still sung there in the 1550s, and the visitors abolished it:

- Prenzlau 1557: "Whereas hitherto the custom hath been that vigils were held before the door, but without devotion, this shall be abolished." Instead the scholars carry a cross before the corpse, at eight in the morning or two in the afternoon (Sehling 3, p. 261).
- Neubrandenburg 1559: see the next quotation.
- Transylvania 1607: the synod counts among the superstitions of funerals "that torches and lights are kept burning whole nights by the dead not yet buried" (Sehling 24, p. 494).

Neubrandenburg, Kirchenordnung of the visitors, 1559 (Sehling 5, p. 269):

> Zum achtzehnten. Wenn toten seint, hat man alhie ein heidschen gebrauch, helt nachtwache, bredt das kalb und treibt viel superstitiones, wie die nicht alle konnen genennet werden, die sollen hiemit ganz abgeschafft sein. Es soll auch in oder vor den heusern keine vigilie mehr gesungen, besundern wenn die schuler komen, soll das leich fort heraus nach dem kirchove getragen werden, und der cantor mit den schulern vorher und bei dem grabe singen, bis das der corper begraben ist. Darnach soll der predicanten einer eine kurze vermahnung von des menschen muhseligen leben und der frolichen auferstehung thuen.

Eighteenthly. When there are dead, there is here a heathenish custom: they keep a night watch, roast the calf, and practise many superstitions, more than can all be named; these shall hereby be wholly abolished. Neither shall any vigil be sung any more in or before the houses; but when the scholars come, the corpse shall be carried straight out to the churchyard, and the cantor with the scholars shall go before and sing by the grave until the body be buried. Thereafter one of the preachers shall make a short exhortation of man's toilsome life and of the joyful resurrection.

Before the house, in Latin. At Pirna the deacons still sang a set of Latin responsories before the house of the dead, and German hymns followed in the churchyard. Pirna, Kirchenordnung of Anton Lauterbach, between 1555 and 1569 (Sehling 1, p. 644):

> Piis in Christo obdormientibus pulsus campanarum permittetur et ad sepulturam una campana intonet ad convocandum populum ad funus, ad quod diaconus unus aut uterque, etiam pastor si vocati adsint stantes ante domum latine cantent:

> Si bona suscepimus. Redemptor meus etc. Si credimus etc. Media vita in morte sumus. Ecce mysterium magnum dico vobis. Cum venisset Jesus in domum principis etc. In coemeterio populo collecto germanica canantur

For the godly that fall asleep in Christ the ringing of the bells shall be permitted, and for the burial one bell shall sound, to call the people together to the funeral; at which one deacon or both, and the pastor also if they be called, standing before the house, shall sing in Latin: "If we have received good things"; "My Redeemer" etc.; "If we believe" etc.; "In the midst of life we are in death"; "Behold, I shew you a great mystery"; "When Jesus was come into the ruler's house" etc. In the churchyard, the people being gathered, German songs shall be sung

The responsory from Job. One piece of the old Matins survived widely: the responsory Credo quod Redemptor meus vivit. The Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel order of 1543 has the scholars sing it first of all before the bier, "with the verse and repetition", as a responsory is sung in the office. Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel, Christlike kerken-ordeninge, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 67–68):

> Doden begraven. De schöler mit einem edder mehr scholgesellen, mit der halven edder mit der ganzen schole, darna yd bestellet und darvor gegeven werd, alse von olders gewonlick, scholen vor der baren hergahn und singen int erste latinisch: Redemptor meus vivit etc. mit dem vers und repetitien, wen dat uthe is, düdesch: Erbarm dy myn, o Here Got etc. Midden wy im leven sind etc. Uth deper noth etc. By dem grave dat led: Nu lat uns dat lyff begraven etc. Edder wat anders.

Burying the dead. The scholars, with one or more of the school's assistants, with the half or with the whole school, according as it is bespoken and paid for, as hath been customary of old, shall go before the bier and sing first in Latin: "My Redeemer liveth" etc., with the verse and the repetition; when that is ended, in German: "Have mercy on me, O Lord God" etc., "In the Very Midst of Life" etc., "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee" etc.; by the grave the hymn "This Body in the Grave We Lay" etc.; or something else.

- The editors identify the piece as the responsory Credo quod Redemptor meus vivit of the office of the dead (Sehling 6/1, p. 68).
- Hildesheim's town order of 1544 repeats the passage. Its editors call the piece a "responsory from the office of the dead (after Job 19:25–27)" (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 866).
- It stands also at Pirna (above), and in the Rostock Conformitas of about 1560 as Scio quod redemptor meus (Sehling 5, p. 290).

The canticles of Lauds. The Brandenburg-Nürnberg order of 1533 and the Pfalz-Neuburg order of 1543 sing at the burial the two canticles of the old Lauds of the dead, though they do not say so (the identification is this book's):

- Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533 has the scholars sing the Benedictus or Psalm 90, with the antiphon Media vita or Ego sum resurrectio et vita (Chapter 13, §13.9.3).
- Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 gives three Latin canticles to choose from at the body: Psalm 90, the canticle of Hezekiah, Ego dixi: In dimidio dierum meorum (Isaiah 38:10–20; the editors print "30"), and the Benedictus. They are sung with Media vita or Ego sum resurrectio et vita (Sehling 13, p. 90).

In the Roman office of the dead the canticle of Hezekiah and the Benedictus with Ego sum resurrectio both belong to Lauds (§10.9.1).

An office after the burial: Brandenburg 1540. Joachim II's order keeps the most. After the procession the mourners go back into the church for what is in effect a short office of the dead without prayer for the dead. It has lessons from Job, responsories, the Benedictus with Ego sum resurrectio, a German collect and the responsory Si bona suscepimus. Brandenburg, Kirchen-ordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 81):

> Und so man vom begrebnis widerum in die kirchen gehet, alsdenn mag man singen, mit fried und freud ich fahr dahin, darauf auch lesen ein oder mehr lectiones ex Hiob oder Paulo de resurrectione und dazwischen etliche responsoria oder deudsche gesenge, darnach das benedictus mit der antiphon, ego sum ressurrectio et vita und denn ein deudsche collecta, wie folgt [...] Und zum beschlies das responsorium, si bona suscepimus, darneben sol man ein becken setzen in die kirch zum opfer oder almus fur die armen leut

And when they go again from the burial into the church, then may be sung "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart"; and thereupon be read one or more lessons out of Job, or out of Paul of the resurrection, and between them some responsories or German songs;

thereafter the Benedictus with the antiphon Ego sum resurrectio et vita, and then a German collect, as followeth [...] And for the conclusion the responsory Si bona suscepimus; and a basin shall be set in the church for the offering or alms for the poor folk

The rest of the order's burial chapter:

- The collect is the Saxon burial collect (Chapter 13, §13.9.2).
- A Mass may follow. If the burial was in the morning, a Mass might be held: "the office Si enim credimus", with the epistle 1 Thessalonians 4:13 and the gospel John 11:25. These are the epistle and gospel of the requiem on the day of burial in the Roman missal. After an evening burial the Mass was put off to the next day.
- No communion at it. Communicants were to commune at the common daily office "and not at this one; for else an abuse would easily arise from it, and in time it be taken again for a soul-Mass".
- No thirtieth days. "Much less tolerable are the thirtieth days and anniversaries, with the soul-offering Masses" (Sehling 3, p. 81).

A yearly day of the dead, for the living. The same order keeps one yearly service of the dead, on All Souls' Day and on two Ember Fridays. Brandenburg, Kirchen-ordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 81):

> Damit aber vermerkt, damit wir alles, das in der kirche besserung moge gewand werden, gerne erhalten wolten, lassen wir uns gefallen, das jerlich ein sonderlich amt und darbei ein predig von den verstorbenen und de mortalitate et resurrectione mortuorum geschehe in stiften und pfarren, die animarum, und am freitage im quartal reminiscere und trinitatis, und das sonderlich darneben das volk erinnert werde, vor den alten misbreuchen sich zu hüten [...] denn dieweil kein funus vorhanden und die erinnerung des tods und auferstehung darinnen furgetragen, so kan es vor kein begengnis der verstorbenen, sondern den lebendigen zu gute geachtet werden

But that it may be marked that we would gladly keep all that may be turned to the betterment of the church, we are content that yearly a special office, and with it a sermon of the departed, and of mortality and the resurrection of the dead, be held in the foundations and parishes on All Souls' Day, and on the Friday in the Ember weeks of Reminiscere and of Trinity; and that therewith the people be in especial warned to beware of the old abuses [...] for since there is no corpse present, and the remembrance of death and resurrection is set forth therein, it can be counted for no Begängnis of the departed, but for the good of the living

The service is again the office Si enim credimus, and here communicants may receive. No other order in the corpus keeps a service of All Souls' Day:

- Strasbourg 1542 (Moderate Reformed): some wished to mark All Saints and All Souls at the end of the next Sunday's sermon, "so that the true care for the dead be rightly taught, and the false and superstitious be wholly rooted out". Others wanted the feast deliberated further (Sehling 20/1, p. 326).
- Hohenlohe 1558 has the preachers explain the day's abuse at that season (Sehling 15, p. 125).
- Sayn 1582 strikes All Souls' Day with the saints' days (Sehling 19/1, p. 373).

The Reformed. Nassau-Dillenburg's order of 1582 (Reformed) keeps at funerals:

- short exhortations and consolations, "or lessons of a chapter of the Bible, as John 12, 1 Corinthians 15, 1 Thessalonians 4 and 5, Ezekiel 37, Job 19, Psalm 39";
- and it forbids "excessive commendations of the dead, with all superstition" (Sehling 10, p. 163).

Job 19 is the chapter of Credo quod Redemptor.

10.9.6 What took its place

Accompanying the dead. Brenz answered his own history of the vigil (§10.9.1) with three things: the procession to the grave, a mention in the next day's service, and comfort for the kin. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1527 (Sehling 17/1, p. 60):

> So dan die vigilien und meß, wie ytz gehalten, fur die todten unnutz, wie sol man sich dan gegen inen halten? Sol ir gar nit geacht werden? In keinen weg. Es geburt sich ye nit, das man sie hinwerff als ein schelmen, dan die abgestorben sein ye noch unser bruder und durch den tod nit auß unser geselschafft gefallen. Wir bleyben noch glider eins einigen Corpers, darumb sol die cristenlich versamlung fleyssig ermant werden, nit zu vigilien und selmessen wie bißhieher, sonder nach dem ersten gebrauch der kirchen fleyssig zu dem grab die abgestorbnen zubeleytten, das dan auch die > burgerlich nachparschaft erhaischt. Es sol auch in dem nachgenden tagampt, nach dem der abgestorben begraben, sein gedacht werden, sein todt verkundigt werden. Darby sol die fruntschaft durch das wort gottes getrost werden und die andern ermant, ires glaubens und hoffens, auch beherzigt bereyt zusein, dem beruff gottes, wan und wie er wol, zuvolgen.

Since then the vigils and Masses, as they are now held, are unprofitable for the dead, how shall one then bear oneself toward them? Shall no regard be had of them at all? In no wise. It is not seemly that one cast them away like carrion, for the departed are still our brethren, and are not fallen out of our fellowship through death. We remain still members of one only body. Therefore the Christian congregation shall be diligently exhorted, not to vigils and soul-Masses as hitherto, but, after the first use of the church, diligently to accompany the departed to the grave, which civil neighbourliness also requireth. He shall also be remembered in the service of the day following, after the departed is buried, and his death shall be announced. Therewith the kinsfolk shall be comforted through the word of God, and the others exhorted to be ready in their faith and hope, and of good courage, to follow the call of God, when and how he will.

The funeral sermon. Wittgenstein put the funeral sermon expressly "instead of the vigils", and paid for it with the old fees. Wittgenstein, Kirchenordnung, 1555 (Sehling 22, p. 87):

> Nachdem auch vile gefelle zu unchristlichen ceremonien und gebrauch seint gegeben und gesthifftet worden, so sollen die pfarher und kirchenthiener solch abgottisch wesen lenger zuhalten hiemit einst vor all entledigt, doch pflichtig unnd schuldig sein, anderst etwas, das zur ehr Gottes und zu erbauhong und underweisong der pfarkinder dinstlich ist, mit rath des superintendenten und je einen wie der ander dogegen zuthun, domit nit gesagt werden moge, das die kirchenthiener ir gefell umbsonst oder vergeblich einnemen und nichts darfur thuen. Sonderlich aber anstat der vigilien sollen die pastores leichpredigen thun, welche sie uß Spangenbergio und seinen predigen, die er und andere bei den leichen gethan und im druck usgangen seint, nemen und nachthuen mogen.

And forasmuch as many dues have been given and endowed for unchristian ceremonies and uses, the pastors and ministers of the church shall hereby be discharged once for all from keeping up such idolatrous doings any longer; yet shall they be bound and owe it to do in return something else that serveth to the honour of God and to the edifying and instruction of the parishioners, with the counsel of the superintendent, each one like the other, that it may not be said that the ministers of the church take their dues for nought or in vain and do nothing for them. But in especial, instead of the vigils, the pastors shall make funeral sermons, which they may take from Spangenberg and from his sermons, which he and others have made at burials and which have gone forth in print, and do after them.

The editors identify the book as Johann Spangenberg's fifteen funeral sermons of 1545 (Sehling 22, p. 87).

Hymns and a short sermon. Hohenlohe in 1553 set hymns and a sermon in the place of the soul-Masses, vigils, Begängnisse and anniversaries (Sehling 15, p. 80):

- the dead are not to be "carried out and buried like the unreasoning beast";
- they are escorted with Media vita and Mit fried und freud ich far dahin;
- Nun last uns den leib begraben is sung at the grave;
- the pastor makes, before or after the burial, "a short sermon and exhortation of the resurrection of Christians".

A word at the grave. The visitors at Neubrandenburg (1559) put a short exhortation "of man's toilsome life and of the joyful resurrection" in place of the vigil at the house (above). The funeral sermon and its growth are treated in Chapter 11, §11.4.6.

10.10 The catechism service

A new office. The catechism service (Katechismus, Kinderlehre, Kinderpredigt, examen catechismi) had no place in the medieval cursus. The Reformation made it, for the children, the servants and "the simple", and it became the one weekly service besides the Mass and Vespers that nearly every order prescribes. It took three forms:

- a service of its own, usually on Sunday at midday or early afternoon, with hymn, prayer, recitation of the text, a short exposition, examination of the young, prayer and blessing (§§10.10.2–10.10.3);
- a catechism joined to Vespers, where a boy recited the chief parts, or the catechism was preached in place of the Vespers sermon (§10.10.4);
- a recitation inside another service: the text of the catechism read before or after the morning sermon, or at the weekday offices (§10.10.5).

The Reformed orders built a fourth form on the same plan: the catechism divided into Sundays, the youth reciting a fixed portion, and the minister expounding it (§10.10.6). How often the catechism was taught, and what had to be known before first communion, are treated in Chapter 15, §15.11; the catechism sermon as a sermon in Chapter 11, §11.4.3.

10.10.1 Origins: Luther and Wittenberg

A weekday lesson and a Sunday sermon. Luther's Deutsche Messe of 1526 set the catechism on weekday mornings: "on Monday and Tuesday early there is a German lesson on the Ten Commandments, on the Creed and Our Father, on baptism and the sacrament, that these two days may keep up the catechism and strengthen it in its right understanding" (Sehling 1, pp. 13–14). By 1533 the Wittenberg town church gave it the first service of Sunday. "On Sunday early a priest or deacon shall preach out of the catechism, and when the catechism is ended, begin it again"; after the sermon "all the words of the catechism" were to be said to the people, with Christ's command concerning both sacraments. A fourth deacon rode out to the villages after the high Mass on holy days to preach the catechism to the peasants, with a German psalm before and after (Sehling 1, pp. 700–701).

10.10.2 When, and how long

The hour. Most orders set the catechism at midday or early afternoon on Sunday, after the morning service and dinner:

- at twelve, when the clock had struck (Neckarbischofsheim 1560), or at twelve after an hour of psalm-singing from eleven (Rostock, Conformitas, c. 1560);
- at one (Mecklenburg 1552; Sangerhausen 1555; Lippe 1571; Oldenburg 1573);
- at one or two, "as the occasion of the place may suffer" (Pfalz-Veldenz 1574);
- "straight at midday or at Vespers time" in the Württemberg villages (1553).

Some places put it first in the day instead: at Schwäbisch Hall (1543) it was held at six in summer and seven in winter, before the main service, and Pomerania (1569) allowed "early in the morning or at twelve at midday" (Sehling 4, p. 385). Weekday catechisms were set by the convenience of the work: on Tuesday afternoon at two in winter and Thursday at twelve in summer at Brandis (1574, Sehling 1, p. 534); on Monday at two or three for the public examination at Thorn (1575, Sehling 4, pp. 236, 238).

The length. The orders that set a length give half an hour for the exposition or the examination, and an hour at most for the whole:

- Hesse (1566, Moderate Reformed): the youth "is questioned and taught in the catechism about half an hour" every Sunday (Sehling 8, p. 252);
- the Palatinate (1601, Reformed): "some questions … expounded for half an hour" (Sehling 14, p. 558);
- Thorn (1575): "half a little hour" of catechism preaching between the hymn and the Magnificat at Sunday Vespers (Sehling 4, p. 238);
- Emden (Micron, 1565, Reformed): the children examined "when the minister hath preached half an hour" (Sehling 7/1, p. 606);
- Rostock (c. 1560): the midday sermon on the catechism "shall not last over an hour" (Sehling 5, p. 289);
- Hohenlohe (1596): the whole act, sermon read, examination, summary, hymn, prayer and blessing, "which shall in no wise last over an hour long" (Sehling 15, p. 663).

Veit Dietrich's Nürnberg Agendbüchlein (1545) joins a catechism sermon, read from the printed book, to the Litany on the one weekday when the people met, "so that this be ended in about half an hour at the longest, and the people come again to their work" (Sehling 11, p. 504).

The season. Nassau-Dillenburg (1575, Philippist) held the Sunday afternoon Kinderlehre only "from Whitsun until Michaelmas", with a weekday hour through the whole year in the towns (Sehling 10, p. 148). At Obermaßfeld (Henneberg, 1563) the pastor took the Passion history instead of the catechism in Lent, and gave the children questions on the Passion (Sehling 2, p. 343). Limpurg (1610) let the catechism sermon and the children's recitation fall on Easter, Whitsun and a Christmas falling on Sunday (Sehling 16, p. 616).

10.10.3 The order of the Lutheran catechism service

The common shape. The Lutheran orders vary in detail but agree on a shape:

1. a bell, often the small bell;
2. a hymn, usually one of Luther's catechism hymns (the Ten Commandments, Wir glauben, Vater unser im Himmelreich, Christ unser Herr zum Jordan kam);
3. the Our Father or a prayer for the understanding of the word;

4. the text of the chief parts, said aloud by the pastor or recited by boys;
5. the exposition of one part, taken in course, "and when it is ended, begin again";
6. the examination of the children, by question and answer;
7. a prayer or collect, often a prayer for the children;
8. a hymn and the blessing.

Mecklenburg, 1552: the North German pattern. The Mecklenburg order put the children's instruction before the sermon and joined both to Vespers canticles. Its paragraph was copied word for word by Oldenburg (1573), and closely by Lüneburg (1564) and Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel (1569) (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1095, n. 6). Mecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 200):

> Nach mittag um eins sollen die schuler anfahen einen psalm oder zween zu singen. Oder singen die zehen gebot, Vater unser im himelreich, Christ, unser herr, zum Jordan kam, und der gleichen. Darnach unterweise der prediger die kinder im catechismo. Also, das er sie nacheinander frage, und lasse im die zehen gebot auswendig sagen, item, die auslegung, welche die kinder von wort zu wort aus dem kleinen catechismo D. Martini Lutheri sollen lernen und uffsagen. Desgleichen neme er ein ander mal ein ander stück des catechismi für sich, bis zu end. Und alsdenn sol man widerum von fornen anfahen. Darnach singe man das magnificat. Darnach gehet der prediger uff die canzel, und spricht aus mit lauter stimme die zehen gebot, das symbolum, das vater unser, die wort von der tauf und die wort des abendmals. Denn nimt er ein stück des catechismi für sich, mit vleis dem volk furzutragen und zu erkleren. Zu end der predigt vermanet er das volk zum gebet. Nach der predigt singet man: Herr, nu lest du deinen diener im friede faren, darauf wird eina collect gelesen und mit dem benedicamus domino beschlossen.

In the afternoon at one the scholars shall begin to sing a psalm or two; or they sing the Ten Commandments, "Our Father, Who from Heaven Above", "To Jordan Came the Christ, Our Lord", and the like. Thereafter let the preacher instruct the children in the catechism; that is, that he question them one after another, and let them say the Ten Commandments to him by heart, item the exposition, which the children shall learn and say off word for word out of the Small Catechism of Dr Martin Luther. Likewise let him another time take another part of the catechism in hand, unto the end; and then shall one begin again from the front. Thereafter let the Magnificat be sung. Thereafter the preacher goeth up into the pulpit and speaketh out with a loud voice the Ten Commandments, the Creed, the Our Father, the words of baptism and the words of the Supper. Then he taketh a part of the catechism in hand, to set it forth to the people with diligence and to explain it. At the end of the sermon he exhorteth the people to prayer. After the sermon is sung Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace; thereupon a collect is read, and it is concluded with the Benedicamus Domino.

Neckarbischofsheim, 1560: a full ordo. A small Kraichgau order sets the midday catechism out step by step. Neckarbischofsheim, Kirchenordnung, 1560 (Sehling 16, p. 672):

> Uff den Mittage, nach dem essen, pflegt man den Catechismum und Kinderlere zu halten, da man dis singt: Herre gott, dein trew mit gnaden laist, oder sonsten, was darzu dienstlich ist. Es wirt aber die ordnung also gehalten. Erstlich, wan es 12 ur geschlagen, leut man mit dem kleinen glöcklin ein gut, lang zaichen. Nach solchem fahet man an zu singen das vatter unser oder sonsten ein gesang. Wan soliches bei dem End ist, so geht der pfarrherr uf die Cantzel, explicirt den Catechismum, nimet ein hauptstuckh nach dem andern. So ers vollendt, fahet ers widerumb an. Nach solichem, so die predig vollendt, verlist er alle 6 stuckh Christlicher ler uß dem Catechismo Lutheri. So ers zum End bracht, recitiren die Knaben den Catechismum, doch ein stuckh umbs ander, alle Suntag eins. Nachmalen verlist der pfarrherr das folgend hauptstuckh, das nach dem volgt, so die Knaben gerecitirt haben. Darnach so fragt [er] etliche under dem jungen volckhe, nach solchem beschleust ers mit eim gebet, wie im Catechismo Luteri verzaichnet stet. Hierauf, nach dem das gebet uß, sagt der pfarrherr: Lassent uns gott, dem herren, danckhen mit dem lobgesang. Hierauf singt der Schul[meister], oder wer an sein stat da ist, das leste gesetz in dem gesang: Herr, gott, din trew mit gnaden laist. Darnach tritt der pfarrherr für den altar und gibt den segen

At midday, after dinner, the catechism and children's teaching is wont to be held, whereat this is sung: Herre Gott, dein Treu mit Gnaden leist, or else what serveth thereto. But the order is held thus. First, when it hath struck twelve, a good long sign is rung with the small bell. After that they begin to sing the Our Father, or else a hymn. When that is at an end, the pastor goeth up into the pulpit and explaineth the catechism, taking one chief part after another; when he hath finished it, he beginneth it again. After this, when the sermon is finished, he readeth all six parts of Christian doctrine out of Luther's catechism. When he hath brought it to the end, the boys recite the catechism, yet one part after another, one every Sunday. Afterwards the pastor readeth the next chief part, that followeth after that which the boys have recited. Thereafter he questioneth some among the young folk; after that he concludeth it with a prayer, as it standeth set down in Luther's catechism. Hereupon, when the prayer is ended, the pastor saith: Let us thank God the Lord with the song of praise. Hereupon the schoolmaster, or whoso is in his stead, singeth the last stanza of the hymn Herr Gott, dein Treu mit Gnaden leist. Thereafter the pastor stepeth before the altar and giveth the blessing.

Hesse, 1566: two kinds of hearer. The Hessian order (Moderate Reformed) gives the fullest rationale, and divides the exposition between "the children and simple" and those who have grasped the text. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, pp. 251–252):

> Wenn nun die gemeine zum catechismo kommen, werden diese ding nacheinander verrichtet: Erstlich wird ein psalm gesungen, demnach volgt der gesang von zehen gebotten, vom glauben, vom gebet des Herrn etc. […] 2. Zum andern: Nach dem gesang steigt der diener des worts uf den predigstul und erzelt nacheinander laut und verstendlich die stück der kinderlehr, wie die in dem catechismo Lutheri zusamengetragen. […] Wenn nun die predig des catechismi vollendet und die, so den catechismum zu hören verordnet, sich gesetzt haben, probirt der lehrer etliche kinder hin und wider mit fragen und antworten, erfordert von einem dieses stück, vom andern ein anders zu erzelen und zu erkleren. Und so er bei den einfeltigen gar umb gefragt, gehet er fortan zu denen, so im catechismo besser underricht, und erfordert von ihnen ein volkömliche auslegung und bericht. Uf diese weise wird allen sontag und auch die andern tage, so darzu bestimpt, in der wochen die jugend etwa ein halb stund gefragt und underricht im catechismo […] 5. Wird nach dem examen des catechismi ein psalm gesungen […] Endlich beschleußt diese action der diener des worts mit dem segen Num. 6, wie breuchlich, und leßt die versamlung gehen.

When now the congregation is come to the catechism, these things are done one after another. First a psalm is sung; next followeth the hymn of the Ten Commandments, of the Creed, of the Lord's Prayer, etc. […] Secondly: after the hymn the minister of the word goeth up into the pulpit and rehearseth one after another, aloud and understandably, the parts of the children's doctrine, as they are gathered together in Luther's catechism. […] When now the sermon of the catechism is ended, and those that are appointed to hear the catechism have sat down, the teacher trieth certain children here and there with questions and answers, requiring of one this part, of another another, to rehearse and to explain. And when he hath gone round the simple, he goeth on to those that are better instructed in the catechism, and requireth of them a full exposition and account. In this wise every Sunday, and also on the other days appointed thereto in the week, the youth is questioned and taught in the catechism about half an hour […] Fifthly, after the examination of the catechism a psalm is sung […] Finally the minister of the word concludeth this action with the blessing of Numbers 6, as is customary, and letteth the assembly go.

Between the recitation and the examination came the sermon, divided into two parts: first "with short and understandable words" for the children and simple, then "with proofs of the sayings of holy Scripture" for those who had the text already (Sehling 8, pp. 251–252). Where the people met only once on Sunday afternoon, Hesse (Moderate Reformed) folded the catechism into the afternoon service: psalm, epistle, its exposition, the catechism read, one part expounded, the children questioned, a psalm and the blessing (Sehling 8, p. 253).

Württemberg, 1553: exposition, hearing, prayer. The Württemberg order is briefer. It asks each pastor or deacon to set "a special time" on Sunday for the catechism, chiefly for the young. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 16, p. 243):

> solle der Pfarrer oder sein Diaconus erstlich ein Puncten oder Artickel des volgenden Catechismi nach dem andern kurtzlich und verstentlich expliciern und außlegen, das die jungen nicht allein der wörter gewonen, sonder auch ein gutten, Christlichen verstand derselben überkommen. Hernach soll er etlich der jungen offentlich verhören, das dardurch nicht allein derselben jungen geschicklicheit erfaren werde, sonder auch die andern den Catechismum von inen lernen mögen, Und sollen die kirchendiener mit der jugendt so freundtlich und holdselig handeln, das sie nicht von dem Catechismo abgeschreckt, sonder darzu lustig werden the pastor or his deacon shall first explain and expound one point or article of the following catechism after another, briefly and understandably, that the young may not only grow used to the words, but also come by a good, Christian understanding of the same. After that he shall hear certain of the young openly, that thereby not only the aptness of the same young ones be learned, but also the others may learn the catechism from them. And the ministers of the church shall deal with the youth so friendly and graciously that they be not frighted away from the catechism, but made glad thereto.

The service closed with a set prayer, "after the explanation or exposition of the catechism and the children have been heard", for the children whom God "hast given to thy church and born again through holy baptism", that he would "strengthen this thy work which thou hast begun in them" (Sehling 16, p. 246).

The village catechism: Lippe, 1571. In the villages, where there was no afternoon sermon, the catechism service was the pastor's and the sexton's alone. Lippe, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 21, p. 397):

> Weil auff den Dörffern keine Nachmittags Predigt aus vielen ursachen gehalten werden kan, Sollen dennoch die Pfarrherrn neben dem Küster alle einfeltige, unverstendige Bawrsleuthe, die sein Jung oder Alt, Knaben oder Meidlein, ungefehrlich umb Ein uhr durch einen Glockengeleut zusammen fordern und, wenn dieselben versamblet [...] sol ein teutscher Psalm aus den Geistlichen Gesengen, darin ein jeder stück des Catechismi kurtz und rundt verfasset ist, genommen und langsam mit den Kindern gesungen werden. Darauff soll der Pastor die Fünff Heubtstücke der Christlichen Religion, so man nennet den Catechismum, mit klaren, verstendtlichen Worten verlesen und darnach gantz kurtz und einfeltig zu jeder zeit ein Stücke durch Frage und Antwort erkleren

Since in the villages no afternoon sermon can be held, for many causes, the pastors shall nevertheless, together with the sexton, call together by a ringing of the bell, about one o'clock, all simple, unlearned country folk, be they young or old, boys or maidens; and when the same are assembled [...] a German psalm shall be taken out of the spiritual songs, in which each part of the catechism is briefly and roundly composed, and sung slowly with the children. Thereupon the pastor shall read the five chief parts of the Christian religion, which are called the catechism, with clear, understandable words, and thereafter explain one part at each time, quite briefly and simply, by question and answer.

Oldenburg (1573) took over the Lippe text (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1113), and Pfalz-Veldenz (1574) has the same order: "short hymn and prayer", the examination with the recitation of the parts, a German psalm, then the sermon with "question and answer" and the closing prayer, hymn and blessing (Sehling 18, p. 523).

Nördlingen, 1544: recitation by two boys. In the Swabian towns the recitation was given to the schoolboys. Nördlingen, Ordnung der ceremonien in der pfarkirchen zu Sant Georgen, 1544 (Sehling 12, p. 319):

> Zu mittage, wenn man den catechismum prediget, so D. Martinus für die ainfeltigen geschriben.
> 1. Zum ersten singet man der stuck aines des catechismi, davon man prediget, wie sie D. Luther gemacht hat. 2. Darnach recitirn zween knaben auswendig mit heller stim die hauptartikel des catechismi allain nach dem text. Alsdann das stück allain mit der auslegung davon die predig gehet. 3. Darauf singet das volk: Nun bitten wir, zwai gesetz oder alle vier, und volget alsbald die predigt. 4. Nach der predig ain kurzen psalm nach der zeit, wie oben zum hohen ampt. 5. Zuletzt beschleust der diacon ainer mit gewohnlichem versikel und collecten und segen.

At midday, when the catechism is preached which Dr Martin wrote for the simple. 1. First is sung that one of the parts of the catechism whereof the sermon is, as Dr Luther made them. 2. Thereafter two boys recite by heart with clear voice the chief articles of the catechism, after the text only; then that part alone with the exposition, whereof the sermon goeth. 3. Thereupon the people sing "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray", two stanzas or all four, and the sermon followeth straightway. 4. After the sermon a short psalm according to the season, as above at the high office. 5. Last of all one of the deacons concludeth with the customary versicle and collect and the blessing.

Ysenburg-Birstein, 1588. A Wetterau order gives the same shape with the hymn chosen to fit the part: "when one preacheth the Ten Commandments, then sing the Ten Commandments, and so forth". The pastor recited the five chief parts from the pulpit, expounded one, closed the sermon with prayer, "and then hold the examination with the youth", ending with hymn, prayer "for the preservation of God's word" and blessing (Sehling 10, p. 627).

10.10.4 The catechism in Vespers

The boy's recitation. In Saxony and Thuringia the catechism was often built into Sunday Vespers. A boy recited the chief parts between the lesson and the hymn before the sermon, and the Vespers sermon itself might be on the catechism. Naumburg, Kirchen-Ordnung für die St. Wenzelskirche, 1537 (Sehling 2, p. 72):

> Zur vesper. 1. Erstlich singet man das te deum laudamus deuzsch oder sonst einen hymnum oder psalm nach der zeit. 2. Darnach lesen zweene knaben das capitel aus den episteln Pauli, einer deuzsch der ander lateinisch. 3. Alsdan recitirt ein knab auswendig die fünf heubtstück des catechismi. 4. Darauf singet man Nun bitten wir den heiligen geist, zwei geseze. 5. Darauf volget die predigt, ein jar umbs ander, das eine jar der kleine catechismus Lutheri, das ander die epistolae dominicales. 6. Das magnificat mit seiner antiphon, Christus unser heiland, oder sonst ein kurz gsang nach der zeit [...] 7. Darnach concludirt man mit der collecten und benedicamus.

At Vespers. 1. First is sung the Te Deum laudamus in German, or else a hymn or psalm according to the season. 2. Thereafter two boys read the chapter out of the epistles of Paul, one in German, the other in Latin. 3. Then a boy reciteth by heart the five chief parts of the catechism. 4. Thereupon is sung "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray", two stanzas. 5. Thereupon followeth the sermon: one year about the other, the one year Luther's Small Catechism, the other the Sunday epistles. 6. The Magnificat with its antiphon, Christus unser Heiland, or else a short hymn according to the season [...] 7. Thereafter it is concluded with the collect and Benedicamus.

Vespers with an examination. Sangerhausen in 1555 added the examination at the altar, after the sermon. Sangerhausen, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1555 (Sehling 1, p. 658):

> Nachmittags zur vesper umb 1 uhr wirt der catechismus geprediget mit gesengen wie folget: Erstlich singet man mit den knaben einen lateinischen psalmum sampt eine antiphona ex evangelio dominicali. 2. Ein lateinisch responsorium oder hymnum, de tempore. 3. Darauf ein deutschen gesang, das das volk helfen kan. 4. Ein deutsche lection aus dem alten oder neuen testament, lieset ein knabe. 5. Darauf singet man mit dem volk ein deutsch lied gemeiniglich von dem stück des catechismi davon man prediget; oder das deutsche magnificat. 6. Folget die predigt des catechismi nach Lutheri ordnung [...] 7. Nach der predigt singet man ein kirchengesang, als erhalt uns herr bei deinem wort, oder gott der vater wohn uns bei. 8. Indes samlet sich das junge volk zum altar und fraget sie der pfarrherr nach der reihe aus dem catechismo, die kurze auslegung Lutheri, nimpt jedesmal 2 gebot, und so fort, bis er in hinausbringet. 9. Wird beschlossen mit dem gesang: verlei uns fried gnediglich, sampt der dazu gehörigen collecta.

In the afternoon at Vespers, at one o'clock, the catechism is preached with hymns as followeth. First a Latin psalm is sung with the boys, together with an antiphon out of the Sunday gospel. 2. A Latin responsory or hymn de tempore. 3. Thereupon a German hymn, that the people may help. 4. A German lesson out of the Old or New Testament, which a boy readeth. 5. Thereupon a German song is sung with the people, commonly of the part of the catechism whereof the sermon is; or the German Magnificat. 6. The sermon of the catechism followeth, after Luther's order [...] 7. After the sermon a church hymn is sung, as "Lord, Keep Us Steadfast in Your Word", or "Triune God, Be Thou Our Stay". 8. Meanwhile the young folk gather at the altar, and the pastor questioneth them in turn out of the catechism, Luther's short exposition, taking two commandments each time, and so forth, until he bring it to the end. 9. It is concluded with the hymn "Grant Peace, We Pray, in Mercy, Lord", together with the collect belonging thereto.

Other Vespers forms.

- Regensburg 1553: at Sunday Vespers the hymn was left out "for the sake of the long catechism", and a piece of the Nürnberg catechism was read from the pulpit, the choir closing with a German psalm suited to it (Sehling 13, p. 421).
- Sulzfeld 1566: German psalm and hymn; two boys recite a piece of the catechism "with the exposition"; the German Te Deum; then the pastor recites "word for word" the chief parts, the morning and evening blessing and the graces, questions the young, and expounds the next part; German Magnificat, collect, Benedicamus (Sehling 2, p. 353).
- Gottleuba 1567: after the lesson "two boys recite a piece of the holy catechism, and always add the questions on the holy sacrament", before the Magnificat; on ordinary Sundays the Vespers sermon was on the catechism (Sehling 1, p. 568).
- Penig 1575: after the Vespers Magnificat the deacon reads the "table of the six chief parts" or some questions, then expounds one part, so that the catechism is finished each year by Advent; after the sermon the school children, boys and girls on alternate Sundays, say a part with Luther's exposition (Sehling 1, p. 634).
- Albertine Saxony 1580: "when Vespers is ended, let a piece of the catechism be taken in hand and expounded to the people in the simplest wise" (Sehling 1, p. 369).
- Solms-Laubach 1603: at Saturday and feast-eve Vespers "a boy recites a chief part of the catechism", before the Magnificat (Sehling 9, p. 357).

Thorn, 1575: the catechism through the week. The Prussian city of Thorn put the catechism into every daily office. At German Matins on weekdays "a boy readeth the capita catechismi plainly, and straight thereafter one caput catechismi with the exposition" (Sehling 4, p. 238), and the same at weekday Vespers (p. 239), so that "the capita catechismi with Luther's exposition shall be read through and repeated weekly" (p. 239). On Sunday and Monday the catechism had services of its own. Thorn, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 4, p. 238):

> Am sonntage wird in der altstadt zu S. Johann wie auch in der neustädtischen pfarrkirchen lateinische vesper gesungen, zwischen dem hymnus und magnificat ein halb stündlein vom catechismo gepredigt und die vesper mit einer collect > beschlossen; am montage wird im kloster die deutsche vesper eingestellt und dagegen das examen des catechismi hora 2 zu S. Johann gehalten

On Sunday in the Old Town at St John's, as also in the New Town parish church, Latin Vespers is sung; between the hymn and the Magnificat half a little hour is preached on the catechism, and Vespers concluded with a collect. On Monday the German Vespers in the cloister is left off, and instead the examination of the catechism is held at two o'clock at St John's.

The same order put the Sunday catechism sermon into both German and Polish, "about half a little hour", and the Monday examination at St John's ran through the catechism "in six weeks", one part each Monday, "and begun again" (Sehling 4, p. 236).

10.10.5 The catechism in the morning service

The text before the gospel or after the sermon. Many orders had the bare text of the catechism said in the morning service, so that the whole congregation heard it every Sunday:

- Strasbourg 1548 (Moderate Reformed; an agreement of the clergy on the Interim): after the morning sermon, which was not to run "beyond a third of an hour" at the cathedral and half an hour elsewhere, "the recitation of the six loci of the catechism ought to follow the exposition of the gospel"; at the cathedral the first three one Sunday, the other three the next (Sehling 20/1, p. 355).
- Albertine Saxony 1580: the visitors asked whether the pastor "speak the catechism to the people on Sundays and holy days before the gospel is read" (Sehling 1, p. 393).
- Pomerania 1569: in the villages the sexton is to read a piece of the catechism "after the epistle", and the pastor to preach the catechism in the afternoon (Sehling 4, p. 384).
- Nördlingen 1579: on Sundays and holy days, after the epistle and its hymn, "a piece of Luther's catechism is read in order, and when it is ended, it shall be begun again", before the German Creed (Sehling 12, p. 375).
- The Palatinate 1563 (Reformed): the minister read a portion of the catechism before every Sunday and feast-day sermon, "so that it be read through in nine Sundays" (Sehling 14, p. 342).

An early catechism service: Schwäbisch Hall, 1543. Brenz's Hall had the catechism as the first service on Sunday, before the main service, on alternate Sundays examined and preached. On the examination Sundays it borrowed the opening of the Mass. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, pp. 162–163):

> Am Sontag umorgens frü, imm Sommer umb sechs ur und imm Winter umb sieben ur, sol der Catechismus […] inn der Pfarkirchen zu Sanct Michel mit nachfolgender Ordnung gehalten werden, nemlich das die Fragstück auff den ein Sontag von den kindern verhöret und auff den andern Sontag ordenlich nacheinander gepredigt und außgelegt sollen werden. Und so die Fragstück von denn kindern verhöret werden, sol man erstlich das Kyrie eleison sampt dem Teutschen Glori sey Gott in der höhe singen, etc. Darauff sol der Catechista nach geschehenem vorgehendem Gebeet den text deß Evangelions, so rauff den selben Sontag gfallen ist, recitirn und daaus ein Locum communem fuor die Jugent leeren. Hernach sollen die kinder ordenlich, ye par und par, auffgestelt, ye eins das ander die Fragstück im […] offentlich zufragen […] Darauff sollen die Zehen Gebot Teutsch oder ein ander geistlich danck- oder lob gsang nach gelegenheit der zeit gesungen und hernach ein Gebeet für die kinder gesprochen werden

On Sunday early in the morning, in summer at six o'clock and in winter at seven o'clock, the catechism […] shall be held in the parish church of St Michael with the following order: namely, that the questions be heard from the children on the one Sunday, and on the other Sunday be preached and expounded in order one after another. And when the questions are heard from the children, the Kyrie eleison shall first be sung, together with the German Glory be to God on high, etc. Thereupon the catechist, after the prayer going before, shall recite the text of the gospel that falleth on the same Sunday, and teach out of it a common place for the youth. After that the children shall be set up in order, pair by pair, each to ask the other the questions in the [catechism] openly […] Thereupon shall be sung the Ten Commandments in German, or another spiritual hymn of thanks or praise according to the season, and after that a prayer for the children shall be said.

The prayer for the children recalls the angels set over children and Christ's "Suffer the children to come unto me", and the blessing follows. On the preaching Sundays the schoolboys sang the Latin introit, Kyrie and Gloria in excelsis, and the catechist expounded the gospel briefly and then "a question in the catechism, … until he have preached out the whole catechism" (Sehling 17/1, p. 163).

A printed catechism sermon. The Brandenburg-Nürnberg order of 1533 printed a set of Kinderpredigten for pastors to read, each beginning with a "common beginning to all sermons", a greeting and the bidding: "to speak and to learn something profitable of the word of God, desire grace and say an Our Father!" (Sehling 11, p. 206). Dietrich's Agendbüchlein and the Hohenlohe order of 1596 have the catechism sermon "read" from the printed book, not preached (Sehling 11, p. 504; 15, p. 663).

10.10.6 The Reformed catechism service

Divided by Sundays. The Reformed Heidelberg Catechism of 1563 was printed in Sunday divisions so that it could be recited and expounded in a year. Its order sets the afternoon service. Palatinate, Kirchenordnung, 1563 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 342):

> Ferners soll alle sontagnachmittag zu der stund, die einem jeden ort gelegen ist, catechismuspredigt also gehalten werden, daß der kirchendiener fürs erst nach dem gesang das vaterunser bete und Gott umb rechten verstand seins worts anrufe, darnach die zehen gebot verstendtlich dem volck fürlese. Darauf soll er die angehenden, welche die fragen, so gepredigt werden, noch nit lernen können, verhören und ordenlich erstlich ein zeit lang auf die text, darnach auch allgemach auf die fragstück anleiten. Nach disem lasse er etliche under der jugend ein gewisse anzal fragen im catechismo (wie wir dann denselben umb dieser ursach willen in Sontage theilen haben lassen), so in vorgehenden und sonderlich in der nechsten predigt erkläret worden und sie zuvor in der schul oder daheim gelernet, aufsagen. Und wann dise also in beysein der gemein von etlichen aufgesagt worden, soll der kirchendiener etliche folgende fragen einfeltig und kürtzlich erklären und außlegen, also das er den catechismum zum wenigsten einmal alle jar außpredige.

Further, every Sunday afternoon, at the hour that is convenient for each place, the catechism sermon shall be held thus: that the minister of the church first, after the hymn, pray the Our Father and call upon God for the right understanding of his word, and thereafter read the Ten Commandments understandably to the people. Thereupon he shall hear the beginners, who cannot yet learn the questions that are preached, and lead them in order, first for a time to the texts, and thereafter by little and little to the questions also. After this let him have certain among the youth say off a set number of questions in the catechism (as we have for this cause had the same divided into Sundays), which have been explained in the foregoing and especially in the last sermon, and which they have learned beforehand in the school or at home. And when these have thus been said off by some in the presence of the congregation, the minister shall explain and expound certain following questions simply and briefly, so that he preach out the catechism at the least once every year.

The Palatine order of 1601 (Reformed) kept this plan but timed it: in the towns, a first afternoon service with prayer, the summary and the texts of the five chief parts, "some questions … expounded for half an hour", the examination and blessing; and a second towards evening for "the old and grown", more fully. In the villages the youth were examined "when the second bell hath been rung", and the third bell then called the whole congregation to the half-hour sermon (Sehling 14, p. 558).

Classes and the doors shut: Hanau, 1609. The Hanau order of catechisation (Reformed) divided the young into five classes, boys from six to sixteen and girls under fourteen: the Our Father, the Creed, the Ten Commandments, all five chief parts, and the five parts with the added questions and the graces at table and the morning and evening prayers (Sehling 10, p. 487). In the villages the pastor began "with the customary prayer and hymn", read the five chief parts and the questions from the pulpit, and gave a short exposition. Then "pastor, schoolmaster and bell-ringer" heard the classes. After a closing prayer the congregation and children went home, but those summoned stayed behind, men and women, sons and daughters each in their place, "and the church doors also shut", and the pastor read the questions to them "slowly, clearly and distinctly", they repeating "quietly", until they knew them (Sehling 10, p. 491).

Emden: the great catechism and the examination of the little ones. In Micron's order (Reformed) the Sunday catechism sermon on the great catechism was interrupted for the examination of the young children twice a year. Emden, Micron's Ordinancien, German edition, 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 606):

> Und diß examen geschicht allezeit des Sontags offentlich zur zeit der erklärung des grossen catechismi, wann der diener ein halbe stund gepredigt hat. Wenn alle diese fragen und antwort geschehen sind und der diener ein vermanung zu den eltern derselbigen getan hat, daß sie also fortfaren, ihre kinder in der forcht des Herren aufzuziehen, so vermanet der diener die ganze gemeine zur danksagung und betet also

And this examination is held always on the Sunday, openly, at the time of the explanation of the great catechism, when the minister hath preached half an hour. When all these questions and answers are done, and the minister hath made an exhortation to the parents of the same, that they so continue to bring up their children in the fear of the Lord, then the minister exhorteth the whole congregation to thanksgiving, and prayeth thus.

The thanksgiving begins "O gracious Father, who out of the mouth of young children and sucklings preparest thy praise", and asks that God "would so strengthen and govern these our children with thy Holy Spirit" that they walk "in the ways of truth" (Sehling 7/1, p. 606).

10.11.1 The old chant kept

"Out of the former choir books." The chapters kept their medieval chant books. Brandenburg 1540 orders the office sung "according to each bishopric's Breviary, out of the former choir books" (§10.4.2). Verden cathedral in 1606 still sings Vespers "as the old order bringeth with it" (Sehling 7/1, p. 153). The convents kept their Breviaries, corrected (Spandau 1541; Lüneburg 1555, §10.4.4). The Keppel order of 1570 refers its nuns to "their Breviary" for the feasts.

The old tones. The orders also keep the old reciting tones:

- Pfalz-Neuburg 1543: even when the nuns psalm in German, they are to do it "in the customary tone, as they are wont in Latin" (§10.8.2).
- Bugenhagen: the lessons are sung "with such a tone as one is wont to read lessons at Matins", with the cadence of the old prophecy tone, "sol sol sol la sol fa fa" (Sehling 6/1, p. 400; Sehling 4, p. 349).
- Wittenberg 1533: the boys end each lesson "as one was wont to read or sing the prophecies, sol sol mi fa sol sol" (Sehling 1, p. 703; see Chapter 4, §4.5.1).
- Prussia 1568: the Latin lesson is read "in usitato tono", the German one "without tone" (§10.6.1).

10.11.2 The new chant books: Spangenberg and Lossius

The Lutheran antiphoners. From the 1540s the old office chant reached Lutheran schools and churches in two printed Lutheran collections:

- Johann Spangenberg's Cantiones ecclesiasticae latinae … Kirchengesenge Deudsch (Magdeburg 1545);
- Lucas Lossius's Psalmodia, hoc est, cantica sacra veteris ecclesiae selecta (Nürnberg 1553, with a preface by Melanchthon; second edition Wittenberg 1561).

Both preserved the medieval antiphons, responsories, hymns and psalm tones, purged of what was de sanctis. Several orders require them by name. Mecklenburg, Conformitas ceremoniarum, c. 1560 (Sehling 5, p. 288):

> Es wird für gut angesehen und notig eracht, das man in allen kirchen halten sol Lucae Lossii psalmodia und sol sich das chor darnach richten.

It is deemed good and held necessary that Lucas Lossius's Psalmodia be kept in all churches, and that the choir order itself thereafter.

Oldenburg 1573 wants "a right, pure cantional" in every church and school: "that of the old Master Johann Spangenberg or of Lucas Lossius, together with the German hymnbook of Dr Martin Luther". The organist alternates with the choir in the responsory, hymn and Magnificat. Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1085):

> Wo orgeln sind, sol nach den psalmen der organist ein moteten spielen, darauf die lectio gelesen wird, nach welcher der organist das responsorium oder hymnum sol anfahen fortzuschlahen, wie sich denn alwegen dergegen der schulmeister und organist miteinander vergleichen sollen, und alsdenn in dem Magnificat ein vers umb den andern schlagen und singen. Zu der behülf ist vonnöten, das in allen kirchen und schulen ein rechtes, reines cantional stetigs zur hand sey, als nemlich des alten herrn Johan. Spangebergii oder Lucae Lossii sampt dem deudschen gesangbuch D. Martini Lutheri.

Where there are organs, the organist shall play a motet after the psalms, whereupon the lesson is read; after which the organist shall begin to play the responsory or hymn, as the schoolmaster and organist shall always agree with one another thereon; and then in the Magnificat play and sing one verse after the other. To this end it is needful that in all churches and schools a right, pure cantional be always at hand, namely that of the old Master Johann Spangenberg or of Lucas Lossius, together with the German hymnbook of Dr Martin Luther.

Lohr, 1588. First Vespers of Sundays and feasts are sung in Latin, "according to the order of Lossius's Psalmodia, as they are noted for every occasion". Rieneck, Vesperordnung zu Lohr, 1588 (Sehling 11, p. 699):

> (damit die jugent im psalliren und choralgesang, wie in allen kirchen gebreuchlich, geüebet werde) mit lateinischen psalmen, responsoriis, hymnis, Magnificat, collectis, versiculis, Benedicamus und anderm nach ordnung der psalmodiae L. Lossii, wie dieselben nach erheischung jederzeit notiert und bisher in brauch und uebung gewesen, gesungen und gehalten werden

(that the youth be exercised in psalmody and plainchant, as is customary in all churches) [it shall] be sung and kept with Latin psalms, responsories, hymns, Magnificat, collects, versicles, Benedicamus and the rest, according to the order of L. Lossius's Psalmodia, as the same are noted for every occasion and have hitherto been in use and practice

Other orders cite Lossius too:

- Hof 1592 cites antiphons "in Lossius's Psalmodia" and "in the great thin antiphoner" (Sehling 11, p. 422).
- Lüneburg 1575 refers to "Lossius's book" for the festal Compline (Sehling 6/1, p. 658).
- Buxtehude 1565 takes its noted pieces from Lossius's second edition (Sehling 7/1, p. 67, introduction).

10.11.3 German psalm tones

Keppel, 1570. The German office at Keppel is sung from the printed German psalm-books with their notes. The preacher is to teach the nuns the melodies. Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 133):

> Es sollenn auch die zwen chore einen verß umb den andern singen unnd die tonos verendern, wie dan dieselbige inn […] den teutschen psalmen buchern, so zu Leypzig außgangen, mit iren noten unnd melodien beschrieben seindt, hierinnen soll sie der prediger underweisen, das sie die melodien und noten konnen lernen.

The two choirs also shall sing one verse after the other, and change the tones, as the same are written down with their notes and melodies in […] the German psalm-books that have come out at Leipzig; herein shall the preacher instruct them, that they may learn the melodies and notes.

Sehling's editor identifies the book as probably Luther's hymnbook printed by Valentin Babst at Leipzig in 1545 (Sehling 10, p. 133, n. 13). Here the old psalm tones carry the German psalter.

German canticles. Luther's own German versions of the office canticles came into use beside the Latin:

- the German Te Deum ("Herr Gott, dich loben wir"), sung at Wittenberg 1533 in alternation between the choir and the people (Sehling 1, p. 705);
- the German Magnificat, sung at Hof 1592 "in the sixth tone" (below).

10.11.4 Figural music and the organ

Polyphony at the office.

- Wittenberg 1533: "when the cantors sing in figurativis" at Vespers, they sing everything with the Magnificat before the sermon, and on Sundays "after the Benedicamus let the boys sing the Nunc dimittis in figurativis or in counterpoint" (Sehling 1, pp. 703, 705).
- Württemberg cloister schools, 1582 edition: the singing is to be "directed to counterpoint, whereby it is so much the lovelier and more understandable" (Sehling 16, p. 366, apparatus).
- Hof 1592: Vespers may be sung figuraliter. Its Saturday Vespers has the German Magnificat in the sixth tone, with boys and girls in alternation and the organ between. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 429):

> Magnificat germanicum sexti toni per binos choros distinctis scholasticis canitur, videlicet unus versus a pueris, alter a puellis, praemissa semper melodia ab organicine et tertio quoque versu omisso. Si organorum usus non adhibetur, a dictis choris integrum Magnificat completur. […] Si figuraliter vespertinus actus peragitur, I. psalmus, II. antiphonon, III. responsorium, IIII. unus atque alter versus ex hymno, V. muteta ante concionem, VI. Magnificat certi toni cantore regente canitur.

The German Magnificat of the sixth tone is sung by two choirs, the scholars being divided, namely one verse by the boys, the other by the girls, the melody being always first played by the organist, and every third verse being omitted. If the organ is not used, the whole Magnificat is completed by the said choirs. […] If the Vesper service is performed figurally, [then] I. the psalm, II. the antiphon, III. the responsory, IIII. one or another verse of the hymn, V. a motet before the sermon, [and] VI. the Magnificat in a set tone are sung under the direction of the cantor.

Hof's order notes that the plainchant pieces are written out for every Sunday and feast so that they can be used "when, perhaps because of public mourning, the songs of figural music have no place" (Sehling 11, p. 450).

The organ. The organ alternated with the choir in the office, as in the Mass:

- Prussia 1568: the organist "playeth one verse after the other" in the Magnificat, and a piece after the Nunc dimittis (Sehling 4, p. 75).
- Pomerania 1569: "where there are organs, the organist shall be at the organ after the psalmody, and play to the responsory, hymn and Magnificat" (Sehling 4, p. 435).
- Oldenburg 1573 (above) and Hoya 1581: the organist "plays the hymn" (§10.7.4).
- Wittenberg castle, 1525: the organ only "on Sunday to the Te Deum laudamus, and whenever German songs are sung" (Sehling 1, p. 699).

In sum. The medieval office chant was neither abandoned nor wholly reset. In the chapters and convents it went on from the old books. In the schools and towns it was purged and reprinted in the Lutheran antiphoners of Spangenberg and Lossius. Beside it stood:

- Luther's German canticles and hymns;
- German psalms sung to the old tones;
- by the later century, polyphony and organ alternation on Sundays and feasts.

The organ in the service as a whole is treated in Chapter 9, §9.3.

10.12 Ceremonial in the offices and the catechism service

Several matters touching the body are treated elsewhere:

- the short preces said kneeling after the gospel canticle: §10.7.5 above;
- the chant, the psalm tones and the lesson tones: §§10.11.1–10.11.3 above;
- the cope and the surplice: Chapter 14, §§14.7.2, 14.7.4;
- lights on the altar: Chapter 14, §14.5.4;
- gestures at the Mass: Chapter 2, §2.15.

This section gathers what the orders prescribe for the body at Matins, Vespers, the Litany and the catechism service.

10.12.1 What the orders say, and what they do not

The searches. The corpus was searched, near the words for the offices (Mette, Vesper, horae, Complet, Benedictus, Magnificat, Litanei, Catechismus, Kinderlehre), for the same families of gesture as at the Mass (Chapter 2, §2.15.1): kneeling and flexis genibus; bowing; standing and sitting; hats and bare heads; the hands; turning toward the altar or the people; the sign of the cross; the kiss; incense.

What the orders prescribe. The rubrics for the offices are fewer even than for the Mass. Where the orders say anything, it is one of five things:

- kneeling to pray: for the preces, the closing collects, the Da pacem and the Veni sancte Spiritus (§10.12.2);
- kneeling before the altar for the Litany: two, three or four boys, the choir and the people answering (§10.12.3);
- two choirs facing: the psalms sung or said "verse about verse" from stalls set opposite (§10.12.5);
- the place of the reader: the pulpit, the lectern, or before the altar (§10.12.6);
- the children set in order for the catechism: in pairs facing one another, standing on stools or in the middle of the church, boys on the men's side and girls on the women's (§10.12.7).

Not found. No order in the corpus prescribes any of the following for the office:

- a bow at the Gloria Patri, at the name of Jesus, or at the Gloria of the hymn. The Mecklenburg convents repeat "Ehre sei gott dem vater" after every psalm and canticle, but say nothing of the head (§10.12.5);
- standing for the gospel canticles, or the sign of the cross at the Benedictus, Magnificat or Nunc dimittis;
- the officiant's hat or biretta, or a rule for covering and uncovering the head in choir;
- incense at the Magnificat or Benedictus, or the censing of the altar at Vespers;
- genuflection, the hands joined or raised, or a turn toward the people at Dominus vobiscum in the office.

The sign of the cross appears only at the household morning and evening blessings (§10.12.8).

10.12.2 Kneeling to pray

After the gospel canticle. The Bugenhagen orders have the children kneel for the short preces after the Magnificat and Benedictus (§10.7.5). Bremen, Kirchenordnung, 1534 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 463), at the evening office in Our Lady's church:

> Na dem Sermone schal de Scholemester anheven dat Magnificat, Darna Da pacem Domine Edder Veni Sancte spiritus. Na der Antiphen lathe me de kinder up de knee vallen unde seggen: Kyrie eleyson, Christe eleyson, Kyrie eleyson. Pater noster.

After the sermon the schoolmaster shall begin the Magnificat, thereafter Da pacem Domine or Veni Sancte Spiritus. After the antiphon let the children fall upon their knees and say: Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison. Pater noster.

At the opening and the close of Vespers. The Pomeranian Agenda has the school kneel twice at the Saturday and eve Vespers: for the opening invocation of the Spirit, and for the Da pacem after the Benedicamus. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 435):

> beslüt dat chor mit dem benedicamus, unde singet dar up, da pacem domine, flexis genibus, latinisch edder düdisch.

First they sing on bended knees: Veni sancte Spiritus; or the first verse, Veni creator Spiritus; or Adesto Deus unus, etc., or whatsoever else is meet for the season [...] Thereafter the priest readeth a collect in German or Latin, and the choir concludeth with the Benedicamus, and singeth thereupon Da pacem Domine on bended knees, in Latin or in German.

The other kneeling places.

- Schönburg 1542, Matins. After the Te Deum or canticle the boys say "flexis genibus" the prayers against the Turk, Da pacem, and the preces pro serenitate or pro pluvia, with a versicle and collect (Sehling 2, p. 170).
- Regensburg 1567, Vespers. After the deacon's German collect, "etliche knaben, für dem altar knieend", sing the Benedicamus Domino, and the choir answers Deo gratias (Sehling 13, p. 461).
- Stolberg-Königstein 1552, the morning lesson. After the German psalms the preacher shall "mit Andacht und gantz kniendt" sing or read three German collects: for forgiveness, for wisdom in government, and for peace (Sehling 9, p. 468).

The Reformed morning and evening prayer. The Palatinate order of 1563 (Reformed) bids the congregation kneel at the opening of its daily prayers. Palatinate, Kirchenordnung, 1563 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 396), the morning prayer:

> Geliebten in dem herrn Jesu Christo, lasset uns vor dem angesicht Gottes niderknien und in auß grund unsers hertzen also anrufen Beloved in the Lord Jesus Christ, let us kneel down before the face of God, and call upon him from the ground of our hearts on this wise.

The evening prayer opens in the same words (Sehling 14, p. 397). The Palatinate order of 1601 (Reformed) reprints both prayers but changes "niderknien" to "demütigen", "humble ourselves" (Sehling 14, p. 572, nn. 12, 15). In East Frisia the editor's note on the Lütetsburg order of 1606 (Reformed) quotes its morning prayer in Low German: "latet uns vor dem angesichte Gades nedderkneen" (Sehling 7/1, p. 541).

10.12.3 The Litany: boys kneeling before the altar

The Litany was the one office the orders regularly order to be sung kneeling. The visitors in Mecklenburg wanted the people on their knees for it after the Sunday sermon. Mecklenburg, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1542 (Sehling 5, p. 149):

> Zum dritten soll der pastor am sontage nach der predigte in stetten und dorfern die letanei dem volke vom predigstuel mit andacht fursingen und die schuler oder der kuster samt dem volke sollen niderkniegen und ime darauf antwurten.

Thirdly, the pastor shall on Sunday after the sermon, in towns and villages, devoutly sing the Litany before the people from the pulpit, and the scholars or the sexton, together with the people, shall kneel down and answer him.

The usual form is a small group of boys kneeling before the altar, with the choir and the people answering. Schwarzburg, Kirchenordnung, 1574 (Sehling 2, p. 134), on the weekday preaching days:

> Auf dieser tage einem in der wochen, wen die predigt aus ist, pflegt man die litanei zu singen, das ist gemeine gebet für allerlei not und für alle stende des ganzen christenthums. Drei knaben sind mit weissen chorröcken angethan, knien fur dem altar und singen den ersten chor. Die schulknaben und die gemein versamlung antworten und singen den andern chor.

On one of these days in the week, when the sermon is ended, they are wont to sing the Litany, that is, the common prayer for all manner of need and for all estates of the whole of Christendom. Three boys, clad in white surplices, kneel before the altar and sing the first choir. The schoolboys and the common assembly answer and sing the second choir.

The same arrangement appears elsewhere:

- Cologne, the prayer-day order of 1546 (Moderate Reformed): three or four boys "vor eynen altar knyende" begin the Litany, and the whole choir with the pastor, chaplains and priests answers (Sehling 22, p. 45).
- Waldeck 1556: "etliche der Schüler oder der Pfarrherr, vor dem Altar niderkniend" (Sehling 9, p. 277).
- Marggrabowa 1581: every Friday, "zwen oder drei knaben furm altar knien", Luther's Litany "and not in rhyme" (Sehling 4, p. 149).

- Isny c. 1600: the minister bids, "Laßt uns auff knien und der Christlichen kirchen christliche Lytanei also mit ainandern sprechen und beten" (Sehling 17/1, p. 468).

The forms of the Litany and who sang it are treated in Chapter 13, §13.21.3.

10.12.4 Kneeling at the evening bell

Kneeling was not confined to the church. During the plague of 1585 the Breslau council asked the people to pray at the evening bell as the morning congregation already did in church. Breslau, notice of the council concerning the plague, 1585 (Sehling 3, p. 405):

> Erstlich, weil allezeit in dieser fährlichen zeit des morgends ein guter teil des volks beim kirchgebet und lektion sich sehen lassen, dass sie auch dergleichen auf den abend, wenn man pro pace leutet, da die arbeiter von ihrer arbeit pflegen abzugehen, herwiderum ein abendgebet und liedlein im hause und die, so auf der gassen gehen, knieende beten wollen

Firstly, forasmuch as in this perilous time a good part of the people hath ever shown itself of a morning at the church prayer and lesson, that they would likewise in the evening, when the bell is rung pro pace, at which time the labourers are wont to go from their work, in turn pray an evening prayer and a little hymn in the house; and those that are going in the street, that they would pray kneeling.

The evening bell itself, and the prayer for peace that replaced the Ave Maria, are treated in Chapter 9, §9.5.3.

10.12.5 Two choirs facing

The psalms were sung by two sides of the choir, verse about verse. Only the Mecklenburg convent order says how the singers stand. Mecklenburg, Klosterordnung, 1572 (Sehling 5, p. 258), for the nuns' Matins:

> Darnach folgen die psalmen, so uf einen jeglichen tag in vorgesetzten calendario verzeichnet sein, welche die jungfrauen, jede in ihrem stuhl gegeneinander über, einen vers üm den andern beten oder singen sollen, und zu ende eines jeglichen psalmen, dergleichen auch der lobgesänge (benedictus, magnificat, benedicite, nunc dimittis) den vers: Ehre sei gott dem vater und dem sohn und dem heiligen geiste widerholen.

Thereafter follow the psalms which are appointed for every day in the calendar set before, which the maidens, each in her stall, over against one another, shall pray or sing one verse about the other; and at the end of every psalm, and likewise of the canticles (Benedictus, Magnificat, Benedicite, Nunc dimittis), they shall repeat the verse: Glory be to God the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost.

The same two sides served for the catechism. Wittenberg, Kirchen-Ordnung für die Stadt Wittenberg, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 703):

> Fur der fruepredigt des sontags oder feststagen sollen die knaben im chor den catechismum lateinisch auf beiden seiten vers umb vers sine tono distincto ganz auslesen

Before the early sermon on Sundays or feast days the boys shall read the whole catechism through in Latin in the choir, on both sides, verse about verse, sine tono, distinctly.

10.12.6 The place of the lesson

The orders name the place from which the office lesson is read, but not the reader's posture:

- Coburg 1545: at Vespers the chapter of the Old Testament is read in German by the priest "auf dem predigstuel oder mittelaltar, nachdeme vil oder wenig volks vorhanden", from the pulpit or the middle altar, as many or few people are present. On weekdays the epistle and gospel are read "von dem altar auf einem pult" (Sehling 1, p. 543).
- Herpf 1566: at the Saturday evening prayer the chapter is read "vor dem altar" (Sehling 2, p. 334).
- Schweinfurt 1543: one boy, or two or three if the chapter is long, read the Latin lesson; the chaplain then reads it in German "zum volk", toward the people (Sehling 11, p. 631).

- Wittenberg 1533: three boys read three lessons at Saturday Vespers "nach dem tono, wie man lectiones pflegt zu lesen", the last words sung (Sehling 1, p. 703).

10.12.7 The catechism service: the children set in order

The catechism service has more stage directions than any office. Five things recur: the minister goes to the altar; the children come out from their places; they are set in pairs facing one another; they stand up, sometimes on stools, to recite; and boys and girls are kept apart.

Facing pairs. The earliest full direction is Schönburg's weekday catechism. Schönburg lordships, church order of Johann Pfeffinger, 1542 (Sehling 2, p. 174):

> Tritt der priester für den altar und betet die 6 hauptstücke der christl. lehre, wie droben geschrieben vom wort zu wort, und alle, so in der kirchen sind. 3. Darnach treten 3 knaben und 3 gegen einander über ins gesichte etwas höher denn die andern und fragen einander dialogen weise.

The priest goeth before the altar and prayeth the six chief parts of Christian doctrine, as is written above, word for word, and all that are in the church with him. 3. Thereafter three boys and three step forth over against one another, face to face, somewhat higher than the rest, and question one another by way of dialogue.

At the end the priest goes back "vor das altar" and prays the six parts once more for the children (Sehling 2, p. 174).

Standing on stools. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, 1567 (Sehling 13, p. 464), the Wednesday catechism:

> Auf dasselbig stehen dann zween knaben auf stulen, darzu gegeneinander bereitet, deren einer fragt, der ander antwortet und erzelet fein langsam, deudlich und klerlich mit lauter stimme den bloßen text des ganzen catechismi von allen 6 stücken. Nach diesem stehen auf andere zween

Thereupon two boys stand up upon stools set over against one another for the purpose, of whom the one asketh and the other answereth, and reciteth right slowly, plainly and clearly, with a loud voice, the bare text of the whole catechism, of all six parts. After this two others stand up.

About five pairs are set up in turn.

Boys on the men's side, girls on the women's. Henneberg, Kirchenordnung of Count Georg Ernst, 1582 (Sehling 2, p. 311), after the catechism sermon:

> Auf dieses vom predigstuel fur den altar gehen, und dann der schulmeister mit sampt dem chor oder der ganzen kirchen das letzte gesetze aus dem deutschen gesange Ein feste burg (Preis ehr und lob) singen, darunter denn die gemeine jugend aus irem orte, da sie zuvor gestanden, mitten in die kirchen, die knaben auf der menner, die megdlein aber auf der weiber seiten sich stellen.

Upon this [the preacher shall] go from the pulpit before the altar, and then the schoolmaster with the choir or the whole church shall sing the last stanza of the German hymn "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" ("Preis, Ehr und Lob"); during which the common youth shall go from the place where they stood before into the middle of the church, and set themselves, the boys on the men's side and the maidens on the women's side.

Four scholars then step up "an einen bequemen ort, do sie von jederman wol gehöret werden können", and afterward return "in züchtiger stille zum chor" (Sehling 2, p. 311).

Two choirs of children. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 1598 (Sehling 20/1, p. 692):

> Es werden aber in den vorerzelten Classibus oder Unterscheiden des Catechismi allezeit die Knaben und Töchtern, welche gleich weit im Lehrnen kommen, gegen einandern uber gleich als in zwen Chöre gestellet.

But in the aforesaid classes or divisions of the catechism the boys and daughters which are come equally far in learning are always set over against one another, as it were in two choirs.

Each child who has recited receives "ein newer Straßburger Pfenning", a new Strasbourg penny, and those who know the whole catechism with the table of duties and the psalms or hymns "ein newer Kreutzer" (Sehling 20/1, p. 692). The children are to answer "fein laut und verständtlich" and, while others recite, to listen "still und züchtig" and repeat everything silently.

Kneeling with folded hands. Heilbronn asks for a posture of prayer from the children called out to pray. Heilbronn, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, p. 315):

> Unnd sollen die jungen knaben auß der lateynischen schul lateynische, unnd die auß der teutschen schul teutsche, von dem diacon allweg ettwan zween oder drew erfordert werden, die mit andacht, knieend, mit zusamen gelegten henden betten sollen

And the young boys out of the Latin school [shall pray] Latin, and those out of the German school German [prayers]; two or three at a time shall be called forth by the deacon, which shall pray devoutly, kneeling, with folded hands.

This is the only place in the corpus where the hands of those praying in an office or catechism service are prescribed.

The rest.

- Pairs. The children are set "ye par und par" to ask one another the questions at the early Sunday catechism in Schwäbisch Hall (1543; Sehling 17/1, p. 162). The Württemberg order for the German schools (1559) sets them "Knaben gegen Knaben, Metlin gegen Metlin, gegen einander", boys against boys and girls against girls, in school, so that they may recite "in der Kirchen zu zeit des Catechismi auch offentlich vor der Gemein" (Sehling 17/1, p. 584). At Rothenberg (1618) the schoolboys recite the table of duties "mit fragen und antwort gegen einander" (Sehling 13, p. 548).
- Stepping out. At Schweinfurt (1543) "sollen auch die schuler gegen einander auftreten", only those "die gut sprache und stark ausreden haben"; the shy are to be heard in school, "sonst … wurde zuletzt ein spot daraus" (Sehling 11, p. 642).
- Standing or kneeling at the altar. In the Schillingsfürst order (before 1578), "nach der collecten stehen die kinder oder knien zum altar" and repeat the chief parts after the pastor (Sehling 15, p. 227). In Hohenlohe (1596) the pastor, after hearing some children, is "widerumb für dem altar stehen" to repeat the main points of the sermon (Sehling 15, p. 663).
- A girl leads. In the Torgau girls' school (1575), after the morning blessing and the Veni creator, "teglichen ein megdlein aufstehen", one girl stands up every day and prays the five parts aloud for the others to repeat (Sehling 1, p. 685).

10.12.8 The sign of the cross: at home, not in choir

No office or catechism service in the corpus prescribes the sign of the cross in church. It survives in the morning and evening blessings of Luther's Small Catechism, the household office, and there the orders divide.

Kept and defended. The Kurland order asks the households to keep the morning and evening blessing with the sign. Kurland, Kurländische Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 91):

> jederman, sonderlich die jungen kinder, zum morgen und abentsegen gehalten werden, und dasselbig ohne verachtung des heiligen creuzes zeichens, welche ohne jenige superstition seind signa fidei, religionis et confessionis nostrae, der christen pannier und veldzeichen.

Every man, and especially the young children, shall be held to the morning and evening blessing, and that without contempt of the sign of the holy cross, which signs are, without any superstition, signa fidei, religionis et confessionis nostrae, the banner and ensign of Christians.

Printed in the catechism. The Palatinate order of 1556 prints Luther's rubric whole: "soltu dich segnen mit dem heiligen creutz und sagen: Das walt Gott, vater, sohn und heiliger geist, Amen. Darauf sprich kniend oder stehend den glauben oder vaterunser" (Sehling 14, p. 141).

Struck out. Pfalz-Zweibrücken (1557) prints "soltu dich segnen und sagen"; the editor notes that the draft read "mit dem heyligen creütz" and that it was struck (Sehling 18, p. 179, n. u). Nördlingen (1579) likewise has only "solt du dich segnen und also sagen" (Sehling 12, p. 357).

Chapter 11. Sermons and Preaching

This chapter collects what the evangelical church orders printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts say about the sermon. It asks:

- What did the reformers and the orders think the sermon was for, and what was it to contain?
- On what occasions was there preaching: Sundays and feasts, weekdays, the catechism, Lent and the Passion, prayer days, funerals and weddings?
- What texts were preached: the old Sunday gospels and epistles, books in course, the catechism, the heads of doctrine?
- How was a sermon to be made, and in what manner of speech?
- How long was it to last?
- What did the orders say about postils, written sermons and preparation?
- What were the limits on rebuke and controversy in the pulpit?
- What was done in the pulpit before and after the sermon?
- How were preachers tested and corrected?
- What was required of the hearers?

How the chapter is laid out.

- §11.1 summarizes the findings, and §11.2 sets out the method and cautions.
- §11.3 gives Luther's rulings of 1523 and 1526 and the Saxon visitation of 1528.
- §11.4 covers the occasions and times of preaching, and §11.5 the texts.
- §11.6 covers how to preach, and §11.7 the length of sermons.
- §11.8 deals with postils and preparation, and §11.9 with rebuke and polemic.
- §11.10 covers the pulpit acts around the sermon.
- §11.11 covers preachers, and §11.12 hearers.
- §11.13 is a table by order, and §11.14 a concordance.

11.1 Summary of findings

1. The sermon is the reason for the assembly (§11.3).

- Luther's first rule, in 1523: the congregation "shall never come together" unless God's Word is preached and prayer made. Where the Word is not preached, "it is better that one neither sing nor read nor come together".
- The visitors of 1528 required repentance to be preached with forgiveness. Preaching forgiveness alone makes people "secure and fearless". Later orders speak of preaching "repentance, law and gospel".

2. The occasions (§11.4).

- Sunday and holy days. The gospel was preached in the morning at the Mass, and the catechism (or the epistle) in the afternoon. Luther's Wittenberg had three Sunday sermons: an early one on the epistle for the servants, the gospel at the Mass, and the Old Testament at Vespers.
- Weekdays. One or two weekday sermons, usually Wednesday and Friday (1528). Great towns had more. Early sermons were held for servants and craftsmen before work. Village weekday sermons were often suspended at harvest, or held only in winter.
- The catechism. The catechism sermon came on Sunday afternoon, and was also preached through in series several times a year (Torgau: every quarter; Reutlingen: four times a year).
- Lent and the Passion. Luther refused "eight hours" of Passion preaching on Good Friday: an hour a day in Holy Week. The later orders divide the Passion harmony into a fixed series of sermons (six in Lent at Henneberg; three on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday at Coburg).
- Prayer days (Bettage), weekly or monthly, with a sermon of repentance.
- Funeral sermons spread from the 1550s. They were to be short, without praise of the dead, and often limited to half an hour. Some towns abolished them.
- Wedding sermons: allowed if "short, chaste, Christian", or abolished.

3. The texts (§11.5).

- The Lutheran orders kept the Sunday gospels and epistles. Luther's reason was that few preachers could handle a whole book "mightily and profitably".
- Books in course were preached at Vespers and on weekdays.
- Some orders also asked for the loci communes to be covered through the year. The Reformed Palatinate allowed a book in course on Sunday too.

4. How to preach (§11.6). The orders describe one shape:

- prayer;
- the text;
- a short summary;
- one to three doctrines;
- their application to the hearers;
- a brief repetition;
- the general prayer.

The sermon is to teach, reprove and comfort: to terrify the secure and comfort the troubled. It is to be in plain words, "so that he may be understood", fitted to the hearers, "in good German".

5. Length (§11.7).

- The chief Sunday sermon: one hour at most, often three quarters.
- Weekday, afternoon, catechism, funeral and wedding sermons: half an hour.
- The reason given is the hearer. "The common people can in no wise remain attentive longer" (Augsburg 1537, Moderate Reformed). The common man is like "a sick man, to whom one must set things often, but little at once" (Württemberg 1536). "Long sermons ... weaken the memory and make the hearers weary" (Regensburg 1572).
- Sermons were to be shorter in winter cold (Castell 1579). Overrunning to an hour and a half drew complaints (Hohenlohe 1594).

6. Postils (§11.8). There are two phases.

- Early. Luther thought it best to read his postil from the pulpit, for weak preachers and against the sects. Saxony in 1545 told poor village pastors to read Corvinus or Luther's Hauspostille "until" they could preach themselves.
- Later. The complaint reverses: young preachers "adorn themselves with strange feathers" (Saxony 1580). Pastors are to write their own sermons (Nassau-Dillenburg 1570), to use "pure postils" without leaning on them (Wolfstein 1574), and not to go up into the pulpit "without foregoing meditation" (Sponheim 1608).

7. Rebuke and controversy (§11.9).

- Preachers were to rebuke vices "in general", and name no one. Names were read from the pulpit only for excommunication by sentence of the consistory, and in the banns.
- No private grudges in the pulpit.
- The doctrinal quarrels brought mandates against "railing and condemning": "disputations belong in the universities, and not in the churches in the pulpit" (Ansbach 1570).

8. Around the sermon (§11.10). The orders kept the medieval group of vernacular pulpit pieces around the sermon:

- before: an exhortation and prayer, often the Our Father or "Nun bitten wir"; in the Palatinate (Reformed) the apostolic greeting;
- after: the open confession and absolution, the general prayer with particular intercessions, and the notices and banns.

9. Preachers (§11.11).

- Candidates passed an examination and a trial sermon.
- Pastors already in office preached practice sermons on set texts before the superintendent (Saxony 1577).
- In the Palatine class conventions (1587, Reformed) a colleague's sermon was censured point by point: division of the text, scope, digressions, pace, "good German".

10. Hearers (§11.12).

- Attendance was a duty, enforced by counting and fines (one person per house at weekday sermons, Ysenburg 1588).
- Taverns were shut and trade, games and labour service forbidden during the sermon.
- Chattering, sleeping, coming late and leaving early were fined (Ysenburg-Ronneburg 1591, Reformed).
- The people were to be exhorted to stay to the end of the service.

11.2 Scope, sources and cautions

What was searched. The `eko.db` database was searched for the sermon by its names, in High and Low German and Latin spellings:

- predig, predigt, predigen, sermon, concio;
- Frühpredigt, Mittagspredigt, Vesperpredigt, Wochenpredigt, Katechismuspredigt, Passionspredigt, Bettag, Leichpredigt, Hochzeitpredigt, Brautpredigt, Probpredigt.

It was also searched for:

- length (stund, halbe stund, drei viertel);
- books and preparation (postill, concipiren, meditation);
- rebuke and controversy (canzel with schelten, schmehen, lestern, mit namen, privat affect, disputation);
- the pulpit acts (vater unser before the sermon, Ave Maria, Gnad, fried, abkündigung, gemein gebet);
- the hearers (unter der predigt with schenken, zechen, kaufen, spazieren, schwätzen, schlafen, and fines).

The passages were then read in context, and their orders identified from Sehling's running heads.

Related chapters.

- Chapter 8 covers the hymns before the sermon ("Nun bitten wir", §8.10) and after it ("Erhalt uns, Herr", §8.11).
- Chapter 4 covers the epistle and gospel lessons on which the Sunday sermon was preached (§4.5).
- Chapter 6 covers the general prayer said from the pulpit after the sermon.
- Chapter 10 covers the daily lessons with exposition (§10.3.1) and the sermon inside Vespers (§10.7.4).
- Chapter 12 covers the half-holidays kept "with a sermon", Lent and the other seasons, and the days of fasting and prayer.
- Chapter 16 covers the deacons and chaplains who preached the lesser sermons.
- Chapter 17 covers the oaths by which preachers bound their doctrine to Scripture and the confessions.
- Chapter 15 covers the pastor's study and books, the training of preachers, and the hearers' duties (§§15.3.2, 15.7, 15.8.1).
- Chapter 13 covers the wedding and funeral rites in which those sermons stood, and the council-election sermon (§§13.7, 13.9, 13.13.1).
- Chapter 9 covers the sermon glass (§9.5.9).
- Chapter 3 covers prayers before and after the sermon in the communion service (§3.6.4).

Cautions. Five things limit what the corpus can show:

- Church orders are not sermons. Sehling prints rules, visitation articles and reports, not sermons or homiletic handbooks. The orders say what was required and what went wrong. How sermons actually sounded must be learned from the printed sermons and postils, which lie outside the corpus.
- Silence is not absence. Many orders say only "the sermon follows". Lengths, days and methods are stated where someone thought them in doubt. A missing rule does not mean that there was no custom.
- Complaints are evidence of the rule. The many complaints (sermons of an hour and a half, borrowed postils, railing from the pulpit, empty weekday sermons, taverns open during the sermon) show the abuses the rules were made against. They do not show how common the abuses were.
- Orders of other traditions. Sehling prints Reformed orders for the Palatinate, Hesse-Kassel, Nassau, Ysenburg, Hanau, Anhalt, East Frisia and the Lower Rhine, the Moderate Reformed orders of the Upper German cities and Philip's Hesse, and the Philippist orders of Bremen and of Hesse under Philip's sons. They are cited here where they bear on the same questions (the Palatine class conventions, the greeting, books in course, the length of the sermon), and each is marked with its tradition. The wider Reformed practice of Sunday preaching in course is noted but not pursued.
- Dates. Several texts survive in later copies, or are pastors' reports undated except by the visitation. Their dates are given as Sehling gives them.

11.3 Luther and the visitors: the sermon first

11.3.1 1523: no gathering without the Word

The first rule. Luther's first sketch of a reformed service names three abuses: the Word was silenced, fables filled the silence, and the service was done as a work. From this he draws the rule on which every later order rests. The congregation is never to meet unless God's Word is preached and prayer is made, "though it be most briefly". Luther, Von ordenung gottis diensts in der gemeine, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 2):

> Drei grosse missbreuch sind in den gottis dienst gefallen. Der erst, das man gottis wort geschwigen hat, und alleine gelesen und gesungen in den kirchen, das ist der ergiste missbrauch. [...] Nu dise missbreuch abzuthun, ist aufs erst zu wissen, das die christlich gemeine nimer soll zu samen komen, es werde denn da selbs gottis wort gepredigt und gebett, es sei auch aufs kurzist. [...] Darumb wo nicht gotts wort predigt wirt, ists besser, das man wider singe noch lese, noch zu samen kome.

Three great abuses are fallen into the service of God. The first, that God's word hath been kept silent, and [men have] only read and sung in the churches; that is the worst abuse. [...] Now to put away these abuses, it is first to be known that the Christian congregation shall never come together, except God's word be there preached and prayer made, be it also most briefly. [...] Therefore where God's word is not preached, it is better that one neither sing nor read nor come together.

The same treatise makes the daily morning and evening gatherings into a lesson with its exposition (see Chapter 10 §10.3.1). Preaching is the reason for the assembly, not an ornament of it.

11.3.2 1526: three sermons on a Sunday

The Wittenberg Sunday. In the Deutsche Messe Luther sets out the Sunday he had in Wittenberg. There are three sermons:

- at five or six, after psalms "as at Matins", on the epistle, for the household servants who cannot come later;
- at the Mass, at eight or nine, on the gospel;
- at Vespers in the afternoon, on the Old Testament "in order, one after another".

Luther, Deutsche Messe und ordnung gottis diensts, 1526 (Sehling 1, p. 13):

> Des heiligen tags oder sontags lassen wir bleiben die gewonlichen epistel und evangelia und haben drei predigt. Frue umb funfe oder sechse singet man etliche psalmen als zur metten. Darnach predigt man die epistel des tages, aller meist umb des gesindes willen, das die auch versorget werden und gottis wort hören, ob sie ja in andern predigeten nicht sein kunden. [...] Unter der messe umb acht oder neune predigt man das evangelion, das die zeit gibt durchs jar. Nach mittage unter der vesper fur dem Magnificat predigt man das alte testament ordentlich nacheinander.

On the holy day or Sunday we let remain the customary epistles and gospels, and have three sermons. Early, at five or six, certain psalms are sung, as at Matins. Thereafter the epistle of the day is preached, most of all for the household servants' sake, that they also may be provided for and hear God's word, if haply they could not be at the other sermons. [...] At the Mass, at eight or nine, the gospel is preached which the season giveth through the year. In the afternoon, at Vespers, before the Magnificat, the Old Testament is preached in order, one after another.

The same pattern of morning, Mass and Vespers sermons runs through the town orders for the rest of the century (§11.4.1). The Vespers sermon of the north German towns is described in Chapter 10 §10.7.4.

11.3.3 The visitors of 1528: repentance and faith, Wednesday and Friday

What to preach. The Unterricht der Visitatoren of 1528 begins its doctrine with a complaint. Many preach only the forgiveness of sins and leave out repentance, and the people grow "secure and fearless". Ernestine Saxony, Unterricht der visitatoren an die pfarrherrn, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 152):

> Denn Christus spricht, Luce am letzten cap., das man predigen sol in seinem namen, busse und vergebung der sünden. Aber viel itzund sagen allein von vergebung der sünde, und sagen nichts, oder wenig, von busse. So doch on busse kein vergebung der sunden ist. Es kan auch vergebung der sünden nicht verstanden werden on busse. Und so man die > vergebung der sunden prediget on busse, folget, das die leute wenen, sie haben schon vergebung der sunden erlanget, und werden dadurch sicher und forchtlos.

For Christ saith, in the last chapter of Luke, that repentance and forgiveness of sins should be preached in his name. But many now speak only of the forgiveness of sins, and say nothing, or little, of repentance. Whereas without repentance there is no forgiveness of sins. Neither can forgiveness of sins be understood without repentance. And when forgiveness of sins is preached without repentance, it followeth that the people ween they have already obtained forgiveness of sins, and become thereby secure and fearless.

When to preach. The same book fixes the week. Besides the Sunday morning and Vespers sermons, there is to be preaching on Wednesday and Friday, from "useful and not hard books". Ernestine Saxony, Unterricht der visitatoren an die pfarrherrn, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 168):

> In der wochen sol man predigen am mitwoch und freitag. Es sol auch ein pfarherr vleis ankeren, das man nützliche und nicht schwere bücher fürneme zu predigen. Das auch der glaube also geprediget werde, das man der rechtschaffen christlichen busse, gottes gericht, gottesforcht, und guter werk […] nicht vergesse, denn man on die busse glauben nicht haben oder verstehen mag. Am feiertag, soll man morgens und zur vesper predigen, morgens das evangelion, nachmittag, weil das gesinde und junge volk in die kirchen kömpt, halten wir für gut, das man sontags nach mittag stetigs für und für, die zehen gebot, die artikel des glaubens, und das vater unser predige und auslege.

In the week one shall preach on Wednesday and Friday. A pastor shall also apply diligence that useful and not hard books be taken in hand to preach. [And] that faith also be so preached, that true Christian repentance, God's judgement, the fear of God and good works […] be not forgotten; for without repentance one cannot have or understand faith. On the holy day one shall preach in the morning and at Vespers: in the morning the gospel; in the afternoon, because the servants and the young folk come into the church, we hold it good that on Sunday afternoon one continually, over and over, preach and expound the Ten Commandments, the articles of the faith and the Our Father.

These two passages set the pattern for the century: gospel on Sunday morning, catechism in the afternoon, and one or two weekday sermons, with repentance preached together with faith.

11.4 Occasions and times

11.4.1 Sundays and feasts: the gospel in the morning, the catechism after noon

The standard Sunday. By mid-century the standard parish Sunday has two sermons:

- in the morning, on the gospel of the day, with the Lord's Supper when there are communicants;
- in the afternoon, on the catechism (in towns often the epistle instead, or both).

Where the young people cannot come on weekdays because of the field work, the catechism is kept for Sunday and the epistle moves to a weekday. Albertine Saxony, General-Artikel und gemeiner Bericht, 1557 (Sehling 1, p. 323):

> sollen sie ire predigten also ordenen und disponiren, das allewege auf die sontage und andere christliche fest das evangelium frue geprediget, und, do communicanten vorhanden, das ambt gehalten, nachmittag aber allezeit der catechismus geprediget und geübet, und sonsten in der wochen auch eines tages einmal geprediget werde. Da auch das junge volk in der wochen von wegen des ackerbauens, oder anderer arbeit verhindert nicht leichtlich könt in die kirchen kommen, sol der catechismus auf den sontag nach mittage, und die epistel auf einen andern tag in der wochen ausgelegt werden they shall so order and dispose their sermons, that always on the Sundays and other Christian feasts the gospel be preached early, and, where communicants be present, the office [of the Mass] be held, but in the afternoon the catechism be at all times preached and exercised, and otherwise in the week also on one day [there] be preaching once. And whereas the young folk in the week, by reason of the tilling of the fields or other work, could not easily come into the church, the catechism shall be expounded on Sunday afternoon, and the epistle on another day in the week

The great towns had more. Wittenberg in 1533 had preaching on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday mornings (Sehling 1, p. 701).

11.4.2 Weekday sermons

One or two a week. The weekday sermon (Wochenpredigt) is required almost everywhere. Its usual days are Wednesday and Friday, or one of them. In the villages it is often suspended when the fields need the people. Schlieben, Kirchen-Ordnung für die Stadt Schlieben, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 659):

> Am donnerstage in der wochen wirt eine predigt gethan, ausgenommen mitten im sommer von wegen des volks notiger arbeit und mitten im winter von wegen des volks, da wirt sie unterlassen. Anfenglich singet man einen deutschen gesang, dabei sich das volk samle. 2. Folget die predigt, darin entweder der catechismus gehandelt wird, auf das er in einem jahre hinaus gepredigt werden kan, oder so aposteltage fürfallen, die man nicht feierlich helt, wird dasselbige evangelium an solchem tage in der wochen gepredigt, oder epistola dominicalis. In der fasten wirt historia passionis dazu gebraucht.

On Thursday in the week a sermon is made, except in midsummer by reason of the people's needful work, and in midwinter by reason of the people; then it is left off. At the beginning a German hymn is sung, whereby the people may gather. 2. The sermon followeth, wherein either the catechism is handled, that it may be preached through in one year, or, if apostles' days fall which are not kept solemnly, the same gospel is preached on such a day in the week, or the Sunday epistle. In Lent the history of the Passion is used for it.

Reutlingen turns the rule round. The village pastors are to preach a weekday sermon in winter, "when there is no special business in the field". Reutlingen, Kirchenordnung, c. 1531 (Sehling 17/2, p. 42):

> Sollichs soll auch den pfarhern in dörffern auffgelegt werden, also das sy auch den catechismum zu vier malen im jar predigen auff die feirtag nach dem morgenessen, darzu, das sy zu wintters zit, wann man nit sonder geschefft am feldt hat, alle wochen, so kein feyrtag darynn ist, am wercktag nach gelegenheit eins yden fleckenn auch ain predig thuen.

This shall also be laid upon the pastors in the villages, that they also preach the catechism four times in the year, on the holy days after the morning meal; moreover, that in winter time, when there is no special business in the field, every week wherein is no holy day, they also do a sermon on a working day, according to the occasion of each place.

The early sermon for working people. In the towns an early weekday sermon (Frühpredigt) was held before the day's work, for servants, day labourers and craftsmen, and kept to half an hour. Zwickau, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1556 (Sehling 1, p. 726):

> Die zwene caplan in unser frauen pfarkirchen sollen drei tage in der wochen die fruepredigt vor das gesinde, tagelöner und handwergsleut halten, als nemlich dinstag, freitag und sonabend, weil die andern drei tage ane das geprediget wird. Desgleichen sollen auch die zwene zu S. Katharinen in irer pfarkirchen thun, und in peden kirchen nit lenger dan ein halb stunde die predigt vorziehen.

The two chaplains in Our Lady's parish church shall hold the early sermon three days in the week for the servants, day labourers and craftsmen, namely Tuesday, Friday and Saturday, because on the other three days there is preaching anyhow. Likewise shall the two at St Katharine's also do in their parish church, and in both churches not draw out the sermon longer than half an hour.

Late in the century the weekday sermon was often badly attended. The counts of Ysenburg and others required at least one person from each house to be present (§11.12.1).

11.4.3 Catechism sermons

Every Sunday afternoon, and in series. The catechism sermon (Katechismuspredigt) is normally the Sunday afternoon sermon (§11.4.1). Many orders add a series in which the whole catechism is preached through in a few weeks. Reutlingen has it "four times in the year" (§11.4.2). At Torgau the four deacons preached the Small Catechism every quarter, for a fortnight on end. Torgau, *Verordnung der Visitatoren von 1575 (Sehling 1, p. 683):

> Der pfarher im spital herr Joachim Sella legt des sontags zur früepredigt das evangelium dominicale aus, des donnerstags durch das ganze jar erkleret er den catechismum Lutheri. Der kleine catechismus würde alle quartal, vierzehen tage nacheinander in der wochen von den vier diaconis ordentlichen geprediget und erkleret.

The pastor in the hospital, Herr Joachim Sella, expoundeth the Sunday gospel at the early sermon on Sunday; on Thursday, through the whole year, he explaineth Luther's catechism. The Small Catechism is every quarter, fourteen days one after another in the week, preached and explained in order by the four deacons.

The catechism sermon was often followed by an examination of the children (Kinderlehre, examen). Its length was usually set at half an hour (§11.7.2).

11.4.4 Lent and the Passion

Luther: not eight hours on Good Friday. The Deutsche Messe keeps Lent and the Passion gospels, but not the old Holy Week. Holy Week shall be "like other weeks", save that the Passion is preached an hour a day. Luther, Deutsche Messe und ordnung gottis diensts, 1526 (Sehling 1, p. 16):

> doch nicht also, das man das hunger tuch, palmen schiessen, bilde decken und was des gauckel werks mehr ist, halten oder vier passion singen oder acht stunden am karfreitag an der passion zu predigen haben, sonder die marterwoche sol gleich wie ander wochen sein, on das man die passion predige des tages eine stunde durch die woche oder wie viel tage es gelustet, und das sacrament neme wer do wil.

yet not so that one keep the Lenten veil, the shooting of palms, the covering of images, and whatever more there is of that juggling work, or sing four Passions, or have to preach eight hours on the Passion on Good Friday; but Holy Week shall be even as other weeks, save that the Passion be preached an hour a day through the week, or on as many days as one listeth, and that whosoever will receive the sacrament.

The Passion harmony in series. The later orders divide the Passion history into a fixed number of sermons. Henneberg 1582 has six in Lent, the first on Quinquagesima as a summary of what is to come (Sehling 2, p. 313). The Coburg synod of 1580 advises that the whole history be laid out on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday "in three distinct sermons". Coburg, Beschlüsse des coburgischen Synodus, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 255):

> doch wird es vor nützlichen gehalten, das in dörfern und stedten die ganze historia passionis uf den donnerstag und karfreitag, wie sie sich begeben, in dreien unterschiedlichen predigten, dem volk kürzlich und einfeltig ausgeleget, damit die ganze historia, wie auch den andern festen der geburt und himmelfart Christi gebreuchlich, der gestalt das gemeine volk unverstendig dieselbige besser fassen, lernen und behalten mögte.

yet it is held profitable that in villages and towns the whole history of the Passion, on the Thursday and Good Friday, as it came to pass, be expounded to the people briefly and simply in three distinct sermons, that the whole history (as is customary also at the other feasts of the Nativity and Ascension of Christ) the unlearned common people might in such wise the better grasp, learn and retain [it].

11.4.5 Prayer days

Days of repentance. From the 1540s, and above all in time of war, plague and the Turkish threat, the orders appoint prayer days (Bettage). These were weekly, monthly or occasional, with a sermon of repentance at their centre. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 260):

> Derhalben werden bei uns uf gewisse bestimpte tage bettage angestelt und gehalten, in welchen durch die predig die leut in erkantnus ihrer sünde bracht, zur buß und glauben vermanet, zum ernsten gebet und zu abbittung der straffe, auch zur besserung ihres lebens treulich angehalten werden.

Therefore with us prayer days are appointed and held on certain fixed days, in which by the sermon the people are brought into knowledge of their sins, exhorted to repentance and faith, and faithfully held to earnest prayer and to the begging off of the punishment, and also to the amendment of their life.

The Palatine orders of the 1590s (Reformed) required attendance at the monthly prayer day on pain of a fine (Sehling 19/2, pp. 777, 780).

The calendar of prayer days is treated in Chapter 12, §12.13.5, and the Litany sung on them in Chapter 13, §13.21.4.

11.4.6 Funeral sermons

Not a eulogy. The funeral sermon (Leichpredigt) spread from the 1550s. At Gardelegen in the Mark, the first funeral sermon was held in 1554 (Sehling's introduction, Sehling 3, p. 218). Most orders allow it when the family asks for it. Many keep it short and forbid praise of the dead. Kurpfalz, Kirchenordnung, 1563 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 406):

> Darauf soll er eine kurtze predig oder vermanung thun und sich ubriges lobens der abgestorbenen enthalten, damit die leichpredigen nit in mißbrauch gerahten.

Thereupon shall he do a short sermon or exhortation, and refrain from excessive praise of the departed, that the funeral sermons fall not into abuse.

What to preach, and from what book. At the grave the subject is mortality, sin and death, redemption, the resurrection and eternal life. The Oldenburg order points the pastor to the printed funeral sermons of Johann Spangenberg and Johannes Mathesius. Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1109):

> sol der kirchendiener auftretten und von sterbhcheit und schwacheit der menschen, von ursachen der sünden und des tods, von erlösung durch Christum geschehen, von auferstehung der todten, von ewigen leben und dergleichen ein kurzen sermon und vermanung tun, wie er denn dazu aus den leichpredigten, so von alten herrn Johanne Spangenbergio, herrn Matthesio und andern […]

the minister shall step forth and of the mortality and weakness of men, of the causes of sin and of death, of the redemption made through Christ, of the resurrection of the dead, of eternal life and the like, do a short sermon and exhortation, as he [may] for this [draw] from the funeral sermons which by old Master Johann Spangenberg, Master Mathesius and others […]

Half an hour, or none at all. Mecklenburg limits it: "if a funeral sermon is held, it shall not be over half an hour" (Conformitas ceremoniarum, c. 1560; Sehling 5, p. 290). The Hohenlohe visitors set the same limit (Sehling 15, p. 427). Some towns abolished funeral sermons altogether, putting the old exhortation and a collect in their place, so that the people would not be kept too long. Aschersleben, Kirchen-Agenda (agreed by the council with the ministers), 1575 (Sehling 2, p. 481):

> Zum dritten, sollen die leichpredigten aus allerhand ursachen durchaus abgeschafft sein und an stat deroselben die alte verordente vermahnung, so ein generale funus, durch den hern pfarhern bei der hauswirt oder alten leichen, und die collecta, so man vor den heusern pflegt zulesen, bei der kinder und jungen leute begräbnus gelesen und die benedictio daruf gesprochen werden, damit die leute zulange nicht aufgehalten und die jugend in der schuelen verseumet werde

Thirdly, the funeral sermons shall for all manner of reasons be wholly abolished, and in their stead the old appointed exhortation, [at] a general funeral, [be read] by the pastor at [the burial of] householders or old people, and the collect which is wont to be read before the houses be read at the burial of children and young people, and the blessing spoken thereupon, that the people be not kept too long, and the youth in the school be not neglected.

Several orders refuse a funeral sermon for small children who had not yet come to the Lord's Supper (Sehling 22, p. 480; Sehling 19/1, p. 430).

The burial rites in which the funeral sermon stood are treated in Chapter 13, §13.9.

11.4.7 Wedding sermons

Short and chaste. The wedding sermon (Hochzeitpredigt, Brautpredigt) was customary in many places and abolished in others. Anhalt allows it where custom has it or it is asked for, but it must be "short, chaste and Christian". Anhalt, Kirchenordnung, 1599 (Reformed; Sehling 2, p. 582):

> eine kurze, züchtige, christliche hochzeitpredigt (hindangesetzt alle ungeistliche, possirliche phrases und unzimliche sprichwörter, dadurch züchtige ohren der jugend leichtlich können verletzet werden) zur besserung gehalten, dazu denn die leut nüchtern und attent kommen sollen.

a short, chaste, Christian wedding sermon (all unspiritual, droll phrases and unseemly proverbs set aside, whereby the chaste ears of the youth may lightly be hurt) [be] held for edification, to which the people shall come sober and attentive.

Aschersleben abolished it in the same article as the funeral sermon. Aschersleben, Kirchen-Agenda, 1575 (Sehling 2, p. 481):

> Es sollen forthin alle hochzeitpredigten abgeschafft sein, braut und breutgamb mit ihren geladenen gästen nur einmal des montags und nicht auch des sontags, wie bishero geschehen, in die kirchen zur trauung gehen, und also des montags die copulation und segen zugleich ohne alle predigt geschehen.

Henceforth all wedding sermons shall be abolished; bride and bridegroom with their bidden guests [shall] go into the church to the marriage only once, on the Monday, and not also on the Sunday, as hath been done hitherto; and so on the Monday the joining and the blessing [shall] be done together, without any sermon.

At Grubenhagen, wedding guests were forbidden to lie "at the drinking, the early soup or the brandy" during the wedding sermon (Sehling 6/2, p. 1065).

The marriage rites in which the wedding sermon stood are treated in Chapter 13, §13.7.

11.5 Texts: what was preached on

11.5.1 The Sunday gospels and epistles kept

Why Luther kept the pericopes. Luther kept the old series of Sunday epistles and gospels (§11.3.2). He gave a practical reason: few preachers can handle a whole evangelist or another book "mightily and profitably". Luther, Deutsche Messe und ordnung gottis diensts, 1526 (Sehling 1, p. 15):

> Denn auch das der ursachen eine ist, das wir die episteln und evangelia, wie sie in den postillen geordenet stehen, behalten, . das der geistreichen prediger wenig sind, die einen ganzen evangelisten oder ander buch gewaltiglich und nutzlich handeln mugen.

For this also is one of the causes why we keep the epistles and gospels as they stand ordered in the postils: that there are few spiritual preachers who can handle a whole evangelist or other book mightily and profitably.

The Lutheran orders follow him almost without exception. The visitation articles ask whether the pastor preaches "the Sunday gospels" (dominicalia evangelia). The Hohenlohe visitors of 1578 charged a pastor with not keeping to the appointed gospels (Sehling's note, Sehling 15, p. 248). The lessons themselves are treated in Chapter 4 §4.5.

11.5.2 Books in course on weekdays and at Vespers

Lectio continua beside the pericopes. Continuous preaching through a book of the Bible (lectio continua) was not given up. It was moved to Vespers and to the weekday sermons. Luther preached the Old Testament "in order" at Sunday Vespers (§11.3.2). The visitors of 1528 wanted "useful and not hard books" for the weekday sermons (§11.3.3). In the towns the weekday preachers worked through whole books. Rötha, Kirchen-Ordnung für Rötha, 1574 (Sehling 1, p. 653):

> In der wochen wird am mittwoch früe gepredigt und gehandelt die bücher der heilichen schrift wie sie nach einander gehen, die vornembsten historien ein capitel nach dem andern, in der fasten den sontage zu mittage und an mittwoch wird die passion gepredigt.

In the week, on Wednesday early, there is preaching, and the books of holy Scripture are handled as they go one after another, the chief histories, one chapter after another; in Lent, on Sunday at midday and on Wednesday, the Passion is preached.

The Reformed Palatine order of 1563, repeated in 1601, goes further. Sermons are to be taken from the canonical books, and those books expounded which are "most profitable to the common man and most edifying to the church". In 1563 this applied "chiefly on the Sundays" (Sehling 14, p. 557, with the variant noted there). The order thus allows a book in course on Sunday as well as on weekdays.

11.5.3 The chief articles of doctrine through the year

Loci communes. Some orders asked the preacher to cover the chief heads of doctrine (loci communes) in the course of a year's Sunday sermons. Pfalz-Veldenz 1574 has this rule (quoted in §11.10.4). The catechism sermon did the same in a smaller compass. Where a sermon was on a feast, the doctrine of the feast was to be taught: the Supper on Maundy Thursday (Mecklenburg c. 1560, Sehling 5, p. 290), and the Passion on Good Friday (§11.4.4).

11.6 How to preach

11.6.1 The shape of a sermon

Prayer, text, summary, doctrines, application, repetition. The orders rarely give a homiletic. Where they describe a sermon, they describe the same shape:

1. an exhortation to prayer, and a prayer or hymn;
2. the reading of the text;
3. a short summary (summa) of the text;
4. one, two or three doctrines drawn from it;
5. their application to the hearers;
6. a short repetition at the end;
7. the general prayer.

A village pastor in the county of Henneberg described his own practice in his report to the visitors. Ritschenhausen, Gottesdienst-Ordnung, 1562 (Sehling 2, p. 345):

> idoch halte ich in meinen predigten gemeiniglich diesen proces und ordnung. 1. Vermane ich das volk zum gebet, darnach vertir ich aus einem buch den text des ordentlichen evangelii oder historien und zeige kurzlich den inhalt, desgleichen, wo es in die stück christlicher lehr gehorig, an; nehme nochmals heraus 1, 2 oder 3 lehr nach gelegenheit der zeit und zuhorer, darauf ich die dieselbe applicire. Entlichen widerhole ich kürzlich was gehandelt und beschlis also die predigt mit dem gemeinem gebet für alle stend und anligende not der ganzen christenheit und weret die ganze predigt uber 3 virtel einer stund nicht.

yet I keep in my sermons commonly this process and order. 1. I exhort the people to prayer; thereafter I [read] out of a book the text of the appointed gospel or history, and show briefly the content, likewise where it belongeth among the parts of Christian doctrine; then I take out of it 1, 2 or 3 doctrines, according to the occasion of the time and the hearers, whereupon I apply the same. Finally I repeat briefly what hath been handled, and so close the sermon with the general prayer for all estates and the present need of the whole of Christendom; and the whole sermon lasteth not over three quarters of an hour.

A Saxon town order describes the same outline, with the propositions repeated at the end "that the hearers may know what they shall carry home with them". Gottleuba, Verzeichnus der kirchenordnung zur Gotleuben, 1567–1577 (Sehling 1, p. 567):

> Darauf folget die predigt, welche gemeiniglich über eine stunde sich nicht vorzeucht vom evangelio, da erstlich summa angezeicht, darnach propositiones oder themata, davon man handlen will, welche in fine repetirt, damit die auditores wissen, was sie mit sich anheim tragen sollen. Gemeingebet. Nach allen predigten bittet man für die not der ganze werde christenheit, vor alle drei regiment, geistlich, weltlich, und haushaltung, und auch für sondrer personen, die das gemeine gebet begeren und bedurfen.

Thereupon followeth the sermon on the gospel, which commonly is not drawn out over an hour; wherein first the sum is shown, thereafter the propositions or themes which one will handle, which are repeated at the end, that the hearers may know what they shall carry home with them. The general prayer. After all sermons prayer is made for the need of the whole worthy Christendom, for all three governments, spiritual, temporal and the household, and also for particular persons who desire and need the common prayer.

Doctrine, terror, comfort, exhortation. The Corvey order of 1603, for the village of Bruchhausen, sets out the same shape. It adds what the sermon is to do to each kind of hearer: the ungodly are to be terrified, the troubled comforted, the careless warned. Corvey, Kirchenordnung für das Corveyer Stiftsdorf Bruchhausen, 1603 (Sehling 21, p. 244):

> Folgents wirt die Predig angefangen, da dann, nach dem der Pfarher vom Predigstul ein kurtze vermahnung zum gebett gethan, die gantze Kirche eindrechtiglich singet das Vatter unser oder einen andern gewönlichen gesang nach gelegenheit der zeit. Nach diesem gesange wirdt der Text verlesen und folget darauff ein Christlich, dem Glauben ehnlich, auß Gottes Wort gezogen und mit demselben confirmirte und bestetigte erklerung, darin denn alle wege nach erforderung der fürgelesenen worte eins oder mehr Heuptstücke der Christlichen lehre fein ordentlich und unterscheidlich auffs aller kürtzeste, Also das es die einfeltigen vernehmen, begreiffen und behalten mügen, zur > unterweisung fürtragen, die rohen, Gottlosen mit verkündigung Göttliches zorns geschrecket, die Gottseligen, ihrer Sünden halber bekümmerte Hertzen mit erinnerung Göttlicher gnaden getröstet, Die sichern und fahrlessigen ermahnet und einem jedern nach gelegenheit etwas zur besserung fürgehalten werden soll.

Next the sermon is begun; wherein, after the pastor hath made from the pulpit a short exhortation to prayer, the whole church with one accord singeth the Our Father, or another customary hymn according to the occasion of the time. After this hymn the text is read, and thereupon followeth a Christian explanation, agreeable to the faith, drawn out of God's Word and confirmed and established therewith; wherein always, as the words read out require, one or more chief parts of Christian doctrine shall be set forth for instruction, finely, orderly and distinctly, as briefly as may be, so that the simple may perceive, grasp and retain it; the rude [and] ungodly shall be terrified with the proclamation of God's wrath; the godly, hearts troubled because of their sins, comforted with the remembrance of God's grace; the secure and careless exhorted; and to every one, as occasion serveth, something set before him for amendment.

11.6.2 Law and gospel, repentance and faith

The content. The visitors of 1528 insisted that repentance be preached with forgiveness (§11.3.3). The later orders put the same thing in the language of law and gospel. Wurzen, Gemeine Artikel, 1542 (Sehling 2, p. 96):

> Alle pfarrer sollen auch vleissig vor allen dingen der lehre und ires pfar ampts und selsorg warten, und dasselbige durch die predige der buss, des gesetz und evangelii, glauben und liebe, gedult und auch die gute werk von got geboten mit allen treuen vleis treiben, one welchs kein selwartung oder recht christlich gemein bestehen kann.

All pastors shall also diligently, before all things, wait upon the doctrine and their pastoral office and cure of souls, and drive the same with all faithful diligence by the preaching of repentance, of the law and the gospel, faith and love, patience, and also the good works commanded of God; without which no cure of souls nor right Christian congregation can stand.

The uses of the sermon. The Hessian order of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) lists the uses of a sermon from 2 Timothy 3:16. It sets the limit of an hour, and it points to the short but weighty sermons of the Fathers. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 242):

> Es sollen aber die predigten nit uber ein stund weren und dahin gerichtet sein, daß sie leren, straffen, züchtigen, vermanen, bessern, trösten und sterken. Man find oft in der heiligen vetter bücher kurze predige, aber gar wichtig und welche den zuhörern das herz treffen und bewegen und ein merklich nachdenkens hinder sich lassen.

But the sermons shall not last over an hour, and shall be directed thereto, that they teach, reprove, correct, exhort, amend, comfort and strengthen. One findeth oft in the books of the holy Fathers short sermons, but very weighty, and such as smite and move the hearts of the hearers and leave behind them a notable reflection.

11.6.3 Plain speech for the common man

Clear words, no bitterness. The orders want the sermon plain enough for the simple to follow. Schleswig-Holstein 1542 puts the method, the length and the manner into one paragraph:

- pray first, read the text, then expound it;
- not more than an hour;
- speak the truth "with clean words, so that he may be understood";
- no abuse and no rebuking anyone by name from the pulpit (§11.9.1).

Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 91):

> De, de Predigen wil, schal thom ersten dat volck vormanen tho vlitiger anropinge der hulpe Gades, Darna den Text, den he duden wil, dem volcke vorlesen, Thom lesten ock uthleggen, nicht aver eine stunde lanck synen Sermon vorthen, ock syner bewechnisse nicht nageven, allene, wat de warheit ys, dat schal he mit reinen wörden uthsprecken, So dat he möge vorstan werden. Yn Sonderheit schal sick ein Prediger aller scheldwort unde bittericheit entholden, ock nemande up dem predigstole mit namen straffen, allene de laster ynt gemene hen, unde wat he vor gewisse gehört hefft, anfechten unde vordömen. Wes eme nicht bewust, darvan mach he swigen.

He that will preach shall first exhort the people to diligent calling upon the help of God; thereafter read to the people the text which he will expound; lastly also lay it out, [and] not draw out his sermon over an hour long, nor give way to his [own] emotion; only what is the truth, that shall he speak out with clean words, so that he may be understood. In especial shall a preacher refrain from all words of railing and bitterness, and rebuke no one from the pulpit by name; only assail and condemn the vices in general, and what he hath heard for certain. Whereof he hath no knowledge, thereof may he be silent.

Fitted to the hearers. At the end of the century the Reformed Upper Palatine government told its preachers to suit the sermon to the hearers. They were to repeat the foundations "in the simplest way", and to show the hearers how to apply them in repentance and prayer. Kurpfalz (Upper Palatinate), Generalanweisung, 1598 (Reformed; Sehling 13, p. 349):

> daß sie sich in ihren predigen nach der gelegenheit der zuhörer richten, denselben dasjenige, so zum rechten fundament der christlichen lehr und zu wahrer gottseeligkeit dienstlich, wie sie das sonsten in den predigten oft und viel uf das einfaltigste widerholen und wol inculciren, auch zeigen, wie sie dasselbige in exercitiis poenitentiae et invocationis ihnen selbst appliciren und gottseelich brauchen sollen.

that they direct themselves in their sermons according to the condition of the hearers, [and] that which serveth to the right foundation of Christian doctrine and to true godliness, the same they [shall] otherwise in the sermons oft and much repeat in the simplest way and well inculcate, and also show how they shall apply the same to themselves in the exercises of repentance and of prayer, and use it godly.

The Palatine class conventions of 1587 (Reformed) asked whether a preacher used "good German" and not "Netherlandish phrases", and whether he spoke slowly enough (§11.11.3).

11.7.1 An hour on Sunday morning, at most

The common rule. Almost every order that sets a length gives the chief Sunday sermon one hour at most. Many give it three quarters. The reason given is always the hearer: the common man cannot attend longer, nor carry more away. Augsburg, Kirchenordnung, 1537 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 12, p. 58):

> Es sollen auch dise alle gemaine sontägspredigen nit uber ain stund weren; dann das gemain volk je nieht lenger ufmerklich bleiben und, was man da handlet zur besserung, behalten kan.

All these common Sunday sermons also shall not last over an hour; for the common people can in no wise remain attentive longer, and retain what is there handled for [their] amendment.

The Württemberg order of 1536 compares the common man to a sick man, "to whom one must set food often, but little at once". Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 16, p. 104):

> Es sollen aber die predigen auch auff die Sontag unnd Feyrtag über ein stundt nit verzogen werden, damit die leut nit mit der vile unnd lengin überschütt und verdrützig werden, dieweil ye des gemeinen mans verstandt sich nit dermass auff einmal sovill mit lust zufassen auffthun mag, sonder mit ihme gleichsam einem krancken zuhandlen, dem man offt, aber wenig auff einmal fürstellen mus.

But the sermons also on Sundays and holy days shall not be drawn out over an hour, that the people be not overwhelmed with the muchness and length, and grow weary; since the understanding of the common man can in no wise open itself to grasp so much at once with delight, but [one must] deal with him as it were with a sick man, to whom one must set [things] before him often, but little at once.

The Hohenlohe order of 1578 repeats this sentence almost word for word, and sets the length at "three quarters of an hour, and at the most not over an hour" (Sehling 15, p. 263).

Regensburg gives a reason from memory: long sermons do not edify; "they weaken the memory and make the hearers weary". Regensburg, Kirchenregimentsordnung, 1572 (Sehling 13, p. 510):

> Nachdeme lange predigten nicht erbaulich, sondern die gedächtnus schwächen und die zuhörer verdrossen machen, sollen die morgenpredigten an sonn- und feiertägen nicht mehr über eine stund verzogen, sondern aufs längst eine > stunde gehalten werden. In den wochenpredigten aber sollen die ministri sich nicht weniger, sondern auch vielmehr der kürze befleißigen

Forasmuch as long sermons are not edifying, but weaken the memory and make the hearers weary, the morning sermons on Sundays and holy days shall not be drawn out more than over an hour, but be held an hour at the longest. In the weekday sermons, however, the ministers shall study brevity no less, but rather much more

11.7.2 Half an hour on weekdays and for the catechism

Shorter sermons. The afternoon, weekday, catechism, funeral and wedding sermons are generally held to half an hour. The Saxon visitors of 1580 were told to ask about all three limits. Albertine Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 393):

> Ob er auch lenger denn ein stund, morgens an sonn und feiertagen predige. Ob er die mittagspredigt also anstelle, das mit singen und allem lenger nicht denn ein stund das volk aufgehalten werde. Ob er am werktage uber ein halbe stund predige.

Whether he preach longer than an hour in the morning on Sundays and holy days. Whether he so order the midday sermon that with singing and all the people be kept no longer than an hour. Whether on the working day he preach over half an hour.

The same order limits the singing before the sermon, so that the hymns do not eat up the hour (Sehling 1, p. 370). Nassau-Weilburg 1576 does the same: at most half an hour of singing before the sermon on holy days, and a quarter on weekdays (Sehling 10, p. 229).

11.7.3 Weather and work

Shorter in the cold. Some orders shorten the sermon for the season. At Obereisenheim the pastor is to start at eight sharp and cut the sermon shorter in winter, so that the poor and the badly clothed young people have no cause to leave the church for the cold. Castell, Dorfordnung für Obereisenheim, 1579 (Sehling 11, p. 689):

> Es soll sich auch der pfarrer bevleißigen, wann man zuesammenleutet, daß er alsobalden in die kirchen gehe, die gesang nicht zu lang mache und gewißlich umb acht uhr anfahe zue predigen, die predigt über eine stund nicht verziehe und sonderlich winterzeit in der kälte noch mehr abkürze, hernacher auch das gebet und gesänge auch nit verlenger, damit der arme mann und die jugend, so etwas ubel bekleidet, nicht ursach haben, frost halben aus der kirche [zu laufen …]

The pastor shall also endeavour, when the bells ring together, that he go forthwith into the church, make not the hymns too long, and surely begin to preach at eight o'clock, draw out the sermon not over an hour, and especially in winter time, in the cold, cut it yet shorter; afterwards also lengthen not the prayer and hymns, that the poor man and the youth, who are somewhat ill clad, have no cause by reason of the frost [to run] out of the church […]

Troppau 1592 gives one hour in summer, three quarters in winter, and half an hour on weekdays (Sehling 3, p. 478). The weekday sermon was set early, or held only in winter, so as not to take the people from their work (§11.4.2).

11.7.4 Overrunning

Complaints. The limits were not always kept. In 1594 the Count of Hohenlohe complained that his pastors preached far beyond the appointed time, "sometimes an hour and a half", to the annoyance of the hearers. Hohenlohe, Befehl wegen des Kirchengesangs und der Predigtlänge, 1594 (Sehling 15, p. 639):

> sondern auch, das die predigten uber hievor verordnete zeit weits lenger und manchmals uf anderhalben stunden but also that the sermons [have been drawn out] far longer than the time appointed heretofore, and sometimes to an hour and a half

The same command restores the limit of about three quarters of an hour (Sehling 15, p. 640). Visitors were told to ask how long the pastor preached: in Saxony in 1580 (§11.7.2), and in Hohenlohe in 1587, "how long, roughly, he letteth his sermon last" (Sehling 15, p. 532).

11.7.5 The limits in the orders

The table gives the limits found, by order. "Sun." is the chief Sunday or holy-day morning sermon; "afternoon" covers the midday, Vespers and catechism sermons.

11.8 Postils and preparation

11.8.1 Reading a postil from the pulpit

Luther's advice. A postil was a printed collection of sermons on the Sunday epistles and gospels. Luther thought it would be best to read his postil to the people. This was not only for the sake of preachers who "could do no better". It was also a guard against enthusiasts and sects, lest everyone preach what he likes, "of blue ducks" instead of the gospel. Luther, Deutsche Messe und ordnung gottis diensts, 1526 (Sehling 1, pp. 14–15):

> Und mich dunkt, wo man die deudsche postillen gar hette durchs jar, es were das beste, das man verordente, die postillen des tages ganz oder ein stucke aus dem buch dem volk fur zu lesen, nicht alleine umb der prediger willen, die es nicht besser kunden, sondern auch umb der schwermer und secten willen zuverhueten, wie man sihet und spuret an den homilien in der metten, das etwa eben auch solche weyse gewesen ist. Sonst, wo nicht geistlicher verstand und der geist selbst redet durch die prediger (wilchem ich nicht wil hiemit zil setzen; der geist leret wol bas reden, denn alle postillen und homilien), so komts doch endlich dahin, das ein iglicher predigen wird was er wil, und an stat des evangelii und seiner auslegunge widerumb von blau enten gepredigt wird.

And it seemeth to me, if one had the German postil complete through the year, it were the best that it be ordained to read to the people the postil of the day, whole or a piece out of the book; not only for the sake of the preachers who could do no better, but also to guard against the enthusiasts and sects; as one seeth and perceiveth from the homilies at Matins, that such also was once the manner. Otherwise, where spiritual understanding and the Spirit himself speaketh not through the preachers (to whom I will not hereby set a bound; the Spirit teacheth better to speak than all postils and homilies), it cometh at last to this, that every one will preach what he will, and instead of the gospel and its exposition there will again be preaching of blue ducks.

Village pastors. The Albertine orders of 1545 apply this to the poor village pastors. Until they can preach "out of their own understanding", they are to read from the pulpit Corvinus's postil or Luther's Hauspostille. Albertine Saxony, Die Cellischen Ordnungen, 1545 (Sehling 1, p. 297):

> Wo aber auf den dörfern arme einfeltige pfarern sölchs zuthun nicht vormöchten, damit sie nicht aus ihrem kopfe, eigenen tünkel oder sunst etwas irriges predigten, söllen sie für sich nehmen die postillam Corvini oder die hauspostil Lutheri und an dem sontage die auslegung des evangelii fur dem volke auf der canzel draus lesen, bis das sie aus langer ubung dermal einst auch möchten dahin kommen, das sie aus eigenem vorstande eine christliche predigt thun kunten.

But where in the villages poor simple pastors were not able to do this, lest they preach out of their own head, their own conceit, or otherwise anything erroneous, they shall take before them Corvinus's postil or Luther's house postil, and on the Sunday read out of it to the people from the pulpit the exposition of the gospel, until through long practice they also might at length come so far that they could make a Christian sermon out of their own understanding.

Many orders required every parish to own Luther's postils with the Bible and the catechisms. In the Brandenburg villages the pastor had to own the Bible, the Hauspostille, the catechisms and the church order (Sehling 3, pp. 153, 204).

11.8.2 Against preaching from postils

Borrowed feathers. By the second half of the century the complaint is the opposite. Young men pass the examination by learning answers by heart, have read little of the Bible, and then "betake themselves to postils, adorn themselves with strange feathers". Albertine Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 377):

> das die jungen studiosi, so sich auf das predigampt zubegeben fürhabens, solche examina von wort zu wort oftmals nicht allein mit grossem unverstand auswendig gelernet, und, da sie mit andern worten befraget, nicht allein nichts antworten können, sondern auch mehrmals im alten und neuen testament ganz und gar nichts gelesen, welche nachmals sich auf postillen begeben, mit frembden federn schmücken, und eigener kunst oder geschickligkeit, damit sie der kirchen dienen solten, wenig bei sich haben.

that the young students who purpose to betake themselves to the preaching office oftentimes have not only learned such examinations word for word by heart with great want of understanding, and, when they are asked in other words, can answer nothing at all, but also have many times read nothing whatever in the Old and New Testament; who afterwards betake themselves to postils, adorn themselves with strange feathers, and have little art or skill of their own wherewith they should serve the church.

Write your sermons. Nassau-Dillenburg orders its pastors to study the Bible and to write all their sermons out, not to take them "without understanding" from the printed postils. Nassau-Dillenburg, Visitationsabschied, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 110):

> Es sollen auch die pastores durch die speciallsuperintendenten zu vleißigem lesen unnd studiren in der bibeln angehalten werden, das sie auch alle ire predigten schreiben unnd solche nicht ohne verstandt hin unnd wieder aus den ausgegangenen unnd gedrucktten postillen ziehen unnd nemen, sondern vielmehr aus Gottes wortt und heiliger schrifft der propheten unnd aposteln selber.

The pastors also shall be held by the special superintendents to diligent reading and studying in the Bible, that they also write all their sermons, and draw and take them not without understanding here and there out of the published and printed postils, but rather out of God's word and the holy Scripture of the prophets and apostles itself.

Use them, but do not lean on them. The middle way is put most clearly in the lordship of Wolfstein. The pastor is to use "pure postils", which are named, but not rely on them wholly: they were published "not to make lazy pastors". Wolfstein, Christliche Instructio des Thomas Stieber, 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 569):

> und in solcher predig sich rainer postillen als Lutheri, Philippi, Brencii, Spangenbergii, Mathesii und anderer gottseligen lehrer gebrauchen. Doch sollen sich die pfarrherrn nicht ganz und gar allain auf die postillen verlassen, sondern sollen auch selbst studiren, wie denn solche postillen nicht darumb seind publicirt worden, daß sie solten faule pfarhern machen, sondern daß die prediger und pfarhern daraus lernen sollen, wie sie die lehre göttliches worts füren und bei ihren zuhörern gebrauchen sollen.

and in such sermon make use of pure postils, as Luther's, Philip's, Brenz's, Spangenberg's, Mathesius's and [those] of other godly teachers. Yet shall the pastors not rely wholly and altogether only on the postils, but shall also study themselves; as indeed such postils were not published for this, that they should make lazy pastors, but that the preachers and pastors should learn out of them how they shall set forth the doctrine of God's word and use it among their hearers.

The Palatine visitation articles of 1594 (Reformed) ask "out of what writings and commentaries" the ministers draw and gather their sermons (Sehling 19/2, p. 822).

11.8.3 Meditation and writing

Not into the pulpit unprepared. Late orders expect a written sermon, or at least a written outline. In Sponheim an old pastor who could not write out every sermon might keep to a written disposition of its parts. He was to show it at the ministers' conventions, to prove "that he hath not gone up into the pulpit without foregoing meditation". Sponheim (Hintere Grafschaft), Generalartikel, 1608 (Sehling 18, p. 672):

> Doch wird zu gemelter inspectorn discretion gestelt, ob ein prediger etwan hohen alters halben sein verhinderung hette, daß er nit alle predigt zu concipiren vermögt, das derselbe bei schriftlicher disposition partium gelassen würde, die er bei den conventibus ufzulegen und damit zu dociren hatt, daß er nit ohne vorgehende meditation uff die Canzel gestiegen.

Yet it is left to the discretion of the said inspectors, whether a preacher, perchance by reason of great age, had his hindrance, that he could not compose all [his] sermons, [that] the same be left at a written disposition of the parts, which he hath to lay before the conventions, and therewith to prove that he hath not gone up into the pulpit without foregoing meditation.

Assum's method. Sehling's notes to the Hohenlohe questions of 1587 summarize the advice of the court preacher Johann Assum. The pastor is to pray, read the text diligently, and make his own thoughts on it: its argument, its division, parallels and examples from other parts of Scripture. He is then to write it out "as if he were the very first writer on the Bible", and only then read postils and amend his draft (editor's note, Sehling 15, p. 532).

11.9 Rebuke, polemic and the limits of the pulpit

11.9.1 Rebuke the vices, name no one

The office of rebuke. No order takes rebuke out of the sermon. The preacher is to rebuke sin openly; the Saxon order of 1580 calls this his Strafamt (§11.9.2). But he is to rebuke vices "in general" and leave persons unnamed. Private sinners are to be dealt with privately, following Matthew 18. Merseburg, *Was den pfarhern auf itztkünftigen synodo (1545) solle angezeigt werden (Sehling 2, p. 26):

> und dargegen zu christlichen guten werken und wandel vormahnen, auch die laster in genere strafen durch die heilige schrift und exempel derselben, aber nimandes specifice angreifen, ader in ban zuthun sich understehen, und lestern und unartiges scheltens auf der canzel und sünst sich enthalten.

and on the other hand exhort to Christian good works and conversation, and also rebuke the vices in general by the holy Scripture and its examples, but attack no one specifically, nor take it upon themselves to put [any] under the ban, and refrain from reviling and unseemly railing in the pulpit and elsewhere.

An Augsburg preacher's contract of 1535 (Moderate Reformed) has him swear to rebuke "gently and modestly", "but neither with naming nor with pointing at particular persons". Augsburg, Bestallung eines Predigers, 1535 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 12, p. 46):

> daneben das ubel der notturft nach anregen, wie ainem getreuen christenlichen predicanten gezimpt, sanftmuetig und beschaidenlich strafen und von der canzel meniglich in der gemein, aber weder mit benamung noch andeutung sonderer personen vor allen falschen gotsdiensten, lastern und sunden zu der eer, auch warem dienst Gottes und allen loblichen tugenden, wie sich gepurt, ermanen

[and] besides touch upon the evil as need requireth, as becometh a faithful Christian preacher, rebuke gently and modestly, and from the pulpit exhort every one in common, but neither with naming nor with pointing at particular persons, away from all false worship, vices and sins, to the honour and also the true service of God and all laudable virtues, as is meet

The Schleswig-Holstein order of 1542 says the same, and adds: "whereof he hath no knowledge, thereof may he be silent" (§11.6.3).

When names were spoken. The pulpit was used for names, but by order and not by the preacher's choice:

- Excommunication. Where the steps of Matthew 18 had failed, the consistory's sentence was read from the pulpit, with the name. Mecklenburg, Consistorialordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 245):

> so sollen sie in der kirchen oder kirchspiel, darin sie wohnen, durch eine öffentliche sentenz des consistorii von der canzel mit namen in den bann verkündiget und aus der gemeinschaft der heiligen verstossen werden.

they shall in the church or parish wherein they dwell, by a public sentence of the consistory, be proclaimed by name from the pulpit into the ban, and be thrust out of the communion of saints.

- Banns of marriage. Couples were "proclaimed" from the pulpit, with their parents and masters if they were strangers (§11.10.4).

11.9.2 No private grudges in the pulpit

The visitors' questions. The Saxon order of 1580 has the visitors ask how the pastor shows himself "in his office of rebuke". Does he rebuke with Christian gentleness, or "out of private affection and revenge" bring his own affairs into the pulpit and name people? Albertine Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 394):

> Wie sich der pfarrer (oder in stedten auch andere kirchendiener) in seinem strafampt erzeige, ob er mit christlicher sanftmut und guter bescheidenheit strafe, oder aus privat affection und rachgier, seine eigene sachen auf die canzel bringe, die leut namhaftig, oder sonst unvermeldet doch ausgemalet ubel ausmache, sich zu zorn bewegen lasse, scharfer, ungebürlicher, stachlichter, schmehelicher, grober wort und geberde in den predigten gebrauche.

How the pastor (or in towns also other ministers) showeth himself in his office of rebuke: whether he rebuke with Christian gentleness and good discretion, or out of private affection and revenge bring his own affairs into the pulpit, name the people, or otherwise, unnamed yet painted out, make them out evil, let himself be moved to anger, [use] sharp, unseemly, stinging, reviling, coarse words and gestures in the sermons.

Later in the same order the visitors are told that the rule against preaching against persons concerns only these "offensive sermons". It does not forbid rebuke itself (Sehling 1, p. 422).

11.9.3 Disputations belong in the schools

Controversy in the pulpit. The doctrinal quarrels of the 1550s to 1580s produced a series of mandates against "railing and condemning" from the pulpit. The Ansbach margrave told his clergy that disputations belong "in the universities, and not in the churches in the pulpit". Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, *Begleitschreiben zur Konkordie von 1570 (Sehling 11, p. 377):

> das sie sich in betrachtung ires ambts und jetziger kirchen vorstehender gelegenheit und anfechtung uf der canzel alles ergerlichen disputirens genzlich enthalten. Dann die disputationes uf die hohen schulen und nicht in die kirchen auf die canzel (aldo allein, was bauet, gelehret, aber, was abbricht und ergert, vermitten bleiben soll) gehörig, wie dann auch ohne das nichts so einfeltig fürgebracht, das nit etwo von etzlichen in mißverstand gezogen wurdet.

that, in consideration of their office and of the present state and assault of the church, they refrain wholly in the pulpit from all offensive disputing. For the disputations belong in the universities and not in the churches in the pulpit (where only what buildeth up should be taught, but what breaketh down and offendeth should be avoided); as indeed, even without that, nothing is set forth so simply that it be not drawn by some into misunderstanding.

Princes against condemnation. The princes of the Lower Saxon Circle, meeting at Lüneburg in 1562, forbade "unseemly railing and reviling in the pulpit". They also forbade the condemnation of others "who have not yet been heard nor ever convicted", on pain of banishment. Lower Saxon Circle, Abschied des Lüneburger Kreistages, 1562 (Sehling 23, p. 177):

> Wann dann das ungebürliehe Schelten und Lestern auf der Cantzel, auch Condemnirung anderer Leute, die noch nicht gehöret noch jemals überwunden seyn, frommen und christlichen Predigern nicht gezimet, auch solch Vornement nicht allein wider Gottes Befehl und die christliche Liebe ist, sondern vielmehr dadurch grosse Widerwärtigkeit und Mißtrauen zwischen hohen und niedern Personen, auch Verachtung aller Religion entstehet

Whereas then the unseemly railing and reviling in the pulpit, and also the condemning of other people who have not yet been heard nor ever convicted, becometh not godly and Christian preachers, and such an undertaking is not only against God's command and Christian love, but rather great hostility and mistrust between high and low persons, and also contempt of all religion, ariseth thereby

The same year the Bremen council (Philippist) forbade railing in the pulpit and bound preaching to Scripture and the Augsburg Confession (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 540). Johann Casimir's Reformed government in the Palatinate issued a mandate "against condemnations" in 1584 (Sehling 14, p. 512). In 1609 Duke Johann Adolf of Gottorf forbade "unedifying school questions" in sermons, on pain of loss of office (Sehling's introduction, Sehling 23, pp. 323–324). The Upper Palatine Generalanweisung of 1598 (Reformed; §11.6.3) begins its rule on plain preaching with the same complaint: preachers who angered themselves "in so holy a place" over matters of the schools.

No politics. Some orders also kept the preacher out of the business of the magistrate. The Colmar preachers' oaths of 1575, 1590 and 1615 forbade reviling anyone in the pulpit for their views on disputed questions. They also bade the preachers abstain from "political matters and administrations" and not disparage the council (Sehling's introduction, Sehling 20/2, p. 479).

11.10 Around the sermon: prayer, greeting, confession, intercession and notices

11.10.1 The medieval pulpit office

What the reformers inherited. Sehling's editor sets out the background in a note to an early East Frisian order, Norden's of 1528 (Reformed). Long before the Reformation the preacher said a group of vernacular pieces from the pulpit, mostly after the sermon:

- intercessions, or bidding to intercession;
- the Lord's Prayer and the Creed;
- in many places the open confession (Offene Schuld) with absolution;
- from the thirteenth century also the Ten Commandments and the Ave Maria;
- "interjections and announcements".

The orders of the Reformation kept this group around the sermon. They dropped the Ave Maria and turned the rest into the prayer before the sermon and the confession, general prayer and notices after it (editor's note, Sehling 7/1, p. 431).

11.10.2 The prayer before the sermon

An exhortation to pray, and a hymn or the Our Father. The preacher goes up, exhorts the people to pray for the Holy Spirit and for the fruit of the Word, and a prayer follows. Often it is the Lord's Prayer, said or sung, or the hymn "Nun bitten wir den heiligen Geist" (see Chapter 8 §8.10.1). At Nördlingen the first stanza of "Nun bitten" opened the sermon with the Lord's Prayer. Nördlingen, Ordnung der ceremonien in der pfarkirchen zu Sant Georgen (Caspar Löner), 1544 (Sehling 12, p. 319; dated 1555 in the running head):

> Nun bitten wir den Hailigen Gaist, auf der canzel anzufahen, das erste gesetz mit dem Vater unser zum anfang der predig, welche aus des sontags evangelion oder des feiertages allzeit geschehen soll.

"To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray", the first stanza, to be begun in the pulpit, with the Our Father, at the beginning of the sermon, which shall always be made out of the gospel of the Sunday or of the holy day.

In Kurland the preacher might intone the Lord's Prayer from the pulpit and let the whole congregation sing it, "as is customary in many evangelical churches of the German nation". Kurland, Kurländische Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 92):

> Dar man auch den text des vater unsers für der predige bisweiln auf der canzel wil intonirn, und der ganzen gemeine singen lassen, wie sonst in vielen evangelischen kirchen deutscher nation gewönlicher

Where one will also sometimes intone the text of the Our Father before the sermon in the pulpit, and let the whole congregation sing it, as is otherwise customary in many evangelical churches of the German nation

11.10.3 The greeting

The apostolic greeting. The Palatine order of 1601 (Reformed) prescribes a fixed opening for every sermon: the apostolic greeting, in one of two forms. Kurpfalz, Kirchenordnung, 1601 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 558):

> Gemeiner eingang aller predigten. Gnad, fried und barmhertzigkeit von Gott, dem vater, und seinem geliebten sohn Jesu Christo, unserm herrn, sampt der gemeinschaft des heiligen geistes sey mit uns allen, Amen. Oder also: Die gnad unsers herrn Jesu Christi und die liebe Gottes und die gemeinschaft des heiligen geistes sey mit euch allen, Amen, 2.Corint. 13. V. 13.

The common entrance of all sermons. Grace, peace and mercy from God the Father and his beloved Son Jesus Christ our Lord, together with the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with us all. Amen. Or thus: The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen. 2 Corinthians 13, verse 13.

11.10.4 After the sermon: confession, intercession and notices

The order of the pulpit. In many southern and western orders the sermon is followed, still in the pulpit, by:

1. an exhortation to prayer;
2. the open confession of sins and the absolution or "comfort";
3. the general prayer, with particular intercessions for the sick, for those in trouble and for newly married couples;
4. the notices: banns, feasts of the coming week, alms.

Pfalz-Veldenz, Kirchenordnung, 1574 (Sehling 18, p. 522):

When the hymn is ended the pastor goeth up into the pulpit, beginneth the sermon with prayer, then readeth the text of the gospel, and explaineth it according to his gift and the condition of the hearers, yet not over an hour. And the pastors shall endeavour to explain to the people, properly and understandably, out of the divine Scripture, the chief loci communes in the Sunday sermons through the year. After the sermon (because then the number of the people is greatest) he exhorteth to the common prayer, maketh the public common confession of sins together with the comfort and forgiveness of sins, as is set down before, folio […]. Thereafter he recounteth all manner of present need for which it is needful to pray, likewise when there are newly married folk, or [when there is need] to pray for the sick [and] troubled persons

Note the reason given for placing the confession and prayer after the sermon: "because then the number of the people is greatest". Many came late, after the opening hymns and lessons.

At Corvey the sermon is followed in the pulpit by the exhortation to the communicants, the confession and absolution, and the general prayer. Banns and other notices "may be done in this place". Corvey, Kirchenordnung für das Corveyer Stiftsdorf Bruchhausen, 1603 (Sehling 21, p. 244):

> 9. Wann die Predigte geschlossen ist, geschicht eine kürtze erinnerung und vermahnung an die Communicanten. 10. Darauff volget die Confeßion, Beicht und bekendtnis der Sünden und die Absolution, loßkündigung oder ledigsprechung von Sünden, in massen die hernach verzeichnet seind. 11. Endlich wirt mit gewöhnlichem, für aller Stende notturfft oder gantzen Christenheit Gebett beschlossen, und werden diese stücke allesampt auff dem Predigstull verrichtet, und da etwa Personen, so sich Ehlich vertrawet, auffzuruffen oder sonst etwas in gemein anzuzeigen und zuverkündigen were, das möcht an diesem orth geschehen.

9. When the sermon is closed, a short reminder and exhortation to the communicants is made. 10. Thereupon followeth the confession, shrift and acknowledgement of sins, and the absolution, release or loosing from sins, in such manner as they are written hereafter. 11. Finally [it] is closed with the customary prayer for the need of all estates or of the whole of Christendom; and these pieces are all performed upon the pulpit; and if perchance persons who have betrothed > themselves in marriage were to be called, or anything else to be shown and proclaimed in common, that might be done in this place.

A prayer of repentance from the pulpit. Schaumburg ordered a set prayer of repentance and forgiveness to be recited from the pulpit after the main Sunday sermon. It was not meant to replace private confession. Schaumburg, Kirchenordnung, 1614 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 117):

> Unnd ob wir wol ein Christlich Gebet von Buß und Vergebung der Sünde, wie nachfolgen wird, welches unsere Pastores im gantzen Lande alle unnd jede Sontage nach gehaltener hohen Vormittags Predigt öffentlich von der Cantzel recitiren sollen, haben angeordnet, So sol dannoch dasselbe keines weges zu auffhebung itzermelter hochnützlichen privat Confession gemeint seyn

And although we have ordained a Christian prayer of repentance and forgiveness of sin, as shall follow, which our pastors in the whole land shall recite publicly from the pulpit every Sunday after the high forenoon sermon is held, yet shall the same in no wise be meant for the abolishing of the aforesaid most profitable private confession

Banns from the pulpit. Prussia requires the pastor to name strangers' parents, masters and homes in the banns "from the pulpit", so that any impediment may come to light. Prussia, Kirchen ordnung und ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 93):

> wo die personen unbekannt weren, wie gemeiniglich die dienstboten sind, soll der pfarrherre nicht allein ihre namen und zunamen, sondern auch ire eltern, land- und hausherren, bei denen sie dienen, nennen und in der abkündigung eigentlich von der kanzel namhaft machen.

where the persons were unknown, as commonly the servants are, the pastor shall name not only their names and surnames, but also their parents, country and the masters with whom they serve, and make them known particularly in the announcement from the pulpit.

The texts of the general prayers said from the pulpit are given family by family in Chapter 6. The hymns sung after the sermon ("Erhalt uns, Herr, bei deinem Wort" and others) are in Chapter 8 §8.11.

11.11 Preachers: trial sermons, practice and censure

11.11.1 Who preached

Pastor, deacons, chaplains. In the towns the preaching was shared out by the order. The pastor took the chief Sunday sermon; the deacons or chaplains took the early, afternoon, weekday and hospital sermons (§11.4.1, §11.4.2). Funeral and wedding sermons often went by turn, or to whichever minister the family asked for (Sehling 3, pp. 218, 290). The village pastor preached everything himself. Schoolmasters and students did not preach in the orders' regular services. The question of who might preach at all, and on whose call, belongs to ordination and is outside this chapter; see Chapter 16 §16.5.1 for the deacons.

11.11.2 The trial sermon

Examination, then a trial sermon. From mid-century a candidate for a parish was examined in doctrine and then had to preach a trial sermon (Probpredigt). It showed whether he could teach, exhort and comfort out of Scripture, and how he spoke. Kurpfalz, Kirchenratsordnung, 1564 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 412):

> Nach dem examen, wo der examinatus wol geantwort, soll im auch eine probpredig zu thun auferlegt werden, daraus unsere kirchenräthe zu sehen und abzunemen, wie er auß der schrift das gemeine volck leren, zur besserung vermanen und trösten könne, und auß allen umbstenden, dergleichen dem aussprechen und verstendtlicher deutscher sprach und action besser urtheilen mögen, welcher ort ime zu befelhen. So sollen auch die mengel so an im befunden, ime freuntlich undersagt und er, die zu verbessern, vermanet werden.

After the examination, if the examinee hath answered well, a trial sermon also shall be laid upon him to do, from which our church councillors may see and gather how he can teach the common people out of the Scripture, exhort [them] to amendment and comfort [them]; and from all the circumstances, likewise from the utterance and the intelligible German speech and action, may the better judge what place is to be committed to him. And the faults that are found in him shall be told him in a friendly manner, and he be exhorted to amend them.

In Osnabrück the order of steps was: the testimonial of the call shown to the superintendent; examination by the ministers; a trial sermon in St Mary's; and then ordination with the laying on of hands "after the form which Doctor Martin Luther set" (Agende of 1588, as printed 1618; Sehling 7/1, p. 287). The trial sermon appears in the same way in Saxony 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 380), Pfalz-Neuburg 1576 (Sehling 13, p. 172), Wolfstein 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 567) and the Calenberg-Göttingen visitation instruction of 1588 (Sehling 6/2, p. 883).

The examination and trial sermon before ordination are treated in Chapter 15, §15.7.3.

11.11.3 Practice sermons and censure

Practice for pastors already in office. In Albertine Saxony the superintendents were to have the town and country clergy preach in turn on weekdays in the towns. They set them texts from the Psalms or Paul some days in advance, and repeated the exercise according to each man's diligence. Albertine Saxony, *Visitations-Instruktion von 1577 (Sehling 1, p. 349):

> Das auch die pfarhern und diacon uf dem lande und in stedten zum studieren und fleiss erwegt werden, so sollen unsere superintendenten und adiuncten dieselbten nach der ordenung in den stedten in der wochen predigen lassen, ihnen etliche tage zuvor materias aus den psalmen, epistolis Pauli oder sonsten aus der bibel, davon zu predigen, geben und darnach eines jeden fleiss oder unfleis erfunden wird, solche ubung wiederholen.

That the pastors and deacons in the country and in the towns also be stirred to study and diligence, our superintendents and adjuncts shall let them preach in order in the towns in the week, give them some days before matters out of the Psalms, the Epistles of Paul or otherwise out of the Bible, to preach upon; and thereafter, as each man's diligence or negligence is found, repeat such exercise.

Ansbach made the same rule for its chapters in 1565 (Sehling 11, p. 350).

A sermon criticized by colleagues. The Palatine classical conventions of 1587 (Reformed) made such criticism systematic. At each convention one minister preached. He then withdrew, and the others were asked in turn what faults they had found and how they might be amended. The order gives a checklist for the critics. Kurpfalz, Ordnung der Classicalconvente, 1587 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 530):

> Hierauf soll der kirchendiner, so die predig gehalten, zu einem abtritt angemanet und die andere befragt und nacheinander angehört werden, was sie an deß abgetretenen predig vor mengel und, wie eß zu verbessern. Alhie son alles, was zuo rechten und erbaulichen predigten gehöret, examinirt werden alß ungeverlich, ob er in demselbigen zu weitleufig und ob eß accomodatum, ob er recht den textum partirt, ob er scopum textus assequirt oder sonsten frembde questiones tractirt, so eygentlich auß dem text nicht genomen werden, ob er die partes, so er zu tractiren proponirt, recte persequirt, ob er nicht, in dem ein theil der predig sich so lang ufhalte, daß er die andere, wie verheissen, nicht außfüren möge, ob er auch langsam, bedächtlich und verstendiglich dem gemeinen mann zur erbauung die sachen vortrag und nicht die wordt eilents ubereinander werfe, ob er auch gut deutsch fürnemlich und nicht niderlendische phrases gebrauche, ob er alleß mit einem christlichen eyver proponir, auf das meniglich sein ernst verneme, er sichs und seine zuhörer excitiren konne

Hereupon the minister who hath held the sermon shall be bidden to withdraw, and the others asked and heard one after another, what faults they [find] in the sermon of him that hath withdrawn, and how it is to be amended. Here shall all be examined that belongeth to right and edifying sermons, as for example: whether he be too long-winded therein, and whether it be fitted [to the hearers]; whether he hath rightly divided the text; whether he attaineth the scope of the text, or otherwise treateth strange questions which are not properly taken out of the text; whether he rightly pursueth the parts which he proposed to treat; whether he, by staying so long on one part of the sermon, may not carry out the others as promised; whether he also set forth the matters slowly, deliberately and understandably to the common man for edification, and throw not the words hastily one upon another; whether he also use good German chiefly, and not Netherlandish phrases; whether he propound all with a Christian zeal, that every one may perceive his earnestness [and] he may stir up himself and his hearers

The list continues with whether he brought private matters into the pulpit. The "Netherlandish phrases" probably reflect the ministers from the Netherlands then serving in the Reformed Palatinate. Hanau-Münzenberg (1600, Reformed) summoned the country preachers in turn, the youngest first, every fortnight or month, to preach the weekday sermon. Afterwards the consistory told each one what was lacking in his sermon "in formalibus et doctrinalibus" (Sehling 10, p. 536).

11.12.1 Attendance

A duty, enforced. The orders treat hearing the sermon as a duty of every household. It was enforced by the parish officers and by fines. Late in the century the weekday sermons in particular were poorly attended (§11.4.2). The Ysenburg counts required at least one person from every house at every weekday sermon. The mayor (Schultheiß) and the church wardens counted the people after the sermon and fined those absent. Ysenburg-Birstein, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1588 (Sehling 10, p. 638):

> Es soll auch bey allen Wochenpredigten auß jederm Hauß zum wenigsten eine Person erscheinen, darauff der Schultheis und die Kirchen Ruger gute achtung geben, nach gehaltener Predigt umbzehlen lassen unnd die außbleibenden zu gebührlicher obangedeuter Straffe bringen sollen

At all weekday sermons also at the least one person out of every house shall appear; whereto the mayor and the church wardens shall give good heed, have [the people] counted after the sermon is held, and bring those who stay away to the due penalty indicated above

Church attendance as a duty of the laity is treated in Chapter 15, §15.8.1, and the enforcement of rest on holy days in Chapter 12, §12.11.2.

11.12.2 Taverns, markets and games during the sermon

The first visitations. The first Saxon visitors already found people walking in the market and round the church during the sermon, and going off to the beer houses and the brandy. Ernestine Saxony, Verordnungen aus der Visitation von 1528, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 177):

> Weiter kombt seinen c. g. vor, das die underdanen das wort gottes zum teil unfleissig horen sollen, gehn ufm markte und umb die kirche, geben also andern auch ergernus und ursache darzu, auch gehen sie zum teil under der predigte in die bierheusser und zum gebranten weine, uf dieselbigen sal man achtung haben

Further it cometh before his Electoral Grace that the subjects in part hear the word of God negligently, walk on the market and about the church, and so give offence and occasion thereto to others also; also some of them go during the sermon into the beer houses and to the burnt wine; on these heed shall be given

Innkeepers forbidden to serve. The remedy was to shut the inns for the length of the sermon. Ernestine Saxony, Pollizei und landsordnung of the dukes Johann Friedrich the Middle, Johann Wilhelm and Johann Friedrich the Younger, 1556 (Sehling 1, p. 229):

> Uf das auch diejenigen, so die wein oder bier zechen unter den predigten pflegen zu besuchen, dazu desto weniger ursach haben mügen, so wöllen wir, das hinfürder ein jeder, so wein oder bier schenkt, unter der predigt, und solange dieselbige wehret, es seivor oder nachmittage, keine geste setzen noch setzen lasse.

That those also who are wont to frequent the wine or beer taverns during the sermons may have the less occasion thereto, we will that henceforth every one that poureth wine or beer set no guests, nor let [them] be set, during the sermon and so long as it lasteth, be it before or after noon.

The same rules recur through the century: no shops open, no trading, no games, no dancing and no labour service (Fron) during the sermon. The Albertine articles of 1557 tell the pastor to rebuke such disorders from the pulpit, and the judges to fine the offenders (Sehling 1, p. 325). A Palatine mandate of 1592 (Reformed) complains that labour service was called out on holy days and prayer days and during the weekday sermon (Sehling 19/2, p. 785).

11.12.3 Chattering, sleeping, leaving early

Fines in the church. The Ysenburg-Ronneburg discipline order of 1591 (Reformed) fines those who chatter or sleep during the sermon, leave before it ends, or come late. It sets the length of the sermon in the same breath. Ysenburg-Ronneburg, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1591 (Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 595):

> So jemandt under der predig schwetzet oder schläffet oder in der predig (so des sontags den morgen nicht uber ein stundt, nach mittag aber unnd zur wochenpredig ein halbe stundt wehren soll) nicht zu ende verharret, es sey dann leibs schwacheit oder andere erhebliche ursachen vorhanden, auch nicht zu rechter zeit nach vollendtem leuden erscheinet, solle des sontags 6 ß unnd die wochenpredig 4 ß erlegen.

If any one chatter or sleep during the sermon, or abide not to the end in the sermon (which on Sunday in the morning shall last not over an hour, but in the afternoon and at the weekday sermon half an hour), unless bodily weakness or other weighty causes be present, or appear not at the right time when the ringing is ended, he shall pay six shillings on Sunday and four shillings for the weekday sermon.

Stay to the end. Leaving after the sermon, before the Supper and the prayers, was a common complaint. The orders tell the preachers to exhort the people often to stay until the whole service is done. Augsburg, Kirchenordnung, 1537 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 12, p. 58):

> Von vermanung an das volk, das es bis zu end bei der gemaind beleibe. Und sollen die prediger das volk mit allem fleiß oft ermanen, das es bei ainander bleibe, bis also das gebet, gesang und die hailige sacrament gar verrichtet sein, mit getreuem erinnern, wie uncristenlich das seie, nicht in aller andacht mit den andern cristen und der ganzen kirchen den Herren umb gemaine notturft anruefen

Of exhortation to the people that they remain with the congregation to the end. And the preachers shall with all diligence oft exhort the people that they remain together until the prayer, the singing and the holy sacrament be wholly performed; with faithful reminder how unchristian it is not to call upon the Lord, in all devotion, with the other Christians and the whole church, for the common need Corvey 1603 gives the same charge (Sehling 21, pp. 244–245). Pfalz-Veldenz moved the confession and general prayer to after the sermon "because then the number of the people is greatest" (§11.10.4). That shows the reverse problem: many people came only for the sermon.

Chapter 12. The Liturgical Calendar

This chapter covers the church year in the evangelical church orders of the sixteenth century, as printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts. It asks:

- Which days did the orders keep, and why? What principles decided which feasts stayed, and which went?
- How were the feasts ranked? What happened to the medieval grades (summum, duplex, semiduplex, simplex), to octaves, vigils and the transfer of feasts?
- How was a feast kept in church? What special rubrics, chants, ceremonies and services did the high feasts have, and what was abolished?
- How was a feast kept in common life? What rest from work did the orders require, how was it enforced, and what became of markets, weddings, guild feasts and the folk festivals of the year?
- How were the seasons kept? Were there more services in Advent, Lent and Holy Week? What became of Rogation week and the Ember days? Which seasons were closed to weddings?
- What fasts were kept, by whom, where and why?

How the chapter is laid out.

- §12.1 summarizes the findings, and §12.2 sets out the sources and method.
- §§12.3–12.9 deal with the feasts themselves:
  - §12.3, why feasts were kept at all;
  - §12.4, the medieval grades;
  - §12.5, the Lutheran scale of feasts;
  - §12.6, whole and half holy days;
  - §12.7, the following days of the high feasts;
  - §12.8, individual feasts;
  - §12.9, the Vierzeiten.
- §12.10 covers the ceremonial marks of the feasts in church, the festal ceremonies that were abolished, and the seasonal changes in the service.
- §12.11 covers the keeping of holy days in common life.
- §12.12 covers the seasons: Advent, Lent, Holy Week, Rogation week, the closed seasons and the Ember days.
- §12.13 covers fasting.
- §12.14 deals with occurrence and transfer, and §12.15 with the short calendars of the Upper German towns and the Reformed.
- §12.16 is a concordance of every order quoted.

Each topic is supported by quotations in the original language (Early New High German, Low German or Latin), each followed by an English translation.

12.1 Summary of findings

12.1.1 The main findings

1. The medieval grades did not survive as grades of feasts.

- No order ranks a feast as duplex, semiduplex or simplex, and none has a system of Office grades (§12.4.1).
- The old vocabulary survives in fragments:
  - summum and minus summum as names of Kyrie melodies (Pomerania 1542, Buxtehude 1565, Nördlingen 1544, Hof 1592);
  - summa festa as a name for the highest feasts (Hadersleben 1528, Tangermünde 1603, Gottorf 1587);
  - the ferial, dominical and festal forms of the Office in chapters and convents;
  - the adverbs ferialiter, festive and solenniter;
  - per anticipationem for moving a feast forward (§§12.4.2–12.4.6, 12.14.2).
- Octaves have gone; the "following days" of the high feasts take their place (§12.7). So have vigil fasts; first vespers on the eve take their place (§12.4.6).

2. The ranking is theological. The orders rank feasts by what they commemorate:

- the feasts of Christ, and above all his birth, resurrection and the sending of the Spirit;
- then the days whose "history is written in the Gospel": the Purification, the Annunciation, John the Baptist, the Visitation;
- then the apostles, kept for their example;
- then nothing, for feasts that rest on legend (Corpus Christi, the Holy Cross, the Conception, Nativity and Assumption of Mary).

The formula "nicht umme der dage willen, sonder umme der historien willen" (Bugenhagen, §12.3.3) states the test. Luther's Formula missae of 1523 gives its first form (§12.3.1).

3. The rank is kept by civil and ceremonial means. Most orders do not tell the ranks apart by the liturgical form of the service. They do so by:

- whether work is forbidden all day, until noon, only during the sermon, or not at all (§12.6);
- how many sermons are preached (§12.6.3);
- how many days the feast lasts (§12.7);
- a set of ceremonial marks (§12.10): Latin chant, the grade of the Kyrie, proper prefaces, sequences, figural music and organ, vestments and elevation, bells, the Athanasian Creed, communion, and bans on weddings, markets and guild feasts (§12.11.3).

4. The usual scale has three ranks below Sunday (§12.5.1):

- the high or chief feasts of Christ;
- a second rank of other Gospel feasts (John the Baptist, the Visitation, Michaelmas, and often Purification and Annunciation);
- the apostles' days as half holy days.

Some orders draw two ranks only (Luther, Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed), and in effect the Reformed orders of §12.15). Others number three classes (Grubenhagen 1544, Regensburg 1567, Hoya 1571, Harlingerland 1573/74). Sayn 1582 has four, the fourth being the abolished feasts (§12.5.5). Danzig and Thorn speak of "great" and "small" feasts (§12.5.6).

5. The families of orders follow their models.

- Saxon and Mecklenburg family (§12.5.2). Saxony 1539 and Mecklenburg 1552 set the pattern: "hohe heubtfest des herrn Christi" first, then "uber diese furnemsten fest" the apostles, John, Visitation and Michaelmas, kept in the forenoon. It was taken up across the north and in Pfalz-Zweibrücken.
- Württemberg family (§12.5.3). Holy days are proclaimed by the magistrate. At first there is one list, later divided into whole days and forenoon days.
- Bugenhagen family (§12.5.4). "The three great feasts of Christ" are kept three full days each. The other Gospel feasts are also kept fully. The apostles are moved to the next Sunday.

6. Whole and half holy days (§12.6). From the 1560s the orders of the Harz, Hesse, the Rhine and the Main set out day-by-day tables of whole and half days: Mansfeld 1580, Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1561, Landau 1562, Pfalz-Veldenz 1574, Ysenburg 1582, Nassau-Weilburg 1609 and 1618, Solms 1603. Harvest, markets and craftsmen's work pushed the summer feasts down to half days or onto Sundays. The Transylvanian synod of 1578 has the technical term: the apostles' days are kept intercise, "by halves" (§12.6.4).

7. The middle rank is where the orders differ most (§12.8).

- Michaelmas. It rose to be one of the four chief feasts in the north, in place of the Assumption (§12.8.5, §12.9).
- The Assumption. It was abolished in most orders. In Franconia and Tecklenburg it was kept "for the working country-folk" but preached as the Visitation (§12.8.3).
- The Visitation. It was moved to 15 August in the Nürnberg family (§12.6.4).
- Purification and Annunciation. Everywhere they are treated as feasts of Christ, but their rank ranges from whole holy day to half day (§12.8.1).

8. The Vierzeiten (§12.9). In north Germany the top rank had a fiscal name: the four feasts (Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide and Michaelmas, formerly the Assumption) on which the "four-times penny" was paid. The payment made the rank, and the rank carried liturgical marks:

- a sermon at first vespers (Wolfenbüttel 1543);
- a Latin Mass (Hoya 1571);
- proper prefaces (Lippe 1571).

9. Occurrence and transfer (§12.14). The orders keep simple rules of precedence:

- A feast of Christ on a Sunday displaces the Sunday Gospel; an apostle's day yields to it.
- An apostle's day on a Saturday goes to the Sunday.
- The Annunciation in Holy Week is moved in at least six different ways.

Some orders forbid pastors to move feasts on their own authority.

10. The minimum (§12.15). The Upper German cities (Mülhausen 1529, Reformed; Augsburg 1537, Esslingen 1537 and Strasbourg 1544, Moderate Reformed) and the Reformed territories (Kurpfalz 1563, Nassau-Dillenburg 1582, Anhalt 1599) kept only Sunday and a few feasts of Christ, which reduced the ranking to Luther's two ranks. Esslingen's return to the apostles' days after the "blue Mondays" of 1537 shows how unstable that minimum was.

11. Feasts in church (§12.10). Besides the marks of rank, the orders abolished the acted ceremonies of the medieval year: the Palm Sunday ass, the Good Friday grave, the Easter image, the Ascension figure, the Whitsun dove, the Christmas cradle, and all processions with holy water, crosses and the sacrament (§12.10.10). Some orders kept seasonal changes in the chant: the plain Kyrie and no Gloria in Advent and Lent, the Creed for "Nun bitten" in Advent (§12.10.11).

12. Feasts in common life (§12.11).

- Rest in three degrees. Sunday and the high feasts were kept wholly. The lesser holy days were kept until noon, or only during the sermon (§12.11.1).
- Enforcement was by the magistrate: town gates shut on holy-day mornings, fines, taverns closed, horses unharnessed (§12.11.2).
- Weddings, guild feasts and markets were moved away from the high feasts (§12.11.3).
- The folk festivals were attacked as "heathen" in mandate after mandate: Fastnacht, Kirchweih, Walpurgis and May, the Whitsun ales, the Midsummer fires and the Hagelfeier (§12.11.4).
- Shrove Sunday was turned by Bugenhagen into a feast of baptism (§12.11.5).

13. The seasons (§12.12).

- Luther would not show off Lent, Holy Week or Good Friday "with other rites" than the rest of the year (§12.12.1).
- Lent kept its name and became a season of preaching:
  - repentance and the Passion;
  - more weekday sermons;
  - a daily catechism at the hour of the old Salve Regina;
  - Sunday examinations before the Easter communion.

  There was no daily Lenten Mass (§12.12.3).
- Advent was kept for preaching on the prophecies and the Last Day (§12.12.2). Holy Week was kept for the Supper on Maundy Thursday and the Passion on Good Friday (§12.12.4).
- The catechism seasons. Rogation week, Advent, Lent and harvest became Bugenhagen's four catechism seasons (§12.12.5).
- Closed seasons. Weddings were still forbidden in Advent and Lent and at the high feasts, for a new reason: they drew people from the sermon (§12.12.6).

- The Ember days lost their fast but kept their dates. They became the quarter days for payments, catechism series, the Litany, ordinations and the reading of ordinances (§12.12.7).

14. Fasting (§12.13).

- The obligation abolished. The fixed fasts (Lent, Fridays, Ember days, vigils) were abolished as obligations binding the conscience. Fasting was still praised as good "to tame the body" and was to last "the time of our life" (§12.13.1).
- Exhorted, but free. The earliest orders exhort the people to keep the old fast days freely (§12.13.2).
- The old fasts kept. A few, such as Waldeck 1528 and the Catholic Margrave of Baden, kept the old fasts (§12.13.3).
- Civil abstinence. Magistrates ordered meat-free days for economic reasons and said so: the Nordhausen police order of 1549, which exempts the old, the sick, labourers, children and women in childbed (§12.13.4).
- The new fasts were appointed days of fasting and prayer in time of war, plague and danger, and fasting before the choice of ministers (§12.13.5).
- Before communion. The one regular fast was the communicant's: the sacrament received fasting, and no banquets on the eve of Sundays and feasts (§12.13.6).

12.2 Scope, sources and method

12.2.1 The corpus

The corpus is Sehling's edition, volumes 1–24, as held in `eko.db`. It has 2,350 document records in 30 digitized volumes and half-volumes, with Sehling's own subject registers linked to the pages. The edition prints church orders, agendas, visitation instructions and recesses, parish reports and council decrees. It also prints editorial introductions and notes. This chapter quotes only the sixteenth- and early seventeenth-century texts. The editors' notes are cited as such where they matter.

12.2.2 How the corpus was searched

12.2.3 Cautions

- Record headings and dates in the database. A database record often holds more than one order, and its year field can be wrong. In this chapter every order is named from the running head of the page on which the quotation stands. Some examples:
  - The Henneberg record is dated 1555 in the database but holds texts from 1545 to 1582. The feast rules are in the Kirchenordnung of Georg Ernst of 1582.
  - The Danzig record contains the St Mary's order of 1567, the church fathers' compilation of 1612, and several Elbing and Thorn texts, among them the Thorn order of 1575.
  - A record among the East Frisian orders, dated 1593 in the database, holds on the pages quoted the Harlingerland order of 1573/74.
  - The Sayn record labelled "1314" holds the Kirchenzuchtordnung of 1582 and the Kirchenordnung of 1590.
  - The Mansfeld feast lists belong to the Kirchen-agenda of 1580.
  - The Anhalt record holds orders from 1532 to 1572.
- Editorial summaries and apparatus. A few texts are quoted from the editors' apparatus, not the main text, and are marked as such:
  - Saxony 1539 is printed partly as a summary with quotations.

    - Variants: Nassau-Weilburg's Agende of 1618, Brenz's recension B, the German text B of the Burzenland articles, and the Latin report of the Mediasch synod.
- Two-column prints. Where the edition prints in two columns, the digitized text sometimes interleaves them. The Danzig list of 1612 and the Schwarzburg list of 1587 are examples. Quotations skip the interleaved matter and mark the gap with "[…]".
- Silence. When an order does not mention a feast, it is not always abolished. Many orders list only the days that are holy days. Days kept "ungefeiret in gedechtnus", in memory but without rest, often go unnamed.

12.3 Why keep feasts at all: the principles behind the ranking

Before an order ranks feasts, it usually says why any feast besides Sunday should be kept. Its answer decides the ranking:

- The feasts of Christ. Those that set forth the work of redemption come first.
- Feasts with a Gospel history. Feasts whose history is told in the Gospel come next.
- The apostles and the rest. The apostles, and other days kept only for their examples, come last.
- Legend and abuse. Feasts with no ground in Scripture, or bound up with abuse, are abolished.

The passages below give the main forms of the argument.

12.3.1 Luther, Formula missae, 1523

Wittenberg, Luther, Formula missae et communionis, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 5):

> Primo, introitus dominicales et in festis Christi, nempe paschatis, pentechostes, nativitatis, probamus et servamus, quamquam psalmos mallemus, unde sumpti sunt, ut olim, sed nunc sic usui recepto indulgebimus. Quod si qui apostolorum, virginis aliorumque sanctorum introitus (quando e psalmis aut aliis scripturis sumpti sunt) probare volent, non damnamus. Nos Wittembergae solis dominicis et festis domini sabathissare quaeremus, omnium sanctorum festa prorsus abroganda, vel si quid dignum in eis est, in dominicalibus concionibus miscenda esse putamus. Festum purificationis et annunciationis pro festis Christi, sicut epiphanian et circumcisionem, habemus. Loco festi S. Stephani et Iohannis Evangelistae officium nativitatis placet. Festa S. Crucis anathema sunto. Alii faciant pro sua conscientia vel aliorum infirmitate, quod spiritus suggesserit.

First, the introits of the Sundays and of the feasts of Christ, namely of Easter, Pentecost and the Nativity, we approve and keep, although we had rather have the psalms from which they are taken, as of old; but now we will bear with the received use. And if any will approve the introits of the apostles, of the Virgin, and of other saints (when they are taken out of the psalms or other Scriptures), we condemn them not. We at Wittenberg seek to keep sabbath only on the Lord's days and the feasts of the Lord; the feasts of all the saints we judge are to be utterly abrogated, or, if there be aught worthy in them, to be mingled into the Sunday sermons. The feast of the Purification and of the Annunciation we hold for feasts of Christ, as also the Epiphany and the Circumcision. In the stead of the feast of St Stephen and of John the Evangelist, the office of the Nativity pleaseth us. The feasts of the Holy Cross, let them be anathema. Let others do according to their own conscience, or for the infirmity of others, what the Spirit shall suggest.

Note. This is the charter of the Lutheran calendar. It sets out four points:

- Two ranks only. Sundays and "feasts of the Lord" are kept, and nothing else.
- Marian feasts reclassified. The two Marian feasts with a Gospel history, the Purification and the Annunciation, are counted as feasts of Christ.
- Stephen and John absorbed. Their days are taken into Christmas.
- Holy Cross. The feasts of the Holy Cross are damned outright.

The last sentence leaves room for local custom, and most later orders used it. They kept the apostles, the Visitation, John the Baptist and Michaelmas at a lower rank.

12.3.2 Homberg, 1526: only the mysteries of redemption

The Homberg synod's Reformatio is a Moderate Reformed order of Philip of Hesse's church.

Hessen, Reformatio ecclesiarum Hassiae (Homberg), 1526, cap. 8 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 49):

> De festis et commemorationibus cap. 8 [38] Praeter Dominicam diem nullum festum celebretur, nisi pro mysteriis nostrae redemptionis. Adeo haec sola de caetero habeantur: Nativitatis Christi, Circumcisionis, Epiphaniae, Praesentationis Domini in templum, Incarnationis Verbi Dei sive Annuntiationis, diei Parasceves, Paschae die primo, Ascensionis et Pentecostes die primo, item dies Visitationis Beatae Mariae. […] Horum quippe celebratio non in factis superstitiosis, sed in verbi sancti frequentia et operibus misericordiae est sita.

Of feasts and commemorations, chapter 8. [38] Beside the Lord's day let no feast be celebrated, save for the mysteries of our redemption. Wherefore let these only be kept henceforth: of the Nativity of Christ, of the Circumcision, of the Epiphany, of the Presentation of the Lord in the temple, of the Incarnation of the Word of God or Annunciation, of the day of the Preparation, of Easter the first day, of the Ascension, and of Pentecost the first day; item the day of the Visitation of the Blessed Mary. […] For the celebration of these standeth not in superstitious deeds, but in the frequent use of the holy Word and in works of mercy.

Note. This is the strictest one-rank calendar of any Lutheran-leaning order in the corpus:

- Nothing between Sunday and the feasts of redemption. There are no apostles, no John the Baptist and no Michaelmas.
- One day each. Easter and Pentecost are kept for their "first day" only.

The Homberg Reformatio was never put into force. The later Hessian orders (also Moderate Reformed) keep more (§§12.3.5, 12.3.6).

12.3.3 "Not for the days' sake, but for the histories": Bugenhagen

Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung (Bugenhagen), 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 380):

> Wy sind vor Gade in unsen conscientien an neyne tidt vorbunden, overs sulck schüt deme gemeynen volke to denste, dewile alle stucken der hilgen scrift up eyne tidt nicht gehandelt konen werden. Darumme holde wy ock de hogen feste Christi unde andere, darvan in deme evangelio historien synt bescreven, nicht umme der dage willen, welke gelden (vor Gade unde by den rechtvorstendigen Christen) like vele, de eyne so vele alse de andere, sonder umme der historien willen to predigen.

We are before God in our consciences bound to no time; but such is done for the service of the common people, forasmuch as all the parts of holy Scripture cannot be handled at one time. Therefore we keep also the high feasts of Christ, and others whereof histories are written in the Gospel, not for the days' sake, which (before God and with Christians of right understanding) are worth alike, the one as much as the other, but for the histories' sake, to preach them.

Note. The same words stand in Hamburg 1529 (Sehling 5, pp. 513–514) and, in shorter form, in the other Bugenhagen orders. The test, "whereof histories are written in the Gospel", is the one most later orders use to rank a feast.

Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 95):

> Van Vyerdagen. Denne wy möthen etlike Feste beholden, nicht um der dage willen, sonder van wegen der Predige des Gödtliken wordes, dat alle stücke des Hilligen Evangelii mögen bequemlick uthgelecht werden. Wy nemen nene vyerdage an, den allene de gewöntlike Sondage, Darmede men van dem arbeide rouwen, dat Word Gades hören, Dat Sacrament entfangen unde ynt gemene vor alle nodturfft bidden, ock Gade vor syne woldadt dancken mögen.

Of holy days. For we must retain certain feasts, not for the days' sake, but because of the preaching of the divine Word, that all the parts of the holy Gospel may be conveniently expounded. We accept no holy days save only the wonted Sundays, whereon men may rest from labour, hear the Word of God, receive the Sacrament, and pray in common for every need, and also thank God for his benefits.

12.3.4 A school timetable of doctrine

Saxony (Ernestine), Unterricht der Visitatoren, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 164):

> Welche feste also geordnet sind, denn man kann “nicht alle stücke des evangelii einmals leren. Darümb man solche lere ins jar geteilet hat. Wie man in einer schule ordnet, auf einen tag Virgilium, auf den andern Homerum zu lesen.

Which feasts are so ordained because one cannot teach all the parts of the Gospel at once. Therefore such doctrine hath been divided through the year, as in a school one ordaineth to read Virgil on one day and Homer on another.

The Württemberg order has the feasts of Christ follow the order of his acts. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 16, p. 105):

> Haben wir für gut angesehen, das man ein fest nach dem andern begee unnd in den festen Christi eben die ordnung halte, die in den thaten selbs, natürlicher ordnung und übernatürlicher götlicher anschikkung unnd würckung nach, sich von anfang der empfencknus unnd menschwerdung Christi, unsers liebsten heilands, uns zu erlösung unnd ewiger herrlicheyt so gnedigklich eines nach dem andern erzeiget hat.

We have thought it good that one feast be kept after another, and that in the feasts of Christ that very order be held which, in the deeds themselves, according to the natural order and to the supernatural divine appointment and working, hath shewn itself so graciously one after another, from the beginning of the conception and incarnation of Christ our dearest Saviour, unto our redemption and eternal glory.

12.3.5 Not a commandment of God: a civil and pastoral ordinance

Schwäbisch Hall, Brenz, Kirchenordnung, 1527 (Sehling 17/1, p. 53):

> Bey den kristen ist kein eusserlicher, von Got gebotner Feyertag, wie by den Juden der Sabath und ander Festen gewesen sein, sonder ist ein stetter, ewiger Sabbath oder Feyertag, vom Tauff anhebend, biß in den tod werdendt, darin nimer kein unrecht gescheft volnbracht sol werden. Doch in einer cristenlichen versamlung zur eusserlichen noturfft mag ein ordnung in tagen und Zeytten mit Feyertagen und wercktagen gehalten werden in zuchtiger ordnung und eusserlicher ainikait, nit zu einem gewißen, als von Got gebotten und zur frumckait und selsellikait notig

Among Christians there is no outward holy day commanded of God, as the Sabbath and other feasts have been among the Jews; but there is a continual, everlasting Sabbath or holy day, beginning from baptism and lasting unto death, wherein no unrighteous business shall ever be performed. Yet in a Christian congregation, for outward necessity, an order in days and times, with holy days and working days, may be kept in seemly order and outward unity; not for the conscience, as commanded of God and needful to godliness and salvation

Schwäbisch Hall, Brenz, sermon on the magistrate's ordinance of holy days, 1527 (Sehling 17/1, p. 78):

> Est autem regia via festos non existimare necessarios esse ad felicitatem eternam, sed ad honestam civilem pacem et concordiam ac quietem a labore. Quod enim caret alterna requie, durabile non est. Atque hac via incedit mandatum magistratus civilis de festis. Ordinavit enim dies festos non ad iusticiam divinam necessarios, sed ad publicam pacem et quietem, ut hec sit civilis ordinacio, non papatus supersticio.

Now the royal way is to hold feast days not necessary to eternal felicity, but to honest civil peace and concord and to rest from labour. For that which lacketh alternate rest is not durable. And in this way goeth the commandment of the civil magistrate concerning feasts. For he hath ordained feast days not as necessary to divine righteousness, but for the public peace and quiet, that this may be a civil ordinance, not a superstition of the papacy.

Northeim, Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Sehling 6/2, p. 934):

> Wiewol es unnötig ist, viel festtage anzurichten, und auch aus kraft christlicher freiheit niemand an solche feirtage gebunden sein sol, wie die epistel zun Colossern am andern bezeugt, so hat man dennoch umb der schwachen willen, dieweil das evangelion bey uns noch etlichermasse neue ist, etliche furnemliche feste, damit das wort deste statlicher getrieben und gehort werde, verordnen müssen.

Although it is needless to set up many feast days, and no man also ought to be bound to such holy days, by virtue of Christian liberty, as the epistle to the Colossians in the second chapter witnesseth; yet for the weak's sake, forasmuch as the Gospel is among us yet in some measure new, certain principal feasts have had to be ordained, that the Word may be the more worthily set forth and heard.

The Hessian order of 1532 (Moderate Reformed) also justifies the apostles' days by the need for rest. Hessen, Kirchenordnung, 1532 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 75):

> Nicht sagen wir, daß dise tage besser oder heiliger seint dan andere, sonder daß solchs des gemeinen mans und der ungelerten jugent, dermaßen furgnomen, hohe notturft erfordert, welches sonst, durch ihre arbeit verhindert, nicht zeit haben, zum weinigsten die notturftigest stuck christelichs glaubens zu leren; uberdas ist auch sonst bruderlich und civile, daß man beide, menschen und viehe, zun zeiten ihre reuw lasse.

We say not that these days are better or holier than others, but that the great need of the common man and of the unlearned youth, taken in this wise, requireth it; who otherwise, hindered by their labour, have no time to learn at the least the most needful parts of the Christian faith. Moreover it is also otherwise brotherly and civil that both men and cattle be let have their rest at times.

The Württemberg preamble of 1553 was copied into the Kurpfalz order of 1556, Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1557, Nördlingen 1579 and others. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 16, p. 266):

> Dieweil dann die ordnung der Feyertag gmeiner Kirchen dahin dienstlich, das sie bestimpte zeit wisse, die Predig und die außtheilung der Heiligen Sacrament zu besuchen, und die gemeinen, weltlichen Recht zubeweisung ires gehorsamen diensts gegen Christo, dem Son Gottes, und seiner Kirchen ire besondere freiheit den fürnembsten Feirtagen geben, So wöllen wir, das hie nachbenannte tag zu Feirtag verkündiget und Christlich gebür nach gehalten werden

Forasmuch then as the order of holy days serveth the common Church to this end, that it may know an appointed time to resort to the sermon and to the ministering of the holy Sacraments; and the common temporal laws, to shew their obedient service toward Christ the Son of God and his Church, give their special freedom to the chiefest holy days: we will that the days hereafter named be proclaimed for holy days, and kept according to Christian duty

12.3.6 "The feast of all feasts": Hessen, 1566

> haben wir uns auch fürgenommen, etliche festa Christi zu halten. […] Chrysostomus […] in einer predig vom heiligen Philogonio erzelet etlich festa Christi und nennet die menschwerdung und geburt Christi das fest aller festen. Denn aus diesem haben ihren grund und ursprung Epiphania, Ostern, Himmelfart und Pfingsten.

we also have purposed to keep certain feasts of Christ. […] Chrysostom […] in a sermon on the holy Philogonius rehearseth certain feasts of Christ, and calleth the incarnation and birth of Christ the feast of all feasts. For out of this have Epiphany, Easter, the Ascension and Pentecost their ground and origin.

Note. This is the only place in the corpus where one feast is ranked above all the others, and it is done by patristic argument. The order does not draw a liturgical consequence. Its feasts of Christ are kept "in the form of the Sunday", with only the chants, lessons and prayers changed (p. 258).

12.3.7 The test of Scripture history

Saxony (Albertine), Kirchenordnung of Duke Heinrich, 1539 (Sehling 1, p. 274):

> Uber die gemeinen sontage sollen gehalten werden die hohen heuptfeste des herrn Christi, welche von alters her in der christenheit darzu geordnet sind, das die sondern stücke der historien oder geschicht von Christo, so man im glauben bekennet, in gedechtnis des gemeinen volks behalten und daran dieselben artikel des christlichen glaubens gehandelt werden. Zu solchen festen Christi gehören auch etliche von denen, so man bisher der jungfrauen Marie gefeiert hat.

Over and above the common Sundays shall be kept the high chief feasts of the Lord Christ, which from of old in Christendom were ordained to this end: that the several parts of the history or story of Christ which are confessed in the Creed might be kept in the remembrance of the common people, and those same articles of the Christian faith handled thereon. To such feasts of Christ belong also some of those that were hitherto kept for the Virgin Mary.

Note. This paragraph, the list that follows it (§12.5.2) and the rule for the apostles' days became the model for the Mecklenburg order of 1552. Through that order it reached the Brunswick, Lüneburg, Oldenburg, Lippe, Verden and Palatinate-Zweibrücken orders.

Pfalz-Neuburg uses the same test to decide which days break the continuous reading of Scripture. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 71):

> Doch ausgenommen die hohen fest, die ir historien, darumb sie aufgesetzt sein, in der heiligen schrift haben als Weihennacht, Obersten, Lichtmeß, Annunciationis, Palmtag, Ostern, Auffartstag, Pfingstag, Johannis des taufers, Visitationis etc.; dann an disen festen sol man die capitel aus der bibel lesen, für die epistel und evangelia, darin die historia des fests beschrieben und die sonst darzu verordnet sein.

Yet excepted the high feasts which have their histories, for the sake whereof they were set up, in holy Scripture, as Christmas, Twelfth Day, Candlemas, the Annunciation, Palm Sunday, Easter, Ascension Day, Whitsunday, John the Baptist, the Visitation, etc.; for on these feasts one shall read, for the epistle and Gospel, the chapters out of the Bible wherein the history of the feast is written and which are otherwise appointed thereto.

Gera, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1556 (Sehling 2, p. 158; an extract of the order of the Vogtland superintendents made at Plauen in 1552):

> III. Festa und feiertage. Neben den gewönlichen sonntag sollen die feste Christi und der heiligen apostel, so evangelia und historien in der schrift geben, in allen gemeinen feierlich gehalten, daran gottes wort mit vleis gepredigt, auch das göttlich ampt mit reichung der sacrament, do communicanten vorhanden, und sonderlich der catechismus nachmittage stets getrieben werden. Es sollen aber damit diese nachvolgende und keine andere der heiligen oder sonsten papistische feste gemeint sein.

III. Feasts and holy days. Beside the wonted Sunday, the feasts of Christ and of the holy apostles which give Gospels and histories in the Scripture shall be solemnly kept in all congregations; and on them God's Word shall be diligently preached, and the divine office also held with the ministering of the sacraments, where there be communicants, and in especial the catechism be always taught in the afternoon. But hereby shall be meant these following, and no other feasts of the saints or otherwise papistical.

Transylvania, Honterus, Reformationsbüchlein, 1543 (Sehling 24, p. 189; Latin):

> Dies festos propter multiplices abusus in angustum contraximus observatis tamen omnibus iis, qui in ecclesia generali ob historias in sacris literis comprehensas sunt recepti.

The feast days, because of manifold abuses, we have drawn into a narrow compass, yet keeping all those which have been received in the general Church for the histories contained in the holy writings.

Kosd and Schelken chapters (Transylvania), statutes, 1577 (Sehling 24, p. 400):

> Nolumus omnino in nostris ecclesiis ullam esse celebrandorum festorum varietatem, sed cathalogus festorum dierum in Reformatione Coronensis Ecclesiae traditus observetur. Qui vero in eo adscripti non sunt (ut puta in sacris nullam habentes historiam) omittantur.

We will in no wise that there be in our churches any variety in the feasts to be celebrated, but let the catalogue of feast days delivered in the Reformation of the church of Kronstadt be observed. But those that are not written therein (as having, namely, no history in holy writ) let them be omitted.

The Riga order gives a reason of this kind for keeping the Visitation. Riga, Kirchenordnung, 1530 (Sehling 5, p. 17):

> Alle festa Christi unsers herrn und erlösers, woll wir halten, auf das man das gedechtnus der heilsamen und grossen gnadenreichen werck, die uns zu trost geschehen sind, mit predigten und ermanung des volcks jerlich begehe, als nemlichen weinachten, circumcisionis, epiphanie, purificationis, annunciationis, ostern, pfingsten, mit den andern folgenden tagen, auch ascensionis Christi, und visitationis, die weil das die erste offenbarung Christi ist gewesen, da er noch in mutter leib war

All the feasts of Christ our Lord and Redeemer will we keep, that the remembrance of the wholesome and great gracious works which were done for our comfort may be kept yearly with sermons and exhortation of the people; namely Christmas, the Circumcision, the Epiphany, the Purification, the Annunciation, Easter, Pentecost, with the other days following, also the

Ascension of Christ, and the Visitation, forasmuch as that was the first revelation of Christ, when he was yet in his mother's womb

At Regensburg the feasts that the town's Catholics still keep are dropped, because they lack a Scripture history. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, 1567 (Sehling 13, p. 474):

> Und wiewol in unser stat die papisten viel mehr feirn halten, als Georgii, Corporis Christi, Mariae Magdalenae, Laurentii, Assumtionis Mariae, Nativitatis Mariae, Omnium sanctorum, Martini, Catharinae, Nicolai, so haben wir sie doch zu feiern entlich faren lassen und mit vorgehender, genugsamer erinnerung an die christlich gemein, wie solche fest nit allein gar kein historien heiliger schrift haben, sondern als ganz bäpstisch mit höchster abgötterei und zu bestetigung derselben, wider die reine lere unser kirchen vom widerteil gebraucht werden.

And although in our city the papists keep many more holy days, as of George, of Corpus Christi, of Mary Magdalene, of Laurence, of the Assumption of Mary, of the Nativity of Mary, of All Saints, of Martin, of Catherine, of Nicholas, yet we have at last let go the keeping of them, with foregoing sufficient admonition to the Christian congregation, how such feasts not only have no history of holy Scripture at all, but are used by the adverse part, as wholly papistical, with the highest idolatry and to the confirming of the same, against the pure doctrine of our churches.

12.3.8 The Sabbath argument: Sunday first in dignity

Most Lutheran orders treat the choice of days as free. The synodal order of the Bohemian Brethren (Hussite), printed among the Posen texts, grounds Sunday's precedence in the moral law. Posen, Bohemian Brethren, synodal order, 1576 (Bohemian Brethren; Sehling 4, p. 285):

> VII. Consuetudo circa dies festos. Inter dies festos primam tribuimus dignitatem septimo diei, dominico, quem arbitramur nemini hominum ad operas externas et serviles, ullo etiam libertatis christianae praetextu adhibere licere. Idque propterea, quod institutionem eius non pro ceremonia, sed pro parte moralis, aeternum inviolabilis, legis agnoscimus.

VII. The custom concerning feast days. Among the feast days we give the first dignity to the seventh day, the Lord's, which we judge it lawful for no man to employ in outward and servile works, under any pretext even of Christian liberty; and that because we acknowledge its institution not for a ceremony, but for a part of the moral law, everlastingly inviolable.

12.4 The medieval grades and what became of them

The late-medieval rite ranked a feast in two ways. The first was its liturgical grade: totum duplex, duplex, semiduplex and simplex, with summum or duplex maius at the top in many diocesan uses. The second was its civil status: a festum fori, on which work was forbidden, or a festum chori, kept only in choir. The grade decided the Office: nine lessons or three, proper or common, first vespers, an octave, the colour and the ceremony. This section asks which of these terms and categories the evangelical orders kept.

12.4.1 Duplex, semiduplex, simplex: absent

No order in the corpus uses duplex, semiduplex, simplex or totum duplex as the grade of a feast. Every hit for these words is ordinary Latin. The Bohemian Brethren's order for Posen (1576, Hussite) calls certain duties duplicia, and the Gottorf catechism (1571) teaches a triplex usus legis. Neither has anything to do with feasts. There are no abbreviations such as dupl. or semidupl. either. Festum fori occurs only in a modern editor's note (on Nürnberg 1522). The medieval scale of Office grades did not pass into the evangelical church orders.

12.4.2 Summum and minus summum: grades of the chant

Summum survives, but as the name of a melody, not of a feast. In the late-medieval Kyriale the Kyrie and Gloria were sung to melodies graded by rank:

- summum for the highest feasts, minus summum for lesser doubles;
- paschale for Eastertide, dominicale for Sundays;
- angelicum, apostolicum, de martyribus, de confessoribus, de virginibus for saints' days;

- feriale for weekdays.

A number of Lutheran orders keep this system, and with it keep grading the day.

The Pomeranian order gives the grade of the Kyrie at Mass. Pomerania, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 4, p. 356):

> Darup dat kyrie dominicale, efft me mach ock up die sondage, kyrie angelicum, de martiribus, effte confessoribus, efft virginibus, wo man sie genomet hefft singen, dominicale im advent und in der vasten, dat paschale tuschen pingsten und paschen, dat summum up die hohern fest, effte dat minus summum.

Thereupon the Kyrie dominicale; or one may also sing upon the Sundays the Kyrie angelicum, de martyribus, or confessoribus, or virginibus, as they have been named; the dominicale in Advent and in Lent, the paschale between Whitsuntide and Easter, the summum upon the higher feasts, or else the minus summum.

Note. This is the clearest statement in the corpus of the old Kyrie grades applied by rank. The saints' melodies are now simply alternatives for ordinary Sundays. The summum is kept for "the higher feasts" (die hohern fest), and minus summum is offered as a lesser alternative there.

The Buxtehude Agende has these headings over its printed Kyrie melodies, which the editor traces to Lucas Lossius's Psalmodia. Buxtehude, Agende, 1565 (Sehling 7/1, p. 123):

> In summis festivitatibus et dominica Trinitatis cum textu. Minus summum. I. In festis beatae virginis Mariae. II. Kyrie paschale. Dominicale. In Adventu Domini. Angelicum Kyrie. Kyrie apostolicum. Dominicale.

On the highest festivities and on the Sunday of the Trinity, with the text. Minus summum. I. On the feasts of the blessed Virgin Mary. II. Kyrie paschale. Dominicale. In the Advent of the Lord. Kyrie angelicum. Kyrie apostolicum. Dominicale.

At Hof the grades appear in the Latin school Mass in the monastery church. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 472):

> Mox II. ex missali magno canitur Kyrie certi temporis vel angelicum in Adventu Domini vel Kyrie Magnae Deus potentiae de Nativitate Christi, cui Et in terra angelicum subiicitur, vel Kyrie dominicale maius post dominicam Septuagesimae usque ad Pascha vel Kyrie paschale vel Kyrie Fons bonitatis cum Et in terra angelico vel Kyrie dominicale minus post festum Trinitatis vel de apostolis, martyribus etc., prout tempus requirit et libri ordo monstrat.

Straightway, secondly, is sung out of the great missal the Kyrie of the proper season: either the angelicum in the Advent of the Lord; or the Kyrie Magnae Deus potentiae of the Nativity of Christ, whereunto the Et in terra angelicum is joined; or the greater dominicale after the Sunday of Septuagesima until Easter; or the Kyrie paschale; or the Kyrie Fons bonitatis with the Et in terra angelicum; or the lesser dominicale after the feast of the Trinity; or that de apostolis, de martyribus, etc., as the time requireth and the order of the book sheweth.

Note. At Hof the melodies are chiefly seasonal. Its German Kirchenamt still names them by rank all the same:

- The same Kyrie is called angelicum seu feriale in Advent (p. 432).
- It is called angelicum seu festivale on St Laurence's day (p. 445) and on the feasts of Mary (p. 450).
- The Benedicamus at vespers is labelled festivale, dominicale, paschale or feriale (for example "Benedicamus festivale seu feriale", p. 422).

Nördlingen reserves the summum for Pentecost and Trinity. Nördlingen, Ordnung der ceremonien, 1544 (Sehling 12, pp. 321–322):

> Zu Pfingsten. 1. Introitus de Spiritu oder Kom, hailiger Gaist. 2. Kyrie summum und Et in terra wie zu Ostern. […] De sancta Trinitate. 1. Introitus de tempore. 2. Kyrie summum mit dem Et in terra. 3. Nach der epistel, den sequenz de tempore.

At Whitsuntide. 1. The introit de Spiritu, or "Come, Holy Ghost, God and Lord". 2. Kyrie summum and Et in terra, as at Easter. […] Of the holy Trinity. 1. The introit de tempore. 2. Kyrie summum with the Et in terra. 3. After the epistle, the sequence de tempore.

In Mecklenburg the grade name passes to a German Kyrie. Mecklenburg, Ordeninge der misse, 1545 (Sehling 5, p. 151):

> Das düdesche kyrie summum: Ach vader, alder högeste godt, schölen de kerckheren up den dörpern singen, unde dem volke idt leren, dat de ganze kercke idt singe.

The Dutch [that is, German] Kyrie summum, "Ah Father, God most high of all", shall the parsons in the villages sing, and teach it the people, that the whole church may sing it.

"The highest feasts" as a category. Outside the chant books, summa festa or summae festivitates is used simply as the name of the top rank of days.

The Hadersleben article on Latin singing. Hadersleben, Artikel, 1528 (Sehling 23, p. 64):

> Eth schal ock friig sin, dat sie in den groten festen mögen Gloria in excelsis up latin singen, des gelicken Alleluya und eine sequentien, alse Grates nunc omnes, Victime Paschali, Veni Sancte Spiritus, und de leyssen darinn, item dat latinische Patrem, prefatien, Sanctus unnd Agnus Dei, doch dat aleine up di groten feste.

It shall also be free that they may on the great feasts sing Gloria in excelsis in Latin, likewise the Alleluia and a sequence, as Grates nunc omnes, Victimae paschali, Veni Sancte Spiritus, and the Leisen therein; item the Latin Patrem, the prefaces, the Sanctus and the Agnus Dei: yet that only upon the great feasts.

Note. In the Latin version of these articles, preserved in the edition's apparatus, this article is headed De Latine cantionibus in summis festis. The Low German "groten feste" and the Latin summa festa are the same rank.

Tangermünde's Ritus is a local custom-book, printed from Küster. Tangermünde, Ritus, 1603 (Sehling 3, p. 338):

> Si summae festivitates celebrando veniunt et incipiuntur, a die solis per totam septimanam a concionandi labore feriantur ministri. 3. In summis festis diaconus, qui matutinam habet concionem, explicat textum evangelicum, pastor alium convenientem. Alter diaconus lectionem Epistolae.

If the highest festivities come to be celebrated and are begun, the ministers shall rest from the labour of preaching from the Sunday through the whole week. 3. On the highest feasts the deacon that hath the morning sermon expoundeth the text of the Gospel, the pastor another that is convenient, the other deacon the lesson of the Epistle.

Gottorf, visitation articles, 1587 (Sehling 23, p. 371):

> 12. An Praefatio Dominus vobiscum in summis festis ante communionem cantetur et qua lingua.

12. Whether the Preface, Dominus vobiscum, be sung on the highest feasts before the communion, and in what tongue.

12.4.3 Nine lessons and three

In the medieval Office, a feast of higher grade had a matins of three nocturns and nine lessons. A simple feast or a feria had one nocturn and three lessons. Luther's Formula missae already takes the three-lesson matins as the norm for ordinary days.

Wittenberg, Luther, Formula missae, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 9):

> In reliquis diebus, quas ferias vocamus, nihil video, quod non ferri possit, modo missae abrogentur. Nam matutinae trium lectionum et horae, tum vesperae et completorium de tempore (exclusis sanctorum feriis) nihil sunt nisi scripturae divinae verba.

In the rest of the days, which we call ferias, I see nothing that may not be borne, so that the masses be abolished. For the matins of three lessons, and the hours, and also vespers and compline de tempore (the holy days of the saints being excepted), are nothing but the words of divine Scripture.

Pfalz-Neuburg still reckons with both forms in chapters and monasteries. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, pp. 77–78 and 95):

> Die mögen in den stiften und clöstern, da man teglich metten singt, also geordnet werden, das, wann man novem lectiones helt, drei aus den historischen büchern der bibel als Mose, Josua, Judicum, Ruth, Samuel, der Könige und Chronica, […] darnach drei aus den propheten […] Desgleichen sollen die drei metten in der marterwochen zu ir gewonlichen zeit auch nach obgemeltem unterricht, doch on alles klopfen, rumpeln und getümmel gehalten werden, allein das, wo man sie novem lectionum helt, sollen die letsten drei oder, wo man sie allein trium lectionum helt, sollen dieselben drei in den pfarrkirchen und, wo das, gemein volk darbei ist, teutsch gelesen werden

These may be so ordered in the chapters and cloisters where matins is sung daily, that when nine lessons are kept, three be taken out of the historical books of the Bible, as Moses, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, the Kings and Chronicles, […] thereafter three out of the prophets […] Likewise the three matins in the week of the Passion shall be kept at their wonted time, and also according to the instruction aforesaid, yet without all knocking, rumbling and tumult; only that where they are kept with nine lessons, the last three, or where they are kept with three lessons only, those same three, shall be read in German in the parish churches, and where the common people are present.

In Waldeck a high feast raises the village matins by one grade. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, p. 276):

> Früh zur Metten Sollen die Schüler mit dem Veni sancte anfangen. Volgents eyn Invitatorium und Venite, ob man kan, Darnach Antiphon und Psalmen de Dominica oder Festo, Hierauff die Lectiones und Responsoria des gemeynen Sontags und heyligentages, wie droben unter dem titel: Kirchen Ordnung auff den Dörffern, Aber auff hohe Festtage drei Lectiones und Responsoria, dem fest gemeß, Volgents Te Deum laudamus, Benedictus cum sua Antiphona, Collecten und Benedicamus singen.

Early, at matins, the scholars shall begin with the Veni sancte; next an invitatory and Venite, if it can be done; thereafter antiphon and psalms de Dominica or de Festo; hereupon the lessons and responds of the common Sunday and holy day, as above under the title "Church order in the villages"; but upon high feast days three lessons and responds, agreeable to the feast; next sing Te Deum laudamus, Benedictus with its antiphon, the collects and Benedicamus.

In the Transylvanian order the more solemn feasts keep a fuller matins. Transylvanian Saxons, Kirchenordnung, 1547 (Sehling 24, p. 222; Latin version):

> In solennioribus autem festis tres antiphonae cum suis psalmis retinentur. […] His succedit: Te Deum laudamus Germanicum, in maioribus festis etiam Latinum.

But on the more solemn feasts three antiphons with their psalms are retained. […] These are followed by the Te Deum laudamus in German, on the greater feasts in Latin also.

12.4.4 Proper, common and de tempore

Where the Office was still sung in a chapter or convent, the orders use the old categories of the Office. These are the ferial, dominical and festal forms; the proper de festo against the commune sanctorum; the octave; and the suffragia.

Goslar, collegiate church of SS. Simon and Jude, Ordnung für das Stundengebet, 1534 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 264):

> Vesper Psalmi feriales cum una Gloria et una anthifona, dar nha lectio ex Novo testamento, inchoande in principio Mathei etc., in festo responsorium de festo, imnus ferialis aut dominicalis vel de festo, Magnificat cum anthifona feriali, in Dominica tertia anthifona ex ewangelio dominicali, in festivitatibus de festo, dar nach Kyrieleyson - Christeleyson - Kyrieleyson, Pater noster, versiculus Ostende nobis, Domine, misericordiam tuam etc., collecta dominicalis vel festivalis, Benedicamus.

Vespers. The ferial psalms with one Gloria and one antiphon; thereafter a lesson out of the New Testament, beginning at the beginning of Matthew, etc.; on a feast the respond of the feast; the hymn ferial, or dominical, or of the feast; Magnificat with the ferial antiphon, on Sunday the third antiphon out of the Sunday Gospel, on festivities of the feast; thereafter Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison, Pater noster, the versicle Ostende nobis, Domine, misericordiam tuam, etc., the dominical or festal collect, Benedicamus.

Crevese, Benedictine nunnery, visitation recess, 1541 (Sehling 3, p. 203):

> Sunst sollen ock die junkfrowen gemeinlich horas de tempore, und van hohen festen, wa bether gescheen, halden. Desgleichen, wan ein fest de sanctis kommet, sollen sie dat commune sanctorum halden und duse gesenge alle, wie in dem stift to Coln an der Sprew gesungen werd, reformert.

Otherwise also the maidens shall commonly keep the hours de tempore, and of the high feasts, as hitherto hath been done. Likewise, when a feast de sanctis cometh, they shall keep the commune sanctorum, and all these chants reformed, as they are sung in the chapter at Cölln on the Spree.

Note. Proper Offices are allowed for the high feasts. A saint's day gets only the common Office, which names no saint's legend. The same wording recurs in the other Brandenburg convent recesses (Sehling 3, pp. 219, 238, 272, 305).

At the Ansbach chapters saints' octaves and suffrages are forbidden. Brandenburg-Ansbach, Ordnung singens und lesens bei den Stiften, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 314):

> Alle suffragia de sanctis sollen sie underlassen; dann sie stellen das vertrauen in die hailigen wider das erst gebot Gottes. Allein mogen sie an den werktagen suffragia pro pace und pro peccatis halten. Item sie sollen auch von kainem hailigen die octava, den achtenden, halten. Die histori Trinitatis ist rain; die mögen sie halten, als sie wollen.

All suffrages de sanctis they shall leave off, for they set trust in the saints against the first commandment of God. Only upon the working days they may keep the suffrages pro pace and pro peccatis. Item, they shall also keep the octave, the eighth day, of no saint. The history of the Trinity is pure; that they may keep as they will.

Note. This is the only explicit ruling on octaves among the rank passages. Elsewhere octaves are never forbidden, but they are also simply never mentioned. The Lutheran "three days" of the high feasts (§12.7) took their place.

12.4.5 Ferialiter, festive, solenniter

Three adverbs from the old rubrics survive: ferialiter, festive and solenniter. Ferialiter is used in two opposite senses:

- In Anhalt it keeps its medieval meaning: "in the weekday manner", without the Gloria in excelsis.
- In the county of Wied (Reformed) it means "as a holiday", from classical feriae.

Anhalt's order of the German hymns builds a three-step scale into the Mass:

- the high feasts, with sequence, Patrem, preface, Sanctus and Agnus Dei;
- other Sundays and holy days, with German hymns and Luther's exhortation;
- weekdays, ferialiter.

Anhalt, Ordnung der deutschen Gesänge, before February 1551 (Sehling 2, pp. 554–555):

> an hohen festen das alleluia und sequenz, an andern sontagen ader feiertagen ein deutscher gesang [...] und volgents an hohen festen singe der priester die praefacio und die schueler das sanctus. An andern son- und feiertagen soll gelesen werden die vermanunge doctor Mart. Luthers an die communicanten. [...] Under der communion aber an hohen festen soll gesungen werden das agnus dei [...] An den werkeltagen soll es also gehalten werden. Fruehe soll eine kurze metten gesungen werden; so aber communicanten vorhanden, mag solche metten underlassen, und das ganze officium coenae in gleicher mass und gestalt, wie oben angezeigt, doch ferialiter ut vocant gehalten werden, als nemblich introitus dominicalis ader ein deutscher psalm kirieleison, doch ane gloria in excelsis on high feasts the Alleluia and sequence, on other Sundays or holy days a German hymn [...] and then on high feasts let the priest sing the preface and the scholars the Sanctus. On other Sundays and holy days shall be read Doctor Martin Luther's exhortation to the communicants. [...] But under the communion on high feasts shall be sung the Agnus Dei [...] On the working days it shall be kept thus. In the morning a short matins shall be sung; but if there be communicants, such matins may be left off, and the whole office of the Supper kept in like measure and form as above shewed, yet ferialiter, as they call it, namely the Sunday introit or a German psalm, Kyrie eleison, but without Gloria in excelsis

Anhalt, Kirchenordnung of Prince Bernhard, 1568 (Sehling 2, p. 569):

> Do aber festum annuntiationis in der marterwoche gefiele, sol mans ufn palmabend halten, visitationis und nativitatis Marie ferialiter mit den gewonlichen evangelien zu halten.

But if the feast of the Annunciation fall in the week of the Passion, it shall be kept on the eve of Palm Sunday; the Visitation and the Nativity of Mary are to be kept ferialiter, with their wonted Gospels.

Note. The Visitation and Nativity of Mary are not holy days. Their Gospels are read on the day, in the weekday form. This is the only order in the corpus that keeps the Nativity of Mary in this reduced way. Compare §12.8.4.

Wied (Reformed) has a two-column list of feasts. Wied, Synodalbeschlüsse, 1564 (Reformed; Sehling 19/1, p. 467):

> Sequitur catalogus festorum. ferialiter: Circumcisionis Christi Trium Regum Purificationis Mariae Annunciationis Mariae Matthiae Visitationis Mariae Pasche cum sequente proxima Ascensionis Christi Pentecostes cum sequente Iohannis Baptistae [...] Festum Nativitatis Christi cum duobus sequentibus diebus Omnium Apostolorum tantum fiet concio: Omnium Sanctorum Conversionis Pauli Marci Mariae Magdalenae Laurentii Natalis Mariae Decollationis Iohannis Michaelis Catarinae In festis patronorum cuiuslibet Ecclesiae

There followeth the catalogue of feasts. Ferialiter [that is, to be kept as holidays]: of the Circumcision of Christ; of the Three Kings; of the Purification of Mary; of the Annunciation of Mary; of Matthias; of the Visitation of Mary; of Easter with the next day following; of the Ascension of Christ; of Pentecost with the day following; of John the Baptist [...] the feast of the Nativity of Christ with the two days following; of all the Apostles. Only a sermon shall be held: on All Saints; the Conversion of Paul; Mark; Mary Magdalene; Laurence; the Nativity of Mary; the Beheading of John; Michael; Catherine; on the feasts of the patrons of every church.

Note. Sehling's editor reads the first column as the whole holy days and the second as the half holy days, kept by a morning sermon only. Two things stand out:

- Michaelmas. In the north it is one of the four chief feasts (§12.9). Here it is only a sermon day.
- Patronal feasts. The feast of each church's patron survives at the lowest grade. No other order in the corpus keeps it.

Amt Leisnig, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 610):

> Auch sollen die drei hohen feste, allwege drei tag feierlich und festive mit allen cerimonien gehalden werden, und sich sunst in allem andern des buch underricht der visitatorn gehorsamlich halden

Also the three high feasts shall always be kept three days, solemnly and festive, with all ceremonies; and in all else they shall keep themselves obediently to the book, the Instruction of the Visitors.

12.4.6 Vigils and first vespers

The medieval vigil, with its fast and vigil office, disappears. What survives is the evening before a feast: first vespers, with confession for the next day's communicants and on the higher feasts a sermon. The name vigilia survives with it. So does the old rule that only feasts of some rank have a proper eve.

Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 411):

> Ordo cantilenarum in vespertinis precibus, et quidem in specie ad omnes dies pridianos festorum (vulgus vigilias appellat), hoc est: dominicas et festa proxime praecedentes dies.

The order of chants at the evening prayers, and that in particular for all the days before feasts (the common people call them vigils), that is, the days next going before Sundays and feasts.

Lohr (county of Rieneck), Vesperordnung, 1588 (Sehling 11, p. 699):

> Die vesper belangend soll dieselbige sommerzeit umb 3 uhr, winterzeit aber der gelegenheit nach etwas früer nach anordnung der pfarherrn geleutet und angefangen werden und in vigiliis oder primis vesperis, das ist am abent der hohen und anderer festen, sonn- und feiertagen (damit die jugent im psalliren und choralgesang, wie in allen kirchen gebreuchlich, geüebet werde) mit lateinischen psalmen, responsoriis, hymnis, Magnificat, collectis, versiculis, Benedicamus und anderm nach ordnung der psalmodiae L. Lossii [...] gesungen und gehalten werden

Touching vespers, the same shall be rung and begun in summer-time at three of the clock, but in winter-time somewhat earlier as occasion serveth, after the ordering of the parsons; and in vigiliis or at the first vespers, that is, on the eve of the high and other feasts, Sundays and holy days (that the youth may be exercised in psalmody and plain-song, as is used in all churches), it shall be sung and kept with Latin psalms, responds, hymns, Magnificat, collects, versicles, Benedicamus and the rest, according to the order of the Psalmodia of L. Lossius [...]

Burg has a sermon at vespers on the eve of the high feasts. Burg, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1542 (Sehling 2, p. 427):

> Erstlich alle sonnabende und in vigiliis der hohen feste auch anderer evangelischer viertage sal in beiden pfarkirchen von dem pfarrer oder seinem diacon vesper gehalten werden [...] Und so es vor not und biqueme eracht und angesehen und > sonderlich in den vigilien der hohen feste, so sal nach der vesper auch geprediget werden

First, on all Saturdays, and in vigiliis of the high feasts and also of the other evangelical holy days, vespers shall be held in both parish churches by the parson or his deacon [...] And if it be deemed needful and convenient, and in especial on the vigils of the high feasts, there shall be preaching also after vespers.

Bremen gives a list of thirteen feasts, from Sunday to Michaelmas, and then adds a rule. Bremen, Kirchenordnung, 1561 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 513):

> 9. Dies Pentecostes una cum adiunctis duobus 10. Dies Trinitatis 11. Dies Johannis Bapistae
> 10. Dies Visitationis Mariae 13. Dies Michaelis In horum festorum vigilia et parasceve circa horam secundam fiat vespera a tota Latina Schola in templo Beatae Virginis canendo unum atque alterum psalmum Latinum, responsorium pro tempore et hymnum Magnificat. In reliquis autem templis Germanice canatur.

9. The day of Pentecost, together with the two joined to it. 10. The day of the Trinity. 11. The day of John the Baptist. 12. The day of the Visitation of Mary. 13. The day of Michael. On the vigil and preparation of these feasts, about the second hour, let vespers be held by the whole Latin school in the church of the Blessed Virgin, singing one or two Latin psalms, the respond for the season, and the hymn Magnificat. But in the rest of the churches let it be sung in German.

Nicolaus Hausmann's order for Anhalt is the only order in the corpus that would like to keep the night vigil of Christmas and Easter. Anhalt, Nicolaus Hausmann's order, 1532 (Sehling 2, p. 542):

> Vigilia paschce. natalis. Es wer auch nicht bose, das die christnacht und ostern mit der wache gehalden wurden, wie für alters.

The vigil of Easter; of the Nativity. It were also not evil that Christmas night and Easter were kept with the watch, as of old.

Note. Hausmann goes on to name the abuses that have grown up around the night watch. He proposes instead an early service at about three in the morning (p. 543).

12.5 The Lutheran scale of feasts

12.5.1 The common pattern

Most orders rank the feast days in the same few steps, though the words vary.

Rank	Names used in the orders	Usual days	How kept
Sunday	der Sontag, des Herren Tag, dies dominica	every Sunday	the whole day; the norm by which the feasts are measured
1. The high feasts	hohe Feste, Hauptfeste, heuptfest des herrn Christi, de dre groten feste Christi, summa festa, Vierzeiten, große Feste	Christmas, Easter, Whitsunday, each with one or two following days; often Michaelmas as the fourth; sometimes Ascension	the whole day, usually on two or three days; two or three sermons; Latin chant, sequence and proper preface; figural music; communion; no weddings
2. The other feasts of Christ and "Gospel" feasts	die andern festa Christi, fürnembste Feste, andere herliche fest, gemeine fest, mittelmeßige festa	Circumcision (New Year), Epiphany, Purification, Annunciation, Ascension, Trinity; John the Baptist, Visitation, Michaelmas; in some orders Maundy Thursday and Good Friday	usually the whole day, "as on Sundays", with the introit, sequence and preface de tempore; in some orders only the forenoon
3. Apostles' days and other saints' days	Aposteltage, kleine Feste, halbe Feiertage, festa apostolorum	the apostles; the Conversion of Paul; often Mary Magdalene, the Beheading of John, All Saints	a sermon in the forenoon, work after it; or no holy day, with the Gospel preached on the next Sunday or at a weekday sermon

4. Abolished feasts	papistische feste, abgötterische feste	Corpus Christi, Holy Cross, the Conception, Nativity and Assumption of Mary (in most orders), All Souls, local saints	not kept; sometimes proclaimed and explained so that people know why they are gone

The orders differ in three ways:

- How many ranks they draw. Some have two, many three, and a few four.
- Where the middle feasts stand. John the Baptist, the Visitation, Michaelmas, and in some orders Purification and Annunciation, sit either with the feasts of Christ or with the apostles.
- What a lower rank means. It may mean a half holy day, a single sermon, a transfer to Sunday, or the loss of the holy day altogether.

The families below show the main lines.

12.5.2 The Saxon and Mecklenburg family: "over and above these chiefest feasts"

The line starts with the Saxon Unterricht der Visitatoren of 1528. It speaks of two ranks in its own words.

Saxony (Ernestine), Unterricht der Visitatoren, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 164):

> Were auch gut, das sie eintrechtiglich feierten, die sontage, annunciationis, purificationis, visitationis der reinen jungfrauen Maria, S. Johannis des teufers, Michaelis, der aposteln, Magdalene, die selben feste weren denn bereit abgangen, und künten nicht bequemlich alle wider aufgericht werden. Und in sonderheit sol man halten den christag, beschneidung, epiphanie, die osterfeier, auffart, pfingsten, doch abgethan, was unchristlich legenden oder gesang darinnen gefunden werden.

It were good also that they should keep holy day with one accord on the Sundays, the Annunciation, the Purification, the Visitation of the pure Virgin Mary, St John the Baptist, Michaelmas, the apostles', Magdalene; unless those feasts be already fallen away and could not conveniently all be set up again. And in especial one shall keep Christmas, the Circumcision, the Epiphany, the Easter holy days, the Ascension, Whitsuntide; yet with all things done away that are found therein of unchristian legends or chants.

In Albertine Saxony the feasts of Christ follow the preamble quoted in §12.3.7. Sehling gives this part of the order in his own summary but quotes the text. Saxony (Albertine), Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Sehling 1, p. 274):

> Der tag nativitatis oder der geburt Christi sampt den andern und auch dem dritten nechstfolgenden, so man daran communicanten hat. Der tag circumcisionis oder der beschneidung Christi. Der tag epiphanie, das ist der erscheinung oder offenbarung Christi, da die weisen aus morgenland durch erscheinung des sterns zu Christo kamen. Dieser tag wird auch gehalten von der taufe Christi. Der tag der offenbarung Christi in dem tempel, so man nennet purificationis Mariae. Der tag annuntiationis seu conceptionis Christi, da Christus in der jungfrauen leib empfangen ist. Der tag coenae domini, so man nennet den grünen donnerstag, daran von dem abendmal und hochwirdigen sakrament zu predigen ist. Der tag des leidens Christi, so der karfreitag genennet wird. Der ostertag von der auferstehung des herrn sampt dem nechstfolgenden und dritten, so man communicanten hat. Der tag der himelfart Christi. Der pfingstag von der sendung des heiligen geists. Der heiligen dreifaltigkeit fest gefellet auf den nehesten sontag nach pfingsten. Hierüber sollen auch diese fest gehalten werden. Der tag S. Johannis des teufers zu ehren dem heiligen predigampt des evangelii von Christo. Der tag visitationis, da Maria ire mume Elisabeth heimgesucht hat von wegen derselben historien des evangelii. Der tag Michaelis, daran von den heiligen engeln zu predigen. […] Man mag auch die tage der heiligen aposteln halten, das man vor mittag daran predige und, so es fürfelt, die communio halte. Nachmittage aber mag man wol der teglichen arbeit warten, oder, wo man wil, mag man die evangelia und gedechtnis von den heiligen aposteln auf die nehesten sontag, so darnach gefallen, zur mittags oder vesper predigt verlegen. Desgleichen mag es auch mit etlichen anderen festen der heiligen, welcher historien im evangelio beschrieben sind, gehalten werden, als da sind S. Paulus bekerung, Marie Magalena, S. Johannis enthauptung, S. Stephan etc.

The day of the Nativity or birth of Christ, with the second and also the third next following, if there be communicants thereon. The day of the Circumcision of Christ. The day of the Epiphany, that is, of the appearing or manifestation of Christ, when the wise men from the east came to Christ by the appearing of the star; this day is also kept of the baptism of Christ. The day of the manifestation of Christ in the temple, which is called the Purification of Mary. The day of the Annunciation or Conception of Christ, when Christ was conceived in the Virgin's womb. The day of the Lord's Supper, which is called Maundy Thursday, whereon one is to preach of the Supper and the most worthy Sacrament. The day of the Passion of Christ, which is called Good Friday. Easter day, of the resurrection of the Lord, with the next following and the third, if there be communicants. The day of the Ascension of Christ. Whitsunday, of the sending of the Holy Ghost. The feast of the holy Trinity falleth on the next Sunday after Pentecost. Over and above these, these feasts also shall be kept: the day of St John the Baptist, to the honour of the holy office of preaching the Gospel of Christ; the day of the Visitation, when Mary visited her cousin Elisabeth, because of that history of the Gospel; the day of Michael, whereon one is to preach of the holy angels. […] One may also keep the days of the holy apostles, so that one preach thereon before noon and, if occasion serve, hold the communion. But in the afternoon one may well attend to the daily work; or, if one will, one may put over the Gospels and remembrance of the holy apostles to the next Sunday that followeth, to the midday or evening sermon. Likewise it may be done also with certain other feasts of the saints whose histories are written in the Gospel, as are St Paul's conversion, Mary Magdalene, St John's beheading, St Stephen, etc.

The Merseburg synodal instruction sets the two ranks side by side, and its title for the lower rank is a phrase worth noting: "doch ahne gebotene feir", without a commanded holy day. Merseburg, Synodalunterricht, 1544 (Sehling 2, p. 20):

> Den ganzen tag zu feiren fur und nachmittage zu predigen: Alle sontage und volgende evangelische festa: nativitas Christi sampt dem andern auch dem dritten tage, so man daran communicanten hat […] Hiruber sollen dise feirtage gehalten werden: der tag S. Johannis des teufers zu ehren dem heiligen predigtampt des evangelii von Christo der tag visitationis, da die junkfrau Maria ihre muhme Elisabet heimgesucht hat von wegen der feinen historien des evangelii der tag Michaelis dar von den lieben engeln zu predigen. An volgenden tagen solle fur mittage predigt und communion, do es fur fiele, gehalten und die dem volk auf den sontag zuvor doch ahne gebotene feir vorkundiget werden. Als nemlich der tag cene domini, so man den grunen donnerstag nennet, daran von dem abentmahl und hochwirdigen sacrament zu predigen der tag des leidens Christi, so der karfreitag genennet wirt, dar man die ganz historia des leidens Christi dem volk furtragen solt der tag Petri und Pauli und aller apostel zu ehren des heiligen apostelampts

To keep holy day the whole day, and to preach before and after noon: all Sundays, and the following evangelical feasts: the Nativity of Christ with the second and also the third day, if there be communicants thereon […] Over and above these, these holy days shall be kept: the day of St John the Baptist, to the honour of the holy office of preaching the Gospel of Christ; the day of the Visitation, when the Virgin Mary visited her cousin Elisabeth, because of the fine history of the Gospel; the day of Michael, whereon to preach of the dear angels. On the following days preaching and communion, if it so fall out, shall be held before noon, and they shall be declared to the people on the Sunday before, yet without a commanded holy day: namely the day of the Lord's Supper, which is called Maundy Thursday, whereon to preach of the Supper and the most worthy Sacrament; the day of the Passion of Christ, which is called Good Friday, whereon the whole history of the Passion of Christ should be set forth to the people; the day of Peter and Paul and of all apostles, to the honour of the holy apostolic office

Note. Maundy Thursday and Good Friday stand in the lower rank here, beside the apostles. The feasts of Christ are placed by their standing as holy days, not by their theological weight.

The Mecklenburg order of 1552 is the fullest form of the Saxon scheme, and it is the one most often copied. Mecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 5, pp. 200–201):

> Von den besondern festen oder feiertagen, so man im jar halten sol. Uber die gemeinen sontage sollen gehalten werden die hohen heubtfest des herrn Christi, als da sind. Der tag Nativitatis oder der geburt Christi, samt dem andern und dritten folgenden. Der tag Circumcisionis oder der beschneidung Christi. Der tag Epiphanie, das ist der erscheinung oder offenbarung Christi, den man nennet der heiligen drei könig tag. Der tag der opferung Christi im tempel, genant Purificationis Mariae. Der tag Annunciationis Mariae oder Conceptionis Christi, da Christus in der jungfrauen leib empfangen ist. Der tag Coenae domini, den man den grönen donnerstag nennet, daran von des herrn abendmal sol gepredigt werden. Der tag Passionis domini oder des leidens und sterbens Christi, welcher der karfreitag genennet wird. Der ostertag oder Pasca, der tag der ufferstehung Christi, samt dem folgenden montag und dienstag. Der tag Ascensionis oder himelfart Christi. Der pfingstag, samt dem folgenden montag und dienstag. Der tag Trinitatis gefelt uff den nehesten sontag nach pfingsten. > werden. […] Uber diese furnemsten fest sollen auch die gehalten werden. Die tage der aposteln. Der tag S. Johannis des teufers. Der tag Visitationis, da Maria ire mume Elisabeth heimsucht. […] Der tag Michaelis, an welchem die lere von den heiligen engeln dem volk sol furgetragen werden. An diesen tagen sol man vor mittage predigen, und so communicanten da sind, die communion halten, wie an den sontagen. Nach mittage aber mag man wol der gewönlichen erbeit warten. Ausgenomen den tag Michaelis, an welchem vor und nach mittage sol gepredigt werden. Das fest aber Assumptionis, oder himelfart Marie, sol hinfurder ganz abgethan sein, und an des selben stat das fest S. Michaelis als ein viergezeiten fest gehalten werden.

Of the special feasts or holy days which shall be kept in the year. Over and above the common Sundays shall be kept the high chief feasts of the Lord Christ, which are these: the day of the Nativity or birth of Christ, with the second and third following; the day of the Circumcision of Christ; the day of the Epiphany, that is, of the appearing or manifestation of Christ, which is called the day of the Three Kings; the day of the offering of Christ in the temple, called the Purification of Mary; the day of the Annunciation of Mary or Conception of Christ, when Christ was conceived in the Virgin's womb; the day of the Lord's Supper, which is called Maundy Thursday, whereon shall be preached of the Lord's Supper; the day of the Passion of the Lord, or of the suffering and death of Christ, which is called Good Friday; Easter day, or Pascha, the day of the resurrection of Christ, with the Monday and Tuesday following; the day of the Ascension of Christ; Whitsunday, with the Monday and Tuesday following; the day of the Trinity falleth on the next Sunday after Pentecost. On these feasts it shall be done, as touching the order of lessons, chants, sermons and communion, as on the common Sundays; only that the introits, sequences and prefaces de tempore be sung. […] Over and above these chiefest feasts these also shall be kept: the days of the apostles; the day of St John the Baptist; the day of the Visitation, when Mary visiteth her cousin Elisabeth; […] the day of Michael, whereon the doctrine of the holy angels shall be set forth to the people. On these days one shall preach before noon, and if there be communicants, hold the communion, as on Sundays; but in the afternoon one may well attend to the wonted work. Except the day of Michael, whereon there shall be preaching before and after noon. But the feast of the Assumption, or Ascension of Mary, shall henceforth be wholly done away, and in the stead of the same the feast of St Michael be kept as a feast of the four times.

Note. Michaelmas has a place of its own in this scheme:

- It is listed with the second rank, but it is preached "before and after noon" like a feast of Christ.
- It takes the Assumption's place as one of the four Vierzeiten (§12.9).

The Mecklenburg text, with small changes, stands in these orders:

12.5.3 The Württemberg family: holy days proclaimed by the magistrate

The Württemberg orders make the magistrate's proclamation the mark of a holy day (§12.3.5). At first they drew only one clear line: the high feasts of Christ kept the whole day, and the rest kept only in the forenoon.

Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 16, pp. 105–106):

> Es sollen aber in unserm Fürstenthumb nachvolgende fest- und feyrtag gehalten werden: Erstlich alle Sontag, Item, alle hohe fest Christi als namlich Weyhennächt, Beschneidung, Ostertag, Auffarttag, Pfingstag. Und sollen dise tag doch auch ungefar gehalten und niemand sein gewissen damit beschwert werden [...] Weiter aber sollen all pfarrer auff nachverzeichnet tag morgens predigen und als dann dem volck anzeigen, das sich nachmittag meniglich an sein arbeit verfügen möge unnd hierinn niemandt verstrickt sein sol. Namlich auff der heiligen drey künig oder den zwölfften tag, da soll man predigen aus dem Mattheo das ander Capitel, den grünen donnerstag, den karfreitag, so man den passion prediget, unser frawen verkündung tag Annuntiationis, unnser frawen Reynigung Purificationis, aller apostel tag, Sant Johannis des täuffers tag.

But in our principality the feasts and holy days following shall be kept: first all Sundays; item, all the high feasts of Christ, namely Christmas, the Circumcision, Easter day, Ascension day, Whitsunday. And these days also shall be kept without constraint, and no man's conscience burdened therewith [...] But further, all parsons shall preach in the morning on the days hereafter noted, and then shew the people that every man may betake himself to his work in the afternoon, and that herein no man shall be bound: namely on the day of the Three Kings or Twelfth Day, whereon shall be preached out of Matthew the second chapter; Maundy Thursday; Good Friday, when the Passion is preached; our Lady's Annunciation day; our Lady's Purification; all apostles' days; St John the Baptist's day.

The Württemberg list follows the preamble of §12.3.5. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 16, p. 266):

> Alle Sontag Der Christag Der nächst tag darnach Der Jars tag Der öberst, Epiphania genannt Der Ostertag sampt dem nächsten darnach Die himelfart Christi Der Pfingstag sampt volgendem Montag Die Liechtmeß Purificationis Mariae Verkündigung Mariae, genannt Annunciationis Aller Aposteln tag Joannis Baptisten

All Sundays. Christmas day. The next day after. New Year's day. Twelfth Day, called the Epiphany. Easter day with the next after. The Ascension of Christ. Whitsunday with the Monday following. Candlemas, the Purification of Mary. The Annunciation of Mary. All apostles' days. John the Baptist's.

Note. In 1553 every day on the list is a holy day, with no half days. The distinction came back in later orders of the family:

- Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1561 added half days (§12.6.2).
- Pfalz-Veldenz 1574 added half days as well (§12.6.2).
- Baden 1603 has the same list but allows field-work after the morning service:

Baden, Kirchenordnungsmandat, 1603 (Sehling 16, p. 559):

> Die Sontag seyndt aller dings stricte zufeyren undt alle Feldt- und andere arbeit einzustellen, zugleich auch die ordentliche Fest- und Aposteltag vormittag simpliciter gefeyret, nachmittag allein mit der discretion zur Feldtarbeit zugelaßen werden soll

The Sundays are to be kept holy altogether strictly, and all field-work and other labour to cease; likewise the ordinary feast days and apostles' days shall be kept holy in the forenoon without condition, and in the afternoon field-work shall be allowed only with discretion

12.5.4 The Bugenhagen family: "the three great feasts of Christ"

Bugenhagen's orders count feasts from the three great feasts of Christ. Each is kept three full days. The rest are "full" holy days for their Gospel histories. The apostles are commemorated on the next Sunday.

Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 397):

> De dre groten feste Christi, de de Christene stedes hebben geholden, alse Winachten, Paschen unde Pynxten, eyn jewelick fest dre dage vullen to vyren, darinne geprediget schal werden up den morgen, vor middage, na middage unde up den avent, darto gesungen, alse na gesecht schal werden. Darto nyejarsdach, Epiphanie, dat is der apenbaringe edder koningedach, purificationis, dat is Marien kerckgank, Marien vorkundinge, des Heren hemmelvart, Joannis Baptiste, Marien berchgank vullen to vyren, nicht umme der dage willen, sonder umme des predigens willen, dewile de historien in den evangelien begrepen synt unde bedrapen unsen Heren Christum etc. Item Michaelis vor eyn vehrtidenvest, to offeren dat vehrtidenoffer in de gemeyne schatkaste, ock vullen to vyren. […] Der hilgen apostelen unde Magdalene unde Laurentii, des hilgen kastenheren edder diakens, gedechtnissen scholen gelecht werden up den negesten Sundach na öreme kalenderdage, also dat me vlitich predigen schal dat evangelium vamme Sundage alse up eynen anderen Sundach unde deme jo nichts affbreken; alle sank unde misse schal ock syn vamme Sundage, alleyne amme ende des sermons schal de predicante seggen: Myne frunde in Christo, in disser weke plecht me gedenken des hilgen apostels N., van deme lest me so in evangelio, in Actis apo. etc.

The three great feasts of Christ which the Christians have always kept, as Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide, every feast to be fully kept holy three days, wherein there shall be preaching in the morning, before noon, after noon and at evening, and singing thereto, as shall be said hereafter. Thereto New Year's day, the Epiphany, that is the day of the manifestation or the Kings' day, the Purification, that is Mary's church-going, Mary's Annunciation, the Lord's Ascension, John the Baptist, Mary's going over the hills, to be fully kept holy; not for the days' sake, but for the preaching's sake, forasmuch as the histories are contained in the Gospels and concern our Lord Christ, etc. Item, Michaelmas for a feast of the four times, to offer the four-times offering into the common treasure-chest, also to be fully kept holy. […] The memorials of the holy apostles, and of Magdalene, and of Laurence the holy chest-master or deacon, shall be laid upon the next Sunday after their calendar day; so that one shall diligently preach the Gospel of the Sunday as upon another Sunday, and take nothing at all from it; all chant and mass also shall be of the Sunday; only at the end of the sermon the preacher shall say: My friends in Christ, in this week it is wont to be remembered of the holy apostle N., of whom one readeth thus in the Gospel, in the Acts of the apostles, etc.

Note.

- Why the apostles lost their holy day. The editor records that Bugenhagen first meant to keep the apostles' days as feasts. He gave up the plan when it was objected that a town of craftsmen would then have too many holy days.
- Hamburg 1529. Hamburg has the same text (Sehling 5, p. 514).
- Lübeck 1531. Lübeck adds the list of the four times (§12.9).

Pomerania, Kirchenordnung, 1535 (Sehling 4, p. 343):

> Unde de historien van unserm leven heren Jesu Christo nicht vorgeten werden, wille wi de festa Christi alle beholden, als winachten dree dage, osteren dree dage, pinxsten dree dage, dar negest Circuncisionis, Epiphanie, Purificationis, Annunciationis, Ascensionis, Trinitatis, Johannis Baptiste to predekende, van siner entfanginge, van siner gebort, van sinem predekende unde amt, unde van siner enthovedinge, dat fest hört ock up Christum, unde de historie is ock in den evangelien geschreven. Visitationis des geliken. Item wi willen ock beholden dat fest Michaelis to predikende van den engeln ut der hiligen schrift.

And that the histories of our dear Lord Jesus Christ be not forgotten, we will keep all the feasts of Christ: as Christmas three days, Easter three days, Whitsuntide three days; next thereafter the Circumcision, the Epiphany, the Purification, the Annunciation, the Ascension, the Trinity; John the Baptist, to preach of his conception, of his birth, of his preaching and office, and of his beheading, for that feast also pertaineth to Christ, and the history is also written in the Gospels. The Visitation likewise. Item, we will also keep the feast of Michael, to preach of the angels out of holy Scripture.

The Schleswig-Holstein list follows the principle quoted in §12.3.3. Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 95):

> De dre groten Feste Christi vyren wy ein ytlick dre dage lanck umme der Historien Christi willen. Darbeneven vyren wy ock dat Fest Circumcisionis, Epiphaniae, Purificationis unde Annunctiationis Marie. […] Ock vyre wy de Festa Ascensionis > und Visitationis […] Thom lesten dat fest Johannis Baptiste, Dat fest Michaelis thor danckseggínge Unde dat fest Omnium Sanctorum. Der Apostel Feste schal men apentlick affkündigen und thogelick dem feste Magdalene unde Laurentii am negst volgenden Sondage darna Predigen.

The three great feasts of Christ we keep holy each three days long, for the histories of Christ. Beside these we keep holy also the feast of the Circumcision, of the Epiphany, of the Purification and of the Annunciation of Mary. […] We keep holy also the feasts of the Ascension and of the Visitation […] Last of all the feast of John the Baptist, the feast of Michael for thanksgiving, and the feast of All Saints. The apostles' feasts one shall openly proclaim, and preach them, together with the feast of Magdalene and of Laurence, on the next following Sunday thereafter.

Note. The editor explains the "Festa Ascensionis" as the Assumption of Mary, on 15 August. The Danish-Holstein order of 1542 is thus one of the few Lutheran orders that keeps the Assumption as a holy day (§12.8.3). The Kiel draft behind it follows the Danish Ordinatio ecclesiastica of 1537.

12.5.5 Numbered classes

Some orders number their ranks outright.

Grubenhagen names three classes, and gives each its reason. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 6/2, pp. 1032–1033):

> VI. Von den feyertagen, welche man feyeren soll. Festum nativitatis Christi, S. Stephanstagk, des ersten merterers, S. Johannistagk, des evangelisten, der unschuldigen kinderlein tagk, weil die predigt wart, festum resurrectionis Christi, den Mondagk und auch den Dinstagk, festum Pentecostae, Pfingsten, den Mondagk und auch den Dinstagk zu feyeren, festum Michaelis archangeli. Das sind also die vier hauptfest, an welchen man den vierzeitpenning sammelt. Nun folgen andere herliche fest, die man auch feyren soll: Festum circumcisionis Domini, f. epiphaniae vel trium regum, f. purificationis Mariae, f. anuntiacionis Mariae, f. visitationis Mariae, f. ascensionis Jesu Christi, f. S. Johannis Baptistae. Das sind also andere sieben festage, die auch zum hochsten von wegen der historien zu feyren nottig. 1. S. Andres tagk, 2. S. Thomas tagk, 3. S. Matthias tagk, 4. den grünen Donnerstagk, 5. den stillen Freytagk, 6. S. Philippi et Jacobi tagk, 7. S. Petri et Pauli tagk, 8. S. […] Jacobs tagk, 9. S. Bartholomei tagk, 10. S. Matthäi apostoli tagk, 11. S. Simonis et Judä tagk. Diese tage der lieben heiligen und jünger unsers Hern Jesu Christi soll man vormittage alleine, weil das ampt wart, schuldig sein zu feyren.

VI. Of the holy days which shall be kept. The feast of the Nativity of Christ; St Stephen's day, of the first martyr; St John's day, of the evangelist; the day of the innocent children, while the sermon lasteth; the feast of the resurrection of Christ, the Monday and also the Tuesday; the feast of Pentecost, Whitsuntide, the Monday and also the Tuesday to be kept holy; the feast of Michael the archangel. These are therefore the four chief feasts, whereon the four-times penny is gathered. Now follow other glorious feasts, which shall also be kept holy: the feast of the Circumcision of the Lord; the feast of the Epiphany or of the Three Kings; the feast of the Purification of Mary; the feast of the Annunciation of Mary; the feast of the Visitation of Mary; the feast of the Ascension of Jesus Christ; the feast of St John the Baptist. These are therefore seven other feast days, which also are in the highest degree needful to be kept holy because of the histories. 1. St Andrew's day, 2. St Thomas's day, 3. St Matthias's day, 4. Maundy Thursday, 5. Good Friday, 6. St Philip and James's day, 7. St Peter and Paul's day, 8. St […] James's day, 9. St Bartholomew's day, 10. St Matthew the apostle's day, 11. St Simon and Jude's day. These days of the dear saints and disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ one shall be bound to keep holy in the forenoon only, while the office lasteth.

Note. The first class is defined partly by a church payment. The four chief feasts are the days on which the four-times penny is collected (§12.9). The Ascension stands in the second class, and Maundy Thursday and Good Friday in the third. The editor notes that this departs from the Wolfenbüttel order of 1543, which moved the apostles' days to the next Sunday.

[5.] Which feasts are kept holy in our church. Over and above the common Sundays are kept, with understanding of Christian liberty: first, all the feasts of Christ: the Nativity with the two days following, the Circumcision, the Epiphany, the Purification, the Annunciation, Easter day with the two days next following, the Ascension, Whitsunday with the two days following. Secondly are kept all the apostles' days. Thirdly: John the Baptist, Michael the archangel.

Note. Regensburg's numbering is an order of listing, not of dignity. Communion and first vespers, which mark the rank in this order, are given only "an festen Christi, allen und jeden", on each and every feast of Christ (p. 475; see §12.10.9).

Hoya has four ranks, the fourth being the abolished Assumption. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1186):

> Die vier hohen fest belangende, ordnen wir, das Weynachten, Ostern, Pfingsten mit den zweyen folgenden tagen sollen geruhet, gefeyert und mit übung göttliches worts zugebracht werden. Dieweil aber das fest der himelfart Mariae ohne grund und gezeugnis der schrift durch den antichrist eingefüret ist, sol es in unser graffschaft hiemit ganz abgethan sein und seiner hinfüro nicht gedacht werden. Wir ordnen aber anstadt desselben das fest S. Michaelis und wollen, das die pfarrkinder den tag feyerlich halten, auch ihrem pastorn an demselben tage ihr opfer und gebürliche pflicht gütlich entrichten und ohne hindernis dargeben sollen. Zum andern ordnen wir, das nachgeschriebene und verzeichnete fest und tage in unser herrschaft genzlich geruhet, gefeyret und geheiliget werden sollen, als des neuen jhars tag, der heiligen drey könig tag, das festum purificationis Mariae, verkündigung Mariae, der himelfart Christi, Johannis des teufers tag, visitationis Mariae, der tag coenae Domini, an welchem man vom h. nachtmal predigen sol, den Kahrfreytag [...] Zum dritten ordnen wir, das man nachgesetzte apostel- und heiligentage, biß die serrnon geendet, feyren sol: als Andreae Thomae bekerung Pauli Matthiae Petri et Pauli Philippi et Jacobi Magdalenen Jacobi Bartholomaei decollationis Johannis Matthaei Simonis et Judae aller heiligen tag.

As touching the four high feasts, we ordain that Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide, with the two days following, shall be rested, kept holy, and spent in the exercise of God's Word. But forasmuch as the feast of the Ascension of Mary was brought in by the Antichrist without ground and witness of Scripture, it shall hereby be wholly done away in our county, and no more be mentioned henceforth. But in the stead thereof we ordain the feast of St Michael, and will that the parishioners keep the day solemnly, and also render to their pastor on the same day their offering and due duty kindly and without hindrance. Secondly we ordain that the feasts and days hereafter written and set down shall in our lordship be wholly rested, kept holy and hallowed: as New Year's day, the day of the Three Kings, the feast of the Purification of Mary, the Annunciation of Mary, the Ascension of Christ, John the Baptist's day, the Visitation of Mary, the day of the Lord's Supper, whereon one shall preach of the holy Supper, Good Friday [...] Thirdly we ordain that the apostles' and saints' days hereafter set shall be kept holy until the sermon be ended: as Andrew, Thomas, the Conversion of Paul, Matthias, Peter and Paul, Philip and James, Magdalene, James, Bartholomew, the Beheading of John, Matthew, Simon and Jude, All Saints' day.

The Harlingerland order repeats Hoya's text, divided into titled Sectiones. Harlingerland (East Frisia), Kirchenordnung, 1573/74 (Sehling 7/1, pp. 735–736):

> Der eilfte articull. Von den festen. Sectio prima. Von den vier zeiten. Die vier hohen festtage belangende, ordnen wir auch, daß Wihnachten, Paschen, Pfingsten mit den zween folgenden tagen sollen gerouwet, gefyret und mit öving deß gottlichen wordeß geheiliget werden. Von der himmelfahrt Mariae. Dieweile daß fest ohne grund und gezeugniß der schrift durch dem antechrist ist angerichtet, soll idt ganz abgetaen sein und seiner nit gedacht werden. Ordnen derohalben, daß der [!] letzste und vierte hochfesttagzeit solle S. Michaelis tag sein. [...] Sectio secunda. Von den fürnembsten festtagen. [...] Sectio tertia. Von den aposteltagen. Ordnen wir, daß man undergeschrieben aposteltage, beht der sermön geendiget, fihren solle

The eleventh article. Of the feasts. Section the first. Of the four times. As touching the four high feast days, we ordain also that Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide, with the two days following, shall be rested, kept holy and hallowed with the exercise of the divine Word. Of the Ascension of Mary. Forasmuch as that feast was set up by the Antichrist without ground and witness of the Scripture, it shall be wholly done away and not be mentioned. We ordain therefore that the last and fourth high feast-tide shall be St Michael's day. [...] Section the second. Of the chiefest feast days. [...] Section the third. Of the apostles' days. We ordain that the apostles' days underwritten shall be kept holy until the sermon be ended

Sayn has four classes, set out as a principle before the list. The margin heads the paragraph Festa quadrupli. Sayn, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1582 (Sehling 19/1, p. 368):

> Unndt konden die festen durch gantze jahr in viererley artt oder underschiedliche hauffe getheilt werden: 1. Etzliche festa, das seind haubtfesta also zu nennen, die man solenniter den gantzen tag feieren unndt darauff die gemeine wochentliche arbeit soll underlaßen werden. 2. Die ander seind nur mittelmeßige festa, die da halb gefeiret werden also unndt der gestalt, das man vormittag zur kirchen komme, predigt haltte unnd hör, nach mittag aber in wochentlicher abeit vortfahre. 3. Die dritte festag könnenn ohn nachteil unndt ergernus verlegt unndt auffgehoben werden auf den gemeinen bettag, so sonst in der wochen zur predigt deputirt unndt geordenet ist. 4. Die viertten festtage, so zu bestettigung offentlicher abgotterei im bapstumb eingefuhrt unndt gehalten worden, sollen in unserm evangelischen kirchen gar abgeschafft unndt underlaßen werden.

And the feasts through the whole year might be divided into four kinds or several companies:

1. Some feasts are to be called chief feasts, which men shall keep holy solemnly the whole day, and whereon the common weekly work shall be left off. 2. The others are but middling feasts, which are kept half holy, in this wise and manner, that men come to church in the forenoon, hold and hear a sermon, but in the afternoon go on in the weekly work. 3. The third feast days may without hurt and offence be removed and taken up upon the common day of prayer, which otherwise is deputed and ordained in the week for preaching. 4. The fourth feast days, which were brought in and kept in the papacy for the confirming of open idolatry, shall in our evangelical churches be wholly done away and left off.

The list attached to it. Sayn, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1582 (Sehling 19/1, pp. 372–373):

> Hauptvesta, so den gantzen tagh feierlich gehalten undt daruff die gemeine wochentliche arbeit soll underlassen werdenn. Der heilige christagh. S. Stephani tagh. S. Joannis tag vormittagh. Der neue jars tag vor- und nachmittagh. Epiphania Domini oder der heiligen drey konig tag. Purificationis Mariae oder liechtmeß. Annunciationis Mariae oder conceptionis christi, welches fest, so es in der marterwoch oder nach ostern gefelt, sol es auf den sonabend palmarum stets gelegt werden. Der ostertag sampt den zweien nachvolgenden, montag und dienstagh. Der himelfartstag Christi durch auß. Der pfingstag und beide volgende, montag und dinstag in pfingsten. Das fest der heiligen dreyfaltigkeit, so allwege acht tage nach pfingsten volget. […] Der tag Johannis des täuffers. S. Michaels tag, dar man pfleget von den h. engeln zu predigen und gott fur den guten schutz der guten geister zu dancken. Nachvolgende tage werden nur halb gefeiret also und der gestalt, das man vor mittage zur kirchen komme, predigt halte und hore, nach mittag aber in wochentlicher arbeit fortfahre. Alle apostel tage sollen gehalten werden, wen undt wie sie des jars fallen, doch allein mit einer predigt vormittag halb feierlich. Der aposteln tage sollen gleich geachtet und fur halbe feiertag gerechnet werden: Der grüne donnerstag […] Der charfreitag […] Pauli bekehrungstag umb der furtreflichen historien willen. Mariae visitationis oder heimsuchungfest. Diese volgende und dergleichen tage mogen auf denn verordenten bettagen in der wochen geleget werden, als: S. Laurentii tagh. S. Marci, des evangelisten. S. Lucas, des evangelisten. […] Vincula Petri. Decollationis Joannis Baptistae. […] Aller heyligen, omnium sanctorum. Mariae Magdalenen fest umb der schonen text und historien willen, so daruf zue handlen verordnet, damit [sie] in gedechtnus bleiben. Unten verzeichnete tag sollen gar abgeschaft und underlaßen werden, als die da zur abgotterey und aberglauben anleitung und vorschub geben. Alle Marienfest, sie haben nahmen wie sie wollen, welche hiebevor nicht benennet worden. Sonderlich aber festum conceptionis, nativitatis, praesentationis, assumptionis Mariae sollen in unsern evangelischen kürchen gar auffgehoben und abe sein

Chief feasts, which shall be kept solemnly the whole day, and whereon the common weekly work shall be left off. The holy Christmas day. St Stephen's day. St John's day in the forenoon. New Year's day, before and after noon. The Epiphany of the Lord, or the day of the Three Kings. The Purification of Mary, or Candlemas. The Annunciation of Mary, or Conception of Christ; which feast, if it fall in the week of the Passion or after Easter, shall always be laid on the Saturday before Palm Sunday. Easter day with the two following, Monday and Tuesday. The day of the Ascension of Christ, throughout. Whitsunday and both the following, Monday and Tuesday in Whitsuntide. The feast of the holy Trinity, which followeth always eight days after Pentecost. […] The day of John the Baptist. St Michael's day, whereon men are wont to preach of the holy angels and to thank God for the good protection of the good spirits. The days following are kept but half holy, in this wise and manner, that men come to church before noon, hold and hear a sermon, but in the afternoon go on in the weekly work. All apostles' days shall be kept, when and as they fall in the year, yet only with one sermon in the forenoon, half holy. With the apostles' days shall be counted alike, and reckoned for half holy days: Maundy Thursday […] Good Friday […] St Paul's conversion day, for the excellent history's sake. The feast of Mary's Visitation. These days following, and the like, may be laid on the appointed days of prayer in the week: as St Laurence's day; St Mark the evangelist's; St Luke the evangelist's; […] Peter's Chains; the Beheading of John the Baptist; […] All Saints; Mary Magdalene's feast, for the sake of the fair text and history appointed to be handled thereon, that [they] may remain in remembrance. The days noted beneath shall be wholly done away and left off, as those that give occasion and furtherance to idolatry and superstition: all feasts of Mary, be their names what they will, which have not been named heretofore; but in especial the feasts of the Conception, Nativity, Presentation and Assumption of Mary shall in our evangelical churches be wholly taken up and be gone

Note. This is the fullest four-rank system in the corpus. The Sayn Kirchenordnung of 1590 (Sehling 19/1, p. 389) later reduced it to a single list of holy days, with the harvest apostles kept in the forenoon only (§12.6.4).

The Aschersleben town agenda has a middle rank of eight feasts over and above the three chief feasts. Aschersleben, Kirchen-Agenda, 1575 (Sehling 2, p. 479):

> Uber die drei heubtfeste, sollen auch in dieser christlichen gemeinde diese nachfolgende gehalten werden. 1. Circumcisionis domini. 2. Epiphanias domini. 3. Purificationis Mariae. 4. Annunciationis Mariae. 5. Ascensionis domini. 6. Johannis baptistae. 7. Visitationis Mariae, 8. Michaelis. In diesen festen soll es durchaus, wie an sontagen gehalten werden, allein das mit singen und predigen auf die fest gesehen und figurirt werde. […] Von den festis apostolorum. Andreae, Thomae, Matthiae, Philippi Jacobi, Petri et Pauli, Jacobi, Bartholomaei, Matthaei, Simonis et Judae: Sollen in unser gemeine fruehe eine predigt und das officium gehalten werden vormittage alleine. Die arbeitsleute aber mögen ein jeder seiner hantierung warten

Over and above the three chief feasts, these following shall also be kept in this Christian congregation: 1. The Circumcision of the Lord. 2. The Epiphany of the Lord. 3. The Purification of Mary. 4. The Annunciation of Mary. 5. The Ascension of the Lord. 6. John the Baptist. 7. The Visitation of Mary. 8. Michael. On these feasts it shall be done throughout as on Sundays; only that in singing and preaching regard be had to the feast, and that figural music be used. […] Of the feasts of the apostles. Andrew, Thomas, Matthias, Philip and James, Peter and Paul, James, Bartholomew, Matthew, Simon and Jude: in our congregation there shall be held early a sermon and the office, before noon only. But the working people may each attend to his handiwork

12.5.6 Great feasts and small feasts: Danzig and Thorn

In Danzig the rank of a feast was marked above all by the bells (§12.10.7). The church fathers of St Mary's set down the custom in 1612. Article 16 lists every feast of the year as ein gross fest or ein klein fest.

Danzig, St Mary's, Kirchenordnung, 1612 (Sehling 4, pp. 203–204):

> Art. 14. Vom beigern auf die grossen feste. Wan ein gross fest einfellet, welches allezeit mit drei predigten gehalten wird, alsdan wird des tages zuvor vormittage geleutet, wie sonst auf den tag in der woche gebreuchlich. […] Art. 15. Wie man auf die kleinen feste beigert. The Danzig list of 1612 (Art. 16, p. 204). It is condensed here from the two-column print. The first entry, a small feast before Epiphany, has lost its name in the digitized text.

Great feasts (ein gross fest)	Small feasts (ein klein fest)
Epiphany; Purification; Annunciation; Easter day, Easter Monday, Easter Tuesday ("mit einer predigt"); Ascension; Whitsunday, Whit Monday, Whit Tuesday ("mit einer predigt"); Trinity; Visitation ("mit predigt"); Christmas, St Stephen, St John the Evangelist ("mit 1 predigt")	Matthias; Philip and James; John the Baptist; Peter and Paul; James; Bartholomew; Matthew; Michaelmas ("mit 3 predigten … ein klein fest"); Simon and Jude; Andrew; Thomas

Two entries on the list are "no feast". The Dominicans' day (5 August) and St Laurence's day are rung with the great bell to open and close the town's market, and the list says of Laurence: "ist kein fest".

Thorn sets the same two ranks in prose, and also speaks of the "small or half feasts". Thorn, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 4, p. 239):

> Alle feste unsers herrn und erlösers, als nemlich nativitatis Christi, circumcisionis, epiphaniae, purificationis, annunciationis, coenae dominicae, parasceves, paschae, ascensionis et pentecostes sollen so wohl ordentlich als ehrlich und mit grossem ernst, gebührlicher reverenz zum gedächtniss und vermahnung gehalten werden, sonderlich weinachten, ostern und pfingsten drei tage nacheinander: die ersten zwei tage mit dreien predigten wie sonsten am sonntage; am dritten tage, wo er nicht auf einen sonntage gefällt, mit zween predigten [...] Belangende aber die feste oder feiertagen conversionis Pauli, Johannis Baptistae, visitationis Mariae, Michaelis, samt den zwölf aposteltagen, sollen mit zwei predigten gehalten werden [...] wann aber solche kleine oder halbe feste auf einen sonntag kommen, mögen dieselben wohl auf den folgenden tag, nemlich auf den sonntag, verleget und zur vesper gehalten werden.

All the feasts of our Lord and Redeemer, namely the Nativity of Christ, the Circumcision, the Epiphany, the Purification, the Annunciation, the Supper of the Lord, the Preparation, Easter, the Ascension and Pentecost, shall be kept as well orderly as honourably, and with great earnestness and due reverence, for remembrance and admonition; in especial Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide three days one after another: the first two days with three sermons, as otherwise on the Sunday; on the third day, where it fall not on a Sunday, with two sermons [...] But touching the feasts or holy days of the Conversion of Paul, of John the Baptist, of the Visitation of Mary, of Michael, together with the twelve apostles' days, they shall be kept with two sermons [...] but when such small or half feasts come upon a Sunday, the same may well be removed to the following day, namely to the Sunday [afternoon], and be kept at vespers.

Note. The sentence "auf den folgenden tag, nemlich auf den sonntag" is confused in the print. The meaning, as the next sentence shows, is that a small feast falling near a Sunday is handled at the Sunday vespers. Compare §12.14.

12.5.7 Wider calendars: the conservative orders

A number of orders keep much more than the pattern of §12.5.1. Some are early, and some come from princes who were cautious about change. They show where the Lutheran lists started from.

Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 87):

> Folgen die festa, so furnemlich in unsern landen, ausserhalb der sontage, gehalten und gefeiert werden sollen. Nemlich: Der Christtag. Der tag Stefani. Der tag Johannis Evangeliste. Des neuen jarstag oder Circumcisionis domini. Der heiligen dreier könig tag. Der tag Purificationis Marie. Der tag Matthie Apostoli. Der tag Annunciationis Marie. Der Ostertag. Ostermontag. Der tag Philippi et Jacobi. Ascensionis domini oder himelfart Christi. Der Pfingsttag. Montag. Dinstag. Der sontag Trinitatis. Der tag Corporis Christi. Der tag Johannis Baptiste. Der tag Petri und Pauli. Der tag Visitationis Marie. Der tag Marie Magdalene. Der tag Jacobi. Der tag Assumptionis Marie. Der tag Bartholomei. Der tag Nativitatis Marie. Der tag Matthei Apostoli. Der tag Simonis et Jude. Der tag Omnium Sanctorum. Der tag Martini. Der tag Andree. Der tag Laurentii. Der tag' Michaelis.

There follow the feasts which, besides the Sundays, shall chiefly be kept and held holy in our lands. Namely: Christmas day. St Stephen's day. St John the Evangelist's day. New Year's day, or the Circumcision of the Lord. The day of the Three Kings. The day of the Purification of Mary. The day of Matthias the apostle. The day of the Annunciation of Mary. Easter day. Easter Monday. The day of Philip and James. The Ascension of the Lord. Whitsunday. Monday. Tuesday. Trinity Sunday. The day of Corpus Christi. The day of John the Baptist. The day of Peter and Paul. The day of the Visitation of Mary. The day of Mary Magdalene. The day of James. The day of the Assumption of Mary. The day of Bartholomew. The day of the Nativity of Mary. The day of Matthew the apostle. The day of Simon and Jude. All Saints' day. St Martin's day. St Andrew's day. St Laurence's day. St Michael's day.

Note. The list goes on with Catherine and Thomas. It is a single rank that keeps Corpus Christi, the Assumption, the Nativity of Mary, All Saints, Martin, Laurence and Catherine. It matches the conservative character of the Brandenburg order as a whole.

Hausmann's Anhalt order has an early, one-rank list with the apostles already reduced to the forenoon. Anhalt, Nicolaus Hausmann's order, 1532 (Sehling 2, p. 542):

> Festa im jar sollen frei gehalden werden, zum exempel des glaubens zu uben, damit das junge und grobe volk gemussiget mügen zur prediget kommen […] und sint mit namen dise: Nativitas Christi mit zweien tagen. Neu jar, circumcisionis. Epiphanie, wilchs heist drei König. Purificationis Christi et Marie. Annunciacionis Christi. Pascha mit zweien tagen, ostern. Ascensionis, himmelfart Christi. Pentecostes, pfingsten mit zwei tagen. Corporis Christi, des heiligen warlichnames tag. Johannis baptiste. Visitacionis, conceptionis Marie. Magdalene. Marie. Laurencii. Assumpcionis Nativitatis Michaelis. Omnium sanctorum. Martini. Aller apostel tage fur mittage.

The feasts in the year shall be kept free, for the exercise of faith, that the young and rude people may be at leisure to come to the sermon […] and they are these by name: the Nativity of Christ with two days; New Year, the Circumcision; the Epiphany, which is called Three Kings; the Purification of Christ and of Mary; the Annunciation of Christ; Pascha with two days, Easter; the Ascension, the ascending of Christ; Pentecost, Whitsuntide with two days; Corpus Christi, the day of the holy true Body; John the Baptist; the Visitation, the Conception of Mary; Magdalene; Mary; Laurence; the Assumption; the Nativity; Michael; All Saints; Martin; all apostles' days in the forenoon.

The editor places the Pfalz-Neuburg list between Brandenburg 1540 and Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 94):

> so wöllen wir, das dise nachfolgende fest und feirtag, wie vor alters her, noch gehalten und gefeiret werden - doch, damit die andern tag der gedechtnus Christi und der rechten, waren heiligen, so in der heiligen schrift oder sonst irs christlichen glaubens, lebens, wunderwerk, leidens und seligen absterbens gewise zeugnus haben, nicht aufgehebt noch in vergessen gestellt, sonder ungefeiret in gedechtnus, wie vor alters her, lassen bleiben. Die fest, so man feiern sol. Der Neujarstag, Circumcisionis genannt, der Oberstag, Epiphaniae genannt, Lichtmeß, Purificationis Mariae genannt, Matthie des zwölf boten, Verkündung, Annunciationis Mariae genannt, der Palmtag, der Ostertag mit montag und aftermontag darnach, Philippi und Jacobi der zwölf boten, der Auffartstag, Ascensionis Domini genannt, der Pfingstag mit montag und aftermontag darnach, der Heiligen Dreifeltigkeit, Trinitatis genannt, Johannis des taufers, Petri und Pauli der zwölf boten, Jacobi des zwölf boten, Unser Frauen schidung, Assumptionis genannt so will we that these following feasts and holy days be yet kept and held holy, as of old; yet so that the other days of the remembrance of Christ, and of the right and true saints who have sure witness in holy Scripture or otherwise of their Christian faith, life, miracles, suffering and blessed departing, be not taken away nor put in forgetfulness, but let remain unhallowed in remembrance, as of old. The feasts that shall be kept holy: New Year's day, called the Circumcision; Twelfth Day, called the Epiphany; Candlemas, called the Purification of Mary; Matthias the twelve-messenger; the Annunciation, called the Annunciation of Mary; Palm Sunday; Easter day with the Monday and the Tuesday after; Philip and James the twelve-messengers; Ascension day, called the Ascension of the Lord; Whitsunday with the Monday and the Tuesday after; the Holy Trinity, called Trinity; John the Baptist; Peter and Paul the twelve-messengers; James the twelve-messenger; our Lady's departing, called the Assumption

Note. This order makes a second rank of its own: days that are "unhallowed in remembrance" (ungefeiret in gedechtnus). Their memory is kept, but they are not holy days.

Nassau-Dillenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1537 (Sehling 10, p. 74). This order keeps Corpus Christi, as a day to teach the right use of the Sacrament, and keeps the Assumption and the Nativity of Mary. The summer feasts are moved to Sunday for the harvest (§12.6.4, §12.8.9).

The Teschen list is one of the longest in the corpus. Teschen, Kirchenordnung, 1584 (Sehling 3, p. 461):

> IX. Welche fest man halten soll. Uber die gemeine sontage sollen gehalten und feierlich begangen werden die hohen hauptfest unsers christlichen glaubens, darmitte dieselbe dem gemeinen volk mit vleiss vorgetragen und eingebieldet werden. Als nemlichen den tag Nativitatis Christi sampt dem anderen und drietten fest, den tag Circumcisionis Domini, Epipha., Conversionis Pauli, Purificationis Mariae, Mathiae Apost., Annunciationis Mariae, gruen donnerstag, charfreitag, der ostertag sampt dem nachvolgenden und drietten fest, Philippi et Jacobi, hiemmelfahrt Christi, pfingsten mit nachfolgenden feiertagen, demnach der heiligen dreifaltigkeit, Mariae gebuert, Johannis Baptistae, Petri et Pauli, Visitationis Mariae, Mariae Magdalenae, Jacobi Apost., Transfigurationis Domini, Bartholomei Apostoli, Decolationis Joannis, Mathei, Michaelis Arch., Simonis et Judae, Andreae Apostoli, Martini et Catharinae. An diesen beruerten festen mag man nach gelegenheit der zeit biessweilen alleine den vormittag feiern und nachmittag widerum ein jeder seines beruefs und handarbeit warten

IX. Which feasts shall be kept. Over and above the common Sundays shall be kept and solemnly celebrated the high chief feasts of our Christian faith, that the same may be diligently set forth and imprinted on the common people: namely the day of the Nativity of Christ with the second and third feast; the day of the Circumcision of the Lord; the Epiphany; the Conversion of Paul; the Purification of Mary; Matthias the apostle; the Annunciation of Mary; Maundy Thursday; Good Friday; Easter day with the following and third feast; Philip and James; the Ascension of Christ; Whitsuntide with the following holy days; thereafter the holy Trinity; the Nativity of Mary; John the Baptist; Peter and Paul; the Visitation of Mary; Mary Magdalene; James the apostle; the Transfiguration of the Lord; Bartholomew the apostle; the Beheading of John; Matthew; Michael the archangel; Simon and Jude; Andrew the apostle; Martin and Catherine. On these aforesaid feasts one may, as the season serveth, sometimes keep holy the forenoon only, and in the afternoon every man attend again to his calling and handiwork

Note. Every day in Teschen is formally a "high chief feast". The real ranking is left to the season: in time of work any of them may be a half day.

Weißenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 11, p. 662):

> Die fürnemsten fest und feiertäg aber weren dise: alle sonetag, aller apostl tag, den Cristag mit sambt sant Steffans tag und sant Joanes tag dofuer und in einen tag gefeiert, den Neuen jaerstag, der heiligen Dreikönigtag, Marie Liechmeß oder Rainigung, Marie Verkündung, Ostern und den montag henach, Auffart Christi, Pfingstag und montag hernach, Johannis des taufers, Marie Heimsuchung, Marie Himelfahrt, Marie Magdalene, sant Michael und Allerheiligen tag.

But the chiefest feasts and holy days should be these: all Sundays; all the apostles' days; Christmas, together with St Stephen's day and St John's day, kept holy therefor and in one day; New Year's day; the Three Kings' day; Mary's Candlemas or Purification; Mary's Annunciation; Easter and the Monday after; the Ascension of Christ; Whitsunday and the Monday after; John the Baptist; Mary's Visitation; Mary's Assumption; Mary Magdalene; St Michael; and All Saints' day.

12.6 Whole holy days and half holy days

In practice the most important mark of rank was civil: whether a day was a holy day for the whole of it, for the forenoon only, or not at all. Many orders give the working population this information in the form of a list of "whole" and "half" days, to be declared from the pulpit on the Sunday before. The half holy day, kept "until noon" or "until the sermon is ended", is the Lutheran successor of the late-medieval distinction between festa fori and lesser feasts. It is also the chief place where economic pressure (harvest, markets, craftsmen's work) shaped the calendar.

12.6.1 The half holy day: "until noon"

The form appears as early as Nicolaus Hausmann's Anhalt order of 1532, with "aller apostel tage fur mittage" (§12.5.7). It is then fixed by the Saxon order of 1539 and by Mecklenburg 1552 (both in §12.5.2): a sermon in the forenoon, communion if there are communicants, and work after noon. Other examples:

Prussia, Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 87):

> Die aposteltage sollen hinfürder auch, aber allein vormittag gefeiret werden, die pfarrkinder der alten wahren apostolischen lehr in den verordneten evangelien, item der heiligen apostel ihres glaubens und guten exempels erinnert und berichtet werden […] Wann die predig geschehen und das heilige abendmahl (so ferne communikanten sind) gehalten ist, soll jedermann diese tage nachmittag zu arbeiten frei sein. Es sollen aber die pfarrherren allezeit den nechsten sonntag zuvor die festa und aposteltag verkündigen und anzeigen, auf welchen tag in der wochen dieselbigen gefallen und das der aposteltag nicht lenger dann vormittag soll gefeiret werden, damit sich ein jeder hausvater habe darnach zu richten etc.

The apostles' days shall henceforth also be kept holy, but only in the forenoon, and the parishioners be reminded and instructed, in the appointed Gospels, of the old true apostolic doctrine, and also of the holy apostles' faith and good example […] When the sermon hath been held and the holy Supper (in so far as there be communicants) celebrated, every man shall be free to work on these days in the afternoon. But the parsons shall always, on the next Sunday before, proclaim and shew the feasts and apostles' days, on what day in the week the same fall, and that the apostles' day shall be kept holy no longer than the forenoon, that every householder may order himself thereafter, etc.

The city of Osnabrück had sermons five times a week, and so needed "no special holy days". Osnabrück (city), Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 7/1, p. 259):

> Dewyle nu der wecken viffmal geprediket wert baven die sondagesprediken, so bedarve wy nener besondergen virdagen, damit men dem gemeinem volke nicht orsake geve to lediggande und in de kröge to gan und de tidt unnütlicken tobringen etc. Idt schall ock neen fest edder hillig dag geholden werden dann allene, dat man Gades wort predicken höre und Gott bidde und danke vor syne genade dorch Christum. De aposteldage sollen gefyret wurden wente to middage.

Now forasmuch as there is preaching five times in the week beside the Sunday sermons, we need no special holy days, that we give not the common people occasion to go idle, and to go into the taverns, and to spend the time unprofitably, etc. Neither shall any feast or holy day be kept save only that men may hear God's Word preached, and pray to God and thank him for his grace through Christ. The apostles' days shall be kept holy until noon.

In Waldeck the half day extends even to Good Friday. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, pp. 272–273):

> der tag des leidens Christi, so der carfreitag genennet wirdt, soll halb feierlich biß auff den mittag gehalttenn werden, des abents aber die sepultura Christi verhandelt werden […] Diese vorgeschriebene Feiertage ausserhalb den außgezogenen sollen gantz unnd durchauß gefeieret unnd dem Volck allwege des Sontags zuvor verkündiget werden […] S. Petri [und] Pauli, S. Jacobi, S. Bartholomei tag sol man vor mittag heylig halten, dem volck eyne predigt thun und darnach an ire arbeyt gehen lassen

the day of the Passion of Christ, which is called Good Friday, shall be kept half holy until noon, but in the evening the burial of Christ shall be handled […] These holy days aforewritten, beside those excepted, shall be kept holy wholly and throughout, and be proclaimed to the people always on the Sunday before […] St Peter and Paul's, St James's and St Bartholomew's day one shall keep holy before noon, make the people a sermon, and thereafter let them go to their work

Note. Waldeck's text is printed by the editor with a second recension set into the apparatus, and the two are not always easy to separate. In the other recension Michaelmas is kept "fur das virte heuptfest", as the fourth chief feast (p. 272).

12.6.2 Tables of whole and half holy days

From the 1560s the orders of the Harz counties and of the Rhine and Main set out the whole and half days in formal lists.

Mansfeld, Kirchen-agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, pp. 239–240):

> Von gemeinen festen. Weil auch aus ungleichem halten der festage, viel unrichtigkeit einfellet, so sollen die pfarherren wissen, welche feiertage in dieser grafschaft ganz, welche aber nur halb gehalten werden. Diese nachfolgende fest helt man den ganzen tag durchaus feierlich. Den christag, sampt den zweien folgenden tagen, Stephani und Johannis. Den neuen jars tag. Den tag der offenbarung Christi, den man den tag der heiligen drei könige nennet. Den tag der reinigung Mariae. Den tag der verkündigung Mariae. Den ostertag, mit den zweien folgenden tagen. Den tag , der himmelfart Christi. Den tag der heiligen pfingsten, mit den zweien nechst folgenden tagen. Den tag Johannis des teufers. Den tag visitationis Mariae. Den tag Michaelis. […] Nachfolgende tage werden nur halb gefeiret. Der tag S. Andreae. Der tag des apostels S. Thomae. Der tag der bekerung S. Pauli. Der tag des apostels Matthiae. Der grüne donnerstag. Der charfreitag. Der tag Philippi Jacobi. Der tag Petri und Pauli. S. Jacobus tag. S. Laurentii tag. Der tag Bartholomei. Der tag Matthei. Der tag Simonis und Judae.

Of common feasts. Forasmuch also as much disorder ariseth from the unequal keeping of the feast days, the parsons shall know which holy days in this county are kept wholly, and which but half. These feasts following are kept holy the whole day throughout: Christmas day, together with the two days following, Stephen and John; New Year's day; the day of the manifestation of Christ, which is called the day of the Three Kings; the day of the Purification of Mary; the day of the Annunciation of Mary; Easter day, with the two days following; the day of the Ascension of Christ; the day of holy Whitsuntide, with the two days next following; the day of John the Baptist; the day of the Visitation of Mary; the day of Michael. […] The days following are kept but half holy: the day of St Andrew; the day of the apostle St Thomas; the day of the conversion of St Paul; the day of the apostle Matthias; Maundy Thursday; Good Friday; the day of Philip and James; the day of Peter and Paul; St James's day; St Laurence's day; the day of Bartholomew; the day of Matthew; the day of Simon and Jude.

At Wintzingerode the whole days (the same list as Mansfeld) are graded again by sermons. Wintzingerode (Gericht Bodenstein), *Kirchen-Ordnung (Sehling 2, p. 256; after the Hohnstein order; undated):

> Und soll auf einen jeden tag zweimal geprediget und von allerhand arbeit denselben ganzen tag stille gehalten werden. Auf den dritten tag der treien hauptfeste als auf Johannistag, in den heiligen weinachten, auf den oster und pfingst dinstag soll nur ein mal gepredigt werden. Nachfolgende tage werden nur halb gefeiret: Der tag des apostels S. Andreae. Der tag des apostels S. Thomae. Der tag der bekerung S. Pauli. Der tag des apostels S. Matthiae. Der grüne donnerstag. Der charfreitag. Der tag Philippi Jacobi. Der tag Petri und Pauli. Der tag Mariae Magdalenae. Der tag S. Jacobi. Der tag Bartholomaei. Der tag Mathaei. Der tag Simonis, und Judae. […] Es sollen auch allezeit die fest und aposteltage den sontag zuvor, darmit sich das volk darnach zu richten, vorkündiget und abgesaget, darneben vormeldet, welche ganz und welche halb solen gefeiret werden.

And on every such day there shall be preaching twice, and rest kept from all manner of work the same whole day. On the third day of the three chief feasts, as on St John's day in holy Christmas, and on the Easter and Whitsun Tuesday, there shall be preaching but once. The days following are kept but half holy: the day of the apostle St Andrew; the day of the apostle St Thomas; the day of the conversion of St Paul; the day of the apostle St Matthias; Maundy Thursday; Good Friday; the day of Philip and James; the day of Peter and Paul; the day of Mary Magdalene; the day of St James; the day of Bartholomew; the day of Matthew; the day of Simon and Jude. […] Also the feasts and apostles' days shall always be proclaimed and bidden on the Sunday before, that the people may order themselves thereafter, and withal it shall be declared which shall be kept wholly and which half.

In Pfalz-Zweibrücken the duchy's Statthalter and councillors clarify the church order of 1557, which had been read in different ways. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Feiertagsordnung, 1561 (Sehling 18, pp. 297–298):

> Nemlich allso, daß hinfurther nachvollgennde Feyrtag fur hohe fest zuhallten, die gleich den Sonntagen vor- unnd nachmittag sollend gefeyret werdenn, als: […] 1. Nativitatis, daß ist der Christag. 2. Circumcisionis, die beschneidung Christi. 3. Epiphaniae, daß ist der hailigen drei König tag. 4. Purificationis, daß ist der tag der opfferung Christi. 5. Annuntiationis, der tag, da Christus inn der Jungkfrawen leib empfangen ist wordenn. 6. Caene Domini, der Grun Donnerstag. 7. Passionis Domini, der Charfreittag. 8. Ascensionis Domini, daß ist die Himmelfarth Christi. Waß aber die uberigen gemaine feyrtag, alsda seindt der Apostell tag, Nemlich Sanct Mathias, Philippi Jacobi, Petri unnd Pauli, […] Andree und Thomastag, item S. Johannstag, Visitationis Marie, S. Michelstag […] und die zween vollgennde nach dem Christag, Ostern unnd Pfingsten belanngt, an denen soll hinfurther allain morgents vor mittag Gottes Wortt verkhundigt werdenn. Doch dergestallt, daß ann solchen tagen vor mittag bei straff zehen gulden niemandts erlaubt seie, felldt […] oder anndere arbaitt anzufahen, auch sein Kram oder laden nit auffzuthun oder dergleichen ettwas zuhandtieren, die Predig seie dann beschehen. Nach gethaner Predig aber soll niemandt zufeyren gezwungen, sonnder allßdann jederman zuarbaitten erlaubt sein.

Namely thus: that henceforth the holy days following are to be kept for high feasts, which shall be kept holy like the Sundays before and after noon, to wit: […] 1. The Nativity, that is, Christmas day. 2. The Circumcision, the circumcising of Christ. 3. The Epiphany, that is, the holy Three Kings' day. 4. The Purification, that is, the day of the offering of Christ. 5. The Annunciation, the day whereon Christ was conceived in the Virgin's womb. 6. The Supper of the Lord, Maundy Thursday. 7. The Passion of the Lord, Good Friday. 8. The Ascension of the Lord, that is, Christ's going up to heaven. But as touching the other common holy days, which are the apostles' days, namely St Matthias, Philip and James, Peter and Paul, […] Andrew's and Thomas's day, item St John's day, the Visitation of Mary, St Michael's day […] and the two following after Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide: on these God's Word shall henceforth be proclaimed only in the morning before noon. Yet in such wise that on such days before noon no man be suffered, on pain of ten gulden, to begin field-work or other work, nor to open his booth or shop, or to handle any such thing, until the sermon be done. But after the sermon is done, no man shall be compelled to keep holy, but every man shall then be free to work.

Note. Easter and Whitsunday fall on Sundays and are not listed. The second and third days of Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide are half days here. So are John the Baptist, the Visitation and Michaelmas, which Mecklenburg had kept whole or nearly so.

In the Landau ordinance the "whole" days are only four, and they are called high feasts of Christ. Landau, Feiertagsordnung of the town council, 1562 (Sehling 19/1, p. 61):

> Und seind das die hohen fest des herrn Christi, so gleich dem sontag durchauß gefeirt werden sollen: Erstlich der tag nativitatis oder geburt Christi sampt dem andern volgenden tag. Der tag circumcisionis oder der beschneidung Christi. Der tag epiphaniae, das ist der erscheinung oder offenbarung Christi, den man nennet der h[eiligen] drey könig tag. Jede montag nach ostern unnd pfingsten. Andere feiertag, so allein biß auff mittag gehalten werdenn sollen: Der tag der opferung Christi, genant purificationis Mariae. Der tag annunciationis Mariae oder conceptionis Christi. Der tag caenae domini, der grün durstag genent, daran von des hernn abentmal gepredigt wirdt. […] Der tag passionis domini oder des leidens unnd sterbens Christi, der karfreitag genent. Der tag ascensionis oder himelfarth Christi. Item die tag der aposteln. Der tag S[anct] Johannis des teuffers. Der tag visitationis Mariae. Der tag Michaelis von wegen der leer von den heiligen engeln. Unnd an solchen apostel- und feiertagen auserhalb der sontag unnd hohen fest hierbeiermelt mag ein jeder burger nach mittag sein geschefft unnd arbeit seiner gelegenheit nach wol verrichtenn.

And these are the high feasts of the Lord Christ which shall be kept holy throughout like the Sunday: first, the day of the Nativity or birth of Christ, with the second day following; the day of the Circumcision of Christ; the day of the Epiphany, that is, of the appearing or manifestation of Christ, which is called the holy Three Kings' day; each Monday after Easter and Whitsuntide. Other holy days, which shall be kept only until noon: the day of the offering of Christ, called the Purification of Mary; the day of the Annunciation of Mary or Conception of Christ; the day of the Lord's Supper, called Maundy Thursday, whereon is preached of the Lord's Supper; […] the day of the Passion of the Lord, or of the suffering and death of Christ, called Good Friday; the day of the Ascension of Christ; item the days of the apostles; the day of St John the Baptist; the day of the Visitation of Mary; the day of Michael, because of the doctrine of the holy angels. And on such apostles' and holy days, beside the Sundays and the high feasts here mentioned, every burgher may well do his business and work after noon, as it serveth him.

Note. In Landau even the Ascension is a half day. The high feasts that fall on weekdays, Christmas, New Year and Epiphany, are whole days. So are the Mondays of Easter and Whitsuntide.

The Pfalz-Veldenz chapter is headed "[X.] Ordnung der Feirtage. [1. Halbe und ganze Feiertage]". It gives a reason for keeping the half days. Pfalz-Veldenz, Kirchenordnung, 1574 (Sehling 18, p. 518):

> so ist doch nit gerathen, die gewohneten Feirtag zu endern oder abzustellen. Sintemahl sie gemeiner kürchen dohin dienstlich, das sie bestimbte zeitt wiß und verursacht werde, die Predig und Administration der Sacramenten zu besuchen, dieweil sonnst (wie die erfahrung gibt) das volckh inn den wochenpredigten gar saumhafft unnd fahrlessig ist, wann ihnen erlaubt zu arbeitten. Auch ist ohne das nöttig, das man im jahr etliche gemeine Bettag halte für das gantze Volckh, darzu die verordnete halbe Feyrtage am aller bequembsten sein mögen, do sie ohne Superstition gehalten werden, so wehre auch nit nutzlich, dise tag wider anfangen gantz zu feyren, dann (wie wir sehen) ist der Mißbrauch der Feyrtag sehr groß, gar wenig besuchen Mittags […] Predigen, werden vilmehr mit […] dantzen, spilen, zechen und anndern leichtfertigen dingen zubracht. Derohalben, wölche tag bißanhero gantz oder halb gefeyrt worden, sollen noch also hifürter nach diser Ordnung gehalten werden, dann hierin unnötig, das volckh abermahl irrig zu machen.

yet it is not advisable to change or abolish the accustomed holy days, since they serve the common Church to this end, that it may know appointed times, and be moved to resort to the sermon and the administration of the sacraments; for otherwise (as experience sheweth) the people are very slack and negligent at the week-day sermons, when they are suffered to work. Besides, it is needful that certain common days of prayer be kept in the year for the whole people, for which the appointed half holy days may be most convenient, if they be kept without superstition. Nor were it profitable to begin again to keep these days wholly; for (as we see) the abuse of holy days is very great: very few resort to the midday sermons, but they are rather spent in dancing, playing, carousing and other light things. Therefore the days which hitherto have been kept wholly or half shall be kept so henceforth according to this order; for herein it is needless to lead the people astray once more.

The list itself makes the half days into days of prayer. Pfalz-Veldenz, Kirchenordnung, 1574 (Sehling 18, p. 519):

> Item die zwen folgende tag nach dem Christag, zwen nach Ostern und zwen nach Pfingsten. An disen tagen soll man allein vor Mittag predigen unnd, so Communicanten do seindt nach der Predig, soll man die Letaney singen oder lesen, dann dise tag sollen für gemeine Bettage dem Volckh verkhündiget und gehaltten werden.

Item the two days following after Christmas, two after Easter and two after Whitsuntide. On these days one shall preach before noon only, and, if there be communicants, after the sermon one shall sing or read the Litany; for these days shall be proclaimed and kept for common days of prayer for the people.

Note. The whole days here are Christmas, Circumcision, Epiphany, Purification, Annunciation, Maundy Thursday and Ascension. The half days are the apostles, Good Friday, John the Baptist, the Visitation, Michaelmas, and the second and third days of the three great feasts. Like Waldeck 1556 (§12.6.1), this order ranks Good Friday below Maundy Thursday.

The Ysenburg-Ronneburg list grades each day separately, by sermons, forenoon and afternoon. Ysenburg-Ronneburg, Agende, 1582 (Sehling 10, p. 583):

> Festum Circumcisionis Christi [...] welchs sonst der new jahrs [tag] genänt, soll ganz gefeyert undt gehalten werden. Epiphania Domini oder Trium Regum soll auch vor unndt nach mittag mit einer predig gefeyert werden. Purificationis Mariae soll denn halben tag gefeyert werdenn. Dies Matthiae Apostoli auch nur ein halben tag. Annunciationis Mariae soll den halben tag gehalten werdenn. Nota: Weil dieses fest bisweilenn in die karwochenn gefelt, sols alsdann umbgangen werdenn. Grundonnerstag undt der charfreittag soll ein iglicher nur vor mittag gehaltenn werdenn. Der ostertag unndt ostermontag sollen beyde vor undt nach mittag mit predigten versehen werden, der osterdinstag nur vor mittag.

The feast of the Circumcision of Christ [...] which is otherwise called New Year's day, shall be kept holy and held wholly. The Epiphany of the Lord, or the Three Kings, shall also be kept holy before and after noon with a sermon. The Purification of Mary shall be kept holy the half day. The day of Matthias the apostle also but half a day. The Annunciation of Mary shall be kept the half day. Note: because this feast sometimes falleth in Holy Week, it shall then be passed over. Maundy Thursday and Good Friday shall each be kept before noon only. Easter day and Easter Monday shall both be furnished with sermons before and after noon; Easter Tuesday before noon only.

The list continues with the summer days, which are fitted to the harvest and to the market at Gelnhausen. Ysenburg-Ronneburg, Agende, 1582 (Sehling 10, p. 583):

> Der tag Johannis Baptistae soll wegen des marktags zu Gelnhausenn nur vor mittag mit einer predigt celebrirt werdenn. [...] Petri unndt Pauli unndt der tag Visitationis Mariae fallen gemeiniglich in einer wochenn undt zur erndezeit, soll alsdann under den beydenn der am gelegestenn mit einer predigt vor mittag gehalten werdenn. Bartholomaei, Matthaei, Michaelis, Simonis Judae, S. Tomas, diese sollenn nur vor mittag gehaltenn werdenn. Der christtag unndt S. Stephans tag soll vor unndt nach mittag mit predigten verrichtet werden. S. Johanns tag aber, des evangelistenn, mag nur mit einer predigt vor mittag beschlossenn werdenn.

The day of John the Baptist, because of the market day at Gelnhausen, shall be celebrated only before noon with a sermon. [...] Peter and Paul and the day of the Visitation of Mary commonly fall in one week and in harvest-time; then of the two, the one that is most convenient shall be kept with a sermon before noon. Bartholomew, Matthew, Michael, Simon and Jude, St Thomas, these shall be kept only before noon. Christmas day and St Stephen's day shall be performed with sermons before and after noon. But St John the Evangelist's day may be concluded with one sermon only before noon.

The Nassau-Weilburg text of 1576 lists twelve feasts, and in 1618 a sentence was added to divide them. Nassau-Weilburg, Kirchenordnung, 1576, with the Agende of 1618 (Sehling 10, p. 228):

> Diese Feyertage, so zur gedächtnuß der wolthaten unsers Herrn Jhesu Christi verordenet seind, werden mit Gesang, Predigen unnd Communion gleich den gemeinen Sontagen gehalten, allein daß die Introitus, Sequentz und andere Geseng de Tempore für die andern gemeine Gesenge gebraucht werden. Der Aposteln tage aber sollen alle mit einer Predigt gehalten werden.

These holy days, which are ordained for the remembrance of the benefits of our Lord Jesus Christ, are kept with chant, sermons and communion like the common Sundays; only that the introits, sequences and other chants de tempore are used instead of the other common chants. But the apostles' days shall all be kept with one sermon.

The 1618 Agende reads instead. Nassau-Weilburg, Agende, 1618 (Sehling 10, p. 228; in the editor's apparatus):

> den gemeinen Sontagen gleich und gantz feyrlich celebrirt. Der dritte Tag aber zu Weihenachten, Ostern und Pfingsten sampt dem Tag Visitationis Mariae, S. Iohannis Baptistae wie auch Michaelis und der Heyligen Apostel Tage sollen mit einer Predigt gehalten werden, unnd gehet das Volck nach Mittag widerumb zu seiner Arbeit. Damit aber das gemeine Volck sich destobaß darnach hab zu richten, so sollen unsere Kirchendiener allewegen den Sontag zuvor von der Cantzel > verkündigen, was für Fest- und Feyertage dieselbige zukünfftige Wochen einfallen und ob die mit einer Predigt halb oder gantz feyerlich nach der Kirchenordnung sollen gehalten werden.

celebrated like the common Sundays and wholly solemnly. But the third day at Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide, together with the day of the Visitation of Mary, of St John the Baptist, and also Michaelmas and the holy apostles' days, shall be kept with one sermon, and the people go again to their work after noon. But that the common people may the better order themselves thereafter, our ministers shall always on the Sunday before proclaim from the pulpit what feasts and holy days fall in the same coming week, and whether they shall be kept half with one sermon, or wholly solemnly, according to the church order.

The Nassau-Weilburg rule in its final form. Nassau-Weilburg, Visitationsabschied, 1609 (Sehling 10, p. 352):

> Von feiertagen undt wochenpredigten 1. Wir wollen unndt verordnen, daß hienfuro die gantze feyertage mit zwo predigten unndt andern göttlichen ubungen, der dritte tag in den weyhnacht-, oster- unndt pfingstfeyertagen mit einer predigt, wie auch der tag Johannis Baptistae, visitationis Mariae unndt Michaelis gleich den aposteltagen, halb feyerlich gehalten werden unndt die leute nach mittag, wann der gottesdienst verrichtet, ahn ihre arbeit gehen. […] 3. Wo uff den gründonnerstags, qui dies institutionis caenae dominicae est, daß nachtmal deß herrn zue celebriren gewönlich, darbey laßen wir es verpleiben, sonsten soll derselbige sampt dem charfreytag nur halb feyerlich gehalten werden

Of holy days and week-day sermons. 1. We will and ordain that henceforth the whole holy days be kept with two sermons and other divine exercises; the third day in the Christmas, Easter and Whitsun holy days with one sermon; as also the day of John the Baptist, of the Visitation of Mary, and of Michael, like the apostles' days, half solemnly; and that the people go to their work after noon, when the divine service is performed. […] 3. Where it is wont to celebrate the Lord's Supper on Maundy Thursday, which is the day of the institution of the Lord's Supper, we let it remain so; otherwise the same, together with Good Friday, shall be kept but half solemnly

Ritzebüttel has a Low German list in two columns. Ritzebüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 5, p. 559):

> Die virdage overst, an welckeren unse gadesdienst in der kercken geholden wert, sin desse na beschrevene und sint den ganzen dag virlich. Alle sondage. Die ersten twe dage […] in den winachten Nihe jars dag. Die ersten 2 dage in den h. pfingsten. Drie könig dag. Item […] Johannis Baptistae dag. Marien berggang. S. Michaelen dae;. lichtmessen dag. Marien redeschop. Die ersten 2 dage in der heil, paschen. Der herren hemmelfart. De na vortekenden dage werden virlick geholden up den halven dag edder bet to middage umb der predige willen, also: Alle apostel dage. Dingstag in den paschen. Pingesten. Marien Magdalenen dag. Pauli bekehrunge dag. Aller hilligen dag.

But the holy days whereon our divine service is held in the church are these hereafter written, and are holy the whole day: all Sundays; the first two days in Christmas; New Year's day; the first two days in holy Whitsuntide; the Three Kings' day; item St John the Baptist's day; Mary's going over the hills; St Michael's day; Candlemas day; Mary's message; the first two days in holy Easter; the Lord's Ascension. The days hereafter noted are kept holy for the half day, or until noon, for the sermon's sake, thus: all apostles' days; the Tuesday in Easter; [the Tuesday in] Whitsuntide; Mary Magdalene's day; St Paul's conversion day; All Saints' day.

> Von den feyertagen, cap. 1 Nachvolgende tage sollen den gantzen tag feyerlich gehalten und an denselben keine ausserliche, grobe arbeit verrichtet, sondern mit predigen, singen, beten, lesen und betrachtung gottliches worts zubracht werden: Alle sontage, der tag der geburt Christi sambt zweien nachvolgenden tagen, der newe jars tag oder circumcisionis, der tag epiphaniae […] der tag der opferung Christi im tempel, genant purificationis Mariae, der tag annunciationis Mariae oder conceptionis Christi […] der tag coenae Domini […] der tag passionis Christi […] der ostertag und uferstehung des hern Christi sambt volgendem montag und dinstag, […] der tag ascensionis oder uffhart Christi zum hiemel, der pfingstdag sambt volgenden montag und dinstag. Uber das sollen volgende tage vormittage feirlich gehalten und daran geprediget werden: alle aposteltage, sanct Johannis des tauffers tag, visitationis Mariae

Of the holy days, chapter 1. The days following shall be kept holy the whole day, and no outward gross work be done thereon, but they be spent with preaching, singing, praying, reading and meditating of God's Word: all Sundays; the day of the birth of Christ with two days following; New Year's day, or the Circumcision; the day of the Epiphany […] the day of the offering of Christ in the temple, called the Purification of Mary; the day of the Annunciation of Mary or Conception of Christ […] the day of the Lord's Supper […] the day of the Passion of Christ […] Easter day and the resurrection of the Lord Christ, with the following

Monday and Tuesday, […] the day of the Ascension, or of Christ's going up to heaven; Whitsunday with the following Monday and Tuesday. Beside these the days following shall be kept holy in the forenoon, and preaching held thereon: all apostles' days, St John the Baptist's day, the Visitation of Mary

Leiningen-Hardenburg, Kirchenordnungsmandat for Dürkheim, 1584 (Sehling 19/1, pp. 277–278):

> Nachdem in unserer kirchenordnung versehen, das man alle Son- und hohen Festag, als den heyligen Oster-, Pfingst und Cristag sambt dem negst nachvolgenden tag, deßgleichen auch den neuen jars tag, der heyligen drei könig tag, Marie Lichtmeß, Marie verkundigung und Himelfart Cristi […] den gantzen tag durchaus feyren und heyligen, auch vor- und nachmittag gottes wort verkundigen und predigen soll […] Sovil aber der heyligen apostel tag anbelangt, die sollen vormittag mit verkhundigung gottliches worts gehalten und gefeirt werden, aber nach volendter predig mag ein jeder in sein arbait dretten.

Whereas it is provided in our church order that all Sundays and high feast days, as the holy Easter, Whitsun and Christmas day, together with the next day following, likewise also New Year's day, the holy Three Kings' day, Mary's Candlemas, Mary's Annunciation and the Ascension of Christ […] shall be kept holy and hallowed the whole day throughout, and God's Word be proclaimed and preached before and after noon […] But as touching the holy apostles' days, these shall be kept and hallowed in the forenoon with the proclaiming of God's Word; but after the sermon is ended every man may go to his work.

In the city of Osnabrück a local day of penance stands among the half days. Osnabrück (city), Kirchenordnung, 1613 (Sehling 7/1, p. 267):

> Folgende tag werden nur mit einer predigt halb gefeyret: 1. Johannis evangelistae tag. 2. Der tag Mariae reinigung. 3. Der tag Matthiae apostoli. 4. Der eilfte tag Martii, an welchem eine bußpredigt wegen deß anno 1613 am 11. Martii erlittenen brandschadens gehalten wird. Item Osterd. und Pfingstdinstag. 5. Der tag der verkündigung Mariae. 6. Der tag Philippi und Jacobi. 7. Der tag Johannis baptistae. 8. Der tag Petri und Pauli. 9. Der tag der heimsuchung Mariae. 10. Der tag Jacobi apostoli. 11. Der tag Bartholomaei, welcher ein tag der danksagung ist vor die eingeerndte frücht. 12. Der tag Matthaei. 13. Der tag Simonis und Judae. 14. Der tag Andreae.

The days following are kept but half holy, with one sermon: 1. St John the Evangelist's day. 2. The day of the Purification of Mary. 3. The day of Matthias the apostle. 4. The eleventh day of March, whereon a sermon of repentance is held because of the damage by fire suffered on the 11th of March in the year 1613. Item Easter Tuesday and Whitsun Tuesday. 5. The day of the Annunciation of Mary. 6. The day of Philip and James. 7. The day of John the Baptist. 8. The day of Peter and Paul. 9. The day of the Visitation of Mary. 10. The day of James the apostle. 11. The day of Bartholomew, which is a day of thanksgiving for the fruits gathered in. 12. The day of Matthew. 13. The day of Simon and Jude. 14. The day of Andrew.

Note. In Osnabrück St Bartholomew's day, not Michaelmas, is the harvest thanksgiving. The sentence before this list puts St Stephen's day among the days "nur mit zweyen predigten ganz gefeyret", kept wholly but with two sermons only. The editor explains that the chief feasts had three: the catechism sermon, the chief (Gospel) sermon and the Epistle sermon.

At Tecklenburg the half day is defined by the sermon alone. Tecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 22, p. 245):

> Up doße apostel- und andere kleine festdage sal nemant onder dem sermone arbeiden; darvoir edder na tho arbeyden, sal vryg staen.

On these apostles' and other small feast days no man shall work during the sermon; to work before or after it shall be free.

A town's report to the visitors gives the rule in two lines. Ermsleben, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1564 (Sehling 2, p. 486):

> Alle aposteltage wird gepredigt und vor mittags gefeiret. In den hohen festtagen feieret man den ganzen tag, predigt zweimal.

On all apostles' days there is preaching, and holy day is kept before noon. On the high feast days holy day is kept the whole day, and there is preaching twice.

Brieg is a Silesian order in which the three Marian feasts of Christ, with John the Baptist and Michaelmas, are whole days. Brieg, Kirchenordnung, 1592 (Sehling 3, p. 445):

> Die drei Marien-fest, als Annunciationis, Visitationis und Purificationis, item festum Johannis Baptae und Michaelis sollen den ganzen tag feierlich, wie sie fallen, gehalten werden; die apostelfest aber mit einer predigt, die da früh soll geschehen, doch dass die leute können zur kirchen kommen.

The three feasts of Mary, as the Annunciation, the Visitation and the Purification, item the feast of John the Baptist and of Michael, shall be kept solemnly the whole day, as they fall; but the apostles' feasts with one sermon, which shall be held early, yet so that the people can come to church.

12.6.3 Counting the rank in sermons

Many orders measure a day by its number of sermons: three, two, or one. At Penig the second day of a high feast has two sermons and the last day one.

Penig, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 1, p. 634):

> Alle hohe fest geschehen den ersten tag drei predigten zur matin, zum ampt und vesper zeiten, folgenden festtag zwo, zum letzten eine.

On all high feasts there are three sermons on the first day, at the times of matins, the office and vespers; on the following feast day two; on the last, one.

In Henneberg the four chief feasts have two sermons and all other feasts one. The Ascension is one of the four. Henneberg, Kirchenordnung of Georg Ernst, 1582 (Sehling 2, pp. 312–313):

> Von den festen. Uber die sontag sollen zu betrachtung der wolthaten Jesu Christi, unsers geliebten herrn und heilands, nachfolgende festtage feierlich gehalten, und darauf die gewönlichen evangelia mit den ceremonien, wie an den sontagen geordnet, gehandelt werden. Erstlich die vier heupt fest, mit zweien predigten, vor und nach mittage, als: Der erst und ander christag. Der erst und ander ostertag. Auffartstag. Erst und ander pfingstag. Desgleichen auch Circumcisionis. Trium regum. Purificationis oder lichtmess. Zum andern die gewöhnliche andere festa, als: Aller apostel tage. Item : Pauli bekehrung. Annunciationis. Donnerstag und freitag in der palmwochen. Johannis Baptistae. Visitationis. Mariae Magdalenae. Michaelis, von den engeln. Diese alle sollen erstlich auf den sontag zuvor verkündiget, darnach wenn und wie sie gefallen, […] nachfolgender gestalt mit einer predigt gehalten werden. […] Und sol als denn des folgenden morgends mit den ceremonien, wie auf die gemeine sontage, doch one orgeln, gehalten werden. Wann nun solche predigt vor mittage volbracht ist, sol ein jeder an seine gebürende arbeit und beruf gehen.

Of the feasts. Over and above the Sundays, for the considering of the benefits of Jesus Christ, our beloved Lord and Saviour, these feast days following shall be kept solemnly, and thereon the wonted Gospels handled with the ceremonies as ordained on the Sundays. First, the four chief feasts, with two sermons, before and after noon, as: the first and second Christmas day; the first and second Easter day; Ascension day; the first and second Whitsunday. Likewise also the Circumcision, the Three Kings, the Purification or Candlemas. Secondly the wonted other feasts, as: all apostles' days; item St Paul's conversion; the Annunciation; Thursday and Friday in Palm week; John the Baptist; the Visitation; Mary Magdalene; Michael, of the angels. All these shall first be proclaimed on the Sunday before, and thereafter, when and as they fall, […] be kept in manner following with one sermon. […] And then on the following morning it shall be kept with the ceremonies as on the common Sundays, yet without the organs. And when such sermon is performed before noon, every man shall go to his due work and calling.

Note. In Henneberg the Annunciation is a lower-rank feast, but the Circumcision, Epiphany and Purification go with the chief feasts. Also on the lower feasts the organ is silent.

12.6.4 Harvest, markets and the working year

The rank of the summer feasts was often cut down because of the harvest. The feasts of Peter and Paul (29 June), the Visitation (2 July), James (25 July), Mary Magdalene (22 July), Laurence (10 August), the Assumption (15 August) and Bartholomew (24 August) are the ones most affected.

The Mediasch synod gives the only technical term for the half day in the corpus, intercise. Transylvanian Saxons, Mediasch synod, 1578 (Sehling 24, pp. 427–428; the report printed in the apparatus from Teutsch's Urkundenbuch):

> In hac synodo ex deliberatione pastorum quorundam remota fuerunt duo festa apostolorum Petri et Pauli et divi Iacobi propter opera rustica, quae passim in istum mensem incidunt disputatoque de celebratione aliorum festorum apostolis dedicatorum conclusum est, ut isti apostolici dies intercise, hoc […] est dimidiatim sacri haberentur et post officium matutinum sacrum concessum liberumque sit. cuilibet operas faciendi manuarias, dies autem domini nostri Iesu Christi ut Annunciationis, Ascensionis, Paschatis, Pentecostes, Nativitatis totaliter.

In this synod, by the deliberation of certain pastors, two feasts of the apostles, of Peter and Paul and of St James, were removed because of the country works which everywhere fall in that month; and, it being disputed of the celebration of the other feasts dedicated to the apostles, it was concluded that these apostolic days should be held holy intercise, that is, by halves, and that after the morning office it be granted and free to every man to do handiwork; but the days of our Lord Jesus Christ, as the Annunciation, the Ascension, Easter, Pentecost, the Nativity, wholly.

Note. Intercisi dies was the Roman calendar's term for days that were holy in the morning and evening but lawful for business in between.

The Burzenland article is headed De feriis hebdomadatibus. Burzenland (Transylvania), Visitationsartikel, 1578 (Sehling 24, p. 452; German version B in the apparatus):

> Der wochen gemeiner feuer-täge wegen ist verordnet von der geistlicher universität, daß sie irer alle vom cantzel sollen verkündiget werden. Doch sollen sie voriges mißbrauchs wegen nur biß auf den mittag gefeyert werden mit handlung des worts Gottes und der heiligen sacramente. Denmnach kan ein jeder seiner und gemeiner arbeit auswarten.

Concerning the common holy days of the week, it is ordained by the spiritual university that they shall all be proclaimed from the pulpit. Yet because of the former abuse they shall be kept holy only until noon, with the handling of God's Word and the holy sacraments. Thereafter every man may attend to his own and the common work.

Note. The Latin note in the same apparatus records how the article went: it had been abolished "sic ut nullum divorum festum celebraretur", so that no saint's feast was celebrated, and was brought back at the synod of Birthälm in 1580.

In Mansfeld the apostles' Gospels in the harvest are moved to the Sunday, but only in the villages. Mansfeld, Kirchen-agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 240):

> Nach dem aber in der ernte zeit die tage Petri Pauli und Jacobi gefallen, und die leute in solcher zeit an der arbeit nicht gerne verhindert werden, so können dieselbigen evangelia obgetachter tage, auf den dörfern, ein jedes auf nehest volgenden sontag verleget werden. In stedten aber kan man sie halten auf den tag, darauf sie gefallen oder komen, wo sie auf einen sonnabent kemen, auch auf die nehesten sontag transferirt werden.

But forasmuch as the days of Peter and Paul and of James fall in the harvest-time, and the people are loath at that time to be hindered at their work, the Gospels of the said days may in the villages be laid, each one, on the next following Sunday. But in the towns one may keep them on the day whereon they fall or come; if they come on a Saturday, they may also be transferred to the next Sunday.

Nassau-Dillenburg moves the whole block of summer feasts to Sunday. Nassau-Dillenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1537 (Sehling 10, p. 74):

> Sanct Johans des tauffers tag, item sanct Peter unnd Paulus, Maria haimsuchung, visitationis genant, sanct Maria Magdalenen tag, sanct Jacobs, des apostels, sanct Laurentius, Maria Hymmelfart tag. Diese alle, dieweil sie in der rechten erndten khomen, sollen auff den nechsten sonttag nach dem calendertag gehalten werden, sover sie nit auff den sontag gefallen. Eß soll auch ein jeglicher pharher auff die sontag, darauff jetztbenante feiertag verlegt, nach mittag fur der khinderzucht das evangelion, so auff den tag zuhalten verordent ist, predigen.

St John the Baptist's day; item St Peter and Paul; Mary's Visitation, called visitationis; St Mary Magdalene's day; St James the apostle's; St Laurence; the day of Mary's Assumption. All these, because they come in the very harvest, shall be kept on the next Sunday after the calendar day, unless they fall on the Sunday. And every parson shall, on the Sundays to which the said holy days are removed, preach after noon, before the catechising of the children, the Gospel appointed to be kept for that day.

Sayn, Kirchenordnung, 1590 (Sehling 19/1, p. 389):

> Der Tag Petri und Pauli. Der Tag visitationis Mariae. Der Tag Iacobi Apostoli. Der Tag Bartholomaei. Weil gemeldte Apostel Fest in die Ernde fallen, sollen sie allein vor Mittag gefeyret werden.

The day of Peter and Paul. The day of the Visitation of Mary. The day of James the apostle. The day of Bartholomew. Because the said apostles' feasts fall in the harvest, they shall be kept holy before noon only.

To avoid too many summer holy days, Veit Dietrich moves the Visitation to 15 August, where it takes the place of the Assumption. Nürnberg, Veit Dietrich, Agendbüchlein, 1545 (Sehling 11, p. 538):

> Weil aber gemeinlich das fest Visitationis Marie in ein wochen, mit S.Peter und Paul felt und der feiertage umb der feldarbeit willen dazumal zu vil wöllen sein, ists also bedacht, das solchs fest Visitationis Marie auf den 15.tag Augusti verschoben wer, da man sonst das fest von der Himelfart Marie helt, welchs doch kein grund in der schrift und zu großer abgötterei vil ursach geben hat. Darumb soll man auf solchen tag Assumptionis die historien halten von der Heimsuchung, welche in der schrift gegründet und derhalb ein nütze lehr geben kan.

But since the feast of the Visitation of Mary commonly falleth in one week with St Peter and Paul, and the holy days would be too many at that time because of the field-work, it is thus devised that the same feast of the Visitation of Mary be put off to the fifteenth day of August, whereon otherwise the feast of the Ascension of Mary is kept, which yet hath no ground in the Scripture and hath given much occasion to great idolatry. Therefore on that day of the Assumption one shall hold the history of the Visitation, which is grounded in the Scripture and can therefore give a profitable doctrine.

Note. The same text is repeated in Hohenlohe 1578 (Sehling 15, p. 296), Wolfstein 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 587) and a Schwäbisch Hall draft of 1614 (Sehling 17/1, p. 191).

12.7 How many days: the high feasts and their following days

The late-medieval octave, a week-long observance of a great feast, has left almost no trace. Its place is taken by the "following days" (nachfolgende Tage, Feiertage) of Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide. How many of them are kept, and how fully, is itself a mark of rank.

- Three days in all the Bugenhagen orders (§12.5.4), in Saxony, Mecklenburg and their successors (§12.5.2), and in Regensburg, Thorn, Danzig, the Harz counties and Schwarzburg.
- Two days (the feast and the next day) in the Württemberg family (§12.5.3), in the Brandenburg-Nürnberg order of 1533 and its successors (§12.8.3), and in Kurpfalz.
- A graded third day: the third day is still a holy day but with fewer sermons, no communion, or no figural music.

12.7.1 Three days

Amt Grimma, Generalia der dorfer, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 576):

> Die hohe feste sollen allzeit drei tag mit predigen und andern cerimonien ganz feierlich gehalten, und in den messen, so communicanten vorhanden, messgewant gebraucht werden.

The high feasts shall always be kept three days, wholly solemnly, with preaching and other ceremonies, and in the masses, where there are communicants, the mass vestment be used.

Schwarzburg, Ordnung der fest und feiertage, 1587 (Sehling 2, p. 137):

> Die drei hauptfeste weihenachten, ostern und pfingsten sollen drei tage feierlich gehalten werden, die ersten zween tage vor und nachmittage, der dritte aber allein vormittag mit predigten und do communicanten vorhanden, sollten alle drei tage das ampt gehalten werden. Gleichfalls sollen vor und nachmittag feierlich gehalten und solenniter celebriert werden, diese nechst folgende fest, als: Circumcisionis, Trium regum oder Epiphaniae, Purificationis […] Adnunciationis […] Mariae Virginis, Visitationis […] Johannis Baptistae, S. Michaelis.

The three chief feasts, Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide, shall be kept solemnly three days: the first two days before and after noon, but the third in the forenoon only, with sermons; and where there be communicants, the office shall be held on all three days. Likewise these feasts next following shall be kept solemnly before and after noon and celebrated with solemnity, as: the Circumcision; the Three Kings or Epiphany; the Purification, the Annunciation and the Visitation of the Virgin Mary; John the Baptist; St Michael.

The St Mary's order at Danzig made the third day lesser, with two early sermons. In the margin a sixteenth-century hand wrote the contrary. Danzig, draft Feiertagsordnung and St Mary's order of 1567 (Sehling 4, p. 187):

> Der dritte festtag soll gleich den andern zween gehalten werden.

The third feast day shall be kept like the other two.

At Regensburg all three days are kept, but the third has neither communion nor the midday sermon. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, 1567 (Sehling 13, p. 475):

> An festen Christi, allen und jeden, wird neben den predigten frue auch das abendmahl gehalten und derhalben abends zuvor auch die vesper umb der communicanten willen. An Weihnachten, Ostern und Pfingsten wird doch das abendmahl nur die ersten zween tage gehalten und den dritten tag, als dem erichtag, die mittagspredig in beiden kirchen unterlassen, wie unten volget.

On the feasts of Christ, each and every one, the Supper is held beside the sermons in the morning, and therefore also vespers on the evening before, for the communicants' sake. Yet at Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide the Supper is held only the first two days, and on the third day, being the Tuesday, the midday sermon is left off in both churches, as followeth below.

In Prince Bernhard's Anhalt order the third day is graded by its music. Anhalt, Kirchenordnung of Prince Bernhard, 1568 (Sehling 2, p. 569):

> Zu hohen festen soll man zwene heilige tage figural und den dritten tag den lateinischen coral und den sequens de tempore singen.

On high feasts one shall sing two holy days in figural music, and on the third day the Latin plain-song and the sequence de tempore.

The Wintzingerode order (§12.6.2) and Penig 1575 (§12.6.3) also make the third day lesser, with one sermon instead of two or three. Nassau-Weilburg 1609 (§12.6.2) makes it a half holy day.

12.7.2 Two days, and "two only"

Most Upper German orders keep the feast and the next day: "Der Ostertag sampt dem nächsten darnach" (Württemberg 1553, §12.5.3). Two orders show the difference plainly.

The pastor of Goldlauter describes his practice in his report to the visitors. Goldlauter (Henneberg), parish order, 1566 (Sehling 2, p. 333; printed "Groldlauter"):

> Also pfleg ich es auch zu halten auf die hohe fest, wie oben stehet, one allein die lieder von einem idlichen fest werden gesungen an statt der vorigen und auf weinachten feiern wir drei tage, auf ostern und pfingsten nur zwen wie in der agend stehet.

So am I wont to keep it also on the high feasts, as standeth above, save only that the songs of each feast are sung instead of the former; and at Christmas we keep holy three days, at Easter and Whitsuntide but two, as standeth in the agenda.

Henneberg, Kirchenordnung, 1582 (§12.6.3) keeps "Der erst und ander christag. Der erst und ander ostertag … Erst und ander pfingstag": two days at each feast, and so no third day at Christmas either.

12.7.3 St Stephen and St John in Christmas week

In the medieval calendar 26 and 27 December were the feasts of St Stephen and St John the Evangelist, both of high grade. Luther's Formula missae keeps "the office of the Nativity" on those days (§12.3.1). The orders then choose among three answers:

- They become the second and third days of Christmas, with the Christmas Gospel and at most a mention of the saint. This is the common Lutheran solution.
- They are kept as saints' days within Christmas.

- They are joined into one day, as at Weißenburg 1528 (§12.5.7) and in one recension of Brenz's Hall order.

Schwäbisch Hall, Brenz, Kirchenordnung, 1527, variant B (Sehling 17/1, p. 53):

> B: den Christag mitsampt Sant Stephans tag also, das man Sant Stephans und Sant Johans, nachfolgenden tag, fur ein und nit zwen feyrtag halte

B: Christmas day together with St Stephen's day, so that St Stephen's and St John's, the day following, be kept for one holy day and not two

At Wolfenbüttel the saints are joined to the "festival sermon" of the second and third Christmas days as themes of their own. Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 62):

> Am dage Stephani neven der festpredike schal men ock prediken van den diaken edder gemeinen kastendenern, darby antheen dat exempel Stephani und Laurentii, darmit den lüden ein sorchfeldicheit ingebildet werde vor de armen. Am dage Johannis des evangelisten is tho reden neven der festpredike van dem berope edder eschinge eines jeweliken mynschen.

On St Stephen's day, beside the festival sermon, one shall also preach of the deacons or common chest-servants, and allege thereby the example of Stephen and Laurence, that a carefulness for the poor may be imprinted on the people. On the day of John the Evangelist one is to speak, beside the festival sermon, of the calling or vocation of every man.

Note.

- Grubenhagen 1544 adds the Holy Innocents on 28 December as a fourth day of Christmas, kept "while the sermon lasteth" (§12.5.5).
- Braunschweig 1528 tells the preacher to remember St John after the sermon of the third day of Christmas, and St Stephen after the sermon of the second (p. 398).

12.8 Individual feasts and where they stand

12.8.1 Purification and Annunciation: Marian names, feasts of Christ

Following Luther ("Festum purificationis et annunciationis pro festis Christi … habemus", §12.3.1), almost every order keeps these two days and counts them among the feasts of Christ. The orders often rename them to make the point:

- "Der tag der offenbarung Christi in dem tempel, so man nennet purificationis Mariae" (Saxony 1539, §12.5.2).
- "Der tag der opferung Christi im tempel" (Mecklenburg 1552, §12.5.2).
- "Annunciationis Mariae oder conceptionis Christi" (Mecklenburg 1552, Sayn 1582 and others).
- "Purificationis Christi et Marie. Annunciacionis Christi" (Hausmann, Anhalt 1532, §12.5.7).

Their rank is still not fixed:

- Whole holy days: in Mecklenburg, Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1561, Mansfeld 1580 and Brieg 1592.
- Half days: in Landau 1562 and Ysenburg 1582 (§12.6.2).
- Forenoon only: in Württemberg 1536 (§12.5.3).

When the Annunciation falls in Holy Week it has to be moved, and the orders' rules for this show how its rank was understood (§12.14.2).

12.8.2 The Visitation

The Visitation (2 July) was a late-medieval feast, but its Gospel (Luke 1:39–56, with the Magnificat) made it acceptable. Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed) already keeps it (§12.3.2). Riga 1530 keeps it "because that was the first revelation of Christ, when he was yet in his mother's womb" (§12.3.7). Saxony 1539 keeps it "because of that history of the Gospel" (§12.5.2).

It usually stands in the second rank, beside John the Baptist and Michaelmas. In the Nürnberg family its date was moved to 15 August, to take the place of the Assumption and to spare the harvest (§12.6.4).

12.8.3 The Assumption: abolished, replaced, or kept "for the working peasants"

No feast shows the range of the orders better than the Assumption (15 August). It has no Gospel history. But in north Germany it was one of the four feasts on which the "four-times" offering was paid (§12.9), and elsewhere it was a harvest holiday. The orders deal with it in three ways.

1. Kept, but preached as the Visitation.

Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 204):

> Unser Frauen tag irer himelfart, nit darumb das der in der heiligen schrift grund hab, sunder von des gemainen arbeitenden pauersvolks wegen. Doch soll an solichem fest in den kirchen die historien von unser frauen fest Visitationis genant, derhalben man in dem heiligen evangelio zeugnus hat, mit singen und lesen gehalten werden

Our Lady's day of her Ascension, not because it hath ground in holy Scripture, but for the sake of the common labouring country-folk. Yet on that feast the history of our Lady's feast called the Visitation, whereof there is witness in the holy Gospel, shall be kept in the churches with singing and reading

Tecklenburg has the same text in Low German, and there the day also counts as one of the four chief feasts. Tecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 22, p. 245):

> Unser leven frouwen hemelvaertdes dag, assumptionis genant, alß ein veerhochtydsfeest, nicht darom, dat et in der hilligen schrift grundt hebbe, […] sonder von des gemeinen arbeidenden werckvolcks wegen; doch sol an solchen fest in der kercken de historia visitationis Mariae, der men in dem evangelio tuighniße hefft, mit singen und lesen geholden werden.

Our dear Lady's Ascension day, called the Assumption, as a feast of the four high times; not that it hath ground in the holy Scripture, […] but for the sake of the common labouring work-folk; yet on that feast the history of the Visitation of Mary, whereof there is witness in the Gospel, shall be kept in the church with singing and reading.

Note. The Stift Osnabrück order of 1543 (Sehling 7/1, p. 223) forbids the feast outright. Its editor notes that some territories kept it as a Vierzeitenfest on the Nürnberg model. Veit Dietrich's Agendbüchlein of 1545 moves the Visitation itself to 15 August (§12.6.4).

2. Abolished, and Michaelmas made the fourth chief feast in its place. This is the northern solution: Mecklenburg 1552 (§12.5.2), Hoya 1571 and Harlingerland 1573/74 (§12.5.5), Lippe 1571 and Oldenburg 1573 (§12.9). The Mecklenburg visitors of 1557 insisted on it.

Mecklenburg, Visitations-Instruction, 1557 (Sehling 5, p. 224):

> Auch wirt angezeigt, wie es mit den festen oder feiertagen hinfurder uber das jar eintregtiglich soll gehalten werden, nemlich das uber die fest Cristi allein der apostel tage sollen gefiert werden, wie in der kirchenordenung nach der leng ausgedruckt und insonderheit das man das fest Assumptionis Marie hinfurder nicht halten noch dulden will, sondern den tag Michaelis an desselben stadt ein vierzeiten fest sein soll.

It is also shewed how it shall be kept henceforth with one accord through the year with the feasts or holy days: namely that, beside the feasts of Christ, only the apostles' days shall be kept holy, as is set out at length in the church order; and in especial that the feast of the Assumption of Mary shall henceforth be neither kept nor suffered, but that the day of Michael shall be a feast of the four times in its stead.

3. Simply kept. A number of orders keep the Assumption as a holy day:

- the conservative lists of Brandenburg 1540, Pfalz-Neuburg 1543, Hausmann 1532 and Weißenburg 1528 (§12.5.7);
- Nassau-Dillenburg 1537, among the harvest feasts moved to Sunday (§12.6.4);
- the Danish-Holstein order of 1542, "Festa Ascensionis" (§12.5.4).

12.8.4 The other Marian feasts

The Conception (8 December), Nativity (8 September) and Presentation (21 November) of Mary have no Gospel history. Most orders drop them in silence. A few name them in order to abolish them, among them Sayn 1582, "Sonderlich aber festum conceptionis, nativitatis, praesentationis, assumptionis Mariae", and Regensburg 1567 (§12.3.7). A few keep one or more:

Order	Treatment
Anhalt, Hausmann, 1532 (§12.5.7)	"Visitacionis, conceptionis Marie", Assumption and Nativity all kept
Nassau-Dillenburg 1537 (Sehling 10, pp. 74–75)	Assumption and "Mariae geburt, nativitatis genant" kept
Brandenburg 1540 (§12.5.7)	Assumption and Nativity kept
Wied 1564 (Reformed; §12.4.5)	Nativity of Mary a sermon day ("tantum fiet concio")
Anhalt 1568 (§12.4.5)	Visitation and Nativity of Mary kept ferialiter, with their Gospels, not as holy days
Teschen 1584 (§12.5.7)	"Mariae gebuert" among the holy days

12.8.5 Michaelmas: the angels and the harvest

Michaelmas (29 September) rises highest of all the saints' days. Most orders give the day three themes, as Saxony 1539 does: "daran von den heiligen engeln zu predigen":

- the doctrine of the holy angels;
- thanksgiving for the harvest;
- in the north, the fourth payment of the four-times offering (§12.9).

Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 95):

> De dach Michaelis ys eine gemene danckseggínge vor alle fruchte, de wy des Jars gesamlet und entfangen hebben. Darumme schal de gantze vorsamlinge vorth na der predigen singen tho der danckseggínge mit groter andacht: Te Deum Laudamus etc. Averst den gantzen dach aver, so wol des morges alse des namiddages, schal men Predigen van den Engeln, up dat yderman vorsta, wat gudes wy van Gade dorch eren denst entfangen hebben, dat wy ock Gade darvor dancken mögen.

The day of Michael is a common thanksgiving for all fruits which we have gathered and received in the year. Therefore the whole congregation shall straightway after the sermon sing for the thanksgiving, with great devotion, Te Deum laudamus, etc. But the whole day through, as well in the morning as in the afternoon, one shall preach of the angels, that every man may understand what good we have received from God through their service, that we also may thank God therefor.

In Braunschweig the Te Deum is sung before the Gospel. Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 397):

> Denne schal eyn predicante, wen de epistole gelesen is, vor deme evangelio vormanen dat volk, Gade to danken vor alle woldät unde besondergen vor de früchte disses jares, de he uns gegeven hefft intosamelen […] schal he singen laten Te Deum etc., ehr me dat evangelion lest.

Then shall a preacher, when the epistle is read, before the Gospel, exhort the people to thank God for all benefits, and especially for the fruits of this year which he hath given us to gather in […] he shall let Te Deum be sung, etc., before the Gospel is read.

Note. Michaelmas's rank still varies from place to place:

- A chief feast: the fourth Vierzeitenfest in Braunschweig, Hamburg, Lübeck, Grubenhagen, Mecklenburg, Hoya, Lippe, Oldenburg and Waldeck.
- Preached "before and after noon": in Mecklenburg, where it formally stands in the second rank.
- A whole day with Te Deum: in the Brunswick orders.
- A half day: in Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1561 (§12.6.2) and Nassau-Weilburg 1609.
- A sermon day only: in Wied 1564 (Reformed; §12.4.5).
- A "small feast", though with three sermons: in Danzig 1612 (§12.5.6).

12.8.6 John the Baptist

The Nativity of John the Baptist (24 June) is kept by nearly every order, usually in the second rank. The reason given is either the Gospel history of his birth or the office of preaching: "zu ehren dem heiligen predigampt des evangelii von Christo" (Saxony 1539, Merseburg 1544). The Pomeranian order of 1535 counts him with the feasts of Christ: "dat fest hört ock up Christum" (§12.5.4). The Wolfenbüttel order of 1543 gives his day a polemical theme.

Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 62–63):

> Am dage Johannis Baptistae schal men prediken van dem uthwendigen denste des göttliken wordes wedder de wedderdöpere, welcke […] up dem sproke stan: Se werden alle van Gade geleret werden. Darmede se alle scholen wüste maken.

On the day of John the Baptist one shall preach of the outward ministry of the divine Word against the Anabaptists, who […] stand upon the saying, They shall be all taught of God; wherewith they would lay all the schools waste.

12.8.7 Trinity

The feast of the Trinity falls on a Sunday. It is usually listed at the end of the feasts of Christ with the note that it "gefellet auf den nehesten sontag nach pfingsten" (Saxony 1539, Mecklenburg 1552). Its rank is shown in four ways:

- The Kyrie. It shares the Kyrie summum with Pentecost at Nördlingen and Buxtehude (§12.4.2).
- The Latin Mass. It is one of the "Hogen Festen Christi" with a Latin Mass in Schleswig-Holstein 1542 (§12.10.1).
- The Athanasian Creed. It is read on the day and its vigil in the Thüngen lessons of 1587.
- Solemnity. It is kept "hochfeyerlich" in Verden 1606.

The Brandenburg-Ansbach chapter order of 1533 notes only that its office "ist rain" (§12.4.4).

12.8.8 Mary Magdalene, the Conversion of Paul, the Beheading of John: kept for their Gospels

Three days that are not apostles' days are often ranked with them, because they have a story in the New Testament. These are the Conversion of Paul (25 January), Mary Magdalene (22 July, Luke 7:36–50) and the Beheading of John the Baptist (29 August). Where they are not holy days, the orders keep their Gospels on the nearest weekday or Sunday.

Mecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 201):

> Wenn solche heilige tage gefallen, die man nicht pfleget zu feiren, und doch ire historien im evangelio beschrieben sind, als da ist der tag Conversionis Pauli, Marie Magdalene, S. Johannis entheubtung etc. mögen die prediger den selben text und historien an einem solchen werktage, nemlich, mitwoch oder freitage, der solchem heiligen tag am nehesten ist, in der predigt lesen und handlen.

When such holy days fall as are not wont to be kept holy, and yet their histories are written in the Gospel, as is the day of the Conversion of Paul, Mary Magdalene, St John's beheading, etc., the preachers may read and handle the same text and histories in the sermon on such working day, namely Wednesday or Friday, as is next to such holy day.

Solms-Laubach gives a reason for keeping the Beheading of John. Solms-Laubach, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1603 (Sehling 9, p. 356):

> Der tag Johannis enthauptung oder [decollatio Johannis] mag uf ein gemeinen wochenpredigttag (dieweil derselb eine herliche histori und zeugnus hat, wie die weldt frommen predigern pflegt zulohnen) verlegt werden, wie dan auch das evan[…]gelium von Marien Magdalenen, dieweil es eine nutzliche und tröstliche historiam inhelt.

The day of John's beheading may be laid on a common week-day sermon day (since the same hath a glorious history and witness how the world is wont to reward godly preachers), as also the Gospel of Mary Magdalene, since it containeth a profitable and comfortable history.

In Prussia Mary Magdalene's Gospel is given a fixed Sunday. Prussia, Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 87):

> Das evangelium Mariä Magdalenä Luc. 7 soll ordinarie und hinfort jährlich Dominica septima nach Trinitatis gelesen und gepredigt werden

The Gospel of Mary Magdalene, Luke 7, shall ordinarily and henceforth yearly be read and preached on the seventh Sunday after Trinity

12.8.9 Corpus Christi, the Holy Cross, local and new feasts

Corpus Christi. Most orders abolish it, and some order it to be explained so that people will know why it has gone.

Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1096):

> Das fest corporis Christi sol vermüge Gottes worts abgetan sein und sollen die prediger den Sontag zuvor das volk erinnern, was für ein grosser misbrauch und abgötterey damit getrieben worden, deren sich ein jeder Christ nach dem ernstlichen befehl Gottes enthalten sol.

The feast of Corpus Christi shall be done away according to God's Word, and the preachers shall on the Sunday before remind the people what great abuse and idolatry hath been practised therewith, which every Christian ought to shun according to the earnest commandment of God.

Two early orders keep it: Northeim for civic reasons, and Nassau-Dillenburg to teach the right use of the Sacrament.

Northeim, Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Sehling 6/2, p. 935):

> Des Herrn waren leichnams tag hat man umb sonderlicher politischer, das ist bürgerlicher ursach willen müssen bleiben lassen. Aber doch also, das die processio sampt allen andern unchristlichen ceremonien abgeschafft und allein Gottes wort und das nachtmal des Herrn zu handeln und halten gestatet werden sol.

The day of the Lord's true Body men have had to let stand for special political, that is, civil causes; yet so that the procession, with all other unchristian ceremonies, be done away, and only God's Word and the Lord's Supper be suffered to be handled and held thereon.

Nassau-Dillenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1537 (Sehling 10, p. 74):

> Unnsers herren leichnams tag, corporis Christi genant, soll darumb werden behalten, das man daran von dem rechten gebrauch unnd frucht des hohen hailigen sacraments des leibs unnd bluts Christi richtig lere unnd predige. Es soll aber das sacrament weder an dem noch an keinem anndern tagk im jar außgestelt noch umbgetragen werden

Our Lord's Body day, called Corpus Christi, shall be retained to this end, that one may rightly teach and preach thereon of the right use and fruit of the high holy Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ. But the Sacrament shall be neither set out nor carried about, on that nor on any other day in the year

The Holy Cross. Luther's "Festa S. Crucis anathema sunto" (§12.3.1) is echoed in Sayn 1582, "die beiden creutz tage, inventionis und exaltationis crucis" (§12.5.5). No order keeps them.

Local and civic feasts. Some towns kept days of their own, and the orders treat them in different ways:

- Braunschweig. St Autor had been honoured with a civic procession under a vow. It was turned into alms and a Sunday thanksgiving (Sehling 6/1, p. 398).
- Wied 1564 (Reformed). Patronal feasts are kept with a sermon (§12.4.5).
- New days. Some towns added days of their own: a day of penance for the Osnabrück fire of 1613 (§12.6.2); a thanksgiving in Nördlingen for the town's deliverance from a planned surprise attack in 1440 (Sehling 12, pp. 387–388); and in Regensburg a dedication festival in October for the beginning of evangelical preaching in 1542 (Sehling 13, p. 475).

A new feast of Christ. Bugenhagen proposed a feast the medieval calendar did not have.

Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 380):

> Id is wunder, dat me nicht hefft gehat eyn fest van der döpe Christi, dewile me doch so vele unnutte feste hefft gehat, to vorderve lives unde der selen. […] Dat also de Vastelavendessundach by uns moge heten dat fest der döpe Christi, me mach id denne nömen, wo me wil.

It is a wonder that there hath been no feast of the baptism of Christ, seeing there have been so many unprofitable feasts, to the destruction of body and soul. […] So that the Shrovetide Sunday may with us be called the feast of the baptism of Christ; one may then name it as one will.

Note. Wolfenbüttel 1543 keeps this "feast of the baptism" on the Sunday before Lent, with the Gospel of Matthew 3 preached "den ganzen dach över", all day long (Sehling 6/1, p. 62).

12.9 The Vierzeiten: the four chief feasts and the four offerings

In north and central Germany the highest rank of feasts had a name that came from church finance, not liturgy. These were the vier Zeiten (Low German veer tide), or the four Hochzeiten. They were the four feasts on which the "four-times penny" (Vierzeitenpfennig, veertide pennink) or offering was paid to the pastor or the church chest. Three of the four were fixed: Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide. The fourth varied by region, as the editors' notes show. It was most often the Assumption (so at Minden, Sehling 21, p. 138). The Bergedorf order names St John the Baptist's day instead (Sehling 5, p. 389, cited by the Buxtehude editor, Sehling 7/1, p. 79). At St John's in Halberstadt the penny was collected quarterly, on John the Baptist's day, Michaelmas, and the Tuesdays of Christmas and Easter (Sehling 2, p. 488).

The Lutheran orders kept the payment, and with it the rank. Most of them replaced the Assumption with Michaelmas, which fell in the same season (after the harvest) and had a lawful Gospel theme (the angels). The Vierzeiten are the Lutheran north's equivalent of the summa festa. A Vierzeitenfest is a whole holy day, often with first vespers and a sermon on the eve, and with a Latin Mass.

12.9.1 The four times named

Bugenhagen's Lübeck order describes the treasure-chest. Lübeck, Kirchenordnung (Bugenhagen), 1531 (Sehling 5, p. 362):

> In desse caste schal kamen de veer tide pennink ut allen caspelen. De veer tide sint: paschen, pinxten, michaelis, winachten. Denne schal ein grot becken stan in allen kerken up dem altare vor dem chore. Twe kerkvedere schölen dar acht up hebben und nicht verne dar van sin , und alle lüde van twelf iaren und dar baven iunk und olt, schölen dar bringen den tide pennink.

Into this chest shall come the four-times penny out of all the parishes. The four times are Easter, Whitsuntide, Michaelmas, Christmas. Then shall a great basin stand in all churches on the altar before the choir. Two churchwardens shall have an eye thereon and not be far from it; and all folk of twelve years and above, young and old, shall bring thither the times-penny.

A pre-Reformation police ordinance of Waldeck names the four Hochzeiten first among the days on which attendance at Mass is enforced. Waldeck, Landordnung, 1525 (Sehling 9, p. 179):

> Auch setzen, ordiniren und wollen wir, ernstlich gebietthende, das ein ider unßer undersaße, so zu seinen mundigen jharen khommen, uff die vier hochzeittliche feste und sonntage, auch uff alle unßer lieben frawen- und apostelltage in seiner pfarkirchen das ampt der heiligen meß und das heilige evangelium von ihrem pfarherrn heeren sollen

We also set, ordain and will, earnestly commanding, that every one of our subjects that is come to his years of discretion shall, on the four high-tide feasts and Sundays, and also on all our Lady's and apostles' days, hear in his parish church the office of the holy mass and the holy Gospel from their parson

The Pomeranian order sets out the due itself. Pomerania, Kerckenordeninge, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 414):

> De veertiden pennink, alle quartal van jeder person bauen 12. jar, ein veerken, schal gegeven werden, entweder dem pastori edder der kercken, wo idt jeders ordes gebrücklick.

The four-times penny, every quarter, from every person above twelve years, a farthing, shall be given either to the pastor or to the church, as is the custom in every place.

The same dues are found in the lower Rhineland, in the Erasmian Catholic order of Jülich-Cleves, where they are called the "four high-tide offerings". Jülich-Cleves-Berg, Visitationsinstruktion, 1559 (Roman Catholic humanist; Sehling 21, p. 87):

> yedoch das einem yeden die vier hochzeitoffer unnd -broder, wie hiebevor verordent, gegeben werden yet so that to every one the four high-tide offerings and loaves be given, as heretofore ordained

12.9.2 Michaelmas in the Assumption's place

The replacement was made by Braunschweig 1528 ("Item Michaelis vor eyn vehrtidenvest", §12.5.4) and Hamburg 1529. It became standard through Mecklenburg 1552 (§12.5.2) and the visitation of 1557 (§12.8.3). The later orders write it into their feast lists.

Lippe, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 21, pp. 391–392):

> Der tag Michaelis, welcher an statt des Festes Assumptionis Mariae in unsern Kirchen als ein viergezeiten Fest feirlich gehalten […] und darauff die notwendige tröstliche Lere von den lieben heiligen Engeln der Gemeine Gottes fürgetragen und gehandelt wirdt. Auff diesen Festen sol es mit Ordnung der Lectionen, Gesengen, Predigten und Communion gehalten werden wie an den gemeinen Sontagen, Allein, das die Introitus, Sequentz und auff den Viergezeiten Festagen die Praefationes de tempore, Item die Teutsche Alte Festliedlein, wie oben ermelt und bey uns gewöntlich, gesungen werden.

The day of Michael, which in the stead of the feast of the Assumption of Mary is kept solemnly in our churches as a feast of the four times […] and whereon the needful comfortable doctrine of the dear holy angels is set forth and handled to the congregation of God. On these feasts it shall be done, as touching the order of the lessons, chants, sermons and communion, as on the common Sundays; only that the introits and sequences, and on the four-times feast days the prefaces de tempore, item the old German feast-songs, as above mentioned and customary with us, be sung.

Note. Lippe ranks the Vierzeiten above the other feasts of Christ by one liturgical mark, the proper preface. The same order calls them "die herrliche, schöne, heilige, fürnembste viergezeiten Fest", the glorious, fair, holy, chiefest four-times feasts (p. 392).

Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, pp. 1096–1097):

> Der tag Michaelis, welcher anstadt des fests […] assumtionis oder himelfart Mariae als ein viergezeitenfest gehalten, an welchem die lere von den heiligen engeln dem volk sol fürgehalten werden. Desgleichen sol auch an demselbigen fest nach verlesener epistel ein gemeine danksagung geschehen für die empfangene früchten und darzu das Te Deum laudamus gesungen werden.

The day of Michael, which is kept as a feast of the four times in the stead of the feast […] of the Assumption or Ascension of Mary, whereon the doctrine of the holy angels shall be set forth to the people. Likewise also on the same feast, after the epistle is read, a common thanksgiving shall be made for the fruits received, and the Te Deum laudamus be sung thereto.

In the Harlingerland order the payment is the reason given for Michaelmas taking the place. Harlingerland, Kirchenordnung, 1573/74 (Sehling 7/1, p. 735):

> Ordnen derohalben, daß der [!] letzste und vierte hochfesttagzeit solle S. Michaelis tag sein. Und sollen die kaspelßleute dem pastorn am selben tag öhre opfer, gebuhrlichen pflicht und landheur guedtlichen entrichten und ohne hinderung dorgeben und bezahlen.

We ordain therefore that the last and fourth high feast-tide shall be St Michael's day. And the parishioners shall on the same day render kindly to the pastor their offering, due duty and land-rent, and give and pay it without hindrance.

12.9.3 The Vierzeiten as a liturgical rank

At Wolfenbüttel a sermon at first vespers is allowed only on the four. The same words stand in Hildesheim 1544 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 858). Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 62):

> In den grösten festen edder veer tyden: Wynachten, Paschen, Pinxsten und Michaelis mach men thor ersten vesper eine stunde prediken. In den andern festen is dat nicht van nöden.

On the greatest feasts, or four times, Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide and Michaelmas, one may preach for an hour at the first vespers. On the other feasts it is not needful.

Hoya has the Mass in Latin throughout. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1151):

> VI. Von den vierzeitenfesten. Auf den vierzeitenfesten sol man das meßampt in unsern kirchen, da man es haben kan, durchaus latine, mit dem introitu, Kyrie eleyson, gloria in excelsis, collecten, episteln, sequentien, evangelien etc. halten, doch das die gewönlichen deudsche psalm, welche auf die fest verordnet (damit auch die kirche singe), nicht vergessen werden.

VI. Of the four-times feasts. On the four-times feasts one shall hold the office of the mass in our churches, where it can be had, throughout in Latin, with the introit, Kyrie eleison, Gloria in excelsis, collects, epistles, sequences, Gospels, etc.; yet so that the wonted German psalms which are appointed for the feasts (that the church also may sing) be not forgotten.

In Lauenburg the hohe Vierzeitenfeste are the days for the alms collection, and the meal the pastor used to give the churchwardens on those days is abolished. Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 421):

> Zum vierzehenden sollen sie alle sontage und auf den feiertagen und hohen vierzeiten festen die bete von den leuten unter der predigt fleissig samlen, aufschreiben und beilegen […] Und letzlich sol genzlich abgeschaffet sein auf den hohen vierzeiten festen die collation und frass, welchen der pastor bis daher den kirchgeschworen auf solchen festen hat geben müssen.

Fourteenthly, they shall on all Sundays, and on the holy days and the high four-times feasts, diligently gather the collection from the people during the sermon, write it down and lay it by […] And lastly there shall be wholly done away on the high four-times feasts the collation and feasting which the pastor hath hitherto had to give the churchwardens on such feasts.

In the Neumark the churchwardens are to take the collection plate round on the high feasts generally, not only on the four. Neumark (Brandenburg), instruction of Margrave Johann for the visitors, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 36):

> Dieselben gottesleute sollen auch alle hohe feier feste, nicht allein die vier zeiten mit der tafel umbgehen in der kirchen

The same churchwardens shall also go about in the church with the plate on all high holy feasts, not only on the four times

Note. Grubenhagen 1544 defines its first rank of feasts by this payment ("die vier hauptfest, an welchen man den vierzeitpenning sammelt", §12.5.5). Henneberg 1582 has four chief feasts, but they are Christmas, Easter, Ascension and Whitsuntide (§12.6.3). It shows that "four chief feasts" could be understood liturgically as well as fiscally.

12.10 Keeping the feast in church: ceremonial marks, abolished ceremonies and the seasons

Beyond whole and half holy days, the orders mark the higher feasts with a set of ceremonial additions. None of them is new. Each carries on, in reduced form, a feature of the medieval feast grades. Listed from the commonest to the rarest:

Mark	Higher feasts	Lower feasts and ordinary days	Examples
Sermons	two or three, sometimes four; a sermon at first vespers	one sermon, in the forenoon	§12.6.3; Wolfenbüttel 1543 (§12.9.3); Danzig (§12.5.6)

12.10.1 Latin chant on the high feasts

The Saxon Unterricht der Visitatoren of 1528 set the pattern. Latin is kept for the higher feasts "because it is unseemly always to sing one song".

Saxony (Ernestine), Unterricht der Visitatoren, 1528 (Sehling 1, pp. 165 and 169):

> An hohen festen, als christag, ostern, auffart, pfingsten, oder der gleichen, were gut, das zur messe etliche lateinische gesenge, die der schrift gemes, gebrauchet würden. Denn es ist ein ungestalt, imerdar ein gesang singen. […] Mit den festen sol es auch fridlich gehalten werden, also, das wo etliche schlechte feier abgangen sind, das man davon nicht viel zanks mache. Dieweil es auch ein ungestalt ist, das die gesang gar gleich sind an allen festen, were gut, das man an den herrlichsten festen sünge, die lateinische introitus, gloria in excelsis deo, halleluia, die reinen sequenz, sanctus, agnus dei.

On high feasts, as Christmas, Easter, the Ascension, Whitsuntide, or the like, it were good that certain Latin chants, agreeable to Scripture, were used at the mass. For it is an unseemly thing evermore to sing one song. […] With the feasts also it shall be done peaceably: that where certain plain holy days have fallen away, men make not much strife thereof. And forasmuch as it is also unseemly that the chants be all alike on all feasts, it were good that on the most glorious feasts there were sung the Latin introits, Gloria in excelsis Deo, Alleluia, the pure sequences, Sanctus, Agnus Dei.

In Ernestine Saxony the rule depends on the place as well as the day. Saxony (Ernestine), Gemeine Verordnung, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 192):

> In steten und flecken da knabenschulen und leut sind, die lateinisch versteen, mag man an hohen festen lateinisch, sonst deutsch mess halten, auf den dorfern aber do niemands lateinisch versteet, soll man durch aus deutsch mess halten […] Zu merken, wen man gleich an hohen festen die mess lateinisch heldet, so liset man dennoch die epistel, das evangelion, die wort des sacraments, das vater unser alles deutsch und laut

In towns and market towns, where there are boys' schools and folk that understand Latin, one may hold mass in Latin on high feasts, otherwise in German; but in the villages, where no man understandeth Latin, one shall hold mass in German throughout […] Note: even when mass is held in Latin on high feasts, yet the epistle, the Gospel, the words of the Sacrament and the Lord's Prayer are all read in German and aloud

In Schleswig-Holstein the high feasts are named, and Trinity is one of them. Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 91):

> In den Hogen Festen Christi, alse dar sint Winachten, Paschen, Pingesten und Trinitatis, schal men yn den steden singen up latin de Introitus, Gloria yn Excelsis, Alleluia mit reinen sequentien, Item latinische prefatien, Welcker de Prester also anhevet: Dominus vobiscum etc., Sursum Corda etc., Darna Sanctus, thom lesten Pater noster Mit den wörden des Avendmals, doch de stedes yn düdescher sprake

On the high feasts of Christ, which are Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide and Trinity, one shall sing in the towns in Latin the introits, Gloria in excelsis, Alleluia with pure sequences; item Latin prefaces, which the priest beginneth thus: Dominus vobiscum, etc., Sursum corda, etc.; thereafter the Sanctus; lastly the Pater noster with the words of the Supper, yet these always in the German tongue

At Buxtehude the Gloria follows the rank. Buxtehude, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 7/1, p. 74):

> Volgende schall gesungen werden dat Kyrie eleison na gelegenheit, Gloria in excelsis unde dat [Et] in terra, in den hogen festen stedes lattinisch, upp den Sondagen und sunst dudesch edder latinisch, wo idt de tydt liden will.

Next shall be sung the Kyrie eleison as occasion serveth, Gloria in excelsis and the Et in terra: on the high feasts always in Latin, on the Sundays and otherwise in German or in Latin, as the time will allow.

Thorn has the reverse rule. On Sundays the chants before the sermon are in Latin, but the small feasts are wholly German. Thorn, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 4, p. 238):

> Sonsten die gesänge, collecten und lectiones für der predigt werden alles lateinisch gehalten. An den aposteltagen und anderen kleinen festen, die man mit halber feier zu halten pfleget, wird das ganze officium deutsch gehalten, beide in der alten und neuenstadt

Otherwise the chants, collects and lessons before the sermon are all held in Latin. On the apostles' days and other small feasts, which are wont to be kept with half solemnity, the whole office is held in German, both in the Old and the New Town

12.10.2 Chant on the apostles' days

The lower feasts have their own marks in several orders. They are enough to set them off from working days without matching Sundays.

The Pomeranian Agenda gives the rule for the apostles' days. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 469):

> Dise navolgenden aposteldage schal men viren vor middage. Des sondages to vörne schölen se de prediger affkündigen, jederman vormanen, dat he an disen dagen tor kercke kame, des avendes to vörne schal men festivaliter lüden edder beieren, unde vesper holden, des morgens desgeliken festivaliter lüden, to 7. edder to 8. predigen, jedoch neen testament utdele, doch mach men vor dem sermone dat amt vor dem altare holden, gloria, collecta, epistel unde evangelium cum tono lesen, up dat tüschen disen dagen unde gemenen werkeldagen underscheed si. Wennt in der kercke ut is, geit ein jeder to siner arbeit.

These following apostles' days one shall keep holy before noon. On the Sunday before, the preachers shall bid them and exhort every man to come to church on these days. On the evening before one shall ring or chime festivaliter, and hold vespers; in the morning likewise ring festivaliter, preach at seven or eight, yet deal out no testament [no communion]; but one may hold the office before the altar before the sermon, read the Gloria, collect, epistle and Gospel with the tone, that there may be a difference between these days and the common working days. When church is out, every man goeth to his work.

The Aschersleben agenda sets out the apostles' day Mass and vespers. Aschersleben, Kirchen-Agenda, 1575 (Sehling 2, p. 480):

> Von der vesper an der apostel abend. Die vesper soll gehalten werden wie am sonnabende, doch das man de festo singe und auch die collecten de festo lese. Von der messe an der apostel tage. 1. Nach dem geleute, welches geschehen soll, wie an einem werkeltage, hebt der cantor alspalt mit dem introitu an. 2. Darauf folget das kyrie apostolicum. 3. Nochmals wird das teutsche „Allein gott in der höhe“ etc. gesungen. 4. Collecta de festo apostoli, darauf die epistel gelesen. […] Von der vesper an der apostel tage. Die vesper wird gesungen ohne den organisten wie sonsten am werktage, dieweil keine predigt gehalten.

Of vespers on the apostle's eve. Vespers shall be held as on the Saturday, yet so that one sing de festo and read the collects de festo also. Of the mass on the apostles' days. 1. After the ringing, which shall be done as on a working day, the cantor straightway beginneth the introit. 2. Thereupon followeth the Kyrie apostolicum. 3. Then is sung the German "All Glory Be to God on High", etc. 4. The collect of the feast of the apostle, and thereafter the epistle is read. […] Of vespers on the apostles' days. Vespers are sung without the organist, as otherwise on a working day, since no sermon is held.

The Riga order gives the melody of the Kyrie. Riga, Kirchenordnung, 1530 (Sehling 5, p. 15):

> Auf den introit, singt man das kyrie eleison, mit wenig noten (ausgenommen auf die hohen fest, da man notam paschalem nemen mag)

After the introit one singeth the Kyrie eleison with few notes (save on the high feasts, when one may take the paschal note)

12.10.3 Proper prefaces

Proper prefaces belonged only to the great feasts, and the orders use them to mark those days.

The same text is in Hamburg 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 528). Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 441):

> Darnä keret he sick tome altare unde in den groten festen, de sunderge prefatien hebben, unde sus, wen he wil, up etlike Sundage mit der prefatie trinitatis (de wedder de Arrhianer alse ock dat symbolum nicenum gemaket is), schal he anheven latinisch de prefatie Dominus vobiscum unde singen se bet an dat ende, darup singe dat chör eyn latinisch Sanctus.

Thereafter he turneth him to the altar, and on the great feasts which have special prefaces, and else, when he will, on certain Sundays with the preface of the Trinity (which was made against the Arians, as was the Nicene Creed also), he shall begin in Latin the preface Dominus vobiscum and sing it to the end; whereupon let the choir sing a Latin Sanctus.

In Ottheinrich's order the preface itself has two grades. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung of Ottheinrich, second printing 1547 (Sehling 14, p. 109):

> Es seind aber auf etliche hohe fest, Osterfest, Auffart, Pfingsten, Trinitatis etc., besondere prefation, von idem fest zwo, ein solemnis und eine dominicalis, die mag ein priester außnotiren oder außschreiben und auf dem pult alwegen neben der kirchenordnung haben

But for certain high feasts, the feast of Easter, the Ascension, Whitsuntide, Trinity, etc., there are special prefaces, two for each feast, a solemnis and a dominicalis; these a priest may note out or write out, and have always on the desk beside the church order

Note. The solemnis and dominicalis tones of the preface are the melodic grades of the medieval preface: the festal tone for the feast itself, the ferial or Sunday tone for the days within its season. The order prints the Trinity preface as its example.

At Hatzkerode there is an exhortation on ordinary days and the preface on the great feasts. Hatzkerode (Harzgerode, Anhalt), Kirchenordnunge, 1534(?) (Sehling 2, p. 587):

> Als dan sol sich der priester umb keren und die exhortatio, wie die in der agende stehet, inen vorlesen. Auf den grossen festen aber sol an des stat die prefatio de festo gesungen werden mit dem gewonlichen sanctus latinisch.

Then shall the priest turn him about and read unto them the exhortation, as it standeth in the agenda. But on the great feasts, in the stead thereof, the preface of the feast shall be sung, with the wonted Sanctus in Latin.

Thorn, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 4, p. 237):

> Nach der predigt folget ein deutsch lied, darauf die priester in hohen festen die praefation de tempore auf gewöhnliche noten singen, aber in gemeinen sonntagen und feiertagen ohne dieselbige bald nach dem deutschen gesange sich gegen dem volke wendet

After the sermon followeth a German hymn; thereupon the priests on high feasts sing the preface de tempore to the wonted notes; but on the common Sundays and holy days [the priest], without the same, turneth to the people straightway after the German hymn

Kurland allows German proper prefaces for the high feasts, "for variety". Kurland, Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 89):

> Dar man aber auf die hohe fest zur verendrung (wie an dem fürstlichen hofe geschicht) diese nachverzeichnete und notirte praefationes für die quotidian singen wil, sol einem jedern kirchendiener frei sein

But where one will sing on the high feasts, for a change (as is done at the prince's court), these prefaces hereafter set down and noted, instead of the daily one, it shall be free to every minister

Note. Saxony 1539 prints Latin prefaces for Christmas, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension, Pentecost and Trinity, and a Praefatio quotidiana for all other days (Sehling 1, p. 274, editor's summary). The Mecklenburg family allows "prefationes de tempore" on the feasts of Christ (§12.5.2). Lippe 1571 restricts them to the Vierzeiten (§12.9.2).

12.10.4 Sequences

In Schleswig-Holstein sequences are dropped except on the three great feasts, and each great feast keeps its own sequence. Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 90):

> De Sequentien unde prosen scholen alle underlaten unde nicht gesungen werden, uthgenamen yn dren groten Festen Christi, alse van Wynachten wente tho Lichtmissen: Grates nunc omnes, mit synem düdeschen gesange, Van Pa[…]sehen wente tho Pingesten: Victime Paschali, mit synem düdeschen gesange, Den yn den Pingesten: Veni, Sancte Spiritus, mit synem düdeschen gesange.

The sequences and proses shall all be left off and not be sung, save on the three great feasts of Christ: as from Christmas unto Candlemas, Grates nunc omnes, with its German song; from Easter unto Whitsuntide, Victimae paschali, with its German song; then in Whitsuntide, Veni, Sancte Spiritus, with its German song.

Note.

- Seasons, not days. The sequence is kept through the whole season of each great feast, from Christmas to Candlemas and from Easter to Whitsuntide.
- Aschersleben 1575. The cantor "die sontage nach diesen festen die sequentien in der kirchen singen" (p. 479).
- The Mecklenburg family. Sequences are "de tempore" on the feasts of Christ (§12.5.2).

12.10.5 Figural music and the organ

Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 5, p. 551):

> Ock schal de figuralgesank in den vornemblikesten festen ordentlick in einem carspel sowol als in den andern gewachtet und gesungen werden.

Also the figural song shall on the chiefest feasts be orderly observed and sung in one parish as well as in the others.

The Hof order gives the title of its collection of polyphonic music in the table of contents; the collection itself begins on p. 456. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 477):

> XVI. Ordo suavissimarum et optimarum ex prastantissimis artificibus tum veteribus tum recentibus selectarum cantionum, quae in figurali musica cantore duce decantantur ad praecipua festa totius anni directus

XVI. An order of the sweetest and best songs, chosen out of the most excellent masters both old and new, which are sung in figural music under the leading of the cantor, directed to the chief feasts of the whole year

In the Pomeranian Agenda there is no figural music or organ in Rogation week, except on the Ascension and its vigil. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 466):

> Up disen sondach unde in der weke schal men kenen figural sang singen, ock nicht orglen, utgenamen den dach Ascensionis domini, mit der in vigilia

On this Sunday and in the week one shall sing no figural song, nor play the organ, save the day of the Ascension of the Lord, with its vigil

Other examples:

- Anhalt 1568: figural music on the first two days of the high feasts, Latin chorale on the third (§12.7.1).
- Regensburg 1567: figural music at the vespers before, and the communion on, the feasts of Christ (p. 475).
- Henneberg 1582: lower feasts are kept "one orgeln" (§12.6.3).

- Schwarzburg 1587: the organ is used on the apostles' days in the forenoon (Sehling 2, p. 137).
- Aschersleben 1575: the vespers of apostles' days are sung "ohne den organisten" (§12.10.2).

The seasons and rites in which the organ was silent are treated in Chapter 9, §9.3.6.

12.10.6 Vestments and elevation

In Prince Bernhard's Anhalt order the elevation of the Sacrament is kept only on the high feasts. Anhalt, Kirchenordnung of Prince Bernhard, 1568 (Sehling 2, p. 570):

> Weil die elevation des hochwirdigen sacraments des waren leibes und blutes Christi in einer kirchen gefallen, in der andern aber nicht, so sollen die hern kirchendiener in hohen festen eleviren, ausserhalb denselben ist hochgedachter fürst Bernhart zu frieden, das es nach pleibe, desgleichen soll des sontags zu allen dreien predigten der chorrock gebraucht , die wochen uber auch nachgelassen werden.

Forasmuch as the elevation of the most worthy Sacrament of the true body and blood of Christ hath fallen away in one church but not in another, the ministers shall elevate on high feasts; beyond these the said Prince Bernhard is content that it be left off. Likewise on Sunday the choir robe shall be used at all three sermons, and through the week it may be left off.

Note.

- Grimma 1529. The mass vestment is required on the three-day high feasts (§12.7.1).
- Querfurt. According to Sehling's account of the visitation, mass vestments were worn at communion and, for a time, in the pulpit on the three chief feasts (Sehling 2, p. 460).

12.10.7 Bells

Altenburg, castle chapter, Verordnung der ceremonien, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 516):

> Zum dritten, so soll man auch hinfur die unterscheid halden, das man an gemeinen werktagen mit einer grossen glocken und am sontags und andern festen mit mer glocken zum heiligen ampt der predigt zu unterscheid der zeit leüte.

Thirdly, one shall also henceforth keep this difference: that on common working days one ring to the holy office of the sermon with one great bell, and on Sundays and other feasts with more bells, to distinguish the time.

The fullest bell-code is the Danzig one of 1612 (§12.5.6). It names five bells:

- Osanna;
- Apostolica;
- Dominical;
- Ferial;
- Sybilla.

The great feasts are rung in with the great bell and the three larger bells chimed together (beiern). The small feasts are chimed "with the Osanna".

The bells in general, their signs and their uses, are treated in Chapter 9, §9.5.

12.10.8 The Athanasian Creed and the Te Deum

The Mecklenburg convent order gives the rule for the convents' matins. Mecklenburg, Klosterordnung, 1572 (Sehling 5, p. 258):

> Auf die hohen feste, als weinacht, epiphania, ostern, himmelfahrt, pfingsten, trinitatis, soll nach dem benedictus also balt das symbolum Athanasii teutsch gesungen werden.

On the high feasts, as Christmas, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension, Whitsuntide and Trinity, the Athanasian Creed shall be sung in German straightway after the Benedictus.

For the Te Deum in Latin "in maioribus festis" see Transylvania 1547 (§12.4.3). For the Te Deum as the Michaelmas thanksgiving see §12.8.5.

12.10.9 Communion and confession

The orders do not give the Supper by rank as such. Communion is held whenever there are communicants. But rank shows in the preparation and in the days on which communion is normally held.

- Regensburg 1567. Communion and vespers on the eve go with every feast of Christ, but not with the third day of the great feasts (§12.7.1).
- Pomerania 1569. No communion on apostles' days (§12.10.2).
- Stade, Kirchenordnung, c. 1620/22 (Sehling 7/1, p. 54). On the three high feasts confession is heard after the afternoon sermon of the first day, and the Supper is given on the second day, "welches am ersten und letzten festage nicht geschicht", which is not done on the first and the last feast day.
- First vespers. The vespers of the eve of the higher feasts were also the time for private confession of the next day's communicants (for example Leiningen 1584, p. 278: "an den hohen festagen am abent zuvor ein vesper").

12.10.10 Festal ceremonies abolished

The plays and processions of the year. The late-medieval feasts had their own acted ceremonies:

- the Palm Sunday ass;
- the crucifix laid in the "grave" on Good Friday;
- the image of the risen Christ carried round on Easter Day;
- the figure of Christ drawn up through the church roof on Ascension Day;
- the dove let down on Whitsunday;
- the rocking of the Christ-child's cradle at Christmas;
- processions round the church with holy water, crosses and the sacrament.

The south German orders abolish them by name. They also abolish the blessings of the year: water and salt on Sundays, candles at Candlemas, ashes on Ash Wednesday, palms on Palm Sunday, and the Easter candle, font and fire on Holy Saturday. Hohenlohe, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 15, p. 77):

> Ebenmeßig sollen auch underwegen pleyben alle spectacula und schawspil, so man mit bildern getrieben hat, als am Palmentag mit dem eßel, am Karfreytag mit dem crucifix und grab, am Ostertag mit umbtragung des bilds der urstehnde Cristi, am Uffertag mit ufziehung deßelben, am Pfingstag mit herablasung der tauben, am Christag mit dem kindleinwiegen und was dergleychen mher im prauch gewesen ist. Item alle proceßion und umbgange umb die kirchen mit dem weyhewaßer und creutzen, auch mit umbtragung des heyhgen sacraments in der monstrantzen etc.

In like manner shall also be left off all spectacles and shows which have been practised with images: as on Palm Sunday with the ass, on Good Friday with the crucifix and the grave, on Easter Day with the carrying about of the image of the resurrection of Christ, on Ascension Day with the drawing up of the same, on Whitsunday with the letting down of the dove, on Christmas Day with the rocking of the little child, and whatever more of the like hath been in use. Item, all processions and goings about the church with holy water and crosses, and also with the carrying about of the holy sacrament in the monstrance, etc.

The same list stands in Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 (Sehling 13, pp. 95–96) and the Palatine Bedenken zur Reformation der Stiftskirchen of 1546 (Sehling 14, p. 93). The Corpus Christi procession went with the feast itself (§12.8.9).

What stayed. What the orders keep for the feasts is the reading and preaching of the feast's history, its hymns and sequences, its proper preface, and in many places its Latin chant (§12.10.1–12.10.4). The Leisen sung from the pulpit at the high feasts are treated in Chapter 8 §8.10.2.

12.10.11 Seasonal changes in the service

Advent and Lent. Some orders mark the penitential seasons by plainer chant and by leaving out the Gloria. The Pomeranian order of 1542 gives the old Kyrie grades by season: dominicale in Advent and Lent, paschale from Easter to Whitsun, summum on the higher feasts. In Lent the Gloria may be left out altogether. Pomerania, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 4, p. 356):

> Darup dat kyrie dominicale, efft me mach ock up die sondage, kyrie angelicum, de martiribus, effte confessoribus, efft virginibus, wo man sie genomet hefft singen, dominicale im advent und in der vasten, dat paschale tuschen pingsten und paschen, dat summum up die hohern fest, effte dat minus summum. Darup singe die priester dat gloria in excelsis [...] in der vasten mach me dat gloria wol gar ute laten, effte wenn idt will to lange werden.

Thereupon the Kyrie dominicale; or one may also on the Sundays sing the Kyrie angelicum, de martyribus, or confessoribus, or virginibus, as they have been named; the dominicale in Advent and in Lent, the paschale between Pentecost and Easter, the summum on the higher feasts, or the minus summum. Thereupon the priest singeth the Gloria in excelsis [...] in Lent one may well leave out the Gloria altogether, or when it will be too long.

Other seasonal changes in the orders:

- The Creed in Advent. At Schweinfurt "Wir glauben all" replaces "Nun bitten wir" on the three Sundays of Advent (Sehling 11, p. 646).
- The Litany. Days kept "plainly, dominicaliter, as in Advent and Lent" may have the Latin Litany (Pomerania, Karcken ordening, Sehling 4, p. 354).
- Hymns. The hymn tables change with the seasons: Advent, Christmas to Candlemas, Easter to Whitsun (see Chapter 8 §8.7.5 for the Gloria in Advent and Lent, and §8.10.3 for the seasonal hymns before the sermon).
- Luther's warning. Luther himself would not have Lent, Holy Week or Good Friday shown off "with other rites" than the rest of the year (§12.12.1).

12.11 Keeping holy days in common life

The orders kept the calendar by law as much as by liturgy. A holy day was a day on which work, trade and amusement were restricted, and the restrictions were enforced by the magistrate. This section covers the rest from work (§12.11.1), its enforcement (§12.11.2), weddings, guild feasts and markets (§12.11.3), the folk festivals of the year (§12.11.4), and one feast created to replace them (§12.11.5). Harvest exemptions are treated in §12.6.4.

12.11.1 Rest: the whole day, the forenoon, or the time of the sermon

Not a commandment, but good order. The first Saxon visitors already gave the principle. The ceremonies of the church, the holy days among them, are not commanded by God. They are kept "for the sake of good order and peace", as each parish has the custom. Ernestine Saxony, Unterricht der visitatoren an die pfarrherrn, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 164):

> Denn solche stücke sind mehr von nöten, denn am freitag fleisch essen und der gleichen, wiewohl dasselb für gott und im gewissen recht ist. Doch sollen die leute dennoch unterrichtet werden, bescheidenlich von solchen kirchenordnung zu reden, denn etliche kirchenordnung sind gemacht umb guter ordnung und fridens willen, wie S. Paulus spricht in der 1. zun Corinthern am 14.: Es sol alles ordentlich in der kirchen geschehen. Darumb sollen die feiertag, als sontag und etliche mehr, wie jeder pfarr gewonheit ist, gehalten werden.

For such things are more needful than to eat flesh on Friday and the like, although that is right before God and in the conscience. Yet the people shall nevertheless be taught to speak modestly of such church orders; for some church orders are made for the sake of good order and peace, as St Paul saith in the first to the Corinthians, the fourteenth: Let all things be done in order in the church. Therefore the holy days, as Sunday and some more, shall be kept, as is the custom of each parish.

Degrees of rest. In practice the orders set three degrees:

- Sunday and the high feasts: no work all day;
- the half holy days: no work until noon, or until the sermon was over (§12.6.1);
- the other holy days: no work during the service only.

A visitation recess for an Oldenburg parish states the difference between Sunday and the other holy days in one sentence. It lists the work forbidden: carting turf, hay and sheaves, ploughing, harrowing, mowing and digging. The penalty is that the offender's horses are unharnessed until he pays. Oldenburg, Visitationsabschied für Bardenfleth, 1609 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1201):

> damit auf Sontagen gänzlich, die andern feiertage uber aber unter der predigt, mit torf-, heuw-, garbenfuhren, pflugen, eggen, meyen schwelen, graben und in andere wege mit der handarbeit eingehalten, auch bey wehrendem gottesdienst niemand bier oder wein gezapfet, und die muetwilligen verbrecher der gebuer mit auspannung der pferde biß zum abtrag gestraffet [...] werden that on Sundays wholly, but on the other holy days during the sermon, there be refraining from carting turf, hay [and] sheaves, from ploughing, harrowing, mowing, [and] digging, and in other ways from handiwork; also that during divine service no one tap beer or wine; and that the wilful transgressors be punished as is due by unharnessing of the horses until [the fine be] paid [...]

Work allowed after the sermon. Pfalz-Zweibrücken allowed field work on all holy days except Sunday and the three high feasts, "especially in harvest and autumn", on condition that the people had first heard the sermon. The reason given was that "some holy days hinder working people in their living", while giving the idle occasion "to feast, carouse and drink wine". Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Generalartikel, 1560 (Sehling 18, p. 293):

> Und nachdem die underthonen uff dem Land hiebei auch clagsweiß furbracht, das ettlich feuertag arbeitsame leuth an irer Narung hindern, den andern aber, so one das ursach zum Mussiggang suchen, zu fressen, sauffen und weindrincken glegenheit geben, so mögen wir leiden, daß ausserhalb der dreyer hoher fest und dem heyligen Sontag die ubrigen Feiertag, sonderlich inn Erntt- und herbstzeith, unsere underthanen ire nottwendige Veldt- und andere arbeith besuchen mögen, Doch daß sie zuvor denselbigenn Dag gottes wortt und die Predig besucht haben.

And whereas the subjects in the country have also brought forward complaint hereupon, that some holy days hinder working folk in their living, but give to others, who without that seek occasion for idleness, opportunity to gorge, carouse and drink wine, we are content that, apart from the three high feasts and the holy Sunday, on the other holy days, especially in harvest and autumn time, our subjects may attend to their necessary field and other work; yet so that on that same day they have first attended God's word and the sermon.

"Loose holy days". Where the lesser feasts had been kept by halves, the people treated them as working days altogether. A Henneberg pastor complained that on the days "which the common man is wont to call loose holy days" the villagers did their road-mending and timber-carting, and went hunting after the early sermon. Wasungen, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1566 (Sehling 2, pp. 356–357):

> dann dieweil man an andern orten dise feirtag zum theil abgeschaffet und das geschrei gangen, sie sollen bald gar fallen, hat man auf solche feirtag, die der gemein man lose feirtag pflegt zu nennen, allerlei gemeine und eigene arbeit fürgenomen, als gemeine weg machen, in die landwer geen, bauholzfüren und dergleichen mer [...]. Zu frue thut man eine predigt. Darnach jage man oder erbeit jederman was er will.

for because in other places these holy days have been in part abolished, and the cry hath gone forth that they shall soon fall altogether, men have undertaken on such holy days, which the common man is wont to call loose holy days, all manner of common and private work, as making the common ways, going to the land-defences, carting building timber and more of the like [...]. Early a sermon is done; thereafter one hunteth, or every man worketh what he will.

12.11.2 Enforcement: gates, fines and taverns

The town gates shut. The Brandenburg visitors told town councils to shut the gates on holy-day mornings, so that no one could go out to work in the fields. Cölln on the Spree, Visitations-Abschied, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 194):

> Es ist den visitatorn glaubwirdig vorkommen, das viele ungehorsamer leute sein, die den feiertag mit fahren und arbeiten, auch sonst verunheiligen, soll derwegen ein erbar rath die thore des heiligen tages vor mittage zuhalten, niemands daraus zur arheit gestadten

It hath come credibly before the visitors that there are many disobedient people who profane the holy day with carting and working, and otherwise also; therefore the honourable council shall keep the gates shut on the holy day before noon, [and] suffer no one [to go] out of them to work

The same order recurs in the visitation recesses for Salzwedel 1579 and Stendal 1578 (Sehling 3, pp. 285, 300, 331).

Fines. The town mandates fix the fine. Strasbourg (1534, Moderate Reformed) forbade every kind of handiwork on Sunday: stacking wood, unloading wood or sand, bucking and washing. The fine was thirty shillings. Milk and bread might be sold, and in Lent fish, until the last bell for the sermon. Strasbourg, Mandat zur Sonntagsheiligung, 1534 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 246):

> Erstlich, die weill der Sontag zu hörung Götlichs wortz verordnet, das niemantz in der stat Straßburgk oder deren burckban uf die Sontag on sonder dapfer, redlich ursach oder erheischende notturfft kheinerley handarbeit thun solle, es sey mit holtz legen, holtz oder sant uffschiessen, bauchen oder ußweschen oder andern arbeitten, wie die sind, bey peen dreissig schilling pfennig.

First, since Sunday is ordained for the hearing of God's word, that no one in the city of Strasbourg or its precincts shall on Sunday, without special weighty [and] honest cause or pressing need, do any handiwork whatsoever, be it with stacking wood, unloading wood or sand, bucking or washing, or other works, whatever they be, on pain of thirty shillings pfennig.

The discipline orders of the Wetterau counts set fines for each offence: for walking in the fields during the sermon, for trading, for sitting in the wine-house or working in the field (Hanau-Münzenberg, Reformationsmandat für das Amt Rodheim, 1596, Reformed, Sehling 10, p. 414; see Chapter 11 §11.12 for the fines for absence and for disturbing the sermon). Taverns were to stay shut during divine service on Sundays and holy days alike.

12.11.3 Weddings, guild feasts and markets

Wedding feasts, guild banquets and markets were moved away from the high feasts, so that they would not draw people from the sermon. The closed seasons for weddings in Advent and Lent are treated in §12.12.6.

Mansfeld, Kirchen-agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 240):

> Von den hochzeiten auf die heuptfeste. Weil es auf die heuptfest sehr unbequem ist, das in den selbigen wirtschaften gehalten werden, so sollen hinfurt dieselben auf solche feste genzlich ein gestellet sein, und auf weinachten acht tage zuvor, und für dem sontage nach trium regum, desgleichen in ostern, für dem sontage quasimodogeniti, auch in pfingsten, für dem sontage trinitatis keine hochzeit gestattet werden

Of weddings at the chief feasts. Forasmuch as it is very unmeet that wedding-feasts be held at the chief feasts, the same shall henceforth be wholly stayed at such feasts: and at Christmas, eight days before, and until the Sunday after the Three Kings; likewise at Easter until the Sunday Quasimodogeniti; and at Whitsuntide until the Sunday Trinity, no wedding shall be allowed

Hadersleben, Zuchtordnung, 1573 (Sehling 23, p. 244):

> Es sollen auch die gilden auf den hohen festen und sonderlich dem Pfingstdage nicht mehr gehalten, besundern auf den andern tag verschoben werden.

The guild-feasts also shall no more be held on the high feasts, and especially on Whitsunday, but be put off to another day.

Brandenburg, Visitation- und Consistorialordnung, 1573 (Sehling 3, p. 129):

> Die obrigkeiten sollen auch verordnen, das die wochenmerkte, so an hohen festen gefallen, bis nach mittage oder auf den andern folgenden tag verschoben, auf das gottes wort dadurch nicht möge verhindert werden.

The magistrates also shall ordain that the weekly markets which fall on high feasts be put off until after noon, or to the next day following, that God's Word be not hindered thereby.

12.11.4 Fastnacht, Kirchweih, May Day and Midsummer

"Heathen" festivals. The folk festivals of the year were attacked as "heathen" in mandate after mandate:

- Shrovetide (Fastnacht) with its masks, dances and begging for eggs and meat;
- the church-dedication fair (Kirchweih, Kirmes);
- May Day and Walpurgis night, with the May-tree;
- Whitsun ales, the Pfingstbier;
- the Midsummer fires of St John's Eve;

- the Hagelfeier, a day of processions against hail.

The Hessian Reformationsordnung of 1572 (Philippist) forbids "Sunday dances, especially during the sermon and the catechism", and all such "frivolous wantonness". Hesse, Reformationsordnung, 1572 (Philippist; Sehling 8, p. 401):

> Also auch sollen die sontagstänze, sonderlich under der predigte und kinderlehr, darzu auch alle andere leichtfertige üppigkeiten, so nach heidnischer weis zur fastnacht, Walpurgis, Pfingsten, Joannistag und andern zeiten mehr durchs jar vom gemeinen man geübt und vorgenommen werden, genzlichen verboten sein und die uberfahrer jedermals nach gestalt der geübten leichtfertigkeit durch unsere beampten ernstlichen gestraft und uns die straf einbracht werden. Wann aber hochzeiten seind, mag man zimlich tanzen

So also shall the Sunday dances, especially during the sermon and the catechism, and also all other frivolous wantonness which is practised and undertaken by the common man after heathen manner at Shrovetide, Walpurgis, Whitsuntide, St John's day and at other times more through the year, be wholly forbidden; and the transgressors shall each time be earnestly punished by our officers according to the form of the wantonness practised, and the fine brought in to us. But when there are weddings, one may dance modestly

The same list recurs in Nassau-Weilburg 1576 (with the "Hagel holy days" and the Walpurgis and St John's fires, Sehling 10, p. 310), Solms 1603 (Sehling 9, p. 351) and Ysenburg (Sehling 10, p. 707). Separate Fastnacht mandates were issued in Waldeck (1547, 1563, 1589/90), Ysenburg (1590, 1612, Reformed) and Baden (1610) (Sehling 9, pp. 222, 297, 301; 10, pp. 593, 693; 16, p. 572). Kurpfalz banned church-dedication fairs, Shrovetide and mummery outright in its police legislation (Sehling's introduction, Sehling 14, p. 66), and Waldeck abolished the Kirchweih in 1583 (Sehling 9, p. 299). The Franconian order of Thüngen named Corpus Christi and the Hagelfeier together as feasts "whereby God is blasphemed" (Sehling 11, p. 737).

12.11.5 Shrove Sunday turned into a feast of baptism

A new feast in place of an old one. Bugenhagen's Hamburg order turned the Sunday before Lent, the beginning of Shrovetide, into a day for preaching on baptism. The Gospel was the baptism of Christ (Matthew 3). He remarks that there had never been a feast of Christ's baptism, though there had been "so many useless feasts". Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 507):

> Darumme is vor gudt angeseen, den vastelavendes sundach besundergen to bruken to predike van der dope. Des morgens schallme in allen karspelkarcken prediken dat evangelion Matth. 3, wo Christus gedopet in der Jordane von sunte Johannes. Dat is eine trostlike und gnadentrike historie van dem heren Christo, de jo nicht vorschwegen schall werden. Idt is wunder, dat me nicht hefft gehat ein fest van der dope Christi, dewile me doch so vele unnutte feste hefft gehadt tho vorderve lives und der selen.

Therefore it is thought good to use the Shrove Sunday especially for preaching of baptism. In the morning there shall be preached in all the parish churches the Gospel of Matthew 3, how Christ was baptized in the Jordan by St John. That is a comfortable and gracious history of the Lord Christ, which surely shall not be kept silent. It is a wonder that there hath not been a feast of the baptism of Christ, whereas there have been so many unprofitable feasts, to the ruin of body and soul.

The Schleswig-Holstein order of 1542 has the same rule (Sehling 23, p. 94). The Pomeranian Agenda of 1569 explains its purpose: the people are to be reminded of their baptism, "that by God's Spirit they may be the more led away from the heathenish, unchristian Shrovetide doings" (Sehling 4, p. 473).

12.12 The seasons of the year

The evangelical orders kept the shape of the church year: Advent, Christmas, Lent, Holy Week, Easter, Ascension, Whitsun and the Trinity season. What they changed was what each season meant in practice. Lent lost its fast (§12.13) but kept its preaching. The seasons with the most extra services were Lent and Holy Week. Their additions were sermons and catechism, not Masses. This section covers Luther's starting point (§12.12.1), Advent (§12.12.2), Lent (§12.12.3), Holy Week (§12.12.4), Rogation week and the catechism seasons (§12.12.5), the closed seasons for weddings (§12.12.6) and the Ember days (§12.12.7).

12.12.1 Luther: no special show for Lent

The Formula missae. Luther would not mark Lent, Holy Week or Good Friday with rites that set them apart from the rest of the year. To do so, with the half-Mass of the Presanctified and the denial of the cup, would be "to mock and laugh at Christ". Luther, Formula missae et communionis, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 5):

> Porro gradualia quadragesimalia et similia, quae duos versus excedunt, cantet quisquis velit in domo sua. In ecclesia nolumus tedio extingui spiritum fidelium. Sed nec ipsam quadragesimam sive maiorem hebdomadam aut sextam feriam penosam aliis ritibus ostentare decet, quam alias quascunque, ne semimissa et altera sacramenti parte Christum amplius ludere et ridere velle videamur. Alleluia enim vox perpetua est ecclesiae, sicut perpetua est memoria passionis et victoriae eius.

Further, the Lenten graduals and the like, which exceed two verses, let whosoever will sing at home. In the church we will not have the spirit of the faithful quenched with tedium. Neither is it meet to display Lent itself, or the Greater Week, or the Friday of the Passion, with other rites than any other [days], lest we seem to wish to mock and laugh at Christ any longer with a half-Mass and with one part of the sacrament. For the Alleluia is the perpetual voice of the church, even as the memory of his passion and victory is perpetual.

In 1526 he said the same of Holy Week, which "shall be even as other weeks", with the Passion preached an hour a day (Deutsche Messe, Sehling 1, p. 16; see Chapter 11 §11.4.4). The later orders did not all follow him in the chant. Some left the Gloria out in Lent and used the plain Kyrie (§12.10.11).

12.12.2 Advent

The coming of Christ. Advent is kept as a season of preaching on the prophecies of Christ's coming and on the Last Day. The Pomeranian Agenda gives weekday sermons for it. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 463):

> Wo men överst im advente up de werkeldage schal predigen, de prophecien van der tokümpst Christi, unde des herren Christi predigen vam jüngsten dage, dat volget herna.

But how one shall preach in Advent on the working days, the prophecies of the coming of Christ and the Lord Christ's sermons of the Last Day, that followeth hereafter.

Advent was also a season for the catechism. At Allstedt (1533) the pastor was to examine the children "three times in the year, in Advent, in Lent and after the harvest" (Sehling 1, p. 511). The Niederwildungen catechism order of 1533 (Waldeck) held the catechism three days a week in Advent (Sehling 9, p. 191).

12.12.3 Lent: repentance, the Passion and the catechism

Preaching. Lent kept its old name, die Fasten or Quadragesima, but its content became preaching. The Württemberg order sets the themes: repentance through Lent; on Palm Sunday the whole Passion read to the young people in three parts; on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday the Passion expounded. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 16, p. 267):

> In der Fasten, Quadragesima genannt, soll von der rechten Christlichen buß gepredigt werden. Auf den Palmtag ist es nutzlich, neben der historien des Palmtages dem jungen volck die historien des gantzen Passions zu dreien malen, Nämlich morgens, nach mittag und zur Vesper zeit außgetheilt, fürzulesen, Und hernach dieselb historien auff den grünen Donnerstag unnd Charfreitag der gmeinen kirchen außzulegen und iren nutz und gebrauch mit sonderlichem ernst und fleiß zuerklären.

In Lent, called Quadragesima, there shall be preaching of right Christian repentance. On Palm Sunday it is profitable, beside the history of Palm Sunday, to read to the young people the history of the whole Passion, divided into three times, namely morning, afternoon and at Vesper time; and thereafter to expound the same history to the common church on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday, and to explain its profit and use with special earnestness and diligence.

The same text stands in Pfalz-Neuburg 1554, Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1557, Pfalz-Veldenz 1574 and Kurpfalz 1556 (Sehling 18, pp. 207, 520; 14, p. 163). The division of the Passion into a series of Lenten sermons is described in Chapter 11 §11.4.4.

More weekday sermons. In Lent the weekday sermons were increased. In the Corvey village of Bruchhausen there was a sermon one day a week through Lent and two in the week before Easter. Corvey, Kirchenordnung für das Corveyer Stiftsdorf Bruchhausen, 1603 (Sehling 21, p. 243):

> Uber diese itzt ermehlte Feyer- und Bettage soll auch in der Fasten Wochentlich einen tag in der Wochen, aber für Ostern zwey tage, des Donnerstages und Freytages, predige gehalten und dem Volck die Historia von dem Leiden Christi fürgehalten werden.

Over and above these holy days and prayer days now named, there shall also in Lent be preaching weekly one day in the week, but before Easter two days, the Thursday and Friday, and the history of the Passion of Christ be set before the people.

Daily catechism instead of the Salve Regina. The commonest daily service of Lent was the catechism, held at the hour when the Salve Regina had once been sung. Gotha, Artikel durch die hern visitatores einem erbarn rathe zu Gotha zugestellet, 1555 (Sehling 1, p. 569):

> Alle tage in der fasten, als bald den ersten sontag anzufahen, da man im bapstumb das abgottische salve regina gesungen, wird der catechismus alle tage bis auf den sontag palmarum, mit den kindern gehalten, wird ein psalm als der 8. 16. 22. 69. 110. etc., die der passion Christi gedenken, neben dem stuck des catechismi, das da sol gehandelt werden, gesungen, darnach wird ein lection, ausm siracide, proverbiis Salomonis oder was sonst von pfarhern fur eine lection angeordnet, gelesen

Every day in Lent, beginning straightway on the first Sunday, [at the hour] when in the papacy the idolatrous Salve Regina was sung, the catechism is held with the children every day until Palm Sunday. A psalm is sung, as the 8th, 16th, 22nd, 69th, 110th etc., which remember the Passion of Christ, beside the part of the catechism which is to be handled; thereafter a lesson is read out of Sirach, the Proverbs of Solomon, or whatever other lesson is appointed by the pastor

Calenberg 1542 gives the same rule (Sehling 6/2, p. 804). The Upper Lusatian orders of Zittau and Herwigsdorf had the catechism preached every weekday in Lent "at Salve time" (Sehling 3, p. 379).

The Easter communion and the examination. Lent ended in the Easter communion, which drew the young people "in great number" (Regensburg 1572, Sehling 13, p. 509). The catechism was therefore examined on the Sundays of Lent. Albertine Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 424):

> Zum andern sol der pfarrer auf den sontag Esto mihi etc. der gemein verkündigen, das hinfüro auf die sontage in der fasten nach der mittags predigt das examen mit den kindern und hausgesind gehalten werde, derhalben die eltern ihre kinder und gesinde darzu schicken und anhalten wollen, darmit sie aus ihrem catechismo rechenschaft ihres glaubens geben können.

Secondly, the pastor shall proclaim to the congregation on the Sunday Esto mihi, etc., that henceforth on the Sundays in Lent, after the midday sermon, the examination shall be held with the children and household servants; wherefore the parents shall send and hold their children and servants thereto, that they may give account of their faith out of their catechism.

There was no daily Lenten Mass. The orders hold the Supper when there are communicants (§12.10.9). In Lent the extra services are sermons, catechism and examination.

The Lenten catechism course is treated in Chapter 15, §15.11.1, and the catechism service in Chapter 10, §10.10.

12.12.4 Holy Week

Maundy Thursday and Good Friday. The two days kept their themes: the institution of the Supper and the Passion. In Hamburg the morning service on Maundy Thursday was held "as on a Sunday, with the ceremonies", with a sermon on the sacrament. On Good Friday the Passion was preached. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 5, p. 544):

> In der vasten up den guden donnersdach schall ein itlick pastor to achte schlägen predigen vam sacramente des lives und blodes des heren Christi, wente vormiddage schall idt in der karcken alse sunsten up einen sondag mit den ceremonien geholden werden, alse wente nu her geschehen iss. Am guden freidage schall ein idtlicker pastor de passion des heren predigen to achte schlägen, doch schal idt einem iedern pastoren freiestahn, desülvige in der vasten antoheven, wenehr eme dat belevet, lank oder kort to tracterende.

In Lent, on Maundy Thursday, every pastor shall preach at eight o'clock of the sacrament of the body and blood of the Lord Christ; for in the forenoon it shall be held in the church as otherwise on a Sunday, with the ceremonies, as hath been done until now. On Good Friday every pastor shall preach the Passion of the Lord at eight o'clock; yet it shall be free to every pastor to begin the same in Lent, when he pleaseth, to treat it long or short.

Most orders keep Maundy Thursday and Good Friday as holy days, at least in the forenoon (§12.6.2). The old Holy Week ceremonies (palms, the ass, the grave, the Easter fire) were abolished (§12.10.10). Weddings were not held in Holy Week (§12.12.6).

12.12.5 Rogation week and the catechism seasons

Processions abolished. The Rogation processions through the fields (Kreuzgänge, Bittgänge) went with the other processions (§12.10.10), and the Hagelfeier against hail was condemned (§12.11.4).

The week kept for the catechism. Bugenhagen kept Rogation week (Krützeweke) as one of four seasons for preaching the catechism through in eight sermons, by the superintendent and his adjutor. During these weeks the other preachers rested from their weekday sermons. Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 378):

> In der Advente twe wekene des Mandages, Dynxtedages, Donredages unde Frydages. In den ersten vullen twen weken in der vastene ock so. In der krützeweke mit der navolgenden weke ock so, ane des Heren hemmelvartdach. Twe wekene na der ernte, ehr me den hoppen afnympt, ock so. Darumme moten de beyden predicanten den catechismum kort unde vorstendich vaten vor de simpelen, dat me den kan uthpredigen in den achte prediken.

In Advent two weeks, on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday. In the first two full weeks of Lent likewise. In Rogation week with the week following likewise, except the Lord's Ascension Day. Two weeks after the harvest, before the hops are taken down, likewise. Therefore the two preachers must frame the catechism briefly and understandably for the simple, that it can be preached through in the eight sermons.

Hamburg 1529 and Lübeck 1531 repeat the plan (Sehling 5, pp. 505, 352). The four catechism seasons stand where the Ember weeks had stood (§12.12.7).

12.12.6 Closed seasons: no weddings in Advent and Lent

The old rule kept. Most orders kept the medieval closed seasons for weddings: Advent, Lent (often from mid-Lent) and the high feasts. They gave a new reason: the wedding feast would draw people from the sermon. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, p. 155):

> Es sollen die Hochzeiten nit auff die hohe Fest, als auff Weyhenachten, Ostern, Pfingsten etc., Auch nit im Advent und in der Fasten, sonderlich nach Mitfasten, gelegt und gehalten werden, damit die Leuth dardurch von der Predigt deß Göttlichen Worts und dem H. Gottesdienst nit abgeführet

Weddings shall not be laid and held on the high feasts, as on Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, etc., nor yet in Advent and in Lent, especially after mid-Lent, that the people be not thereby led away from the preaching of God's word and the holy service

Strasbourg states the closed seasons exactly and adds that "we do not distinguish the times after the popish, superstitious manner". Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 1598 (Sehling 20/1, p. 636):

> Wiewol wir aber die Zeit nit auff Bäpstische Abergläubische weise unterscheiden, Jedoch, weil alles ding seine Zeit hat und durch etlicher weniger Freude und Kurtzweil des grössern hauffen Andacht nit solle verhindert werden, So ist bei uns gebräuchlich, Das von dem dritten Sontag des Advents biß auff den ersten Sontag nach dem Newen Jahrs tag keine Hochzeiten außzuruffen oder einzusegnen angenommen werden, Deßgleichen auch nit von Laetare oder Mitfasten biß auff Ostern.

Although we do not distinguish the times after the popish, superstitious manner, yet, because everything hath its time, and the devotion of the greater number shall not be hindered by the joy and pastime of a few, it is the custom with us that from the third Sunday of Advent until the first Sunday after New Year's day no weddings are accepted to be proclaimed or blessed; likewise also not from Laetare or mid-Lent until Easter.

The same ban, with dispensations "for great causes", is in Saxony 1580, the Upper Palatinate 1579, Grubenhagen 1581, Lüneburg 1575, Stendal 1551, Marienhafe (East Frisia) 1593 and Oldenburg (Sehling 1, p. 436; 13, p. 316; 6/2, p. 1065; 6/1, p.

672; 3, p. 316; 7/1, p. 718; 7/2.1, p. 1180). Mansfeld extended it to the octaves of the high feasts (§12.11.3). Hoya forbade weddings and other feasting through Lent and Holy Week, "that every one may prepare himself by a sober, moderate life" for the memory of Christ's passion (Sehling 6/2, p. 1200).

12.12.7 The Ember days: from fast days to quarter days

The fast gone, the date kept. The Ember days (Quatember, Fronfasten, Low German quatertemper) were the Wednesday, Friday and Saturday after Invocavit, Whitsunday, Holy Cross (14 September) and St Lucy (13 December). The orders do not keep them as fasts (§12.13). They keep them as the four quarter days of the church year. Their uses in the orders:

- Payments. The communicants' offering penny was paid "every Ember time", as were schoolmasters' fees, salaries and poor-relief accounts. This is the commonest use by far.
- Catechism sermons. The catechism was preached through in each Ember season. Torgau, Ordnung der Visitatoren, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 676):

> Der katecismus soll vier mal des jars gepredigt werden, nemlich in den vier quatember. Ein itzliche quatember zwu oder drei wochen dazu zu nemen und dieweil der catecismus weret, die andern predigten ruhen lassen.

The catechism shall be preached four times a year, namely in the four Ember seasons. Each Ember season two or three weeks shall be taken for it, and while the catechism lasteth the other sermons shall rest.

- The Litany. Albertine Saxony had the Litany sung "on the four Ember seasons for a week" (Sehling 1, p. 272), and Mansfeld "especially on the four Ember days, when the people are together" (Sehling 2, p. 239).
- Ordinations. In Pomerania candidates were examined and ordained "at the time of the Ember days, especially in Lent and at Michaelmas, when the catechism is repeated", so that the ordinands might hear how the catechism was preached. Pomerania, Kerckenordeninge, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 395):

> Dat examen in der lere schal gescheen ut dem examine ordinandorum, locis communibus, ut dem catechismo unde im texte der hiligen schrift, unde sölckes up de tidt der quatertemper, sunderlick in der vasten unde up Michaelis, wenn de catechismus repeteret wert, dat de ordinanden vort hören de form, den catechismum to predigen.

The examination in doctrine shall be done out of the Examen ordinandorum, the loci communes, the catechism and the text of holy Scripture, and that at the time of the Ember days, especially in Lent and at Michaelmas, when the catechism is repeated, that the ordinands may straightway hear the form of preaching the catechism.

- Ordinances read from the pulpit. The forbidden degrees of marriage and the list of offences to be reported were read from the pulpit at every Ember season in Nassau (Sehling 10, pp. 95, 115). The Pfalz-Neuburg edicts were to be read "four times a year at the Ember times" (Sehling 13, p. 115).
- Marriage sermons. Henneberg 1582 held a half-hour sermon on marriage on the Sunday after each Ember season (Sehling 2, p. 314).

12.13 Fasting

The medieval Church kept about 160 fast and abstinence days a year (Sehling's note, Sehling 11, p. 92):

- the forty days of Lent, on the weekdays from Ash Wednesday to Holy Saturday;
- the Friday abstinence, and in many places the Saturday;
- the Ember days;
- the vigils of the great feasts.

On these days meat, and in Lent also eggs and dairy, were forbidden on pain of mortal sin. The evangelical orders removed the obligation, kept the praise of fasting, and replaced the fixed fasts with occasional days of fasting and prayer. This section covers the principle (§12.13.1), the call to voluntary fasting (§12.13.2), the orders that kept the old fasts (§12.13.3), fasts kept for civil reasons (§12.13.4), the days of fasting and prayer (§12.13.5) and fasting before communion (§12.13.6).

12.13.1 Not a law, and not a merit

Fasting set among human ordinances. The visitors of 1528 list "appointed fasts, eating no flesh on Friday" among the ordinances made "to earn grace for sins", which may therefore "be let fall" (see Chapter 10 §10.3.4 for the passage). Eating meat on Friday is "right before God and in the conscience", and less needful to preach than the commandments (§12.11.1).

Fasting good in itself. The Lüneburg articles of 1527 put the evangelical teaching in one sentence. Fasting is "useful and good, to tame the body". But it is not to be kept so that anything is earned "by difference of food on appointed days". No pastor is to compel anyone "to a difference of times or of food"; the people are to be led to "a willing fasting and a moderate life". Lüneburg, Artikelbuch, 1527 (Sehling 6/1, p. 500):

> De achte artikel. Wo me syck ym vastende schal h o 1 d e n. Nademe ock vastent nütte unde gudt ys, den lycham tho temmen, jodoch nicht also to holdende, dat dorch underschedt der spyse an uthgetekeden dagen sunderlykes wes vordenet edder unhulde Goddes, so men ydt nicht helde, vorwerket wörde, sunder dewyle ydt Christus unde syne apostele, ock eine lange tydt darna de gemene christlicke kercke fryg gelaten, dat ein ytlick kerckhere nemande dwynge tho underschede der tydt edder spyse, sunder mer den wyllen Goddes se underrichte, dat ene solckes fryg gelaten tho etende ym namen des Heren, wat ene Got vorlenet, jodoch mit stedtlikem anholdende gödtlyckes wordes dem unvorstande unde frevel begegene, dat se nicht yn averfloth varen, sunder mer ein wyllich fastent unde metich levent annemen.

The eighth article. How one shall conduct himself in fasting. Forasmuch as fasting is useful and good to tame the body, yet not to be so kept that by difference of food on appointed days anything special be merited, or God's displeasure incurred if one kept it not; but since Christ and his apostles, and also for a long time thereafter the common Christian church, left it free, [it is ordered] that every pastor compel no one to a difference of times or of food, but rather instruct them in the will of God, that it is left free to them to eat in the name of the Lord what God granteth them; yet, with constant urging of God's word, he shall meet ignorance and wantonness, that they fall not into excess, but rather take up a willing fasting and a moderate life.

"Who ever taught that Christians should not fast?" The Calenberg order of 1542 answers the charge that the evangelicals "teach nothing but to gorge on flesh". The answer has four points. Fasting is to last the whole of life, not to be bound to fixed times. It is not to be drawn into justification. It is not to be commanded on pain of mortal sin. And the difference of foods is not to be suffered, "because Christ hath freed us from such ordinances". Calenberg-Göttingen, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 6/2, p. 772):

> denn wer hat jemals geleret odder geschrieben, das die Christen nicht fasten sollen? Man leret, was recht fasten sey, item, das nach der lehre Pauli solch fasten an keine bestimpte zeit gebunden sein, sonder die zeit unsers lebens weren solle, item, das solch werk in die justification nicht müsse gezogen oder bey einer todsunde, die gewissen damit zu bestricken, geboten werden, item, das man auch den unterscheid der speise hie nicht leiden könne, weil uns von Sollen satzungen Christus gefreiet habe for who hath ever taught or written that Christians should not fast? We teach what right fasting is; item, that according to the doctrine of Paul such fasting is not bound to any fixed time, but shall last the time of our life; item, that such a work must not be drawn into justification, nor be commanded on pain of a mortal sin, to ensnare the consciences therewith; item, that the difference of food cannot be suffered here, because Christ hath freed us from such ordinances

The Mecklenburg Klosterordnung of 1572 and the Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel Klosterordnung of 1569 explain the old fish days as a piece of the monastic "house order", which had wrongly been turned into "a special service of God" (Sehling 5, p. 252; 6/1, p. 307).

12.13.2 Fasting exhorted, but free

The transitional orders. The earliest orders of the 1520s and 1530s keep the old fast days as a recommended custom. They tell the preachers to exhort the people to keep them, and to live moderately every day, but they forbid any command under the ban or mortal sin. Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Landtagsabschied, 1526 (Sehling 11, pp. 92–93):

> Von fasten und fleischessen. Sollen die pfarherrn und prediger das volk vermanen, das sie nit allein in der virzigteglichen fasten, den quottembern und andern bisher gehaten fastagen, sunder teglich in meßigkeit und abbruch oder on uberfluß essens und trinkens leben, damit sie ire fleischliche leib zemen und geschickt machen, Gottes willen und werk zu volbringen und zu üben [...]. Und dieweil man sich nach ordnung etlicher heiligen veter und concilien ein lange zeit an den bestimpten fasttegen fleisch, eir und anders zu essen Got zu lob und ere enthalten hat, wiewol on zweifel > derselbigen heiligen veter und concilien meinung nit gewesen ist, jemand dardurch in geferlichkeit seiner seelen oder leibs zu setzen oder einen strick der sünden zu legen oder ein neue todsünd zu machen, sunder mer damit den menschen zu christlicher casteiung seins leibs zu furdern

Of fasting and eating flesh. The pastors and preachers shall exhort the people that they live not only in the forty days' fast, the Ember days and the other fast days kept hitherto, but daily in moderation and abstinence, or without excess of eating and drinking, that they may tame their fleshly bodies and make them fit to fulfil and practise God's will and work [...]. And whereas, by the ordinance of certain holy fathers and councils, men have for a long time abstained on the appointed fast days from flesh, eggs and other things, to the praise and honour of God, although without doubt it was not the meaning of the same holy fathers and councils thereby to put any one in danger of his soul or body, or to lay a snare of sin, or to make a new mortal sin, but rather therewith to further men to Christian chastening of their body

Nassau-Dillenburg 1537 and Jülich-Kleve 1525 (Roman Catholic humanist) have the same text (Sehling 10, p. 77; 21, p. 71).

Before the Supper. Oldenburg 1573, following Urbanus Rhegius, asks why Christians will not fast "once or twice in the year" before coming to the Lord's table, when "the first godly Christendom a thousand years ago kept the forty fast days, each according to his occasion". Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1081):

> Auch wenn er etwas ernstlichs von Gott bitten wil oder sich zu einer ernstlichen danksagung ins Herrn nachtmal schicken wil, so wird er auch zuvor durch anregung des Geistes Christi fasten oder messiglich und nüchtern leben. Wo ers nicht tut, so ist er noch gar fleischlich und ein titelchrist. Die erste frome christenheit vor tausent jaren hielte die vierzig fasttage, ein jeder nach seiner gelegenheit. Was sind wir für Christen, das wir im jar nicht ein- oder zweymal wollen fasten, wenn wir zu Gottes tisch gehen sollen?

Also, when he will ask anything earnest of God, or will prepare himself for an earnest thanksgiving in the Lord's Supper, he will beforehand, by the moving of the Spirit of Christ, fast, or live moderately and soberly. If he do it not, he is yet wholly carnal and a Christian in name. The first godly Christendom a thousand years ago kept the forty fast days, each one according to his occasion. What manner of Christians are we, that we will not fast once or twice in the year, when we are to go to God's table?

12.13.3 Orders that kept the old fasts

Waldeck 1528 and Baden. A few orders kept the fasts as before. The articles for the Waldeck synod at Mengeringhausen in 1528 say "all fast days shall be kept as hitherto", with abstinence from meat "at the forbidden times". Waldeck, Beschlüsse für die Synode von Mengeringhausen, 1528 (Sehling 9, p. 185):

> Alle fasttage sollen gehalten werden wye bißher. Fleysch zu essen sol man sich enthalten uff verpotten zeyten. Sontag, apostelntag, unser frawentag etc. soll man feyren umb des worts willen, aber doch in der zeytt der ernd etc. nymandt gewissen zu machen.

All fast days shall be kept as hitherto. One shall abstain from eating flesh at the forbidden times. Sunday, the apostles' days, Our Lady's days, etc., shall be kept holy for the Word's sake, but yet in the time of harvest, etc., no one's conscience shall be burdened.

The Margrave Philipp of Baden, in his mandate of 1531, still required "the forty days and other fast days brought down in the common Christian church, together with the Fridays and Saturdays", with abstinence from meat except in need or bodily weakness (Sehling 16, p. 507). The Colmar council, still Catholic (the city's Reformation came in 1575), complained in 1560 that the Lenten fast and "other fast days through the year" were kept with little discretion "among young and old, sick and healthy" (Sehling's introduction, Sehling 20/2, p. 481).

12.13.4 Fasting by police order

Meat days for the price of meat. Where a magistrate ordered abstinence, the reason given was economic, and the order says so. The Nordhausen police order of 1549 forbids meat on Fridays, Saturdays and in Lent because the price of meat was rising. The old, the sick, hard labourers, young children and women in childbed are exempt. It declares that no one is to think it a sin. Nordhausen, Polizei-Ordnung der Stadt Nordhausen, 1549 (Sehling 2, p. 396):

> Von fleisch essen und der fasten. Und deweil wir befinden, das der fleischkauf je lenger je mehr in grosse theurungen erwechst, so wollen wir, dass sich ein ider die wochen zwene tage, freitages und sonnenabends, auch die fasten des fleischessen enthalte, ausgeschlossen alte kranke leute, hartarbeiter, junge kinder, kindbetterin, oder den es auf befel der erzte erlaubt, doch das hierinne kein frevel oder missbrauch gesucht. Doch sol dieser artikel von niemand vorstanden werden, als ob es sünde und von gott vorboten were, die abgemelten zeit kein fleisch essen, welches auch von uns gar nicht gemeint, sondern wir wollen alles das, so gott der herr frei und ohne sünde zu gebrauchen gelassen hat, frei und ohne sünde bleiben lassen, und hierinne nicht anderst denn gehorsam und gut ordnunge, policei und messigkeit gesucht und gemeinet haben.

Of eating flesh and of Lent. And whereas we find that the buying of flesh groweth ever more into great dearness, we will that every one abstain from eating flesh two days in the week, Fridays and Saturdays, and also in Lent; excepted old [and] sick people, hard labourers, young children, women in childbed, or those to whom it is allowed at the bidding of the physicians; yet so that no wantonness or abuse be sought herein. Yet shall this article be understood by no one as though it were sin and forbidden by God not to eat flesh at the aforesaid time, which is in no wise meant by us; but we will let all that the Lord God hath left free and without sin to be used remain free and without sin, and herein have sought and meant nothing else than obedience and good order, police and moderation.

The fish market. Strasbourg's Sunday mandate (1534, Moderate Reformed) lets milk and bread be sold before the sermon, "and in Lent the fish" (Sehling 20/1, p. 246; §12.11.2). Lent still governed the market.

12.13.5 Days of fasting and prayer

The new fast day. In place of the fixed fasts, the orders appoint days of fasting and prayer (Buß-, Bett- and Fasttage) in times of war, plague, dearth and threat to the church. Some were monthly, some extraordinary. On them feasting and weddings were stopped, and the people were called to fasting as well as prayer. The Palatine mandate of 1610 (Reformed), issued as the Catholic League formed, tells the preachers to teach that "at dangerous, sorrowful times even permitted joys are to be laid aside". It also tells them to correct the false idea that "with the popish superstitious fasting the rightful Christian fasting also was done away". Kurpfalz, Mandat zu den Bußtagen, 1610 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, p. 971):

> 1. Wie daß zu gefehrlichen, trübseligen zeitten auch die erlaubte freuden einzustellenn. 2. Von dem gebrauch der kirche Gottes, sich durch fasten undt casteien des leibs zu einem eiferigen gebett vorzuberaitenn, da ihnen die falsche wahn zu benemmen, alß wann mit dem bäpstischen aberglaubigen fastenn auch das rechtmeßige christliche fasten were aufgehabenn.

1. How that at dangerous, sorrowful times even the permitted joys are to be laid aside. 2. Of the custom of the church of God, to prepare itself by fasting and chastening of the body for earnest prayer; wherein the false conceit is to be taken from them, as though with the popish superstitious fasting the rightful Christian fasting were also done away.

A Nassau-Weilburg text printed with the order of 1576 makes the monthly prayer days fast days, on which betrothal feasts, guild banquets and all weddings in the week were stopped (Sehling 10, p. 239). Hesse (Moderate Reformed) and Schleswig-Holstein ordered prayer days with fasting in the 1550s and 1560s (Sehling 8, p. 263; 23, p. 270). Kurland mentions extraordinary "fast days" set by edict in time of war (Sehling 5, p. 92).

Fasting at the choice of ministers. The Hessian order of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) and the Reformed orders follow Acts 13 and 14: the church is to prepare "with fasting and prayer" for the election of a superintendent or minister. Micron, Christliche Ordinancien (1554; German edition 1565) (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 588):

> Wenn die gemeine eines dieners oder mehr dürftig ist, so wird alsdenn nach der ordnung Gottes ein gemeiner gewisser fasttag durch die eltisten angestellet, welcher tag darnach von der kanzel der ganzen gemeine verkündiget wird

When the congregation is in need of one minister or more, then, according to the ordinance of God, a common, certain fast day is appointed by the elders, which day is thereafter proclaimed from the pulpit to the whole congregation

The Hessian rule (Moderate Reformed) is at Sehling 8, p. 203, and the same provision is in Pfalz-Veldenz 1574 (Sehling 18, p. 560).

The prayer-day sermons are treated in Chapter 11, §11.4.5, and the Litany days in Chapter 13, §13.21.4.

12.13.6 Fasting before communion

Sober for the sacrament. The one fast the orders still expected regularly was the communicant's. The Hessian order of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) defends receiving the sacrament fasting with Augustine: "it hath pleased the Holy Ghost that, in honour of this most worthy sacrament, the body of the Lord should enter the Christian's mouth before other food" (Sehling 8, p. 309). The Saxon order of 1580 forbids banquets on the eves of Sundays and feasts, so that the household might come to the sacrament sober. Albertine Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 430):

> Sollen derwegen auf die sonn und hoher fest abend nicht allein alle gastungen abschaffen, sondern auch ein jeder hausvater sein ganzes hausgesinde zu einem nüchtern leben, vornemlich aber wenn sie zum hochwirdigen sacrament gehen, anhalten, auf das sie nüchtern, mit lust und andacht an folgendem sonn oder festtage gottes wort hören, die communion wirdiglich gebrauchen

They shall therefore not only do away with all banquets on the eves of Sundays and high feasts, but also every householder shall hold his whole household to a sober life, chiefly when they go to the most worthy sacrament, that they may hear God's word soberly, with delight and devotion, on the following Sunday or feast day, [and] use the communion worthily

Who fasted, and how. The orders give no general fasting rules for clergy or laity. What they show:

- Communicants. Communicants were expected to come fasting and to keep the eve soberly (§12.13.6 above).
- Everyone on prayer days. The whole congregation was called to fast on the appointed days of fasting and prayer, and to give up feasts and weddings (§12.13.5).
- Under police orders. Where the magistrate ordered abstinence for economic reasons, the old, the sick, labourers, children and women in childbed were exempt (§12.13.4).
- No separate clergy fast. No order lays a separate fast on the clergy. The monastic fasts went with the monastic rules: Württemberg's convent order of 1535 counts the bonds of human ordinances "in fasting, silence, confessing, wearing cowls and tonsures" among what is cast off (Sehling 16, p. 79).

Confession and communion as a duty of the laity are treated in Chapter 15, §15.8.3.

12.14 Occurrence and transfer

The medieval rubrics had detailed tables of "occurrence" (two feasts on the same day) and "concurrence" (the vespers of one feast meeting the first vespers of the next). A feast of higher grade displaced one of lower grade, which was commemorated or transferred. The Lutheran orders keep the principle, but apply it to three practical cases:

- a feast that falls on a Sunday;
- the Annunciation in Holy Week;
- a lesser feast that falls on a Saturday, or in the same week as another.

Their rules show how the ranks of §12.5 were understood: Sunday against feast, feast of Christ against Passiontide, apostle against working week.

12.14.1 A feast on a Sunday

The general rule is that a feast of Christ displaces the Sunday Gospel, while an apostles' day yields to it.

Rostock, Conformitas ceremoniarum, c. 1560 (Sehling 5, p. 288):

> So aber grosse feste auf den sonntag fallen, als weinachten, S. Stephani, S. Joannis evangelistae, den neuen jars, der heiligen könige, purificationis M., annunciationis M., Joannis Baptista, visitationis M. und Michaelis, sol man die evangelia von den festen behalten. […] 7. Wen aber uff den sontage der apostel fest fallen, sol man die sontags evangelia behalten und die evangelia so uff die apostel fest fallen, auf den nachmittage predigen.

But if great feasts fall on the Sunday, as Christmas, St Stephen, St John the Evangelist, New Year's, the Three Kings, the Purification of Mary, the Annunciation of Mary, John the Baptist, the Visitation of Mary and Michaelmas, one shall keep the Gospels of the feasts. […] 7. But when the apostles' feasts fall on the Sunday, one shall keep the Sunday Gospels, and preach the Gospels that fall on the apostles' feasts in the afternoon.

Note. St Stephen and St John count here as "great feasts", as days of Christmas, while the apostles do not.

Mansfeld sets out the apostles' days by the day of the week on which they fall. Mansfeld, Kirchen-agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 240):

> Felt ein apostel tag auf einen sontag, so mag er gehalten werden wie er gefellet, doch das man in den stedten in den kirchen, da man des sontags zwei oder drei mal predigt, auf derselbigen predigt eine, das sontags evangelium auch auslege. Felt ein apostel tag auf einen montag, dienstag, mitwoch, donnerstag, oder freitag, kan man in auf den tag, darauf er gefellet in den stedten, wie es gebreuchlich ist, halten, da es aber breuchlich ist, denselben auf den nechstfolgenden tag, darinne man sonst wochen predigten helt, zuverlegen, da mag es bei solcher gewonheit bleiben. Felt aber ein aposteltag auf einen sonnabend, sol er auf den nechstfolgenden sontag verleget und gehalten werden.

If an apostle's day fall on a Sunday, it may be kept as it falleth; yet so that in the towns, in the churches where there is preaching two or three times on Sunday, the Sunday Gospel also be expounded in one of the same sermons. If an apostle's day fall on a Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday, it may be kept in the towns on the day whereon it falleth, as is customary; but where it is customary to remove it to the next following day whereon the week-day sermons are otherwise held, it may abide by that custom. But if an apostle's day fall on a Saturday, it shall be removed to the next following Sunday, and kept thereon.

Note.

- Wintzingerode. The order (Sehling 2, p. 256) has the same rules. There the apostle's Gospel goes to the Sunday afternoon.
- Thorn 1575. Small feasts falling near a Sunday go to its vespers (§12.5.6).
- Danzig 1612. A small feast falling on a Sunday is rung like a great one (§12.5.6).
- Nördlingen 1579. A local thanksgiving day falling on a Sunday is to be kept "solenniter wie andere hohe festa" (Sehling 12, p. 388).

12.14.2 The Annunciation in Holy Week

The Annunciation (25 March) often falls between Palm Sunday and Low Sunday. The orders count it as a feast of Christ. It cannot simply be dropped, and it may not displace the Passion and Easter. The orders give at least six solutions:

Solution	Orders
The Saturday before Palm Sunday (Palmabend)	Hadersleben 1528; Schleswig-Holstein 1542; Merseburg 1544; Anhalt 1568; Pomerania 1569; Sayn 1582
Palm Sunday itself, in the forenoon	Aschersleben 1575; Schwarzburg 1587; Wintzingerode (only if it falls Wednesday to Saturday, "per anticipationem")
A weekday of the week before Palm Sunday	Waldeck 1556 (Wednesday after Judica); Hoya 1571 and Harlingerland 1573/74 (Thursday after Judica)
The Sunday after Easter ("nach alter gewonheit")	Prussia 1526, 1544 and 1568
Maundy Thursday	Burzenland chapter, 1573 (a proposal of the dean for that year)
Omitted that year	Ysenburg 1582
A convenient day agreed with the neighbouring churches	Thorn 1575

Hadersleben, Artikel, 1528 (Sehling 23, p. 64):

> Wnser frowen vorkundinge dach (unnd wen de up den Gronen Donnersdach valt effte darnha, ßo sal me ohn eintrechticklich up den Sonnavent vor Palmarum holden, sunst sal me ohn nicht transfereren)

Our Lady's Annunciation day (and when it falleth on Maundy Thursday or thereafter, it shall be kept with one accord on the Saturday before Palm Sunday; otherwise it shall not be transferred)

Merseburg, Synodalunterricht, 1544 (Sehling 2, p. 20):

> Mit verlegung aber der fest, das annunciationis Marie, do dis in die marterwoche gefiele, auf den palmabent gelegt wurde. Der andern feste verlegunge solle durch das consistorium bestimbt und idem superattendenten den pfarhern in synodis angezeiget werden.

But as touching the removing of the feasts: that the Annunciation of Mary, if it should fall in the week of the Passion, be laid on the eve of Palm Sunday. The removing of the other feasts shall be determined by the consistory, and shown to the parsons in the synods by the superintendent.

Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 469):

> Wenn de dach der vorkündiginge Marie velt in de stilleweke, idt si weckeren dach idt si, schal men dat fest vorlegen up palmavend unde sölckes am sondage Iudica to vörne affkündigen.

When the day of the Annunciation of Mary falleth in the still week, be it what day it be, one shall lay the feast on the eve of Palm Sunday, and bid the same beforehand on the Sunday Judica.

Wintzingerode (Gericht Bodenstein), Kirchen-Ordnung (Sehling 2, p. 256):

> So das fest annunciationis Mariae in der marterwochen auf einen montag oder dienstag einfellet, so soll es auf dieselbigen gehalten werden. Fellet es aber auf den mittwochen, grünen donnerstag, charfreitag oder oster abent, soll mans (wie es die alten nennen) per anticipationem zurück auf den palm-sontag feiern.

If the feast of the Annunciation of Mary fall in the week of the Passion on a Monday or Tuesday, it shall be kept on the same. But if it fall on the Wednesday, Maundy Thursday, Good Friday or Easter Eve, one shall keep it holy (as the ancients call it) per anticipationem, back upon Palm Sunday.

Note. Per anticipationem is the old term for moving a feast back, before its date. "As the ancients call it" shows that the orders knew they were using the medieval rules of transfer.

Schwarzburg, Ordnung der fest und feiertage, 1587 (Sehling 2, p. 137):

> Wenn aber das fest Adnunciationis, wie bisweil geschicht, in die marter wochen gefiel, soll er auf den sontag palmarum gelegt und vormittag solenniter gehalten, das evangelium aber desselben sontags nachmittag geprediget werden

But if the feast of the Annunciation, as sometimes happeneth, fell in the week of the Passion, it shall be laid on Palm Sunday and kept solemnly in the forenoon, but the Gospel of the same Sunday be preached in the afternoon

Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, p. 272):

> Es soll aber diß fest (ergerliche ungleicheit zue verhuten) mittwochen nach Judica gehaltenn werden, wens auf den palmtag oder in palmwochen fellet, sonst sol es auff den tag, [auf den] es kompt, gehalttenn werdenn

But this feast shall be kept (to avoid offensive inequality) on the Wednesday after Judica, when it falleth on Palm Sunday or in Palm week; otherwise it shall be kept on the day whereon it cometh

Prussia, Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 87):

> Wann der tag Conceptionis Christi oder Annunciationis Mariae auf den palmtag oder in der woche vor ostern oder dieselbige folgende wochen in den ostertagen gefellt, soll er den nechsten sonntag nach ostern gehalten und lauts der vorigen kirchenordenung transferirt werden, damit dieselbige zeit vom einreiten des herrn Christi und sein heiliges leiden sammt der historien der auferstehung unverhindert nach nothdurft müge geprediget werden.

When the day of the Conception of Christ or the Annunciation of Mary falleth on Palm Sunday, or in the week before Easter, or in the same following week in the Easter days, it shall be kept on the next Sunday after Easter, and be transferred according to the former church order; that the same time may be preached, without hindrance and as need requireth, of the riding in of the Lord Christ and his holy Passion, together with the history of the resurrection.

Note. The rule goes back to the Prussian order of 1526 (Sehling 4, p. 38). That order keeps the day after Easter "nach alter gewonheit", after the old custom, which is the medieval practice of transferring the Annunciation to the week after Low Sunday.

In 1573 Easter fell on 22 March, so the Annunciation fell on the Wednesday after Easter. The dean of the Burzenland chapter writes. Burzenland chapter (Transylvania), resolutions of 25 February 1573 (Sehling 24, p. 371):

> 6. In veteri ecclesiae computo festum Annuntiationis Mariae sive Conceptionis Christi assignatum est 25 Martii, qui cadit in diem Mercurii post resuscitatum Christum, ubi alia plura festa concur[...]runt. Si tunc celebraverimus illud, ingluviem et intemperantiam auxerimus in nostratibus. Calendariorum vulgarium huius anni authores retraxerunt in diem sabbathi ante Palmarum. Is dies profanis mercaturis plus quam celebrationi festorum dicatus est. Ego igitur festum illud celebrabo ad feriam 5 ante Pascha, quae dicitur dies Coena Domini.

6. In the old reckoning of the Church the feast of the Annunciation of Mary, or Conception of Christ, is assigned to the 25th of March, which falleth on the Wednesday after Christ's rising again, when several other feasts concur. If we celebrate it then, we shall increase gluttony and intemperance among our people. The makers of the common calendars of this year have drawn it back to the Saturday before Palm Sunday. That day is more given to profane marketing than to the celebration of feasts. I will therefore celebrate that feast on the fifth day before Easter, which is called the day of the Lord's Supper.

The Thorn order admits that practice varies. Thorn, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 4, pp. 239–240):

> Weil es aber mit erwehlung eines bequemen tages nicht in allen orten gleichförmig gehalten wird, wie in denen alten und neuen kirchenordnungen zusehen, so ist es am sichersten, auch am bequemsten, dass man sich mit denen um und nahe gelegenen kirchen und städten vergleiche, das fest mii ihnen auf einen tag zuhalten, ob sie gleich nicht [...] alle in der religion mit uns zustimmen, damit nur der schwachen etlicher massen wahrgenommen werde.

But because in the choosing of a convenient day it is not held alike in all places, as is to be seen in the old and new church orders, it is surest and also most convenient that one agree with the churches and towns lying round about and near, to keep the feast with them on one day, though they do not [...] all agree with us in religion; only that the weak may in some measure be cared for.

12.14.3 Saturdays, harvests and two feasts in one week

Henneberg gives a rule for the "common feasts" of the second rank. Henneberg, Kirchenordnung, 1582 (Sehling 2, p. 313):

> Wenn aber ein gemein fest auf einen sontag gefiele, sol desselbigen sontags verordnetes evangelium fort geprediget, das fest verkündiget, und, das auf nechstfolgenden mitwochen die historien oder fests evangelium zu predigen verlegt sei, dem volk angezeigt werden. So aber zwei oder mehr gemeine fest in eine wochen fielen, sol das erste auf den tag, darauf es gefellt, gehalten, des andern fests historia oder evangelium aber auf den folgenden mittwoch der andern wochen ordentlich gehandelt, und solches gleichwol allwege auf den sontag zuvor verkündiget werden.

But if a common feast should fall on a Sunday, the Gospel appointed for the same Sunday shall be preached as usual, the feast proclaimed, and it shall be shewn to the people that the history or Gospel of the feast is removed to be preached on the next following Wednesday. But if two or more common feasts fall in one week, the first shall be kept on the day whereon it falleth; but the history or Gospel of the other shall be orderly handled on the following Wednesday of the next week; and this nevertheless shall always be proclaimed on the Sunday before.

Aschersleben, Kirchen-Agenda, 1575 (Sehling 2, p. 479):

> Wan aber das fest auf einen sonnabent felt, so wird es vorlegt bis auf den sontag nachmittage. Weil auch der tag Jacobi apostoli in der ernten kompt, pflegt man das fest, wan es auf einen freitag oder sonnabent gefelt, auf den nechsten sontag darnach nachmittage zuhandeln.

But when the feast falleth on a Saturday, it is removed until the Sunday afternoon. Also, because the day of James the apostle cometh in the harvest, it is the custom, when it falleth on a Friday or Saturday, to handle the feast on the next Sunday after, in the afternoon.

In Schwarzburg apostles' days are not moved, except from a Saturday. Schwarzburg, Ordnung der fest und feiertage, 1587 (Sehling 2, p. 137):

> die festa der aposteln, sollen ohne unterlassung und ohne einige vorlegung auf den tag, do sie gefallen, feierlich gehalten werden, vormittag dan auch die orgeln, wo man sie hat, gebraucht werden sollen [...] doch wan ein solch apostel fest auf einen sonnabend gefellet, soll es den sonntag hernach zur vesper volgen und gehalten werden the feasts of the apostles shall be kept solemnly, without omission and without any removing, on the day whereon they fall; in the forenoon also the organs, where there be any, shall be used [...] yet when such an apostle's feast falleth on a Saturday, it shall follow on the Sunday after, at vespers, and be kept then

12.14.4 Moving not allowed

Against these rules for moving feasts, several orders forbid pastors to move feasts on their own authority, whether for markets or to save themselves work.

Salzwedel (Altstadt), Visitations-Abschied, 1579 (Sehling 3, p. 275):

> darum verordenen die visitatores, das der pfarherr und caplene allhie die festage, an den tagen, daran sie gefallen, inhalts der kirchen und visitationordenunge christlich und solemniter halten und nicht nach ihren gefallen verschieben oder verlegen, noch einige fest auslassen sollen, ungeachtet, do die gleich auf die marktage gefielen therefore the visitors ordain that the parson and chaplains here shall keep the feast days on the days whereon they fall, according to the church and visitation orders, in Christian manner and solemnly, and not put them off or remove them at their pleasure, nor leave out any feast, notwithstanding they should fall on the market days

Sayn, Kirchenordnung, 1590 (Sehling 19/1, p. 389):

> Es soll auch kein Pfarrherr Macht haben, dieselbige Fest oder Feyertage zuverlegen auff andere Tag, sondern sich genügen lassen zu feyren auff die Tag, darauff sie fallen, damit kein Ungleichheit gehalten werde zum Ergerniß und Nachrede, etc.

Neither shall any parson have power to remove the same feasts or holy days to other days, but he shall content himself to keep them holy on the days whereon they fall, that no inequality be held, to offence and evil report, etc.

The Kosd and Schelken statutes continue after the sentence quoted in §12.3.7. Kosd and Schelken chapters (Transylvania), statutes, 1577 (Sehling 24, p. 400):

> Si quis vero in gratiam suorum colonorum aliquem diem festum celebraverit, qui in cathalogo festorum non est, aut festum in alium diem celebrandum reiecerit, poena capituli punietur

But if any, to please his peasants, shall have celebrated any feast day which is not in the catalogue of feasts, or shall have put off a feast to be celebrated on another day, he shall be punished with the chapter's penalty

12.15 The short calendars: Upper German towns and the Reformed

At the other end from the conservative lists of §12.5.7 stand the orders that kept only Sunday and a handful of high feasts. In these the question of rank hardly arises: there is Sunday, and there are the few feasts of Christ that remain. They are mostly Upper German cities under Zwinglian or Bucerian influence (Reformed or Moderate Reformed), and later Reformed territories. Their history shows how unstable the minimum was.

Mülhausen's first step (Reformed) keeps four "high-tides" with the Marian feasts and the apostles, and abolishes the local and lesser days. Among them is "der achtest Sannt Steffans", the octave of St Stephen, the only octave named in any list of abolished feasts. Mülhausen (Alsace), council decree on processions and holy days, 1524 (Reformed; Sehling 20/2, p. 196):

> Das unnd anders angesehen, ist geordent, das man hinfur den heiligen Sonntag vorab unnd darzu die hohen fest: die vier hochzitt, Unnser lieben frawen unnd der appostel tag eeren unnd began sol, wie ge[…]wonheit ist. Aber dise nachbestimpten tag, mit namen: der Kindlin tag, der achtest Sannt Steffans, Marcus, die zwen heilig crutztag, keyser Heinrich […] Magdalena, Sant Steffan im Ougsten, Laurentius, kalte kilby, Gallus, Lucas, Katherina, Nicolaus, Ostermitwoch unnd Pfingstmitwoch, die alle sollen hinfur nit mer gebotten werden zu feyren noch fur feyrtag gehalten; aber nütdestminder sollen deren gedechtnuß uff yedes tag in der kilchen beganngen werden, vorab mit verkhundung des gotsworts unnd darnach mit den emptern der meß, wie gewonheit ist

This and other things considered, it is ordained that henceforth men shall honour and keep first the holy Sunday, and thereto the high feasts, the four high-tides, our dear Lady's days and the apostles' days, as the custom is. But these days hereafter appointed, by name: the Children's day, the eighth day of St Stephen, Mark, the two holy Cross days, the Emperor Henry […] Magdalene, St Stephen in August, Laurence, the cold church-hallowing, Gallus, Luke, Catherine, Nicholas, Easter Wednesday and Whitsun Wednesday: these shall all henceforth be no more commanded to be kept holy, nor held for holy days; but nevertheless their memory shall be kept on each day in the church, first with the proclaiming of God's Word and thereafter with the offices of the mass, as the custom is

Note. The "cold church-hallowing" (kalte kilby) is the dedication feast of Basel Minster, 11 October. The "four high-tides" at Mülhausen are Christmas, Easter, Ascension and Pentecost (see the next quotation).

Five years later Mülhausen adopted the Basel order (both Reformed). Mülhausen, opinion on the Basel and Strasbourg orders, 1529 (Reformed; Sehling 20/2, pp. 214–215):

> Item mit den feyertagen sols noch Baßler ordnung gehalten werden, die nit meer dann den Winachsdag, den Uffart-, den Ostertag und Pfingstag mit […] sampt den Sontagen zu fyren verordnet haben.

Item, with the holy days it shall be kept after the Basel order, which hath ordained to keep holy no more than Christmas day, Ascension day, Easter day and Whitsunday, together with the Sundays.

Augsburg, Feiertagsordnung of the council, 22 July 1537 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 12, p. 84):

> so hat ein rat derhalben angesehen und erkennet, das furohin allein die sonntäg - und alle abent der sambstäg um drei ur nach mittem tag anzufahen desgleichen der Christag, Ostertag und Pfingstag (ußerhalb einiger nachfeir), […] dazu der Neujarstag, der tag der Auffart Christi und der tag der Verkundigung Mariä gefeiret werden, dardurch alle und jede andere feirtag alhie, keinen ausgenommen, hiemit aufgehebt sein sollen, also das meniglich an allen und jeden andern tagen außerhalb der obbemelten feirtäg wol arbeiten und in schwais des angesichts die narung suchen mag.

therefore the council hath considered and resolved that henceforth only the Sundays (and every Saturday evening, to begin at three of the clock after midday), likewise Christmas day, Easter day and Whitsunday (without any after-holiday), […] thereto New Year's day, the day of the Ascension of Christ and the day of the Annunciation of Mary, be kept holy; whereby all and every other holy day here, none excepted, shall hereby be taken away, so that every man may on all and every other day, beside the holy days aforesaid, well work and seek his living in the sweat of his face.

Note. "ußerhalb einiger nachfeir", "without any after-holiday", abolishes the second and third days of the great feasts. The Saturday evening, from three o'clock, is treated as part of the Sunday.

The Esslingen council (Moderate Reformed) first abolished everything but Sunday and Christmas (22a), then brought the apostles' days back (22b). Esslingen, council decrees of 1537 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, pp. 389–390):

> Dweil aber ein ersamer rath vermerckt, das an solichen feirtagen das gemein volck meher zu offen zechen unnd anderer leichtfertigung dann zuverkhindung des gotlichen worts geneigt, damit dann solich ubel, so uß dem miessiggang entsteen, abgestelt und ain jeder zu theglicher arbeit getzogen, hat ein ersamer rath alle feirtag ausserhalb das deß heiligen sontags unnd weihenacht tag gentzlich abgeschafft und will, das der selbigen khainer meher gefeirt, besonder ain jeder sich an solichen tagen zu seiner teglichen arbeit geschickt mache. […] und aber yetzo augenscheinlichen befunden, das, gleich so wol uff die gute montag allso hievor uff die feirtag geschehen, alle fillerei unnd unzucht, sonderlich bey dem jungen folck jern fürganng haben, aber allein dem hailsamen Gottes wort kein zeit noch weil gegebenn werden mag […] so thut ir ersam […] weißhait auß disen hievor erzellten unnd anndern mehr beweglichen

> ursachenn ordnen und will, das hinfiro nebenn denn gepannen sontägen der hailligen apostel tag widerumb gefeirt und an denselben das Gottes wort verkhint unnd gehört werde

But forasmuch as an honourable council perceiveth that on such holy days the common people are more given to open carousing and other lightness than to the preaching of the divine Word; that such evil, which ariseth out of idleness, may be put down, and every man drawn to his daily work, an honourable council hath wholly done away all holy days, beside the holy Sunday and Christmas day, and willeth that none of the same be kept holy any more, but that every man betake himself on such days to his daily work. […] and now it is found plainly that on the "good Mondays", even as heretofore on the holy days, all drunkenness and unchastity have their course, especially among the young folk, while no time nor leisure can be given to the wholesome Word of God alone […] therefore their honourable wisdom, for these causes aforesaid and more other weighty causes, ordaineth and willeth that henceforth, beside the commanded Sundays, the holy apostles' days be kept holy again, and God's Word be preached and heard thereon

Note. The "gute Montage" were the "blue Mondays" that craftsmen took off. The Esslingen council learned that abolishing holy days did not abolish holidays, and restored the apostles' days in order to have days for preaching.

At Strasbourg (1544, Moderate Reformed) only Sunday is a holy day in the city. The saints are remembered in the sermon, and the countryside may keep its half and whole days. Strasbourg, synodal decrees, 1544 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, pp. 342–343):

> Weil inn der stat allein der Sonnetag gefeiret würt, sollen die prediger das volck offt und mit allem ernst ver-[…]manen, das sie solche feyre dem Herren gentzlich heiligen. Sollen auch auff die selbigen, wann inn der wochen die tag fallen, auff […] welche man sunst der fürnemen werck Gottes, so er an seinem lieben son oder auch den apostolen und martyren gewürcket, gedechtnüssen und feire haltet, solcher gedechtnüssen, historien, wan man die inn der Schrifft oder sunst inn bewerten bücheren hat, dem volck fürtragen […] Wa aber auff dem land solche gedechtnüssen noch ire feire den gantzen oder halben tag haben, da solle man sie christlich behalten.

Because in the city only the Sunday is kept holy, the preachers shall oft and with all earnestness exhort the people that they hallow such rest wholly unto the Lord. They shall also on the same [Sundays], when the days fall in the week whereon otherwise memorials and holy days are kept of the chief works of God which he hath wrought in his dear Son, or also in the apostles and martyrs, set forth to the people the memorials and histories of the same, when they are had in the Scripture or else in approved books […] But where in the country such memorials still have their holy day, the whole or the half day, there they shall be kept in Christian wise.

The Nassau-Dillenburg order after the county turned Reformed. Nassau-Dillenburg (Reformed), Kirchenordnung, 1582 (Sehling 10, p. 163):

> 48. Omnia festa sanctorum et abusus feriarum abrogentur et soli Dominici dies atque festa Christi retineantur.

48. Let all feasts of the saints and the abuses of holy days be abrogated, and let the Lord's days only and the feasts of Christ be retained.

Note. The same county's Lutheran order of 1537 had kept Corpus Christi, the Assumption and the Nativity of Mary (§12.5.7, §12.8.9).

The Palatine order of 1556 had followed Württemberg (§12.5.3). Its Reformed successor keeps only the three great feasts, New Year and Ascension. Kurpfalz (Reformed), Kirchenordnung, 1563 (Sehling 14, p. 397):

> Ordnung der feiertägen. An den feyertagen soll es gehalten werden wie am Sontag. Diese feyertag aber sollen gehalten werden: Alle Sontag. Der Christag sampt dem nechsten tag hernach. Der Jarßtag. Der Ostertag sampt dem nechsten tag hernach. Die Himelfahrt Christi. Der Pfingstag sampt volgendem Montag hernach.

Order of the holy days. On the holy days it shall be done as on Sunday. But these holy days shall be kept: all Sundays; Christmas day with the next day after; New Year's day; Easter day with the next day after; the Ascension of Christ; Whitsunday with the Monday following after.

Note. The editor notes that the 1556 order "hatte noch zusätzlich: Epiphanias, die Marien- und Aposteltage, Johannis Baptistae und Michaelis": it still had Epiphany, the Marian and apostles' days, John the Baptist and Michaelmas.

When Anhalt turned Reformed, the prince ordered a new agenda on the Palatine model. Anhalt, Prince Johann Georg to the superintendent, 4 March 1599 (Reformed; Sehling 2, p. 535):

> eine algemeine agenda dieses fursten thums kirchen, auf und nach der pfälzischen gerichtet und derselben gleichförmig, zuvorfassen, und dass in derselben der apostel und andere festa eingestellet, und in den dreien haubt festen mehr nicht dann zwene tage gefeiert, der dritte aber gar abgeschaffet to draw up a general agenda for the churches of this principality, directed upon and after the Palatine one and conformable to the same; and that therein the apostles' and other feasts be discontinued, and in the three chief feasts no more than two days be kept holy, but the third be wholly abolished

Note. With these reductions, the ranking of §12.5 falls back to the two ranks of Luther's Formula missae: Sunday and the feasts of the Lord.

Chapter 13. Extraordinary Rites

This chapter covers the occasional and extraordinary rites of the church in the evangelical church orders of the sixteenth century, as printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts. It asks, for each rite:

- Was it kept, recast or abolished? Which medieval sacraments, consecrations and blessings survived in an evangelical form, and on what grounds were the others given up?
- What was the full liturgy? Where an order prints a form, what is its order of service, and what are its formulas, vows and prayers?
- How did the orders differ? How do the Lutheran, Upper German and Reformed forms compare, and which orders copied which?
- Who performed it, and where? The pastor, the superintendent, the consistory, the elders or the congregation; in the church, at the font, at the altar, in the house or at the grave.

How the chapter is laid out.

- §13.1 summarizes the findings, and §13.2 sets out the scope, sources and method.
- §§13.3–13.9 deal with the sacramental acts and the rites of life and death:
  - §13.3, baptism;
  - §13.4, exorcism;
  - §13.5, churching;
  - §13.6, confirmation;
  - §13.7, marriage, with betrothal, its dissolution, divorce and annulment;
  - §13.8, the sick (including extreme unction), the dying, the condemned and the possessed;
  - §13.9, funerals and burial.
- §§13.10–13.13 deal with offices:
  - §13.10, ordination;
  - §13.11, installation of pastors, superintendents, abbots and bishops;
  - §13.12, minor orders, lay offices, church workers, and the religious (sick-women, nuns, convent heads, monks and novices);
  - §13.13, magistrates and civil offices.
- §13.14 covers the dedication of churches and the Kirchweih, and §13.15 the blessings of objects and their abolition.
- §13.16 covers the ban, excommunication, public penance and the restoration of the penitent, and §13.17 private confession and absolution.
- §13.18 covers processions, and §13.19 the tonsure, the return of churches and vessels to common use, and the deposition of ministers.
- §13.20 covers sorcery and the cleansing of houses, churches and things.
- §13.21 covers the Litany, the suffrages and the Good Friday solemn prayers at the Mass and in the services that stood in for it.
- §13.22 covers other occasional rites, chiefly the parish visitation.
- §13.23 covers the rites of particular feasts and seasons: Christmas, Candlemas, Ash Wednesday, Palm Sunday, Holy Week, Easter, Ascension, Whitsun, Septuagesima and Trinity.
- §13.24 is a table by order, and §13.25 a concordance of every order quoted.

Each topic is supported by quotations in the original language (Early New High German, Low German or Latin), each followed by an English translation.

13.1 Summary of findings

13.1.1 The main findings

1. The sacraments: one rite kept whole, the rest reduced to Word and prayer. Baptism was the rite the orders printed most often and most fully (§13.3). Of the other medieval sacraments, none survived as a sacrament, but all left an evangelical rite in their place:

- Confirmation became a catechetical examination with prayer and, in many orders, the laying on of hands (§13.6).
- Marriage became a "worldly business" blessed by the church (§13.7).
- Ordination became a call, examination, prayer and the laying on of hands (§13.10).
- Penance became private confession and absolution, without enumeration of sins (§13.17), and, for open sinners, public penance and absolution (§13.16).
- Extreme unction was abolished as without command; the orders read James 5 as the elders' prayer and replaced the oil with the Word, absolution and communion of the sick (§13.8.1).

2. Baptism fell into four families (§13.3):

- the received rite in German (Luther 1523, Nuremberg and Strasbourg 1524 (Moderate Reformed), Ansbach 1526, Brandenburg 1540);
- Luther's revised Taufbüchlein of 1526, the Lutheran standard;
- the Upper German rite of Strasbourg (Moderate Reformed) and Württemberg (Lutheran), without exorcism or cross;
- the Reformed rite of the Palatinate and the stranger churches, which forbade emergency baptism by women.

Salt, spittle, oil, the candle and the font blessing went almost everywhere. The chrism was kept only in Electoral Brandenburg 1540 and Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 (§§13.3.2, 13.15.4).

3. Exorcism became the confessional marker (§13.4). The Lutheran orders kept Luther's shortened exorcism, glossed as a prayer and confession of original sin. The Upper German orders never had it after the 1520s. From the 1560s the Philippist and Reformed territories abolished it by mandate, and some Lutheran ones tolerated or softened it.

4. No chrismation, no consecrations, no blessings of things. No order:

- anoints at confirmation (§13.6);
- consecrates a bishop with a separate rite (§13.11.4);
- consecrates a church, altar or churchyard (§13.14);
- blesses water, salt, candles, ashes, palms, fire, the font, Fladen, herbs, wine or bells (§13.15).

The abolition lists run in nearly the same words from 1524 to the 1590s. Their grounds are that creatures are sanctified by God's word and by thanksgiving, that no command or promise of God stands behind the blessing, and that the blessed objects had become means of superstition.

5. Churching survived in some places as thanksgiving (§13.5). Many orders abolished the "leading in" of the mother after childbirth. Others kept her first churchgoing as a thanksgiving with prayer, and a few printed a form.

6. The rites of the sick replaced unction with Word and Sacrament (§13.8). The reserved sacrament and its procession were abolished, and communion was given in the house. Only the Ansbach diet of 1526 still kept leftovers in the sacrament house; the later orders count the communicants and have the minister or communicants consume what remains (§§13.22.3, 13.22.5). No order keeps the Mass of the Presanctified: on Good Friday there was a full communion or none (§13.22.4). Forms were written for the dying, the plague-stricken and the condemned. Pomerania 1569 gave a rite of prayer over the possessed in place of exorcism.

7. Funerals became a testimony of faith (§13.9). Vigils, soul-Masses and the Masses of the seventh and thirtieth day were abolished. Burial with procession, hymns, bells and, later, a sermon was kept as the church's witness to the resurrection, and it could therefore be refused to the impenitent and the excommunicate.

8. Ordination was kept, mostly on the Wittenberg pattern (§13.10). The Wittenberg pattern was a public call, examination, prayer, laying on of hands by the ministers and a charge. In Saxony it was given centrally at Wittenberg or Leipzig; in Hesse, Lippe and many later orders it was given in the candidate's own parish, joined to his installation. The vesting, the anointing of the hands and the delivery of chalice and paten were dropped. Installation (Investitur) of a pastor in his parish was a separate rite, led by the superintendent (§13.11).

9. Lay offices were filled by oath, pledge or election, not by rite (§13.12). Laying on of hands for elders and deacons is found only in Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed), the London church and the Palatinate 1592 (both Reformed). Sextons, schoolmasters, churchwardens and midwives were bound by pledge or oath. The sexton was also the sacristan; no order has a separate sacristan or an altar guild. No order ordains or blesses a deaconess. Sick-women and beguines who nursed the sick were appointed by the council and examined or instructed by the pastor.

10. Nuns were received with an evangelical rite; monks were not (§§13.12.7–13.12.10). Keppel 1570 prints the one evangelical clothing of a nun. It consists of questions to parents, domina and candidate, an oath with the hand on the breast, a sermon, the clothing in the sacristy, Veni Sancte Spiritus, an exhortation that the vows earn nothing and the convent is "no prison" but a school, and the Te Deum. Abbesses, prioresses and dominae were elected and swore oaths of office. No order admits a monk by profession: monasteries kept as schools received novices as scholars without vows. Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel 1569 supplies the words with which a sister laid aside her cowl and crown, since baptism is the true clothing.

11. Magistrates had no rite (§13.13). The orders give the council-election sermon, the intercession for the magistrate and the clergy's place in the oath of homage, but no coronation or installation.

12. The ban was rebuilt on Matthew 18 (§13.16). The lesser ban (exclusion from the Sacrament) was distinguished from the greater ban (public exclusion and "delivering to Satan"). The Lutheran territories gave the decision to the consistory. Wittenberg 1542, Mecklenburg 1570, Mansfeld 1580 and Saxe-Lauenburg 1585 print full forms of excommunication, public penance and absolution. The Reformed gave the decision to the congregation through its elders; Micron's London order prints a full liturgy of excision and readmission.

13. Betrothal and divorce came under the church's eye (§§13.7.8–13.7.10). Secret betrothals were made void; the pastor examined the betrothed before the banns (at Wertheim he presided at the betrothal itself); only the consistory could release a betrothed person or declare a spouse free after adultery or desertion; annulment was a declaration that no marriage had existed; and the innocent party's remarriage was quiet, without banns or pomp.

14. The marks of the sacred state were dropped without rites of their own (§§13.18–13.19). The processions with the sacrament, relics and holy water went, except in Electoral Brandenburg, which kept the Sunday, Palm Sunday and Rogation processions in a purified form. The processions that remained were led by a cross carried by a schoolboy or the sexton, then the singing schoolboys, then the clergy in surplices, then the people. No order puts a bishop, a deacon or any minor order in a procession, or has a thurible, torches, banner, canopy, crosier or Gospel book carried (§13.18.4). The tonsure was abolished and forbidden to the remaining old-believing clergy. Churches, altars and vessels were cleared out by authority and their goods turned to the common chest, without a rite of deconsecration. Unworthy ministers were deposed by a sentence read to the congregation, not degraded.

15. Sorcery: no rite of cleansing (§13.20). No order exorcizes, sprinkles or reconsecrates a house, a church or a thing that sorcery or the devil had touched. The holy water, salt, herbs and candles of the old cleansing were themselves called sorcery and "the devil's doctrines" (Braunschweig 1528). What the orders prescribe instead:

- Prayer. Mecklenburg 1540 and Pomerania 1542 bless the sick man's house with a prayer that God drive out "all spooks, ghosts and power of the devil".
- Burning. The tools of sorcery were burned in public: the charms, the written blessings, the blessed and bewitched things and the sorcerers' books (Württemberg 1552, Hohenlohe 1558 and 1588, Castell 1579). Worshipped images were broken and burned (Mecklenburg 1552, Sponheim 1566).
- Guarding. The baptismal water was poured away at once, so that no sorcerer could have it.
- Repentance. Those who had sought out charmers asked pardon before the congregation and were absolved, or were kept from the Supper.

16. The Litany replaced the Mass without communicants, and the solemn prayers survived once (§13.21). Luther's German and Latin Litanies, without the saints, were sung:

- in place of the Supper when no one communed (Mecklenburg 1552, Pfalz-Neuburg 1543, Grubenhagen 1544, which calls it the old "prayer-Mass");
- between epistle and gospel, during a long communion, or after the sermon, by boys kneeling before the altar or by the pastor from the pulpit;
- on Wednesdays and Fridays, in Rogation week and at the Ember seasons.

Zweibrücken (1533) and Pfalz-Veldenz (1574) tied it to the Christmas, Easter and Whitsun weeks, and Schwäbisch Hall (1543) and Limpurg (1610) to Good Friday. Only Waldeck (1556) prints the Good Friday solemn prayers: eleven German biddings, each with a collect, without Flectamus genua, the pope or the pagans, and with new prayers for persecutors, false Christians and enemies. No order has a Litany at the Easter Vigil.

17. The rites of the feasts were reduced to their history (§13.23). No order keeps the Exsultet, the new fire, the paschal candle, the ashes or the Christmas Kalenda. Electoral Brandenburg 1540 alone kept the Palm Sunday procession, the Maundy Thursday foot-washing and the representations of Christ's burial and resurrection. Christmas and Easter Matins were moved from midnight to the morning, and the Good Friday solemn prayers survived at Mülhausen (Reformed) and Waldeck. No order buries the Alleluia at Septuagesima ("the Alleluia is the perpetual voice of the church", Luther), but several make the Athanasian Creed the text of Trinity Sunday.

13.2 Scope, sources and method

13.2.1 The corpus and the rites covered

The corpus. The corpus is Sehling's edition, volumes 1–24, as held in `eko.db`. This chapter quotes the sixteenth- and early seventeenth-century texts; the editors' introductions and notes are cited as such where they matter.

The rites covered. "Extraordinary" here means every rite outside the ordinary Sunday and weekday services, what German liturgics calls the Kasualien and the episcopal acts. The chapter covers:

- the sacramental acts: baptism, exorcism, confirmation, marriage (with betrothal, its dissolution, divorce and annulment), private confession and absolution, extreme unction;
- the rites of passage around birth, sickness and death: churching, the visitation of the sick, funerals and burial;
- the acts of the ministry: ordination, installation of pastors and prelates, the consecration of bishops;
- the lay offices: elders, deacons, sextons, schoolmasters, cantors, churchwardens, midwives;
- civil offices: magistrates and oaths of homage;
- consecrations and blessings: churches, churchyards, altars, chrism, water, candles, palms, bells, wreaths;
- discipline: the lesser and greater ban, excommunication, public penance and the restoration of the penitent, the deposition of ministers;
- marks of the clerical and sacred state: the tonsure, the deconsecration of churches and vessels;
- processions;
- what was done with houses, churches and things that sorcery or the devil had touched;
- other occasional services, such as the parish visitation.

Full liturgies and summaries. Where an order prints a full rite, the chapter gives its order of service step by step and quotes its central texts: the formula of baptism, the vows, the prayers, the formula at the laying on of hands, the sentence of excommunication. Where many orders repeat one form, the chapter quotes the principal witness and lists the others. Where an order only mentions or abolishes a rite, the chapter summarizes it with a citation.

13.2.3 Cautions

- Record headings and dates in the database. A database record often holds more than one order, and its year field can be wrong. In this chapter every order is named from the running head of the page on which the quotation stands. Some examples:
  - The Henneberg record dated 1555 holds the Kirchenordnung of Georg Ernst of 1582 and a consistory report of 1635.
  - The record for Müntzer's Allstedt text (Radical Reformation) is filed with the Saxon visitation of 1533.
  - The Grubenhagen order of 1581 is dated "1506" in the database.
  - The Solms record dated 1603 holds the discipline orders of 1582, 1584 and 1594.
  - The Danzig church order of 1612 stands in a record headed with the Danzig order of 1557.
  - The Schwäbisch Hall Kirchenordnung of 1543/1615 is split across records whose headings are taken from stray lines of the text ("Psalm oder ein Bußpsalm …", dated 1614).

- Summaries by the editor. Some rites survive only in Sehling's summary of a manuscript, such as the Merseburg ordination draft of 1545 (§13.10.3). These are marked as the editor's.
- What the orders do not print. The orders print what the church controlled. Civil oaths, coronations and the installation of magistrates were matters for the territorial and town constitutions and are mostly absent (§13.13). A missing rite is not proof that nothing was done.

13.3 Baptism

The orders print more baptismal forms than forms for any other rite. They fall into four families, and nearly every form in the corpus can be placed in one of them:

- The received rite in German. These are translations of the Latin ordo baptismi with nearly all its ceremonies: Luther's Taufbüchlein of 1523, Nuremberg 1524, the Strasbourg German baptism of 1524 (Moderate Reformed) and the Ansbach "Würzburg rubrics" of 1526. Electoral Brandenburg in 1540 kept most of these ceremonies.
- Luther's revised Taufbüchlein of 1526. This keeps the exorcism, the sign of the cross, the Flood prayer, the Gospel of the children, the renunciation and the threefold creed. It drops salt, spittle, oil, chrism and candle. It was taken into most Lutheran orders, often with an exhortation added before it and an address to the godparents after it.
- The Upper German rite. This is Strasbourg after 1525 (Moderate Reformed), Württemberg in 1536 and 1553 (Lutheran) and their many dependants. It has no exorcism and no sign of the cross. It is built from teaching, prayer, the Gospel and the creed, and the child is baptized by pouring.
- The Reformed rite. This is the Palatinate in 1563, the London strangers' church and the Lower Rhine. It is a covenant exhortation, a recast Flood prayer, the Lord's Prayer and the creed, a question to the parents, pouring and a thanksgiving. Emergency baptism by women is forbidden.

Exorcism, the point on which the families divided most sharply, is treated on its own in §13.4.

13.3.1 What God instituted and what men added

The orders sort the ceremonies of baptism by one test: what Christ commanded, and what was added by human beings. What was added is then judged by whether it is free, useful or superstitious. Brandenburg-Nürnberg in 1533 states the test most clearly. Prayer, the Gospel and godparents are kept. The blessing of the font, oil, salt and spittle ("kot") are dropped. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 174):

> Nun hat Gott die tauf selbs eingesetzt und geordent, das man taufen soll mit wasser im namen des Vaters und des Suns und des Heiligen Gaists. So haben die menschen darzu getan aus aigner bewegung gebet, evangelion, gevattern, westerhembd, taufsegnen, öl, salz und kot etc. […] Das man nun gebet darbei spricht. und das heilig evangelion liset, ist nicht allein frei, sunder auch nütz und gut. Darumb soll mans lassen bleiben. Desgleichen auch die gevattern […] Aber das taufsegnen, öl, salz und kot verdunkeln mer die wesenlichen stück der tauf; dann sie fürdern und dienen nur zu aberglauben.

Now God hath Himself instituted and ordained baptism, that one shall baptize with water in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. To this men have added of their own motion prayer, gospel, godparents, chrisom-robe, the blessing of the font, oil, salt and spittle, etc. […] Now that prayer be spoken withal, and the holy gospel read, is not only free, but also profitable and good. Therefore shall it be let remain. Likewise also the godparents […] But the blessing of the font, oil, salt and spittle darken rather the essential parts of baptism; for they further and serve only superstition.

Luther had made the same distinction in the epilogue to the Taufbüchlein, printed with both versions. The outward ceremonies are "the least" part of baptism. What matters is that the godparents stand in faith, hear the Word and pray in earnest. Luther, Das taufbuchlin verdeutscht, 1523, epilogue (Sehling 1, p. 20):

> So gedenke nu, das in dem teufen disse eusserliche stücke das geringste sind, als da ist, unter augen blasen, creuze an streichen, salz in den mund geben, speichel und kot in die oren und nasen thun, mit öle auf der brust und schuldern salben, und mit chresem die scheitel bestreichen, westerhemd anzihen, und brennend kerzen in die hend geben, und was das mehr ist, das von menschen die tauf zu zieren hinzu gethan ist. Denn auch wol on solchs alles die taufe geschehen mag, und nicht die • rechte griffe sind, die der teufel scheuet oder fleucht.

So consider now, that in baptizing these outward pieces are the least, as namely to breathe under the eyes, to sign with crosses, to put salt in the mouth, to put spittle and clay in the ears and nose, to anoint with oil on the breast and shoulders, and to smear the crown with chrism, to put on the chrisom-robe, and to give burning candles in the hand, and whatsoever more there is that hath been added by men to adorn baptism. For baptism may well be done without all such, and they are not the right grips that the devil feareth or fleeth.

13.3.2 The received rite: Luther's Taufbüchlein of 1523

Luther's first German baptismal book translated the Wittenberg form of the Latin rite almost whole. Its order can stand for all the early German translations. Nuremberg in 1524, Strasbourg in 1524 (Moderate Reformed) and Ansbach in 1526 differ from it only in detail. Sehling 1, pp. 18–20:

1. Exsufflation and first exorcism. The minister breathes three times under the child's eyes: "Far aus, du unreiner geist, und gib raum dem heiligen geist" ("Depart, thou unclean spirit, and give place to the Holy Ghost").
2. Sign of the cross on forehead and breast.
3. Two prayers. The first is "O almechtiger ewiger gott … Du woltist sehen auf diesen N." ("O almighty everlasting God … look upon this N."). The second is "O gott, du unsterblicher trost aller die was fodern" ("O God, the immortal comfort of all that ask aught").
4. Salt is put in the mouth: "Nim N. das salz der weisheit" ("Take, N., the salt of wisdom").
5. The Flood prayer (Sintflutgebet), Luther's own composition (quoted in full in §13.3.3).
6. Two exorcisms. The first is "Darumb, du leidiger teufel, erkenne dein urteil" ("Therefore, thou wretched devil, acknowledge thy sentence"). The second is "Ich beschwere dich, du unreiner geist" ("I adjure thee, thou unclean spirit").
7. A prayer for enlightenment: "Herr heiliger vater, almechtiger ewiger got, von dem alle liecht der warheit komt" ("O Lord, holy Father, almighty everlasting God, from whom cometh all light of truth").
8. The Gospel of the children, Mark 10:13–16, with the greeting.
9. The Lord's Prayer, the priest laying his hands on the child's head and kneeling with the godparents.
10. The Ephphatha. Spittle is touched to the ears and nose, the child is led into the church, and the minister says "The Lord preserve thy going in and thy coming out".
11. Renunciation and creed. The threefold renunciation, then the threefold creed in question and answer.
12. Anointing with oil on the breast and between the shoulders.
13. The question and the baptism. "Wilt thou be baptized?", then immersion in the font with the Trinitarian formula.
14. Chrism on the crown, with the blessing "Der allmechtige got und vater unsers herrn Jhesu Christi, der dich ander weit geporn hatt" ("The almighty God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten thee again").
15. The white robe and the candle. The hood or chrisom-robe is put on, and a burning candle is given into the hand.

The ceremonies after the Gospel, which Luther dropped three years later, read as follows. Luther, Das taufbuchlin verdeutscht, 1523 (Sehling 1, pp. 19–20):

> Darnach neme er mit dem finger speichel und rüre da mit das rechte ohr und sprech: Ephthah, das ist, thu dich auf. Zu der nasen und zum lincken ore: Du teufel aber fleuch, denn gotis gericht komt herbei. […] Darnach salbe er das kind mit heiligem öle auf der brust und zwischen den schuldern und sprech: Und ich salbe dich mit heilsamen ole in Jhesu Christo unserm herrn. Und frage: willtu getauft sein ? Antwort. Ja. Da neme er das kind und tauche es in die taufe, und sprech: Und ich teufe dich im namen des vaters und des sons und des heiligen geists. Denn sollen die paten das kindlin halten in der taufe, und der priester mache ihm ein creuz mit dem öle auf der scheitel […] Nim das weisse, heilige und unbefleckts kleid, das du on flecken bringen solt fur den richtstuel Christi, das du das ewige leben habst. Frid mit dir. Darnach heb man es aus der taufe und der priester geb ihm ein kerzen in die hand. Nim diese brennende fackel und beware dein taufe unstreflich, auf das, wenn der herr komt zur hochzeit, du ihm mugest entgegen gehen, sampt den heiligen in den himelischen saal, und das ewige leben habst, Amen.

Then let him take spittle with the finger and touch therewith the right ear and say: Ephphatha, that is, Be thou opened. To the nose and to the left ear: But thou, devil, flee, for God's judgement cometh near. […] Then let him anoint the child with holy oil on the breast and between the shoulders and say: And I anoint thee with saving oil in Jesus Christ our Lord. And let him ask: Wilt thou be baptized? Answer: Yes. Then let him take the child and dip it in the font, and say: And I baptize thee in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Then shall the godparents hold the child in the font, and the priest make it a cross with the oil on the crown […] Take the white, holy and undefiled garment, which thou shalt bring without spot before the judgement seat of Christ, that thou mayest have eternal life. Peace be with thee. Then let it be lifted out of the font, and the priest give it a candle in the hand: Take this burning torch and keep thy baptism blameless, that when the Lord cometh to the wedding thou mayest go to meet him, together with the saints, into the heavenly hall, and have eternal life. Amen.

The other early translations kept still more. The Strasbourg German baptism of 1524 (Moderate Reformed) prints the blessing of the salt with its own exorcism, and four exorcisms of the child where Luther has two. Strasbourg, the early agendas: the German baptism, 1524 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 124):

> Hie nach segnet man das saltz mit nachvolgenden worten: Ich beschwer dich, geschöpff des saltz, in dem namen Gottes [+], des almechtigen vatters, und in der liebe unsers herren Jesu Christi [+] und in der krafft des heiligen geist [+].

Hereafter the salt is blessed with the following words: I adjure thee, creature of salt, in the name of God [+], the almighty Father, and in the love of our Lord Jesus Christ [+] and in the power of the Holy Ghost [+].

Brandenburg 1540: salt and chrism kept. Electoral Brandenburg is the one territorial order that kept the old ceremonies on principle. Its baptism has the long prayers of 1523, the salt and the chrism, with a careful explanation. The chrism signifies the royal priesthood of Christians. It is not "of the substance" of baptism, and a child baptized in an emergency is not to be chrismed afterwards, lest the chrism seem necessary. Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 54):

> Und weil denn auch insonderheit ein alte hergebrachte ceremonia, den chresem bei der tauf zu brauchen, wollen wir denselben nachmals auch im brauch bleiben lassen, aber doch sol die meinung desselben in nachfolgendem verstande sein. […] darneben aber sol gleichwol das volk gnugsam unterricht werden, das alleine der heilig geist in der tauf uns salbe und zu christen mache, und nicht der chresem, der solchs nur ein bedeutung ist, das auch diejenigen, so gleich mit chresem nicht gesalbet, nichts minder volkomene christen, und inen des gar nicht schedlich sei, darumb auch unnötig die kinder, so in der eil und not von weibern oder sonst getauft, dieselben hernacher zu chresemen, denn so würde es als notwendig angesehen.

And because there is in particular an old received ceremony, to use the chrism at baptism, we will let the same still remain in use, but yet the meaning of it shall be in the understanding following. […] but therewithal the people shall nevertheless be sufficiently taught that only the Holy Ghost anointeth us in baptism and maketh us Christians, and not the chrism, which is only a signification of it; that those also who are not anointed with chrism are none the less perfect Christians, and it is no hurt to them at all; therefore also [it is] needless to chrism afterwards the children that have been baptized in haste and need by women or otherwise, for so it would be regarded as necessary.

The anointings in the Brandenburg rite. The Brandenburg baptism has both medieval anointings. After the renunciation and the threefold creed the priest anoints the child with the oil of catechumens on the breast and between the shoulders. After the baptism and the prayer "Der allmechtig gott" he anoints the crown of the head with chrism in the form of a cross, while the godparents take their hands away. The white cap (Westerhäublein) and the burning candle follow. Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, pp. 58–59):

> Darauf ungirt der priester das kind an der brust und zwischen den schultern mit dem öl cathecuminorum und spricht: So salbe ich dich mit dem öl der freuden in Christo † Jesu. Und bald nimmt der priester das kind in seine hende, halte es uber den taufstein, salbe es zwischen den schultern und spreche: Unserm herrn. Bald darauf frage er, wie das kind heiss und spreche: N. Wil du getauft werden. Antwort: Ja, ich will. Da neme er das kind abermal und spreche: Und ich taufe dich im namen des vaters und des sons und des heiligen geists. Darnach treten die paten hinzu, halten das kind uber den taufbrun und der priester spricht: Last uns beten. Der allmechtig gott und vater unsers herrn Jesu Christi, der dich anderweit geborn hat durchs wasser und den heiligen geist, und hat dir all dein sund vergeben, Da ungirt der priester das getauft kind mit dem Chresem auf der schetteln creuzweis, und die paten thun ire hende ab, so spricht der priester: Derselbig salbe dich mit dem chresem seins heils † zum ewigen leben, amen. Der fried sei mit dir und mit deinem geist. Darnach ruren die paten das kind an, und der priester setzt dem kinde das westerheublein auf und spricht: Nim hin das weisse kleid, welches da bedeutet die unschuld, so du in der tauf empfangen hast, dasselbe solt du on makel fur den richterstul Jesu Christi bringen, auf das du habest durch das verdienstnis Jesu Christi das ewig leben. Der fried sei mit dir und mit deinem geist. Alsdenn hebt man das kind vom taufbrun, und wenn das geschehen ist, so gibt der priester dem kind ein brennend kerzen, welche auch die paten angreifen und spricht: Nim hin die brinnend fackel, die da bedeut das licht des christlichen glaubens, welchen du in der tauf itzt empfangen und angelobet hast, und beware dein tauf > unstreflich, auf das, wenn der herr zur hochzeit komen wird, du im entgegen laufen mögst mit sampt den heiligen in den himlischen saal, das du in Christo Jesu habst das ewig leben, amen.

Thereupon the priest anointeth the child on the breast and between the shoulders with the oil of catechumens, and saith: So I anoint thee with the oil of gladness in Christ † Jesus. And straightway the priest taketh the child in his hands, holdeth it over the font, anointeth it between the shoulders, and saith: Our Lord. Soon thereafter he asketh what the child is called, and saith: N., wilt thou be baptized? Answer: Yea, I will. Then he taketh the child again and saith: And I baptize thee in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Thereafter the godparents come near and hold the child over the font, and the priest saith: Let us pray. The almighty God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten thee again by water and the Holy Ghost, and hath forgiven thee all thy sins — Then the priest anointeth the baptized child with the chrism on the crown of the head crosswise, and the godparents take away their hands, and the priest saith: The same anoint thee with the chrism of his salvation † unto everlasting life. Amen. Peace be with thee and with thy spirit. Thereafter the godparents touch the child, and the priest setteth the chrisom-cap upon the child and saith: Take the white garment, which signifieth the innocence which thou hast received in baptism; the same shalt thou bring without spot before the judgement-seat of Jesus Christ, that thou mayest have eternal life through the merit of Jesus Christ. Peace be with thee and with thy spirit. Then the child is lifted from the font, and when that is done the priest giveth the child a burning candle, which the godparents also take hold of, and saith: Take the burning torch, which signifieth the light of the Christian faith which thou hast now received and vowed in baptism, and keep thy baptism unblameable, that when the Lord cometh to the marriage thou mayest run to meet him with all the saints into the heavenly hall, that thou mayest have eternal life in Christ Jesus. Amen.

Pfalz-Neuburg 1543. Pfalz-Neuburg copied the Brandenburg rite, with its defence of the chrism (Sehling 13, pp. 46–47), word for word in its substance. Its anointings read: Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 55):

> Darauf salbet der priester das kind mit dem oleo catechumenorum erstlich an der brust und spricht: So salbe ich dich mit dem öle der freuden in Christo † Jesu. Und alsbald nimpt der priester das kind in seine hend und helt es uber den taufstein und salbet es auch zwischen den schultern und spricht: Unserm † Herren. […] Da salbet der priester das getauft kind mit dem chresem auf der scheitel kreuzweis und die doten tun ire hend ab und er spricht: Derselbig salbe dich mit dem chresem des heils zum ewigen leben! Amen. Der frid sei mit dir und mit deinem geist! Darnach rüren die doten das kind wider an und der priester setzt im das westerheublin auf

Thereupon the priest anointeth the child with the oil of catechumens, first on the breast, and saith: So I anoint thee with the oil of gladness in Christ † Jesus. And straightway the priest taketh the child in his hands and holdeth it over the font, and anointeth it also between the shoulders, and saith: Our † Lord. […] Then the priest anointeth the baptized child with the chrism on the crown crosswise, and the godparents take away their hands, and he saith: The same anoint thee with the chrism of salvation unto everlasting life! Amen. Peace be with thee and with thy spirit! Thereafter the godparents touch the child again, and the priest setteth the chrisom-cap upon it Pfalz-Neuburg gives no candle. Its chrism did not last: Ottheinrich suspended the chrism section and issued a new baptismal order (Sehling 13, p. 22, editor's note; §13.15.4).

The same order has the salt: "N. nim hin das salz der weisheit, das du in Christo Jesu, unserm herrn, habst das ewig leben" ("N., take the salt of wisdom, that thou mayest have eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord"; Sehling 3, p. 56). Brandenburg-Nürnberg had already ruled against the oil in 1528, because it was given "in the meaning" that the child was thereby anointed with the Holy Ghost. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 11, p. 135):

> Und wiewol es scheinet, als sollte die kinder mit öl zu salben, frei sein, so ists doch nit frei, das kind der mainung zu salben, das es also mit dem H. Gaist gesalbet werde: dann Got hats nit gehaissen noch zugesagt, das er sein Gaist woll eben dahin geben, da man mit dem öl salbe. Dweil es aber von bebstischen der meinung aufgesetzt ist, soll mans auch fallen lassen, desgleichen das salz, spaicheln und kot.

And although it seemeth as though to anoint the children with oil should be free, yet it is not free to anoint the child in the meaning that it be thereby anointed with the Holy Ghost: for God hath neither bidden nor promised that he will give his Spirit just there where one anointeth with oil. But since it was set up by the papists in that meaning, it shall be let fall, likewise the salt, spittle and clay.

13.3.3 Luther's revised Taufbüchlein of 1526: the Lutheran standard

In 1526 Luther reissued the book shortened. Sehling's headnote lists the orders that took it over: Göttingen 1530, Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533, Northeim 1539, Duke Henry's Saxon agenda 1539, Halle 1541, Schleswig-Holstein 1542, Pomerania 1542, Schweinfurt 1543, Ritzebüttel 1544 and Mecklenburg 1552 (Sehling 1, p. 21). The whole rite is short enough to give entire.

Luther, Das taufbuchlin verdeudscht aufs neu zu gericht, 1526 (Sehling 1, pp. 22–23):

> Der taufer spreche: Far aus, du unreiner geist, und gib raum dem heiligen geist. Darnach mach er ihm ein creuz an die stirn und brust und spreche: Nim das zeichen des heiligen creuzs, beide an der stirn und an der brust. Last uns beten. O almechtiger ewiger gott, vater unsers herrn Jhesu Christi. Ich rufe dich an uber diesen N., deinen diener, der deiner taufe gabe bittet und dein ewige gnade durch die geistliche wider gepurt begerd. Nim ihn auf, HERRE, und wie du gesagt hast ‘Bittet, so werdet ihr nehmen, sucht, so werdet ihr finden, klopfet an, so wird euch aufgethan’, so reiche nu das gut dem der da bittet, und offen die thur dem der da anklopfet: das er den ewigen segen dieses himelischen bades erlange und das verheissen reich deiner gabe entpfahe, durch Christum, unsern herrn. Amen. Last uns beten. Almechtiger ewiger gott, der du hast durch die sindflut nach deinem gestrengen gericht die ungleubige welt verdamt und den gleubigen Noe selb acht nach deiner grossen barmherzigkeit erhalten, und den verstockten Pharao mit allen seinen im roten meer erseuft, und dein volk Israel trocken durch hin gefurt, da mit dis bad deiner heiligen taufe zukunftig bezeichnet, und durch die taufe deines lieben kindes, unsers herren Jhesu Christi den Jordan und alle wasser zur seligen sindflut und reichlicher abwaschung der sunden geheiliget und eingesetzt: Wir bitten durch die selbe deine grundlose barmherzickeit, du woltest disen N. gnediglich ansehen und mit rechtem glauben im geist beseligen, das durch dise heilsame sindflut an ihm ersaufe und untergehe alles, was ihm von Adam angeporn ist, und er selb dazu gethan hat; und er aus der ungleubigen zal gesundert, in der heiligen arca der christenheit trocken und sicher behalten, alzeit brunstig im geist, frolich in hoffnung, deinem namen diene, auf das er mit allen gleubigen deiner verheissung ewigs lebens zu erlangen wirdig werde, durch Jhesum Christum unsern herrn. Amen. Ich beschwere dich, du unreiner geist, bei dem namen des vaters † und des sons † und des heiligen geists †, das du aus farest und weichest von disem diener Jhesu Christi .N. Amen. Last uns hören das heilig evangelion S. Marcus. Zu der zeit brachten sie kindlin zu Jhesu, das er sie solt anrüren. Aber die iunger bedraueten die so sie brachten. Da das Jhesus sahe, verdros ihn und sprach zu ihn: Last die kindlin zu mir komen und weret ihn nicht, denn solcher ist das himelreich. Warlich ich sage euch, wer nicht das reich gottis nimpt wie ein kindlin, der wird nicht hinein komen. Und er herzet sie und leget die hende auf sie und segnet sie. Denn lege der priester seine hende aufs kinds heubt und bete das Vater unser samt den paten nider geknihet. […] Darnach leite man das kindlin zu der taufe und der priester spreche: Der herr behüte deinen eingang und ausgang von nu an bis zu ewigen zeiten. Darnach lass der priester das kind durch seine paten dem teufel absagen und spreche: N. Entsagestu dem teufel? Antwort: Ja. Und alle seinen wercken? Antwort: Ja. Und alle seinem wesen? Antwort: Ja. Darnach frage er: Gleubestu an got den almechtigen vater, schepfer himels und erden? Antwort: Ja. Gleubestu an Jhesum Christ seinen einigen sohn, unsern herrn, geporn und gelitten? Antwort: Ja. Gleubestu an den heiligen geist, ein heilige christliche kirche, gemeine der heiligen, vergebung der sunde, auferstehung des fleischs, und nach dem tod ein ewiges leben? Antwort: Ja. Wiltu getaufft sein? Antwort: Ja. Da neme er das kind und tauche es in die taufe und spreche: Und ich teufe dich im namen des vaters und des sons und des heiligen geistes. Denn sollen die paten des kindlin halten in der taufe, und der priester spreche, weil er das westerhemd an zeucht: Der almechtige gott und vater unsers herrn Jhesu Christi, der dich anderweit geporn hat durchs wasser und den heiligen geist, und hat dir alle deine sunde vergeben, der sterke dich mit seiner gnade zum ewigen leben. Amen. Frid mit dir. Antwort: Amen.

Let the baptizer say: Depart, thou unclean spirit, and give place to the Holy Ghost. Then let him make a cross on its forehead and breast and say: Receive the sign of the holy cross, both on the forehead and on the breast. Let us pray. O almighty everlasting God, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, I call upon thee for this N., thy servant, who asketh the gift of thy baptism and desireth thy everlasting grace through the spiritual new birth. Receive him, O LORD, and as thou hast said, "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you", so give now the good thing to him that asketh, and open the door to him that knocketh: that he may obtain the everlasting blessing of this heavenly washing and receive the promised kingdom of thy gift, through Christ our Lord. Amen. Let us pray. Almighty everlasting God, who by the flood didst according to thy strict judgement condemn the unbelieving world, and according to thy great mercy didst preserve believing Noah, himself the eighth, and didst drown hardened Pharaoh with all his in the Red Sea, and didst lead thy people Israel through dry, thereby signifying beforehand this washing of thy holy baptism, and by the baptism of thy dear Child, our Lord Jesus Christ, didst hallow and ordain Jordan and all waters to be a blessed flood and an abundant washing away of sins: we pray through the same thy bottomless mercy, that thou wouldest graciously look upon this N. and bless him with right faith in the spirit, that by this saving flood there may be drowned in him and go under all that is born in him from Adam, and that he himself hath added thereto; and that he, being severed from the number of the unbelieving, kept dry and safe in the holy ark of Christendom, may serve thy name always fervent in spirit, joyful in hope, that with all the faithful he may be made worthy to obtain thy promise of everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. I adjure thee, thou unclean spirit, in the name of the Father † and of the Son † and of the Holy Ghost †, that thou come out and depart from this servant of Jesus Christ, N. Amen. Let us hear the holy gospel of Saint Mark. At that time they brought young children to Jesus, that he should touch them. But the disciples rebuked those that brought them. When Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them: Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms, and put his hands upon them, and blessed them. Then let the priest lay his hands on the child's head and pray the Our Father together with the godparents, kneeling. […] Then let the child be led to the font and the priest say: The Lord preserve thy going in and thy coming out from this time forth for evermore. Then let the priest cause the child through its godparents to renounce the devil, and say: N., renouncest thou the devil? Answer: Yes. And all his works? Answer: Yes. And all his ways? Answer: Yes. Then let him ask: Believest thou in God the Father almighty, maker of heaven and earth? Answer: Yes. Believest thou in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord, born and suffered? Answer: Yes. Believest thou in the Holy Ghost, one holy Christian church, the communion of saints, forgiveness of sins, resurrection of the flesh, and after death an everlasting life? Answer: Yes. Wilt thou be baptized? Answer: Yes. Then let him take the child and dip it in the font and say: And I baptize thee in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Then shall the godparents hold the child in the font, and the priest say, while he putteth on the chrisom-robe: The almighty God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten thee again through water and the Holy Ghost, and hath forgiven thee all thy sins, strengthen thee with his grace unto everlasting life. Amen. Peace be with thee. Answer: Amen.

The 1526 order thus keeps:

- one exorcism at the door ("Far aus") and one before the Gospel ("Ich beschwere dich");
- the sign of the cross;
- the prayer "Nim ihn auf" ("Receive him") and the Flood prayer;
- Mark 10 and the Lord's Prayer with the laying on of hands;
- the procession to the font with Psalm 121:8;
- the threefold renunciation and the threefold creed, answered by the godparents in the child's name;
- "Wilt thou be baptized?", immersion, the Westerhemd and the closing blessing.

It drops salt, spittle, oil, chrism, candle and the second set of prayers and exorcisms.

13.3.4 The Saxon agenda and Brandenburg-Nürnberg: exhortations around Luther's rite

The territorial agendas did not change Luther's 1526 text, but framed it with teaching.

Saxony 1539. Duke Henry's agenda opens with an exhortation to "those who bring children to baptism". It sets out original sin and Christ's command to bring the children to him, and asks the bystanders to "help to pray". Then comes Luther's rite. Saxony (Albertine), Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Sehling 1, p. 266):

> Auf nachfolgende weise sollen die pfarherr, die leute, so kinder zur tauf tragen, anreden und vermanen. Lieben freunde in Christo, wir hören alle tage aus gottes wort, erfarens auch, beide an unserm leben und sterben, das wir von Adam her, allesampt in sünden empfangen und geborn werden, darinnen wir denn unter gottes zorn in ewigkeit verdampt und verloren sein müssen, wo uns nicht durch den eingebornen gottes son, unsern lieben herrn Jesum Christum daraus geholfen were. […] derhalben so wollet aus christlicher liebe dieses gegenwertigen armen kindlins gegen gott dem herrn, euch mit ernst auch annemen, dasselbige dem herrn Christo furtragen umb vergebung der sünden, und das es ins reichder gnaden und seligkeit auch aufgenomen werden möge, vorbitten helfen.

In the manner following shall the pastors address and exhort the people that bear children to baptism. Dear friends in Christ, we hear every day out of God's word, and find it also, both in our life and in our dying, that from Adam onward we are all conceived and born in sins, wherein we must be under God's wrath condemned and lost for ever, if we were not helped out of them by the only-begotten Son of God, our dear Lord Jesus Christ. […] therefore of Christian love take earnestly upon you also the cause of this present poor little child before God the Lord, bear it to the Lord Christ, and help to pray for the forgiveness of sins, and that it may be received also into the kingdom of grace and salvation.

The editions from 1540 and from 1555 (Sehling's A and B) add two things. One is a short sermon on the Gospel "if there be time and the child is not weak". The other is a long address to the godparents before the renunciation, binding them to see the child taught the commandments, creed and Lord's Prayer. It ends with the godparents' "yes" and the minister's "Das verleihe uns unser lieber herr gott und erfülle mit seinen gnaden, das wir nicht vermögen" ("This grant us our dear Lord God, and fulfil with his grace what we are not able"; Sehling 1, p. 267). Both may be left out "where it would be too long or the child is weak".

Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533. The Franconian order recast Luther's 1526 epilogue as a spoken admonition: "Ir allerliebsten! Ich vermane und bitt euch alle …" ("Dearly beloved! I exhort and pray you all …"; Sehling 11, p. 178). It then gave Luther's rite with the full Apostles' Creed in the second question. It added a charge to the godparents after the baptism, which many later orders copied. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 180):

> Nach der tauf sollen die pfarherr oder kirchendiener die gevattern ermanen ungeferlich auf die weise: Ich verman euch in kraft der christenlichen liebe, die ir jetzo an des kindleins stat bei der tauf geton habt, wann es seiner eltern durch tods- oder andern unfal beraubt würde, ehe dann es zum brauch seiner vernunft köme, das irs fleißig und treulich wolt unterrichten und leren erstlich die zehen gepot, auf das es den willen Gottes und seine sünd dardurch lerne erkennen, darnach den christlichen glauben, durch welichen wir gnad, vergebung der sünde und den Heiligen Gaist empfahen, zuletzt auch das Vater unser, damit es Gott anrufen und hilf bitten könne, dem Satan widerstand zu tun und christlich zu leben, bis Gott an ime erfüllet, was er jetzo in der tauf angefangen hat, und es selig werde.

After the baptism shall the pastors or ministers of the church exhort the godparents somewhat after this manner: I exhort you, by virtue of the Christian love which ye have now shown in the child's stead at the baptism, that if it should be bereaved of its parents by death or other mishap before it come to the use of its reason, ye will diligently and faithfully instruct it and teach it first the ten commandments, that it may thereby learn to know the will of God and its sin; then the Christian faith, through which we receive grace, forgiveness of sins and the Holy Ghost; lastly also the Our Father, that it may call upon God and pray for help to withstand Satan and to live as a Christian, until God fulfil in it what he hath now begun in baptism, and it be saved.

13.3.5 The Upper German rite: Strasbourg and Württemberg

Württemberg 1536. Brenz's first Württemberg order kept Luther's spoken admonition, the prayer "Nim ihn auf", the Flood prayer, the Gospel and the Lord's Prayer. It has no exorcism and no sign of the cross, and it does not have the renunciation or the creed. There is one question to those who bring the child, and the child is sprinkled three times. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 16, p. 113):

> Darnach trage man das kindlin zu dem Tauff und der priester frage diejhenigen, so das kind herzu tragen haben, auff die meynung: Ir aller liebsten, ir begeren, das dis kind auff Christum Jesum getaufft und durch das eusserlich zeichen des tauffs seiner heiligen gemein eingeleibt werde. Darauff sollen sie antworten: Ja. Als dann nimpt er das kind und besprengt es drey mal mit wasser und spricht: N., ich tauff dich in namen des vatters und des suns und des heyligen geists; und sprech darauff: Der allmechtig Gott und vatter unsers herren Jesu Christi, der dich anderwerts geborn hat durchs wasser und den heyligen geist unnd hat dir alle deine sünd vergeben, der sterck dich mit seiner gnad zum ewigen leben, Amen. Der frid sey mit dir, Amen.

Then let the child be borne to the font and the priest ask those that have borne the child thither, to this effect: Dearly beloved, ye desire that this child be baptized into Christ Jesus and be incorporated into his holy congregation through the outward sign of baptism. Thereto shall they answer: Yes. Then he taketh the child and sprinkleth it three times with water and saith: N., I baptize thee in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost; and let him say thereupon: The almighty God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten thee again through water and the Holy Ghost and hath forgiven thee all thy sins, strengthen thee with his grace unto everlasting life. Amen. Peace be with thee. Amen.

Württemberg 1553. The great order of 1553 became the form of the south-west. Sehling's apparatus records its baptism in the Baden orders of 1556 and 1598 and in Mömpelgard in 1560 and 1571, and Nassau-Weilburg in 1576 opens its baptism with the same words. Its order is:

1. The name is asked, and whether the child was baptized in an emergency.
2. An opening address (Form des Tauffs): a child is brought "to be commended to the prayer of the common Christian church".
3. The Gospel of the children (Mark 10), read first.
4. An exhortation on original sin and Christ's love for children.
5. Two prayers: "Nim ihn auf", and the Flood prayer as an alternative (Ein ander Gebett).

6. The Lord's Prayer.
7. Psalm 121:8 over the child.
8. An address to the godparents: whoever joins the church "entereth a spiritual battle".
9. Renunciation in one question, and the Apostles' Creed in three questions.
10. "Wilt thou be baptized thereon?"
11. Pouring on the unwrapped child, "with clear, loud and distinct voice".
12. The blessing "Der Allmechtig Gott".
13. A thanksgiving prayer, then an admonition to parents, kin and godparents to bring the child to the catechism.

The rubric on the mode of baptism declares immersion, pouring and sprinkling all indifferent. It then orders pouring on the naked child, except in cold weather or weakness. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 16, pp. 232–233):

> Das aber das Kind im Tauffen inn- oder auß gewickelt, ein- oder drey mal begossen, in das wasser eingedaucht oder mit wasser besprengt werde, ist an im selbs mittelmässig. Jedoch, dieweil in der kirchen alles ordenlich und zur besserung gesche hen soll, haben wir für nutzlich bedacht, das die kindlin außgewickelt, doch, allerlei gefahr zuverhüten, nicht ins Wasser gedaucht, sonder mit dem wasser also nackend begossen werden, es were dann sach, das das Kind so schwach, das es den lufft oder kelte nicht wol leiden möchte, als dann mage es eingewickelt wol getaufft werden.

But that the child in baptizing be wrapped or unwrapped, poured upon once or three times, dipped into the water or sprinkled with water, is in itself indifferent. Yet, since in the church all things should be done orderly and to edifying, we have thought it profitable that the children be unwrapped, yet, to prevent all manner of danger, not dipped into the water, but poured upon with the water naked as they are, unless it be that the child be so weak that it could not well bear the air or the cold; then it may well be baptized wrapped.

Strasbourg 1537 (Moderate Reformed). Strasbourg had moved furthest from the old rite. Its agenda sets fixed times for baptism: in the Minster on Sundays after the noon sermon and on Wednesdays after the morning sermon, and in the other parishes at Sunday vespers. The service is a sermon in brief, with four heads of exhortation. Then come silent prayer, two prayers, the Gospel, the creed said by all, an address to the whole congregation and the godparents, threefold pouring, a thanksgiving and a dismissal. There is no exorcism, no cross and no question to the godparents. The words at the font are these. Strasbourg, Agende, 1537 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 269):

> Uff dises begeret der Diener im das kindlin nach ordnung darzu geben. Das nimet er dan in seine hend, entplösset es und als er gefraget, wie es heissen solle, nennet er es mit seinem namen, begeusset es dristet und sagt: N., Ich teuffe dich im namen des Vatters und des Suns und des heiligen Geists, Amen. […] Geht hin im friden. Der Herre gebe, das seine heiligen Engel, die sein angesicht sehen im himel, dis kind (dise kindlin) vor allem argen zu allem guten bewaren und fürderen, Amen.

Hereupon the minister desireth the child to be given him in order. This he then taketh in his hands, uncovereth it, and when he hath asked what it shall be called, nameth it with its name, poureth upon it thrice and saith: N., I baptize thee in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. […] Go hence in peace. The Lord grant that his holy angels, which see his face in heaven, may keep this child (these children) from all evil and further it unto all good. Amen.

13.3.6 The Reformed rite: the Palatinate 1563

The Reformed Palatine order of 1563 drew its baptism from Zurich, Geneva, Frankfurt and the London strangers' church (all Reformed) (Sehling's notes, Sehling 14, pp. 337–341). It begins with the adjutorium "Unser hilf stehet im namen des herrn". There follows a long exhortation on the three names: the Father as the covenant God of us and our seed, the Son as Saviour, the Spirit as teacher and comforter. The children's right to baptism is drawn from the covenant with Abraham and from Mark 10. Then come:

- the Flood prayer, recast so that the waters "signify" baptism and the child is asked to be "engrafted" into Christ;
- the Lord's Prayer;
- the Apostles' Creed, said "with me" by all;
- one question to the parents and godparents;
- the uncovering of the head only;
- pouring with the formula;

- a thanksgiving and a charge to the parents and godparents.

There is no exorcism, no renunciation by the godparents in the child's name, no sign of the cross and no Westerhemd. Kurpfalz, Kirchenordnung, 1563 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 340):

> Frag. Begeret ir dann auß warem glauben an die verheissung Gottes in Jesu Christo, welche uns und unsern kindern gegeben ist, daß er nit allein unser, sonder auch unsers samens Gott sein wölle bis ins tausendt glid, daß dises kind darauf getauft werde und die versiglung der kindschaft Gottes empfahe ? Antwort. Ja. Hie ist unvonnöten, das kind aufzuwicklen, sonder genug, daß im das haupt entblösset werde. Und alsdann sage der kirchendiener, daß sie das kind nennen, und darnach begiesse er es mit wasser und sprech: N., ich tauf dich in dem namen Gottes, des vaters, des sohns und des heiligen geistes.

Question. Do ye then desire, out of true faith in the promise of God in Jesus Christ which is given to us and to our children, that he will be not only our God but also the God of our seed unto the thousandth generation, that this child be baptized thereupon and receive the sealing of the adoption of God? Answer: Yes. Here it is not needful to unwrap the child, but enough that its head be uncovered. And then let the minister of the church bid them name the child, and thereafter let him pour water upon it and say: N., I baptize thee in the name of God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost.

The same order reserves baptism to ministers of the Word and forbids baptism by any person "to whom the office of preaching is forbidden". This was directed, Sehling notes, against the emergency baptism allowed in the Palatine order of 1556. It requires baptism in the assembled congregation, the presence of the father and the keeping of a baptismal register. Kurpfalz, Kirchenordnung, 1563 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 337):

> In diesen worten befilcht der herr Christus denen allein zu taufen, so sein heyliges wort zu predigen berufen seind, und fast also beyde, das predigen und taufen, in einen bevelch und ampt zusammen. Derhalben keiner creatur gebürt, disen bevelch zu trennen und einer person das taufen zuzulassen, der das predigtampt verboten ist. Derhalben so sollen die kinder zu jeder gebürlicher zeit, so es von irentwegen ordentlich begeret und sie in die kirchen für die diener des worts gebracht, von den predigern getauft werden. Und solches soll fürnemlich geschehen auf Sontag, feiertag oder sonst in der wochen, wann die gemein Gottes beyeinander, auf daß sich ein jeder seins taufs wisse zu erinnern und die christlich gemein einhelliglich den namen Gottes uber das kind anrufe.

In these words the Lord Christ commandeth those only to baptize who are called to preach his holy Word, and so bindeth both, preaching and baptizing, together in one commandment and office. Therefore it behoveth no creature to sunder this commandment and to allow baptizing to a person to whom the office of preaching is forbidden. Therefore shall the children, at every fit time when it is orderly desired on their behalf and they are brought into the church before the ministers of the Word, be baptized by the preachers. And this shall be done chiefly on Sunday, holy day or otherwise in the week when the congregation of God is gathered, that every one may know to remember his baptism, and the Christian congregation with one accord call upon the name of God over the child.

13.3.7 Emergency baptism and its confirmation in church

Every Lutheran order allowed baptism in danger of death by the midwife or any Christian. All forbade rebaptism "under condition", and most printed a form for receiving the child in church if it lived. This is the Bestätigung der Nottaufe, later called "confirmation of emergency baptism". The Saxon form of 1539 was the model, taken word for word into Brandenburg 1540 and many others. The pastor asks five questions:

1. Was the child brought to Christ and baptized?
2. By whom, and who was present?
3. Did you call upon God and pray?
4. With what did you baptize?
5. With what words?

If the answers are sure, he declares the baptism right, reads Mark 10 and prays the closing blessing of the rite. If they are unsure, the child is baptized "as unbaptized", without condition. Saxony (Albertine), Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Sehling 1, pp. 267–268):

> So frage er weiter. Womit habt ir getauft? Antwortet man denn. Mit wasser. So frage er. Mit was worten habt ir getauft? So man denn sagt. Ich teufe dich im namen des vaters, und des sons, und des heiligen geists. So frage er endlich. Wisset ir, das ir der wort nach dem befel Christi gebraucht habt? Und wo sie darauf antworten. Ja wir wissens. So sagt er. Nu meine lieben freund, weil ir denn im namen und auf den befel unsers lieben herr gottes, solchs alles gethan, so sage ich, das ir recht und wol gethan habt [...] Würden aber die leute, so das kindlin zu der tauf bringen, auf des pfarers frage ungewis antwort geben, und sagen, sie wüsten nicht was sie gedacht, viel weniger was sie geredt oder gethan in solcher grosser not (als denn oftmals zu geschehen pflegt) so mache man nicht viel disputirens, sondern neme das kind, als ungetauft, und forder es zur tauf, also wie man alle ungetaufte zur tauf zu fordern und zu teufen pflegt.

Then let him ask further: Wherewith did ye baptize? If they answer: With water, then let him ask: With what words did ye baptize? If they then say: I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, then let him ask lastly: Know ye that ye used the words according to the command of Christ? And if they answer thereto: Yes, we know it, then he saith: Now, my dear friends, since ye have done all this in the name and by the command of our dear Lord God, I say that ye have done right and well [...] But if the people that bring the child to baptism should give uncertain answer to the pastor's question, and say they knew not what they thought, much less what they said or did in such great need (as is then wont often to happen), let there be no great disputing, but let the child be taken as unbaptized and brought forward to baptism, as all the unbaptized are wont to be brought forward and baptized.

Württemberg in 1536 required the midwife to call two or three witnesses. Brandenburg-Nürnberg in its 1591 revision added a question that betrays the old practice of baptism in the womb: "Ob das kind vollkommlich geboren und ganz ledig von der mutter gewesen, als man es getaufet?" ("Whether the child was fully born and quite free of the mother when it was baptized?"; Sehling 11, p. 181). For "no child shall be baptized in emergency that is not wholly born into the world."

Brandenburg-Nürnberg in 1528 asked that strong children wait for the next feast day, "that such baptism take place in the presence of so much the more people". In danger they were to be brought at once or baptized at home. Later orders set limits: three days (Schulenburg 1572), eight days (Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1557; Leiningen 1584). The Reformed Palatinate in 1563, as above, abolished emergency baptism by laypeople outright.

13.3.8 Godparents, feasts and registers

Number and quality. The orders limited the number of godparents and excluded the openly wicked. Württemberg 1553 forbade "frivolous persons, who are bound in public vices without repentance" (Sehling 16, p. 233). The Palatinate 1563 (Reformed) had the father consult the minister in advance about the godparents (Sehling 14, p. 338). Breslau held to a rule, confirmed by the council eighty years before, of three godparents only (Sehling 3, p. 402). Duke August's Saxon order set the same limit under a fine of a hundred gulden. Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 426):

> so sollen hinfüro nicht mehr denn drei gevattern, bei aufgesetzter straf ein hundert gülden, welche wir hiemit wiederumb erneuert haben wollen, gebeten, und hierüber niemands zugelassen werden.

so shall henceforth no more than three godparents be bidden, under the penalty laid of a hundred gulden, which we will hereby have renewed, and none be admitted above this.

The christening feast. The Kindtaufe meal was regulated with the wedding. Sarcerius's Mansfeld visitation form of 1554 lists, among the faults to be punished, more than three godparents, more than eight women at the meal, and men at the meal at all. Mansfeld, Form und weise einer visitation, 1554 (Sehling 2, p. 192):

> Nicht mehr denn drei gefattern zum kindtauf bitten. Das nicht mehr denn acht weiber bei dem kindtauf essen sollen. Das keine menner in die kindtaufe gehen, alda zu essen oder zu trinken.

Not to bid more than three godparents to the christening. That not more than eight women shall eat at the christening. That no men go to the christening to eat or drink there.

Registers. The Palatinate in 1563 (Reformed) ordered the minister to enter "the name of the father, the mother, the child and the godparents" in a book kept at every church (Sehling 14, p. 338). Pfalz-Veldenz did the same in its Lützelstein order of 1605 (Sehling 18, p. 596).

The vows asked of godparents are treated in Chapter 17, §17.17.4.

13.3.9 The baptism of adults and of Jews

The rite assumed infants. The orders made room for adults in three ways:

- A clause in the Flood prayer. Luther's words "and that he himself hath added thereto" (und er selb dazugethan hat) were marked in Württemberg as the clause to add "when an older person is baptized" (Sehling 16, pp. 112, 234).
- The Hessian catechumenate. The Hessian order of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) described the ancient catechumenate at length. Its section on baptism was taken into the Austrian agenda of 1571 as "a short Christian instruction for baptizing older persons" (Sehling 8, p. 268). In the ancient church, it says, the instructed made their confession "before the whole congregation on certain appointed feasts". They renounced the devil, confessed the creed and were baptized "in and before the whole church, which looked on".
- Separate forms for Jews. Sehling notes a liturgical form for the baptism of an adult Jew among the Mainz possessions, "perhaps the first in the evangelical church" (Sehling 2, p. 365). He prints a Friedberg Judentaufformular of about 1600. There the baptism followed catechetical instruction and examination and was done in the service of the congregation (Sehling 9, pp. 625, 635–637).

13.4 Exorcism

The orders mean three different things by exorcism:

- the baptismal exorcism: the "Far aus" at the door, and the adjurations "Ich beschwere dich" in the rite (§13.3);
- the exorcisms of creatures: the exorcisms of salt and water in the blessing of holy water and the baptismal font, treated with the other blessings in §13.15;
- the exorcism of the possessed, the work of the minor order of exorcist and of the "devil banishers". This is treated with the rites for the sick in §13.8.

Only the first was in dispute among evangelicals. For the minor order of exorcist see Chapter 16 §16.3.

13.4.1 Luther's exorcism and its defenders

Luther's view. Luther kept a shortened exorcism in 1526 and defended it as an earnest act of the church: "it is no jest to deal against the devil". In his epilogue the church "confesseth before God that the child is possessed of the devil" (es sei vom teufel besessen; Sehling 1, p. 21).

Dietrich's gloss: the exorcism is a prayer. The Lutheran defenders explained the formula as a confession of original sin and a kind of prayer, not a charm. Veit Dietrich's Nuremberg agenda put a gloss against the "Ich beschwere dich" to say so. Nuremberg, Agendbüchlein of Veit Dietrich, 1545 (Sehling 11, p. 506):

> Ich beschwere dich, du unrainer geist, (R: Diser exorcismus ist nicht unrecht; denn er ist eben als ein gebeth) bei dem namen des Vaters und des Suns, und des Heiligen Geistes, das du ausfarest und weichest von disem diener (dieser dienerin) Jesu Christi, N. Amen.

I adjure thee, thou unclean spirit (margin: This exorcism is not wrong; for it is even as a prayer), in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, that thou come out and depart from this servant (this handmaid) of Jesus Christ, N. Amen.

Zweibrücken 1539: optional, but grounded in the fathers. The Zweibrücken order kept it "where it can fitly be kept". It appealed to the fathers and to its use in showing "what harm original sin bringeth". Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Form und Ordnung, 1539 (Sehling 18, p. 59):

> Der Exorcismus, wa er fuglich kan gehalten werden oder ist, bleybt. Den hatt fast die gantz christlich Kyrch gebraucht, wie Sanct Augustin anzeigt de Ecclesiasticis dogmatibus, cap. 21, und ist fast dienstlich zu beweisen, was schaden die erbsund bringt und wie der teuffel, ein furst der welt, allein durch Christum ußgetrieben werde.

The exorcism, where it can fitly be kept or is [kept], remaineth. Almost the whole Christian church hath used it, as Saint Augustine showeth, De ecclesiasticis dogmatibus, chapter 21, and it is very serviceable to show what harm original sin bringeth, and how the devil, a prince of the world, is driven out by Christ alone.

Verden 1606: a reminder, not a cause. The late Lutheran orders kept it under an explicit caveat. The Verden order of 1606 says the child is rescued by baptism, not by the exorcism. Sehling's editor notes that the exorcism was kept in the Lüneburg, Wolfenbüttel and Mecklenburg orders as well. Stift Verden, Kirchenordnung, 1606 (Sehling 7/1, p. 172):

> Allhie ist zu merken, nachdem wir in den kirchen dieses unsers stifts Verden aus erheblichen und in Gottes wort wolgegründeten ursachen den exorcismum behalten, das die prediger das volk zu zeiten erinnern sollen, das dieselbige keinesweges also verstanden werde, als solte das kind durch den exorcismum und nicht vielmehr durch die heilige taufe auß der gewalt des teufels genonnnen und errettet werden, sondern das es allein ein erinnerung sey, in was grosser not und gefehrlichen jammer das kindlein seiner sünden halben stecke, warumb ihme die heilige taufe nötig, und was durch dieselbige bey den kindlein außgerichtet werde.

Here it is to be noted: since in the churches of this our foundation of Verden we have kept the exorcism for weighty causes well grounded in God's word, the preachers shall from time to time remind the people that it be in no wise so understood as though the child were taken and rescued out of the power of the devil through the exorcism, and not rather through holy baptism; but that it is only a reminder in what great need and perilous misery the little child is sunk by reason of its sins, why holy baptism is needful for it, and what is wrought in the little children thereby.

Other late Lutheran orders took the same line:

- Schaumburg 1614 kept it "as an outward ceremony ordained by the most ancient teachers of the church, in its free use hitherto" (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 151).
- Soest 1609 kept it but left it free to the preachers. It cited Polycarp Leyser's Vom Exorcismo against the "Anhalt sacramentarians" (Sehling 22, p. 492).
- Pomerania 1569 forbade anyone to dispute the exorcism and the crosses in public, and ruled that the child might be baptized naked or with only the head bared, "for one baptizeth not the swaddling clothes but the man". Pomerania, Kerckenordeninge, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 386):

> De hilige döpe schal geholden werden mit den ceremonien, de im catechismo unde in der agenda beschreven sint, unde schal nemande gestadet werden, öffentlick vam exorcismo edder crützen, so im catechismo stan, to disputeren, de kinder schölen ock ane underscheed, naket, effte allene up dat hövet in den windelen gedöfft, unde nene disputation edder bekümmernisse hir van gemaket werden, wente men döpet, nicht de windelen, sunder den minschen.

Holy baptism shall be held with the ceremonies that are written in the catechism and in the agenda, and none shall be suffered to dispute openly of the exorcism or the crosses which stand in the catechism; the children shall also be baptized without distinction, naked, or only on the head in the swaddling clothes, and no disputation or trouble be made hereof, for one baptizeth not the swaddling clothes, but the man.

13.4.2 No exorcism over the child already baptized

Even the orders that kept the exorcism agreed that it must not be read over a child brought to church after emergency baptism. To do so would call the Holy Spirit, who is with the baptized child, an unclean spirit. Bugenhagen gave the reason in Braunschweig in 1528. The same rule stands in Hamburg 1529, Lübeck 1531, the Haderslev articles of 1528, Pomerania 1535, Buxtehude, the Wittenberg town order of 1533 and the Mansfeld agenda of 1580 (Sehling 7/1, p. 73; 23, p. 67; 4, p. 330; 1, p. 703; 2, p. 219). Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 360):

> Overs de prester schal nicht over deme so gedofften kyndeken den exorcismum lesen, den düvel uthtobannen, dat he nicht mit deme lesen den hilgen Geist lestere, de gewislick by deme gedofften kynde is.

But the priest shall not read the exorcism over the child so baptized, to ban the devil out, lest with the reading he blaspheme the Holy Ghost, who is surely with the baptized child.

13.4.3 Toleration and mitigation

Henneberg 1582: tolerated for a time. Some Lutheran territories held the exorcism free but removed it from the printed rite, tolerating it "for a while" where it was still used. The reason was that, bordering on the papacy, they found it "often thriving into superstition and misuse". Henneberg, Kirchenordnung of Georg Ernst, 1582 (Sehling 2, pp. 304–305):

> Vom exorcismo. Den exorcismum oder beschwerung des bösen geistes anlangende, lassen wir wol dieselbige in rechtem gesunden verstande fur ein bekentnis, oder wie etliche wollen, fur eine art eines gebets, bei iren wirden bleiben, verweisen es auch niemand, der solche beschwerung aus christlicher freiheit, so wol als dieselbige auch aus gleicher freiheit unterlassen und abgethan werden mag, im brauch behelt. Doch haben wir unsers orts, als an das babstumb grenzend, im werk befunden, das solche bei den leuten oftmals in aberglauben und missbrauch gedeien wollen. […] als ist dieselbige in vorgeschriebener action der heiligen taufe unterlassen und dahin geschlossen worden, das solche beschwerung noch ein zeitweile, darmit der gemeine mann der gelegenheit derhalben desto besser und gründlicher in den predigten unterrichtet, und als denn soviel mehr ohne ergernus abgethan und unterlassen werden möge, tolerirt und zugebrauchen nachgelassen werden solle, jedoch an denen orten unserer fürstlichen grafschaft allein, do dieselbige noch im gebrauch.

Of the exorcism. As touching the exorcism or adjuring of the evil spirit, we let the same indeed, in a right and sound understanding, as a confession, or as some will, as a kind of prayer, remain in its worth, and blame no one who keepeth such adjuring in use out of Christian liberty, even as the same may also out of like liberty be left off and done away. Yet we in our place, as bordering on the papacy, have found in practice that it will often thrive among the people into superstition and misuse. […] therefore it is left out in the prescribed action of holy baptism, and it is concluded that such adjuring shall for a while yet be tolerated and allowed to be used, that the common man may be the better and more thoroughly instructed meanwhile in the sermons, and it may then be done away and left off so much the more without offence, yet only in those places of our princely county where it is still in use.

Brandenburg-Ansbach 1591: "Ich gebiete dir". The Franconian margraviate softened the words of the general visitation of 1591. "Ich beschwere dich" became "Ich gebiete dir" ("I command thee"), the crosses were dropped, and the consistory ordered the mitigated form to be used everywhere "to prevent offence and needless strife". Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Konsistorialordnung, 1594 (Sehling 11, p. 392):

> Weil auch der exorcismus in unser kirchenordnung aus erheblichen ursachen in der generalvisitation mit etlichen worten mitigirt und gelindert, auch die papistischen creuz abgeton worden, soll vortan solche mitigation von den kirchendienern an allen orten im fürstentumb under- und oberhalb des gebirgs, ärgernis und unnötig gezenk zu verhueten, gleich gehalten und derenthalben keine spaltung angefangen werden.

Since also the exorcism in our church order hath for weighty causes been mitigated and softened in some words at the general visitation, and the papistical crosses done away, such mitigation shall henceforth be kept alike by the ministers of the church in all places in the principality below and above the mountains, to prevent offence and needless strife, and no division be begun on that account.

Ysenburg-Birstein 1588: let it fall gradually. The Ysenburg order of 1588 directed that the exorcism, "since it hath for the most part fallen among all the orthodox", should not be brought back where it had lapsed, and should be dropped gradually elsewhere. Ysenburg-Birstein, Kirchenordnung, 1588 (Sehling 10, p. 628):

> Zu mercken: Weil der Exorcismus bey allen rechtgleubigen meystlich gefallen, daß man in an denen Orten, da er bißher nicht gewesen ist, nicht wider eynführen soll. Da er aber noch im brauch gehalten wirdt, soll man ihn hinfurt allgemach, so viel ohne ergernuß der gemeynen Leuth geschehen mag, fallen lassen.

To be noted: since the exorcism hath for the most part fallen among all the orthodox, it shall not be brought in again in those places where it hath not been hitherto. But where it is still kept in use, it shall henceforth be let fall by degrees, so far as may be done without offence of the common people.

13.4.4 Abolition

Strasbourg and the Upper German orders never had the exorcism after the mid-1520s. Württemberg in 1536 and 1553 has none (§13.3.5). Sehling's editor notes that the Kassel order of 1539 (Moderate Reformed) "following Strasbourg forms" leaves it out (Sehling 8, p. 119). The Hessian order of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) also omits it from its two baptismal forms. It mentions "the prayers together with the exorcisms" only in the section on emergency baptism, which it copied from the Saxon agenda (Sehling 8, p. 284).

Abolition by mandate, 1567–1613. From the 1560s the Reformed and Philippist territories abolished it by mandate:

Territory	Date	Source
Upper Palatinate (Amberg; Reformed)	1567	mandate of 20 January (Sehling 13, p. 303)
Nassau-Dillenburg (Philippist)	1575	agenda (Sehling 10, p. 150)
Hohenlohe	1578	order (Sehling 15, p. 235)
Nördlingen	1579	order, at Andreae's wish (Sehling 12, p. 352)
Moers (Reformed)	1581	order (Sehling 22, p. 194)
Waldeck	1584	mandate of 21 August, with the Westerhemd (Sehling 9, p. 300)
Bentheim-Tecklenburg (Reformed)	1588	order (Sehling 22, p. 269)
Anhalt (Philippist)	1590	princely command of 27 July, and a new Taufbüchlein (Sehling 2, p. 531)
Electoral Saxony	1591	under Christian I; Sehling records the negotiations and the "unrest" (Sehling 1, p. 137)
Gottorf	1613	(Sehling 23, p. 324)

Nassau-Dillenburg 1575. The Nassau agenda gives the Reformed case. Baptism by Christ's institution is strong enough against the devil. The exorcism has no ground in Scripture or apostolic tradition, and it breeds an opinio cultus et necessitatis. Nassau-Dillenburg, Agende, 1575 (Philippist; Sehling 10, p. 150):

> Zum andern soll auch der exorcismus unnd teuffelsbeschwerung bey der tauff nit meher gepraucht werden, dan wir die heylige tauff weis der einsatzungh unsers hern Jesu Cristi ohn einige menschliche tradition kreftig genug erkennen und halten, dem teuffel zu begegenen unnd ihm alle seine gewalt unnd reich zu nemen. Darzu ist der exorcismus bey der tauffe in Gottes wort und den apostolischen tradicionen nicht gegrundet, auch unnotig, unnd haben noch vill einen aberglaubischen misverstandt darbey, opinionem cultus et necessitatis, welches das werck an ihm selbß verdunckelt, unnd helt die einfaltigen von betrachtung notige dinge ab.

Secondly, the exorcism and adjuring of the devil shall no more be used at baptism, for we know and hold holy baptism, according to the institution of our Lord Jesus Christ, without any human tradition, to be strong enough to meet the devil and to take from him all his power and kingdom. Moreover the exorcism at baptism is not grounded in God's word and the apostolic traditions, and is also needless, and many have yet a superstitious misunderstanding therewith, an opinion of worship and of necessity, which darkeneth the work in itself and holdeth the simple back from the consideration of needful things.

Waldeck 1584. The Waldeck counts' mandate abolishing both the exorcism and the Westerhemd shows the care taken over the people's consciences. Pastors were to teach that children already baptized with them had been rightly baptized, and that future children would lack nothing. Waldeck, mandate on the baptismal exorcism and robe, 21 August 1584 (Sehling 9, p. 300):

> daß nun hinfurtter in unsern kirchen uß darzu sonderlich bewegenden ursachen der exorcismus undt westerhempt bey der kinderlein tauff ußgelassen undt nitt mehr gebraucht werden soll […] Undt damitt ewere gemeine darunter nitt geergertt werden undt es nit etwa davor achten möge, alß weren ihre vorige kinder ohnrecht getaufft oder die kunfftigen nitt vollenkommene taufft, wan die gedachte beiden stücke darbey ußgelassen wurden, bekommen soltten that henceforth in our churches, for causes especially moving thereto, the exorcism and the chrisom-robe shall be left out at the baptism of little children and no more used […] And that your congregation be not offended thereat, and do not perchance account it as though their former children were wrongly baptized, or the future ones should not receive a perfect baptism when the said two pieces were left out therewith

Bentheim-Tecklenburg 1588. The Bentheim order states the Reformed objection in a sentence: the exorcisms "have no ground in the Word of God" and were not used at circumcision, nor in the time of Christ and the apostles. Bentheim-Tecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1588 (Reformed; Sehling 22, p. 269):

> daß die bißanhero bey der Tauff gebrauchte aberglaubische Ceremonien und fürnemblich die Exorcismi, die keinen grundt im Wort Gottes haben und im alten Testament bey der Beschneidung und hernach in den zeiten Christi unnd der > heiligen Aposteln nicht im brauch gewesen und mehr die Tauff und alle andere Ceremonien zuvertunckelen dann zuerklaren dienen, abgeschaffet werden that the superstitious ceremonies hitherto used at baptism, and chiefly the exorcisms, which have no ground in the Word of God, and were not in use in the Old Testament at circumcision, nor thereafter in the times of Christ and the holy apostles, and serve rather to darken than to explain baptism and all other ceremonies, be done away

Anhalt 1590: a new baptismal book (Philippist). Sehling describes the Anhalt book. It "agreeth almost wholly with Luther's Taufbüchlein". The exorcism formula is left out, and the opening exhortation of Duke Henry's agenda is added (Sehling 2, p. 531). The exorcism thus became the outward sign by which a Lutheran territory was suspected of Calvinism. Sehling notes for Anhalt that the abolition, "objectively taken", involved no change of confession "with the removal of this adiaphoron", but that the estates took it otherwise (Sehling 2, p. 530).

13.5 Churching of women after childbirth

The medieval church received the mother back at her first churching, about six weeks after the birth. The priest "led her in" (einleiten, introductio) and blessed her (einsegnen, aussegnen). The rite was modelled on the purification of Leviticus 12, and popular belief held that the woman in childbed was in the devil's power until it was done. The evangelical orders took three positions on it:

- abolition, because it implied that childbirth defiled;
- recasting as a thanksgiving, the Kirchgang of the Sechswöchnerin;
- leaving it free, as a thanksgiving the mother might make of her own accord.

13.5.1 Abolished as a papal superstition

The Saxon visitors of 1540 put "leading in" the bride and the woman after childbirth among the ceremonies to be wholly abolished, with sprinkling, the blessing of salt and water, ringing for souls and ringing against storms. Saxony (Albertine), Gemeiner Bericht der Visitatorn, 1540 (Sehling 1, p. 285):

> Vom einleiten und dergleichen. Forthin soll genzlich abgeschaffet sein der braut und sechswochnerin einleiten, sprengen, salz und wasser weihen, für die seelen, und das wetter leuten, und was des dinges mehr ist.

Of leading in and the like. Henceforth shall be wholly done away the leading in of the bride and of the woman after childbed, sprinkling, the hallowing of salt and water, ringing for the souls and ringing against the weather, and whatever more there is of such things.

The same words recur in the Salza order and the general report for the Meissen district, both of 1540, and in Quedlinburg (Sehling 1, pp. 654, 565; 2, p. 262). Brandenburg-Nürnberg in 1533 joined the abolition to pastoral teaching for the women themselves. Women in childbed are not in the devil's power, and their visions and dreams come from bodily weakness. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 177):

> Es sollen auch die pfarherr und prediger die kindbetterin unterrichten, das sie nicht in gewalt des Teufels sein, wie mans bisher nicht on sundern nachtail der gewissen darfür gehalten und gröblich daran geirret hat. […] Darumb ist auch das einsegnen nach dem kindbett nicht von nöten; dann es aus lauter aberglauben fleust, gleich als weren sie durch die geburt, die aus Gottes segnen kumbt, entheiliget. Doch sollen sie nichts dester weniger ir gebürliche zeit sich innen halten, auf das sie inen selbs und den kindlein nicht schaden zufügen an iren leibs gesundheiten

The pastors and preachers shall also instruct the women in childbed that they are not in the power of the devil, as hath hitherto been held, not without especial hurt to consciences, and grossly erred therein. […] Therefore also the blessing after childbed is not needful; for it floweth from mere superstition, as though they were unhallowed by the birth, which cometh of God's blessing. Yet shall they none the less keep within doors their due time, that they do no hurt to themselves and to the little children in their bodily health

The fullest argument is in the order for Thüngen, a lordship in Franconia, of 1564. It gives six reasons against the blessing. One is that it had bred "superstition and sorcery with blessings, St John's Gospel, hallowed waters, salt, herbs, candles and the like". It insists that the six weeks' lying-in be kept for the mother's health, against "hard, tyrannical husbands" who drove their wives back to work on the third or fourth day. And it says that abolishing the blessing does not abolish thanksgiving. Thüngen, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 11, p. 740):

> Wir wollen auch das abschaffen, das das einsegnen keinesweges dohin gemeint oder verstanden wird, als ob die kindbetterin Gott dem Allmechtigen die schuldige und gebürliche danksagung fur die leibesfrucht und fur den gnedigen beistand, schutz und erhaltung nicht erzeigen und tun solten, sondern sollen in viel wege darzu ermahnet sein, doch darneben gelehrt werden, daß solche notwendige danksagung an keinen gewissen ort, stunde oder zeit gebunden sei

We will also abolish it in such wise that the abolishing of the blessing be in no wise meant or understood as though the women in childbed should not show and render to God Almighty due and fitting thanksgiving for the fruit of the womb and for his gracious help, protection and preservation; but they shall be exhorted thereto in many ways, yet withal be taught that such needful thanksgiving is bound to no certain place, hour or time

The Lutheran Harlingerland order of 1573/74 kept the six weeks "not for the sake of the law of Moses, which we in no wise accept". It forbade husbands to force their wives out early, and "rejects the introduction or leading in of the women, as was customary in the papacy" (Sehling 7/1, p. 731).

13.5.2 Kept as a thanksgiving: the Kirchgang

Many Lutheran territories kept the mother's first churching as a public thanksgiving at the altar.

Querfurt. The Magdeburg visitors in Querfurt asked "whether he leadeth in the woman after childbirth". Sehling's note records the outcome: the custom had already ceased in the town but not in the villages, and "from now on a thanksgiving shall take place from the pulpit or before the altar when the woman goeth to church" (Sehling 2, p. 460).

Brandenburg. The Brandenburg town recesses of 1558 (Wusterhausen among them) and the visitation and consistorial order of 1573 kept the "laudably received" offering at the altar by the woman at her churching, as by the bride at her wedding, and gave it to the pastor (Sehling 3, pp. 232, 353, 119). A Frankfurt (Oder) church book described in 1600 contained an Einsegnung der Sechswöchnerinnen in ihrem Kirchgang, "as in the Mark agenda of 1572" (Sehling 3, p. 215).

Lippe. The Lippe order kept the churching but left it free. Such a woman "may of her own free mind go to church, thank God and pray further for grace" (Sehling 21, p. 315).

The Mansfeld Einsegenbüchlein, 1580. The Mansfeld agenda prints a complete form, the Einsegenbüchlein. The order is:

1. An address to the women.
2. The Lord's Prayer.
3. Psalms 127 and 128.
4. A collect of thanksgiving and intercession for the child.
5. A blessing of the child with the sign of the cross.

Mansfeld, Kirchen-Agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 222):

> III. Das einsegen büchlein. Was man aus gottes wort uber die weiber zu lesen und beten pfleget, wenn sie die kinder nach den sechswochen in die kirche bringen. Ir lieben weiber (oder da nur eine person sol eingesegnet werden, liebes weib) weil euch der liebe gott genediglich geholfen und zur geburt einen frölichen anblick gegeben, dem (oder den) kindlein die heilige taufe und uber das auch euch einen frölichen kirchgang bescheret hat, so seid ir ime dafür zu danken schuldig und zu bitten, das er euch ferner sampt dem (oder den) kindlein an leib und seele sterken, in allem guten führen und leiten und für allem argen bewaren wolle. Demnach so betet mit mir also: [Folgt das Vaterunser.] Der 127. psalm [folgt der Psalm]. Der 128. psalm [folgt der Psalm]. Lasst uns beten. O allmechtiger barmherziger gott, der du diesem weibe, in ihrer grossen angst (diesen weibern, in ihren grossen engsten) und kindes nöten gehulfen, und darzu fröliche frucht (früchte) bescheret, mit der taufe und heiligen geist begnadet hast, wir loben dich und danken dir ewiglich und bitten dich durch Jesum Christum deinen lieben son, du woltest dich uber dis (diese) kindlein erbarmen, das (die) auch behüten für allem ubel, sterken, mit deinem geist pflegen und warten, damit es (sie) in rechtem glauben erzogen, und böstendiglich dir allzeit gehorsam zu sein, dich lobe, ehre und preise, (loben, ehren und preisen), mit allen auserwehlten, hier und dort ewiglich, amen. Und du (ir) kindlein, der herr gesegne dich, auf allen deinen (euch, auf allen euren) wegen, von nu an bis in ewigkeit, † . Amen.

III. The churching book. What is wont to be read out of God's word and prayed over the women when they bring the children into church after the six weeks. Ye dear women (or where only one person is to be churched, dear woman), since the dear God hath graciously helped you and given you a joyful sight at the birth, hath granted to the child (or the children) holy baptism and to you moreover a joyful churching, ye are bound to thank him therefor and to pray that he will further strengthen you together with the child (or the children) in body and soul, guide and lead you in all good and keep you from all evil. Therefore pray with me thus: [The Our Father follows.] The 127th psalm [the psalm follows]. The 128th psalm [the psalm follows]. Let us pray. O almighty, merciful God, who hast helped this woman in her great anguish (these women in their great anguish) and travail, and hast moreover granted joyful fruit (fruits), and endued it with baptism and the Holy Ghost: we praise thee and thank thee for ever, and pray thee through Jesus Christ thy dear Son that thou wouldest have mercy upon this (these) little child(ren), keep it also from all evil, strengthen it, tend and care for it with thy Spirit, that it may be brought up in right faith and constantly, being obedient to thee always, may praise, honour and glorify thee with all the elect, here and there for ever. Amen. And thou (ye) little child(ren), the Lord bless thee on all thy (you on all your) ways, from this time forth for evermore, †. Amen.

The same agenda adds pastoral rubrics for the hard cases:

- If the mother dies before her churching, the midwife brings the child, and a prayer of thanks for the child's birth and baptism is said over it.
- If the child dies within the six weeks, the woman is not led to the altar, "for that one should bid her step before the priest to the Lord's altar without her little child might grieve her yet more". She is to go to church quietly with the other Christians.
- If a woman refuses the churching "out of mere defiance", despising the prayers over herself and her child, the pastor is to admonish her. If she will not hear, he is to report her to the superintendent and consistory.

Mansfeld, Kirchen-Agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 223):

> Wenn sich solche felle zutragen, das den müttern ire kindlein mit tode abgehen, ehe die zeit irer sechs wochen umb ist, so lesset mans mit dem kirchgange bleiben, das solche weiber nicht dürfen zum altar geleitet, und für den priester gestelt werden, sondern das dieselben (wenn sie zu irer gesundheit komen sind, und die zeit ires kirchganges verhanden ist) stillschweigend mit andern christen zur kirchen gehen und ir betrübnis, darinnen sie von wegen des tödlichen abgangs irer kinderlein sein, in warer demut unserem lieben herrn gotte fürtragen, im glauben umb gedult und trost und umb fernern segen nach gottes willen bitten. Denn das man sie ohne kinderlein solte heissen für den priester zum altar des herrn treten, möchte sie vielleicht noch mehr und höher betrüben.

When such cases befall that the mothers' little children depart by death before the time of their six weeks is out, the churching is let be, so that such women need not be led to the altar and set before the priest; but they shall (when they are come to their health and the time of their churching is at hand) go silently to church with other Christians, and lay their sorrow, wherein they are by reason of the death of their little children, before our dear Lord God in true humility, and pray in faith for patience and comfort and for further blessing according to God's will. For that one should bid them step before the priest to the altar of the Lord without their little children might perhaps grieve them yet more and more deeply.

Sayn 1590. Sayn printed a long prayer "which the ministers of the church shall use when the women after six weeks go out of childbed to church". It thanks God that he "hath been a faithful helper in need and stood by her in her deadly anguish" (Sehling 19/1, p. 401).

Solms 1599 (Reformed). Solms forbade the woman in childbed to go out before four weeks. She was then to present herself to the pastor, and the christening feast was to be put off until her churching (Sehling 9, p. 340).

13.6 Confirmation

No chrismation. No evangelical order in the corpus anoints at confirmation, and none keeps confirmation as a sacrament. The papal Firmung is rejected everywhere: its claim that no one is a full Christian until anointed by the bishop, and its formula "Signo te signo crucis et confirmo te chrismate salutis". The one order that kept the chrism at all, Electoral Brandenburg in 1540, kept it at baptism (§13.3.2), not at confirmation.

What replaced it. Most orders kept or created an evangelical confirmation with three parts:

1. Instruction in the catechism.
2. A public examination and confession of faith before the congregation, usually at a feast, by children of about ten to fourteen who were to be admitted to the Lord's Supper.
3. Prayer, usually with the laying on of hands.

The Saxon orders, by contrast, often treated the examination itself as "the right Christian confirmation" and had no separate rite.

13.6.1 The reformers' proposal

The Wittenberg Reformation of 1545, signed by Luther, Melanchthon and the other Wittenberg theologians, proposed confirmation as "a profitable ceremony". It was "not for show", but for the keeping of right doctrine and good discipline.
Electoral Saxony, Wittenbergische Reformation, 1545 (Sehling 1, p. 211):

> Confirmation. Dieses wäre hochnöthig in allen kirchen, den catechismum auf bestimpte tage zu halten, die jugend in allen nöthigen artikeln christlicher lehre zu unterweisen. Dazu möcht die confirmation angericht werden, nämlich, so ein kind zu seinen mündigen jaren kommen, öffentlich sein bekenntniss zu hören, und zu fragen, ob es bei dieser einigen göttlicher lehre und kirchen bleiben wollt, und nach der bekenntniss und zusage mit auflegung der hände ein gebet thuen. Dieses wäre ein nützliche ceremonien, nicht allein zum schein, sondern viel mehr zu erhaltung rechter lahr und reines verstands und zu guter zucht dienlich.

Confirmation. This were most needful in all churches: to hold the catechism on set days, to instruct the youth in all needful articles of Christian doctrine. Thereto might confirmation be set up, namely, when a child is come to its years of discretion, to hear its confession publicly, and to ask whether it would abide by this one divine doctrine and church, and after the confession and promise to make a prayer with laying on of hands. This were a profitable ceremony, not only for show, but much rather serviceable to the keeping of right doctrine and pure understanding, and to good discipline.

13.6.2 Hesse 1539: the Ziegenhain and Kassel forms

Ziegenhain 1539 (Moderate Reformed). The Hessian confirmation, devised with Bucer in the Ziegenhain order on discipline and the Kassel church order of 1539, is the source of most later forms. Sehling's editor traces its spread to Calenberg-Göttingen 1542, Waldeck 1556/57, Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1569 and Hoya 1581, among others (Sehling 8, p. 104, n. 17). The Ziegenhain rule sets out the whole act:

- the children are presented by their parents and godparents at a chief feast;
- the elders and ministers stand round;
- the pastor examines them in the chief articles of faith;
- they give themselves publicly to Christ and his church;
- the congregation prays;
- the pastor lays on hands and admits them to the Lord's table.

Hesse, Ziegenhainer Zuchtordnung, 1539 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 104):

> Es sollen auch die eltesten und prediger versehen, daß die kinder, so nun durch die catechismos im christlichen verstande so weit bracht sein, daß man sie billich solle zum tisch des Herren zulassen, uf ein fürnemes fest, als Ostern, Pfingsten und Weihnachten, für aller gemein dem pfarherr an darzu verordnetem ort von ihren eltern und pettern dargestellet werden, umb den die eltesten und alle ander diener des worts stehen sollen. Da solle der pfarherr dieselbigen kinder die fürnemsten stücke des christlichen glaubens befragen, und nachdem die kinder darauf geantwort, sich auch da offentlich Christo dem Herren und seiner kirchen ergeben haben, soll der pfarherr die gemein vermanen, den Herrn diesen kindern umb bestendigkeit und merung des h. Geistes zu bitten und solches gebet mit einer collect beschließen. Dem allem nach soll dann der pfarherr denselbigen kindern die hende auflegen und sie also im namen des Herrn confirmieren und zu christlicher gemeinschaft bestetigen, auch darauf zum tisch des Herren gehen heißen

The elders and preachers shall also provide that the children who are now brought so far in Christian understanding through the catechisms that they may rightly be admitted to the table of the Lord be presented on a chief feast, as Easter, Pentecost and Christmas, before all the congregation, to the pastor at a place appointed thereto, by their parents and godparents, round about whom the elders and all other ministers of the word shall stand. There shall the pastor question the same children in the chief parts of the Christian faith; and after the children have answered thereto, and have also there publicly given themselves to

Christ the Lord and his church, the pastor shall exhort the congregation to pray the Lord for these children for steadfastness and increase of the Holy Ghost, and conclude such prayer with a collect. After all this the pastor shall then lay hands on the same children, and so confirm them in the name of the Lord and establish them in Christian fellowship, and thereupon bid them go to the table of the Lord

13.6.3 A full form: Calenberg-Göttingen 1542

The Calenberg order of Duchess Elisabeth printed a separate Ordnung der confirmation oder firmung. It took its prayers and formula from the Erfurt edition of the Kassel order. Its rite is:

1. Times. Three times a year, at Easter, Pentecost and Christmas, after vespers.
2. Ministers. Two or three neighbouring pastors and, if near, the superintendent, "with due reverence".
3. An exhortation against the papal Firmung and its oil. The ceremony has two parts: catechesis and impositio manuum.
4. The hymn Kom, heiliger Geist.
5. The examination through the whole catechism, "kindly and gently, that they be not frightened".
6. A bidding and two long prayers, the first ending in a paraphrase of the Lord's Prayer.
7. The laying on of hands on each child, with the formula below.
8. Te Deum or a psalm of thanks.

The rubric even asks for a place in the middle of the church where all can see and hear. The exhortation gives the order's view of the old rite. Calenberg-Göttingen, Ordnung der confirmation oder firmung, 1542 (Sehling 6/2, pp. 838–839):

> Denn ists nicht ein nerrische lahr, darin sie furgeben, es konne keiner ein Christ sein, wenn er gleich die tauf empfangen, er seye dan auch gesalbet und gefirmet durch den bisschoff? Ja, wie wöllen sie beweisen, das solcher oley der firmung ein oley des heils sey? […] Aber wir wollen diese affen mit ihrer falschen lahr und unnützen salbungen faren lassen, der heiligen taufe ihre wirde nicht rauben und auch keinem leiblichen oley das heil, sonder allein dem Herrn Christo zuschreiben. Doch weil diese ceremonia des confirmirens, wenn sie recht gebraucht wird, dennoch wol zu leiden und zu erhaltung der kinderzucht sehre nütze ist, so wöllen wir mit Gotts hülfe unterstehen, den rechten brauch derselbigen widerumb in unser kirchen zu bringen

For is it not a foolish doctrine wherein they pretend that none can be a Christian, though he have received baptism, unless he be also anointed and confirmed by the bishop? Yea, how will they prove that such oil of confirmation is an oil of salvation? […] But we will let these apes go with their false doctrine and needless anointings, not rob holy baptism of its worth, and ascribe salvation to no bodily oil, but to the Lord Christ alone. Yet since this ceremony of confirming, when it is rightly used, is nevertheless well to be suffered and very profitable to the keeping of discipline among children, we will undertake with God's help to bring the right use of it again into our church

The words at the laying on of hands, taken from Kassel, became the most widely used evangelical confirmation formula. Calenberg-Göttingen, Ordnung der confirmation oder firmung, 1542 (Sehling 6/2, p. 843):

> Wenn solch gebet geschehen, sol der pfarherr einem jeden kinde insonderheit die hand auflegen und also sagen: Nim hin den heiligen Geist, schutz und schirm fur allem argen, sterke und hülfe zu allem guten, von der gnedigen hand Gottes des Vaters, des Sohns und des heiligen Geists. Amen. Darauf singe dan die gemein einen dankpsalm oder das Te Deum laudamus.

When such prayer is done, the pastor shall lay his hand upon each child severally and say thus: Receive the Holy Ghost, protection and defence against all evil, strength and help unto all good, from the gracious hand of God the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. Amen. Thereupon let the congregation sing a psalm of thanks or the Te Deum laudamus.

The order is careful to deny that the Spirit is given "for the sake of the outward ceremony of laying on". He is given "for the sake of the word and prayer of the church", for "Augustine calleth such laying on of hands nothing else than prayer" (Sehling 6/2, p. 841).

13.6.4 Brandenburg 1540: confirmation by the bishop

Electoral Brandenburg, which kept its bishops, restored confirmation "according to the old custom". The bishop examines the children at his visitation and confirms with the laying on of hands. Because the bishops were few, pastors might confirm in the presence of one of the bishop's learned men, at Easter and Pentecost. The order describes the ancient use as including a cross on the forehead "that they should not be ashamed of the cross of Christ", but prescribes only the laying on of hands and prayer. Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 59):

> Wollen wir, das die confirmation nach dem alten brauch gehalten werde, nemlich also: wenn die getauften zu iren jaren komen, das sie wissen, was sie gleuben und beten, auch nach inhalt des catechismi wissen, wie sie christlich leben und ein erlichen wandel füren sollen, sollen sie in der visitation des bischofs erfordert und verhöret werden, und wo befunden, das sie des glaubens und christlichen wandels guten bericht haben, sol, als obstet, der bischof mit auflegung der hende, gott den allmechtigen bitten, das sie darin bestendig bleiben, erhalten und noch mehr gesterkt werden, und sie also darauf confirmiren und bestetigen.

We will that confirmation be held according to the old custom, namely thus: when the baptized come to their years, so that they know what they believe and pray, and also know according to the content of the catechism how they ought to live as Christians and lead an honest conversation, they shall be summoned and heard at the bishop's visitation; and where it is found that they have good knowledge of the faith and of Christian conversation, the bishop shall, as is said above, with laying on of hands pray God Almighty that they may remain steadfast therein, be preserved and be strengthened yet more, and so thereupon confirm and establish them.

13.6.5 Mansfeld 1580 and Pomerania 1569: confirmation before first communion

Mansfeld 1580. The Mansfeld agenda ties confirmation to the first communion. The children recite the catechism with Luther's explanation and are examined publicly, and this is announced to the congregation. One of two prayers is said, then hands are laid on with a formula that names the absolution and the sacrament the child now desires. Mansfeld, Kirchen-Agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 234):

> (Nach dieser gebete einem, leget man den kindern die hand auf, und betet ferner also. Dieweil du (ihr) den catechismum gelernet und für dieser christlichen gemeine offentlich bekentnis deines (eures) glaubens gethan hast (habt), und zugesagt, dabei bestendig zuverharren, und begerest (begeret) hierauf die absolution und das hochwirdige sacrament zu entpfahen, so verleihe dir (euch) gott darzu den heiligen geist, der dich (euch) regiere, schütze, und zum ewigen leben im rechten glauben, und göttlichem gehorsam erhalte, durch Christum seinen son, amen. Der segen gottes des vaters, und des sons, und des heiligen geists, komme auf dich (euch), und bleibe uber dir (euch) ewiglich, amen.

(After one of these prayers the hand is laid on the children, and [the minister] prayeth further thus:) Forasmuch as thou hast (ye have) learned the catechism and made public confession of thy (your) faith before this Christian congregation, and promised to continue steadfastly therein, and desirest (desire) thereupon to receive the absolution and the most worthy sacrament, God grant thee (you) thereto the Holy Ghost, who may rule thee (you), protect thee, and keep thee unto eternal life in right faith and godly obedience, through Christ his Son. Amen. The blessing of God the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost come upon thee (you), and abide upon thee (you) for ever. Amen.

Pomerania 1569. The Pomeranian order required confirmation once a year in every parish, or twice in the towns, in Lent and at Michaelmas, after the quarterly catechism examination. It called it "confirmation and benediction" as described in the agenda, which "hath been in use for many years in these Pomeranian churches" (Sehling 4, pp. 385–386). The agenda chapter is headed Van der confirmation, wo men de kinder im catechismo vorhören unde insegenen schal, eer men se tom hochwerdigen sacramente tolet ("Of confirmation, how one shall hear the children in the catechism and bless them before they are admitted to the most worthy sacrament"; Sehling 4, p. 441). Lauenburg in 1585 and Hesse in 1566 (Moderate Reformed) and 1574 (Philippist) likewise printed confirmation forms with question and answer, and the Hessian form was copied by Nassau-Weilburg (1576), Corvey (1603) and Hanau-Münzenberg (1609, Reformed) (Sehling 5, p. 458; 8, pp. 300, 430; 10, pp. 251, 498; 21, p. 255).

13.6.6 Strasbourg and the south-west

Strasbourg came to confirmation late, against the Anabaptist charge that infant baptism had destroyed church discipline. Marbach's draft order of 1553 has a chapter Von der kinder firmung and a Forma "as it is held with the children in the parish of St Nicholas". The city clergy approved both in 1557 (Sehling 20/1, pp. 395, 446). Marbach had announced to Bucer in 1551 "a public example of confirmation and imposition of hands, a pious and Christian ceremony, with about twenty boys" after Easter (Sehling 20/1, p. 79, n. 433).

13.6.7 Examination without a rite: Electoral Saxony

The great Saxon order of 1580 did not adopt the laying on of hands. It instructed the pastors to teach the people that the public catechism examination of children and servants is itself "the right Christian confirmation or Firmung". This confirmation is the confirming of the faith that the godparents confessed at baptism. Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 425):

> Und sollen die pfarrer und kirchendiener das volk fleissig unterweisen, und. mit gutem grund berichten, das dis sei die rechte christliche confirmation oder firmung, das ist die bestetigung des glaubens, so die paten an stadt des neugetauften kindleins bekant, darauf auch das kind getauft worden, wann sie nemlich solches in diesem examine erinnert, und demselben in ihrem ganzen leben nachzukommen, fleissig ermanet werden. Welches die papisten anstelien lassen und an stadt dieser christlichen firmung ein schauspiel mit den kindern angestellet

And the pastors and ministers of the church shall diligently instruct the people and inform them on good ground that this is the right Christian confirmation or Firmung, that is, the confirming of the faith which the godparents confessed in the stead of the newly baptized child, whereon also the child was baptized: namely when they are reminded of it in this examination, and diligently exhorted to follow it all their life long. Which the papists have let alone, and in the stead of this Christian confirmation have set up a show with the children

Waldeck in 1556 used nearly the same words of the papal Firmung, "a show full of superstition and error". It nonetheless printed a chapter on "how young boys and girls shall be received into the Christian congregation" (Sehling 9, pp. 283–284). The Reuss lordships ordered that "instead of confirmation" the young be drilled in the catechism through Lent. Those found fit received the sacrament on Maundy Thursday "and are thereafter to be held confirmed Christians" (Sehling 2, p. 156).

13.7 Betrothal, marriage and divorce

Marriage as a "worldly business". For the evangelical orders marriage is not a sacrament but "a worldly business" (ein weltlich geschäft), governed by civil law and local custom and judged by the marriage courts. The church's part is to proclaim the banns, to join the couple if asked, and to read God's Word over them, pray and bless. The marriage law itself (the forbidden degrees, parental consent, the marriage courts) lies outside this chapter, except where it gave the pastor a part to play: at the betrothal, at its dissolution, and at divorce and remarriage (§§13.7.8–13.7.10).

What follows is the liturgy:

- the banns;
- the joining (Trauung, Zusammensprechen), usually at the church door or before the altar;
- the blessing with readings and prayer at the altar (Einsegnung, Einleitung);
- the wedding service that replaced the nuptial Mass (Brautmesse);
- the rules on times, on brides who had fallen, and on widows.

Two formulas divided the country. Luther's North German "Ich spreche sie ehelich zusammen" ("I pronounce them joined in marriage") stood against the South German "Die eheliche Pflicht … bestätige ich" ("The marriage bond … I confirm"). Sehling's Franconian editor traces both to halves of one medieval formula (Sehling 11, p. 202, n. 21).

13.7.1 Luther's Traubüchlein

Luther's Traubüchlein für die einfeltigen pfarherrn is dated variously to 1529 and 1534 (Sehling 1, p. 23). It was printed with the Small Catechism and became the Lutheran standard. Its preface gives the principle. Marriage "is a worldly business", and "every town and land" is to keep its own customs, such as two processions to church or one and the number of banns. "But when it is desired of us to bless them before the church or in the church, to pray over them, or also to marry them, we are bound to do the same." The form follows. Luther, Traubüchlein, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 24):

> Zum ersten, auf der Kanzel aufbieten mit solchen Worten: Hanns N. und Greta N. wollen nach göttlicher ordenung zum heiligen stande der ehe greifen; begehren dess ein gemein geistlich gebet für sie, dass sie es in gottes namen anfahen, und wohl gerathe. Und hätte jemand was darein zu sprechen, der thue es beizeit, oder schweige darnach; gott gebe ihnen seinen segen, Amen. Für der kirchen trauen mit solchen worten: Hanns, willt du Greten zum ehelichen gemahl haben ? Dicat: Ja. Greta, willt du Hannsen zum ehelichen gemahl haben? Dicat: Ja. Hie lasse sie die trauringe einander > geben, und füge ihre beide rechten hand zusammen, und spreche: Was gott zusammen füget, soll kein Mensch scheiden. Weil denn Hanns N. und Greta N. einander zur ehe begehren, und solchs hie öffentlich fur gott und der welt bekennen, darauf sie die hände und trauringe einander gegeben haben, so sprech ich sie ehelich zusammen, im namen des vaters, und des sohns, und des heiligen geistes, Amen.

First, to publish the banns from the pulpit with such words: Hans N. and Greta N. will according to God's ordinance take hold of the holy estate of matrimony; they desire for themselves the common prayer of the church, that they may begin it in God's name and that it may prosper well. And if any have aught to speak against it, let him do it betimes, or hold his peace thereafter. God give them his blessing. Amen. Before the church to marry them with such words: Hans, wilt thou have Greta to thy wedded spouse? Let him say: Yes. Greta, wilt thou have Hans to thy wedded spouse? Let her say: Yes. Here let him have them give the wedding rings to each other, and join their two right hands together, and say: What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder. Forasmuch then as Hans N. and Greta N. desire each other in marriage, and acknowledge the same here openly before God and the world, whereupon they have given each other their hands and wedding rings, I pronounce them joined in marriage, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

At the altar the minister reads four lessons:

1. The institution of marriage, Genesis 2:18, 21–24.
2. God's commandment for the estate, Ephesians 5:22–29.
3. The cross laid on it, Genesis 3:16–19.
4. Its comfort, Genesis 1:27–28, 31 and Proverbs 18:22.

Then he stretches his hands over the couple and prays. Luther, Traubüchlein, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 24):

> Hie recke er die hände uber sie und bete also: Herr gott, der du mann und weib geschaffen, und zum ehestand verordnet hast, dazu mit früchte des leibes gesegnet, und das sacrament deines lieben sohns, Jesu Christi, und der kirchen, seine braut darin bezeichnet; wir bitten deine grundlose güte, du wollest solch dein geschäft, ordenung und segen nicht lassen verrücken noch verderben, sondern gnädiglich in uns bewahren, durch Jesum Christum, deinen sohn, unsern herrn, Amen.

Here let him stretch out his hands over them and pray thus: Lord God, who hast created man and woman and ordained them to the married estate, hast blessed them moreover with fruit of the body, and hast therein signified the sacrament of thy dear Son Jesus Christ and of the church his bride: we pray thy bottomless goodness that thou wilt not let this thy work, ordinance and blessing be displaced or marred, but graciously preserve it in us, through Jesus Christ thy Son our Lord. Amen.

Luther's form passed into the Saxon agenda of 1539 ("as in the Traubüchlein", Sehling 1, p. 274) and most North German orders. Mansfeld in 1580 prefaced it with a warning against deserters and bigamists and an address to the congregation, and added a second exhortation to the couple (Sehling 2, pp. 223–225).

13.7.2 The South German form: Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533

The Franconian order adapted Luther "freely" (Sehling's note). Its rite is:

1. Notice. The couple are to give the pastor notice "a good time before", so that impediments can be searched out.
2. The banns. They are to be proclaimed once in towns and three times in villages, on feast days.
3. At the church. The questions; four readings with headings, "Zum ersten … Zum andern …" (Genesis 2, Matthew 19, Ephesians 5, Genesis 3, Genesis 1 and Proverbs 18); the rings ("if they have rings"); the joining of hands; vows spoken after the minister.
4. The confirmation of the vows.
5. Luther's prayer, then Psalm 128 and the peace.

Several couples may be married together, and the names entered in a register with the baptisms. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 11, pp. 201–202):

> Darnach sprech er: Wölt ir nun soliche pflicht und treu einander laisten, so gebt einander die ring darauf (haben sie anderst ring) und gebt einander die hende! Darnach sprech er dem man vor und laß ine nach sprechen also: Ich N. nime dich N. mir zu einem eelichen gemahle und gelobe dir mein treu. Desgleichen soll er dem weib auch vorsagen und > darauf weiter sprechen: Die eeliche pflicht, die ir da vor Gott und seiner gemain einander gelobt habt, bestetige ich ans befelch der christenlichen gemain im namen des Vaters und des Suns und des Heiligen Gaists. Amen. Was Gott zusammenfügt, soll kein mensch schaiden.

Then let him say: If ye will now perform such duty and troth one to another, give one another the rings thereupon (if they have rings) and give one another your hands! Then let him say it before the man and let him say after him thus: I N. take thee N. to my wedded spouse and plight thee my troth. Likewise shall he say it before the woman also, and thereupon say further: The marriage duty which ye have here vowed one to another before God and his congregation I confirm by command of the Christian congregation, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. What God joineth together, let no man put asunder.

Württemberg in 1536 and 1553 used the same form, done before "the most convenient altar" after two banns (Sehling 16, p. 114).

13.7.3 Strasbourg 1537: the impediments asked thrice

The Strasbourg agenda puts the church's inquiry into the rite itself:

1. The minister asks the couple whether they will live in marriage and confirm their purpose before the congregation.
2. He calls three times for anyone who knows an impediment.
3. He takes their right hands and asks each for consent.
4. He "strengthens" the vows "by command of the Christian congregation".
5. A lesson (Genesis 2, Matthew 19 or Ephesians 5) and an exhortation under four heads.
6. Psalm 128, silent prayer, a long prayer that paraphrases the Lord's Prayer, and a dismissal with a charge to remember the poor.

Strasbourg, Agende, 1537 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, pp. 263–264):

> Ist jemans hie, dem zu wissen sei hindernüs der Ehe ann disen personen sip oder magtschafft halben, aus götlichem gebott, uns durch unser ordenliche Oberkeit erkennet, oder das ir eins gegen anderen personen sunst verpflicht und der Ehe halb verbunden were, oder das sie ir Ehe nitt redlich unnd nach rechter ordnung versprochen hetten, der wölle das melden: Zum ersten, Zum andern, Zum dritten mal. Wo dann nichts anzeigt würt, spricht der Diener ferner: Dieweil dann niemans ist, der solichs widersprechen wille, so bestetige Gott, das er an euch gewircket hat. […] Die Eheliche pflicht, die ir da vor Gott und seiner Gemeind einander gelobt haben, besterke ich aus befelch der christlichen Gemeind, im namen des Vaters, Süns unnd Heilgen Geists, Amen.

Is there any here who knoweth of an impediment to the marriage of these persons by reason of kinship or affinity by God's commandment, as made known to us by our ordinary magistrates; or that either of them were otherwise pledged and bound in marriage to another person; or that they had not promised their marriage honestly and in right order: let him make it known. The first, the second, the third time. Where then nothing is shown, the minister saith further: Forasmuch then as there is none that will gainsay it, God confirm that which he hath wrought in you. […] The marriage duty which ye have here vowed one to another before God and his congregation I strengthen by command of the Christian congregation, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. Amen.

The prayer has a clause that is left out "when couples are blessed who by God's common order have no children to hope for" (Sehling 20/1, p. 266).

13.7.4 The nuptial Mass replaced

Herford 1532. The medieval wedding Mass was abolished. In its place came the Word, the blessing and, in many places, a wedding sermon and hymns. Herford describes the change: the bridal Mass that used to be sung "before the soup" on the Monday is gone. Instead God's Word is preached and the blessing given, and the couple's offering goes to the poor chest rather than on the altar. Herford, Kirchenordnung, 1532 (Sehling 21, p. 192):

> Desgeliken ock, wen de brudegam und bruddes mandages tho kerken gan, is ein wise gewest, vor de soppen ene brutmisse tho singen mit groter lasteringe godes und lichtverdicheit der lüde. So dat nu dorch Godes gnaden aff is und in stede der misse dat wort Godes geprediket wert, der brüdt und brüdegam de segen gegeven, is vorordent van unser > gemeine, dat de brudt und brudegam mit orer fruntschop in stede des offers up dat altar, nu vortan in der armen kisten solck ein offer geven

Likewise also, when the bridegroom and the bride go to church on the Monday, it hath been a custom to sing a bridal Mass before the soup, with great blasphemy of God and frivolity of the people. Since this is now by God's grace done away, and in place of the Mass God's word is preached and the blessing given to the bride and bridegroom, it is ordained by our congregation that the bride and bridegroom with their kin shall henceforth give such an offering into the poor chest instead of the offering upon the altar

The Brautmesse in the Ansbach order. The name Brautmesse survived for the wedding service with its music, as the fees paid to schoolmasters for singing it show (Brandenburg, Sehling 3, pp. 124, 165, 186). The Ansbach Ordo ecclesiasticus of 1592 describes one held at a weekday service:

- a wedding sermon in place of the second lesson;
- before it, Wol dem, der in Gottes furchten steht or a motet;
- after the joining, Wo Gott zum haus nicht gibt sein gunst or Dein ehe soltu bewahren rein, the commandment stanza of Luther's metrical Decalogue;
- figural music.

Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 456):

> Wann aber ein brautmeß, dabei dann der cantor sein mus, wird dieser actus bis umb neun hor aufgezogen, da man allererst zusamschlegt, und stat der andern lection (vor welcher man die tauf verrichtet, so ein kind vorhanden zu taufen) wird eine hochzeitpredigt gelesen, auch zu zeiten vom predigstul getun. Darvor pflegt man zu singen: Wol dem, der in Gottes furchten steht, oder ein mutetam in cantu figurali. Nach der copulation: Wo Gott zum haus nicht gibt sein gunst, oder Dein ehe soltu bewahren rein, sambt dem letzten gesetz des decalogi rhythmici d. Lutheri oder auch ein muteten in figuralgesang

But when there is a bridal Mass, at which the cantor must be present, this office is put off until about nine o'clock, when the bell is first struck together; and in place of the second lesson (before which baptism is done, if there be a child to baptize) a wedding sermon is read, and also at times delivered from the pulpit. Before it they are wont to sing "Happy the Man Who Feareth God", or a motet in figural song. After the joining: "Where God to the house giveth not his favour", or Dein ehe soltu bewahren rein, together with the last commandment of the rhymed Decalogue of Dr Luther, or also a motet in figural song

Mansfeld in 1580 lists the hymns "for the bridal Masses": the Te Deum in German, Am dritten tage eine hochzeit ward (on John 2) and Psalm 127, Vergebens ist alle mühe (Sehling 2, p. 236).

13.7.5 Days, hours and banns

The banns were proclaimed one to three times, on Sundays or feast days. The orders varied:

Order	Banns	Source
Württemberg 1536	twice, in the towns and market towns	(Sehling 16, p. 114)
Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533	once in towns, three times in villages	(Sehling 11, p. 200)
Ysenburg 1587	on three Sundays, the couple applying fourteen days before	(Sehling 10, p. 587)

Hours and days. Konstanz in 1537 (Moderate Reformed) required the banns three or four days before, on a Sunday or feast. It forbade weddings "before daybreak" and the marriage of strangers without inquiry (Sehling 17, p. 415). In much of Lower Saxony the couple went to church on the Monday (Herford, above).

Closed seasons. Weddings were forbidden at the high feasts, in Advent and in Lent. These rules are collected in Chapter 12 §§12.11.3 and 12.12.6.

13.7.6 The bride who had fallen: no wreath

Württemberg 1553. The wreath (Kranz, Kränzlein) worn by the bride on her way to church (Kirchgang) was the sign of maidenhood. The marriage orders forbade it to a bride who had lain with her bridegroom before the marriage was allowed, and with it music, guests and a public wedding feast. Württemberg, Eheordnung, 1553 (Sehling 16, p. 279):

> So sollen sie doch beide von wegen des heimlichen beischlaffens vor zulassung der Ee unnd auch dem Kirchgang gestrafft werden, nämlich die Mannsperson acht tag in Turn an boden mit Wasser und Brot, und die Fraw vier tag in ein Frawengefencknuß gelegt werden, und darzu inen beiden Spil oder Gest auff der Hochzeit zuhaben oder ir ein Crentzlin zum Kirchgang zutragen verbotten sein.

Yet shall they both be punished by reason of the secret lying together before the marriage was allowed and before the going to church; namely, the man shall be laid eight days in the tower on the ground with water and bread, and the woman four days in a women's prison; and moreover music or guests at the wedding shall be forbidden to them both, or that she wear a wreath at the going to church.

Ulm, Baden and Strasbourg. The same rule stands in the Baden marriage order of 1581 and the Ulm Zuchtordnung of 1558. Ulm complained of brides "great with child" who went to church "with the procession and other maidenly adornment" as if they were "honourable, unblemished virgins" (Sehling 16, p. 546; 17, pp. 229, 233). Strasbourg in 1544 (Moderate Reformed) complained of the opposite fault: some would not let maidens be named at the Kirchgang at all (Sehling 20/1, p. 342).

13.7.7 Widows and widowers

Remarriage was free, but not too soon. Ysenburg-Ronneburg in 1587 and Brandenburg-Ansbach in 1573 forbade widows and widowers to marry within a quarter of a year of their spouse's death (Sehling 10, p. 587; 11, p. 369). Others limited the feast. The lordship of Homburg's wedding and baptism order of 1570 required widowers and widows to go to church without music or bridesmaids and to hold no "gift wedding" (giftbrutlofft, the wedding at which gifts were received), only a meal of three dishes at most (Sehling 22, p. 137). Divorced persons might remarry only with the leave of the consistory or marriage judges (Nördlingen 1579; Kurpfalz 1563, Reformed; Sehling 12, p. 346; 14, p. 285).

13.7.8 Betrothal

The betrothal made the marriage. In sixteenth-century law the betrothal (Verlöbnis, Ehegelübde, Eheversprechen, sponsalia), sealed by the handshake (Handschlag, Handstreich), the ring or the Weinkauf drink, bound the couple, and the church wedding (Kirchgang) confirmed it. Hohenlohe's editor notes that the hand-joining and ring of the church rite came from the betrothal, and that in Hohenlohe the betrothal was still held to found the marriage (Sehling 15, pp. 79, 291). The evangelical orders made the betrothal public and brought the pastor into it in three ways:

- Secret betrothals void. Betrothals made "in corners", without the knowledge of parents or guardians, were declared null: Saxony 1540 (winkelehegelübde), Henneberg 1545, Erbach 1572 and many others (Sehling 1, p. 285; 2, p. 283; 9, p. 450). Luther had advised that "secret betrothals be abolished and count for nothing" (quoted by Sehling 7/2.1, p. 895, editor's note).
- The pastor's examination. Before the banns the pastor was to question the betrothed: are they free, are they related within the forbidden degrees, have they their parents' consent? Brandenburg-Ansbach 1556 and Wolfstein 1574 give the questions (Sehling 11, p. 335; 13, p. 584). Nassau-Weilburg in 1576 required those who meant to marry to report to the officers and pastor "before the promise is made and confirmed with the yea" (Sehling 10, p. 268).
- Betrothal before the pastor. Wertheim went furthest. Its order of 1530 required every marriage to be "contracted before the pastor, in the presence of the Schultheiß and two jurors", and gave the pastor seven questions. The handshake itself was to wait until the banns had been read three times and the couple came "before the church or altar on the wedding day".

Wertheim, Kirchenordnung, about 1555, incorporating the instruction of 1530 (Sehling 11, p. 717):

> Darumb gefält uns, daß ein jegliche ehe betaidinget werde vor dem pfarrer, in beisein des schultheißen und zweier schöpfen. Doch soll der handschlag nicht geschehen, bis die eheleute dreimal verkündiget und ausgeschrien werden. [...] Erstlichs soll er die personen, so einander zu der ehe begeren, fragen, ob sie auch mit gunst ihrer eltern und vormund heiraten und ob sie beweisen können, daß sie von denselben gunst und willen erlangt haben. Zum andern soll er sie fragen, ob sie vorhin die ehe einander verheißen - zwischen ihnen beeden allein oder vor andern, welche doch nit von > der herrschaft dazu verordnet sein. […] Ztm dritten soll er fragen, ob kein verhinderung solcher ehe, deren von Gott verboten grad oder sippschaft vorhanden sei.

Therefore it pleaseth us that every marriage be contracted before the pastor, in the presence of the Schultheiß and two jurors. Yet shall the handshake not take place until the couple have been proclaimed and cried three times. […] First he shall ask the persons that desire one another in marriage whether they marry with the favour of their parents and guardians, and whether they can prove that they have obtained favour and consent from them. Secondly he shall ask them whether they have before promised marriage to one another, between them two alone or before others who were not appointed thereto by the lordship. […] Thirdly he shall ask whether there be no hindrance to such marriage, of the degrees or kinship forbidden by God.

The remaining questions ask whether either belongs to a foreign lordship. The couple are then told to settle the dowry now, and to promise nothing "by word or sign" until the wedding day, when the pastor will enter them for the three banns.

13.7.9 Breaking a betrothal

No private dissolution. Because a public betrothal bound, it could not be broken by the parties, their friends or the pastor. Only the consistory or marriage court could release a betrothed person. Prussia in 1575 put it plainly. Prussia, Visitationsabschied für Zinten, 1575 (Sehling 4, p. 153):

> Wenn aber personen im beisein der eltern oder vormünder sich offentlich mit einander verlobt haben, soll sich niemant unterstehen, durch vertrag oder rezess solche von einander zu scheiden. Kein teil sol auch für sich das ander ledig zahlen, sondern was für irrungen und spaltungen in ehesachen fur fallen, sollen die parten in obgedachts consistorium bringen.

But when persons have betrothed themselves publicly to one another in the presence of their parents or guardians, let no man presume to part them from one another by contract or agreement. Neither shall either party of himself count the other free; but whatever errors and divisions fall out in marriage causes, the parties shall bring them before the aforesaid consistory.

Other orders. The Prussian consistory order of 1584 punished both parties and the go-between (Scheidemann) who arranged a private separation (Sehling 4, p. 133). Calenberg-Göttingen in 1588 forbade pastors and officers to part betrothed couples who had "changed their minds" without weighty cause (Sehling 6/2, p. 884). The Palatine marriage-court order of 1563 (Reformed) punished one who betrothed a second partner without first obtaining the court's release from the first (Sehling 14, p. 301). The Dresden marriage order of 1556 allowed a betrothed person deserted for two years to be "declared free" if the absent party did not answer the citation (Sehling 1, p. 344). No order gives a liturgical form for the release; it was a sentence of the court, which the pastor was bound to see before he proclaimed a new betrothal.

13.7.10 Divorce, annulment and the remarriage of the innocent party

Divorce. The orders allowed divorce for adultery and malicious desertion (Matthew 19, 1 Corinthians 7). It was a judgement of the consistory, preceded by an attempt at reconciliation. The Albertine Saxon marriage order of 1556 (Dresden) explained that the court does not part the marriage; the guilty party has broken it, and the court only declares the innocent party free. Saxony (Albertine), Dresdener Ehe-Ordnung, 1556 (Sehling 1, p. 343):

> Wie nun die unschuldige person claget, soll erstlich die reconciliation versucht werden, und so dieselbe nicht erhalten wurd, und die unschuldige person begert, das sie ledig gesprochen werde, sol der richter nach erkundung, ob auch die clagende person ein gut zeugnuss habe, sie ledig sprechen, und zulassen, das sie sich wieder umb in einen christlichen ehestand mit einer andern person begebe, und wurd diese ehe nicht durch den richter zertrennet, sondern durch die schuldige person, die wider gotes willen ihren ehestand selbmutwilliglich zerreist, und in gotes gericht und zorn stelt, aber der richter ercleret nach gotes wort, das die unschuldige person ledig sei

Now when the innocent person complaineth, reconciliation shall first be attempted; and if that be not obtained, and the innocent person desireth to be declared free, the judge, after inquiry whether the complaining person have a good report, shall declare her free and permit her to enter again into a Christian state of marriage with another person. And this marriage is not severed by the judge, but by the guilty person, who wilfully teareth his estate of marriage contrary to God's will and setteth himself in God's judgement and wrath; but the judge declareth according to God's word that the innocent person is free

Annulment. A marriage void from the beginning was not dissolved but declared null. The Palatine marriage-court order of 1563 (Reformed), on impotence existing before the marriage, says that the other party is declared free, "which also is properly no divorce, but only a declaration and explanation that between them there hath never been a marriage". Palatinate, Ehegerichtsordnung, 1563 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 327):

> Hieruf, wha ein ehegemahl vor anfang seiner ehe der natur halben oder sonst zufelligerweiß zu der ehe untuchtig oder ungeschickt ist, alßo das bey rechten, erbarn und gottsfurchtigen leuthen ohne ein wunderwerckh Gottes durch die ordentliche mittel, so unß Gott gegen den vorfallenden unvermuglickhaiten gegeben, nicht zu verhoffen ist, das ihm sein gemahl ihmmer zu ehelichen dinsten daugenlich werde, so khann dasselb khein rechte, naturliche ehe mit einem andern besitzen. Darumb soll das ander ledig gezelt werden, welches auch eigentlich kheine ehescheidung ist, sondern allein ein declaration und erclerung, das zwischen denselben khein ehe nie gewesen sey.

Hereupon, if a spouse be before the beginning of the marriage unfit or unable for marriage by nature or otherwise by accident, so that among right, honest and God-fearing people it is not to be hoped, without a miracle of God, through the ordinary means which God hath given us against such infirmities as befall, that the spouse will ever become fit for the duties of marriage, then such a one can have no right and natural marriage with another. Therefore the other shall be counted free; which also is properly no divorce, but only a declaration and explanation that between them there hath never been a marriage.

The remarriage of the innocent party. The church's one liturgical act in divorce came at the remarriage. The innocent party might marry again, but quietly. Brandenburg-Ansbach's marriage court of 1567 required "a quiet church-going and wedding", and the proclamation summoning a deserting spouse was read from the pulpit of the parish where he had lived (Sehling 11, p. 374). Electoral Brandenburg in 1573 gave the procedure: the bill of divorce shown to the pastor four weeks before, no public banns, and the marriage in the house before two tables of kin. Brandenburg (Electorate), Visitation- und Consistorialordnung, 1573 (Sehling 3, p. 128):

> Wann sich die unschuldige gescheidene person wider verehelichen will, soll sie dem pfarrer, darunter die hochzeit geschehen solle, den scheidebrief, welchen sie von unsern consistorio erlangt, vier wochen zuvor zeigen und ihnen berichten, das sie sich darauf mit einem andern ehelich versprochen und willens were, sich vortrauen zu lassen, und soll der pfarrer sie nicht öffentlich aufbieten, sondern sich indes sonst mit fleisse erkunden und erforschen, ob andere verhindernus da weren [...] fünde er keine, soll die hochzeit auf einen gelegenen tag angesatzt und dazu etwa zwei tische freundschaft, neben dem priester, geladen werden und die traue im hause ohne alle öffentliche hochzeitliche geprenge geschehen, auf das jederman sehe, das diss nicht eine freie, sondern eine nothsache sei, dadurch dem unschuldigen theil geholfen wirdet.

When the innocent divorced person will marry again, he shall show the pastor under whom the wedding is to take place the bill of divorce which he hath obtained from our consistory, four weeks before, and inform him that he hath thereupon promised himself in marriage to another and is minded to be wedded; and the pastor shall not proclaim them publicly, but shall meanwhile inquire and search diligently whether there be any other hindrance [...] If he find none, the wedding shall be set on a convenient day, and some two tables of kinsfolk, besides the priest, invited thereto, and the marrying done in the house without any public wedding pomp; that every man may see that this is no matter of choice but of necessity, whereby the innocent party is helped.

13.8 The sick, the dying, the condemned and the possessed

The orders handle the sick with private ministry rather than with a fixed rite:

- instruction and comfort;
- private confession and absolution;
- communion in the house.

The medieval "last rites" were dismantled. Extreme unction disappears. The reserved sacrament is no longer carried through the streets: the minister consecrates bread and wine at the bedside. The candle in the dying person's hand is taken away. What remains is the Word, the absolution, the sacrament and prayer. The same pastoral pattern was applied to the condemned criminal and, in Pomerania, to the possessed.

13.8.1 Extreme unction

Abolished. No evangelical order prescribes the anointing of the sick. The orders give three reasons: it has no command of Christ; the anointing of James 5 belonged to the apostolic gift of healing and cannot now be used "according to St James's meaning"; and it had been turned into a sacrament of the dying. In its place stand the Word, the absolution, the Supper and the prayer of the church, which is what James 5:14–16 actually commands.

One survival in 1524. Prior Volprecht's German Mass at Nuremberg in 1524 still allowed "if any at his last end desire the anointing, it shall be given him" (Sehling 11, p. 44). The Ansbach visitors of 1528 already asked the clergy "what the right Christian unction and visitation of the sick may be" (Sehling 11, p. 127).

Zweibrücken 1539: James 5 read as a visitation. The Zweibrücken order explains James 5 as the calling of the elders to comfort and pray for the sick, which the church now does with the gospel, the reminder of baptism and the Supper, given in the presence of other Christians. The oil it lets fall. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Form und Ordnung, 1539 (Sehling 18, p. 61):

> Von Krancken zu besuchen. Zu den Krancken wurden die Eltesten, das ist die diener der gemein, beruffen, sie zu trosten und gott vor sie zu bitten, davon Jaco. 5: Das gebett des glaubens wurt den Krancken helffen, und der her wurt in auffrichten, und so er hatt sunde gethan, werden sie im vergeben sein. Nu hatt der barmhertzig got das heilig Evangelium zum trost geben denen die sund und todt schreckt und zu verzweiffeln, treibt, und darzu auch die heilige sacrament verordnet. Darumb trosten wyr die Kranken beide mit verkundigung des heiligen Evangeliums und reichung des heiligen sacraments des leibs und bluts Christi, und erynnern sie des entpfangnen tauffs […] Das oell aber, weil es nit kan nach sanct Jacobs meinung gebraucht werden und sich myßverstandt und mißbrauch zugetragen haben, ist auch kein sacrament noch befelch des herren, laßen wyrs underwegen.

Of visiting the sick. To the sick the elders, that is, the ministers of the congregation, were called, to comfort them and pray God for them; whereof James 5: The prayer of faith shall help the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up, and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. Now the merciful God hath given the holy gospel for a comfort to those whom sin and death affright and drive to despair, and hath ordained the holy sacraments thereto. Therefore we comfort the sick both with the preaching of the holy gospel and with the giving of the holy sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, and remind them of the baptism they have received […] But the oil, since it cannot be used according to St James's meaning, and misunderstanding and misuse have arisen, and it is also no sacrament nor commandment of the Lord, we leave aside.

Lippe 1538: the Gospel instead of the last oil. The Lippe order has a short chapter "Of the last oil": the oil, used among the Jews for the healthy, was given to the sick without ground in Scripture, and the gospel and Christian prayers are to be read in its place. Lippe, Kirchenordnung, 1538 (Sehling 21, p. 319):

> Von der lesten olye De lestenn olie, so auch ahine grundt gotlicher schrift ingesat den krancken, de tho behoff der gesunden bi den Joden gebruket wort, sal abe sein unnd darvor dat evangelium unnd andere christliche gebeder gelesenn werdenn, dardurch de krancken getrostet unnd im geloven mogen gestercket werdenn.

Of the last oil. The last oil, which hath also been appointed for the sick without ground of divine Scripture, and which was used among the Jews for the behoof of the healthy, shall be done away; and instead thereof the gospel and other Christian prayers shall be read, whereby the sick may be comforted and strengthened in faith.

Freiberg 1537. The Albertine visitors at Freiberg ordered in one breath that the sacrament no longer be reserved or carried about, that "the anointing shall henceforth also be done away", and that the sick be communed in German in the presence of others of the household (Sehling 1, p. 466).

13.8.2 No reserved sacrament: communion in the house

The ciboria broken. The reserved sacrament was carried through the streets to the sick in procession, with bell and light, and the reformers made this a chief complaint. The Wittenberg consistory in 1542 ordered all ciboria broken up and communion held at the sickbed. Electoral Saxony, Constitution und artikel des geistlichen consistorii zu Wittemberg, 1542 (Sehling 1, p. 202):

> Item sie sollen darauf achtung geben, damit das heilige sacrament nicht in ciboriis behalten , noch uber die gassen nach papistischem gebrauch getragen, sondern bei den kranken die communion halten, darumb sollen alle ciboria abgebrochen sein und bleiben.

Item they shall take heed that the holy sacrament be not kept in ciboria, nor carried over the streets after the papistical use, but [that they] hold the communion with the sick; therefore all ciboria shall be and remain broken down.

Brandenburg-Nürnberg in 1533 ("they shall not keep, lock up nor carry about the holy sacrament", Sehling 11, p. 184), Hohenlohe in 1553 and Thomas Stieber's instruction for Wolfstein in 1574 say the same (Sehling 15, p. 77; 13, p. 574). The visitors' order for Belgern ordered the pastor "not to keep the host in the sacrament-house any more, but to consecrate it with the sick" (Sehling 1, p. 525).

Not a private Mass. Württemberg in 1536 answered the objection that communion in a house was a "private Mass" (Winkelmesse). The minister does not commune himself but gives the sacrament to another, and the sick man "is not excommunicate by reason of his sickness, but rather by reason of the sickness, if he believe, in the communion of all saints". Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 16, p. 111):

> So ist der kranck von seiner kranckheyt wegen nit excommunicatus, sonder ist vilmer von der kranckheit wegen, so er glaubt, in communione omnium sanctorum, darumb gehört ime auch das Sacrament Communionis zu und sol ime zu trost seines gewissens keines wegs verhalten werden.

So the sick man is not excommunicatus by reason of his sickness, but is rather by reason of the sickness, if he believe, in communione omnium sanctorum; therefore the Sacrament of Communion belongeth to him also, and shall in no wise be withheld from him, to the comfort of his conscience.

The Württemberg order is:

1. 1 Corinthians 11 is read, with a short exhortation.
2. The sick man is heard alone, the others being sent out, and taught and comforted.
3. The general confession and absolution.
4. The consecration with the Words of Institution.
5. Distribution, comfort from the Gospel, and commendation to God.

Reservation outside the sick-call, the Good Friday rite and the consuming of the remaining elements are treated in §§13.22.3–13.22.5.

13.8.3 The Saxon form for the sick, 1539

Duke Henry's agenda gives the order most widely copied in the north. Duke August's order of 1580 reprinted it "word for word" (Sehling 1, p. 370). It has three parts.

Instruction and comfort. "How sick folk shall be instructed and comforted" is an address in four points:

1. Sickness comes for sin.
2. Christ cleanses us through the Gospel and the sacraments, and will cleanse our nature at the last.
3. Sickness and death are sent in grace, to drive us to repentance and faith.
4. All our sins are laid on Christ.

The address ends: "Der herr ist mein licht, fur wem solt ich mich fürchten? … in deine hende befelhe ich meinen geist" ("The Lord is my light, whom shall I fear? … into thy hands I commend my spirit"; Sehling 1, pp. 269–270).

Absolution. It is given in the form for private confession, which ends "Zeuch hin im friede" ("Go hence in peace").

Communion. The Saxon order of communion is printed below. Saxony (Albertine), Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Sehling 1, pp. 270–271):

> Wie man die kranken communiciren sol. Wenn der kranke zuvor durch gottes wort unterrichtet, und mit dem wort der absolution getröstet ist, so bereite man den tisch mit brot und wein ehrlich, mit aufgelegtem tuch etc. zu der communio, und wenn solchs geschehen, spreche man dem kranken einen feinen tröstlichen betpsalmen für, als den xxv. Nach dir herr verlanget mich, mein gott, ich hoffe auf dich, las mich nicht zu schanden werden, das sich meine feinde nicht freuen uber mich etc. oder der gleichen kurzer psalmen. Nach dem psalmen lese man dem kranken einen tröstlichen text aus dem evangelio, als ungeferlich diesen. Johannis am 3. Also hat gott die welt geliebet, das er seinen einigen son dargab, > auf das alle so an in gleuben, nicht verloren werden, sondern das ewige leben haben. Nach dem evangelio bete man mit dem kranken das vater unser. Und spreche darauf die wort des testaments. Unser herr Jesus Christ [folgen die worte der einsetzung] Solchs thut zu meinem gedechtnis. Auf diese wort reiche man dem kranken den leib des herrn unter dem brot, also sprechend: Der leib unsers herrn Jesu Christi, fur dich in tod gegeben, sterke und beware dich im glauben zum ewigen leben, amen. […] Und auf solche wort reiche man dem kranken denn auch das blut des herrn, also sprechend. Das blut unsers lieben herrn Jesu Christi fur deine sünde vergossen, sterke und beware dich in rechtem glauben zum ewigen leben, amen. Darnach spreche man mit dem kranken den 111. psalm. Ich danke dem herrn von ganzem herzen, im rat der fromen und in der gemeine. Oder an stat des psalmes ein kurzem psalm oder das vater unser. Benedictio. Der herr segne dich und behüte dich. Der herr erleuchte sein angesicht uber dich, und sei dir gnedig. Der herr hebe sein angesicht auf dich, und gebe dir friede, amen.

How the sick shall be communicated. When the sick person hath first been instructed by God's word and comforted with the word of absolution, let the table be made ready with bread and wine honourably, with a cloth laid upon it etc., for the communion; and when that is done, let a fine comfortable psalm of prayer be said before the sick person, as the twenty-fifth: Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul; O my God, I trust in thee: let me not be ashamed, let not mine enemies triumph over me, etc., or such like short psalms. After the psalm let a comfortable text out of the gospel be read to the sick person, as about this, John 3: For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. After the gospel let the Our Father be prayed with the sick person, and thereupon the words of the testament be spoken: Our Lord Jesus Christ [the words of institution follow] This do in remembrance of me. Upon these words let the body of the Lord under the bread be given to the sick person, saying thus: The body of our Lord Jesus Christ, given into death for thee, strengthen and preserve thee in the faith unto everlasting life. Amen. […] And upon such words let the blood of the Lord also be given to the sick person, saying thus: The blood of our dear Lord Jesus Christ, shed for thy sins, strengthen and preserve thee in right faith unto everlasting life. Amen. Thereafter let the hundred and eleventh psalm be said with the sick person: I will praise the Lord with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation. Or instead of the psalm a short psalm, or the Our Father. The Blessing. The Lord bless thee and keep thee. The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee. The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. Amen.

The later editions offer shorter psalms (Psalm 125 or 130) and add John 6. After the communion they add Psalms 91 and 117 "if he have repentance and devotion thereto".

Brandenburg-Nürnberg in 1533 had the minister hold the same order in church for a single person who could not wait for the Sunday communion: "with such a person one shall deal in the church even as one dealeth with a sick man in the house" (Sehling 11, p. 200). Veit Dietrich's Nuremberg Agendbüchlein of 1545 adds a chapter of "cases that befall touching the sacrament with the sick" (Sehling 11, pp. 520–521):

- the godless who will not confess their faith are to be left, "for our Lord Christ forbiddeth hard that one cast pearls before swine";
- the sacrament is never to be given in one kind; rather let the sick die without it;
- for one who cannot take wine, "some advise" a drop or two from the chalice in a drink of water, though such may also rely on the Word and spiritual eating;
- rough folk who have long stayed away are to be brought to repentance and then communicated "without delay";
- those in open vice who will not promise amendment are refused;
- those who cannot keep the sacrament down are to be comforted with the Word until they can;
- those already in their last throes or out of their minds are to be prayed for, but not given the sacrament.

The chapter ends with an exhortation not to save the sacrament for the last need, but to receive it in health.

13.8.4 The dying

Veit Dietrich 1545. When the end came, Dietrich told the minister not to shout long exhortations into the dying person's ears. He was to kneel, pray the Lord's Prayer aloud with those present, and close with a short collect commending the dying person, "since he was baptized in the name of Jesus". The candle was not to be put into the hand. A crucifix was permitted, but "the best crucifix" is the Word. Nuremberg, Agendbüchlein of Veit Dietrich, 1545 (Sehling 11, p. 522):

> Im fall, daß der kirchendiener bei dem kranken wer und er jetzund in die züge griffe, da ists nit mer von nöten, den leuten, so zuvor also unterrichtet, lang und vil in die ohren schreien, wie man doch gemeiniglich pflegt, sonder er, der > kirchendiener, sol niderknien und andere auch zum gebet vermanen. Erstlich laut ein Vater unser beten und andere im heißen nachbeten […] Es soll auch der kirchendiener oder pfarrherr, kerzen und anders, so man zuvor bei kranken gebraucht, abschaffen, das man es dem kranken nit in die hende gebe; denn weil solches geschehen, das sie damit bekennen sollen, sie wöllen als christen sterben, wissen wir, das die einige und rechte bekentnus ist dise: wenn man Christum Jesum als den einigen mitler und erlöser erkennet. […] Das man ein crucifix bei den sterbenden hat, ist an im selb nit bös. Aber wer den trost im wort hat, der hat das best crucifix, welchs nit allein die augen ansehen, sonder die ohren fassen und das herz in sich bilden kan.

In case the minister of the church be with the sick person and he now fall into the throes of death, it is no more needful to cry long and much into the ears of people who have been so instructed before, as is yet commonly done; but the minister shall kneel down and exhort others also to prayer. First pray an Our Father aloud and bid the others pray after him […] The minister of the church or pastor shall also do away with candles and other things which were formerly used with the sick, that they be not given into the sick person's hands; for since this was done that they should thereby confess that they would die as Christians, we know that the one and right confession is this: when one acknowledgeth Christ Jesus as the only mediator and redeemer. […] That one have a crucifix by the dying is not evil in itself. But whoso hath the comfort in the Word hath the best crucifix, which not only the eyes behold, but the ears grasp and the heart forms within itself.

Regensburg 1562. In plague time the orders laid the danger on one minister at a time. Regensburg's order of 1562 made the deacon "of the week" serve all the plague-sick in the pest house, the town and the countryside with the sacrament and God's Word. He was to keep away from church, baths and gatherings for that week, while the next deacon served the other sick, the baptisms and the rest. Regensburg, Ordnung für die Geistlichen zur Pestzeit, 1562 (Sehling 13, p. 435):

> Nachdem erstlich vier diaconi seien, so soll derjenig, der wochner ist, bis auf fernere fursehung eines erbarn rats schuldig sein, alle die, so im lazaret, in der stat und eines rats gebiet mit der schweren krankheit oder pestilenz beladen sind, mit dem hochwirdigen sacrament zu fursehen und si mit Gottes wort zu trösten. Doch soll er sich die selbe wochen in allweg anhaimbs enthalten und nit in die kirchen, offenliche bad oder ladschaften unter die gemain komen, sondern allein den kranken, wie ob gemelt, auswarten.

Since firstly there are four deacons, he that is weekly minister shall be bound, until further provision of an honourable council, to provide with the most worthy sacrament and to comfort with God's word all those who are laden with the grievous sickness or pestilence in the pest house, in the town and in the council's territory. Yet he shall in every wise keep himself at home that same week, and not come among the commons into the churches, public baths or gatherings, but only wait upon the sick, as aforesaid.

Wittenberg, Halle and Torgau. Wittenberg's town order of 1533 likewise kept the fourth deacon for the plague-stricken villages "that the other three deacons bring not the pestilence among the people in the town" (Sehling 1, p. 702). The Halle church order (1573?) told the people to confess and receive the sacrament "with healthy body" in time of plague, so as to spare the minister the danger of infected houses (Sehling 2, p. 441). Torgau in 1575 bound every pastor to visit the plague-stricken "unless God should strike his own person" (Sehling 1, p. 683).

13.8.6 The condemned

Veit Dietrich 1545. The prisoner condemned to death was the pastor's charge from sentence to scaffold. Veit Dietrich's chapter "How one shall instruct and comfort prisoners condemned to death" was copied by Pfalz-Zweibrücken (1557), Regensburg (1567), Hohenlohe (1578) and others (Sehling 18, p. 28; 13, p. 484; 15, p. 290). It is a pastoral method in two parts:

- "Terror". Through the Ten Commandments the condemned is brought to know his sin against God, the magistrate and his neighbour.
- "Comfort". The first comfort is for the conscience: God's grace in sending him a minister rather than letting him die "in the fresh deed". The second is against "the shameful death" itself.

It begins with the question why the man lies captive. Nuremberg, Agendbüchlein of Veit Dietrich, 1545 (Sehling 11, pp. 531–532):

> Wie man gefangene und zum tod verarteilte unterrichten und trösten sol. Zum aller erstem mag man fragen, warumb sie da gefangen ligen. Da würt man dann an der antwort bald merken, wie es umb ir herz steh. Etlicher wird schweigen, nichts bekennen oder sich anheben zu entschuldigen, wie er unschuldig drein kommen etc. Etlicher wurds bekennen, aber doch mit eim trotz. […] Etlicher würds also bekennen, das man an worten und geberden sehen muß, das er seer bekummert, vol leids und jammer sei. […] ist er blöd und forchtig, das man ihn mit Gottes güte und barmherzigkeit tröste, ist er verwegen und trotzig oder ungeduldig, das man im die sünde wol einreibe und ein schrecken in in jage, das er sich erkennen und uber seiner mißhandlung reu und leid lerne haben.

How one shall instruct and comfort prisoners and those condemned to death. First of all one may ask them why they lie there captive. Then by the answer one will soon mark how it standeth with their heart. One will be silent, confess nothing, or begin to excuse himself, how he came into it innocently, etc. Another will confess it, but yet with defiance. […] Another will confess it so that one must see by words and bearing that he is sore troubled, full of sorrow and misery. […] if he be timid and fearful, that one comfort him with God's goodness and mercy; if he be bold and defiant or impatient, that one rub the sin well into him and drive a terror into him, that he may know himself and learn to have repentance and sorrow over his misdeed.

Pfalz-Neuburg's general articles of 1576 add a chapter on "the instruction and comfort of prisoners condemned to death, and the burial of their bodies" (Sehling 13, p. 170). The Schwarzburg order of 1574 required that the ministers be told three or four days before an execution (Sehling 2, p. 135).

13.8.7 The possessed: prayer instead of exorcism

Pomerania 1569. The Pomeranian agenda of 1569 gives the only full evangelical rite for the possessed in the corpus. It forbids exorcism and "devil-banning" "as in the papacy", including the earnest exorcisms that some of "ours" have used. It orders that wandering sextons and others who pass themselves off as devil-banishers be examined by the superintendent and, if need be, punished by the secular arm. The pastor is first to warn the people against believing too readily in possession, "as is often alleged in sickness of the head, with the senseless and raving". Prayer is to be made in the neighbouring parishes. The visit itself runs thus:

1. Two or three ministers go together, having prepared themselves by prayer and fasting.
2. The greeting "The peace of our Lord Jesus Christ be in this house".
3. The Lord's Prayer with a few chosen Christians.
4. The sick man is reminded of his baptism and asked to say the creed and a confession of Christ. "If he can, he is not possessed."
5. If possession is not certain, the physicians are to be called.
6. If it is, there is to be no "pomp" of adjuration: Satan is resisted "with prayers and contempt".
7. A defiance of Satan, the laying of the hand on the sick man's head with the Lord's Prayer, a long prayer to Christ, and the Aaronic blessing in Trinitarian form.
8. On preaching days he is brought to a separate, guarded place in the church, and the congregation prays for him until God turns the need.

Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, pp. 461–462):

> Wenn men överst spüret, dat de satan dorch gades vorhenkenisse, uns andren tom exempel unde tor boetpredige, vorhanden is, schal men neen geprenge mit beswerende unde der geliken vörnemen: Sed obsistendum est ei orationibus et contemptu satanae, in nomine domini Jesu Christi, dat is, men schal den homödigen satan vorachten, unde sick mit dem gebede im namen unses herren Jesu Christi, wedder en setten […] Hir lege de prester de hand up des kranken hövet unde spreke: Unse vader, de du bist in dem hemmel etc.

But when it is perceived that Satan by God's sufferance is present, for an example to us others and for a preaching of repentance, no pomp shall be undertaken with adjuring and the like: but he is to be withstood with prayers and contempt of Satan, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that is, one shall despise the proud Satan and set oneself against him with prayer in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ […] Here let the priest lay his hand upon the sick man's head and say: Our Father, which art in heaven, etc.

The chapter ends: "More we cannot do. We must commend the need herewith to God, watch, pray, wait upon the Lord, and not grow weary" (Sehling 4, p. 463).

13.9 Funerals and burial

The evangelical funeral is the medieval funeral stripped of prayer for the dead. Gone are:

- the vigils (the office of the dead);
- the requiem Mass and the Masses of the seventh and thirtieth day and the anniversary (Siebenter, Dreißigster, Jahrtag);
- the sprinkling of holy water and the censing;
- the endowed "soul baths" and "soul gifts" (Seelbad, Seelgerät).

What remained was:

- the procession to the grave led by the schoolmaster and pupils;
- hymns of faith in the resurrection;
- a lesson or exhortation (usually 1 Thessalonians 4) and a collect;
- increasingly, a funeral sermon in the church.

The orders took great care over who might receive this "Christian burial". To refuse it was a sanction of church discipline.

Funeral sermons are treated in Chapter 11, §11.4.6, bells for the dead in Chapter 9, §9.5.6, and the vigils, the Office of the Dead, in Chapter 10, §10.9.

13.9.1 What was abolished

Vigils and soul-Masses. The Saxon visitors of 1528 ordered that "soul-Masses and other bought Masses shall no more be held" (Sehling 1, p. 164). The Ansbach diet of 1526 forbade anyone to be "compelled to hold any Begängnis, seventh or thirtieth day of a departed person" (Sehling 11, p. 90). Veit Dietrich's Nuremberg agenda opens its chapter on burial by abolishing "all papal pomp with holy water, singing over [the dead] and the rest". Nuremberg, Agendbüchlein of Veit Dietrich, 1545 (Sehling 11, p. 528):

> Wie man es mit dem begrebnus halten soll. Bei den leichen, wenn man sie zur erden bestattet, soll alles bebstisch gebreng mit weichwasser, besingen und anderm abgeschaffet sein; denn solches alles nit allein on Gottes wort, sonder auch wider Gottes wort vom bapst angerichtet, als soll es zur seligkeit fürderlich sein. Wo nun ein schule ist, da mögen die schuler das Media vita, Nunc dimitis oder ein andern gesang deutsch oder lateinisch singen und mag der kirchendiener oder pfarherr ungeferlich dise kurze vermanung mit solchen oder andern worten bei den begrebnus tun

How one shall hold the burial. At the dead, when they are committed to the earth, all papal pomp with holy water, singing over [them] and the rest shall be done away; for all this hath been set up by the pope not only without God's word but also against God's word, as though it should further salvation. Now where there is a school, the scholars may sing the Media vita, the Nunc dimittis, or another hymn in German or Latin, and the minister of the church or pastor may make this short exhortation, in these or other words, at the burial

Müntzer at Allstedt (Radical Reformation). Even the earliest German orders kept the procession and dropped the vigils. Thomas Müntzer described the Allstedt practice of about 1523–1524. The text stands at the foot of Sehling 1, p. 507, before the visitation order of 1533. The dead were fetched "with the Benedictus in German, without vigils", the people sang Mitten in dem leben after the burial, and in church 1 Thessalonians 4 and John 5 were read (Sehling 1, p. 507).

13.9.2 The Saxon burial, 1539–1540

Duke Henry's agenda gives the North German pattern.

1539. The 1539 text only prescribes the hymn of Simeon, Mit fried und freud ich far dahin, or Mitten wir im leben sind at the burial.

1540 and 1555. The editions of 1540 and 1555 expand it:

1. In towns the schoolmaster and pupils lead the body "honourably"; in the villages the pastor does.
2. A Latin responsory, such as Si bona suscepimus.

3. German hymns with the people: Aus tiefer not, Mitten wir im leben sind, and at the grave the hymn of Simeon; "if there is time", Wir gleuben all an einen gott.
4. No sermon is required, but a priest present may close with a collect.

Saxony (Albertine), Kirchenordnung, 1539, texts of 1540 and 1555 (Sehling 1, p. 275):

> Wo man schuler hat, lasse man sie erstlich ein latinisch reponsorium singen, als si bona suscepimus etc. Darnach singe das volk mit inen etliche deudsche gesang, als aus tiefer not, mitten wir im leben sind, und bei dem grabe den gesang des heiligen Simeonis, In stedten sollen die leichen ehrlich durch den schulmeister und schuler geleitet werden, nach gelegenheit, mit obangezeigten gesengen, dergleichen aufn dörfern, durch den pfarherr und mit fried und freud etc. item (so man zeit hat) wir gleuben all an einen gott etc. Ist on not, das man bei der begrebnis ein sondere predigt thue, so aber ein priester fürhanden, mag er mit dieser collect beschliessen. Allmechtiger gott, der du durch den tod deines sons die sünd und tod zu nicht gemacht und durch sein auferstehung unschuld und ewiges leben widerbracht hast, auf das wir von der gewalt des teufels erlöset und durch die kraft derselbigen auferstehung auch unsere sterbliche leibe von den todten auferwecket sollen werden, verleihe uns gnediglich, das wir solches festiglich und von ganzem herzen gleuben und die fröliche auferstehung unsers leibs mit allen seligen erlangen mügen, durch denselbigen deinen son, Jesum Christum, unsern herrn, amen.

Where there are scholars, let them first sing a Latin responsory, as Si bona suscepimus, etc. Thereafter let the people sing with them some German hymns, as "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee", "In the Very Midst of Life", and at the grave the hymn of holy Simeon. In towns the bodies shall be honourably escorted by the schoolmaster and scholars, as occasion serveth, with the aforesaid hymns; likewise in the villages by the pastor, and with "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart", etc.; item (if there be time) "We All Believe in One True God", etc. It is not needful that a special sermon be made at the burial; but if a priest be present, he may conclude with this collect: Almighty God, who by the death of thy Son hast brought sin and death to nought, and by his resurrection hast restored innocence and everlasting life, that we, being delivered from the power of the devil, should by the power of the same resurrection have our mortal bodies also raised from the dead: grant us graciously that we may believe this steadfastly and with our whole heart, and obtain the joyful resurrection of our body with all the blessed, through the same thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

1580. Duke August's order of 1580 kept this text and added the funeral sermon. After the body has been carried to the churchyard with the ministers and people, and the people have gathered in the church, the minister reads one of the printed sermons that follow, or "if it be specially desired of him" preaches a fitting sermon of his own, and closes with a collect. Model Leichpredigten follow, the first on 1 Thessalonians 4 (Sehling 1, p. 371).

13.9.3 The Franconian burial: Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533

The Franconian order gives the procession and the graveside exhortation. Where there are scholars and priests they sing:

- the Benedictus, or the "prayer of Moses", Psalm 90 (Domine, refugium);
- an antiphon such as Media vita in morte sumus or Ego sum resurrectio et vita, or a German hymn.

Then an exhortation on 1 Thessalonians 4:13–18 is made, at the house or at the grave. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 203):

> Ir andechtigen lieben brüder und schwestern in dem Herrn, dieweil der allmechtig Gott N., unsern lieben freunde bruder und glid Christi, durch den tod von disem elenden leben in dem rechten, christenlichen glauben (als wir hoffen) zu seiner ewigen rue hat gefordert und hingenummen und wir dardurch zu trauern, klagen und laid zu tragen bewegt werden, auf das wir uns christenlich darin halten, wöllen wir hören die tröstlichen wort des heiligen Pauli, der also spricht […] Soliche vermanung mag geschehen im haus, da man die leich austregt, oder bei dem grabe, wo am maisten volks darbei ist.

Ye devout, dear brethren and sisters in the Lord: forasmuch as Almighty God hath called and taken N., our dear friend, brother and member of Christ, through death out of this wretched life in the right Christian faith (as we hope) to his eternal rest, and we are thereby moved to mourn, lament and bear sorrow; that we may bear ourselves as Christians therein, we will hear the comfortable words of holy Paul, who saith thus […] Such exhortation may be made in the house whence the body is carried out, or at the grave, where most people are present.

The 1591 revision. The revision of 1591 allowed other texts and "funeral sermons and Christian hymns", and kept the Latin figural music for processional funerals "if specially desired". For "godless and epicurean people" who had not come to church or sacrament for years, or died in drunkenness or rage, it changed the hymns. Mit fried und freud ich fahr dahin was not to be sung. Instead Mitten wir im leben sind was sung at the door, and penitential hymns on the way (Sehling 11, p. 202, apparatus).

13.9.4 Who received Christian burial

Regensburg 1560. Burial with hymns, bells and sermon was the church's testimony that the dead had died in the faith, and it could therefore be refused. Regensburg's council set out the principle. The funeral sermon and hymns are "not to be given to every one without distinction as an adiaphoron or worldly thing and friendship". They belong to those who confessed the true doctrine and used Word and sacrament, and not to despisers who died without repentance. These may still be "carried out honourably and laid in the common churchyard … only the ceremonies that belong to Christianity excluded". Suicides are buried outside the churchyard by the executioner. Regensburg, Erklärung … welchen … leichpredig und leichgesänge nit mögen zugelassen werden, 1560 (Sehling 13, p. 448):

> Nachdem leichpredig und leichgesäng so vil auf ihnen haben, das die kirche den verstorbenen damit fur ir glied erkent, ihm damit christlichs lebens und sterbens ir zeugnus gibt, ir selb domit auch so vil auflegt, daß sie mit ihme zu gleichem gericht fur Gott steen will auf eben den glauben, welchen der verstorbene bekant und im leben erzaigt hat (so vil si wais oder wissen kan), so sind die bemelten beede, leichpredig und leichgesang nit jederman also gar one unterscheid mitzutailn als ein adiaphoron oder weltlich ding und freundschaft, sondern Gottes, gewissens und christenlicher zucht halb mit vleiß zu erwegen, wem si mitzutailn oder nit mitzutailn sind. […] Weil es alzeit fur ein sonderbare, hohe sünde und unbußfertigkait ist geachtet worden, sich selb fursetzlich und verstendiglich zu entleiben, aus was ursachen es sei, so wirdet darauf auch altem herkommen nach fur billich angesehen, das dieselben personen nit auf den gemainen freithof gelegt, sondern außerhalb freitshof dem nachrichter oder schlegel zu begraben oder zu verbrennen bevolhen werden, andern zum schrecken und zum exempel.

Since the funeral sermon and the funeral hymns signify so much, that the church thereby acknowledgeth the departed for her member, beareth him witness thereby of a Christian life and death, and also layeth so much upon herself that she will stand with him at the same judgement before God upon the very faith which the departed confessed and showed in his life (so far as she knoweth or can know), therefore the said two, funeral sermon and funeral hymn, are not to be imparted to every one without distinction as an adiaphoron or worldly thing and friendship, but for God's, conscience's and Christian discipline's sake it is to be diligently weighed to whom they are to be imparted or not. […] Since it hath always been held a peculiar, high sin and impenitence to slay oneself wilfully and knowingly, from whatever cause, it is accordingly also, after old custom, deemed right that such persons be not laid in the common churchyard, but be committed to the executioner or knacker to be buried or burned outside the churchyard, for a terror and example to others.

The same order makes allowance for those who die by accident, drowning or falling. These cases are to be judged one by one.

Mansfeld 1580. Mansfeld went further. Heretics, open despisers of the sacraments and those who died impenitent in open vice had always been refused "Christian burial and the customary ceremonies" there. They were not laid with other Christians nor "accompanied with bells or hymns". Pastors were to keep it so. Mansfeld, Kirchen-Agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 246):

> solchen sind bis daher in dieser grafschaft Mansfelt nach gottes wort aus gnugsamen ursachen die christlichen begrebnis und gewönlichen ceremonien, das man sie nicht zu andern christen geleget und weder mit dem geleute oder mit gesengen beleitet hat, abgeschlagen und versaget wurden. Bei solchem brauche sol es auch nochmals erhalten werden.

to such have hitherto in this county of Mansfeld, according to God's word and for sufficient causes, Christian burial and the customary ceremonies been refused and denied, so that they were not laid with other Christians, and were accompanied neither with ringing nor with hymns. By such custom it shall still be kept.

Children: Brandenburg-Ansbach 1594. Children were a particular case. The Ansbach consistory noted in 1594 that unbaptized children were not buried with other Christians. It noted too that baptized children under twelve who had not yet communicated were buried in some places with procession and scholars and in others "silently", "whereby Christian parents are not only made sore troubled, but oftentimes the mother, as the weaker vessel, falleth into great temptation". It then laid down a common order (Sehling 11, p. 392). At Soest the theologians' articles provided, as Sehling's editor summarizes them, that no funeral sermon be preached for children who had not yet gone to the Lord's Supper (Sehling 22, p. 380).

13.10 Ordination

The evangelical ordination is a public rite of the church. It confirms a man already examined and called to the office of preaching and the sacraments. It has three parts:

- the prayer of the congregation;
- the reading of 1 Timothy 3 and Acts 20 with the ordinand's promise;
- the laying on of hands by the ordinator and the other ministers, with the Lord's Prayer and a prayer for the Holy Spirit.

What was dropped. It drops the vesting, the anointing of the hands and the delivery of chalice and paten, the parts of the medieval rite that conferred the power to offer sacrifice. The Merseburg draft of 1545 names them, "the putting on of the garments, and unction etc.", as "needless, abusive ceremonies, which did nothing for the ordination" (Sehling 2, p. 6). How far the evangelical diaconate was also conferred by ordination is treated in Chapter 16 §§16.5 and 16.8.

Where it was done. The orders differ in this:

- Centrally. In Saxony ordination was done at Wittenberg or Leipzig before the candidate went to his parish.
- In the parish. In Hesse, Lippe and many later orders it was done in the candidate's own parish by the superintendent, joined with his installation (§13.11).

The vows taken at ordination are treated in Chapter 17, §17.4, and the examination and trial sermon before it in Chapter 15, §15.7.3.

13.10.1 Why the evangelicals ordained

The Wittenberg Reformation of 1545. The first Wittenberg ordination was held in 1535. Ordination had belonged to the bishops, but they had "long persecuted the divine truth". It could not be sought from them while they required an oath to false doctrine. The Wittenberg Reformation of 1545 nevertheless kept the door open: if the bishops would accept right doctrine and appoint able examiners, "they could do much good". Electoral Saxony, Wittenbergische Reformation, 1545 (Sehling 1, p. 211):

> so sind doch die regenten schuldig, ihre arbeit dazu zu thuen, dass man prediger und priester haben möge, und dass die selbigen an gewissen örten von gelehrten gottfürchtigen leuten dazu verordnet, verhöret, angenommen oder verworfen werden. Diese arbeit ist den bischofen befohlen gewesen. Nu haben sie nu lange zeit die göttliche wahrheit verfolget, und lassen die kirchen in ihren eignen gebieten ledig stehen, wüst und heidnisch werden. […] Denn wo sie verfolger christlicher lehr bleiben, und nicht wollen ordiniren ohne verpflichtung zu falscher lehr und zu verfolgung der wahrheit: so kann man die ordinatio bei ihnen nicht suchen.

yet are the rulers bound to do their part thereto, that men may have preachers and priests, and that the same be ordained, examined, accepted or rejected at certain places by learned and God-fearing men. This work hath been committed to the bishops. Now they have for a long time persecuted the divine truth, and let the churches in their own territories stand empty and become waste and heathen. […] For where they remain persecutors of Christian doctrine, and will not ordain without an obligation to false doctrine and to the persecution of the truth, ordination cannot be sought from them.

Albertine Saxony 1557. The Albertine general articles of 1557 fixed the places: "The ordination of priests shall be undertaken at Leipzig and Wittenberg, and be done and held in all wise as it hath been customary at those places from the time of the pure evangelical doctrine". The candidate was to be examined in doctrine, asked where he had studied and how he had lived, and made to preach publicly once or more (Sehling 1, p. 322).

13.10.2 The Wittenberg form, 1537–1539

Sources. Sehling prints Luther's Forma der Ordination of 1537 in what Rietschel held to be its oldest form. His apparatus gives Bugenhagen's expanded Wittenberg text of 1539 and the form Melanchthon gave to two Kulmbach preachers in 1538. After it comes the Latin form "used when foreigners come to seek ordination who do not understand German". Sehling's headnote traces the form into the Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel order of 1543, Hildesheim, Mecklenburg 1552 and Sarcerius's Mansfeld Ordinatien form (Sehling 1, pp. 24–26).

The rite is in seven parts:

1. Prayer before. After the examination, the congregation is asked in the sermon to pray for the ordinands and the whole ministry.
2. The hymn. All kneel before the altar, the ordinator and the presbyters with the ordinands, and the choir sings Veni sancte spiritus with the versicle Cor mundum crea in me, Deus and the collect of the Holy Spirit.
3. The lessons. The ordinator goes up the altar step and reads 1 Timothy 3:1–7 and Acts 20:28–31.
4. The charge and promise. He addresses the ordinands: they are not set to keep "geese or cows" but the church bought with God's blood, to feed it with the pure Word, guard it against wolves and sects, and live honestly with their households. Then he asks "Seid ir nu solches zu thun bereit?" ("Are ye now ready to do this?"). They answer "Ja".
5. The laying on of hands. With the hands of the ordinator and all the presbyters on the ordinands' heads, the Lord's Prayer is said aloud, then the prayer "Barmherziger gott, himlischer vater … die ernte ist gros" ("Merciful God, heavenly Father … the harvest is great").
6. The sending. 1 Peter 5:2–4: "So gehet nu hin und weidet die herde Christi" ("Go ye now therefore and feed the flock of Christ"). In Bugenhagen's text the ordinator then blesses them with the sign of the cross: "Benedicat vobis dominus, ut faciatis fructum multum".
7. Nu bitten wir den heiligen geist is sung, the Mass follows, and the newly ordained commune first.

The Latin form gives the charge, the question, the laying on of hands and the prayer in one continuous text. Luther, Forma ordinationis latina, 1539 (Sehling 1, p. 28):

> Haec vos facturos esse pro virili, clara voce hic in publico promittite: Dicatis: promitto. Imponite manus. Oremus coniunctis precibus. Pater noster qui es in coelis. […] Clementissime deus, aeterne pater domini nostri Jesu Christi, qui per os dilecti filii tui, domini nostri, Jesu Christi ad nos dixisti „Messis quidem copiosa, operarii vero pauci. Rogate ergo dominum messis, ut ipse extrudat operarios in messem suam." Huic tuo mandato divino obsequentes toto pectore oramus, ut hisce petentibus ab hac ecclesia confirmationem suae vocationis, et nobis, et universis vocatis ad ministerium verbi tui, spiritum sanctum tuum benigne digneris largiri, quo possimus esse magno numero consociati fideles et constantes ministri evangelii tui, muniti et roborati ope tua et praesidio adversus diabolum, mundum et carnem, ut per nos quamvis indignos et imbecilles, tamen sanctificetur nomen tuum, augeatur regnum tuum, et fiant aliqua tibi grata et multis salutaria. […] Nunc igitur abeuntes iuxta praeceptum Petri apostoli, pascite gregem Christi eum, qui vobis commissus est […] Benedicat vobis dominus, ut faciatis fructum multum. Amen.

That ye will do these things to the utmost of your power, promise here in public with a clear voice: Say, I promise. Lay on hands. Let us pray with joined prayers. Our Father, which art in heaven. […] Most merciful God, eternal Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who by the mouth of thy beloved Son our Lord Jesus Christ hast said unto us, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth labourers into his harvest": obeying this thy divine command, we pray with our whole heart that thou wouldest vouchsafe graciously to bestow thy Holy Spirit upon these who seek from this church the confirmation of their calling, and upon us, and upon all that are called to the ministry of thy word, whereby we may be, joined in great number, faithful and steadfast ministers of thy gospel, fortified and strengthened by thy help and defence against the devil, the world and the flesh, that through us, though unworthy and weak, thy name may yet be hallowed, thy kingdom increased, and some things be done well-pleasing to thee and saving to many. […] Now therefore, going forth according to the precept of the apostle Peter, feed the flock of Christ which is committed to you […] The Lord bless you, that ye may bring forth much fruit. Amen.

The ordinands are said to seek "the confirmation of their calling" from the church. The call comes first, through the congregation and magistrate. Ordination confirms it publicly with prayer.

13.10.3 Ordination within the Mass: Merseburg 1545

The draft. When Luther was at Merseburg in 1545, Prince Georg of Anhalt, administrator of the see in spiritual things, drafted the order for the first evangelical ordination there. Sehling summarizes it from the Zerbst manuscript:

1. A sermon explaining ordination and the laying on of hands, and why the vesting and the unction were dropped.
2. A sung Latin Mass: Veni sancte spiritus, the introit Benedicta sit sancta trinitas, Kyrie and Gloria.
3. A German collect for the ordinands, and the epistle Ephesians 4:7.
4. The scrutinium: questions on faith, on heresies, and on life and office.

5. The Alleluia, the Gospel John 20, the Creed, and the Veni creator while ordinator and ordinands kneel.
6. 1 Timothy 3 and John 20 read.
7. The commission of "the ministry of the word and the administration of the sacraments, the use of the keys … and authority to ordain others".
8. The laying on of hands by the ordinator and all the priests in turn, with Luther's prayer Barmherziger gott.
9. 1 Peter 5, and the blessing with the sign of the cross, received kneeling.
10. The preface, Sanctus, Lord's Prayer and consecration "in the usual manner".
11. The communion of the ordained, with Ite in orbem or Jesus Christus unser heiland.
12. The Te Deum.

Merseburg, Georg of Anhalt's draft Ordinations-Ordnung, 1545, as summarized by Sehling (Sehling 2, p. 7):

> Ordinator liest text Thimo. 3. 1 und si placet spruch Johannes cap. 20. Und Jesus sprach zu seinen Jüngern: Friede sei etc. „Hierauf befel der ordinator ministerium verbi et administrationem sacramentorum, usurn clavium (etiam si placet) autoritatem alios ordinandi expresse propter astantes." (Auflegung der Hände durch Ordinator und alle Priester der Reihe nach.)

The ordinator readeth the text 1 Timothy 3:1, and if it please, the saying John 20: And Jesus said unto his disciples, Peace be unto you, etc. "Hereupon let the ordinator commit the ministry of the word and the administration of the sacraments, the use of the keys (also, if it please) the authority to ordain others, expressly, for the sake of the bystanders." (Laying on of hands by the ordinator and all the priests in turn.)

Georg as bishop. Sehling adds that Georg "had himself consecrated bishop on 2 August 1545, and thereafter performed the ordinations in person; in all he ordained 81 preachers" (Sehling 2, p. 8). This, with the ordination by Bugenhagen of Tilemann von Hussen as the first evangelical bishop of Schleswig in May 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 300), is the corpus's evidence for the consecration of evangelical bishops. The orders print no form for it.

13.10.4 Regensburg 1553: the Spirit as the "true priestly ordination and unction"

The Regensburg Form der Ordination oder Priesterweihe, probably by Nikolaus Gallus, opens with the Veni sancte spiritus and a defence of the right to ordain. The power of the keys, and with it the power to call and ordain ministers, belongs to the true church. Within the church, "for the sake of order", it is exercised by the ministers. The defence ends with a declaration of what ordination gives. Regensburg, Form der Ordination oder Priesterweihe, 1553? (Sehling 13, p. 429):

> Wir halten aber die ordination nach apostolischem brauch mit auflegung der hende der priesterschaft und gemeinem gebet, glauben, das dardurch der Heilig Geist geben werde zum ampt, das er durch dasselbig kreftig sein wolle, wie Christus spricht: Nemet hin den Heiligen Geiste usw.; welcher geist die rechte priesterweihe und ölung ist, so gewisse zeugnus der schrift hat und gegeben wird, Gotts word zu predigen und sacrament zu reichen, nit zu opfern für die lebendigen und toten, davon die schrift nichts weis.

But we hold ordination according to apostolic use with the laying on of the hands of the priesthood and common prayer, and believe that thereby the Holy Ghost is given unto the office, that he will be mighty through the same, as Christ saith: Receive ye the Holy Ghost, etc.; which Spirit is the true priestly ordination and unction, which hath sure witness of Scripture and is given to preach God's word and to administer the sacraments, not to offer for the living and the dead, whereof the Scripture knoweth nothing.

The rest of the rite follows this order:

1. Prayer and lessons. The Lord's Prayer, then 1 Timothy 3 and Acts 20 with a short exposition.
2. The vow. The ordinand vows "in place of an oath" to preach purely according to the prophets, the apostles and the Augsburg Confession, to administer the sacraments as Christ instituted them, and to adhere to no false doctrine: "Ich, N., gelobe hiemit offentlich fur Gott und seiner gemeine, das ich solches alles treulich halten wil. So war mir Gott helfe" ("I, N., vow hereby publicly before God and his congregation that I will faithfully keep all this. So help me God").
3. The commission, with the laying on of hands by all the ministers.
4. A prayer and the blessing "Gehe hin und bringe viel frucht" ("Go and bring forth much fruit").

Regensburg, Form der Ordination oder Priesterweihe, 1553? (Sehling 13, pp. 430–431):

> Darnach legen alle diener die hende auf und wird ihm das ampt solcher weise befolen: So du dann solchs angelobt hast und Christus seiner kirchen befolen, diener des worts zu senden, gleich wie ihn der Vater und er seine lieben aposteln gesendet hat, so geben wir dir jezt kraft desselben befels himit gewalt, zu predigen das evangelium und sacrament zu reichen, wie er spricht: Leret sie halten alles, was ich euch befolen habe, im namen des Vaters und des Sons und des Heiligen Geistes! Amen.

Then all the ministers lay on their hands, and the office is committed to him in this wise: Forasmuch then as thou hast vowed this, and Christ hath commanded his church to send ministers of the word, even as the Father sent him and he his dear apostles, so we give thee now, by virtue of the same commandment, power hereby to preach the gospel and to administer the sacraments, as he saith: Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

13.10.5 Ordination in the parish: Hesse 1574 and the Palatinate 1592

Hesse 1574 (Philippist). The Hessian agenda of 1574 joins ordination to the first installation of a pastor in his own church. Two or three neighbouring pastors attend as witnesses. The rite runs:

1. A sermon of half to three-quarters of an hour on the office of preacher and hearers.
2. Kom heiliger Geist, the superintendent and pastors facing the people and the ordinand facing the superintendent.
3. An address on the vacancy and the lawful call.
4. A long reading on the pastor's office: Matthew 28, Titus 1, 2 Timothy 3–4 and others.
5. A list of the pastor's duties, and the ordinand's vow.
6. The laying on of hands, kneeling at the altar, with the formula below.
7. A prayer, and the commendation of the church to the new pastor and of the pastor to the people.

Hesse, Agende, 1574 (Philippist; Sehling 8, pp. 454–455):

> Nach diesem gebet söllen dem ordinando, welcher für dem altar kniend bleibt, die hende aufgelegt werden, und sofl der superintendens oder sein substitut also sagen: So ordene und bestetige ich nun von wegen der kirchen Gottes euch auf euwere getane zusage zum ordentlichen diener der kirchen und lehrer des heiligen evangelii, im namen Gottes des Vaters und des Sohns und des heiligen Geistes. Amen.

After this prayer hands shall be laid upon the ordinand, who remaineth kneeling before the altar, and the superintendent or his substitute shall say thus: So I now ordain and confirm you, on behalf of the church of God, upon your promise made, as an ordinary minister of the church and teacher of the holy gospel, in the name of God the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Sehling's editor notes that these words are new against the Hessian (Moderate Reformed) tradition of 1539 and 1566 (Sehling 8, p. 454, n. 55).

The Palatinate 1592. The Reformed Palatinate used a Heidelbergische forma ordinationis. It read 1 Timothy 3 and 4 and Titus 1 and prayed for the Spirit. Then, with the laying on of hands, came a formula close to the Saxon investiture of 1580 (§13.11).
Kurpfalz, Ordnung der Ordination, 1592 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, p. 792):

> Nachdem wir nun im namen Gottes versamlet, Gott, unsern himlischen vater, durch Jesum Christum miteinander angerufen und gebeten und nicht zweifeln, daß er uns laut seiner göttlichen zusag gnediglich erhört und gewehret habe, so ordne, confirmire und bestätige ich als ein ordentlicher diener der gemein Gottes euch hiemit zum predigampt und jetzo zu eim diener und seelsorger der christlichen gemein zu N. mit ernstlichem befelch, daß ihr der gemein Gottes ohne ärgernus fleißig und treulich, wie ihr vor Gott schuldig, vorstehet, im namen des vaters und des sohns und des heyligen geysts, Amen. Imponatur manus.

Now since we are gathered in the name of God and have together called upon God our heavenly Father through Jesus Christ and prayed, and doubt not that he hath graciously heard and granted us according to his divine promise, I, as an ordinary minister of the congregation of God, ordain, confirm and establish you herewith to the office of preaching, and now to be a minister and pastor of the Christian congregation at N., with earnest charge that ye preside over the congregation of God without offence, diligently and faithfully, as ye are bound before God, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. Let the hand be laid on.

Other forms. Other orders with their own ordination forms include:

- Pomerania's agenda of 1569, whose first chapter is "How priests shall be ordained in Christian wise to the holy office of preaching" (Sehling 4, p. 421);
- Marbach's Strasbourg order of 1553, where pastors and helpers are examined in the clergy convent and then "confirmed and ordained with laying on of hands and prayer" before the whole congregation on the following Sunday (Sehling 20/1, p. 424);
- the Lippe order of 1571 (Sehling 21, p. 436);
- the Schaumburg order of 1614, which follows "the reading, prayer and laying on of hands" of Luther's form (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 140).

13.11 Installation of pastors, superintendents, abbots and bishops

Ordination happened once, but every move to a new cure needed a public installation. The orders call it variously:

- Investitur (investiture);
- Einweisung (induction);
- Präsentation (presentation);
- commendiren, einleiben und installiren (commending, incorporating and installing).

The superintendent, or a neighbouring pastor in his name, came with the patron's or prince's officer. He preached on the ministry, prayed over the new minister and commended the people to him and him to the people. Where the candidate was newly called, ordination and installation were often one act (§13.10.5). The same pattern served for superintendents and, in Württemberg, for the evangelical abbots of the monastery schools. For evangelical bishops the orders say only that they were ordained "with prayer and the laying on of hands", like other ministers.

13.11.1 The Saxon investiture, 1580

The form and its spread. The most widely used form was printed in the Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel order of 1569 under the heading "In what wise a new minister of the church shall be commended, incorporated and installed by the superintendents in his church". Sehling's editors note it at Oldenburg 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1127, n. 2). The same text stands in:

- Lippe 1571 (Sehling 21, p. 438);
- Pfalz-Neuburg 1576 (Sehling 13, p. 173);
- Duke August's Saxon order of 1580, where it is joined to ordination (Sehling 1, p. 382).

The rite. The superintendent or his adjunct comes "with the officer, the collator or the lord of the place, together with a neighbouring pastor as witnesses of the act". The rite then runs:

1. Nun bitten wir den heiligen geist or Kom heiliger geist.
2. A sermon on the ministry of the Word, urging the people to love God's Word and honour its ministers.
3. The Creed sung, during which the superintendent goes to the altar and has the new pastor or deacon kneel.
4. A short address on the lawful choice and call.
5. A collect for the preservation of the ministry, John 20:21–23, 1 Timothy 3:1–7 and Acts 20:28–31.
6. A second prayer, or Luther's ordination prayer "Barmherziger gott".
7. The Lord's Prayer, said or sung.
8. The laying on of the right hand on the bare head, with the formula below.
9. The Te Deum or another hymn.

Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 383):

> Nach dem gebet oder gesang des vater unsers, sol sich der superintendens vor dem altar gegen dem volk wenden, und wie (nach christlicher freiheit, so von dem herrn Christo der kirchen in eusserlichen mittelmessigen ceremonien gegeben) gebreuchlich, sein rechte hand dem neuen pfarrer oder diacon auf sein blos heubt legen, und also sagen. Dieweil wir im heiligen geist versamlet, gott unsern himlischen vater durch Jesum Christum unsern herrn und heiland uber dich angerufen und gebeten, und deshalben nicht zweifeln, er werde uns, laut seiner göttlichen zusagung, gnediglich erhört > und gewert haben, demnach so ordne, confirmire und bestetige ich dich, aus göttlichem befehl und ordnung, zu einem diener und seelsorger dieser gemein, mit ernstlichem befehl, das du solcher in warhaftiger furcht gottes ehrlich, ohn alle ergernis, mit höchstem fleis und treuen vorstehen wollest, wie solches einem getreuen hirten der schäflein Christi gebüret, und wie du vor dem gerichtstul unsers herrn Jesu Christi an jenem tag, dem ernsten gerechten richter zur antwort derenthalben stehen, und seines urteils gewarten must, im namen des vaters, und des sohns, und des heiligen geistes, amen.

After the prayer or the singing of the Our Father, the superintendent shall turn before the altar toward the people, and, as is customary (according to the Christian liberty given by the Lord Christ to the church in outward, indifferent ceremonies), lay his right hand upon the bare head of the new pastor or deacon, and say thus: Forasmuch as we, gathered in the Holy Ghost, have called upon God our heavenly Father through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour over thee and prayed, and therefore doubt not that he will have graciously heard and granted us according to his divine promise: therefore I ordain, confirm and establish thee, by divine command and ordinance, to be a minister and pastor of this congregation, with earnest charge that thou preside over it in true fear of God honourably, without any offence, with the utmost diligence and faithfulness, as becometh a faithful shepherd of the sheep of Christ, and as thou must stand before the judgement seat of our Lord Jesus Christ on that day to answer therefor to the earnest and righteous Judge, and await his sentence: in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Where it was done. In the Reuss lordships the newly ordained were "inducted, invested, presented and commended to the people" by the superintendent of each place (Sehling 2, p. 155). In Brandenburg the visitors recorded that a town's pastor, called by the council, had been "confirmed and solemnly invested by the superintendent" at the visitation (Sehling 3, p. 183). Baden in 1556 distinguished two cases (Sehling 16, p. 526):

- a man new to the ministry was "installed by the superintendent before the whole congregation";
- one already in the ministry was only "commended to the church with the ordinary prayer".

13.11.2 Presentation in the Reformed Palatinate, 1592

The Palatine Forma praesentationis of 1592 (Reformed) puts four questions to the new minister before the congregation, after the sermon and at the place of the Lord's Supper, with the officer present. Kurpfalz, Ordnung der Einführung der Kirchendiener, 1592 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, p. 793):

> Erstlich, ob er das zeugnus des heyligen geistes in seinem hertzen empfinde, das er solchen hohen dienst nicht umb eigen nutzes oder ehr, sondern allein umb der ehrn Gottes und erbauung seiner christlichen kirchen willen begeret? Zum andern, ob er entschlossen, ohn allen falsch und heuchelei die prophetische und apostolische schriften als den einigen, unbeweglichen grundt unser seeligkheit seinen anbevolhenen zuhörern mit höchstem vleis und treu offentlich und insonderheit eines jeden notturft und gelegenheit zu verkündigen und zu ercleren? Zum dritten, ob er auch die h. und hochwürdigen sacramenta unsers herren Jesu Christi nach deßselben stiftung und einsatzung ohn allen menschligen tandt und zusatz raichen und ußthailen wolle? […] Fürs vierdt, ob er durch Gottes gnadt für sich und die seinigen also leben und wandeln wolle, das sich seine zuhörer an ihme nicht zu ergern, sonder zu bessern haben?

First, whether he feeleth in his heart the witness of the Holy Ghost, that he desireth so high a service not for his own profit or honour, but only for the honour of God and the edification of his Christian church? Secondly, whether he be resolved, without all falsehood and hypocrisy, to proclaim and expound the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures, as the only immovable foundation of our salvation, to the hearers committed to him, with the utmost diligence and faithfulness, publicly and privately according to each one's need and occasion? Thirdly, whether he will also administer and dispense the holy and most worthy sacraments of our Lord Jesus Christ according to his institution and ordinance, without any human trifling and addition? […] Fourthly, whether he will, by God's grace, so live and walk for himself and his household that his hearers may have no offence in him, but be bettered?

After his "express yes" to each, he is "presented to the church" with a prayer to Christ "who alone awakeneth, calleth and maketh fit such ministers". The same questions, adapted, were put to the lay elders at their installation (see Chapter 16 §16.6.3).

13.11.3 The evangelical abbots of Württemberg

An installation in place of an abbatial blessing. Württemberg kept its great monasteries as schools for future ministers, with evangelical "prelates" as their abbots. An order of about 1556 for "the presentation and investiture of new prelates" replaced the abbatial blessing with a civil oath and an evangelical installation:

1. The oath. On the morning of the installation the new abbot's obligation is read to him by the secretary of the church council. He takes the oath with three fingers of his right hand laid in the Gospel of John.
2. In the church. He is led to the abbot's stall. The schoolboys sing German psalms, the Creed or the Lord's Prayer. The provost or a theologian preaches on the ministry and on the true use of monasteries.
3. The investiture. Kom heiliger Geist is sung. Before the altar the new prelate kneels and is "invested or installed according to the agenda", which is the Württemberg order of 1553. The act ends with "a fine hymn or motet and the blessing".
4. The presentation. He is then presented to the school, where the eldest preceptor gives a Latin oration and the pupils give their handfast promise of obedience. Next he is presented to the officials and household of the monastery, and to its subjects, who also give their hands.
5. The meal. A breakfast follows, to which the neighbouring pastors are invited.

Württemberg, Investiturordnung für evangelische Prälaten, after 1556 (Sehling 16, pp. 321–322):

> Würt ime sein Obligation oder Reverß, so vorhin inn gewohnlicher, gemeiner form begriffen unnd uff Pergamen ingrossiert, durch den Kürchenraths Secretarium fürgeleßen unnd volgends ime durch den Probst oder den Theologum, so inn ihren eines Abweßen zum actu verordnet, die Bibel oder new Testament fürgehallten, darein er drey finger der rechten hanndt inn das Evangelium Ioannis legt […] Wann nhun die Predig geendet, singet man: Khum hayliger Gaist, teutsch, unnd geet der Probst oder verordnet Theologus für den Alltar, zu wölchem der Herr Landthoffmeister unnd director oder ihren zwen usser den verordneten Commissariis den newen Prelaten füeren, der vor dem alltar nider knüet unnd vermög deß agend Büchlins ordenlich investiert oder installiert unnd endtlich mit einem schon gesanng oder muteten unnd dem Seegen beschlossen würt.

His obligation or bond, drawn up beforehand in the usual common form and engrossed on parchment, is read to him by the secretary of the church council, and thereafter the Bible or New Testament is held before him by the provost or the theologian appointed to the act in his absence, into which he layeth three fingers of his right hand in the Gospel of John […] When now the sermon is ended, "Come, Holy Ghost, God and Lord" is sung in German, and the provost or the appointed theologian goeth before the altar, to which the Lord Steward and the director, or two of the appointed commissioners, lead the new prelate, who kneeleth down before the altar and is duly invested or installed according to the agenda, and it is concluded at last with a fine hymn or motet and the blessing.

13.11.4 Bishops and superintendents

No consecration rite. No order in the corpus prints a rite for consecrating a bishop. The evangelical bishops of Schleswig, Samland and Pomesania, and Merseburg under Georg of Anhalt, were ordained like other ministers.

Schleswig-Holstein 1542. The Schleswig-Holstein order of 1542 makes the ceremonies for bishop and presbyter the same: prayer from the pulpit, a lesson, and prayer with the laying on of hands. The first evangelical bishop, Tilemann von Hussen, was ordained in Schleswig cathedral by Bugenhagen in May 1542 (Sehling 23, pp. 120, 300). Schleswig-Holstein, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 23, p. 120):

> Wen he Visitert, mach he erwelde unde tho eme geschickede Prester ordineren, wor he wil; süs anders schal he ordineren tho Slesewick yn syner Kercken. Wo averst unde mit welcken Ceremonien de ordinatio Episcopi et Presbytery schal thoghan, Nömlick mit vorghandem bede vam Predigstole, mit Lection uth der Hilligen Schrifft, mit bede unde uplegginge der hende, Alse de hilligen Apostel hebben gedan, Dat alle schal yn ein sonderlick Bock werden gestellet.

When he visiteth, he may ordain priests that are chosen and sent to him, wherever he will; otherwise he shall ordain at Schleswig in his church. But how and with what ceremonies the ordinatio Episcopi et Presbyterii shall be done, namely with prayer going before from the pulpit, with a lesson out of the Holy Scripture, with prayer and laying on of hands, as the holy apostles have done, all this shall be set in a special book.

Prussia 1568. The Prussian order of 1568 regulated the election of the bishops of Samland and Pomesania. They were to be chosen "with the good counsel of the bishop then living, of all the princely court and land councillors", with eight deputies of the nobility and eight of the towns and other learned ministers. It confirmed their "spiritual government and full jurisdiction" (Sehling 4, p. 107).

Superintendents. The orders give no separate liturgy for installing a superintendent beyond the investiture of §13.11.1. Sehling's introductions record such installations only as events: Jacob Runge, for instance, "was installed into the office of general superintendent of Pomerania-Wolgast" on 7 March 1557 (Sehling 4, p. 323).

13.12 Minor orders, lay offices, church workers and religious communities

13.12.1 The minor orders and the lay offices of the congregation

No conferral of minor orders. The evangelical orders did not confer the minor orders (porter, lector, exorcist, acolyte) or the subdiaconate. Their functions passed to sextons, schoolmasters, schoolboys and the deacons of the poor. The full evidence, with the installation of each office, is set out in Chapter 16 §§16.3 and 16.8. In brief:

- Laying on of hands was used, besides ministers of the Word, only:
  - for deacons of the poor in Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed) and the London strangers' church (Reformed);
  - for lay elders in Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed), the London church and the Palatinate (1592) (both Reformed);
  - for the Bohemian Brethren's clerical deacons.
- Prayer, a handfast vow or an oath installed:
  - Reformed elders elsewhere (Kurpfalz about 1601, Hanau 1609, Solms), and the elders of Lutheran Veldenz;
  - Lutheran deacons of the poor in Pomerania;
  - churchwardens.
- Nothing is described for the Bohemian acolytes, Lutheran almoners and most churchwardens beyond appointment.

Three full forms. Three forms in the corpus install elders and deacons with prayer and the laying on of hands, as a true ordination to a lay office. They are given here in full.

Hesse 1566: elders (Moderate Reformed). The Hessian order of 1566 has the elders chosen in each church by its ministers with members of the council and congregation, by vote (Acts 14:23). They are examined on their willingness and then "ordained" in their own church by the superintendent at visitation, or by a pastor with one or two other ministers. The rite runs:

1. A short address, as at the ordination of pastors.
2. The lesson Acts 20:28–31 ("Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock").
3. A charge expounding the elders' office in five points:
   - to guard with the ministers against false doctrine and to see that the sacraments are rightly given;
   - to keep the ministers in unity and the congregation free of hatred and schism;
   - to admonish negligent ministers;
   - to exercise the church's judgement: to rebuke the fallen, put the obstinate in the ban, and loose the penitent;
   - to help the ministers in answering questions, reconciling enemies and relieving the poor.
4. The question: will they do all this "before the face of God and of our Lord Jesus Christ and all the elect angels, with the whole congregation here present"? Each answers in turn, as the pastors do at ordination.
5. The people kneel, and the pastor prays.
6. The pastor and the other ministers lay on hands.
7. The charge, "We commit unto you this church".
8. An exhortation to the congregation to receive them with goodwill.
9. Psalm 23, Der Herr ist mein Hirte; the blessing; the names entered in the church book.

Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 209):

> Demnach soll der pfarherr jedermann zum gebet kurzlich vermanen und, wenn sie niedergekniet, ihnen also vorbeten: Almechtiger, ewiger Gott, himlischer Vatter, nachdem dein geliebter Sohn, unser Herr und hoherpriester Jesus Christus verheißen, er wolle allezeit bei uns bleiben bis ans ende der welt, und hat gleichwol den menschen mancherlei gaben verlihen, under diesen aber auch hulf, beistand und gewalt, die kirchen recht zu ordiniren und zu erhalten, so bitten wir demütiglich, daß du dieser deiner diener herzen mit deinem h. Geist begnadigest, lerest und heiligest, uf daß sie mit weisheit und heilsamen rat jederzeit gefaßt, lustig und von herzen diese deine kirch sampt den pfarherrn und eltesten, so > im wort arbeiten, treulich und bestendiglich regieren, damit man die geistliche frucht an allen gleubigen volkomlich und uberflüssig spüren möge durch denselben deinen Sohn Christum unsern H. etc. Darauf antworten sie alle: Amen. Darnach soll der pfarherr und die andern ministri ihnen die hende auflegen, wie auch zuvor gesagt, etc. Nach dem allen soll man die ordinanden in die mit stellen und ihn die kirch zu versorgen und zu verwalten mit solchen worten befehlen: So befehlen wir euch diese kirch, in welcher ihr zu eltesten seid erwelet worden, daß ihr die herde des Herrn, so er mit seinem blut erlöset, und vom heiligen Geist euch vertrauet ist, wol regiret und gesund behaltet, und daß ihr solchs alles verrichten möget, so seid vorsichtig, habt fleißig acht uf alles, was sich zutregt, seid den dienern des worts in allen dingen behülflich. Wan sie ratschlagen, so handelt weislich und ufrichtig, in vermanungen seid sittig, im straffen allezeit ingedechtig der liebe. Wan ihr urteilet oder richtet, so legt alle menschliche affect von euch; alles, was ihr oder andere vorbringet, das handelt nach der regel des göttlichen worts. Es soll euch nichts heftigers angelegen sein, dan Gottes ehr und die erbauung der gleubigen.

Then shall the pastor briefly exhort every one to prayer, and when they have kneeled down, pray before them thus: Almighty, everlasting God, heavenly Father, forasmuch as thy beloved Son, our Lord and high priest Jesus Christ, hath promised that he will abide with us alway unto the end of the world, and hath nevertheless given unto men divers gifts, and among these also helps, assistance and authority rightly to order and maintain the churches: we beseech thee humbly that thou wouldest endue, teach and sanctify the hearts of these thy servants with thy Holy Spirit, that they, being at all times furnished with wisdom and wholesome counsel, may gladly and heartily govern this thy church faithfully and steadfastly, together with the pastors and elders which labour in the word; that the spiritual fruit may be perceived in all the faithful fully and abundantly; through the same thy Son Christ our Lord, etc. Whereupon they all answer: Amen. Thereafter the pastor and the other ministers shall lay their hands upon them, as was said before, etc. After all this the ordinands shall be set in the midst, and the church shall be committed unto them to care for and to govern with such words as these: We commit unto you this church, in which ye have been chosen elders, that ye govern well and keep in health the flock of the Lord which he hath redeemed with his blood and which the Holy Ghost hath entrusted unto you; and that ye may perform all this, be circumspect, take diligent heed to all that befalleth, be helpful to the ministers of the word in all things. When they take counsel, deal wisely and uprightly; in admonitions be modest; in rebuking be ever mindful of love. When ye judge or give sentence, lay aside all human affection; all that ye or others bring forward, handle it according to the rule of the divine word. Let nothing lie more heavily upon you than the honour of God and the edification of the faithful.

Hesse 1566: deacons (Moderate Reformed). The deacons of the poor are chosen by the preachers or elders with members of the council and congregation, at least two in each church, and put on probation (1 Timothy 3:10). At their ordination the minister reads them a charge in three points: to show that they have the Holy Ghost by seeking only God's honour; to live honourably and rule their households; and to gather the alms, rents and dues with care, keep them in a register, pay the ministers' wages, relieve the poor in due time, and keep the church fabric in repair. The charge ends with the vow. The laying on of hands follows "with common prayer", on the apostles' example in Acts 6 (Sehling 8, pp. 207–208). Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 211):

> Sollet auch allezeit eingedenk sein, daß ihr nit allein menschen, sondern auch Gottes diener seit, und derwegen nit allein den menschen, sondern auch Gott dem Herrn, der sich nit triegen lesset, von euerm ampt rechenschaft geben müsset. Dies seint der diacon in der gemein Gottes vornemste empter, welche in der heiligen schrift angezeigt sein. Darumb beger ich nun von euch vor dem angesicht Gottes und seiner h. engeln, daß ihr wollet angeloben und zusagen, solchs alles treulich zu halten.

Ye shall also be ever mindful that ye are servants not of men only but of God also, and must therefore give account of your office not to men only but also to God the Lord, who is not deceived. These are the chief duties of the deacons in the congregation of God, which are shewn in the holy Scripture. Therefore I now desire of you, before the face of God and of his holy angels, that ye will vow and promise to keep all this faithfully.

Hesse 1566: sextons (Moderate Reformed). The same order has the sextons (Opfermänner, aeditui, custodes) taken on by the pastor and elders with the superintendent's knowledge, with no rite (Sehling 8, p. 211).

Micron's London order: elders (Reformed). The Dutch stranger church in London installed both elders and deacons by a public "confirmation" (bestetigung) with laying on of hands. Its Ordinancien (1554) are printed by Sehling in the East Frisian German edition of 1565. The elders' rite, in chapter 6, runs:

1. After the sermon the elders are set before the congregation. The minister reports from the pulpit that their election was lawful and no hindrance was found.
2. Three questions:
    - Do they feel the witness of the Holy Ghost that they take the office for God's honour and not their own?
    - Do they believe that the prophetic and apostolic doctrine contains all that is needful to salvation?
    - Will they support the ministers, edify the congregation by their life, and submit to Christian discipline if they offend?
3. A prayer to Christ and the Lord's Prayer.
4. The laying on of hands by "the other ministers and the minister of the word", with the blessing quoted below under the Palatinate.
5. Exhortations to the congregation (to pray for the elders) and to the elders (to fear no man, watch over the ministers' doctrine and life, and guard the flock from wolves).
6. A psalm and the dismissal.

Micron, Ordinancien (1554), East Frisian German edition, 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 596):

> Herr Jesu Christe, du Sohn des lebendigen Gottes, der du deine gemeine hie auf erden durch den dienst der menschen, darzu ordenlich beruffen, biß ans ende der welt regieren wilst, wir bitten dich demütiglich, du wollest dise menner, unsere brüder (welche zu dem dienst des regiments dieser deiner gemeine erwehlet sind), mit den gaben deines heiligen Geistes dermassen erleuchten, daß sie in ihrem beruff treulich wandlen und denselbigen biß zum ende ihres lebens aufrichtig treiben mögen, zu deiner und deines himlischen Vaters ehre, welchen wir durch deinen namen demütiglich anruffen, wie wir von dir gelehret sind, sprechende: Unser Vater, der du bist in den himlen etc.

Lord Jesus Christ, thou Son of the living God, who wilt govern thy congregation here on earth unto the end of the world by the service of men orderly called thereto: we beseech thee humbly that thou wouldest so enlighten these men, our brethren (who are chosen to the service of the government of this thy congregation), with the gifts of thy Holy Spirit, that they may walk faithfully in their calling and carry it on uprightly unto the end of their life, to the honour of thee and of thy heavenly Father, whom we humbly call upon through thy name, as we are taught of thee, saying: Our Father, which art in heaven, etc.

Micron's London order: deacons. The deacons' rite, in chapter 7, follows the same pattern "exactly", as the editor notes. The four questions add a vow to gather and distribute the alms "without any respect of persons". The prayer asks Christ, who has commended the poor to us, to "root out all roots of covetousness" and give these men his Spirit "as thou didst of old to Stephen". After the laying on of hands the minister exhorts the rich to give, the whole congregation to sobriety and labour, and the poor to pray for the rich. Micron, Ordinancien (1554), East Frisian German edition, 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, pp. 597–598):

> Herr Jesu Christe, der du uns dich selbst in uns armen und unsere armen in dir selbst eigentlich befohlen hast, daß man ein besondere sorge derselbigen in deiner gemeine tragen sol, darzu diaken durch deine aposteln geordnet sind, wir biten [!] dich demütiglich, du wollest alle wurzelen des geizes auß unsern herzen rotten und diesen männern deinen Geist geben, wie du vorzeiten Stephano, deinem ersten mertler, so zu diesem dienst geordnet war, uberflüssig mitgeteilet hast, auf daß sie deinen armen unter uns gottseliglich und treulich dienen in warer liebe one einiges ansehen der personen oder bewegung ihrer affecten [...] Wann das gebet volendet ist, werden ihnen die hende aufgelegt, und der diener spricht mit heller stimme also: Gott der Herr und unser himlischer Vater, der euch zu dem dienst der diakeney beruffen hat, der regiere euch gendiglich mit seiner göttlichen kraft, weißheit und gütigkeit, daß ihr in ihm wirdiglich wandlen möget, zu seiner ehren und seiner gemeinen besserung, umb seines eingebornen Sons Jesu Christi, unsers Herren willen. Amen.

Lord Jesus Christ, who hast expressly commended thyself unto us in our poor, and our poor in thyself, that a special care should be had of them in thy congregation, whereunto deacons were ordained by thine apostles: we beseech thee humbly that thou wouldest root out of our hearts all roots of covetousness, and give unto these men thy Spirit, as thou didst of old impart it abundantly to Stephen thy first martyr, who was ordained to this service; that they may serve thy poor among us godly and faithfully in true love, without any respect of persons or motion of their affections [...] When the prayer is ended, hands are laid upon them, and the minister saith with a clear voice thus: God the Lord and our heavenly Father, who hath called you to the service of the diaconate, govern you graciously with his divine power, wisdom and goodness, that ye may walk worthily in him, to his honour and the edification of his congregation, for the sake of his only-begotten Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Palatinate 1592: elders (Reformed). The Palatine form of 9 December 1592 for installing the elders "who labour not in the word" is Micron's elders' rite almost word for word: the same report from the pulpit, the same three questions, the same prayer, laying on of hands, exhortations and psalm. No Palatine form for deacons is printed. Kurpfalz, Einführung der Senioren, 9 December 1592 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, pp. 789–790):

> Darnach werden ihnen die händt aufgelegt von den andern dienern und vom diener des worts, welcher spricht mit heller stim also: Gott und unser himlischer vater, der euch mit uns zu dem regiment diser seiner gemeindt (nach der lehr seines worts) berufen und ausgesondert hat, der erleuchte euch auch durch seinen heiligen geist und stercke euch mit der kraft seiner unuberwindtlicher handt, das ihr euern dihnst treulich und bestendig volnfuhren moget zu ehren seines namens und erbauung seiner gemeindt, Amen.

Thereafter hands are laid upon them by the other ministers and by the minister of the word, who saith with a clear voice thus: God our heavenly Father, who hath called and set you apart with us to the government of this his congregation (according to the doctrine of his word), enlighten you also by his Holy Spirit and strengthen you with the power of his invincible hand, that ye may fulfil your service faithfully and steadfastly to the honour of his name and the edification of his congregation. Amen.

13.12.2 Sextons

The sexton (Küster, Opfermann, Mesner, Sigrist, Glöckner) was chosen with the pastor's and the officer's knowledge and examined in reading, writing, singing and the catechism. He then bound himself to the pastor and parish by a pledge rather than with a rite. The Lippe order of 1571 gives the pledge in full:

- reverence and obedience to the pastor;
- an honest life "as an example to the flock";
- learning and leading the hymns of the feasts;
- opening and locking the church;
- keeping the font filled with clean water;
- keeping church, ornaments and churchyard clean.

It adds a warning against sextons who still dealt in "godless devil's blessings or charms" or wrote out "St John's Gospel" as an amulet. Lippe, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 21, p. 447):

> Nach solcher Exploration oder erkündigung soll sich der angenommen Küster dem Pastor unnd Pfarleuten obligirn oder verpflichten in massen, wie volgt: Das er gegen seinem Pastor in allen Christlichen und seinem Ampt zugehörigen diensten ohn unlust, murren oder verzug sich willig und bereit finden lasse, Item Im billiche Reverentz und Ehrerbietung erzeigen und beweisen wolle, Auch ein zuchtig, Erbarlich und eingezogen Leben und wandel mit dem Pastor als ein Exemplar gregis füren, Deßgleichen, das er auch die schöne Geistliche Lieder und heilsame, nützliche Psalm von den Fürnembsten Festen und Feyrtagen fleissig lerne und mit rechter andacht dem Volcke vorsinge […] Hierneben sol auch der Küster zu rechter, gewönlicher zeit die Kirchen auff- und zuschliessen, den Tauffstein offt mit reinem, frischem Wasser füllen, die Kirchen und derselbigen Ornamenta, auch Kirchhöfe, seuberlich, reinlich und, wie es sich eigent und gebüret, zierlich halten und verwaren.

After such exploration or inquiry the sexton that is accepted shall oblige or bind himself to the pastor and parishioners in manner as followeth: that he be found willing and ready toward his pastor in all Christian services belonging to his office, without displeasure, murmuring or delay; item, that he will show and prove to him due reverence and respect; also lead a modest, honourable and retired life and conversation with the pastor, as an example to the flock; likewise, that he also diligently learn the fine spiritual songs and wholesome, profitable psalms of the chief feasts and holy days, and sing them before the people with right devotion […] Besides this, the sexton shall also open and lock the church at the right and customary time, often fill the font with clean, fresh water, and keep and preserve the church and its ornaments, and the churchyards also, cleanly, neatly and, as is meet and fitting, seemly.

Heidelberg 1572: the bell-ringer's appointment and pledge (Reformed). In the Palatinate the sexton's place was filled by a written appointment (Bestallung), to which the appointee answered with a signed pledge (Revers). The bell-ringer of the collegiate church of the Holy Ghost at Heidelberg, Philipp Reysing, was appointed on 15 May 1572 by the steward of the church's property. His articles bound him:

1. to take his orders from the ministers, serve the sick as told, and help hear the children in the catechism;

2. to ring for every sermon and stay in church during it, keeping order;
3. to keep the cloths, silver and vessels for the Supper and baptism, received by inventory;
4. to clear out the chests and lumber that hucksters put in the church, and keep the doors clear;
5. to drive out "the wicked boys and other rabble" who soil the pews between sermons;
6. to set up and take down the candles and lanterns, and in plague time and damp weather to fumigate the church with burning juniper;
7. to grease and keep the bells, above all the two great bells and the two choir bells;
8. to keep the royal, electoral and princely tombs clean and locked, and open them only in his own presence.

His wages were 16 florins 15 albus and money for six pounds of hellers from the foundation, three albus for every funeral he rang, three for every wedding, four pence for every baptism in the church, two pence from every house at Christmas, and a house or eight florins' rent. The Bestallung was renewed for his successor Hans Geyer in 1577. Heidelberg, Bestallung eines Glöckners, 15 May 1572 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 457):

> Solle er gute sorg und achtung zu allen glogken haben undt besonder uf die zwo grösten sampt den 2 kohrglögken, welche dem stieft zu erhalten gebüren, dieselben alle monat schmiren und in gutem wesen erhalten. Soll er die konigliche, chur- und fürstliche greber in und ausser dem chor rein und sauber, auch wol verschlossen halten, das die nicht durch unnütz gesindt zergentzet werden. […] Das hat er also angenomen undt demselben getreulich und bestes vleiß nachzukomen versprochen in urkund dieser ime ubergebner bestallung […] Derwegen bekenn ich mich, daß also angenomen haben, und gelobe hiemit mit gueten treuen, diesem meinem dienst, so lang ich darin verharren werde, müglichstes vleis nach einem vermögen abzuwarten und, was mein bestallung inhelt, mir auch sunsten der kirchen wegen befolhen würt, treulich zu geleben undt zu verrichten.

He shall take good care and heed to all the bells, and specially to the two greatest, together with the two choir bells, which the foundation is bound to maintain, and shall grease them every month and keep them in good condition. He shall keep the royal, electoral and princely tombs within and without the choir clean and neat, and also well locked, that they be not defaced by idle rabble. […] This he hath so accepted and promised to perform faithfully and with his best diligence, in witness of this appointment delivered unto him […] Therefore I confess that I have so accepted, and vow herewith in good faith to attend upon this my service, so long as I shall continue therein, with all possible diligence according to my ability, and faithfully to live by and perform what my appointment containeth, and what else is commanded me on the church's behalf.

The sexton as sacristan. No order has a separate sacristan; the sexton kept the vessels, vestments, font and lights (see Chapter 16 §16.7.1). His installation therefore took the same forms:

- A yearly appointment: Anhalt 1594 (Philippist). The village of Törten petitioned for a sexton of its own who could keep school and read in church in the pastor's absence. It agreed a levy for his wages, and the superintendent and the district officer advised on the matter. The prince's court councillors then summoned the whole community and, "with the consent and obligation of them all in common and of each in particular", set down the sexton's office and wages in a written decree. The office itself was granted "for one year only", and the sexton had to sue for it anew with the pastor before every Michaelmas (Sehling 2, pp. 579–580).
- Surety for the vessels: Sayn 1590. Because the chalices and ornaments were entrusted to him, no bell-ringer was to be received unless he was "well known" or gave a warrantor or surety (Sehling 19/1, p. 438).
- Appointment by the parish: Strasbourg 1531 (Moderate Reformed). Vacant offices "of helpers or Sigristen" were to be filled "by the pastors and parish churchwardens, and not otherwise" (Sehling 20/1, p. 226).

13.12.3 Schoolmasters, cantors and organists

The schoolmaster's oath. Schoolmasters, who with their pupils sang the services, were sworn to the council that employed them. Mulhouse's oath of 1551 (Reformed) binds the schoolmaster and his assistant to loyalty to the burgomaster and council, to diligent teaching of their lessons and the catechism, and to a good example. Mulhouse, Eid des Schulmeisters, 1551 (Reformed; Sehling 20/2, p. 251):

> Ein schulmeyster unnd sein provisor sollendt schweeren, burgermeyster und rath der statt Mülhusenn, alls irenn herren und obern, jederzyt getreüw, holdt, gehorsam, dienstlich unnd gewertig zusein aller billicher, zimlicher, gerechter dingen […] ires ampts unnd der schulenn zu angesetzter unnd bestimbter zeytt emsiglich zuwarten, uf ir undergebne jungenn > ein treüw, flyßigs ufsehenn zuhabenn, ire geordnette lectiones unnd den cathechißmum mit verhörungen der kinder, ordenlichenn und wie sich jederzeytt geburt, hallten

A schoolmaster and his assistant shall swear to the burgomaster and council of the town of Mulhouse, as their lords and superiors, at all times to be faithful, loyal, obedient, serviceable and ready in all fit, seemly and just things […] diligently to attend to their office and the school at the appointed and fixed time, to have a faithful and diligent oversight of the youths committed to them, and to hold their appointed lessons and the catechism, with the hearing of the children, in order and as is fitting at all times

The Palatinate 1580: the schoolmaster's promise. The Palatine order of 1580 lists the "chapters on which every schoolmaster received in the Electoral Palatinate shall make promise". He is to remember that he must give account to God for his school; to teach the youth "with all friendliness" Luther's catechism as printed in the church order and no other, and nothing against the Book of Concord; to keep the school hours; to do what his office requires in church as well as school; to live without offence; to obey the church council, superintendent and pastor, answer at visitation and appear before the consistory; to be loyal to the Elector; to bring civil causes before the officers and spiritual causes before the church council; and not to leave his post without leave. The promise closes with handfast, oath and signature. Palatinate, Verzeichnuß etlicher capitum, darauf ein jeder schulmeister … promission thun solle, 1580 (Sehling 14, pp. 508–509):

> Ihr als ein berufener schulmeister sollt euch allezeit und fleissig erinnern euers berufs und befohlenen schulampts und, daß ihr von wegen desselbigen Gott, dem allmächtigen, rechnung thun werdet. Derowegen sollet ihr die jugendt euerer schulen mit allem fleiß getreulich lehren und underweisen, mit aller freundtlichkeit und holdtseligkeit den catechismum Lutheri, wie der unsers gnedigsten herrn kirchenordnung eynverleibt, wol eynbilden, dabey bleiben und keinen andern in euer schul gebrauchen, deßgleichen wider das christlich Concordibuch nichts lehren […] Dieses alles stät, fest und unverbrüchlich zu halten, auch alles anders zu leisten, was einem getreuen schuldiener und gehorsamen underthanen gebürt und wol anstehet, werdet ihr verspruch thun und mit handtgegebner treu angeloben, auch einen leiblichen eydt zu Gott schweren und euch dessen mit eygener underschrift verpflichten und verbinden.

Ye, as a called schoolmaster, shall at all times diligently remember your calling and the school office committed unto you, and that ye shall give account thereof to God Almighty. Wherefore ye shall teach and instruct the youth of your school faithfully with all diligence, and with all friendliness and gentleness impress upon them well the catechism of Luther, as it is incorporated in the church order of our most gracious lord, abide thereby and use no other in your school; likewise teach nothing against the Christian Book of Concord […] All this to keep steadfast, firm and inviolable, and to perform all things else that become and befit a faithful servant of the school and an obedient subject, ye shall make promise and vow with hand given in faith, and swear also a bodily oath to God, and bind and oblige yourselves thereto by your own signature.

Gengenbach 1536 (Moderate Reformed). The schoolmaster of the imperial town of Gengenbach was bound by his Bestallung to obey the council and two councillors and one minister set over him as "school-lords", to live blamelessly, and to follow the class divisions of Freiburg. Gengenbach, Bestallung eines Schulmeysters der Statt Gengenbach, 1536 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/1, p. 483):

> Ein Schulmeyster der Statt Gengenbach soll einem ersamen Rhatt in allen billichen sachen gehorsamen. Auff das erst sollen zwen des Rhats unnd einer uß den dienern der kirchen als schulherren geordnett und sonderlichs uffsehen haben sollen, mit deren Rhat er auch, waß yederzeit der Jugent beßerlich ist, handlen soll. Ein schulmeyster soll onsträfflichs lebens sein, aller beser geselschafft müeßig sten und der Jugent uffß christenlichest, sie christenlichen uffzuziehen, obligen. […] Wie die kirch, also soll auch die schul dahin dienen, das die Jugent in christenlicher kinderleer uffs vleyßigst underricht und also zum himmell, daran es alles ligt, gelert werde.

A schoolmaster of the town of Gengenbach shall obey an honourable council in all fit things. First, two of the council and one of the ministers of the church shall be ordained as school-lords and shall have special oversight, with whose counsel he shall also deal in whatsoever is at any time most profitable for the youth. A schoolmaster shall be of blameless life, keep himself from all evil company, and apply himself in most Christian wise to the youth, to bring them up Christianly. […] As the church, so also shall the school serve to this end, that the youth be instructed most diligently in the Christian children's doctrine and so be taught for heaven, whereon all dependeth.

Organists: Hildesheim 1581. No organist's oath is printed in the corpus; Sehling notes one for Öhringen among the Hohenlohe oaths but does not print it (Sehling 15, p. 560). The organist's duties appear instead in contracts. The churchwardens of St Andrew's at Hildesheim engaged Severus Kroschen in 1581 for ten years, to play at Saturday Vespers and at Mass and Vespers on Sundays and feasts, and to keep the new organ in repair. In return he had a free house, sixty thalers a year paid quarterly "like the other ministers of church and school", and corn. Hildesheim, Bestallung des Organisten Severus Kroschen, 1581 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 901):

> das wir den achtparn und ehrhaftigen Seuerus Kroschen aufs neie wiederumb zehen jarlang, von itzt kunftigen Michaelis ahn zu rechnen, zu einem diener und organisten ahngenomen und bestalt haben, folgender gestalt: Das er alle Sonnabent die vesper, des Sontags und andere festage die messe und vesper obberurter kirche schlagen und sich in seinem ampte, wie dan bißhero auch anderst nicht geschehen, christlich verhalten soll. Zudeme soll er darbeneben der neuen orgeln treulich und vleissig furstehen, mit nichten etwaß vorwarlosen oder verseumen, dadurch das werk in schaden geraten und verderben muchte that we have taken on and appointed the worshipful and honest Severus Kroschen anew for ten years, to be reckoned from Michaelmas next coming, to be a servant and organist after the manner following: that he shall play every Saturday the Vespers, and on Sundays and other feast days the Mass and Vespers of the aforesaid church, and shall behave himself Christianly in his office, as hath not been otherwise hitherto. Moreover he shall also have the charge of the new organ faithfully and diligently, and in no wise neglect or omit anything whereby the work might come to harm and decay

Cantors. The cantor was one of the masters of the Latin school (at Hof in 1546 the cantor Georg Hertweg was the schoolmaster's colleague; §13.14.3) and was bound with the school staff. No separate cantor's oath is printed.

The schoolmaster's church duties are treated in Chapter 15, §15.9.

13.12.4 Churchwardens and stewards

Leisnig 1529. Churchwardens (Kirchväter, Kirchenpfleger, Kastenherren) were elected yearly and sworn. In Leisnig the Saxon visitors of 1529 had two "upright, able, pious men" chosen each year on the Sunday before Michaelmas, by the officer, the pastor, the council and eight deputies of the parish. They were sworn, took over the registers, deeds, stores, cash and keys from the old wardens on Michaelmas Day, and rendered a yearly account. Leisnig, Verordnung der Visitatoren für das Amt Leisnig, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 609):

> also das alle jar jerlich uf den nechsten suntag fur S. Michels tag durch den ambtman, pfarrer, regirenden rath und die acht personen dem ausschuss, so das gemein kirchspil unter sich zu machen haben, sollen zwene ufrichtige geschickte, frome menner aus den inwonern der stadt zu kirchvetern erwelet, und zu nodturft desselben ambts voreidet. Auf den tag S. Michels sollen alweg die alden kirchveter den nau vorordenten uberantwurten und anweisen alle erbregister, vorschreibung, urkunden, forrat, barschaft so that every year, on the next Sunday before St Michael's Day, by the officer, the pastor, the council in office and the eight persons of the committee which the common parish hath to make among itself, two upright, able, pious men from among the inhabitants of the town shall be elected churchwardens and sworn as the need of that office requireth. On St Michael's Day the old churchwardens shall always deliver and show over to the newly appointed ones all registers of inheritance, bonds, deeds, stores, cash

Prussia 1575. In Prussia in 1575 the churchwardens were "chosen with the pastor's counsel and sworn and confirmed by the patrons" (Sehling 4, p. 153).

Saxe-Lauenburg 1585: the churchwarden's oath. Lauenburg gives the oath in the first person. It is followed by the reading of the warden's duties from the church order: to keep a book with copies of all the church's seals and deeds and the originals locked in the church; to record all its lands, rents and dues; and to render account. Saxe-Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 420):

> Eid eines kirchengeschworens. Ich, N., schwere und gelobe gott dem allmechtigen, dass ich in diesem meinem ampte eines kirchgeschworen, darzu ich jtzo ordentlicher weise erwehlet und vorordnet bin, wolle treu und fleissig sein, der kirchen und des pfarrherrn bestes, an dem ihrem unvorseumlich wissen und befodern, und ihren schaden vorhüten, und in diesem ganzen ampte alles, was dem zugehörig ist, getreulich nach meinem besten vormügen und vorstande vorrichten, als mir gott helfe und sein heiliges wort.

The oath of a churchwarden. I, N., swear and vow to God Almighty that in this my office of churchwarden, whereunto I am now orderly chosen and appointed, I will be faithful and diligent; will know and further without neglect the good of the church and of the pastor in what is theirs, and prevent their harm; and in this whole office will perform faithfully all that belongeth thereto, according to my best ability and understanding: so help me God and his holy word.

The Palatinate 1577: the stewards of church property (Reformed). The Kirchenschaffner, the stewards of the former ecclesiastical property, swore loyalty to their two lords. Palatinate, Eid der Kirchenschaffner, May 1577 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, p. 749):

> Ihr werdet geloben und schweren, meinem gnädigen fürsten und herrn, hertzogen Johann Casimiren, pfaltzgrafen etc., alß euerm castenvogt, schutz- und schirmherrn und landtsfürsten etc., und dem pfaltzgrafen Ludwigen, churfürsten etc., von wegen der halben nutzung der gefel getreu, holdt, gehorsamb und gewertig zu seyn, ihrer chur- und f. gnaden schaden zu warnen und zu wenden, frommen und bestes zu werben und zu fördern, treulich und ohne gefährde.

Ye shall vow and swear to my gracious prince and lord, Duke John Casimir, Count Palatine, etc., as your advocate, protector and defender and prince of the land, etc., and to the Count Palatine Lewis, Elector, etc., by reason of the half share in the revenues, to be faithful, loyal, obedient and ready, to warn and turn away harm from their electoral and princely graces, to seek and further their profit and good, faithfully and without guile.

Strasbourg 1523: the steward of the poor (Moderate Reformed). The Strasbourg poor order of 1523 set a Schaffner over the alms, who swore to the poor themselves. Strasbourg, Armenordnung, longer version, 4 August 1523 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 113):

> schaffner sol schwören einen eydt liplichen zuo Got unnd den heyligen, den armen luten getruw unnd holt zuo sin, iren nutze unnd frommen zuoschaffen, iren schaden zuowarnen unnd zuowenden, ouch den obgemelten verordenten herren unnd nun pflegern gehorsam unnd gewärtig zuo sin unnd den selben umb sin innemmen unnd ußgeben alle fierteil jars ein erbere, uffrechte rechnunge zuothuon the steward shall swear a bodily oath to God and the saints, to be faithful and loyal to the poor folk, to procure their profit and advantage, to warn and turn away their harm, and also to be obedient and ready to the aforesaid appointed lords and nine wardens, and to render unto them every quarter of a year an honest, upright account of his receipts and expenses

Wittenberg 1533. At Wittenberg the six "pious, God-fearing" wardens (Vorsteher) of the common chest were appointed and sworn each year by the council and pastor (Sehling 1, p. 708).

Secretaries. No oath of a church secretary or clerk is printed. The Dithmarschen privilege of 1605 confirms the parishes' right of election, vocation and appointment (bestallung) of "all priests, schoolmasters, sextons, organists, parish clerks" (Sehling 23, p. 509).

13.12.5 Midwives

Lüneburg 1564. The midwife was in law a minister of baptism (§13.3.7). Many orders therefore had her chosen with the pastor and sworn. Lüneburg in 1564 ordered midwives to be appointed in every district by the officers, the pastor and the church jurors "with the counsel of understanding women". They were bound to use "no idolatry" at the birth but to seek help from God by prayer, and to serve the poor as faithfully as the rich. The pastors were to instruct them in emergency baptism, publicly and privately. Lüneburg, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 557–558):

> so wollen wir erstlich, das von allen ampten jedes orts sampt dem pastor und den kirchschworen mit radt verstendiger frauen allenthalben hebammen verordnet werden sollen, so gottfürchtig, fleissig, treu, düchtig sein und bey jederman ein gut gerücht haben. […] Es sollen auch solche verordente hebammen sich verpflichten, in der not bey den frauen keine abgötterey zu gebrauchen, wie oftermals gespüret, sondern allenthalben alleine bey Gott durchs christliche gebet hülf zu suchen und verordente christliche mittel zu gebrauchen, desgleichen auch verpflichtet sein, bey den armen so fleissig, willig und getreu zu sein als bey den reichen so we will firstly that by all the offices of every place, together with the pastor and the church jurors, with the counsel of understanding women, midwives be appointed everywhere who are God-fearing, diligent, faithful, able, and have a good name with every one. […] Such appointed midwives shall also bind themselves to use no idolatry with the women in their need, as hath often been found, but everywhere to seek help from God alone by Christian prayer and to use the appointed Christian means; likewise also be bound to be as diligent, willing and faithful with the poor as with the rich

The Ansbach theologians' agreement of 1556 required midwives to be "examined and instructed by the pastors", that they baptize no child unless it be wholly born (Sehling 11, p. 336). At Sangerhausen in 1540 the visitors had the midwives "sworn to the council" (Sehling 1, p. 656).

13.12.6 Deaconesses and sick-women

No ordination of deaconesses. No order ordains, blesses or installs a deaconess. The word diaconissa occurs only at Keppel in 1570, for the convent sister "who distributeth the alms", one of the offices the domina assigned among the sisters without any rite (Sehling 10, p. 141; §13.12.8). The women who did the work of the ancient deaconesses were received in three ways:

- By election and handfast vow. The Bohemian Brethren (Hussite) elected women elders (presbyterae) by the free vote of the women, with only women present. The elected bound themselves "by voice and by hand given" and received a place of honour, without laying on of hands (Sehling 4, p. 289). The form is quoted in Chapter 16 §16.6.4.
- By appointment and examination. The Seelfrauen and sick-women were appointed by the council. Regensburg in 1543 laid down what they were to say to the dying (Sehling 13, p. 410). At Nördlingen the superintendent asked that the women appointed by the council be sent to him to be examined and taught. This examination was their only induction. Nördlingen, Kirchenordnung Kaspar Löners, 1544 (Sehling 12, p. 315):

> Hette auch ein erbar weiser rat, wie ich here, etliche weiber darzu verordnet und angenummen, daß si der kranken warten sollten, die, bitte ich, wollen zu mir gewisen werden, auf daß ich mich ires glaubens und verstands, auch, wie si pflegen die kranken zu trösten und dern zu warten, erkundige und, was si nicht wissen, sie leren.

If an honourable, wise council hath also, as I hear, appointed and taken on certain women for this, that they should tend the sick, I pray that they be sent to me, that I may inquire of their faith and understanding, and how they are wont to comfort and tend the sick, and teach them what they know not.

- By instruction read to them. Heilbronn in 1531 gathered its beguines into one house and set them to visit the sick and instruct them by God's word (see Chapter 16 §16.7.6). The council's deputies first had each house give its troth "in place of an oath" to declare all its goods for an inventory, and then read the instruction to them. Heilbronn, Instruktion zur Zusammenlegung beider Beginenhäuser, 8 December 1531 (Sehling 17/1, p. 298):

> Zum aller vordersten, die beginnen lassen ir trew an ayds stat geben, das sy alles das jhenig, ir clausen zugehorig, barschafft, klainat, silbergeschirr, gultbrieff, haußrat ob und under erd, nichzit ußgenomen, es sey bey iren handen oder an andern orten, anzuzeigen und gar nichzit verhalten, damit es alles beschriben und inventirt werde. Damit seye nit gemaint, das mans inen nemen oder sy dessen entsetzen wolle, sonder zum pesten iren nutz ain weg wie den andern komen lassen. Und so alles inventiert ist, alsdan sol man inen die instruction furlesen.

First of all, let the beguines give their troth in place of an oath that they will declare, and keep back nothing at all of, all that belongeth to their house: ready money, jewels, silver plate, letters of rent, household stuff above and under ground, nothing excepted, whether it be in their hands or in other places, that it may all be written down and inventoried. Hereby it is not meant that it shall be taken from them, or they dispossessed of it, but that it come to their profit for the best in the one way as in the other. And when all is inventoried, then shall the instruction be read to them.

13.12.7 The clothing of a nun: Keppel 1570

The only evangelical rite of clothing. The order of Count John VI of Nassau-Dillenburg for the convent of Keppel prints the one complete evangelical form in the corpus for receiving a sister into a convent. Its conditions, set out first (Sehling 10, pp. 135–137), are these:

- the girl must have been brought up in the convent for at least two years and know the Christian doctrine;
- she must be at least twenty years old;
- her parents and kin must deliver a written bond (Revers) setting out what she renounces of her inheritance;
- she must bring a hundred gold florins.

The order of the rite. The rite itself (Sehling 10, pp. 137–141) runs as follows:

1. In the convent hall, at seven in the morning before the sermon, the candidate appears with her parents and kin before the count's officers, the domina and the whole convent. The superintendent declares that the count has consented to her clothing and reception, "yet in no other form and manner than our reformation and order bringeth with it".
2. The order is read through, except the articles on the election of the domina.
3. Five questions to the parents and kin. They are asked whether they are content with the order; whether they hold to the doctrine preached; whether they understand that the clothing does not mean that she may never marry or leave the convent, and will help her to an honourable marriage if she wishes; whether she has made any renunciation beyond the bond; and whether they will be thankful to the count and the convent. They promise this "with troth given by the hand", and two noblemen are set as sureties.
4. Four questions to the domina. Has the girl lived godly, obediently and modestly in the convent? Is the domina willing to receive her? Have the parents maintained her? Have the hundred florins been paid?
5. Five questions to the candidate, and the oath.
6. The sermon, on the true spiritual life, chastity, humility and obedience.
7. The clothing. The domina and the sisters lead her into the sacristy and put on her the convent's ordinary dress.
8. Veni Sancte Spiritus is sung before the altar.
9. The exhortation at the altar by the superintendent.
10. The *Te Deum, with Benedicamus and Deo gratias.

The questions and the oath. Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 138):

> Die jungfraw soll gefragt werden: 1. Ob sie ungezwungenn sich inn diß closter begebe? 2. Ob sie die hauptstückhe christlicher lehr verstehe unnd bey derselbigen bekhendtnüß mitt Gottes hülff pleiben und sich zu keiner anderer religion nimmermehr begeben wölle? 3. Ob sie unsere ordnung gelesenn, die genugsam erwogen unnd verstanden und in allem sich nach derselbigen halten wölle? 4. Ob sie bey iren eltern, brudern oder freunden einigen verzig, heimlich oder offendtlich, gethan oder noch zuthun verheyssenn und zugesagt habe, anderer gestalt als die ordnung inhelt? 5. Ob sie den gewohnlichen eydt vermög der ordnung leisten wölle. […] Form des eydes, so die jungfrawen thun sollen Jungfraw N. etc., ir werdet schwerenn zu Godt unnd seinem heyligen wortt, das ir bey der eynigen, wahren christlichenn religion, der seligmachenden lahr des heyligenn evangelii […] dergleichen bey dem rechtmessigen geprauch der heyligen sacramente nach der stifftung unnd einsatzung unsers herrn Jesu Christi vermittels godtlicher gnaden bestendig pleiben unnd beharren wöllet, euch auch inn disem standt, darinn ir euch ungezwungenn unnd willig begebet, christlich unnd ehrlich haltenn […] euch gegen die matersche unnd den prediger inn allenn godtlichenn, christlichenn, ehrlichen und pillichenn dingenn die zeitt ewers pleybens inn disem closter gehorsam erzeigen, mitt den andern convents persohnen friedtlich und einig leben […] das ir euch auch ohn wissen und rath der obrigkheit, matersche unnd ewerer eltern unnd freundtschafft nicht bestatten oder auß dem closter begeben wöllet, damit alles ordenlich, erbar unnd ehrlich zugehe, alles trewlich unnd ungevarlich, das auch godt helff und sein heyliges wort. Unnd da sie solchenn eydt zuthun willig, soll sie mit ufflegung der rechten handt uff die linckhe brust unnd eigener mundt rede solchen becrefftigen unnd würckhlich leisten.

The maiden shall be asked: 1. Whether she betaketh herself into this convent unconstrained? 2. Whether she understandeth the chief parts of Christian doctrine, and will with God's help abide in the confession thereof, and never betake herself to any other religion? 3. Whether she hath read our order, sufficiently weighed and understood it, and will keep herself according to it in all things? 4. Whether she hath made, or promised and pledged yet to make, any renunciation to her parents, brothers or kin, secretly or openly, otherwise than the order containeth? 5. Whether she will take the customary oath according to the order. […] Form of the oath which the maidens shall take. Maiden N., etc., ye shall swear to God and his holy word that ye will by means of God's grace abide and continue steadfast in the one true christian religion, the saving doctrine of the holy gospel […] and likewise in the right use of the holy sacraments according to the institution and ordinance of our Lord Jesus Christ; that ye will also keep yourselves christianly and honourably in this estate, into which ye betake yourselves unconstrained and willingly […] that ye will show yourselves obedient toward the mother and the preacher in all godly, christian, honourable and reasonable things for the time of your abiding in this convent, [and] live peaceably and in unity with the other persons of the convent […] that ye will also not marry nor betake yourselves out of the convent without the knowledge and counsel of the magistrate, the mother and your parents and kin, that all may be done orderly, decently and honourably; all faithfully and without guile, so help you God and his holy word. And if she be willing to take this oath, she shall confirm and actually perform it by laying her right hand upon her left breast and with words from her own mouth.

The clothing. Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 139):

> Nach der predig sollenn die domina unnd die andere jungfrawen des convents die jungfraw inn die sacristey füeren unnd ir die gewonliche kleyder, wie die andere convents persohnen sonst bekleydet seindt [...] anthun. Darnach sollen sie die fur den althar pringen unnd das Veni sancte spiritus singen. Der superintendens aber soll ir ein declaration unnd außlegung ires gethanen gelübdts unnd eydes thun mit underweisung zu einem gottseligen, christlichenn, ehrlichen, tugendtsamen und züchtigen leben unnd vermahnung zu allem pillichenn gehorsam, ungefehrlich uff dise weyse.

After the sermon the domina and the other maidens of the convent shall lead the maiden into the sacristy, and put on her the ordinary garments, as the other persons of the convent are otherwise clothed [...] Thereafter they shall bring her before the altar and sing the Veni Sancte Spiritus. But the superintendent shall make to her a declaration and exposition of the vow and oath she hath taken, with instruction to a godly, christian, honourable, virtuous and modest life and exhortation to all due obedience, after this manner or thereabouts.

The exhortation. The superintendent tells the new sister that the true spiritual estate is the one she entered at baptism. She is to beware of thinking that vows and habits earn forgiveness or are better than baptism. The convent is no prison but a school, from which God may call her to marriage, and if so she should marry in an orderly way with her family's help. Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 139):

> Ir sollt auch nicht wehnen unnd es darfur halten, das ir hierinnen im closter als inn einen kerkher geschlossenn seyet unnd ewer lebtage darinnen pleiben mussen, oder das die gelubde der keuscheit unnd zucht euch die ehe (darinnen auch keuscheit ist) abschneide unnd verbiete unnd also ewer gewissenn verstrickht, sondern das ir inn keinem andernn stande seyet als sunst andere rechtschaffene christen, so inn der wellt leben, auch ohn allein, das ir gleich als inn einer schulen inn stetiger ubung christlicher andacht inn der lahr, im gebet, gehorsam, zucht, erbarkheit unnd allerley tugenden angehalten werdet, damitt ir hernachmahls, so euch Godt zum ehestandt oder sonst zu etwas anders beruffen wurde, ir vilen mitt lahr unnd underweisung auch christlichem wandell und guten exempelln aller tugendten dienen unnd vorgehen kundt

Ye shall also not suppose nor hold that ye are shut up here in the convent as in a prison and must abide therein all your life long, or that the vow of chastity and discipline cutteth off and forbiddeth you marriage (wherein is chastity also) and so entangleth your conscience; but that ye are in no other estate than other upright Christians which live in the world, save only that ye are held, as it were in a school, in continual exercise of christian devotion, in doctrine, in prayer, obedience, discipline, honesty and all manner of virtues; that hereafter, if God should call you to the estate of marriage or to aught else, ye may serve and go before many with doctrine and instruction, and also with christian conversation and good examples of all virtues.

The exhortation ends with a prayer that God "will grant his Holy Spirit both to you and to us all", and the rite closes. Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 141):

> Hieruff sollenn die jungfrawen den hymnum Te deum laudamus singen und mit dem Benedicamus und Deo gratias beschliessenn.

Hereupon the maidens shall sing the hymn Te Deum laudamus, and conclude with the Benedicamus and Deo gratias.

Elsewhere. The other convent orders put the clothing under the prince or council but print no rite. Lüneburg in 1574 allowed no child or maiden to be "clothed without our foreknowledge and command", and in a plain gown and white kerchief instead of the consecrated cowl, veil and crown (Sehling 6/1, p. 622). Strasbourg in 1555 required a petition to the council and a minimum age of eight (Sehling 20/1, p. 454). Goslar's convent of Frankenberg (1542) and Württemberg (1535) admitted no one (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 275; 16, p. 79).

13.12.8 The domina, the abbess and the prioress

Keppel 1570: election, confirmation, oath and presentation. The convent proposed two or three of its sisters. The count chose and confirmed one, and could depose her if she misbehaved. Before taking office she promised "in place of an oath" to keep the church and other orders, to govern the house faithfully, to hold the sisters to godliness and discipline, to alienate nothing of the convent's goods, to render a yearly account, to eat with the convent, and to tell the count and the kin if any sister meant to leave. Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570, "Eydt der dominae" (Sehling 10, pp. 141–142):

> Die domina soll uns und dem convent an eides statt gelobenn unnd zusagen, das sie bey unsernn christlichenn kirchen- unnd allen andern ordnungen, itzundt ubergeben unnd hernachmahls angestellt und ubergeben werden sollen, inn allen und jedenn punctenn pleiben unnd darob ernstlich und vest haltenn wölle, dem closter trewlich und wol furstehen, ire jungfrawen zu aller gottesforcht, gehorsam, zucht unnd redlicheit zum vleissigstenn anhalten […] unnd endtlich sich für ire person christlich, ehrlich, redlich, züchtig, uffrichtig und unstrefflich inn allen obgesagten stuckhen und articuln halten als ir Gott helff und sein gottlicher nahme.

The domina shall vow and promise to us and the convent, in place of an oath, that she will abide by our christian church orders and all other orders, now delivered and hereafter to be set up and delivered, in all and every point, and hold to them earnestly and firmly; govern the convent faithfully and well; hold her maidens most diligently to all fear of God, obedience, discipline and honesty […] and finally keep herself for her own person christianly, honourably, uprightly, modestly, sincerely and blamelessly in all the aforesaid points and articles, so help her God and his divine name.

At her presentation to the convent the superintendent exhorts the sisters to obedience and reminds the domina of her "high office and heavy burden". He sets before her St Augustine's rule that the superior should "not exalt herself in her power" but serve in love, and be "loved more than feared" (Sehling 10, p. 142).

Schleswig-Holstein after 1610: election under oath. In the noble convents of the duchies the abbess of Itzehoe and the prioresses of the other houses were elected by the whole convent "according to old custom". The electors were sworn in the provost's presence to choose without favour, and the elected bound herself by oath to the convent. Then every sister swore obedience to her. Schleswig-Holstein, Klosterordnung für Frauenklöster, after 1610 (Sehling 23, p. 182):

> so sollen hinfuhro, so offt eine abtissin und priorin abgehet, die vorsamblung nicht nach gunst oder aus neidt gegen den andern oder umb geniesses willen, sondern ohne alle affection einhelligh eine person ihres mittels, die des closters gelegenheit weiß und zu dem ambte dauglich ist und demselbigen wie auch dem closter ersprießlich vor sein könne, vermuge eines in ihres probstes gegenwarth geleisteten eydts nach altem gebrauch erwehlen, welche sich dem closter, demselben getreuwlich vorzusein, eydtlich vorpflichten soll. […] Gleichergestaldt sollen auch, so offt ein abtissinne zu Itzehoe oder priorin in den andern clöstern gewehlet wirdt, alle andere jungkfrouwen und hernach ein jede, wann sie zu ihrer hebung kombt, dem alten gebrauch nach eydtlich angeloben, der abtissennen und priorinnen gehorsamb zu sein und sich derselben nicht zuwiedersetzen.

[It is ordained] that henceforth, as often as an abbess or prioress departeth, the assembly shall elect, not for favour or out of envy against others or for the sake of gain, but without any affection, with one accord, a person of their own number who knoweth the circumstances of the convent and is fit for the office, and can be profitable to preside over it and the convent, by virtue of an oath taken in the presence of their provost according to old custom; and she shall bind herself by oath to the convent, to preside over it faithfully. […] In like manner also, as often as an abbess at Itzehoe or a prioress in the other convents is elected, all the other maidens, and thereafter each one when she cometh to her raising, shall vow by oath, according to old custom, to be obedient to the abbesses and prioresses and not to set themselves against them.

Strasbourg 1555. In the city's remaining women's houses a "mother" and six "council-mothers", none under twenty-five, were to be chosen from the eldest and fittest. The mother and council-mothers were to "vow" to seek the convent's profit, ward off its harm and see that the sisters lived in christian discipline (Sehling 20/1, p. 456).

13.12.9 Monks, novices and evangelical abbots

No profession. No evangelical order admits a monk by profession or vow. Württemberg in 1535 and Goslar in 1542 forbade all admissions and sent unprofessed novices home (Sehling 16, p. 79; 7/2.2, p. 275). Duke Christoph in 1552 forbade the abbots to bind boys "with superstitious ceremonies and vows" to stay in the cloister (Sehling 16, p. 199).

Novices as scholars: Ravengiersburg 1560. Where a monastery was kept as a school, a youth was "received" with the prince's and the prior's knowledge and trained for the ministry. The only obligation laid on him was that of a stipendiary. Pfalz-Simmern, Klosterordnung Ravengiersburg, 1560 (Sehling 19/2, p. 658):

> Wo auch einiger Junger fürhanden, der seins Ingenii und Profectus halben weiter zu schicken, so soll derselbig uff Universitet unser Religion verordnet und nach notturfft erhalten werden. Derselbig, [der] auch so also erhalten wurde, soll sich verpflichten, keinen herrn weiter dann uns und dem Gotshaus zu diehnen.

And where there is any youth who for his wit and progress should be sent further, he shall be appointed to a university of our religion and maintained as need requireth. The same, [who] is so maintained, shall bind himself to serve no other lord than us and the house of God.

Evangelical abbots. The Württemberg prelates were invested with an oath, a sermon, Komm Heiliger Geist, prayer at the altar and a blessing, and were presented to the school, the officers and the subjects (§13.11.3).

Monks who stayed. Esslingen in 1535 (Moderate Reformed) required no rite of the friars who chose to stay, and none of those who left to marry. The council simply gave a settlement to the one and maintenance to the other (Sehling 17/2, p. 382).

13.12.10 Laying aside the habit

A rite of separation without a rite. The medieval consecration of virgins gave the nun a blessed veil and crown with the words of the bridal antiphons. When she left, she was said to have lost "the crown of her head". The evangelical orders gave no rite for laying the habit aside. But Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel in 1569 supplied the words with which a sister might answer that reproach. She has not lost her spiritual garment and crown, for she received them in baptism. She lays the cowl and crown aside in God's name, so that no one may think she trusts in them, and so that her sisters "the maidens and wives" take no offence. Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, Klosterordnung, 1569 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 325–326):

> Derhalben wenn eine jungfrau solche klosterkleider sampt ihrer kron hinlegt, kan man zu ihr mit warheit nicht sagen, das sie die geistlichen kleider hingelegt habe, noch viel weniger: Cecidit corona capitis tui, du hast die kron deines breutigams verlorn, sondern sie kans umbkeren und sagen: Eben darumb, das ich mein geistlich kleid rein und unbefleckt, desgleichen die kron auf meinem heupt behalte, die mir in der heiligen taufe angezogen und aufgesetzt worden sind, habe ich die kappen und eusserliche kron hingelegt [...] so wil ich im namen des allmechtigen Gottes meine kappen, schepler und eusserliche kron von mir legen, auf das meniglich sehen und in dem werk spüren möge, das mirs ernst sey, das ich keine hoffenung der seligkeit darauf gesetzt und solch kleid anderst nicht denn ein ander kleid in meinem herzen halte

Therefore when a maiden layeth down such cloister garments together with her crown, it cannot be said to her with truth that she hath laid down the spiritual garments, much less: Cecidit corona capitis tui, thou hast lost the crown of thy bridegroom; but she can turn it about and say: Even for this cause, that I may keep my spiritual garment pure and unspotted, and likewise the crown upon my head, which were put on me and set upon me in holy baptism, have I laid down the cowl and the outward crown [...] so will I in the name of almighty God lay from me my cowl, scapular and outward crown, that every one may see and perceive in the deed that I am in earnest, that I have set no hope of salvation thereon, and hold such a garment in my heart no otherwise than another garment.

Burial. Lüneburg in 1574 ordered that no person of the cloister be buried "in cowl, scapular, veil, etc., but in a linen sheet like other Christians" (Sehling 6/1, p. 622).

13.13 Magistrates and civil offices

No rite in the orders. The church orders contain no rite for installing a magistrate, swearing in a council or crowning a prince. These acts belonged to the civil constitution of each town and territory, and their oaths and ceremonies are not printed by Sehling. What the orders do contain falls into three groups.

13.13.1 The council-election sermon

Schwäbisch Hall. Some cities joined the yearly change of council to a sermon on the office of the magistrate. Schwäbisch Hall's order (1543, as revised in 1615) appoints a "special sermon on the office of the magistrate (called the election or council sermon)" every year in St Michael's on the Sunday before St Mary Magdalene. It gives the texts for it. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1543/1615 (Sehling 17/1, p. 165):

> Es soll auch Jährlich am Sontag vor Mariae Magdalenae in der Kirchen zu S. Michel ein sonderliche Predigt vom Ampt der Obrigkeit (die Wahl- oder Raths Predigt genannt) gehalten werden, darbey dann auch die Unterthanen Ihres Ampts zuerinnern, darzu seind sonderliche dienstliche Text Exodi 18; Deut. 16; 2. Par. 19; Rom. 13; Tit. 3; 1. Petri 2 etc.

There shall also be held yearly on the Sunday before St Mary Magdalene in the church of St Michael a special sermon on the office of the magistrate (called the election or council sermon), whereat the subjects also are to be reminded of their office; thereto are especially serviceable the texts Exodus 18; Deuteronomy 16; 2 Chronicles 19; Romans 13; Titus 3; 1 Peter 2, etc.

Memmingen and Konstanz (both Moderate Reformed). Memmingen in 1532 had half the churchwardens step down "every year at the new council" (Sehling 12, p. 252). At Konstanz the yearly council election also chose the spokesmen who sat on the city's disciplinary court (Sehling 17, p. 386, editor's note).

13.13.2 Prayer for the magistrate

The standing intercession for "the emperor, princes and lords, and all magistrates" in the general prayer of every service was the church's ordinary act toward the civil power. The forms are collected in Chapter 6.

13.13.3 Oaths of homage

Homage oaths. When a new prince succeeded, all subjects owed him the oath of homage (Erbhuldigung), clergy included. The orders mention this only where the clergy's position was in question:

- Württemberg, about 1563. The Württemberg instruction for the evangelical prelates printed the homage oath they swore to the duke as protector of their monasteries (Sehling 16, p. 441).
- The Palatinate, 1585 (Reformed). In 1585 the administrator Johann Casimir ordered the officers to take all ministers and schoolmasters "into the obligation of homage". He gave as the reason that in the Palatinate "even the meanest peasant" did not go without "the customary homage of the land" (Sehling 19/2, p. 756).
- The Palatinate, 1601 (Reformed). In 1601 the Elector reminded the clergy of the Upper Palatinate that in "political and civil matters" they stood under his officers like other subjects (Sehling 14, p. 590).

13.14 Dedication of churches and the Kirchweih

No consecration rite. No evangelical order in Sehling contains a rite for consecrating a church, an altar or a churchyard. The bishop's consecration had been one of the episcopal acts that the Reformation lost along with the bishops (§13.10). The orders treat it in two ways: as a superstition to be abolished, and, in one case, as an anniversary to be kept with a sermon on the history of the building. The annual Kirchweih (also called Kirchmesse, Kirmes or Kirbe), the dedication festival with its fair, feasting and dancing, was handled as a matter of police: it was restricted, moved off Sunday or forbidden.

13.14.1 Dedication rejected

Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed). The Homberg synod forbade the churches to keep dedications at all. There is no stone temple in the church after Christ; the faithful themselves are the living temples. Each believer is to keep the "consecration of the church" in his heart, by thanksgiving for his calling. Hesse, Reformatio ecclesiarum Hassiae (Homberg), 1526 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 50):

> Interdicimus universis ecclesiis nostris in virtute Christi ne ultra dedicationes celebrent, quod non conveniant verbo Domini […] Denique post Christum nullum proprie lapideum templum est in Dei ecclesia, sed soli fideles et ipsa ecclesia sunt viva Dei templa. […] Iam si nullum est templum, profecto illorum dedicatio non est celebranda. Celebret quisque fidelium in corde suo ecclesiae consecrationem, qua sanctius potest, quod toties facit, quoties laetus in Domino de sua et omnium fidelium vocatione gratias agit

We forbid all our churches, in the power of Christ, to celebrate dedications any longer, because they agree not with the word of the Lord […] Finally, after Christ there is in the church of God no temple of stone, properly so called, but the faithful alone and the church itself are the living temples of God. […] Now if there be no temple, then truly the dedication thereof is not to be celebrated. Let every one of the faithful celebrate in his own heart the consecration of the church, as holily as he can; which he doth as often as, rejoicing in the Lord, he giveth thanks for his own calling and that of all the faithful.

Halberstadt 1588. The Halberstadt visitation instruction of 1588 made the point within the general rule on ceremonies. Indifferent things (vestments, candles on the altar, Latin or German singing) were to stay as each church had them. But "offensive, superstitious ceremonies, even if they were old", were to be abolished. Among them it names the church dedication and the blessing of the font. Halberstadt, Instruktion für die Visitation, 8 August 1588 (Sehling 2, p. 470):

> aber ergerliche abergleubische ceremonien, ob die wol alt weren, soll man abschaffen, als abgöttische bilder, da etwa ein cultus würde angewant, sacrament haus und monstranz, elevatio, adoratio, kirchweihe, taufweihe und dergleichen.

but offensive, superstitious ceremonies, though they were old, shall be abolished: as idolatrous images, where any worship be paid them, the sacrament-house and monstrance, the elevation, the adoration, church-hallowing, font-hallowing and the like.

Churchyards. The same reasoning applied to churchyards. The Schwäbisch Hall order, in its funeral sermon, explains that the churchyard is kept honourable and holy for the dead who lie in it, not for any consecration of the ground. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1543/1615 (Sehling 17/1, p. 175):

> Daß aber die Kirchhöff Ehrlich und Heylig sollen gehalten werden, das ist nit dem Orth selbst und seiner Einweyhung, wie die Widersacher fürgeben, zuzumessen, Sondern geschicht wegen der verstorbenen Leichnam, so darinnen ligen […] Dann nit der Orth den Todten, sondern der Todte den Orth heylig machet.

But that the churchyards should be kept honourable and holy, that is not to be ascribed to the place itself and its hallowing, as the adversaries pretend, but is done because of the bodies of the dead that lie therein […] For the place maketh not the dead holy, but the dead maketh the place holy.

13.14.2 Opening a new church or churchyard

A sermon in place of a rite. Where a new church or burial ground was brought into use, the orders give no form. What the corpus records are the occasions, and they point to a festal service with a sermon in place of a consecration:

- Hohenlohe, 1562. Johann Hofmann preached a "sermon on the right consecration of a churchyard and its church" at the opening of a new cemetery and its church on 16 July 1562. It was printed with his funeral sermons in 1599 (Sehling 15, p. 243, editor's note).
- Hof, 1546 and 1572. The two Hof dedications are described in §13.14.3.
- Colmar, 1575. The Franciscan church in the hospital at Colmar was "brought to the right use and dedicated" (eingeweyhet) for evangelical preaching on 15 May 1575. The deacon David Hiemeyer recalled the first service in a print of 1590 (Sehling 20/2, p. 478, editor's note).
- Waldenburg, 1591. The new church at Waldenburg in Hohenlohe was to be "dedicated" on 1 January 1591. Count Georg Friedrich asked for a share of the old Mass vestments and copes of Öhringen "for its adornment" (Sehling 15, p. 431, editor's note).
- Henneberg, 1635. The Henneberg consistory reported in 1635 that "when a new church or pulpit is built, the dedication is done by the special superintendent" (Sehling 2, p. 326). This report falls outside the period, and no form is given.

13.14.3 Hof: the dedication of 1572 and its yearly festival

The dedication of 1572. St Michael's at Hof in the margraviate of Kulmbach is the one evangelical church whose dedication is described with its participants, date and yearly commemoration. The church was rebuilt and "dedicated or entered" (dedication oder bezihung) on the eighth Sunday after Trinity, 27 July 1572. The order of 1592 names those who performed it:

- the captain of Hof, Hans Paul von Schaumberg;
- the superintendent, Master Andreas Pangratius;
- Johann Sahr, pastor of the hospital;
- Jacob Schlemmer, schoolmaster, and Laurentius Codomannus, rector of the school.

The order does not print the form used in 1572. It does give the festival by which the dedication was kept every year, and that festival repeats what the 1592 order says was done "in Christian wise" on the day: a procession of the whole town, the sermon on the building, and the dedication Mass and Vespers. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 467):

> Solches alles geschicht der ursach halben, das anno Christi 1572, demnach die schöne pfarrkirchen ad d[ivum] Michaelem ganz und gar ausgebauet und in diese form, so sie izt hat, gebracht, die dedication oder bezihung derselben uf diesen achten sontag Trinitatis, welcher damals war der 27. Julii, ist furgenommen und christlich verrichtet worden, da > der gestrenge, edle und ehrenveste Hanns Paulus von Schaumberg allhie haubtman, der ehrwirdige und wolgelerte herr m.Andreas Pangratius p[iae] m[emoriae] superattendens, Herr Johann Sahr p[iae] m[emoriae] pfarrherr im spital, herr Jacob Schlemmer schulmeister und neben ihm herr Laurentius Codomanus (hernach pfarrherr zu Baireuth) scholae nostrae rector gewesen ist. Damit aber solche dedicatio in frischer gedechtnus erhalten und die ursach derselben den leuten zu gewieser zeit eingebildet werde, so ist löblich und wol vom ehrengedachten herren m.Andreas Pangratio angeordnet und seinen herren succesoren hinderlassen, daß sie jerlich begangen und solemniter celebrirt werden soll.

All this is done for this cause: that in the year of Christ 1572, after the fair parish church of St Michael had been wholly built out and brought into the form it now hath, the dedication or entering thereof was undertaken and performed in Christian wise upon this eighth Sunday after Trinity, which was then the 27th of July; when the strict, noble and worshipful Hans Paul von Schaumberg was captain here, the reverend and well-learned Master Andreas Pangratius, of pious memory, superintendent, Master Johann Sahr, of pious memory, pastor in the hospital, Master Jacob Schlemmer schoolmaster, and beside him Master Laurentius Codomannus (afterwards pastor at Bayreuth) rector of our school. But that such dedication may be kept in fresh remembrance, and the cause thereof be impressed upon the people at a set time, it was laudably and well ordained by the aforesaid Master Andreas Pangratius, and left to his successors, that it should be kept yearly and solemnly celebrated.

The yearly festival. The rite of the festival runs:

1. Assembly. After the second peal the clergy, the council, the whole town and the schoolgirls gather at the Franciscan (cloister) church, the schoolboys at the school.
2. Procession. At the full peal the schoolboys, crowned with wreaths, go in through the old cloister door, round behind the stalls under the nuns' gallery and out at the great door, singing Sei Lob und Ehr mit hohem Preis. The whole town follows them in procession to St Michael's. On the way the boys sing Erhalt uns, Herr, bei deinem Wort, Laetatus sum (Gallus Dressler) and Laus Deo fonti bonorum. The schoolgirls and women follow, singing Sei Lob und Ehr and Herr Gott, dich loben wir. The neighbours strew the lane with grass and set May-boughs on either side "to the honour of God and his church".
3. Sermon. The superintendent, in alternate years, either summarizes the Gospel and tells at length the history of the church "from trustworthy old letters, the report of old people and other sure evidence", or summarizes that history and expounds a point of the Sunday Gospel.
4. Mass and Vespers with the dedication propers (below).

Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 467):

> Dominica VIII. Trinitatis, qua celebratur dedicatio templi divi Michaelis. Es wird dieser achte sontag nach Trinitatis, an welchem man das fest der kirchweih zu S.Michaelis zu halten pflegt, mit sonderlichen ceremonien und kirchengebreng begangen, indeme sich der geistliche und weltliche stand sowol die ganze burgerschaft, mann- und weibspersonen, auch die schulmägdlein nach gehörtem andern puls für die closterkirchen (die schuler aber in die schul) versamlen und, wann man zusammen schlegt, mit den schulern (welche als dann mit schönen krenzlein geschmuckt zur tur, da vor alters der creuzgang gewesen, hienein in die closterkirchen, dann hinden umb die stul bei der nonnenporkirchen und zur fördersten grosen tur, neben ihren praeceptorn widerumb hinausgehen, singende: Sei lob und ehr mit hohem preis) in einer ordentlichen procession, wie droben bei dem pfingstmontag auch gedacht, in sanct Michaelis oder die pfarrkirchen sich verfügen und allda des gottesdienst abwarten.

The eighth Sunday after Trinity, on which is celebrated the dedication of the church of St Michael. This eighth Sunday after Trinity, on which the feast of the church-hallowing at St Michael's is wont to be kept, is observed with special ceremonies and church pomp: in that the spiritual and the temporal estate, and also the whole burghership, men and women, and the schoolgirls also, after the second peal is heard, gather before the cloister church (but the scholars in the school); and when all the bells are rung together, with the scholars (who then, adorned with fair wreaths, go in at the door where of old the cloister walk was, into the cloister church, then round behind the stalls by the nuns' gallery and out again at the foremost great door beside their masters, singing Sei Lob und Ehr mit hohem Preis), they betake themselves in an orderly procession, as is said above at Whit Monday also, into St Michael's or the parish church, and there wait upon the divine service.

The propers. The order gives the music of the Officium dedicationis templi. It keeps the texts of the old Mass and Office of a church's dedication in polyphonic settings:

- Introit: Terribilis est locus iste, followed by a Mass of Georg Forster.

- After the epistle: Verba mea auribus percipe (Lassus).
- After the Gospel: Levavi oculos meos (Lassus).
- In place of Nun bitten wir: Benedic, Domine, domum istam (Johannes de Hollande).
- At Vespers: the antiphon In domum Domini ibimus, Psalm 116 (Dilexi), the responsory Si bona suscepimus, the hymn O lux beata, and Erhalt uns, Herr, bei deinem Wort in place of the Magnificat (Sehling 11, p. 468).
- In the psalter of the Office: for the feast of the dedication, the antiphon In domum Domini laetantes ibimus with Psalm 84, Quam dilecta tabernacula (Sehling 11, p. 422).

The school dedication of 1546. The same order describes a second dedication at Hof, kept yearly on Whit Monday with the same kind of procession. Margrave Albrecht gave the empty Franciscan friary to the town in 1543 for a school. Its "dedication", set for 1545, was put off by plague. On Whit Monday 1546 the town went in procession from the parish church to the cloister church, and after the service the schoolmaster and his colleagues led the boys into the new school, where the superintendent exhorted them. Each year the town walked, with the schoolboys in wreaths (the lower classes in the white shirts their godparents had given them), from St Michael's to the cloister church singing Veni Sancte Spiritus, Apparuerunt apostolis and Sei Lob und Ehr. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 464):

> in welchen man uf vorbemelten pfingstmontag aus der pfarrkirchen eine procession in die closterkirchen gehalten und nach verrichtetem gottesdinst Herr Jacob Schlemmer, schulmeister […] neben seinen zweien collegen als Georgen Hertweg, cantorn, und Wolfgang Döberlein, baccalaureo […] die schuler in die neue schul geführt, sie in gegenwart des herren Leonhardi Eberhardi als pastoris und superattendentis zu allem gutem vermahnet und dann nach wenig tagen ihre exercitia darinnen zu verrichten angefangen haben.

in which, upon the aforesaid Whit Monday, a procession was held out of the parish church into the cloister church; and after the divine service was done, Master Jacob Schlemmer, schoolmaster […] together with his two colleagues, namely Georg Hertweg, cantor, and Wolfgang Döberlein, bachelor […] led the scholars into the new school, exhorted them to all good in the presence of Master Leonhard Eberhard as pastor and superintendent, and then after a few days they began to do their exercises therein.

Regensburg, about 1567. Regensburg kept a comparable anniversary. On the Sunday after 15 October the choir sang figural music "on account of the dedication of the temple". That day marked the beginning, in 1542, of evangelical preaching and the Lord's Supper in the church (Sehling 13, p. 475). There was no consecration; the festival commemorated the Reformation of the church.

13.14.4 The Kirchweih festival

A police matter. The popular Kirchweih survived the abolition of the rite. Most orders handled it only as a problem of police: the feasting, drinking and dancing, and the fairs that kept people from the Sunday sermon. Three degrees of severity appear:

Treatment	Examples
Moved off Sunday or kept behind the sermon	Mecklenburg 1552: no Kirchmessen or fairs on Sunday (Sehling 5, p. 220); Hesse 1571 (Philippist): the Landgraves' instruction proposed Monday (Sehling 8, p. 359, editor's note); archbishopric of Bremen (Vörde) 1577: no booths opened until sermon and service were over (Sehling 7/1, p. 24)
Tolerated with limits	Saxony 1580: one day of dancing at each village Kirmes, by daylight (Sehling 1, p. 442); Nassau-Weilburg 1609: dancing at customary Kirmes and fairs once or twice a year, for an hour or three (Sehling 10, p. 339)
Abolished outright	Baden 1548 and 1564 (Sehling 16, pp. 518, 537); Waldeck 1583; Hohenlohe 1586 (Sehling 15, p. 521), with Schwäbisch Hall the same year (Sehling 15, p. 587, editor's note); a Palatine police ordinance (Sehling 14, p. 66, editor's note); Solms 1582 and 1594 (Reformed; Sehling 9, pp. 325, 337). Hohenlohe in 1579 forbade the clergy to go to one another's Kirchweih (Sehling 15, p. 380)

Waldeck 1583. Waldeck's mandate of 1583 is typical. The festivals "derive from the papacy" and breed "all wantonness and levity". They had already been abolished in the neighbouring electorates, principalities and counties, and the pastors were to announce the abolition from the pulpit on two Sundays. Waldeck, Mandat zur Abschaffung der Kirchweihfeste, 8 August 1583 (Sehling 9, p. 299):

> Nachdem wir uß relation unserer kirchenvisitatorn berichtet, daß uff den kirmessen, welche uß dem bapsthumb herruren undt von unsern underthanen biß noch behaltten werden, alle uppigkeitt undt leichtfertigkeitt zuwidder Gottes heiliges wortt undt gebotten getrieben, gehegt undt furtgesetzt werden […] undt wir derowegen solche kermisse, die vorlengst in unsern benachpartten chur- undt furstenthumben graff- undt herschafften abgeschafft, auch nitt lenger undter unsern underthanen zu dulden undt zu gestatten wissen

Whereas we are informed by the report of our church visitors that at the church-ales, which come from the papacy and are kept by our subjects until now, all wantonness and levity is practised, cherished and carried on contrary to God's holy word and commandments […] and we therefore know not to suffer and permit any longer among our subjects such church-ales, which have long since been abolished in our neighbouring electorates and principalities, counties and lordships

Danzig 1612. In 1612 Danzig noted in its list of the sexton's fees that the church's dedication festival, with three feasts of Mary, was "now no longer held for a great feast, nor kept" (Sehling 4, p. 206). Mulhouse in 1524 (Reformed) had already struck the dedication feast of Basel minster from its calendar (Sehling 20, p. 163, editor's note).

13.15 Blessings of objects and their abolition

The medieval blessings. The late medieval church year carried a cycle of blessings of things:

- holy water and salt every Sunday, with the sprinkling (Asperges);
- candles at Candlemas;
- ashes on Ash Wednesday and palms on Palm Sunday;
- the new fire, the paschal candle and the font on Holy Saturday;
- the Easter basket (Fladen, eggs, meat) on Easter Day;
- herbs at the Assumption;
- St John's wine (Johannisminne) on 27 December;
- bells "baptized" against storms.

The chrism and holy oils were consecrated by the bishop on Maundy Thursday.

Uniform abolition. No evangelical order kept any of these blessings. They are abolished in almost the same words from the Pomesanian bishop's articles of 1524 to the end of the century. The grounds are always the same three:

- the creatures are already sanctified by God's word at creation and by thanksgiving (1 Timothy 4:4–5);
- there is no command or promise of God for the blessing;
- the blessed things had become means of "superstition and sorcery".

What survived were the bare actions where they served preaching or prayer: the Sunday procession without water, bell-ringing as a call to prayer, the chrism at baptism in two orders. The wreath survived as a civil sign of honour, not a blessed object.

13.15.1 The lists of abolished blessings

Pomesania 1524. The earliest list is in the articles which Erhard von Queiss, bishop of Pomesania, published at the end of 1524. Pomesania, Themata episcopi Risenburgensis, 1524 (Sehling 4, p. 29):

> Es soll forthin kein wasser, salz, asche, palmen, lichte, kräuter und dergleichen geweihet werden; denn das ist alles menschentandt und ist nirgends zu nütze.

Henceforth no water, salt, ashes, palms, candles, herbs and the like shall be hallowed; for it is all men's toys and profiteth nowhere.

Pfalz-Neuburg 1543. The fullest list is in the Pfalz-Neuburg order of 1543, which follows Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 203). It goes through the year feast by feast. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, pp. 96–97):

> Man sol auch nicht mer weihen oder segnen weihwasser und salz, wie alle sonntag beschehen, noch wachs zu Lichtmeß noch aeschen am Aschermitwoch noch palmen am palmtag noch osterstock noch tauf noch feur am osterabent noch fladen, eier, fleisch am Ostertag noch wurz oder kreüter Assumptionis Mariae noch wein an S. Johannis des evangelisten;

> dann solche segen sein dem wort Gottis alle ungemeß und zuwider, zum teil auch abgöttisch und dienen mer zu abeglauben dann zur gotseligkeit

Neither shall men any more hallow or bless holy water and salt, as was done every Sunday, nor wax at Candlemas, nor ashes on Ash Wednesday, nor palms on Palm Sunday, nor the Easter candle, nor the font, nor fire on Easter Eve, nor cakes, eggs, flesh on Easter Day, nor roots or herbs at the Assumption of Mary, nor wine on the day of St John the Evangelist; for such blessings are all unagreeable and contrary to the word of God, in part also idolatrous, and serve more to superstition than to godliness.

The reasons. Nassau-Dillenburg's order of 1537 sets out the reasons at length. Pastors are not merely to stop blessing but to teach the people why. Nassau-Dillenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1537 (Sehling 10, p. 76):

> Es sollen auch die pfarhern unnd kirchenndhiener hinfuro weder saltz, feur, liecht, obs, kraut nit meher weihen, aber doch das volck furhien underrichten, warumb solichs pillich unnderlassen werde. Dan solich creaturen seint von Gott gut beschaffen, ein jegliche aber zu irem gebrauch, Ge[nesis] 1, unnd seint von Gott gehailiget unnd geweihet, den glaubigen mit dancksagung zugeniessen, 1. Timo. 4, darumb bedurffen sie unnsers weihens nit […] wo ist ein wort Gottes, das da sage, das weywasser hinweckneme oder abwesch die tegliche sunde, erquick die selen auff dem kirchoff, vertreibe den teuffel aus den heussern, item das geweihet kraut oder geweihet liecht unnd palmen dienen widder das ungewitter?

The pastors and ministers of the church also shall henceforth no more hallow salt, fire, light, fruit, herb, but shall nevertheless instruct the people why this is rightly left off. For such creatures are created good by God, each one for its use, Genesis 1, and are sanctified and hallowed by God, for the faithful to enjoy with thanksgiving, 1 Timothy 4; therefore they need not our hallowing […] where is there a word of God that saith that holy water taketh away or washeth off daily sins, refresheth the souls in the churchyard, driveth the devil out of houses; item, that hallowed herb or hallowed light and palms avail against the tempest?

Further lists. The same list, shorter or longer, recurs throughout the corpus:

Calenberg-Göttingen 1542. Calenberg-Göttingen gives the shortest form of the argument. Calenberg-Göttingen, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 6/2, p. 799):

> Vom salz-, wasser-, kraut-, palmen- und fladenweihen. Weil alle creaturen reichlich und gnungsam durchs wort zur zeit der schepfung gesegnet und geweihet sein und hie vom gleubigen weiter nichts gefordert wird, dan das er dieselbigen > mit danksagung und wol brauche, 1. Timo. 4, so sol solch weihen, weils in der schrift keinen grund hat, ganz abgeschafft sein.

Of the hallowing of salt, water, herbs, palms and cakes. Since all creatures were richly and sufficiently blessed and hallowed by the word at the time of the creation, and nothing further is here required of the believer but that he use them well and with thanksgiving, 1 Timothy 4, therefore such hallowing, since it hath no ground in Scripture, shall be wholly abolished.

Lüneburg convents 1555. The Lüneburg convent reform of 1555 shows how long the blessings could survive inside the cloister. The prioress (domina) had for a time been blessing the palms, the Easter candle, water and fire herself. This "did not belong to her", and was to stop (Sehling 6/1, p. 615).

13.15.2 What was kept in place of the blessing

Brandenburg 1540. Electoral Brandenburg abolished the blessings but kept the Sunday procession round the church, now without water, with a pure responsory or a seasonal hymn. Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 88):

> Das wasser- und salzweihen, samt dem sontaglichen sprengen, dergleichen kreuter, lichter und anders zu weihen, sol vorbleiben, denn es keinen göttlichen befelch hat und zu grossem misbrauch und zauberei geraten, aber der sonteglich circuitus mit einem reinen responsorio oder anderm gesange, wie es die zeit gibt, und mit nachlassung obbemelter misbreuch sol bleiben.

The hallowing of water and salt, together with the Sunday sprinkling, and likewise the hallowing of herbs, candles and other things, shall be left off, for it hath no divine command and is turned to great abuse and sorcery; but the Sunday procession, with a pure responsory or other chant as the season giveth, and with the leaving off of the abuses aforesaid, shall remain.

13.15.3 The blessing of the font

Font blessing abolished. The solemn blessing of the font on Holy Saturday and the eve of Pentecost, with the chrism and the paschal candle, was dropped everywhere. The Brandenburg-Nürnberg articles of 1528 already said that "blessing of the font shall be left off, since we have neither command nor example for it in Scripture". The people were to be taught why before it was stopped (Sehling 11, p. 136). Bugenhagen's Lübeck order of 1531 put the reason in a phrase: "water is water, blessing is blessing" (Sehling 5, p. 354). The water in which a child is baptized is ordinary water, and the word of institution makes the sacrament (§13.3.1).

13.15.4 Chrism and holy oils

Chrism dropped. The chrism and the oils, which only a bishop could consecrate, disappeared with the post-baptismal anointing (§13.3.2) and extreme unction (§13.8.1). The Straßburger Kirchenampt of 1525 (Moderate Reformed) said that oil, chrism and "the enchanted water" were no longer used at baptism, because the people trusted in them (Sehling 20, p. 153). Luther's Saxon visitors in 1528 would not quarrel over the chrism: "the right chrism, with which all Christians are anointed by God himself, is the Holy Ghost" (Sehling 1, p. 158).

Kept by two orders. Two orders kept the chrism at baptism as an "ancient ceremony" with a teaching meaning: Electoral Brandenburg in 1540 and Pfalz-Neuburg in 1543, which copied it. Brandenburg explained that the anointing signified the royal priesthood of Christians. The people were to be taught that the Holy Ghost, not the chrism, anoints, and children baptized in emergency were not to be anointed afterwards (Sehling 3, p. 54; quoted in §13.3.2). Neither order says who consecrated the chrism. In Pfalz-Neuburg Ottheinrich suspended the chrism section and issued a new baptismal order (Sehling 13, p. 22, editor's note). When he succeeded to the Palatinate in 1556 he ordered baptism "without chrism" (Sehling 14, p. 112).

13.15.5 Bells and weather-ringing

Bell baptism. Bells were "baptized" with chrism and salt and named. The rung bell was believed to drive off storms, hail and the demons in them. The evangelical orders never blessed a bell. They divided over the ringing itself.

Saxony 1528. The Saxon Unterricht der Visitatoren of 1528 (repeated in 1539) let weather-ringing continue, re-explained as a call to prayer. Between the two passages quoted it explains that God sends storms as punishment and good weather as his gift (Leviticus 26, Deuteronomy 28). The passage (with the whole end of its chapter) is missing from the edition of 1538, according to Sehling's apparatus. Saxony (Ernestine), Unterricht der Visitatoren, 1528 (Sehling 1, pp. 170–171):

> Dieweil aber das selbige leuten hernachmals misgebraucht, und dafür gehalten ist worden, das die glocken, und villeicht umb des willen, das man eine zeitlang fürgenomen die selben zu weihen, das wetter vertreiben solten, were nicht böse, das die prediger in sommerzeit, das volk vermaneten, so sich ungewitter hebet, und wo man leutet, das solche gewonheit darümb gehalten werde, nicht das der glocken dohn und weihung der glocken das wetter oder frost vertreibe, wie bisher geleret und gehalten ist worden, sondern das man dadurch erinnert würde, gott zu bitten, uns die früchte der erden behüten. […] Wenn nu das leuten abgethan, so würde villeicht das volk deste weniger erinnert, das von gott das wetter kömpt, und rüfet gott deste minder an. Es würden auch die leute deste wilder, wenn sie nicht vermanet werden, gott umb leben und narung zu bitten. Doch mus das der prediger viel bas ausrichten, denn die glocken, sonst würde ein teufelstreudel daraus, wie zuvor gewest.

But since the same ringing was afterwards misused, and it was held that the bells (and perchance for this cause, that men had for a time undertaken to hallow them) should drive away the weather, it were not amiss that the preachers in summertime admonished the people that, when a storm ariseth and men ring, this custom is kept to this end: not that the sound of the bells and the hallowing of the bells driveth away the weather or the frost, as hath been taught and held hitherto, but that men be thereby reminded to pray God to preserve us the fruits of the earth. […] If now the ringing were done away, the people would perchance be the less reminded that the weather cometh from God, and would call upon God the less. The people would also grow the wilder if they were not admonished to pray God for life and sustenance. Yet the preacher must do this far better than the bells, else a devil's game would come of it, as it was before.

Saxony 1580. The later Saxon order of 1580 abolished weather-ringing outright, because of the bell baptism behind it. Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 453):

> Sonderlich aber sol das aberglaubisch und abgöttische wetterleuten, (der ursach die glocken im babsthumb mit lesterlichem missbrauche der stiftung Christi getauft werden, das sie die kraft haben sollen, den hagel und schedliche wetter abzuwenden) wo das noch im brauch, abgeschaffet und nicht gestadtet, dargegen aber das volk zur buss und christlichem eiferigem gebete vermanet werden

But especially shall the superstitious and idolatrous weather-ringing (for which cause the bells in the papacy are baptized, with blasphemous misuse of Christ's institution, that they may have the power to turn away hail and harmful weather), where it is still in use, be abolished and not permitted; but instead the people shall be exhorted to repentance and to Christian, fervent prayer.

Hohenlohe 1582. Hohenlohe in 1582 kept a middle way. The people had been taught that "bell baptism is a horrible misuse of holy baptism, a blasphemy". One bell might be rung moderately as a call to prayer, but not all bells together nor for as long as the storm lasted (Sehling 15, p. 452).

Other territories. Other territories ended weather-ringing by mandate:

- Coburg 1554/55 (Sehling 1, p. 544, cited by the editor);
- Thüngen 1564 (Sehling 11, p. 741);
- Pfalz-Neuburg 1560 and 1576 (Sehling 13, pp. 139, 194);
- the Upper Palatinate 1557 and 1579, which in 1579 allowed one bell at night "to rouse and exhort the people to prayer" (Sehling 13, pp. 296, 316);
- Nassau-Weilburg 1576 (Sehling 10, p. 310);
- Ysenburg-Birstein 1583 (Sehling 10, p. 616);
- Limpurg 1610, which regulated it (Sehling 16, p. 623).

Weather-ringing among the other uses of the bells is treated in Chapter 9, §9.5.8.

13.15.6 Wreaths and other signs

Wreaths. The bridal wreath was not blessed but survived as a sign of honour. It was withheld from a bride who had lost her virginity (§13.7). At Hof in 1592 the schoolboys walked crowned with wreaths in the dedication procession (§13.14.3).

Popular survivals. Rural police ordinances dealt with surviving popular rites as superstition rather than liturgy, including the Easter and St John's fires and the use of "St John's Gospel" as a charm (§13.12.2): Nassau-Weilburg 1576 (Sehling 10, p. 310), Hesse 1608 (Reformed; Sehling 9, p. 61) and the Thüngen order.

13.16 The ban, excommunication, public penance and reconciliation

The medieval ban rejected. The evangelical orders began by rejecting the medieval ban, which was pronounced by officials for debts and fees and enforced by interdict. The Pomesanian articles of 1524 declared that "henceforth there shall be no ban which burdens consciences without ground in God's word and compels by human ordinance alone" (Sehling 4, p. 29).

Matthew 18 and 1 Corinthians 5. In its place almost every order set up a scriptural ban on the pattern of Matthew 18:15–17 and 1 Corinthians 5. The steps were:

1. private admonition;
2. admonition before witnesses;
3. report to the church (the consistory, the superintendent or the elders);
4. exclusion.

Exclusion was in two grades:

- The lesser ban (kleiner Bann, separatio, excommunicatio minor): exclusion from the Sacrament and from standing as godparent, without public announcement.
- The greater ban (großer Bann, excommunicatio major): public exclusion from the congregation, "delivering to Satan", with civil consequences.

The return was by public penance (öffentliche Buße, Kirchenbuße) and absolution before the congregation.

Who could ban. The orders differ chiefly on who held the power:

- Lutheran consistories. In the Lutheran territories the consistory decided and the pastor pronounced. The consistory was a court of theologians and jurists acting for the prince.
- Hesse (Ziegenhain 1539) (Moderate Reformed). Hesse set elders beside the pastor, and the ban was pronounced before them "and for the time being not before the whole congregation" (Sehling 8, p. 108).
- The Reformed. In the Reformed orders the power lay "not with one or several ministers" but with the whole congregation, exercised through elders: the Palatinate 1563 (Sehling 14, p. 388) and the London stranger church (Micron), both Reformed.

13.16.1 Lesser and greater ban

Grubenhagen 1581. Grubenhagen distinguished ordinary church discipline from the ban proper. The public rebuke of open sinners and their quiet refusal at confession "is no excommunication or ban, but a reminder to repentance". The ban is final. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1052):

> Es ist aber zum dritten ein unterscheid zwischen gemeinen kirchenstraffen und der excommunication oder bann; denn die offentliche straffe der offenbaren sünder sampt der heimlichen abweisung vom sacrament, so in der beicht oder sonst geschicht, ist keine excommunication oder bann, sondern eine erinnerung zur busse und hinlegung des gegebenen ergernis. Der bann aber ist eine endliche ausschliessung der verstockten von der christlichen gemein und ubergebung dem sathan zum verderben des fleisches

But thirdly there is a difference between the common punishments of the church and excommunication or the ban. For the public rebuke of open sinners, together with the secret turning away from the sacrament which taketh place in confession or otherwise, is no excommunication or ban, but a reminder to repentance and to the putting away of the offence given. But the ban is a final shutting out of the obdurate from the Christian congregation, and a delivering to Satan for the destruction of the flesh.

Lauenburg 1585: the lesser ban. Lauenburg names the grades. After the general preaching of the law and private admonition by the pastor and superintendent, the obstinate sinner is turned away from the Supper, from standing godparent and from leading a bride. Saxe-Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 448):

> sol man einen solchen halsstarrigen menschen als einem unchristen und gottlosen ein zeitlang vom heiligen abendmal, von gefatterschaft bei der taufe und bei der braut zustehende, oder die zu fürende in der vortrauunge abweisen, bis so lang, dass er rechte warhaftige busse thut. Diss ist die separatio oder kleiner bann, wie es die alten nennen, und geschicht ohn öffentliche ankündigunge für dem volke von der canzel, allein insonderheit, oder in gegenwart eins oder mehr prediger, oder auch dazu erfoderten christen.

such an obstinate man shall be turned away for a time, as an unchristian and ungodly man, from the holy Supper, from standing godfather at baptism and from standing by the bride or leading her at the betrothal, until he do right and true repentance. This is the separatio or lesser ban, as the ancients call it, and it is done without public announcement before the people from the pulpit, but privately only, or in the presence of one or more preachers, or of Christians called thereto.

13.16.2 The Lutheran form of excommunication: Wittenberg 1542

Wittenberg 1542. The Wittenberg consistory's constitution of 1542 was the first evangelical order to give a written form. No pastor may excommunicate without the consistory's judge. The consistory decides, and the pastor announces the sentence publicly in church "before the congregation, for St Paul says congregatis omnibus vobis". The excommunicate may come only to the sermon. He is denied the sacrament and the office of godparent, and is to be buried without song or ceremony, "in the field". A civil penalty follows: suspension from office or the council, or from his trade. Electoral Saxony, Constitution und artikel des geistlichen consistorii zu Wittemberg, 1542 (Sehling 1, p. 206):

> Forma excommunicationis. Nach dem Hans N. seiner tauf vergessen, dem teufel gefolget, und ein ehebruch (hic nominetur peccatum commissum) begangen, darumb er vielfeltig brüderlich vermanet und erinnert, davon abzustehen, und doch fursetzlich zu seiner seelen selbst verderben, darinne verharret, also, das kein rad noch hülf seiner besserung, zu hoffen ist, so thun wir genanten Hansen N. aus kraft der schlüssel, die Christus seiner kirchen gegeben, und die unbussfertigen damit zu binden, auf erden gelassen hat, in den bann, schliessen in aus der versamlung der heiligen christlichen kirchen. Verbieten im auch hiemit den brauch der christlichen sacrament, bis so lange, das er sich selbs bekeret und erkennet, widerumb zu dem, der dem sinkenden Petro die hand reichte, und keinen sünder wil verloren haben. Erinnere auch hierneben alle, so gehorsame glieder christlicher kirchen sich erkennen, das sie denselben Hansen N. als ein mutwilligen und unbussfertigen meiden wolten, auf das sie sich mit im nicht beschmitzen, und sich frembder sünd teilhaftig machen.

Form of excommunication. Forasmuch as Hans N. hath forgotten his baptism, followed the devil and committed adultery (here let the sin committed be named), for which he hath been many times brotherly admonished and reminded to desist therefrom, and yet wilfully, to the destruction of his own soul, continueth therein, so that no counsel nor help for his amendment is to be hoped for: therefore we put the said Hans N. into the ban, by the power of the keys which Christ hath given to his church and left on earth to bind the impenitent therewith, and shut him out of the assembly of the holy Christian church. We forbid him also hereby the use of the Christian sacraments, until he turn himself and acknowledge, and return again to him who reached his hand to the sinking Peter and will have no sinner lost. I remind also herewith all who know themselves obedient members of the Christian church, that they shun the same Hans N. as a wilful and impenitent man, lest they defile themselves with him and make themselves partakers of other men's sins.

Reconciliation. The order provides for reconciliation only in outline. The banned man asks grace, gives a pledge of amendment, and "is absolved by the congregation, who shall pray for him and rejoice heartily at his return" (Sehling 1, p. 207).

13.16.3 The full Lutheran rite: Saxe-Lauenburg 1585

Lauenburg 1585. Saxe-Lauenburg gives the most complete Lutheran liturgy of the ban and of public penance in Sehling. The procedure runs:

1. Private admonition by the pastor; then before two or three witnesses (churchwardens or elders).
2. Report to the superintendent, then to the consistory, which summons and hears the sinner.
3. If he remains obstinate, the consistory sentences him to the greater ban.
4. The sentence is announced the next Sunday. After the sermon the sinner is set "in the choir before all the people". The superintendent or pastor reads the sentence from the pulpit or before the altar.

5. Before communion begins, the sexton leads the excommunicate out through the people.
6. The officer forbids him weddings, feasts, taverns and "honourable company". He may work, buy and sell, and must stand in a separate place in church at every sermon, leaving before the rest of the service.

The sentence. The sentence closes with a prayer for the banned man. Saxe-Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 449):

> so haben die vorordente des kirchenrats im consistorio nach genuchsamer gepflogener handlungen, diesen menschen dahin erkennet, dass er solle in aller eurer gegenwart von der heiligen christlichen kirchen ausgeschlossen, und auch zugleich vom heiligen abendmal des waren und lebendigmachenden gegenwertigen leibs und bluts Christi als ein unwirdiger abgewiesen sein, auch bei der heiligen taufe nicht zu gefattern stehen, noch braut oder breutigam zur vertrauunge zu führen [...] bis so lange, dass er an sich öffentliche busse, reue und leid, wegen seiner solcher schrecklichen sünden, neben rechter christlicher besserunge vormerken und erscheinen lasse. Doch zur predigt mag und sol er frei unvorhindert kommen [...] Der allmechtige, ewiger gott, der nicht wil den todt des gottlosen, erbarme sich uber ihn durch Christum, und vorleihe ihm ware rechtschaffene busse, damit er vom künftigen zorn errettet werde. Amen. Diss heissen die alten canones den grossen bann, excommunicationem majorem. [...] Nach dieser renunciation und ankündigunge des bannes sol der cüster alsbald, ehe man die communion oder etwas weiters in der kirchen anfenget, die excommunicirte person öffentlich durch das volk aus der kirchen ausweisen, und seiner wege gehen lassen.

the appointed members of the church council in the consistory, after sufficient proceedings held, have judged this man to this end: that in the presence of you all he shall be shut out of the holy Christian church, and also at the same time be turned away as one unworthy from the holy Supper of the true, life-giving and present body and blood of Christ, and also not stand godfather at holy baptism, nor lead bride or bridegroom to the betrothal [...] until he let open repentance, contrition and sorrow for these his terrible sins, together with right Christian amendment, be perceived and appear in him. Yet to the sermon he may and shall come freely and unhindered [...] Almighty, everlasting God, who willeth not the death of the wicked, have mercy upon him through Christ, and grant him true and right repentance, that he may be delivered from the wrath to come. Amen. This the ancient canons call the greater ban, excommunicatio major. [...] After this renunciation and announcement of the ban, the sexton shall forthwith, before the communion or anything further in the church be begun, lead the excommunicated person publicly out of the church through the people, and let him go his way.

Public penance and absolution. A sinner who repented, whether before or after the ban, was first examined before the officer, the patron, the churchwardens and other honourable men. Five questions were put: does he confess his sin, is he sorry, does he desire forgiveness and public absolution, will he amend, does he desire the Supper.

On a communion Sunday the pastor then led him before the altar, where he knelt with two friends beside him. The rite has five parts:

1. An address to the people on the binding and loosing keys, naming the sin and the penitent's repentance.
2. The Lord's Prayer.
3. Psalm 67 (Es wolt uns Gott genädig sein) or Psalm 51 (Erbarm dich mein, o Herre Gott).
4. The five questions, each answered "Yes".
5. The absolution and readmission.

An exhortation to the people follows: they are to thank God, pray for the penitent, forgive the offence and never cast it up to him. The penitent then communicates. Saxe-Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 453):

> Also spreche ich hierauf, als ein vorordenter diener Jesu Christi, an gottes stat und von seinent wegen zu dir: Sei getrost mein son (oder tochter), deine sünde sind dir vorgeben. Auch nemen wir dich wiederumb an zu einem geliede des geistlichen leibs Christi, welche ist die gemeine seiner heiligen und gleubigen, von welchem leibe du dich selbst, durch deine laster, schand, sünd und ergernisse abgerissen hattest, dass du demselbigen hiemit nun widerumb einvorleibet sein sollest, im namen gottes des vaters, und des sons, und des heiligen geistes. Amen.

Therefore I say hereupon to thee, as an ordained minister of Jesus Christ, in God's stead and on his behalf: Be of good cheer, my son (or daughter), thy sins are forgiven thee. We receive thee also again to be a member of the spiritual body of Christ, which is the congregation of his saints and faithful, from which body thou hadst torn thyself by thy vices, shame, sin and offences; that thou shalt hereby now be again incorporated into the same, in the name of God the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

13.16.4 The Mecklenburg consistory order of 1570

The procedure. The Mecklenburg consistory order of 1570 gives the fullest Lutheran account of the procedure (its chapter "Von der excommunication"). It begins from Matthew 18 and the rule of Deuteronomy 17, "judge with right judgement": a preacher must not only mean well but keep "a due and orderly process". The order distinguishes secret sins, which are to be rebuked in secret and never named from the pulpit, from notorious sins (notoria facti and notoria iuris). Grubenhagen in 1581 repeats much of this text word for word (§13.16.1). The steps are:

1. Admonition. The pastor admonishes the open sinner once or twice, alone or before two or three witnesses, warning that he will otherwise have to proceed further. A sinner who repents, even on his deathbed, is absolved without further penalty.
2. Citation. If he despises the admonition, the pastor reports him to the consistory, which is "the church" of Matthew 18: not "the common unlearned rabble", nor a pope or bishop, but "godly, Christian, learned, understanding men and elders" of all estates. The consistory cites him.
3. Hearing. He is admonished again and, if he denies the deed, convicted by two or three witnesses, or, if the case is one of doctrine, by God's word. If he then recants, he incurs no civil infamy, and the pastor announces his conversion to the church.
4. Sentence. If he still despises the consistory or fails to appear, he is named from the pulpit of his own parish and put in the ban by public sentence of the consistory.
5. Execution. The officer forbids him weddings, taverns and honourable company, but not his trade. He stands at a separate place in church at every sermon, and on communion Sundays the sexton leads him out through the people after the sermon and prayer.
6. Absolution. After a time of probation the pastor and officer report his amendment in writing; the consistory releases him and orders the pastor to reconcile him publicly on the next Sunday.
7. Burial. If he dies impenitent, the parish is not to attend his burial; he is to be buried "as a member cut off".

The form of excommunication. The pastor's address opens with a long exposition: God's unchangeable order is that men either obey his word or, if they sin wilfully and openly, are cursed; therefore God has commanded not only the magistrate to punish public crimes but the church to cast out those who despise its admonition. The pastor then names the sinner and the sin, rehearses the admonitions, and pronounces the sentence. Mecklenburg, Consistorialordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, pp. 245–246):

> Nun wisset ihr, wie in dieser kirchen N. N. bishero öffentliche falsche lehre und rotterei ausgebreitet und verteidinget (oder ein öffentlicher bekannter todschleger, ehebrecher, hurer, wucherer, trunkenboltz ist). Derhalben er auch etliche mal von mir als seinem pastor, in beisein zweier oder dreier zeugen, letzlich auch von dem erwirdigen consistorio treulich und ernstlich vermanet ist, von diesem irrtum oder laster abzustehen, und sich mit gott und der geergerten kirchen zu versönen. Dieweil er aber alle treue vermanung verachtet und in seinem muthwilligen ungehorsam, wider gottes wort und willen, trotziglich und halsstarriglich verharret, so hat das erwirdige consistorium beschlossen und mir befohlen, demselben ungehorsamen, halsstarrigen verfürer (wann er falscher lehre halben verdammt wird) oder sünder N. N., in diesem kirchspiel wonhaftig, auf heutigen sonntag in den öffentlichen bann abzukündigen und aus dieser christlichen kirchengemeinschaft aus zuschliessen. Derhalben ich, als dieser christlichen kirchen gemeiner diener und seelssorger, in dem namen unsers herrn Jesu Christi, diesen unbussfertigen offentlichen (verführer, lasterer, ehebrecher, hurer, wucherer) N. N. dem teufel itzundt ubergebe zum verderben des fleisches, auf dass sein geist selig werde am tage des herrn, wann er sich wiederum bekeren wird. Verkündige im hiemit gottes schrecklichen zorn und ungnade, und dass er von aller gemeinschaft aller heiligen im himmel und auf erden ausgeschlossen und abgeschnitten, und mit allen teufeln in der helle verflucht und ewiglich verdammt sei, so lange er in dieser unbussfertigkeit verharret. Versage ihm auch hiemit alle kirchenrecht und aller heiligen sacrament gemeinschaft, ausgenommen die anhörung der predigt. Bitte auch und vermane alle christen, dass sie mit diesem N. N. forthin nichts zu schaffen haben, und sich seiner gemeinschaft ganz entschlahen, nicht mit ime essen oder drinken, ihn nicht zu gevattern bitten, zu keiner hochzeit oder anderer ehrliche gesellschaft laden, auch auf der strassen oder sonst nicht grüssen, damit er beschemet und gedemütiget werde und seine sünde desto ehr bekenne und sich zu gott bekehre und mit der christlichen kirchen, die er mit seinem ungehorsam zum höchsten beleidiget und geergert hat, versüne etc.

Now ye know how in this church N. N. hath hitherto spread abroad and defended public false doctrine and faction (or is an open, known manslayer, adulterer, whoremonger, usurer, drunkard). For which cause he hath been several times faithfully and earnestly admonished by me as his pastor, in the presence of two or three witnesses, and lastly also by the reverend consistory, to desist from this error or vice and to be reconciled with God and the offended church. But since he hath despised all faithful admonition and continueth defiantly and obstinately in his wilful disobedience against God's word and will, the reverend consistory hath resolved and commanded me to proclaim the same disobedient, obstinate seducer (when he is condemned for false doctrine) or sinner N. N., dwelling in this parish, on this present Sunday into the public ban, and to shut him out of this Christian fellowship of the church. Therefore I, as the common minister and pastor of this Christian church, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, do now deliver this impenitent, public (seducer, blasphemer, adulterer, whoremonger, usurer) N. N. unto the devil for the destruction of the flesh, that his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord, when he shall turn again. I declare unto him herewith God's terrible wrath and displeasure, and that he is shut out and cut off from all fellowship of all saints in heaven and on earth, and cursed and eternally damned with all devils in hell, so long as he continueth in this impenitence. I deny him also herewith all rights of the church and the fellowship of all holy sacraments, save the hearing of the sermon. I beseech and exhort also all Christians that they have nothing more to do with this N. N., and withdraw themselves wholly from his company; not eat or drink with him, not ask him to stand godfather, not bid him to any wedding or other honourable company, nor greet him in the street or elsewhere; that he may be ashamed and humbled, and the sooner confess his sin and turn to God, and be reconciled with the Christian church, which he hath offended and scandalized in the highest degree by his disobedience, etc.

The absolution from the ban. On the Sunday appointed the pastor announces the consistory's release and bids the people pray. The excommunicate kneels before the congregation; the pastor says the public confession and the absolution "as is customary in our churches", and the act ends with the usual hymn. Mecklenburg, Consistorialordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 246):

> Ihr geliebten in Christo, nachdem bis anher dieser N. ein zeitlang von wegen seiner misshandlung und verstockung aus der heiligen christlichen kirchen, als ein unnutz glied, abgesondert, und von dem heiligen sacrament des nachtmals, auch andern ehrlichen kirchenversammlungen ausgeschlossen gewesen, und aber sich seither aus gottes gnaden in dieser straf gehorsamlich, geduldig und christlich gehalten, auch versprochen, er wolle forthin durch gottes gnade ein christlich unergerlich leben führen. So haben die verordenten des consistorii nach empfangenen bericht und eingenommener kundschaft erkennet, dass der bemeldte N. seiner kirchenstraf zu diesemmal, vergangener sachen halben erledigt und wiederum zu der empfahung des heiligen sacraments des abendmals, auch andern ehrlichen kirchenversammlungen zugelassen werde. Und sollet ir alle hierauf verwarnet sein, fleissig zu bitten, dass der allmechtige barmherzige gott diesem N. und uns allen unsere sünde durch Jesum Christum gnediglich vergeben, und mit dem heiligen geist begnaden wolle, dass wir bis in unsern tod ein züchtig, ehrlich leben führen, durch Jesum Christum, unsern herrn. Darauf soll der pfarrherr den excommunicirten, so vor angesicht der gemeine nieder gekniet, die öffentliche beichte und alsbalt auch die absolution, wie die in unsern kirchen ublich, fürsprechen und den acctum ecclesiae mit dem gewöhnlichen gesange beschliessen.

Dearly beloved in Christ, forasmuch as this N. hath hitherto for a time been separated, as an unprofitable member, from the holy Christian church because of his misdeed and obstinacy, and shut out from the holy sacrament of the Supper and from other honourable assemblies of the church; and hath since, by God's grace, behaved himself obediently, patiently and Christianly under this punishment, and hath also promised that he will henceforth by God's grace lead a Christian life without offence: therefore the appointed members of the consistory, after report received and inquiry made, have judged that the said N. is released from his church punishment for this time, as touching things past, and admitted again to the receiving of the holy sacrament of the Supper and to other honourable assemblies of the church. And ye shall all be warned hereupon diligently to pray that the almighty, merciful God will graciously forgive this N. and us all our sins through Jesus Christ, and endue us with the Holy Ghost, that we may lead a chaste and honourable life unto our death, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Thereupon the pastor shall say before the excommunicate, who kneeleth before the face of the congregation, the public confession and forthwith the absolution as is customary in our churches, and shall close the act of the church with the usual hymn.

13.16.5 Mansfeld 1580: discipline, the ban and open penance

The ban. The Mansfeld agenda of 1580 (chapter 19) records the agreement of the Mansfeld synod of 1562 to keep the discipline "which hath been customary in the churches of this county now many years". The ban is "the public separation from the Christian congregation and delivering to Satan of the impenitent and persistent sinners". As in Saxony and Mecklenburg, no pastor may proceed of himself: the consistory weighs the case, and if it resolves on the ban it commits the pastor of the parish and gives him a written form (notel) from which he may not depart or mix in his own feelings (Sehling 2, p. 241). The pronouncement follows Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 5.

Open penance without the ban. Chapter 19 defends the Mansfeld practice of requiring open penance not only from the excommunicate but from every notorious sinner, against those who called it defamation. Such sinners "are de facto in the ban, though the church hath not yet shut them out", and what was sinned against all must be made good before all. Mansfeld, Kirchen-Agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, pp. 241–242):

> Man sol aber auch das wissen, das gott in seiner schrift zwischen den offentlich verbanneten und anderen beharlichen und ergerlichen sündern keinen unterscheid machet, denn solche sind de facto im bann, ob sie schon die kirche noch nicht hat ausgeschlossen […] Wenn nu aber eine ganze kirche und gemeine beleidiget und geergert ist durch offentliche sünde und laster, wie kan denn die abbittung und versöhnung gegen dieselbe anders denn offentlichen geschehen, was gegen allen offentlich gesündiget worden, das muss je gegen allen offentlich abgetragen werden

But this also is to be known, that God in his Scripture maketh no difference between those publicly banned and other persistent and offensive sinners; for such are de facto in the ban, though the church hath not yet shut them out […] But now when a whole church and congregation is offended and scandalized by public sin and vice, how then can the begging of pardon and the reconciliation toward it be done otherwise than publicly? What hath been sinned publicly against all must surely be made good publicly toward all.

The rite of open penance. Chapter 20 gives the "process how those who do open penance are received again into the fellowship of the church":

1. A time of probation, to see that the repentance is earnest.
2. A day is appointed. After the sermon the pastor names from the pulpit, in the penitent's presence, his fall and sin, his conversion and his begging pardon for the offence.
3. The penitent kneels or stands before the altar, and the minister asks him publicly three questions: whether he confesses that he has sinned openly, angered God and offended many Christians; whether he is heartily sorry and desires to be reconciled by open penance with God and the offended congregation; whether he means by God's help to amend, and truly believes that for Christ's sake his sins are forgiven him by the holy absolution. He answers "Yes".
4. The public absolution, below.
5. An exhortation to the people to recognize their own weakness, "for whoso standeth, let him take heed lest he fall" (1 Corinthians 10:12).

Mansfeld, Kirchen-Agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, pp. 242–243):

> Absolutio. Gott der vater unsers herrn Jesu Christi, der dich zuerkentnis deiner sünden bracht hat, und geschworen: Als war ich lebe, ich wil nicht den tod des Sünders, sondern das er sich bekere und lebe, der hat dir umb seines lieben sons willen alle deine sünde verziehen. Und ich, als ein unwirdiger diener, spreche dich an seiner stat, und in seinem namen, auch offentlich, und für dieser gemeine allhie von denselben los, und neme dich auf zu dieser seiner heiligen kirchen gemeinschaft, daraus du gefallen warest. Auf das du von im mit seinem heiligen geist regieret werdest, und mit uns andren seines heiligen sacraments nützlich und wirdiglich, zu sterkung deines glaubens und des lebens besserung brauchen, und ewig selig werden mögest. Im namen gottes des vaters, und des sons, und des heiligen geistes, † Amen.

Absolution. God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath brought thee to the knowledge of thy sins, and hath sworn: As I live, I will not the death of the sinner, but that he turn and live; he hath forgiven thee all thy sins for his dear Son's sake. And I, as an unworthy minister, in his stead and in his name, do also publicly and before this congregation here loose thee from the same, and receive thee into the fellowship of this his holy church, out of which thou hadst fallen; that thou mayest be governed by him with his Holy Spirit, and use with us others his holy sacrament profitably and worthily, to the strengthening of thy faith and the amendment of life, and be saved for ever. In the name of God the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. † Amen.

13.16.6 Grubenhagen 1581: the form of absolution from the ban

Grubenhagen 1581. Grubenhagen took over the Mecklenburg form of excommunication (§13.16.4) and added its own "form of the absolution from the ban and the public receiving of the penitent sinner into the congregation of God". The penitent has given signs of repentance on three appointed Sundays. The pastor addresses the people on God's mercy to fallen sinners (Adam and Eve, Aaron, David, Manasseh, the sinful woman, the thief on the cross), announces the consistory's mandate, puts three questions, and absolves with the formula of John 20:23. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1058):

> Derwegen frage ich dich, N.N., ob du bekennest, das du mit deinem fall Gott erzörnet, viel Christen betrübet und diese kirche und gemeine geergert hast? Antwort: Ja. Ich frage dich ferner, ob du von herzen aus dem bann begerest, mit Gott und dieser kirchen, auch jederman, versöhnet zu sein, und bittest diese christliche gemeine, das sie dir umb Gottes willen verzeihen wolte, das du sie mit deinem fall betrübet und mit deinem halstarrigen ungehorsam geergert hast? Antwort: Ja. Ich frage dich zum dritten, ob du auch gleubest dem heiligen evangelio, das dir Gott umb seines Sones und desselben theuren verdienstes willen alle deine sünde vergeben wil, und das meine vergebung Gottes vergebung sey, gedenkest auch, forthin in solchem glauben christlich zu wandeln, erbarlich zu leben und an diese veterliche züchtigung dein leben lang zu gedenken und Gott zu bitten, das du nimmermehr in sicherheit fallest? Antwort: Ja. […] Und ich anstat und [auf] befehl meines Herrn Jhesu Christi vermöge seiner eigenen, warhaftigen, ewigen, unwandelbaren wort, aus seinem göttlichen herzen und munde gesprochen, da er gesaget hat: Welchen ihr die sünde erlasset, denen sind sie erlassen, vergebe dir, N. N., hiermit alle deine sünde und verkündige dir Gottes gnad, freud, trost und ewiges leben, und das du widerumb zur gemeinschaft der christlichen kirchen aufgenommen bist im namen des Vaters, Sons und heiligen Geistes. Amen. Was nu auf erden gelöset ist, das soll auch im himmel loß sein, spricht Christus.

Therefore I ask thee, N. N., whether thou confessest that by thy fall thou hast angered God, grieved many Christians and offended this church and congregation? Answer: Yea. I ask thee further whether thou desirest from thy heart to be loosed from the ban and reconciled with God and this church, and with every man, and beseechest this Christian congregation that it would forgive thee for God's sake that thou hast grieved it by thy fall and offended it by thy obstinate disobedience? Answer: Yea. I ask thee thirdly whether thou believest also the holy gospel, that God will forgive thee all thy sins for the sake of his Son and his precious merit, and that my forgiveness is God's forgiveness; and whether thou purposest henceforth to walk Christianly in such faith, to live honestly, and to remember this fatherly chastisement all thy life long, and to pray God that thou never fall into security? Answer: Yea. […] And I, in the stead and by the command of my Lord Jesus Christ, by virtue of his own true, eternal, unchangeable word, spoken out of his divine heart and mouth, when he said, Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them, do forgive thee, N. N., herewith all thy sins, and proclaim unto thee God's grace, joy, comfort and eternal life, and that thou art received again into the fellowship of the Christian church; in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Amen. What now is loosed on earth shall be loosed also in heaven, saith Christ.

The pastor then warns the people, "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall", and forbids them to cast up the fall to the penitent or to think him of ill civil repute (infamia).

13.16.7 The Reformed form: Micron's London order

Micron's order (Reformed). The fullest Reformed rite is that of the Dutch stranger church in London, in Marten Micron's Ordinancien of 1554. Sehling prints it in the German translation used in East Frisia (1565). The procedure runs:

1. Private, then public admonition.
2. The sinner's name is announced twice to the congregation as a despiser of admonition.
3. A day is set, and anyone with objections from God's word has a week to bring them to the ministers and elders.
4. On the day, the morning sermon is shortened and the minister expounds the nature and end of the ban:
    - it is Christ's ordinance;
    - it punishes contempt of admonition rather than the sin itself;
    - the papal ban is void;
    - the power lies with the whole congregation, not with the ministers alone;
    - it is not contrary to love.
5. All the ministers stand before the congregation. The minister rehearses the case and asks his colleagues whether it is so; they answer "Yes".
6. All kneel for a prayer that God would break "the stony heart of our brother N.", followed by the Lord's Prayer.
7. If the sinner comes forward and shows true repentance, public penance replaces the ban. If not, the minister pronounces the excommunication in the form of a prayer to Christ.
8. The congregation is instructed how to treat him: as a heathen and publican, avoiding his company except in civil matters, yet seeking his amendment like a physician. Psalm 101 is sung.

The prayer of excision. Micron, Ordinancien (1554), East Frisian German edition, 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 652):

> so folgen wir, o Herr Jesu Christe, deinem heiligen gebot und schneiden ihn als ein faul glied offentlich ab von dem heiligen leib deiner gemeine, und das mit grosser trübnuß unserer herzen und mitleiden seiner verderbnuß. Wir binden > hie auf erden seine sünden und sind auß deinem wort versichert, daß sie auch bey dir im himmel gebunden sind. Wir werfen ihn hie auß deinem seligen reich (auf daß er bey allen glaubigen für ein heid und zölner geachtet werde) und geben ihn durch dein gebot dem teufel zur verderbung seines fleisches, auf daß sein geist selig werde, durch deinen heihgen namen, der du lebest und regierest mit dem Vater und dem heiligen Geist, ein einiger und ewiger Gott, gepriesen in ewigkeit. Amen.

we follow, O Lord Jesus Christ, thy holy commandment, and cut him off publicly as a rotten member from the holy body of thy congregation, and that with great sorrow of our hearts and compassion for his destruction. We bind here on earth his sins, and are assured out of thy word that they are bound also with thee in heaven. We cast him here out of thy blessed kingdom (that he may be accounted of all the faithful as a heathen and a publican), and give him by thy commandment to the devil for the destruction of his flesh, that his spirit may be saved; through thy holy name, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one only and eternal God, blessed for ever. Amen.

Readmission. The return of the excommunicate (chapter 26) follows the same pattern in reverse:

1. The elders visit him and examine his repentance.
2. A day is announced a week ahead, so that the congregation may "receive with joyful heart" the one it had cut off with sorrow.
3. On the day the ministers and elders stand beside him. The minister proves from Scripture that the fallen obtain forgiveness, and that "public offences require public reconciliation".
4. A prayer is said in which the whole congregation joins its sins to his.
5. He confesses and is received again (Sehling 7/1, pp. 653–655).

13.16.8 Other orders

The same pattern, with local variations, appears in:

- Hesse (Moderate Reformed). The Ziegenhainer Zuchtordnung of 1539 introduced elders, and its ban was pronounced before pastor and elders. The Hesse order of 1566 required the banned sinner to do penance "before the whole congregation which he had offended" (Sehling 8, p. 212).
- The Palatinate 1563 (Reformed). Exclusion from the sacraments was to lie "not in the power of one or several ministers or other persons, but with a whole Christian congregation". Elders admonish three times and then separate the offender by forbidding the sacraments (Sehling 14, p. 388). Later Palatine ordinances add chapters De excommunicatione and De receptione (Sehling 14, pp. 423–424).
- Town of Brandenburg 1542. A dissenting voice: the sacrament was to be refused to no one, since one whom God's word does not move will not be moved by exclusion; grave crimes belong to the civil power (Sehling 3, p. 255).
- Couples who anticipated marriage. The commonest public penance in practice was that of a couple who had lain together before their wedding. Nassau-Weilburg in 1609 required such a couple to do "public church penance" before they could be blessed, unless they had already been betrothed, in which case the fault was rebuked at the wedding itself; Hohenlohe in 1572 had both "set forth to public church penance and begging of pardon" (Sehling 10, p. 353; 15, p. 177).
- Ysenburg-Ronneburg 1591 and Solms (Reformed). Counts with Reformed leanings imposed "Christian ban and exclusion from the congregation" through a presbytery, with the magistrate's help (Sehling 10, pp. 596, 599; 9, p. 328).

Burial of the excommunicate. Burial followed the ban. Wittenberg 1542 ordered that the excommunicate be buried "not with song or ceremonies, nor in the common churchyard of the Christians, but in the field" (Sehling 1, p. 206).

13.17 Private confession and absolution

Auricular confession abolished, private absolution kept. Every evangelical order abolished the medieval sacrament of penance as a duty to enumerate all mortal sins to a priest, with satisfaction imposed. The Pomesanian articles of 1524 already ended confession "by which one would be bound to name all sins" (Sehling 4, p. 29). But the Lutheran orders kept, and generally required, private confession and absolution before communion. They kept it for three reasons:

- the absolution is the gospel spoken to the single person, "as if God by a voice from heaven promised thee grace";
- the pastor could examine those coming to the Supper in the catechism;
- the troubled conscience could be comforted.

Many Upper German orders replaced it with an examination of communicants (§13.17.4). The private and public forms of absolution after open sin and the ban are in §13.16.

13.17.1 The Lutheran position

Dietrich 1545: no enumeration, no compulsion. Veit Dietrich's Nuremberg agenda states the principle: the papal auricular confession is not commanded by God, and no minister may refuse absolution until the sins have been counted. It is enough that the person confesses himself a sinner and desires grace (Sehling 11, p. 528).

Saxony 1580: private absolution required before communion. The Saxon order of 1580 treats private absolution as a free thing, not a papal compulsion, yet requires everyone to present himself to his pastor and seek it before communion, "for the sake of Christian discipline and specially for the sake of the ignorant". Saxony, Ordnung of Duke August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 427):

> VII. Von der rechten christlichen beicht und privat absolution. Nach dem der pfarrer und kirchendiener das volk gründlich aus gottes wort unterrichtet, was der unterscheid zwischen der papistischen ohrenbeicht, da die leut gemartert und gezwungen alle sünde, das unmüglich ist Psalm 19. zu erzelen, und der warhaftigen christlichen beicht sei, darinnen die jugend zu bekentnis und rechenschaft ihres glaubens angehalten, jeder seines berufs in sonderheit erinnert, fürnemlich aber die kleinmütigen angefochtene gewissen aus gottes wort in iren schweren besondern anliegen getröstet werden, sollen sie die ganze gemeine fleissig zu solcher vermanen, und öffentlich anzeigen, das man niemand zum hochwirdigen sacrament des leibes und bluts des herrn Christi zulassen werde, er habe denn zuvor sich bei seinen ordentlichen pastorn angezeigt, und die privat absolution gesucht.

VII. Of right Christian confession and private absolution. After the pastor and ministers of the church have thoroughly taught the people out of God's word what is the difference between the papistical ear-confession, wherein people were tormented and forced to recount all their sins, which is impossible (Psalm 19), and the true Christian confession, wherein the youth are held to confession and account of their faith, every one is admonished of his calling in particular, but chiefly the faint-hearted, tempted consciences are comforted out of God's word in their heavy particular troubles: they shall diligently exhort the whole congregation thereto, and declare publicly that none shall be admitted to the most worthy sacrament of the body and blood of the Lord Christ unless he have first presented himself to his ordinary pastor and sought the private absolution.

13.17.2 The form of confession: Luther's catechism

The catechism form. The common form was the one Luther added to the Small Catechism, "How the simple shall be taught to confess". Many orders print it; the Palatinate under Ottheinrich (1556) gives it entire. The rite is:

1. The penitent: "Worthy, dear sir, I pray you hear my confession and pronounce forgiveness to me for God's sake."
2. A general confession before God of all sins, and a particular confession before the confessor of the sins one knows and feels, according to one's station under the Ten Commandments (a servant's, a master's or mistress's). One who knows of no particular sin is not to invent any, but to take the forgiveness on the general confession.
3. "God be merciful to thee and strengthen thy faith."
4. "Believest thou that my forgiveness is God's forgiveness?" "Yea, dear sir."
5. The absolution: "As thou believest, so be it unto thee", and the dismissal.

Palatinate, Kirchenordnung of Ottheinrich, 1556 (Sehling 14, p. 140):

> Darauf sol der beichtiger sagen: Gott sey dir gnedig und stercke deinen glauben, Amen. Sprich: Glaubstu auch, daß meine vergebung Gottes vergebung sey? Ja, lieber herr. Darauf spreche er: Wie du glaubst, so geschehe dir. Und ich auß befehl unsers herrn Jhesu Christi vergeb dir deine sünde im namen des vaters und des sohns und des heiligen geists, Amen. Gehe hin im friede. Welche aber grosse beschwerung des gewissens haben oder betrübt und angefochten sind, die wird ein beichtiger wol wissen, mit mehr sprüchen zu trösten und zu glauben raitzen.

Thereupon shall the confessor say: God be merciful unto thee and strengthen thy faith. Amen. Say: Believest thou also that my forgiveness is God's forgiveness? Yea, dear sir. Thereupon let him say: As thou believest, so be it unto thee. And I, by the command of our Lord Jesus Christ, forgive thee thy sins, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen. Go in peace. But those who have great burden of conscience, or are grieved and tempted, the confessor will well know how to comfort with more sayings and to stir to faith.

The same form stands in the Lippe order of 1566, where the five catechism questions on the Supper precede it (Sehling 21, p. 379).

13.17.3 The form of absolution: Brandenburg 1540

Brandenburg 1540. Electoral Brandenburg gives a pastoral form in two parts, with the laying on of hands:

- For the careless. The confessor first asks whether the penitent knows the Ten Commandments. If not, he shows him that this is "the greatest sin a man may commit", to ask nothing after God, and bids him learn God's word.
- For the contrite. To one who confesses himself a poor sinner he says that this knowledge of sin is itself a work of the Holy Ghost, and explains that the absolution gives him in person the grace preached to all the world: "this word of absolution … thou shalt regard as if God by a voice from heaven promised thee grace and forgiveness of thy sins". Then he lays his hands on him and absolves.

Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, pp. 62–63):

> Nach solcher unterricht, so er die absolution begeret, so sprech er mit auflegung der hende zu im wie folget: Form der absolution. Der allmechtig gott und vater unsers herrn Jesu Christ wil dir gnedig und barmherzig sein, und wil dir alle deine sunde vergeben um des willen, das sein lieber son Jesus Christus dafur gelitten hat und gestorben ist und im namen desselbigen unsers herrn Jesu Christi, auf seinen befelch und in kraft seiner wort, da er sagt: welchen ir die sunde erlasset, den sind sie erlassen etc., spreche ich dich aller deiner sunden frei, ledig und los, das sie dir alzumal, sollen vergeben sein, so reichlich und volkomen, als Jesus Christus dasselbige durch sein leiden und sterben verdienet und durchs evangelium in alle welt zu predigen befohlen und dieser tröstlichen zusage, die ich dir itzt im namen des herrn Christi gethan, der wollest dich tröstlich annemen, dein gewissen darauf zufrieden stellen und festiglich glauben, deine sund sind dir gewislich vergeben. Im namen des vaters und des sons und des heiligen geists. Gehe hin im friede.

After such instruction, if he desireth the absolution, let him speak to him with laying on of hands as followeth: Form of absolution. The almighty God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ will be gracious and merciful unto thee, and will forgive thee all thy sins, for this cause, that his dear Son Jesus Christ hath suffered and died for them; and in the name of the same our Lord Jesus Christ, at his command and in the power of his word, where he saith, Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them, etc., I pronounce thee free, quit and loosed of all thy sins, that they shall be all forgiven thee, as richly and completely as Jesus Christ hath merited the same by his suffering and death and commanded it to be preached through the gospel in all the world. And this comfortable promise, which I have now made thee in the name of the Lord Christ, receive thou with comfort, set thy conscience at rest thereupon, and believe firmly that thy sins are surely forgiven thee. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Go in peace.

Refusal. The same order tells pastors to refuse absolution and the Sacrament to heretics, blasphemers, open sinners and those who will not learn the commandments, the creed and the Lord's Prayer, until they show signs of amendment, and then to absolve and readmit them (Sehling 3, p. 63). The Saxon form for the sick of 1539 used the same private absolution, ending "Zeuch hin im friede" (§13.8.3).

13.17.4 Without private confession: the examination of communicants

Upper German orders. Several south-western cities kept no private confession. In its place came the examination of communicants (Verhör), deliberately designed so that it could not be mistaken for auricular confession. Reutlingen, about 1531, had the children brought by father or mother, girls with the mother and boys with the father, to give account of their faith openly in church, "that it may not be suspected for a papistical ear-confession and snare of consciences" (Sehling 17/2, pp. 43–44).

Confession money abolished. The confession penny (Beichtgeld, Beichtpfennig) went with the old penance. Baden in 1533 relieved the people of stole fees "for confession, for the sacrament of the altar, for the holy anointing", and Hohenlohe in 1588 forbade pastors to take confession pennies (Sehling 16, p. 502; 15, p. 549).

The examination before first communion is treated in Chapter 15, §15.11.2, and general confession at the Mass in Chapter 3, §3.4.6.

13.18 Processions

What went and what stayed. The medieval church walked in procession constantly: round the church with holy water every Sunday, through the fields on the Rogation days and St Mark's day, with palms and the Palm-Sunday ass, with the sacrament on Corpus Christi, with relics, banners and crosses on patronal feasts and against hail and plague. The evangelical orders abolished the processions that carried the sacrament, relics or images or that invoked the saints, and almost all of the field processions. What stayed were processions that served the Word, prayer or common order:

- the funeral procession with hymns (§13.9);
- the bride's procession to church (Kirchgang, §13.7);
- the schoolboys' and townspeople's festal processions at Hof (§13.14.3);
- in Electoral Brandenburg and Mulhouse (Reformed), the Sunday procession, Palm Sunday and the Rogation prayers in a purified form.

Who walked in these processions and what was carried in them is set out in §13.18.4.

The fate of Corpus Christi, the Rogation days and the Hagelfeier in the calendar is treated in Chapter 12 §§12.8.9 and 12.12.5.

13.18.1 Abolished

Pfalz-Neuburg 1543. The Pfalz-Neuburg order, following Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533, put the abolition of processions at the head of its list of abolished blessings (§13.15.1). Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 96):

> Darnach sollen auch unterwegen bleiben alle procession und umbgenge umb die kirchen mit dem weichwasser und mit dem heiligen sacrament in der monstranzen.

Thereafter also all processions and goings about the church with the holy water and with the holy sacrament in the monstrance shall be left off.

Brandenburg-Nürnberg in 1533 likewise counted "going with the crosses" and "carrying about the holy sacrament" among the ceremonies done away (Sehling 11, pp. 203–204). A Feuchtwangen text of 1563 named the processions "with statues, banners, wooden crosses", the "impious pomp of the feast of Corpus Christi" and the carrying about of the Eucharist among the papal ceremonies (Sehling 11, p. 406). The Pomesanian articles of 1524 ended processions "as having no ground in God's word" (Sehling 4, p. 29).

13.18.2 Kept and purified: Electoral Brandenburg 1540

Brandenburg 1540. Joachim II's order is the great exception. It kept the Sunday procession round the church without holy water (§13.15.2), the Palm Sunday procession without the blessing of the palms, and the Rogation processions "before the church", purged of the invocation of saints; and it added a weekly German litany. Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 88):

> Den palmentag sol man halten mit der procession und gesengen wie von alters, doch das die weihung der palmen vorbleibe […] Von der creuzwochen. Als auch hergekomen, das am tage Marci und die drei folgende tage nach dem sontage Vocem Jocunditatis und an etlichen sonderlichen ortern, auf ander mehr gezeiten, gemeine gebet fur der kirchen und anderer notturft gehalten, so denn der heilig Sant Paul 1. Timot. 2. getreulich vermanet, für die öbrigkeit und sonst fleissig zu bitten, so ist auch darauf unser gemtüt, das solchs also bleibe, als es jeders orts von alters christlich hergebracht und desselben gelegenheit geben wil, doch in allweg das reine und christliche gesenge, gebet und collecten darzu gebraucht werden […] Es sollen auch die misbreuch, so etwan bei solchen processionen gewesen, mit anrufung der heiligen abthan werden und alle gebet und gesenge dahin gerichtet werden, das wir all unser not und anligen bei niemand anders denn dem herrn Christo suchen und von im hülf bitten sollen.

Palm Sunday shall be kept with the procession and chants as of old, yet so that the hallowing of the palms be left off […] Of Rogation week. Whereas it hath also come down that on St Mark's day and the three days following the Sunday Vocem jucunditatis, and in some particular places at other times also, common prayers have been held for the church and other necessities, and holy St Paul, 1 Timothy 2, faithfully exhorteth us to pray diligently for the magistrates and others, it is also our mind that this so remain, as it hath come down from of old in Christian wise in every place and as the occasion of each will give, yet in all ways that pure and Christian chants, prayers and collects be used thereto [...] Also the abuses that have been at such processions, with the invocation of the saints, shall be done away, and all prayers and chants directed to this end, that we seek all our need and concern from none other but the Lord Christ and ask help of him.

Mulhouse 1524 (Reformed). Mulhouse kept the Rogation processions on St George's and St Mark's days and the three Rogation days, but only within the parish church of St Stephen, "since the common prayer of Christians together is most pleasing to God", and without "running to particular saints or churches" (Sehling 20/2, p. 195).

13.18.3 Processions that remained

Funerals, weddings, festivals. The common evangelical processions were those of the life of the parish:

- Funerals. The body was fetched from the house and carried to the churchyard with the schoolboys singing, the minister and the people following (§§13.9.2–13.9.3).
- Weddings. The bride's Kirchgang with her maidens and the bridegroom's company to the church door or altar (§13.7); withheld from the bride who had fallen (§13.7.6) and from the divorced who remarried (§13.7.10).
- Festivals. At Hof the whole town walked in procession to the church dedication festival and to the school festival on Whit Monday, with wreathed schoolboys and hymns (§13.14.3).

13.18.4 Who walked and what was carried

The answer in brief. Where the orders describe a procession, the people in it are almost always the same four groups, in this order:

1. the cross, carried by a schoolboy or by the sexton;
2. the schoolboys with their schoolmaster or cantor, singing;
3. the clergy: the pastor (the "priest" or celebrant, who was also the preacher) and his chaplains or deacons, in surplices;
4. the people: men first, then maidens, then women; at a funeral, the mourners after the coffin.

No evangelical order names any of the following in a procession:

- Persons. A bishop or superintendent as such (at Hof the clergy walk as a body); a deacon or subdeacon with a distinct liturgical role; any of the minor orders.
- Objects. A thurible, incense boat, torches, candle-snuffer, crosier, mitre, canopy, banner, Gospel book, Bible or hymnal.

The only things carried in the evangelical processions are these:

- the cross or crucifix;
- lights, tolerated at Brandenburg funerals "with measure", and borne before the sacrament in Baden 1533;
- the sacramental vessels taken to the sick (§13.8.2);
- the corpse on its bier.

What the medieval processions had carried was abolished: banners, wooden crosses, statues, the Palm-Sunday ass, the Easter image, the monstrance, relics and holy water. The ministers of the minor orders analysed in Chapter 16 §16.4 had no place in any procession; their work was done by schoolboys and the sexton.

The order of march: Stendal 1541. The fullest description is the visitors' order for the Rogation procession at Stendal. The priests, schoolboys and people of each parish gather at seven in the morning, sing Exurge Domine, and go in order to the Church of Our Lady, singing Media vita and then Mitten wir im Leben sind. There a Mass or the office is sung and a sermon on prayer is preached. Stendal, ordinance of the visitors of the Mark Brandenburg, 1541 (Sehling 3, p. 314):

> also das uf den Montag in der kreuzwochen die priester, schuler und das volk, so in jede pfarkirche bei euch gehort, sollen des morgens um VII hora in derselben pfarkirche zusammen kommen und am ersten vor der procession singen das Antiphon exurge domine und hernach die processionen ordentlich halten, als am ersten ein kreuz vorher tragen, dornach die schuler, folgend die priester und hernach die man, junkfrauen und frauen und sollen die schuler und priester in der procession singen das Antiphon media vita lateinisch, wan das aus ist, alsdan den deutschen gesang: „Mitten wir im leben sein,“

[…] so that on the Monday in Rogation week the priests, scholars and people belonging to each parish church among you shall come together in the same parish church at seven o'clock in the morning, and first, before the procession, sing the antiphon Exurge Domine, and afterward hold the processions in order: as, first, to carry a cross before, thereafter the scholars, following them the priests, and after them the men, maidens and women; and the scholars and priests shall sing in the procession the antiphon Media vita in Latin, and when that is ended, then the German hymn "In the Very Midst of Life" […]

Funerals: cross, school, clergy, coffin. The funeral procession is the one procession found in nearly every Lutheran order (§13.9). Its order matches Stendal's. Electoral Brandenburg puts the cross first, then the schoolboys and then the priests, and leaves the old custom of carrying lights. Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 81):

> in deductione funeris sol man ein creuz furtragen, darauf die schüler und denn die priester folgen. Bei etlichen alten ists auch gebreuchlich gewesen, licht mit zu tragen, und do solchs in ubung were, mag es mit mass auch bleiben, und so man die leiche tregt, mag man singen, media vita und die drei deutsche vers, mitten wir im leben sind, und so der weg zu lang, das deudsche deprofundis, aus tiefer not, oder sonst das responsorium libera me domine.

In the leading forth of the body a cross shall be carried before, whereupon the scholars and then the priests follow. With some of old it hath also been customary to carry lights withal, and where that is in use, it may also remain with measure; and while the body is carried, they may sing Media vita and the three German verses "In the Very Midst of Life", and if the way be too long, the German De profundis, "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee", or else the responsory Libera me, Domine.

In Waldeck the sexton carries the cross, and the schoolboys, schoolmaster and pastor walk before the coffin. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, p. 256):

> Darnach gehet der Priester vor des verstorbenen hauß, und soll der Custer oder Opfferman mit eynem Creutz unnd nehest ime die Schuler sampt dem Schulmeyster und Pastor vor der Leich hergehen Unnd, an welchen ortten Schuler sein, eyn Christlich gesenge, Als mit namen: Si bona suscepimus, Item: Auß tieffer not, Oder: Erbarm dich mein, O Herre Gott, auff dem wege singen.

Thereafter the priest goeth before the house of the departed, and the sexton or Opfermann shall go with a cross, and next to him the scholars together with the schoolmaster and pastor, before the corpse; and in places where there are scholars, they shall sing a Christian hymn on the way, as by name: Si bona suscepimus; item, "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee"; or, "Have mercy on me, O Lord God".

The same pattern recurs elsewhere:

- Who carries the cross. In Anhalt's order of the German hymns (before 1551) "a boy from the school shall carry a cross on a staff before the procession" (Sehling 2, p. 555); at Prenzlau "a cross shall be carried before by the scholars, which the body followeth with the school" (Sehling 3, p. 261).
- The pastor fetches the dead. At Gottleuba the dead are fetched "with the school", and "a cross is carried before the corpse" (Sehling 1, p. 568). A Henneberg pastor reports, "I fetch the body with the sexton, scholars and cross" (Sehling 2, p. 342).
- The crucifix. Freiberg in 1538 required "a crucifix to be carried before at every burial, specially in honour of the high and comfortable article of the resurrection of the dead" (Sehling 1, p. 468). Wolfstein in 1574 allowed it "as a testimony on whom the Christians die, namely on the crucified Lord Jesus Christ", but called lights for the dead useless (Sehling 13, p. 586). Schwäbisch Hall allowed the cross "significatively, not effectively" (Sehling 17/1, p. 173).
- Refused. The impenitent were buried without bells, hymns, "cross-bearing, accompaniment or processions" (Schönburg 1542, Sehling 2, p. 175; §13.9.4).

What the clergy wore. The surplice (Chorrock) was the processional vestment. The visitors at Perleberg in 1581 required the pastor, chaplains and sexton to wear it at funerals "that they be not taken for craftsmen". Perleberg, Visitations-Abschied, 1581 (Sehling 3, p. 256):

> Und weil der seelsorger amt erfordert und von alters christlich herbracht, die toten mit gewenlichen christlichen gesengen zur erden zu bestettigen, so sollen demnach der pfarrer, caplene und kuster in begleitunge der toten ire chorrocke antragen, auf das sie nicht vor handwerker angesehen werden

And forasmuch as the office of the curates of souls requireth, and it hath come down in Christian wise from of old, to commit the dead to the earth with customary Christian hymns, the pastor, chaplains and sexton shall therefore put on their surplices in accompanying the dead, that they be not taken for craftsmen […]

The Upper German orders went the other way. Amberg in 1555 left it free whether the ministers wore surplices "over the street", but the one who gave the exhortation was to wear his in church (Sehling 13, p. 294). Hohenlohe in 1590 told its pastors to accompany the dead "on the street or outside the town" in the plain church gown, not the surplice (Sehling 15, p. 622).

The Sunday circuit. Electoral Brandenburg kept the Sunday procession round the church, the circuitus, "with a pure responsory or other chant", without holy water (Sehling 3, p. 88; §13.15.2). The Havelberg visitors of 1558 show who walked in it. The pastor and chaplain lead it, the schoolmaster and his assistants sing, and the council and congregation follow. Havelberg, Abschied, 1558 (Sehling 3, p. 232):

> Der pfarrer und caplan sollen ihrem berufe in predigen, sacramentreichung und sonst fleissig nachkommen, das creuze semtlich legen, desgleichen alle sontage und in hohen festen den circuitum mit gesengen, vormuge hochgedachts unsers gnedigsten herrn christlichen kirchenordnung, halten, auch der rath samt der gemeine fein ordentlich volgen.

The pastor and chaplain shall diligently follow their calling in preaching, administering the sacrament and otherwise, [and] lay the cross together; likewise every Sunday and on high feasts hold the circuit with chants, according to the Christian church order of our most gracious lord aforesaid; and the council together with the congregation [shall] follow in good order.

(The phrase das creuze semtlich legen is obscure; it may refer to setting down the processional cross.)

Entering the church and going to the altar. The only evangelical entrance rite is Brandenburg's: "the priest who holdeth the Mass, together with his ministrants, in their customary church ornaments, according to the custom of each church", goes to the altar and says the Confiteor (Sehling 3, p. 68). Elsewhere the minister simply "steps before the altar". No order describes a clergy procession at ordination or installation, beyond the new prelate being led to the altar by the prince's commissioners in Württemberg (§13.11.3).

Festal and civic processions. Two orders describe processions of the whole town:

- Hof 1592. On Whit Monday the clergy, the prince's captain and officials, the burgomasters, the council and the whole town gather in St Michael's. With the schoolboys, crowned with wreaths and the younger classes "clothed white in their christening shirts", they go round the high altar and out in procession to the convent church, singing Veni Sancte Spiritus. The girls' schoolmaster with the girls and maidens follows the men, and the women come last (§13.14.3). Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 463):

> Uff diesen tag pflegt sich die ehrwirdige priesterschaft neben dem herren haubtman und andern fürstlichen dienern, auch bürgermeister und rat sowol die ganze gemein dieser stad nach gehörtem andern puls in sanct Michelskirchen, zu vorsamlen, von dannen mit der schulmeng (welche, so bald man zusammenschlegt, sich in die gedachte kirchen mit schönen krenzen wol geziret findet [R.: NB. Die inferiores dasses sollen mit ihren schönen batenhembdern weis bekleidet sein und ihre gehenge anhaben], umb den hohen altar gehet und das Veni, Sancte Spiritus choraliter, Sei lob und ehr mit hohen preis singet bis zur fördersten grosen tur gegen dem markt), in der procession in die klosterkirchen zu gehen […] Uf die mannspersonen folget der jungfrauschulmeister neben seinen schulmegdlein und anderen jungfrauen und hinder denselben das weibervolk in gleicher ordentlichen procession

On this day the reverend clergy, together with the lord captain and other princely servants, and also the burgomasters and council as well as the whole congregation of this town, are wont to gather in St Michael's church after the second peal has been heard; and from thence, with the company of the school (which, as soon as the bells are rung together, is found in the said church well adorned with fair wreaths [margin: NB. The lower classes shall be clothed white in their fair christening shirts and have on their hangings], goeth about the high altar and singeth the Veni Sancte Spiritus in plainsong [and] Sei Lob und Ehr mit hohem Preis as far as the foremost great door toward the market), to go in procession into the convent church […] After the menfolk followeth the girls' schoolmaster with his schoolgirls and other maidens, and behind them the womenfolk in like orderly procession.

- Strasbourg 1598. On the Wednesday after the election of the new Ammeister and the oath-day, the whole magistracy with all the officers of the city went "in an orderly procession from the Pfalz into the Minster". There a sermon was preached on the office of rulers and subjects, followed by prayer for good government and thanksgiving for the past year. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 1598 (Sehling 20/1, p. 592):

> Das den folgenden Mitwoch der gantze Magistrat Sampt allen Verampteten in einer ordenlichen Procession von der Pfaltz in das Münster geht, Da dann ein besondere Predigt von dem Ampt der Oberkeit und der Unterthanen gehalten Und nach vollendeter Predigt das gemeine Gebett umb glückliche unnd friedliche Regierung angestellet und zugleich Gott, dem Herrn, danck gesagt wird

That on the following Wednesday the whole magistracy, together with all that bear office, goeth in an orderly procession from the Pfalz into the Minster, where a special sermon is held of the office of the magistrate and of the subjects; and after the sermon is ended, the common prayer for a happy and peaceable government is made, and at the same time thanks are given to God the Lord [...]

The sacrament to the sick. The medieval sacrament was carried through the streets to the sick with a light and a bell, and the people followed. Feuchtwangen recalls how it was done "publicly by the parish priest, many following him" (Sehling 11, p. 406). The early Baden order of 1533, still on the old pattern, kept it. Baden, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 16, p. 510):

> das auch sollich Sacrament mit gepurenden Eernn, mit vorgeendem liecht und schellen umb oder uber die gassen getragen werden soll, ist im vorigen unnsers gnedigen herren ausschreiben lautter gnueg angezaigt, dabei man es peleiben last.

[...] that also this sacrament shall be carried about or over the streets with due honours, with light and bells going before, is shewn clearly enough in our gracious lord's former mandate, and there they let it rest.

The evangelical orders replaced this with the minister going to the house, with or without the sexton carrying the vessels (§13.8.2). Kronstadt in 1543 named what was dropped. Kronstadt, Reformationsbüchlein, German version, 1543 (Sehling 24, p. 196):

> darumb ist beschlossen, das der dyener an kerczenn, schellen und ander gepreng, so dy ungelertenn zur abgötterey reyczent, mit denenn, dy yn geruffen habenn, mit dem prott und kelch zum haws des krankenn geen soll

Therefore it is resolved that the minister, without candles, bells and other pomp, which entice the unlearned to idolatry, shall go with them that have called him, with the bread and cup, to the house of the sick [...]

What was taken out of the processions. The orders that abolished the processions also cleared out what had been carried in them:

- Images and dramatic figures. The Palatine reform of 1546, following Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 (§13.18.1), did away with "all spectacles and plays that were made with images: on Palm Sunday with the ass, on Good Friday with the crucifix and the sepulchre, on Easter Day with carrying about the image of the resurrection of Christ, on Ascension Day with drawing it up, on Whitsunday with letting down the dove" (Sehling 14, p. 93). Feuchtwangen in 1563 lists "processions with statues, banners, wooden crosses" (Sehling 11, p. 406).
- Relics. Veit Dietrich asks the magistrate to abolish "setting out and carrying about relics" (heiltumb aufsetzen und umbtragen) (Sehling 11, p. 550).
- Banners. The banners ended with the processions that carried them. Calenberg-Göttingen in 1542 abolished the "monkey-play" of running about in Rogation week "with the banners and saints", keeping the days with sermon, sacrament and litany (Sehling 6/2, p. 812). Teschen in 1584 forbade "the processions with the banners" (Sehling 3, p. 461). Leiningen-Westerburg in 1566 forbade carrying banners over the fields (Sehling 19/1, p. 227). Mecklenburg ordered its visitors to remove the banners and crosses from the churches. Mecklenburg, Visitations-Instruction, 12 November 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 220):

> insonderheit unchristliche ceremonien und abgotterei abschaffen, auch die fanen und creuze, so man in papatu pflegt umzutragen, aus den kirchen hinweg thuen.

[...] and in particular abolish unchristian ceremonies and idolatry, and also put away out of the churches the banners and crosses which in the papacy they were wont to carry about.

- The treasures. The processional crosses, monstrances, viatica (pyxes for the sick) and pacificalia (paxes) of the old processions were inventoried by the visitors and turned to the common chest (for example Grimma 1529, Sehling 1, p. 573; Zahna 1528, Sehling 1, p. 714).

13.19 Tonsure, deconsecration and the deposition of ministers

Rites of separation without rites. Three medieval acts marked a person or thing as set apart for God, or withdrew that mark: the tonsure, which made a man a cleric; the consecration of churches and vessels, and their execration when profaned; and the degradation of a cleric, which stripped him of his orders piece by piece. The evangelical orders kept none of these as rites. The tonsure was abolished as a human ordinance. Churches, chapels, altars and vessels were taken out of use by order of the magistrate and turned to the use of the parish and the poor, without any rite of deconsecration. A minister was removed from office by a public sentence, not degraded.

13.19.1 The tonsure abolished

A human ordinance. The evangelical orders give no rite of first tonsure and no clerical tonsure. The Albertine visitors at Freiberg in 1537 counted the tonsure among "all human ordinances hitherto held necessary" which "shall be done away": "ringing other than for divine services, going with the cross, wearing tonsures and cowls, fast days" (Sehling 1, p. 466). The Schleswig-Holstein order of 1542 lists "shaving the tonsure" (Platten scheren) with holy water, the blessing of bells, anointing and the separate holy vestments among the inventions of the papists (Sehling 23, p. 83). Bugenhagen reminded Hamburg in 1529 that St Lawrence "wore no tonsure nor deacon's robe, yet was a deacon, as is written in Acts 6 and 1 Timothy 3" (Sehling 5, p. 514).

Old-believing clergy ordered to let it grow. Where priests and monks remained, the magistrates forbade them the tonsure as a mark of the papal clergy. The Saxon visitors at the collegiate church of Altenburg in 1533 ordered the canons "to abstain from the offensive papal dress and tonsure" (Sehling 1, p. 515). Esslingen in 1532 (Moderate Reformed) laid a fine of ten florins on any chaplain or religious who had his crown shaved. Esslingen, Mandat für die altgläubigen Geistlichen, 10 August 1532 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, p. 371):

> Deßgleichen will ir ersam weißheit, das hinfüro kheiner derselbigen caplen, auch die ordenspersonen, khein kron oder blatten mehr scheren, besonder sich in demselbigen andern cristenlichen burgern gemeß halten unnd erzeigen und also khein sünderung, wie im bapstumb beschehen, machen oder undernemmen sollen, den welcher über das straffpar betretten, den wirdet ir ersam weißheit jedes verbrechen umb x gulden straffen. […] Daneben soll auch allen ordens personen gesagt und eingebunden werden, die ordensklaider von inen zulegen unnd die krentzlin vom haupt herab zuscheren und sich in klaidungen andern burgern gemeß erzeigen bey ernstlicher straff eines ersamen Raths.

Likewise their honourable wisdom willeth that henceforth none of the same chaplains, nor the persons of religious orders, shall shave any more a crown or tonsure, but shall hold and show themselves therein like other Christian burghers, and so make or undertake no separation as was done in the papacy; and whosoever is found punishable beyond this, their honourable wisdom will punish him ten florins for every offence. […] Moreover it shall be told and enjoined upon all persons of religious orders to lay aside their habits, and to shave the little crowns off their heads, and to show themselves in clothing like other burghers, on pain of the earnest punishment of an honourable council.

One later case. Sehling records that Heinrich Julius of Brunswick, postulated bishop of Halberstadt as a Lutheran child, received the first tonsure on 27 November 1578. It caused "great stir in Protestant circles" and was "sharply blamed by most", though Jakob Andreae called it an adiaphoron (Sehling 2, p. 464, editor's introduction).

13.19.2 Churches, altars and vessels returned to common use

No execration. The orders give no rite for deconsecrating a church or altar, and no rite of execration when a church was profaned. What they give are orders to remove altars, images and chapels decently and by authority, and to turn the material and the vessels to the use of the parish, the common chest and the poor.

Orderly removal. Strasbourg in 1525 (Moderate Reformed) forbade any burgher, cleric or layman, to remove or break "images, altars, panels, iron or stonework" on his own authority; anyone with a grievance was to bring it to the council (Sehling 20/1, p. 166). The Saxon visitors at Salza in 1540 ordered the council to clear the churches of their screens, candles, banners and images and of all altars but one, to put pews in their place, to close the minster and pull down a chapel, using its stone and timber for the bridge. Salza, Kirchen-Ordnung für Salza, 1540 (Sehling 1, p. 654):

> Derwegen sol ein erbar rat alle gitter, kerzen, fanen, abgottische bildnus und hindernus und bevorn alle altarn bis uf einen und das gemeuer, so im augustiner kloster fur dem chor stehet, aus den kirchen reumen und abbrechen lassen, damit man an stat derselben stule machen und gottes wort deste bas hören und der hochwirdigen sacrament handelung sehen mogen. Insonderheit sol man die tumkirche zu St. Stefen zuschleessen und die capella in Niderhöfen abbrechen lassen, die stein und holzwerk zur brucken und ander notturft gebrauchen.

Therefore an honourable council shall cause to be cleared out of the churches and broken down all screens, candles, banners, idolatrous images and hindrances, and above all every altar save one, and the masonry which standeth before the choir in the Augustinian cloister; that in their stead pews may be made, and God's word the better heard and the administration of the most worthy sacrament seen. In particular the minster church of St Stephen shall be shut, and the chapel in Niederhofen pulled down, and its stone and timber used for the bridge and other necessities.

Württemberg in 1555 ordered the field chapels in which there was no preaching and no burial to be "broken down and razed", and complained that the duke still found them standing, and the little image-houses with their altars newly roofed (Sehling 16, p. 292).

Vessels and vestments sold. The surplus chalices, monstrances and vestments were sold for the common chest. The Schönewalde order of 1529 allowed the judge and jurors "to sell the superfluous chasubles and vestments profitably" for the chest (Sehling 1, p. 667). In the lordship of Homburg in 1605 the vestments, patens and chalices were to be sold, "one cup kept at each place", and all accounted for (Wittgenstein 1605, Reformed; Sehling 22, p. 149).

But not to profane use. The property itself remained God's. The Courland order of 1570 states the principle: what has once been given and hallowed to God's honour may not, under any pretext, be turned "to profane use", and its holders are to restore it (Sehling 5, p. 52). The Pomeranian synod of 1574 bade pastors see that church goods were not "transferred to profane uses" (Sehling 4, p. 490). The sacred character passed from the stones and vessels to the purpose they served.

13.19.3 The deposition of ministers

Removal, not degradation. No order has the medieval degradation, in which a bishop stripped a condemned cleric of his vestments and the instruments of each order in turn. A minister unworthy of office was deposed by sentence of the superintendent, synod or consistory, and the sentence was announced to the congregation. Wittenberg in 1542 removed from office a minister put in the ban (§13.16.2).

Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed). Hesse gives the fullest procedure, under the heading "How ministers of the church shall be removed from office". For negligence: admonition by the elders, then sharper warning by the superintendent, then sentence before several pastors or in the synod, after which the deposed man must leave the parsonage. For a public scandal: immediate inquiry by the superintendent with neighbouring pastors, and sentence whether the accused is present or not. In both cases the sentence is read in his church on the next Sunday by another pastor, who bids the people pray for a new minister. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, pp. 211–212):

> So derhalben ein diener der kirchen durch großen unfleiß in seinem ampt oder offentlicher sünden halber, als trunkenheit, ehebruch, hurerei, diebstal, falsch schweren, aufrur, todschlag, ketzerei, spaltung oder dergleichen, des ampts sich selbst unwirdig macht, will es warlich vonnoten sein, daß ein solcher auch offentlich vor der ganzen gemein seines ampts entsetzet werde. […] Diesen gesprochnen sentenz des superintendenten soll den nechst volgenden sontag ein ander pfarherr von wegen des superintendentis oder des ganzen synodi in der kirchen, darin der beurlaubte zuvor geleret, nachdem das ganze ampt in der kirchen verrichtet, verkündigen. Auch soll man zugleich denjenigen, welchen dies gebüret, befehlen, daß sie nach einem andern beizeiten trachten und mitlerweil Gott den himlischen Vatter fleißig bitten, er wöl einen andern tüchtigen und fleißigen senden und geben.

If therefore a minister of the church maketh himself unworthy of the office by great negligence in his office, or by reason of open sins, as drunkenness, adultery, whoredom, theft, false swearing, sedition, manslaughter, heresy, schism or the like, it is truly needful that such a one be also publicly put out of his office before the whole congregation. […] This sentence pronounced by the superintendent shall be proclaimed on the next following Sunday by another pastor, on behalf of the superintendent or of the whole synod, in the church wherein the dismissed man formerly taught, after the whole service in the church hath been performed. And at the same time those whom it concerneth shall be bidden to seek in good time after another, and meanwhile to pray God the heavenly Father diligently that he will send and give another, apt and diligent.

13.20 Sorcery and the cleansing of houses and things

This section asks whether the orders prescribe anything for cleansing a house, a church or an object that had been used in sorcery, witchcraft or the service of the devil.

No rite of cleansing. The orders give no such rite. No order exorcizes, sprinkles, blesses anew or reconsecrates a house, a stall, a church or a thing that sorcery or the devil had touched. The old means of cleansing were holy water, exorcized salt and blessed herbs and candles. The orders abolished them, and called them superstition and sorcery in their own right (§13.15, §13.20.1). Churches were neither dedicated nor reconciled (§§13.14.1, 13.19.2). What the orders do prescribe is:

- prayer in the house, without water or exorcism: Mecklenburg and Pomerania bless the house when the pastor visits the sick (§13.20.2), and Pomerania prays over the possessed (§13.8.7);
- burning in public for the tools of sorcery: charms, written blessings, blessed or bewitched objects and the sorcerers' books (§13.20.3);
- breaking and burning for the images, fonts and chapels of the old cult, which the orders call idolatry and rank with sorcery (§13.20.4);

- guarding the things of the sacraments, so that the baptismal water, the hosts and the altar could not be taken for sorcery (§13.20.5);
- repentance for the persons, or punishment: public apology and absolution, exclusion from the Supper, and the magistrate's penalties (§13.20.6).

The one reconciliation of churches. The only reconciliation of churches in the corpus is a Catholic one. In 1549 the Interim gave Strasbourg's collegiate churches back to the old clergy, and the bishop asked for the churches to be reconciled and their altars rebuilt and consecrated. The arbiters held that the reconciliation was unnecessary and might well be left undone. The chapters were to rebuild at their own cost the altars the Interim required. The bishop was asked to see to their consecration, and to the reconciliation if the law required it at all, which the arbiters did not believe, without offence (Sehling 20/1, pp. 369–370; §1.4).

13.20.1 The old means of cleansing abolished

Holy water against the devil. The medieval church cleansed houses, stalls and churchyards with holy water and drove off the devil and the storm with blessed salt, herbs and candles (§13.15.1). Bugenhagen's Braunschweig order of 1528 answers that these creatures were made to be used with thanks, not to take away sins or drive away devils. The more holy water there was, the more poltergeists. Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 389–390):

> Nu wete wy jo wol, wörto water, vür, lichte, krudere unde awet van Gade uns geschapen unde gegeven synt, dat wy se bruken, nicht darto, dat me dagelike sunde mit wyewater afneme unde de düvele mede vordrive; ja jo wy mehr wyewater hedden, jo mehr ock poltergeiste; edder dat me mit lichten unde krüderen deme dunre wehre unde tovere mit krüderen imme bedde unde imme kelre by deme bere, ane dat sulck alles erdichtet is wedder de gnade unses Heren Christi, de nympt alleyne de sunde wech, unde wedder dat christlike bet, darmede wy scholen anröpen dorch Christum unsen leven Vader in allen unsen nöden lives unde der selen. Dat helpet in den saken unde neyn water, vür, krüt, wente sulke creaturen synt van Gade to sulken saken nicht geschapen unde gegeven edder bevalen.

Now we know well whereto water, fire, lights, herbs and fruit are created and given us of God: that we should use them; not that a man should take away his daily sins with holy water and drive away the devils therewith (yea, the more holy water we had, the more poltergeists also); nor that a man should ward off the thunder with lights and herbs, and work sorcery with herbs in the bed and in the cellar by the beer. Beside that, all this is devised against the grace of our Lord Christ, who alone taketh away sin, and against the Christian prayer, wherewith we should call upon our dear Father through Christ in all our needs of body and soul. That helpeth in these matters, and no water, fire or herb; for such creatures are not created and given or commanded of God for such matters.

The devil's doctrine. The order then turns to water itself. Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 391):

> Water is eyne gude creature, van Gade uns geschapen to wasschende, to kakende, to drinkende, to losschende, to kölende, to badende, to begetende etc., dat is to netende, dar schole wy Gade vohr danken. Worumme scholde wy nu eyn gebet anrichten, dat doch neyn bet, sonder gadeslesteringe were, dat wy mochten dat water anders maken to eyneme bruke, dar id Got nicht tho geschapen hefft [...] dat dat water (alse se hebben geleret unde ock gebruket) uns scholde denen to affwasschinge unser dageliken sunden, de se venialia hebben genömet, to begeten unde erquicken de selen up dem kerckhave dat ock spottisch is, to vordriven de duvele uth deme huse unde alle böse van den swynen unde vehe? Wech, wech mit den düvelsleren unde werken, de uns Christum hebben vordunkert.

Water is a good creature, created us of God to wash, to cook, to drink, to quench, to cool, to bathe, to sprinkle, etc., that is, to use; for which we should thank God. Wherefore then should we set up a prayer, which yet were no prayer but blasphemy, that we might make the water into something else, for a use whereto God hath not created it [...]: that the water (as they have taught and also used it) should serve us for the washing away of our daily sins, which they have called venial; to sprinkle and refresh the souls in the churchyard, which is a mockery besides; to drive the devils out of the house, and all evil from the swine and the cattle? Away, away with the devil's doctrines and works, which have darkened Christ for us!

The Nassau-Dillenburg order of 1537 asks the same question: where is the word of God that says that holy water "driveth the devil out of houses" (§13.15.1)?

The exorcisms of the creatures. The exorcism at baptism was kept in many Lutheran orders as a prayer over the child (§13.4). The exorcisms of salt and water, which made the holy water that was sprinkled to drive the devil from a place, were not kept.

Thomas Stieber's instruction for Wolfstein keeps the baptismal exorcism, to be used "as a prayer" and not as "the sorcerers adjure the devil". It then turns to the exorcisms of the creatures. Wolfstein, Christliche Instructio of Thomas Stieber, 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 578):

> Es werden auch hiemit gemaint die exorcismi salis, aquae, olei et chrismatis; dann solche exorcismi seind gottlos, weil solche unvernünftige creaturn, als weren sie vom Teufel besessen, beschworen werden. Uber das wird ihnen sonderliche kraft und würkung zuegeeignet wider Gottes wort, als das sal exorcisatum ad effugandum inimicum wie in actu sacerdotali befunden wird.

Herewith are meant also the exorcisms of salt, water, oil and chrism; for such exorcisms are godless, because such unreasoning creatures are adjured as though they were possessed of the devil. Moreover a special power and working is ascribed to them against God's word, as the salt exorcized to put the enemy to flight, as is found in the Actus sacerdotalis [the priests' handbook].

The editors give the usual form, which bade every wickedness of the devil's deceit and every unclean spirit flee "from the place where thou shalt be sprinkled" (ab eo loco, quo aspersus fueris; Sehling 13, p. 578, editors' note). The Transylvanian order of 1547 buries all such consecrations together. Transylvanian Saxons, Kirchenordnung, 1547, Latin version (Sehling 24, p. 225):

> Oblationes enim pro defunctis cum caeteris impiis nunditionibus explosae sunt e templis, similiter et omnes diversarum creaturarum superstitiosae consecrationes, exorcismi reliquaque opera gentilis idololatriae observationumque iudaicarum in futurum penitus maneant sepulta.

For the offerings for the dead, with the other ungodly traffickings, are driven out of the churches; and likewise let all the superstitious consecrations of divers creatures, the exorcisms, and the other works of heathen idolatry and of Jewish observances remain wholly buried for the time to come.

The hallowing is the defilement. Some people still ran to the Mass-priests and monks to have their wax, palms, candles and herbs hallowed. Leiningen's discipline order of 1566 forbids this, because these things were afterwards used for sorcery. It calls the hallowing itself a defiling and a profaning. Leiningen, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1566 (Sehling 19/1, p. 228):

> XII. Von Kreuterweyhen. Verbieten Wir, daß niemandts hinfortan zu den Gottlosen, Aberglaubischen Meßpfaffen oder München lauffe, Wachs, Palmen, Kertzen oder Kreutter weihen lasse, mit wölchen man nachmals Zauberey, Segnerey und Hexenwerck braucht, dann alle Creaturen von Gott selbst gut gemacht und erschaffen seind, sonder es sol solche verunreinigung und entheiligung gentzlich abgestalt und verbotten sein und bleiben, bey peen 10 gulde.

XII. Of the hallowing of herbs. We forbid that any man henceforth run to the godless, superstitious Mass-priests or monks and let wax, palms, candles or herbs be hallowed, with which men afterward practise sorcery, charming and witchcraft; for all creatures are made and created good by God himself. But such defiling and profaning shall be wholly put down and forbidden, and so remain, on pain of ten gulden.

The Thüngen order of 1564 gives the same reason for abolishing the churching of women: it had bred "superstition and sorcery with blessings, St John's Gospel, hallowed waters, salt, herbs, candles and the like" (§13.5.1).

13.20.2 A house troubled by the devil: prayer

The blessing of the house of the sick. Two Low German orders give a prayer over a house. When the pastor went into the house of a sick man to give him the Supper, he greeted it with the greeting that Christ commanded (Luke 10:5), and the sexton answered. Then the pastor might say a prayer, in Latin or in German, that God would drive out of the house all the spooks, ghosts and power of the devil. There is no water, salt or exorcism. The prayer is said once, as the visit begins. Pomerania lets the whole form be shortened in a time of plague, when the pastor has many to visit, or when the sick man is near his end. The Mecklenburg order of 1540 and the Pomeranian order of 1542 have the same rubric and the same prayers (Sehling 4, p. 365). Mecklenburg, Ordeninge der misse, 1540/1545 (Sehling 5, p. 158):

> unde wen de kerckhere int hus geit, schal he den grut, den Christus bevalen hefft, spreken: Frede si mit dissem huse, unde schal de köster antworden: Unde alle den darinne wanen. Unde mach de kerckher dit gebet spreken latintsch effte düdesch. A domo tua hac quesumus domine spirituales nequitie repellantur, et aerearum discedat malignitas tempestatum, per dominum nostrum etc. Here segene dit hus unde driff her uther alle spökenisse, gespens unde gewald

and when the pastor goeth into the house, he shall speak the greeting which Christ hath commanded: Peace be with this house; and the sexton shall answer: And with all that dwell therein. And the pastor may say this prayer in Latin or in German: From this thy house, we beseech thee, O Lord, let the spiritual wickednesses be driven back, and let the malice of the tempests of the air depart; through our Lord, etc. Lord, bless this house, and drive out of it all spooks, ghosts and power of the devil, that it, being thus hallowed, may be a dwelling for thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. The sexton shall say: Amen.

The Latin collect asks that the spirits of wickedness and the storms be kept from "this thy house". The German prayer is a free version of it. It leaves out the storms, asks God to bless the house, and names what is to be driven out: the devil's spooks, ghosts and power. The house is to be hallowed by becoming God's dwelling.

Poltergeists are devils. No order in the corpus says how a house that a ghost haunted was to be cleared. The orders say what the ghost was. The "poltergeists" whose appearances had brought in the Masses for the souls were devils, and God forbids seeking the truth from the dead (Deuteronomy 18:11; Isaiah 8:19). Braunschweig, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 428):

> Poltergeyste, welke nicht anders wen düvele synt geweset, alse amme dage is, hebben uns vele selemissen gemaket, de uns mit Gades worde nicht bevalen synt.

Poltergeists, which have been nothing else but devils, as is manifest, have made us many soul-Masses, which are not commanded us by God's word.

Hamburg in 1529 says the same of "the poltergeists, which are devils" (Sehling 5, p. 520). For a possessed person in the house, Pomerania in 1569 greets the house with "The peace of our Lord Jesus Christ be in this house" and resists Satan "with prayers and contempt" (§13.8.7).

13.20.3 The tools of sorcery burned

Württemberg and Hohenlohe: the sorcerers' books. The police orders of the princes deal with the sorcerers' tools. The Württemberg territorial order (Landesordnung) of 1552, which Hohenlohe took over almost word for word in 1558, bids the officials not to suffer sorcerers, devil-conjurers and charmers. Those who will not leave off are to have their books, and whatever else they use, burned, and are to be banished. Hohenlohe, Polizeiordnung, 1558 (Sehling 15, p. 139):

> gebietten wir hiemit ernsthch, das alle zauberer, teufelsbeschwerer, segner und ander dergleichen abgötterer in unser herschaft nit geduldet, sonder durch unsere amptleut davon abzustehen mit ernst angehalten werden. Welche aber uber solche ermanung in iren abgöttischen wesen verharren und davon nit abstehen wolten, denen sollen ire bücher und anders, so sie darzu gebrauchen, verbrent und sie unserer herrschaft verwisen werden.

we hereby earnestly command that all sorcerers, devil-conjurers, charmers and other such idolaters be not suffered in our lordship, but be earnestly held by our officials to leave off therefrom. But whoso, above such admonition, will continue in their idolatrous ways and will not leave off therefrom, their books, and whatever else they use thereto, shall be burned, and they themselves banished out of our lordship.

Where Hohenlohe has "their books", the Württemberg text has their prillen, their "glasses" (Sehling 15, p. 139, editors' note).

Castell and Hohenlohe: burned before the congregation. The Castell village order for Obereisenheim of 1579 fines those who resort to soothsayers, or who have themselves or their goods blessed or kept from harm with hallowed salt, wax, herbs and water. The hallowed or bewitched things and the written charms are to be taken from them and burned before the whole congregation, at the church or the town hall. Hohenlohe's police order of 1588 copies the article and has them burned "at the church" (Sehling 15, p. 580). Castell, Dorfordnung für Obereisenheim, 1579 (Sehling 11, p. 691):

> Würde aber jemand uber solche straf und getreue verwarnung, wer der were, wahrsagern nachlaufen, derselbigen rats pflegen, umb einige sachen, die er verloren oder ime sonst widerwärtig zuegestanden, oder unter dem zeichen der arznei sich oder das seine segenen, mit geweihtem salz, wachs, kreutern, wasser und andere zaubereien oder aberglaubischen kinderspielen bewaren oder heilen lassen würde, der sol uns zehen gulden unnachlessig zur straf verfallen sein und ime die geweihten oder gezauberten, aberglaubischen stück und beschribene segnen, da deren noch > vorhanden were, genommen und offentlich vor einer ganzen gemeind bei der kirchen oder dem rathaus verbrant werden; dann uns Got solchen aberglauben durch Moysen vielfeltig verboten

But if any man, whosoever he were, above such punishment and faithful warning, should run after soothsayers and take counsel of them about any things that he had lost, or that had otherwise gone against him; or should let himself or his goods be blessed under colour of physic, or be kept or healed with hallowed salt, wax, herbs, water and other sorceries or superstitious child's play: he shall forfeit unto us ten gulden without remission. And the hallowed or bewitched superstitious pieces and the written charms, where any of them be yet in being, shall be taken from him and burned openly before a whole congregation at the church or the town hall; for God hath forbidden us such superstition by Moses many times.

The article goes on to cite Leviticus 19:26 and 19:31, Leviticus 20:6 and Deuteronomy 18:10–11. Whoever still would not leave off was to be put in the tower on bread and water, "since God the Lord hath already hallowed and sanctified all things through Christ, without our word, cross, chant and self-devised ceremonies" (Sehling 11, p. 691). The Lippe order of 1571 deprives a sexton who wrote out St John's Gospel to hang about people's necks "for all manner of sickness and sorcery" (§13.12.2).

13.20.4 Images, fonts and chapels of the old cult

Idolatry beside sorcery. The orders put idolatry beside sorcery, as Paul does among the works of the flesh (Galatians 5:20). They dealt with the furnishings of the old cult as they dealt with the tools of sorcery: these were taken away, broken and burned, or turned to common use. The removal of images is treated at length in §§14.4.2–14.4.4, and the clearing of churches and chapels in §13.19.2. Three orders speak of breaking and burning. Mecklenburg, Processus visitationis, 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 224):

> Den kirchgeschwornen aber geschichet bevel, die ciboria und altar, item die fanen aus der kirchen hinweg zu thuen. […] Und wo man erferet, das etwa ein gotz oder bilde vorhanden, so man hat pflegen anzubeten, wirt alsbald hinweg gethaen, zerbrochen und verbrennet.

But to the churchwardens command is given to put the ciboria and the altars, item the banners, away out of the church. […] And where it is learned that there is any idol or image which men were wont to worship, it is forthwith put away, broken and burned.

Sponheim 1566: the fonts of the "bewitched" water. The Front County of Sponheim was held jointly by the Elector Palatine and the margrave of Baden. When it was reformed in 1566, the Palatine councillors (Reformed) held that God's word commands more than the altars and idols to be broken down. They named the Mass vestments, the portable altars, the sacrament-houses, and the fonts "in which the bewitched baptismal water was kept". The joint chief officer and the Baden clerk objected. After a compromise the work was done in four villages, and the Palatines burned some of the idols, among them the images to which graces and indulgences had been tied. Baden then protested against "Zwinglian and sacramentarian image-storming". Sponheim (Vordere Grafschaft), Reformation in der Vorderen Grafschaft Sponheim, 1566 (Sehling 18, p. 630):

> item Sacrament heusel, dergleichen Tauffstein, darinn das verzaubert Tauffwasser gehalten worden, item Götzen, vor denen man sonndere Meß gelesen, und so der Götz hupscher, so dy Meß vor crefftiger ist geschetzt worden, weliches auch alles sambt anderm, so zur abgötterey dienet, Gott, der herr, in seinem wort abzubrechen unnd hinweg zu thun bevolhen. […] welicher einsteils unnd sonderlich dy Gnaden- unnd Ablaßgötzen von denn pfältzischen mit feuer verbranndt worden.

item the sacrament-houses; likewise the fonts in which the bewitched baptismal water was kept; item the idols before which special Masses were read, and the fairer the idol, the mightier the Mass was esteemed: all which, together with other things that serve idolatry, God the Lord hath commanded in his word to be broken down and put away. […] of which [idols] some, and in especial the idols of grace and of indulgence, were burned with fire by the Palatines.

Transylvania 1607: burned, but by degrees. The Transylvanian synod of 1607 calls the idols "sure instruments of idolatry", which God commanded to be destroyed, broken and burned. It bids the pastors remove them slowly, out of the hearers' minds before their eyes. Transylvanian Saxons, Articuli de ceremoniis, 1607 (Sehling 24, p. 493):

> Non minus necessarius esset hic quoque articulus, ut a templis divino cultui destinatis facesserent et eiicerentur idola, tanquam certa idolatriae instrumenta, doctores mendacii et ornatus, qui non ecclesiam Dei, sed meretricem illam Babilonicam, cum qua reges terrae scortati sunt, decet. Unde etiam Deus illa neque fieri neque coli, sed destrui, confringi, imo igni comburi iussit. Sed quia hic quoque timendum, ne parum aut nihil efficiamus apud idolorum patronos, feramus > ad tempus, quod subito mutari non potest. Enitantur tamen pastores, ut pedetentim et absque tumultu ea submoveant, quae superstitionis fomenta esse vident et prius ex animis quam oculis auditorum eiiciant

No less needful were this article also: that the idols should depart and be cast out of the temples appointed for divine worship, as sure instruments of idolatry, teachers of lies, and an adornment that becometh not the Church of God but that Babylonian harlot with whom the kings of the earth have committed whoredom. Wherefore also God commanded that they be neither made nor worshipped, but destroyed, broken, yea burned with fire. But since here also it is to be feared that we may effect little or nothing with the patrons of the idols, let us bear for a time what cannot be changed suddenly. Yet let the pastors strive to remove, by little and little and without tumult, the things which they see to be the tinder of superstition, and cast them out of the minds of the hearers before their eyes.

13.20.5 The things of the sacraments guarded

Water, hosts and the altar cloth. The sorcerers sought the church's own things: the baptismal water, the hosts and the altar. The orders do not purify these things after they have been misused. They keep them from misuse beforehand. Wolfstein, Christliche Instructio of Thomas Stieber, 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 572):

> Zum neunten sollen die pfarhern fleißig achtung haben, daß mit den dingen, so man zur administration der hochwürdigen sacrament gebraucht, kaine zauberei getriben werde, als etwa mit dem taufewasser geschehen ist und noch geschicht oder, daß etliche kreuter oder anders unter das altartuch legen und lassen darüber meß halten und gebrauchen solche ding zur zauberei.

Ninthly, the pastors shall take diligent heed that no sorcery be practised with the things that are used for the administration of the most worthy sacraments, as hath been done, and is yet done, with the baptismal water; or that some lay herbs or other things under the altar cloth, and have Mass said over them, and use such things for sorcery.

The water poured away. Grubenhagen in 1581 bids the sextons pour the baptismal water away at once, since sorcerers begged or bought it for their sick cattle. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1049):

> Nachdem auch zuweilen zauberische, aberglaubische leute gefunden, welche des taufwassers zu ihrem kranken vihe missbrauchen und von den küstern bitten oder keufen, sollen die custodes bey verlust ihres ampts und unserer ernsten straff sich dafür hüten und umb des willen alsobald das wasser weggiessen, auch sonst die taufstein sauber und reinlich halten.

Forasmuch as there are also found at times sorcerous, superstitious people, which misuse the baptismal water for their sick cattle, and beg or buy it of the sextons, the sextons shall, on pain of losing their office and of our earnest punishment, beware thereof, and for that cause pour away the water forthwith, and otherwise keep the fonts clean and neat.

The Upper Palatine visitors of 1579 had heard that some misused the baptismal water for superstition. They asked the sextons whether anyone begged it of them and where they poured it out, and gave them this order. Upper Palatinate, Visitationsordnung, 1579 (Sehling 13, p. 317):

> Und ist ihnen darauf bevolhen: 1. Das sie das taufwasser niemand, in was schein solches begert werden mochte, geben oder volgen lassen, 2. sondern solches, so bald nach volgender action, uf den kirchhofe oder andere saubere und gelegene ort ohne superstition usgießen.

And it is thereupon commanded them: 1. That they give or let go the baptismal water to no one, under whatsoever colour it may be desired; 2. but pour it out as soon as the action is ended, on the churchyard or another clean and convenient place, without superstition.

Electoral Saxony in 1580 forbade the bell-ringers to sell the leftover water and the hosts, "which are afterward used for sorcery" (§16.7.1). The later orders count the communicants and consume what remains of the elements (§§13.22.3, 13.22.5).

13.20.6 The persons: repentance, not purification

Public apology and absolution. What the orders cleanse is the conscience. Nassau-Dillenburg in 1570 would not suffer sorcerers, soothsayers or charmers in the land. Those who ran after them and had their children, cattle and goods bewitched and blessed were to ask pardon openly before the congregation and be absolved. Nassau-Dillenburg, Visitationsabschied, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 113):

> Dergleichen sollen auch keine zauberer, warsager unnd segensprecher geduldet, sondern vermöge der rechtten gestraffet und des landts verweiset werdenn. Welche sich auch denen anhengig machen, denen nachlauffen, bey inen raths pflegen unnd ire kinder, vihe unnd narung uber die geschehene verwarnung bezaubern unnd segnen laßen wurden, die sollen neben dem, das sie solch gegeben ergernus fur der christlichen gemein offentlich abzubitten unnd von irer begangener schwerer sunden sich absolviren zulaßen, durch ire pastores angehaltten werden sollen, auch durch die obrigkeit nach der sachen unnd personen gelegenheit gestraft werdenn.

Likewise shall no sorcerers, soothsayers and charmers be suffered, but be punished according to the laws and banished out of the land. And they that join themselves unto them, run after them, take counsel with them, and after the warning given let their children, cattle and living be bewitched and blessed: they shall be held by their pastors, beside openly asking pardon before the Christian congregation for the offence they have given, to let themselves be absolved of their grievous sin committed; and they shall also be punished by the magistrate according to the matter and the person.

Exclusion from the Supper. The Transylvanian synod at Mediasch in 1595 barred from the Supper those who sought help in sickness from magicians and soothsayers. A pastor who did so was to be suspended from his office for a month before the elders of his community and fined ten florins by the chapter. Transylvanian Saxons, Synodalartikel gegen Zauberei (Mediasch), 1595 (Sehling 24, p. 478):

> Quicunque se conferunt ad magos et veridicos auxilium aut levamen morbi aliquod ab ipsis petentes, debent privari coena Domini.

Whosoever betake themselves to magicians and soothsayers, seeking of them help or any relief of sickness, ought to be deprived of the Lord's Supper.

Caution before the fire. The orders that treat sorcery as a crime leave its trial to the magistrate and the imperial law. The Solms order of 1584 punishes it "in body and life" (Sehling 9, p. 326), and the Burzenland articles of 1578 "with fire" (Sehling 24, p. 449). Two orders warn against haste. Hohenlohe in 1558 would have no court act on what a soothsayer said against anyone, since "the devil is nothing but a liar" (Sehling 15, p. 139). Count John VI of Nassau-Dillenburg ordered a secret inquiry into each person accused of witchcraft, before any arrest. Nassau-Dillenburg, Zaubereimandat, 1582 (Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 175):

> das inn sachenn, so leib und leben, insonderhaitt aber die seel seligkhait betreffen, nicht liederlichen und uf blosse anzaige gehandlet noch zum gefängklichen angreiffen ehe besserer erkhundigung, viellweniger zum fewer damit will geeilet sein.

that in matters which concern body and life, and above all the salvation of the soul, men must not proceed lightly and upon a bare accusation, nor hasten to lay hold of anyone and imprison him before better inquiry, much less to the fire.

13.21 The litany, the suffrages and the bidding prayers at the Mass

What the orders inherited. The medieval rite knew three set forms of intercession besides the canon:

- the Litany of the Saints, sung in procession on St Mark's day and the Rogation days, and on Holy Saturday on the way to and from the font, before the first Mass of Easter;
- the suffrages, commemorations with versicle and collect, chiefly of the saints;
- the solemn prayers of Good Friday (orationes sollemnes): nine biddings, each with Oremus, Flectamus genua, Levate and a collect, for the Church, the pope, all orders, the emperor, the catechumens, all needs, heretics and schismatics, the Jews and the pagans.

What they made of them. The orders kept the first and the third in a new form and dropped the second. Luther's German Litany and his corrected Latin Litany (Latina litania correcta) of 1529 removed the invocation of the saints. They became the commonest set intercession of the evangelical churches: sung in place of the Mass when no one communed, inside the Mass, after the sermon, and on fixed weekdays, prayer days and Rogation. The Good Friday biddings survive in two orders. This section covers the Mass and the parish services that stood in for it; the Litany at the hours is in Chapter 10, §10.7.5. The general prayer of the church, including its bidding forms ("Lasset uns bitten für …"), is in Chapter 6 and is left aside here.

13.21.1 The Litany in place of the Mass

When no one communed. Where there were no communicants on a Sunday or feast, many orders replaced the Supper with the Litany. The Saxon visitors put it simply in 1529: "where there be communicants, the office of the Mass held; but where no communicants, the German Litany sung by the whole church" (Niemegk, Sehling 1, p. 616). Belzig (1529) has the Litany before the sermon (Sehling 1, p. 527), and Pomerania 1542 after it: "but chiefly let one read the Litany" (Sehling 4, p. 357). At Kempten (1553), on a Sunday morning without communicants, the people sing the Creed, the Our Father or a psalm, and two or three scholars then sing the German Litany, "the other scholars together with all the people answering" (Sehling 12, pp. 175–176). Pfalz-Neuburg sets out the whole service. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 77):

> so sol der priester nit in gewonlichem meßgewand, sonder in einem chormantel oder nur in seinem chorrock für den altar treten und es aller ding halten, wie oben gesetzt ist bis auf die gemeinen predig. Nach der predig aber sol man die gemein litanei singen mit einer collecta pro pace und dann mit dem Benedicamus Domino und gemeinem segen beschließen then shall the priest go before the altar, not in the customary Mass vestment, but in a cope or only in his surplice, and hold all things as is set above, as far as the common sermon. But after the sermon one shall sing the common Litany, with a collect pro pace, and then close with Benedicamus Domino and the common blessing.

Mecklenburg made the Litany the whole of what followed the sermon. Mecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 202):

> Wenn nicht communicanten da sind, sol es mit dem gesang und lection vor der predigt aller ding gehalten werden, wie oben beschrieben. Auch sol in der predig erinnerung und vermanung geschehen, das man ofter zur communion komen wolle, wie gemeldet. Nach der predigt aber sol allein die litanei gesungen werden.

When there be no communicants, it shall be held in all things with the singing and lesson before the sermon as is described above. Also in the sermon remembrance and exhortation shall be made, that men would come oftener to the communion, as is said. But after the sermon the Litany alone shall be sung.

Lüneburg 1564 repeats the rule word for word, adding the blessing and "Erhalt uns, Herr" (Sehling 6/1, p. 553). Grubenhagen named the Litany as the successor of the old "prayer Mass". Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1033):

> VII. Von der letanien, wie es darmit soll gehalten werden. Alle wochen, entweder am Mittwochen oder Freytage, und am Sondage oder feyrtagen, wen keine communicanten vorhanden sind, so sollen die parner und ihre pfarkinder die letanien, welche man vormaln die bettmessen geheissen, singen und halten, auch darvor ein capittel oder historien aus der biblien, entweder aus dem alten oder neuen testament, dem volk auf das allerkürzeste zur unterrichtung und lher vorgedragen und gelesen werden.

VII. Of the Litany, how it shall be held therewith. Every week, either on Wednesday or Friday, and on Sunday or holy days when no communicants are present, the parsons and their parishioners shall sing and hold the Litany, which aforetime was called the prayer-Mass; and before it a chapter or history out of the Bible, either out of the Old or New Testament, shall be set forth and read to the people as briefly as may be, for instruction and teaching.

The weekday "Mass" of the Litany. At Hof the weekday Tagmeß on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday had no communion. It consisted of a hymn, a collect, an Old Testament chapter, the Litany, a New Testament chapter, a short hymn and the Our Father sung at the altar. Brandenburg-Ansbach- Kulmbach, Ordo ecclesiasticus of Hof, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 455):

> Wird die litania, in gewiese teil dividirt, von drei oder vier reinstimmigen knaben an dem ort, do sie sonst die lateinische epistel an feierabenden lesen, mit dem angesicht zum chor gewendet gesungen, darauf der ander chor wie gebreuchlich respondirt.

The Litany, divided into certain parts, is sung by three or four boys of clear voice at the place where they otherwise read the Latin epistle on holy eves, with the face turned toward the choir; whereupon the other choir respondeth, as is customary.

The editor reports that the Litany was split into four, one part for each day, keeping the beginning and end every day. A petition for protection from "the Pope and the Turk" was added (Sehling 11, p. 455). It was dropped when there was a baptism.

Suffrages in the Mass without communion. The Transylvanian Saxons put the old suffrages in the same place. When no one communed, the Sunday service was a German psalm, a collect, a sequence or tract, and a New Testament chapter read in order to the people. Transylvania, Kirchenordnung (Latin), 1547 (Sehling 24, p. 223):

> Finita lectione canitur symbolum fidei cum versiculo et collecta de sancta Trinitate. Huic adduntur reliqua suffragia pro rege, pro remissione peccatorum et pro pace cum suis versiculis et collectis, quae similiter cum Benedicamus Domino et benedictione populi finiuntur. Hoc quoque officium semper eodem ordine per totum annum servatur.

The lesson finished, the Creed is sung, with the versicle and collect of the Holy Trinity. To this are added the remaining suffrages, for the king, for the remission of sins and for peace, with their versicles and collects, which likewise are ended with Benedicamus Domino and the blessing of the people. This office also is kept always in the same order through the whole year.

The weekday "high office … when no communion is celebrated" has the same Creed "with the aforesaid suffrages, collects and Benedicamus Domino" (Sehling 24, p. 225), and the German version says the same (Sehling 24, p. 245). At Bibersfeld near Hall (1535) the pastor knelt before the altar after the opening psalm and prayed the Kyrie in German and "the preces publicae for all needful estates and concerns" before the epistle (Sehling 17/1, p. 101).

13.21.2 The Litany within the Mass

Between the epistle and the gospel. The Litany could take the place of the sequence or gradual:

- the Albertine Cellische Ordnungen of 1545: "at times, in the stead of the sequence, sing the Litany in German" (Sehling 1, p. 300);
- Prussia 1568: between epistle and gospel "one singeth the Litany, or on feast days one of the German spiritual songs of the feast" (Sehling 4, p. 83);
- Lüneburg, Regensburg, Mansfeld and Aschersleben, given in Chapter 8, §8.8.9.

Veit Dietrich gives the ceremony for the small towns. Nuremberg, Agendbüchlein of Veit Dietrich, 1545 (Sehling 11, p. 498):

> In den kleinen flecken nach der epistel sollen vor dem mittel altar zwen oder drei schuler die litanei deutsch singen und der ander chor sambt dem volk drauf anworten. Zu letz das Da pacem drauf singen sambt einer collecten de pace wie oben.

In the small towns, after the epistle, two or three scholars shall sing the Litany in German before the middle altar, and the other choir together with the people answer thereto. At the last sing the Da pacem thereupon, together with a collect de pace, as above.

During the communion. At Amberg the Litany filled a long communion. Amberg, Kirchenordnung, 1550 (Sehling 13, p. 286):

> Chorus singet under der communion das Jesus Christus, unser Heiland oder Gott sei gelobet und gebenedeiet etc. oder, so der communicanten vil sein die litaniam und nachvolgends das Agnus Dei und zulest das commun.

The choir singeth during the communion "Jesus Christ, Our Blessed Savior", or "O Lord, We Praise Thee" etc.; or, if the communicants be many, the Litany, and next the Agnus Dei, and at the last the communion.

After the sermon. This was the commonest place. The Litany was sung after the Sunday sermon, before the communion or at the close of the service, at:

- Haderslev 1528, every Sunday "with the whole people … in Danish" (Sehling 23, p. 65);
- Mecklenburg 1552, Lüneburg 1564 and Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 when there was no communion (§13.21.1);
- Waldeck 1556 and many others.

Waldeck describes the posture. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, p. 277):

> Nach der Predigt sollen etliche der Schüler oder der Pfarrherr, vor dem Altar niderkniend, die Litanei, wie in D. Luthers seligen Sangbüchlin beschrieben, mit heller stimm und verstendtlichen worten singen und der Chor darauff antworten. Darauff soll der Pastor mit eyner Collecten, wie daselbst stehet, Und der Chor mit dem gesenge: O herre Gott, gib uns deinen fried, etc. beschliessen.

After the sermon certain of the scholars, or the parson, kneeling before the altar, shall sing the Litany as it is described in Dr Luther of blessed memory's little song-book, with clear voice and intelligible words, and the choir answer thereto. Thereupon the pastor shall close with a collect, as it standeth there, and the choir with the song, "O Lord God, give us thy peace", etc.

In Mecklenburg the pastor sang it from the pulpit. Mecklenburg, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1542 (Sehling 5, p. 149):

> Zum dritten soll der pastor am sontage nach der predigte in stetten und dorfern die letanei dem volke vom predigstuel mit andacht fursingen und die schuler oder der kuster samt dem volke sollen niderkniegen und ime darauf antwurten.

Thirdly, the pastor shall on Sunday after the sermon, in towns and villages, sing the Litany before the people from the pulpit with devotion, and the scholars or the sexton together with the people shall kneel down and answer him thereto.

On its prayer days Nassau-Weilburg (1576) closed the service with the Litany or "Erhalt uns, Herr". Since the Litany covers "all needs that the Christian congregation has to lay before God", it was to alternate with the full set of prayers rather than be added to them (Sehling 10, p. 238).

Before the Introit. Regensburg 1542 and Transylvania 1547 put the Litany at the head of the service (Chapter 3).

Ordination within the Litany. Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel ordained preachers on a weekday "after the sermon and the Latin Litany" (Sehling 6/1, p. 69). At Lüneburg the ministers went to the altar at a fixed petition of the Litany. Lüneburg, Kirchenordnung der Stadt, 1575 (Sehling 6/1, p. 655):

> Wen der genante tag erscheinet, die predigt gehalten und in der litania diese wort gesungen werden: O Jesu Christ, Gottes Sohn, so gehet das ganze ministerium mit dem ordinando vor den hohen altar, knien daselbst samptlich nidder und hebet der superintendens oder wehr das ampt der ordinierung vorwalten soll, ahn zu singen: Veni, sancte Spiritus etc.

When the appointed day cometh, the sermon is held, and in the Litany these words are sung, "O Jesu Christ, God's Son", then goeth the whole ministry with the ordinand before the high altar, and they kneel there all together, and the superintendent, or whoso shall administer the office of ordaining, beginneth to sing Veni, sancte Spiritus etc.

Ordination itself is treated in §13.10.

13.21.3 The forms and the singers

Luther's two Litanies. The orders name Luther's German Litany and his corrected Latin one, "as it is printed and gone forth at Wittenberg" (Calenberg 1542, Sehling 6/2, p. 812). The Latin Litany belonged to the school and the hours, and the German one to the congregation:

- Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1543: the Latin Litany at the eve Vespers and at an ordination, the German "once in the week after the sermon, that the whole church answer" (Sehling 6/1, p. 51);
- Pomerania 1535: the Latin Litany at the boys' Saturday Vespers, and the German Litany once a week with the people (Sehling 4, pp. 340, 342).

Prussia had a Litany of its own, used at Regensburg (Chapter 8, §8.8.9). Marggrabowa insisted on Luther's prose text. Marggrabowa, Gottesdienstordnung, 1581 (Sehling 4, p. 149):

> Alle freitage soll man die litanei singen, wie es D. Luther gemacht und nicht reimweise, und sollen zwen oder drei knaben furm altar knien oder singen, darauf der capellan ein kurzen sermon auswendig tun soll.

Every Friday one shall sing the Litany as Dr Luther made it, and not in rhyme; and two or three boys shall kneel before the altar and sing, whereupon the chaplain shall make a short sermon without book.

Who sang it, and how. The usual pattern was two or three boys, kneeling before the altar or standing at the epistle place, with the choir and people answering. Nördlingen 1579 prints the Litany in two columns for alternating choirs, ending "Both choirs together: Kyrie eleison. Amen" (Sehling 12, p. 369). At Brandis in 1574 the Litany after the Thursday sermon alternated week by week between the sung setting "made by Doctor Justus Jonas" and Luther's (Sehling 1, p. 534). Where there was no school the Litany was read:

- at Limpurg in 1610 the town of Gaildorf sang it "before the altar", but in the villages the pastor read it from the pulpit (Sehling 16, p. 617);
- Zweibrücken 1533 allowed it "sung or read, as the place alloweth" (Sehling 18, p. 52).

13.21.4 The Litany days

Weekly. The Litany was most often fixed to a weekday:

- Wednesday and Friday: the Reuss articles of 1528, "in all ways to hold the Litany on Wednesdays and Fridays" (Sehling 2, p. 143); Grubenhagen 1544 (above);
- Friday:
  - the Ansbach chapters 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 314);
  - Mecklenburg 1542, where the people were "to help the scholars sing" it, "as is held on Sunday" (Sehling 5, p. 149);
  - Marggrabowa 1581 (above);
  - Nördlingen 1579, "commonly on Friday after the sermon" (Sehling 12, p. 369).

The calendar of prayer days, Ember days and fasts on which the Litany was sung is set out in Chapter 12, §§12.6.2, 12.10.11, 12.12.7. That chapter gives the Albertine Ember-week Litany (Saxony 1539) and the Zweibrücken prayer days. Mansfeld (1580) wanted the German Litany "often and much, especially on the four Ember seasons, when the people are together" (Sehling 2, p. 239).

Rogation. The Litany kept its oldest home in Rogation week, without the procession and the saints. Calenberg 1542 abolished the procession but kept the prayer days "with preaching, administering the sacrament, and the Litany early in the morning". Calenberg-Göttingen, Kirchenordnung, 1542 (Sehling 6/2, p. 812):

> Es sol aber die letania nicht wie in vorigen zeiten, da man sang: Sancte Petre, ora pro nobis!, sonder auf weise und masse, wie sie zu Wittemberg gedruckt und ausgangen ist, gehalten werden.

But the Litany shall be held, not as in former times, when men sang Sancte Petre, ora pro nobis!, but after the manner and measure in which it is printed and gone forth at Wittenberg.

Elsewhere at Rogation:

- the Heidelberg chapter in 1546 was to sing "no litany in rogatoribus with invocation of the saints, but the right Litany with invocation of the name of God" (Sehling 14, p. 92);
- Brandenburg 1572 preaches "of prayer" through Rogation week and sings the Litany (Sehling 3, p. 102).

Pomerania 1569 gives the whole week the Litany and a penitential character. Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 466):

> Darümme schal men disen sondach unde de volgende weke, ane den dach Ascensionis domini, vam hiligen gebede predigen unde de letanien singen, de gemeine ernstlick vormanen, dat ein jeder vlitich tor kercke ga unde de sinen tom gebede holde. […] Up disen sondach unde in der weke schal men kenen figural sang singen, ock nicht orglen, utgenamen den dach Ascensionis domini, mit der in vigilia: sunder idel düdische psalmen singen, bedepsalmen, boetpsalmen, vader unse etc. stede nevenst dem sermon letanien holden.

Therefore one shall preach on this Sunday and the following week, save the day of the Ascension of the Lord, of holy prayer, and sing the Litany, and earnestly exhort the congregation that every one go diligently to church and keep his household to prayer. […] On this Sunday and in the week one shall sing no figured song, nor play the organ, except the day of the Ascension of the Lord with its vigil, but sing only German psalms, prayer-psalms, penitential psalms, the Our Father etc., [and] always hold the Litany beside the sermon.

13.21.5 The Litany at the feasts and seasons

Advent and Lent. In Pomerania the Litany marked the penitential seasons. In Advent the village pastors were to read Matthew 24–25 at the Friday or weekday sermon "and thereupon hold the Litany" (Sehling 4, p. 471). The Latin Litany replaced the Magnificat when Vespers were kept "dominicaliter, as in Advent and Lent" (Pomerania 1542; Chapter 10, §10.7.5).

The high feasts. Several orders tie the Litany to the great feasts. Zweibrücken is the earliest. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, 12 Artikel "Form und Maß", 1533 (Sehling 18, p. 52):

> Where auch guth, das ungeverlich vier male im Jhar, als in den weiennachten, Ostern, pfingstwochen und nach Exaltationis Crucis, christlich Letani gesungen oder gelesen wurde nach gelegenheit des orts.

It were also good that about four times in the year, as in the Christmas, Easter and Whitsun weeks and after the Exaltation of the Cross, a Christian Litany were sung or read, according to the circumstances of the place.

Two later witnesses follow:

- Pfalz-Veldenz 1574 made the two days after Christmas, Easter and Whitsun "common prayer days", with preaching in the morning only and the Litany sung or read after the sermon (Sehling 18, p. 519; Chapter 12, §12.6.2).
- Danzig. A list of feast days printed by Sehling as a draft for the order of 1567 names the feasts "with several Masses, Vespers, litanies through the choir, and four sermons". These are the Sundays, Trinity, Easter, Whitsun and Christmas with the two days following, and the other high feasts (Sehling 4, p. 186).

Easter Eve and Easter Day: a negative. No order puts a Litany on Easter Eve, before or after the font, or on Easter Day itself. The medieval Holy Saturday Litany went with the blessing of the font and the Easter candle, which nearly all the orders gave up (§13.23.5). The Easter Litany survives only in the Easter-week prayer days of Zweibrücken and the "litanies through the choir" of the Danzig feast list. No Sehling order has a Litany sung at an Easter Vigil.

13.21.6 Good Friday: the Litany and the solemn prayers

The Litany on Good Friday. Two southwestern orders make the Litany the intercession of the day. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, p. 166):

> Und so Communicanten vorhanden seyen, sol das Abentmal auff den Grünen donnerstag und Charfreytag wie an den Sontagen, doch mit vorgehender Predig, gehalten werden. Es sol auch am Charfreytag ein predig vom gmeinem Gebeet gethon und die Litaney für alles anligen der Christlichen kirchen gehalten werden.

And if communicants be present, the Supper shall be held on Maundy Thursday and Good Friday as on the Sundays, yet with a sermon going before. There shall also on Good Friday be a sermon made of the common prayer, and the Litany held for all the concerns of the Christian church.

The revision of 1615 keeps it: on Good Friday the communion "with a sermon going before on prayer, whereupon the Litany shall be sung" (Sehling 17/1, p. 165). Limpurg (1610) has the pastors on Good Friday "read the Litany together with the prayer" (Sehling 16, p. 621). The choice is deliberate: a sermon on prayer and the Litany, which prays for all estates, take the place of the old solemn prayers for all orders of men.

The solemn prayers in German: Waldeck 1556. Only Waldeck kept the solemn prayers as a set of biddings and collects. They were to be used "in all churches on Good Friday before the communion" (§13.23.4). The order prints them in full as Precationes solennes pro singulis ordinibus et necessitatibus die Parasceues dicendae (Sehling 9, pp. 277–282). Each has a Latin heading, a German bidding addressed to the people ("Wir wöllen auch bitten für …" or "Lasset uns auch bitten für …"), and an Oratio. There are eleven intentions:

1. the Church;
2. pro ministris verbi et ecclesiae;
3. pro catechumenis;
4. pro errantibus in fide;
5. pro persecutoribus Verbi et Ecclesiae;
6. pro magistratibus;
7. pro iudaeis;
8. pro pseudochristianis;
9. pro inimicis;
10. pro tentatis et sub cruce laborantibus;
11. pro peccatis nostris.

They open with an address to the "dear brothers and sisters" and Christ's promise to those who ask. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, p. 278):

> Dieweil wir dann ytzundt im namen des herrn versamlet sein, so laßt uns erstlich von hertzen bitten für die Gemeyne Christlichen Kirchen, das sie der allmechtige Gott durch unsern herrn Jesum Christ inn der gantzen welt beschirmen und erhalten wölle, das sie mit ruhe und fried nach seinem Göttlichen willen leben und seinen heyligen Namen loben unnd preisen mögen.

Since we are now gathered in the name of the Lord, let us first pray from the heart for the congregation of the Christian Church, that Almighty God through our Lord Jesus Christ will protect and preserve it in all the world, that it may live in rest and peace according to his divine will, and laud and praise his holy name.

The bidding for the Jews keeps the old intention but drops the old language of "perfidy" and "blindness" for the veil of 2 Corinthians 3 and the olive tree of Romans 11. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, p. 280):

> Pro iudaeis Lasset uns auch bitten für den elenden uberlauff des Jüdischen Samens, Das yhnen der barmhertzige Gott seine alte verheyssung gnediglich in yhren hertzen erwecken wölle und vor yhren augen unnd hertzen die decken hinweg nehmen, das sie auch zu erkentnus Jesu Christi, unsers herrn, mogen kommen. Oratio: Barmhertziger, gütiger Gott, Der du auch der Juden hertigkeyt von deiner erbarmung nit außschleussest, Gedencke deines gnedigen bunds, den du mit deinem trewen diener Abraham und mit andern lieben vättern auffgerichtet hast.

For the Jews. Let us also pray for the wretched remnant of the seed of the Jews, that the merciful God would graciously awaken in their hearts his old promise, and take away the veil from before their eyes and hearts, that they also may come to the knowledge of Jesus Christ our Lord. Prayer: Merciful, kind God, who shuttest not out even the hardness of the Jews from thy mercy, remember thy gracious covenant which thou didst set up with thy faithful servant Abraham and with other dear fathers.

What changed from the Roman order.

- Kept: the Church, the clergy, the catechumens, the rulers, those in error, the Jews, and the afflicted. The Roman "all needs" becomes "the tempted and those labouring under the cross", with a long list: hunger, pestilence, wild beasts and the sword, prisoners, exiles, the sick, widows and orphans, and women in childbirth.
- Dropped: the pope; the pagans; the Flectamus genua and Levate. The people are bidden, but no kneeling and rising is prescribed.
- Added: persecutors of the word, false Christians, enemies, and our own sins.

Mülhausen 1528 (Reformed). The Mülhausen preachers had earlier kept the Roman prayers in German, "the collects which are prayed for the estates, namely for heathen, Turks, Circassians and Jews" (Sehling 20/2, p. 207; §13.23.4).

What was not found. No other order prints or prescribes the Good Friday solemn prayers. No order has Flectamus genua or Oremus, dilectissimi, and no order keeps the prayer pro perfidis Iudaeis. Elsewhere the Good Friday intercession was the Litany, or the ordinary general prayer after the Passion sermon.

13.22 Other occasional rites

13.22.1 The visitation service

Pfalz-Neuburg 1560. The church visitation was the evangelical substitute for the bishop's visitation. At the parish level it had its own service. Pfalz-Neuburg's visitation order of 1560/1566 describes it:

1. Two stanzas of Nun bitten wir den Heiligen Geist.
2. The public confession.
3. The last two stanzas (Du süße Lieb, schenk uns deine Gunst).
4. A collect, the epistle and the Creed (Wir glauben all).
5. A short sermon by the pastor.

One of the visitors then addresses the people in the prince's name. The youth are examined in the catechism in church, boys and men-servants on one side and girls and maids on the other. A second address follows, rebuking parents and masters for negligence, and the newly appointed censors are presented by name. Pfalz-Neuburg, Visitationsordnung, 1560/1566 (Sehling 13, p. 140):

> Erstlich, wenn das volk versamlet, singet man zwei gsetz vom lied Nu bitten wir den Heiligen Geist. Darnach verlieset man die effentliche beicht. Zum dritten singet man die letzten zwen vers. Du süße lieb dein gunst und darauf volget ein collecten, auf die collect die epistel und nach der epistel singt man den glauben. Nach dem glauben tut der pfarrer ein kurze predigt. Nach gehaltner predig spricht einer aus den visitatoribus das volk an auf diese nachfolgende weise

First, when the people are gathered, they sing two stanzas of the hymn "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray". Thereafter the public confession is read. Thirdly they sing the last two verses, Du süße Lieb, [schenk uns] dein Gunst; and thereupon followeth a collect, upon the collect the epistle, and after the epistle the Creed is sung. After the Creed the pastor maketh a short sermon. After the sermon is held, one of the visitors addresseth the people after this manner following.

13.22.2 Rites treated in other chapters

Some occasional services are treated elsewhere, or only touched on here:

- Prayer days and fast days. Days of prayer against the Turk, plague, dearth and war, and the litany days, are in Chapter 12.
- Private confession and absolution. Confession before communion is outside the scope of this chapter; its relation to public penance is noted in §13.16.1 and §13.16.3.
- Confessional oaths. The oaths sworn by ministers, schoolmasters and church officers at ordination, installation and visitation are in Chapter 17.

13.22.3 Reservation of the sacrament

§13.8.2 shows the orders ending the carrying of the reserved sacrament to the sick. This section gathers what they say about reservation as such: keeping consecrated hosts after the service, whether for the sick, for later communicants or for adoration.

Kept for the sick and for later communicants: Ansbach 1526. One early Franconian decree still keeps the reserved sacrament. The diet of 1526 orders "all due reverence" to the sacrament in church and when it is carried to the sick through the streets. Whatever is left over after communion is not to be thrown away but kept reverently in the sacrament house for the sick and for other communicants. Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Landtagsabschied, 1526 (Sehling 11, p. 91):

> sunder solchem heiligen sacrament in den kirchen und, wann das zu den kranken uber die gassen getragen würdet, alle gebürliche ererbietung geton [...] Und ob zu den zeiten und tagen, wann die communicanten das heilig, hochwirdig sacrament empfahen, ichts von dem sacrament uberblieb, so sol solchs nit verechtlich hinweg geton, sunder mit gebürlicher reverenz in den sacramentheuslein zu bewarung der teglich zufelligen kranken oder anderer communicanten behalten werden.

but [that] to this holy sacrament, in the churches and when it is carried to the sick over the streets, all due reverence be done [...] And if at the times and days when the communicants receive the holy, most worthy sacrament, aught of the sacrament remained over, the same shall not be put away contemptuously, but kept with due reverence in the sacrament houses, for the keeping [of it] for the sick that daily fall in, or for other communicants.

A free thing, to be given up: Nuremberg 1528. Two years later the Nuremberg theologians treated reservation as one of the "free things". Osiander's answer is that it is free, but that since it serves neither faith nor love it should be given up, after teaching, where the weak are not offended. Nuremberg, Die Nürnberger 23 Lehrartikel, 1528 (Sehling 11, p. 134):

> Ob man das sacrament soll einsperren? [...] Antwort: Es ist auch frei. Darumb soll man das nutzlichst tun, das ist: wo es die schwachen nicht ergert, soll mans nach guter underrichtung underlassen und abtun; dann es dienet weder dem glauben noch der lieb etc.

Whether one should lock up the sacrament? [...] Answer: It is also free. Therefore one should do what is most profitable, that is: where it offendeth not the weak, one should, after good instruction, leave it off and put it away; for it serveth neither faith nor love, etc.

The Brandenburg-Nürnberg church order of the same year gives the reasons. Christ commanded the body and blood to be eaten and drunk, not locked up or carried about. The wine would spoil sooner than the bread. The sacrament can be consecrated in the presence of the communicants whenever it is needed. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 11, p. 138):

> Von einsperrung des sacraments. Item dieweil wir des leibs und pluts Christi allein zu essen und drinken und nit in heusle zu sperren oder umbzutragen, aus dem wort Gottes bevelch haben, auch solch sacrament im wein ehe weder im prot, so es lang stunde, verdurb und bei solchem einsperren ganz kein nutz ist, sondern daraus vil ergernus volget und in gegenwertigkeit der communicanten consecrirt werden soll und mag, ist solch einsperren und umbtragen ditz sacraments zu unterlassen. Doch das solchs vor mit dem wort werd abgericht.

Of the locking up of the sacrament. Item, since we have command from the word of God only to eat and drink the body and blood of Christ, and not to lock them in little houses nor carry them about; also such sacrament in the wine would spoil sooner than in the bread, if it stood long; and in such locking up there is no profit at all, but much offence followeth therefrom; and it shall and may be consecrated in the presence of the communicants: such locking up and carrying about of this sacrament is to be left off. Yet so, that this be first set right with the word.

The great Brandenburg-Nürnberg order of 1533 makes it a rule: "they shall not keep, lock up nor carry about the holy sacrament" (Sehling 11, p. 184; §13.8.2). Hohenlohe 1553, Wolfstein 1574 and the Merseburg synod of 1544 say the same (§13.22.5).

Old hosts not to be used: Transylvania 1547. The church order of the Transylvanian Saxons forbids a priest to give communion from hosts consecrated long before and kept "in corners", without saying the words of the testament. Christ said "take, eat, drink", not "put it in a corner, lock it fast, serve it with candles and lamps". Transylvanian Saxons, Kirchenordnung (German version), 1547 (Sehling 24, p. 235):

> 6. Man sol auch hernach nit leiden, das der priester die wort des heiligen testaments außlasse und wolt gebrauchen der partikel, die er nach sonderlichem segen wider die ordnung Christi etlich zeitlang in winckeln verschlossen hat gehalten. […] 7. Darumb sol niemand aus unglauben solche ubrige consecriert partikel in derley gestalt zum communicieren brauchen oder zum ergernis inderthyn einschliessen und abgötterey damit treiben. Denn Christus spricht: Nempt hyn, esset, trincket und thuts. Er spricht aber nindert: Setzts in ein winckel, sperret fest zu, dienet im mit kerzen und lampen und tragts mit processen umb spaciern.

> 6. Neither shall one suffer hereafter that the priest leave out the words of the holy testament and would use the particles which, after a private blessing, against the ordinance of Christ, he hath kept shut up in corners for some time. […] 7. Therefore let no one out of unbelief use such leftover consecrated particles in such wise for communicating, or lock them up anywhere to offence and practise idolatry therewith. For Christ saith: Take, eat, drink and do this. But he saith nowhere: Set it in a corner, lock it fast, serve it with candles and lamps, and carry it about walking in processions.

The Latin version of the same order has the same rule (Sehling 24, p. 214).

Forbidden late: Teschen 1584. In the Silesian duchy of Teschen the custom was still alive in the villages in 1584. The order forbids the adoration of the sacrament, locking it "in the ciborium, as they call it", processions with banners, and the Holy Week sepulchre. Teschen, Kirchenordnung, 1584 (Sehling 3, p. 461):

> Weil auch bei der messe und sonsten biesher sonderlich auf den dörfern viel abgöttische ceremonien gehalten worden siend und noch gehalten werden, als adoratio des sacraments, einsperrung des sacraments in das ciborium, wie sie es nennen, die processiones mit den fahnen und andere dergleichen abgötterei mehr, insonderheit der abgöttische miessbrauch in der marterwochen mit dem grabmachen und siengen vor dem grabe, diess soll alles gänzlichen hiermit ernstlich verboten und abgethan sein

Since also at the Mass and otherwise hitherto, especially in the villages, many idolatrous ceremonies have been held and are still held, as the adoration of the sacrament, the locking up of the sacrament in the ciborium, as they call it, the processions with the banners and other such idolatry more, especially the idolatrous abuse in Holy Week with making the sepulchre and singing before the sepulchre: this shall all be wholly and earnestly forbidden and done away herewith.

No reservation for the next service. No Lutheran order after Ansbach 1526 allows hosts to be kept from one celebration to the next. The orders instead count the communicants beforehand so that only enough is consecrated (§13.22.5).

Veil, lamp and colour. No order says anything about veiling the reserved sacrament, the ciborium or the pyx, or about the colour of a lamp, its glass or its candle. The lamp before the sacrament house appears only to be forbidden: Schönburg 1542 lets no sacrament be kept in the sacrament house "nor suffer burning lamps before it" (Sehling 2, p. 175). The Transylvanian order rejects serving the hidden hosts "with candles and lamps" (above). The lights that remain are those set on the table at a sick-communion in the house (§13.8.2).

13.22.4 Good Friday: no Mass of the Presanctified

The medieval Good Friday rite gave communion, to the priest alone, from a host consecrated on Maundy Thursday and kept overnight at an altar of repose or in the Easter sepulchre. No evangelical order keeps the Mass of the Presanctified or an altar of repose. The orders either hold a full communion on Good Friday, consecrated like any other, or none.

Communion as on a Sunday. Bugenhagen's Brunswick order lets those who wish to commune after the Good Friday Passion do so "as is customary on Sunday after the sermon". There is no sung Mass and no ceremony before the sermon, because the Passion preached is a good ceremony for communicating. Brunswick, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 379):

> So etlike na der passien in stillen Frydage willen communiceren, so geve me dat sacramente, alse me plecht des Sundages na der predige, wowol dat up den dach de missensank unde geprenge vor der predige nicht geholden is. De gepredigede passie is eyn gut geprenge tome communiceren. Wente Christus secht: Sulck doht to myner gedechtnisse, dat is, alse Paulus secht, vorkundiget mynen döt etc.

If any after the Passion on Good Friday will communicate, let the sacrament be given as is the custom on Sunday after the sermon, although on that day the Mass-singing and ceremony is not held before the sermon. The Passion preached is a good ceremony for communicating. For Christ saith: This do in remembrance of me, that is, as Paul saith, shew forth my death, etc.

Hamburg 1529 repeats the passage word for word (Sehling 5, p. 506). At Rostock about 1560 the Good Friday service ends with communion. Rostock, Conformitas ceremoniarum, about 1560 (Sehling 5, p. 290):

> Auf den stillen freitag sol man von 5 auf 6 die historiam passionis Christi dem volk furlesen nach den evangelisten. Darnach wird gesungen uf sieben und das officium gehalten, von sieben auf neun wirt geprediget und darnach die communio gehalten.

On Good Friday one shall read the history of the Passion of Christ to the people from five to six, according to the evangelists. Thereafter there is singing at seven and the office held; from seven to nine there is preaching, and thereafter the communion held.

Electoral Brandenburg in 1540 kept the Good Friday office with "the representation of the burial", but required "a complete consecration and administration of the sacrament" within it (§13.23.3). The Brandenburg order of 1572 has the Passion read at four in the morning "as of old", then "the sermon and communion" (Sehling 3, p. 102, from the editor's apparatus to the order of 1540). Waldeck 1556 has the solemn prayers of Good Friday said "before the communion" (Sehling 9, p. 277). The Hof order of 1592 provides music "under the communion" on Good Friday (Sehling 11, p. 439).

The sepulchre abolished. The burial of the cross or host in the Easter sepulchre, with its watch until Easter morning, went with the rest. Mülhausen in 1528 (Reformed) asks that "the burial of the Lord in the sepulchre, with other uses, be put down" (Sehling 20/2, p. 207; see Chapter 14, §14.6.6). Nuremberg reported to Goslar that "the sepulchre in the church" was no longer set up. Goslar, Bericht der Stadt Nürnberg für den Goslarer Rat, 30 March 1528 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 232):

> Das gauckelspiel mit dem hergott und ezel am Palmtag, die passionspiel am Karfreitag werden nit mehr gespielt, das grab in der kirchen, das gespot myt der urstendt Christi wurth nit mehr furgenohmen, desgleichen das fewer am osterabent nit mehr gesegnet.

The juggling-play with the Lord-God and the ass on Palm Sunday, the Passion plays on Good Friday are no more played; the sepulchre in the church, the mockery with the resurrection of Christ, is no more undertaken; likewise the fire on Easter Eve is no more blessed.

The Feuchtwangen memorial of 1563 recalls the reformers rejecting "on Good Friday the laying of the cross in the sepulchre, and the watches that followed" (Sehling 11, p. 406), and Teschen in 1584 still had to forbid "making the sepulchre and singing before the sepulchre" (§13.22.3).

13.22.5 The remaining elements consumed

Since nothing was to be reserved, the orders had to say what became of consecrated bread and wine left after communion. They answer in three ways: count the communicants so that little or nothing is left; have the minister or the communicants consume the rest; and never mix it back with unconsecrated bread and wine, pour it away or give it to the sexton.

Consumed by the priest or the communicants: Merseburg 1544. Merseburg, Synodalunterricht, 1544 (Sehling 2, p. 18):

> Sollen auch das hochwirdig sacrament ausser der Institution Christi nicht in andere wege gebrauchen, umbdragen noch einsetzen. Wan auch etwas von particulen ader im kelch ubrig bleibt, sol nicht bei gesetzt ader wegegossen, sondern vom pristern oder communicanten, so des mahls des sacrament genossen, vollent absumirt werden.

They shall also not use the most worthy sacrament in any other way outside the institution of Christ, nor carry it about nor set it in [the sacrament house]. When also aught of the particles or in the cup remaineth over, it shall not be set aside or poured away, but be fully consumed by the priest or the communicants who have partaken of the meal of the sacrament.

All distributed and used up: Pfalz-Neuburg 1543. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 76):

> Und, wiewol er von anfang sol fleiß haben, das er alle ding dermaßen verordne und in acht habe, damit von dem heiligen sacrament nit uberbleib, so sol er doch insonderheit zu ende darauf sehen, das es alles ausgeteilt werde und aufgehe, wie Christus befohlen hat, da er spricht Luce 22 [17]: Dividite inter nos..., auf das sich kein beschwerliche oder ergerliche unschicklicheit zutrag.

And although from the beginning he shall be diligent so to order and have regard to all things that naught of the holy sacrament remain over, yet at the end especially he shall see to it that it be all distributed and used up, as Christ commanded when he saith, Luke 22 [17]: Dividite inter vos, that no grievous or offensive unseemliness befall.

The pastor consumes the remains: Hohenlohe 1553. Hohenlohe, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 15, p. 72):

> Der pfarherr soll alsdann die reliquias sumiren und nichts laßen uberpleyben oder reservieren, auch sondere achtung haben in administratione utriusque partis sacramenti, damit kain inconveniens dem sacrament widerfarhe in effusione calicis etc.

The pastor shall then consume the remains and let nothing remain over or be reserved; and he shall also have special heed in the administration of both parts of the sacrament, that no mishap befall the sacrament in the spilling of the cup, etc.

The pastor communes, and so takes the remains: Wolfstein 1574. Thomas Stieber wants pastors always to commune with their people, for the example, and also so that the remains are consumed and nothing reserved. Wolfstein, Christliche Instructio des Thomas Stieber, 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 575):

> Ist derhalben gut, das die pfarhern alweg mit communicirn umbs exempels willen. So dienets auch zue guter ordnung, damit die reliquiae sacramenti vom kirchendiener genummen und nichts vom hailigen sacrament dörf aufbehalten werden.

It is therefore good that the pastors always communicate with [the people], for the example's sake. So it serveth also for good order, that the remains of the sacrament be taken by the minister and naught of the holy sacrament need be kept.

Regensburg [1567] has the officiant commune last "and take what is left of the consecrated there" (Sehling 13, p. 463). The Danzig order of 1557, as Sehling describes it, wants everything blessed "to be used up cleanly, without leftover spilling or setting aside" (Sehling 4, p. 169).

Not mixed back with common bread and wine: Lüneburg 1575. Lüneburg, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 6/1, p. 660):

> So auch nach geschehener communion etwas von brodt oder wein ubrig bleibet, so wirt dasselbe nicht widerumb zu dem andern gemeinen brodt oder wein gethon oder weggesetzet, sondern wird von dem diener, so das ampt vorrichtet, > genossen oder den andern communicanten nach gelegenheit gegeben.

If also after communion is done aught of the bread or wine remaineth over, the same is not put back again to the other common bread or wine, nor set away, but is partaken of by the minister who performeth the office, or given to the other communicants as occasion serveth.

Not left to the sexton: Nuremberg 1545. Veit Dietrich asks communicants to announce themselves so that the pastor knows how much to consecrate. "This disorder is fit in no wise", he says, that wafers and wine be carried to the altar without measure "and then the rest left to the sexton for his use at home". Nuremberg, Agendbüchlein of Veit Dietrich, 1545 (Sehling 11, p. 531):

> Denn dise unordnung taug in keinen weg, das man oblaten und wein on gewisse maß auf den altar tragen und darnach das ubrig dem custer wolt lassen zu seinem brauch im haus nützen.

For this disorder is fit in no wise, that one should carry wafers and wine to the altar without certain measure, and thereafter would leave the rest to the sexton to use for his need in the house.

Württemberg 1536 likewise counts the bread by the number of communicants and measures the wine "so that at the last nothing remain in the cup" (Sehling 16, p. 107). The Limpurg visitors of 1611 still asked each pastor whether he consecrated more hosts than there were communicants, and what he did with any left over (Sehling 16, p. 629).

The Melanchthonian view: Transylvania 1547. The Transylvanian order takes the opposite line on the leftovers themselves. Better to lay on too many particles than to have to consecrate again, "for one need not be anxious about what is left over". The words of consecration are to be understood with their effect, "so that only that is consecrated which is handled, as what is taken, eaten and drunk". Transylvanian Saxons, Kirchenordnung (German version), 1547 (Sehling 24, p. 233):

> doch wo viel mit einander auff ein mal vorhanden sein, auff das niemand seines begeren betrogen werdt und die wort der consecration durch nachlessigkeit nit von newes widerumb gesprochen müssen werden, ists besser, das man mehr partickel einleg; darff sich darumb des ubrigen nit besorgen, denn die wort der consecration mussen mit der wirckung verstanden werden, auff das allein consecriert sey, das da gehandelt wird, als das man nimpt, isset und trincket.

yet where many are present together at once, that no one be cheated of his desire and the words of consecration need not through negligence be spoken anew again, it is better that one lay on more particles; one need not therefore be anxious about what is left over, for the words of consecration must be understood with their effect, so that only that is consecrated which is handled, as that which one taketh, eateth and drinketh.

13.23 Rites of the feasts and seasons

The medieval year had rites that belonged to one day only: the blessing of candles at Candlemas, the ashes of Ash Wednesday, the palms and procession of Palm Sunday, the washing of feet and of altars on Maundy Thursday, the Passion, the solemn prayers, the showing of the cross and the sepulchre on Good Friday, the new fire, paschal candle, Exsultet and blessing of the font on Easter Eve, the vigils of Christmas and Easter night, and the figures and dove of Ascension and Whitsun. This section sets out what the evangelical orders kept of them. The blessings themselves are treated in §13.15.1, and the image plays in Chapter 12, §12.10.10.

13.23.1 The pattern

Luther's rule. Luther would have Holy Week kept like any other week, except that the Passion is preached, without the "juggling-work" of the old ceremonies and without eight hours of Passion-preaching on Good Friday. Luther, Deudsche messe und ordnung gottis diensts, 1526 (Sehling 1, p. 16):

> doch nicht also, das man das hunger tuch, palmen schiessen, bilde decken und was des gauckel werks mehr ist, halten oder vier passion singen oder acht stunden am karfreitag an der passion zu predigen haben, sonder die marterwoche sol gleich wie ander wochen sein, on das man die passion predige des tages eine stunde durch die woche oder wie viel tage es gelustet, und das sacrament neme wer do wil.

yet not so that one keep the hunger cloth, palm-shooting, covering of images and whatever more of the juggling-work there is, or sing four Passions, or have eight hours of preaching on the Passion on Good Friday; but Holy Week shall be like other weeks, save that the Passion be preached an hour a day through the week, or as many days as one pleaseth, and that whoso will take the sacrament.

What the orders kept. Most orders follow Luther: the feast keeps its history, read and preached, its proper chant and hymns, and the Supper. A few, chiefly Electoral Brandenburg in 1540, kept much of the old ceremonial with the blessings removed (§13.23.3–13.23.5).

What is not found. The searches found none of the following in any evangelical order:

- the Exsultet or Easter praeconium;
- the Christmas Kalenda (the proclamation of the Nativity from the martyrology);
- the imposition of ashes on Ash Wednesday;
- the putting out of the paschal candle at Ascension.

The paschal candle and new fire appear only to be abolished, and the ashes only in the lists of abolished blessings. The only Ash Wednesday custom named is a folk one: the Sponheim visitors of 1560 complain of people choosing "a mayor or king" on Ash Wednesday (Sehling 18, p. 640).

13.23.2 Christmas and the night vigils

Matins moved to the morning. Christmas and Easter Matins were kept, but not at midnight. The Palatine reform of the collegiate churches in 1546 moves them "somewhat nearer the day than at midnight". Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 sets Christmas Matins at four in the morning "to avoid all manner of danger" (Sehling 13, p. 95). Kurpfalz, Bedenken zur Reformation der Stiftskirchen, 1546 (Sehling 14, p. 92):

> Weyhennacht und Ostermetten sollen gehalten werden etwas neher dem tag dan zu mitternacht in massen, wie oben de horis canonicis gesagt ist.

Christmas and Easter Matins shall be held somewhat nearer the day than at midnight, in such manner as is said above of the canonical hours.

Nicolaus Hausmann's Anhalt order of 1532 says why. The night watch at Christmas and Easter would not be bad in itself, but it had brought sorcery and wantonness, and people are sleepy at midnight. Anhalt, Ordnung of Nicolaus Hausmann, 1532 (Sehling 2, pp. 542–543):

> Es wer auch nicht bose, das die christnacht und ostern mit der wache gehalden wurden, wie für alters. Man weis aber den grosen misbrauch und zeuberei, leichtfertickeit, auch fleischlich wollust, die sich begeben haben, davon dan mehr sunden kommen, wan gote gedint und sein ere gesucht. Das junge und grobe volk kan kegen dem morgen gleichwol zu gotis furcht und zucht gehalten [fehlt: werden] wie in mitternacht, und bas. Es ist auch iderman schleferig und ungeschickt zum gebete.

It were also not evil that Christmas night and Easter were kept with the watch, as of old. But men know the great abuse and sorcery, wantonness, also fleshly lust, which have come about thereby, whence more sins came than God was served and his honour sought. The young and rough folk can be kept in the fear of God and in discipline toward the morning just as well as at midnight, and better. Every man is also sleepy and unapt for prayer.

The Brandenburg visitors of 1574 still had to tell the council to drive out "the wicked boys who do all manner of knavery in the churches on Christmas night and Easter night" (Sehling 3, p. 167).

The Christmas lessons. Where Christmas Matins survived as a morning service, it kept three lessons, the third the genealogy of Matthew 1 (Liber generationis). This is the nearest the orders come to the Kalenda. Naumburg, St Wenzel, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1537/1538 (Sehling 2, p. 71):

> und zue weihnachten list man drei lectiones und singt drei responsoria. Die erste lectio ist Esa. 9. Puer natus est nobis etc. Das ander evangelium Johannis, die dritte, liber generationis. 3. Alsdan thut man ein predigt vom fest, als zue Weinachten. Ex evangelio Luc. 2.

and at Christmas one readeth three lessons and singeth three responsories. The first lesson is Isaiah 9, Puer natus est nobis, etc.; the second the gospel of John; the third Liber generationis. 3. Then one maketh a sermon on the feast, as at Christmas, out of the gospel of Luke 2.

Nördlingen (in the revision of 1555) has the same three lessons, with the responsories Hodie nobis caelorum rex, Hodie nobis de caelo and Verbum caro factum est, and the Te Deum on the organ after the sermon (Sehling 12, p. 320). The Hof order of 1592 gives a full Latin Christmas Matins with invitatory, psalms, lessons and responsories (Sehling 11, pp. 412–413). The rocking of the Christ-child's cradle was abolished (Chapter 12, §12.10.10).

13.23.3 Candlemas, Ash Wednesday and Palm Sunday

Candlemas. The candles were no longer blessed (§13.15.1). What remained of the feast is its gospel and Simeon's song. Henneberg 1555 has the German Nunc dimittis sung "from the Sunday after Purification" (Sehling 2, p. 310), and the Mansfeld hymn list gives "Mit Fried und Freud ich fahr dahin" for the day (Sehling 2, p. 235).

Ash Wednesday. No order keeps the ashes or gives a rite for the day. The day appears only as the beginning of Lent and in the lists of abolished blessings (§13.15.1).

Palm Sunday: the procession kept, the blessing dropped. Electoral Brandenburg kept the old Palm Sunday procession and chants, but not the blessing of palms. The same paragraph orders the rest of Holy Week (§§13.23.4–13.23.5). Brandenburg (Electorate), Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 88):

> Den palmentag sol man halten mit der procession und gesengen wie von alters, doch das die weihung der palmen vorbleibe, folgende die andern tage mit lesung der passionen, nach dem text der evangelisten. Den grünen donnerstag aber mit der ceremonien der füsswaschung (da es in gebrauch gewesen) und des abends nach der metten gepredigt werde, vom abendmal bis zur gefengnis Christi etc. Am guten freitag sol frue die passion aus allen vier evangelisten zusamen gezogen vollend dem volk furgetragen werden und zu rechter zeit sol das gewonliche amt volbracht werden, mit der representation der sepultur, wie von alters, doch das drinnen volkömliche consecration und administration des sacraments geschehe. Der osterabend sol mit gewönlichen solemniten und ceremonien volbracht werden, doch mit nachlassung der weihung des feurs […]. So sol auch die osternacht mit der representation der auferstehung Christi, wie vor alters, gehalten werden und der ostertag neben den folgenden tagen sol mit gewönlicher herrligkeit zugebracht werden, dergleichen die vesper mit der solemnitet, bei der tauf gebreuchlich, und so denn ungetaufte kinder verhanden zur selben zeit, die sollen mit getauft werden.

Palm Sunday shall be kept with the procession and chants as of old, yet so that the hallowing of the palms be left off; the following days with the reading of the Passions according to the text of the evangelists. But Maundy Thursday with the ceremony of the washing of feet (where it hath been in use), and in the evening after Matins let there be preaching from the Supper to the taking of Christ, etc. On Good Friday early the Passion, drawn together out of all four evangelists, shall be set forth to the people in full, and at the right time the customary office shall be performed, with the representation of the burial, as of old, yet so that therein a complete consecration and administration of the sacrament take place. Easter Eve shall be performed with the customary solemnities and ceremonies, yet with the leaving off of the hallowing of the fire […]. So shall also Easter night be kept with the representation of the resurrection of Christ, as of old; and Easter Day with the following days shall be spent in the customary glory; likewise the Vespers with the solemnity customary at baptism; and if there be unbaptized children present at that time, they shall be baptized withal.

The Gloria, laus. Where there was no procession, the processional hymn Gloria, laus et honor stayed in the service. Naumburg 1537 sings it figurally as the Palm Sunday introit (Sehling 2, p. 71), and Nördlingen likewise (Sehling 12, p. 323). At Hof in 1592 it was sung after the sermon by three choirs. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 439):

> Post concionem: Gloria, laus et honor tibi sit, item: Glori und ehr sei dir sanftmutiger, in dreien unterschidlichen choren, also das etliche discantisten, praeside cantore, für dem hohen altar das lateinisch, darnach der ganze chor, gubernante ludimagistro, gegenuber das deudsche und dann die megdlein allweg den versum intercalarem: Glori und ehr sei dir, singen.

After the sermon: Gloria, laus et honor tibi sit, item "Glory and honour be to thee, thou meek one", in three several choirs: so that some trebles, the cantor presiding, sing the Latin before the high altar; thereafter the whole choir, the schoolmaster governing, the German over against them; and then the little girls always the refrain, "Glory and honour be to thee".

Palm-shooting, the blessing of palms and the wooden ass were abolished everywhere else (Mülhausen 1528, Reformed, Sehling 20/2, p. 206; §13.15.1).

13.23.4 Maundy Thursday and Good Friday

Maundy Thursday. Brandenburg 1540 kept the washing of feet where it had been in use (§13.23.3). It is the only order found that does so. Elsewhere the foot-washing became a sermon: Regensburg [1567] preaches on John 13 at midday (Sehling 13, p. 477), and Wolfstein 1574 preaches on it "that the communicants be stirred to brotherly love and unity" (Sehling 13, p. 570). The day's chief rite was the Supper, with a sermon on its institution. The washing of the altars was dropped at Mülhausen in 1528 (Reformed) (Chapter 14, §14.6.6).

Good Friday: the Passion and the solemn prayers. The Good Friday service everywhere centres on the Passion read and preached. Schweinfurt keeps a Matins at five in the morning with three psalms and three lessons from the Passion, the reading of John's Passion "word for word" to the people, and the old Passion hymns. Schweinfurt, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 11, p. 636):

> Vom Carfreitag. Morgens frü zu fünf uren soll metten gesungen werden. Drei antiphon, drei psalmen […] Drei responsoria. Die drei lectiones sol der magister oder cantor aus der historien des leidens Christi ordenen. Denn sol der capellan auftreten und die historien des leidens Christi vom dem evangelisten Johanne beschrieben von worten zu worten dem volk fürlesen. Zu ende der passion sol man singen: Vexilia regis prodeunt, item: Crux fidelis. Collecten, Benedicamus. Auf disen tag so anders communicanten verhanden sind, sol das abentmal gehalten werden, weil solcher gebrauch vorhin alhier ist gewesen.

Of Good Friday. In the morning early at five o'clock Matins shall be sung: three antiphons, three psalms […] three responsories. The three lessons the master or cantor shall arrange out of the history of the suffering of Christ. Then shall the chaplain stand forth and read to the people the history of the suffering of Christ described by the evangelist John, word for word. At the end of the Passion one shall sing Vexilla regis prodeunt, item Crux fidelis; collects, Benedicamus. On this day, if communicants be otherwise present, the Supper shall be held, since such use hath been here aforetime.

The Mülhausen preachers of 1528 (Reformed) kept the Good Friday lessons and the old solemn prayers "for the heathen, Turks, Circassians and Jews", but read them in German (Sehling 20/2, p. 207). Waldeck kept the solemn prayers as a fixed part of the day. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, p. 277):

> Es sollen auch die Precationes solennes, wie sie bißher in den beyden Kirchen Cörbach und Wildungen gehalten worden, In allen Kirchen auff den Stillen Freitag vor der Communion mit fleiß gehandelt werden

The solemn prayers also, as they have hitherto been kept in the two churches of Korbach and Wildungen, shall be diligently performed in all churches on Good Friday before the communion.

The order prints them in full as Precationes solennes pro singulis ordinibus et necessitatibus die Parasceues dicendae, with German bidding prayers (§13.21.6).

Length. No order asks for a specially long service. Luther rejected eight hours of Passion-preaching (§13.23.1). Bugenhagen's Brunswick order holds half an hour of preaching on the Passion to be enough, for "the long, tedious Passion-preaching, as men were wont to do, is not profitable" (Sehling 6/1, p. 379). Württemberg 1535 kept Good Friday as a holy day "only in the forenoon, for the Passion" (Sehling 16, p. 134). The length came instead from reading the whole Passion harmony, as at Brandenburg and Waldeck.

The cross and the sepulchre. Brandenburg kept the "representation of the burial", but with a full consecration rather than the Mass of the Presanctified. Elsewhere the showing of the crucifix and the sepulchre were dropped (§13.22.4; Chapter 14, §14.6.6). Communion on Good Friday is treated in §13.22.4.

Tenebrae. The Holy Week Matins survived at Hof as an evening office, "formerly called Tenebrae", with lessons, the responsories In monte oliveti and Vinea mea electa, a German responsory, a sermon and a Kyrie with Latin tropes (Sehling 11, pp. 415–416; Chapter 8, §8.6.4.7). Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 kept them "without all knocking, rumbling and din" (Sehling 13, p. 95).

13.23.5 Easter Eve and Easter

No new fire and no paschal candle. No evangelical order keeps the blessing of the new fire, the paschal candle or the Exsultet. Even Brandenburg, which kept Easter Eve "with the customary solemnities and ceremonies", left off "the hallowing of the fire" (§13.23.3). The Mülhausen preachers (Reformed) kept the consecration of the font on Easter Eve but thought the Easter candle unnecessary for it. They also dropped the fire-blessing and the daily procession to the font through Easter week. Mülhausen, Gutachten zu den Gottesdiensten in der Karwoche, [1528] (Reformed; Sehling 20/2, p. 207):

> Zum fünften: Am helgen obend der Ostern ist unser meinung, das man den touff conserver wie bisher, ouch nit von nöten achtend, das man ein osterstock dar zu habe. Des glichen, das für ze segen, mag mitt gutem fug underlassen werden. Und zum letsten: Das visitiern zum touff mitt der procession die acht tag on alle irrung und gfar wol mag ab gethon werden, doch so witt, das man die halb Vespern, die man vor by dem touff hatt gesungen, im chor sing, wie andere vesperen.

Fifthly: On the holy eve of Easter it is our mind that one consecrate the font as hitherto, yet not deem it needful to have an Easter candle thereto. Likewise the blessing of the fire may with good reason be left off. And lastly: the visiting of the font with the procession the eight days may well be put away without any error or danger; yet so far that the half Vespers which were formerly sung at the font be sung in the choir, like other Vespers.

The resurrection represented. Brandenburg 1540 kept Easter night "with the representation of the resurrection of Christ, as of old", that is, the Easter play at the sepulchre, and Easter Vespers "with the solemnity customary at baptism", baptizing any children then waiting (§13.23.3). An Easter Matins of 1544 from Bibra survives with the German Te Deum, Christ ist erstanden and Verleih uns Frieden (Bibra, described by the editor, Sehling 2, p. 268). Elsewhere the Easter image plays were abolished (Chapter 12, §12.10.10). The Easter Leise "Christ ist erstanden" is treated in Chapter 8, §8.10.2.

13.23.6 Ascension and Whitsun

The None kept, the figures dropped. The Palatine reform of 1546 keeps the festal None of Ascension and Whitsun, but without the water poured, the hosts thrown from the vault, the fire cast down, the figure of Christ drawn up or the image of the Holy Ghost let down. Kurpfalz, Bedenken zur Reformation der Stiftskirchen, 1546 (Sehling 14, p. 92):

> Die nonas am heyligen Auffartstag und Pfingsten sollen züchtiglich und bescheidenlich, wie bißher, gesungen und gehalten werden, ausgeschlossen das wassergiessen, auch kein hostien oben aus dem gewelb werfen noch kein feuer herabwerfen, darzu kein bildnus Christi aufziehen nach kein bildnus des heyligen geists herablossen, sonder soll mit dem singen und der predig, so daruf volget, gnung sein.

The Nones on holy Ascension Day and Whitsun shall be sung and kept modestly and discreetly, as hitherto, excepting the pouring of water; also no hosts shall be thrown from above out of the vault, nor fire cast down; moreover no image of Christ drawn up, nor image of the Holy Ghost let down; but the singing and the sermon that followeth thereon shall be enough.

No order mentions putting out or removing the paschal candle at Ascension. Pfalz-Neuburg's editor notes the old custom of burning it until Ascension (Sehling 13, p. 96), but the order itself abolishes the candle.

Whitsun and baptism. Several orders explain that the early church baptized only at Easter and Whitsun, and that this is why the two feasts were kept (Schwäbisch Hall 1527, Sehling 17/1, p. 43; Württemberg 1553, Sehling 16, p. 232). None restores the seasons of baptism.

13.23.7 Septuagesima and Trinity Sunday

No farewell to the Alleluia. No order in the corpus has the medieval "deposition" or farewell of the Alleluia at Vespers or Compline on the eve of Septuagesima (Alleluia, dulce carmen, the burial of the Alleluia). Luther's Formula missae states the opposite principle: Lent, Holy Week and Good Friday are not to be paraded with other rites than the rest of the year, "for the Alleluia is the perpetual voice of the church". Luther, Formula missae et communionis, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 5):

> Sed nec ipsam quadragesimam sive maiorem hebdomadam aut sextam feriam penosam aliis ritibus ostentare decet, quam alias quascunque, ne semimissa et altera sacramenti parte Christum amplius ludere et ridere velle videamur. Alleluia enim vox perpetua est ecclesiae, sicut perpetua est memoria passionis et victoriae eius.

But neither is it fitting to show off Lent itself, or the Great Week, or the sixth day [Good Friday] as penitential with other rites than any other [days], lest we seem to wish further to mock and deride Christ with a half-Mass and with one part of the sacrament. For the Alleluia is the perpetual voice of the church, as the memorial of his passion and victory is perpetual.

The Hildesheim order of 1544 repeats the phrase when it orders the children to sing the Alleluia with its verse, though without the long melisma. Hildesheim, Christlike kerckenordeninge, 1544 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 853):

> Alleluja, welckör eine ewige stemme der kercken ys, singen de kinder mit dem versche, doch utgelaten de velen noten, de men plach hinden antohengende.

The Alleluia, which is an everlasting voice of the church, the children sing with the verse, yet leaving out the many notes which men were wont to hang on at the end.

The season still marked. Other orders kept the old seasonal exchange without any rite of farewell. Electoral Brandenburg sings after the epistle "the Alleluia and the sequence, if one be kept, or according to the season a tract in Latin" (Sehling 3, p. 68). The Palatinate in 1546 and the Transylvanian order of 1547 likewise put a tract such as Domine, non secundum in Lent (Sehling 14, p. 96; 24, p. 223). At Hof in 1592 Septuagesima is marked by the Lenten Kyrie at Mass and the plain Benedicamus dominicale "from Septuagesima until the feast of Easter". The Septuagesima Vespers hymn Dies absoluti praetereunt is noted as "formerly sung" (Sehling 11, pp. 414, 436).

The Athanasian Creed on Trinity Sunday. Several orders make the Athanasian Creed the text of Trinity Sunday:

- Regensburg [1567] reads it at Trinity Vespers, after Isaiah 6 at the vigil and Genesis 18 and Matthew 3 in the morning.
- Thüngen 1587 reads it at the vigil and on the feast (Sehling 11, p. 744).
- Albrechtshain 1554 takes it as the text of the afternoon catechism sermon on Trinity (Sehling 1, p. 519).
- Pomerania 1569 has it preached in German on Trinity afternoon in town and village. The Pomeranian hymn list and the Kolberg convent statutes of 1586 set it, in German, among the Trinity songs (Sehling 4, pp. 478, 502).
- The Mecklenburg convents sing it in German after the Benedictus on all the high feasts, Trinity among them (Chapter 12, §12.10.8).

Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, [1567] (Sehling 13, p. 478):

> Trinitatis. In vigilia zur vesper wird gelesen visio Jes[ajae] cap. 6. Früe - loco epistolae: Visio Abrahae, Gene[sis] 18. Evangelii loco die offenbarung der treifaltigkeit in der tauf Christi, Matth. 3. Zur vesper symbolum Athanasii.

Trinity. On the eve at Vespers is read the vision of Isaiah, chapter 6. In the morning, in place of the epistle, the vision of Abraham, Genesis 18; in place of the gospel, the revelation of the Trinity in the baptism of Christ, Matthew 3. At Vespers the Athanasian Creed.

Pomerania, Agenda, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 477):

> Predigen am festdage Trinitatis. Am dage der hiligen drevoldicheit schal men na middage in steden unde up dörperen predigen dat düdische symbolum Athanasii, welckere herna volget, de gemeine van den personen der godtheit vlitich und errichten, nicht hoger kunst sick bevlitigen, alle christen vormanen, dat se to sölcker predige sick hüpich vorsamlen.

Preaching on the feast day of Trinity. On the day of the Holy Trinity one shall preach in the afternoon, in towns and in villages, the German Athanasian Creed, which followeth hereafter; [shall] instruct the congregation diligently of the persons of the Godhead, not study after higher art, [and] exhort all Christians to gather in numbers to such preaching.

The Pomeranian order of 1542 had already prescribed the Quicunque vult once a week before the sermon, with an antiphon de Trinitate (Sehling 4, p. 357). Its use at Sunday Prime and in the schools is treated in Chapter 10, and in the Mass after the gospel in Chapter 8.

Chapter 14. Art, Architecture, Paraments and Vestments

This chapter covers the visible furnishing of worship in the church orders of the sixteenth century printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts. It asks:

- Art. Which images did the orders keep, and which did they remove? How were they to be removed? What became of the crucifix, the altar panels, carved and painted figures, banners and processional crosses? Were new pictures ever ordered?
- Architecture and furnishings. How many altars were kept, and where did the minister stand at them? Were altars replaced by tables? What became of the lights on the altar, the sacrament house, the font, the choir screen? What do the orders say of the pulpit, pews, galleries and windows?
- Paraments. What cloths covered the altar, pulpit and font? What became of the corporal and pall, the cloth held under the communicants, the chalices and the stock of old vestments?
- Seasons and colours. Did vestments or paraments change colour with the church year? Were there more or fewer candles on feasts or in certain seasons? What became of the Lenten veil, the Easter sepulchre and paschal candle, Candlemas candles, and seasonal greenery?
- Vestments. Was the Mass vestment (chasuble) kept, and with or without alb? When was the cope worn, and when only the surplice? Which orders abolished all three? What were ministers to wear outside the service?

How the chapter is laid out.

- §14.1 answers each question in brief, and §14.2 sets out the scope, the search terms and the negative findings.
- §14.3 sets out the principle under which every one of these things was handled: they are adiaphora, things indifferent, kept or dropped for order, for the weak, or against superstition.
- §14.4 covers images and crucifixes: the Lutheran distinction between idols and histories, orderly removal, new pictures, the Reformed clearances, the crucifix, and banners and processional crosses.
- §14.5 covers the building and its furnishings: altars, the minister's position, tables in place of altars, lights, the sacrament house, the font, and the pulpit, screens, pews, galleries and windows.
- §14.6 covers paraments, linens and vessels, colours and the seasons, and the paten, host box and bread dish.
- §14.7 covers vestments: the Mass vestment kept, the cope, the vestments abolished, and the surplice.
- §14.8 covers clerical dress outside the service.
- §14.9 is a table by order, and §14.10 a concordance of every order quoted.

- the tonsure and the minister's dress as human ordinances, the thurifer and candle-bearer, and the deacons' and sextons' care of altar, pulpit and font: Chapter 16, §§16.3.3, 16.4.4, 16.7.2;

14.1 Summary of findings

1. Everything is "indifferent", and that decides everything (§14.3). Vestments, cloths, vessels, lights, images and altars are adiaphora: they "give and take nothing to faith and conscience" (Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533). The orders reach three different conclusions from that one principle:

- Keep them for good order, for uniformity with Wittenberg and the neighbouring churches, and for the weak: Hannover 1536, Thüngen 1564, Hildesheim 1544, Magdeburg 1583.
- Drop them when they foster superstition or blur the difference from the Mass: Regensburg 1554 and 1567, Transylvania 1557.
- Forbid them as contrary to God's word, which is the Reformed position, not an indifferent one: the Heidelberg Catechism, Kurpfalz 1565, the Casimirian mandate of 1587 (all Reformed).

2. Images: idols out, histories in (§14.4). The Lutheran orders remove only images that were prayed to or had lights burned before them, and keep scriptural histories as "the laity's Bible" (Brunswick 1528, Thüngen 1564, Oldenburg 1573, Regensburg 1567). Removal is to be orderly and by authority, never by the crowd:

- Strasbourg 1525 (Moderate Reformed) forbids citizens to touch anything.
- Mecklenburg 1552 nails the images to the walls.
- The Upper Palatinate in 1557 removes them by night, takes the carved figures out of mixed panels and blacks over the painted ones.

Kurland 1570 is the only order found that commissions new paintings: Old and New Testament histories, "especially of the resurrection and of the Last Judgement", for the native peasantry. Ulm 1531 (Moderate Reformed), the Heidelberg Catechism (Q. 98) and Kurpfalz 1565 (Reformed), and two Lutheran orders that follow them here, Lichtenberg 1579 and Sponheim 1590/91, reject the "laity's books" argument and clear images and crucifixes alike. The Prussian order of 1568 answers them by name.

3. The crucifix is the image the Lutheran orders most often name as kept (§14.4.5). Hannover 1536, Grubenhagen 1544 (where it "shall stand in the midst of the church") and Anhalt 1562 keep it. It is carried before funerals at Freiberg 1538 and Wolfstein 1574, stands at the deathbed (Dietrich 1545) and on the Mansfeld oath table (1586). The Reformed removed it, and the Lutheran Nassau-Weilburg in 1617 stopped carrying it before corpses. Banners, poles and processional crosses went with the processions (§14.4.6).

4. One altar; the minister before it, facing the people (§14.5.1–14.5.3). Side altars were removed, leaving three (Wittenberg 1522) or one (Mecklenburg 1552, Upper Palatinate 1557, Kurland 1570). Colditz 1529 and Gotha 1555 order altars arranged so that the minister faces the people. The Wittenberg theologians condemned standing behind the table as the disorder of Karlstadt and Müntzer (Radical Reformation) (Wittenbergische Reformation 1545, Allstedt 1533). Strasbourg 1537 (Moderate Reformed) set up an altar-table facing the people, and the Reformed orders put tables in place of altars (Siegen 1581, Casimir 1587, Anhalt 1596, Simmern 1598). In Transylvania the synod of 1565 ordered altars pulled down by "turbulent men" to be restored.

5. Two candles, no sacrament house (§14.5.4–14.5.5). The usual Lutheran altar has two lights during the Supper (Allstedt 1533, Calenberg 1544/45, Kurland 1570). Hildesheim 1544 explains them by the night of the Last Supper. Kurpfalz 1546 (Lutheran) keeps a single lamp, and Regensburg and Anhalt 1596 (Reformed) drop the lights. No order varies the number of lights by feast or season. Where the lights vary, they vary with communion: lit when there are communicants (Marggrabowa and Sensburg 1581), and at Suhl 1562 not lit at all. The endowments for the eternal light went to the common chest (Württemberg 1536), and the blessing of Candlemas and Easter candles was abolished (Hesse 1526, Moderate Reformed; Pfalz-Neuburg 1543, Lüneburg convents 1555). Since the Sacrament was not reserved, sacrament houses and ambries were emptied (Hesse 1526, Moderate Reformed; Schönburg 1542, Hohenlohe 1553) or removed (Pfalz-Neuburg 1560, Nassau-Weilburg 1576, Magdeburg 1583, Kurpfalz 1565 (Reformed)). No order uses "tabernacle" for a furnishing.

6. The font is moved into sight (§14.5.6). The customary font is kept (Prussia 1525), railed and adorned (Nördlingen 1544), and moved before the choir, raised a step or two (Lüneburg 1564), or "out of the corners before the face of the church" (Bentheim 1588, Reformed). Bremen 1534 warms the water in winter. The Reformed abolish the font (Kurpfalz 1565, Casimir 1587, Simmern 1598, all Reformed).

7. Pulpit, pews and galleries (§14.5.7). The pulpit appears among the things to be covered and kept. The choir screen is torn down at Zweibrücken 1558 so that the nuns can be seen at sermon. Saxony 1580 complains that pews block the view of pulpit and altar and forbids new pews without leave. Hadersleben 1571 rebuilds its pews to clear the aisle and separate men and women, and Thorn and Stargard have pew orders. Schoolboys sing from the north gallery at Wittenberg 1533. Guilds that once kept altars are to keep windows instead (Neumark 1540, Salzwedel 1579).

8. Paraments are covers, not a system (§14.6). No order names an antependium, dossal or pulpit fall, or prescribes colours. What the orders ask for:

- clean white linen on altar and font (Anhalt 1562, Wolfenbüttel 1569);
- covers made from old vestments for altar, pulpit and font, with a pall (Henneberg 1556), and the visitors are to ask whether altar, font, pulpit and desk are "covered as is due" (Leiningen 1609);
- a corporal and pall in the sick communion (Brandenburg 1540);

- the silk cloth held under communicants by boys, deacons or honest men (Hohenlohe 1553, Regensburg 1553, Speyer 1557, Thorn 1575). The Reformed Amberg mandate of 1567 abolished it, and so later did two Lutheran orders, the Upper Palatine visitation of 1579 under the Lutheran Elector Ludwig VI and Nassau-Weilburg 1617.

Surplus vestments were sold or cut up for the hospital's bed sheets (Schmiedeberg 1528), or made into altar cloths (Sponheim 1590/91). The Reformed exchanged chalices for beakers (Siegen 1581, Casimir 1587, Zweibrücken 1595, all Reformed).

The paten was kept as an ordinary vessel (Hannover 1536) and counted in the inventories (§14.6.7). The commonest rubric puts it, with as many hosts as communicants, into the minister's hand at the Words of Institution (Livonia 1533, the Palatinate 1546, Danzig 1557, Henneberg 1582). At the sick communion it was held under the communicant's chin (Brandenburg 1540). Havelberg (1558) forbade elevating it in the chalice's stead. Hohenlohe (1596) and Nassau-Weilburg (1617), both Lutheran, stopped showing or handling it at the Verba. The Reformed melted or sold patens with the chalices (Zweibrücken 1595, Wittgenstein 1605, both Reformed) and passed the bread in a dish.

9. Vestments: chasuble, cope, surplice (§14.7).

- The Mass vestment (alb and chasuble) was kept, and in Saxony restored, for the Supper with communicants: Leisnig 1529, Allstedt 1533, Grubenhagen 1544, Calenberg 1544/45, Thüngen 1564, Wolfenbüttel 1569, Thorn 1575. Riga 1530 and Kurland 1570 made a plain surplice the norm, with cope or chasuble on feasts.
- The cope replaced the chasuble when there were no communicants, so that the people should not think the private Mass had returned (Brandenburg 1540, Pfalz-Neuburg 1543). Brenz allowed it to the deacon at Schwäbisch Hall in 1527, but no chasuble, "neither man's nor woman's clothing".
- Abolished: the dalmatic and tunicle at Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed); the "Levite and Mass vestments" at Regensburg in 1554, with a reasoned statement read from the pulpit; the Mass vestment at Sayn 1575 and Anhalt 1596 (Reformed). Transylvania 1557 wants candles and infulae laid aside and a white linen garment instead.
- The surplice is the common minimum and the vestment most often named: Prussia 1543, Hesse 1532 (Moderate Reformed), Württemberg 1535 and 1553, the Cellische Ordnungen of 1545, Regensburg 1554 and 1567, Wittgenstein 1563, Anhalt 1568. Ernestine Saxony and Coburg in 1554 limit it to the altar. The Palatine Calvinists (Reformed) and the Lutheran Sayn 1582 abolish it. Wild- und Rheingrafschaft 1603 introduces a black gown with sleeves, but keeps surplices where they are used.

10. Outside the service (§14.8). Ministers are to wear long, honest, priestly coats, not short, slashed or coloured clothes, so that they may be known as ministers (Grubenhagen 1544, the Cellische Ordnungen of 1545, Regensburg 1567, Wild- und Rheingrafschaft 1603).

11. Colours and the seasons (§14.6.6). No order prescribes liturgical colours or a seasonal change of vestments or paraments. Coloured vestments nonetheless stayed in use. In 1578 the Fürstenberg church had a red-and-green velvet chasuble newly given by the Duke of Mecklenburg, a red velvet chasuble and red damask deacon's coats. At Sorau the boys who held the communion cloths wore red smocks and green garlands. The Lenten veiling of images is named only to be ended: Luther rejects it, Mülhausen 1528 (Reformed) drops the unveiled crucifix shown on Good Friday, and at Regensburg a covered altarpiece was removed all the same. The Lenten veil, the Easter sepulchre, the paschal candle and the image plays of the feasts were all abolished (Luther 1526, Pfalz-Neuburg 1543, Hohenlohe 1553). Leiningen-Westerburg 1566 forbids May branches and decking the church with flowers as heathen customs; only at Hof (1592) did neighbours strew grass and set up May branches for the dedication procession. There is no Advent wreath or Christmas tree.

12. What is absent (§14.2.3). There is no evangelical mitre or crosier, and no preaching bands, cassock, rochet, biretta or episcopal insignia. Liturgical colours are never prescribed. The orders do not mention altar rails, credence tables, altars of repose, mosaics or stained-glass programmes, and say nothing of transepts, vaults, buttresses or undercrofts.

14.2 Scope, sources and method

14.2.1 Sources

The chapter draws on the full text of the Sehling edition in `eko.db`: the orders themselves, the visitation articles and decrees printed with them, and, where said, the editor's introductions and notes. It covers Lutheran, Upper German and Reformed orders alike, since the edition prints all three, and the Reformed clearances explain much of what the later Lutheran orders defend.

14.2.2 Searches

The corpus was searched with regular expressions for some thirty families of terms, in High and Low German and Latin spellings. Each hit was read in a window of context. The families, with the number of document-pages in which each was found, were:

- Art: Bild, Bildnis, imago, statua (752); Gemälde, Tafel, Maler (810); Crucifix (69); Kreuz, crux (1,873, most of them the "cross" of suffering); Fahne, Banner, vexillum (80); Fenster, Glasfenster (93); Reliquien, Heiltum (227).
- Building and furnishings: Altar (1,951); Kanzel, Predigtstuhl (1,266); Taufstein, döpe, baptisterium (562); Lettner, Gitter, Schranken (68); Sakristei, Gerbkammer (57); Gestühl, Kirchenstuhl, Bänke, Empore, Borkirche (174); Pult, Lesepult (71); Kerze, Leuchter, Ampel, Lampe (222); Beichtstuhl (17); Sakramentshäuslein, Monstranz, ciborium (222); Kirchturm (118); Kirchhof, Gottesacker (537).

Further searches were made for the English terms of the request that have German equivalents: mosaic, narthex (Vorhalle, Vorkirche), transept (Querschiff), vault (Gewölbe), buttress, undercroft (Krypta, Gruft), credence (Kredenz), antependium, dossal, altar rail and kneeling bench (Altargitter, Kniebank), liturgical colours, preaching bands (Beffchen, Kragen), mitre and crosier.

A second pass searched for reservation and the seasons: tabernacle (Tabernakel), ambry (armarium, Almer, Wandschrank, Sakramentsnische); colour words (rot, grün, schwarz, violett, Farbe) near vestments and cloths; the Lenten veil (Hungertuch, Fastentuch), the covering or veiling of images, crosses and altars (decken, verdecken, verhüllen, velare, tegere); the Easter sepulchre (heiliges Grab) and paschal candle (Osterkerze, Osterstock); Candlemas candles (Lichtmeß, Kerzenweihe); Tenebrae and Finstermette; the eternal light (ewiges Licht); greenery and flowers (Maien, Kirchen blümen, Gras streuen, Kranz, Tannenbaum, Christbaum, Krippe); and lights named together with feasts, Sundays and weekdays.

14.2.3 What was not found

The searches came back empty, or with only incidental hits, for most of the architectural and episcopal vocabulary of the request:

- Architecture. No order regulates the nave, transept, vault, buttress, arch, steeple or undercroft. Vorkirche occurs, but in the sense of a gallery, where the boys are not to be suffered during the catechism (Ysenburg-Birstein 1588), or as one item in a list of parts to be kept in repair. Querschiff occurs once, in an editor's note. Towers, roofs, windows and churchyard walls appear only as fabric to be maintained, and bells are treated in Chapter 9.
- Art. No order mentions mosaics, or regulates what stained glass may show. Statues appear only as "carved images" to be removed or left. No order commissions a sculpture. The only new pictures ordered are Kurland's (§14.4.3).
- Furnishings. There is no altar rail, no credence table and no altar of repose. Kredenz occurs only as a letter of credence. Kneeling benches for communicants appear at Hohenlohe (§14.6.3) and, by the editor's report, at Hoya 1581. The rood screen appears only as the Gitter or Schranken to be removed (§14.5.7).
- Paraments. No antependium, frontal, superfrontal, dossal, reredos, runner, pulpit fall or lectern fall is named; the orders speak only of covers (Decken) for altar, pulpit, font and desk (§14.6.1). The corporal and pall appear once (§14.6.2). No order regulates the purificator, burse, chalice veil or lavabo towel. Font towels appear once (§14.5.6).
- Seasons. No order prescribes liturgical colours or seasonal changes; the colour sequence appears only in the editor's notes, and coloured vestments only in an inventory and a later report (§14.6.6). No order varies the number of candles by feast or season. Tabernakel never names a furnishing. No order prescribes veiling images or crosses in Lent or Passiontide; the veiling is mentioned only to be abolished (§14.6.6). There is no Advent wreath, Christmas tree, Easter garden or crib set up in church, and the Tenebrae hearse is never mentioned.
- Vestments. No order provides an evangelical mitre or crosier. The Hirtenstab occurs only as a metaphor for the preaching office, and Transylvanian infulae most likely means chasubles (§14.7.3). There are no preaching bands, cassock, cotta, cassock-alb, rochet, biretta, zucchetto, galero, humeral veil, pallium, rationale, gloves, tippet or hood. The amice and cincture are never named. The stole and maniple appear only to be left free (Hildesheim 1544) or dropped (Regensburg 1567), and the dalmatic and tunicle only to be forbidden (Hesse 1526, Moderate Reformed; Regensburg 1554). The black gown appears once, in 1603 (§14.7.4).

14.2.4 Method

Quoted passages were pulled from the database in full and checked as described in the conventions. Each page was checked against Sehling's running heads, which often correct the database's record headings. The most important corrections:

- the Bremen order is the Kirchenordnung of 1534, not the poor-chest order of 1525;
- the Mansfeld oath form belongs with the consistorial order of 1586;
- the Prussian surplice decree is the Befehl of 1 February 1543, and the image passage is from the Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien of 1568;
- the Sponheim passages are from the Hintere Grafschaft Sponheim (1590/91 and 1607), not Zweibrücken;
- the Palatine passage on images, altars and fonts is the Elector's Befehl an die Amtleute of 3 October 1565, printed after the Heidelberg Catechism.

The chapter quotes nearly a hundred passages from some eighty orders. It does not claim to list every mention of an altar or chalice, which number in the thousands, but every order found that says something distinctive on the questions asked is quoted or cited.

14.3 Things indifferent

14.3.1 The principle

Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1533. Every order that deals with these matters begins from the same place: vestments, cloths, vessels and lights are outward things, neither commanded nor forbidden by God. The Brandenburg-Nürnberg order of 1533 says it in a sentence. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 183):

> Die andern zusetz eußerlicher, leiblicher ding als meßgewand, altardeck, silbrein und güldein gefeß, lichter etc. sein aller ding frei, geben und nemen dem glauben und gewissen nichts.

The other additions of outward, bodily things, as Mass vestment, altar covering, silver and golden vessels, lights, etc., are altogether free; they give and take nothing to faith and conscience.

Hannover 1536. Freedom did not mean abolition. The Hannover order lists what it keeps "in the freedom of the Spirit", for good order and for the weak: the priest's vestment at the altar, the customary vessels, lights on the altar, the crucifix and honest images, the font and the altar. Hannover, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1009):

> Aus der ursach wöllen wir auch umb guter ordnung willen und allen schwachen zu dienst noch etliche gebreuchliche cerimonien behalten, doch in der freiheit des Geistes, als gewönliche priesterkleidung bey dem altar, gewönliche gefes, so zu handlung der heiligen sacrament bisher sind gebraucht worden, liechter auf dem altar, crucifix und ehrliche bildnis, dadurch kein abgötterey getrieben wird, taufstein, altar, christliche gesenge, deudsch und latin, nach gelegenheit der zeit

For that cause will we also, for good order's sake and for the service of all the weak, still keep certain customary ceremonies, yet in the freedom of the Spirit: as the customary priestly clothing at the altar, the customary vessels which have been used hitherto for the handling of the holy sacraments, lights upon the altar, crucifix and honest images whereby no idolatry is practised, font, altar, Christian songs, German and Latin, according to the occasion of the time.

14.3.2 Keep what each church has

Magdeburg 1583. The rule most often given to visitors was to leave each church as it was. The Magdeburg instruction of 1583 lets Mass vestments, surplices, lights, altar cloths and the language of singing stand "as each church hath it in use", so that no unrest arise from changing, abolishing or setting up. Superstitious things are another matter: idolatrous images, the sacrament house and the monstrance are to go. Magdeburg, Instruktion zur Visitation, 25 May 1583 (Sehling 2, p. 424):

> messgewand, chorröck, lichter ufs altar, altartucher, singen lateinisch oder teutsch soll man pleiben lassen, zu halten oder nicht, wie es ein jede kirche im gebrauch ist, das hiermit durch enderung, abthuung oder aufrichtung kein unruhe in kirchen angerichtet werde nach dem spruch Christi: Regnum dei non venit cum observatione. Aber ergerliche abergleubige ceremonien, ob die wol alt weren, soll man abschaffen, als abgottische bilder, da etwas ein cultus were angewandt worden, sacrament heuselein, monstranz

Mass vestment, surplices, lights upon the altar, altar cloths, singing in Latin or in German, one shall let remain, to keep or not, as each church hath it in use, that hereby through changing, putting away or setting up no unrest be stirred up in churches, according to the saying of Christ: Regnum Dei non venit cum observatione. But offensive, superstitious ceremonies, though they were old, shall be abolished, as idolatrous images to which some worship hath been applied, sacrament houses, monstrance.

14.3.3 Kept for peace and for the weak

Thüngen 1564. The Franconian lordship of Thüngen keeps Mass vestment and burning candles because they were in use "in Dr Martin's lifetime" at Wittenberg, in Meissen, Brandenburg and the chief imperial cities, and still are. The motive is peace and the weak, not any holiness in the things. Thüngen, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 11, pp. 736–737):

> 4. Vom meßgewand und brennenden lichten oder kerzen. Dieweil das meßgewand, wie mans nennet, und die brennenden kerzen bei d. Martini leben gebräuchlich gewest in der wittenbergischen, meichsnischen, brandenburgischen und der furnembsten reichsstedten kirchen, auch in solchen bis auf diesen tag beides gehalten wird und bei uns des mehrerteils solche beide stücke ungeendert gelassen, wollen wir ferner um friedens und einigkeit willen und von wegen der schwachen in unsern kirchen also behalten - nicht in meinung, das dadurch dem hochwürdigen sacrament sondere wirdigkeit oder heiligkeit widerfahre oder das es notwendig also sein müsse oder auch das es den papisten zu gefallen oder sonst jemand zum verdrieß geschehe, sondern allein um friedens willen und zu verhütung der schwachen ergernis.

4. Of the Mass vestment and burning lights or candles. Forasmuch as the Mass vestment, as men call it, and the burning candles were in use in Dr Martin's lifetime in the churches of Wittenberg, of Meissen, of Brandenburg and of the chiefest imperial cities, and both are kept in the same unto this day, and with us for the most part both these pieces have been left unchanged, we will further keep them so in our churches for peace and unity's sake and because of the weak: not in the meaning that thereby any special worthiness or holiness befall the most worthy sacrament, or that it must needs be so, or yet that it be done to please the papists or to vex any other, but only for peace's sake and to prevent the offence of the weak.

Hildesheim 1544. The Hildesheim order keeps vestments and lights at the Sacrament on holy days "not as needful before God, but only as seemly before men", and only until all the evangelical churches agree to drop them. The stole and maniple it leaves to the preachers' freedom. Hildesheim, Christlike kerckenordeninge, 1544 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 852):

> Dewile nu vele stede unde lande, de dat evangelion angenomen hebben, solcke kleder unde lichte allene des hilligen dages by dem sacramente noch beholden, nicht nödtlick vor Godde, sunder ailene eerlick vor den minschen, so wille wy se ock beholden, so lange, dat se alle andere, de dat evangelion hebben angenomen, eindrechtichlick affdon. Alse denne so wille wy ock nicht sünderlick syn, willen unse predicanten nicht gebruken der stolen unde manipelen, dar frage wy nichtes na, dat schal öhne fry syn ut dersülven christliken fryheit, alse gesecht.

Now whereas many cities and lands which have received the gospel still keep such clothes and lights at the sacrament on the holy day only, not as needful before God but only as seemly before men, so will we also keep them, so long as until all others which have received the gospel put them away with one accord. Then will we also not be singular. If our preachers will not use the stoles and maniples, we ask nothing after that; it shall be free to them out of the same Christian liberty, as is said.

Hesse 1526 (Moderate Reformed). Even the Homberg synod of 1526, which forbade new purchases of vestments (§14.7.3), commended a minimum "that all things be done decently": the minister should at least wear a surplice, candles should be lit, and the chalice should be seemly. Hesse, Homberger Kirchenordnung, 1526 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 45):

> Servetur in ea ritus, quem servus Dei Martinus Lutherus ultimo germanice conscripsit, et ut iuxta Paulum cuncta decentius fiant, laudamus si in eius ministerio ad minus induatur superpellicium, incendantur cerei, et decens calix habeatur.

Let there be kept therein the rite which the servant of God Martin Luther last wrote in German; and that, according to Paul, all things be done the more decently, we commend it if in its ministry at the least a surplice be put on, candles be lighted, and a seemly chalice be had.

14.3.4 The limit

The same principle could cut the other way. Where a thing was used superstitiously, or where keeping it seemed to make no difference between the evangelical service and the Mass, it ceased to be indifferent and was to go. The Regensburg reasons of 1554 for dropping the Mass vestment (§14.7.3) and the Transylvanian synod of 1557 on candles and vestments (§14.7.3) both argue in this way. The Reformed orders went further and treated images, altars and fonts as forbidden in themselves (§§14.4.4, 14.5.3).

14.4 Images and crucifixes

14.4.1 Idols and histories

Brunswick 1528. The Lutheran orders do not condemn images as such. They condemn worship given to them. Bugenhagen's Brunswick order says that good books have been written showing it is not wrong to have images, especially those in which histories may be seen. The council has removed only those images before which people prayed and set lights; the rest stay, unless they too become objects of worship. Brunswick, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 445):

> Van den bilden synt gude böke gescreven, dat id nicht unrecht edder unchristlick sy, bilden to hebben, besundergen dar me inne mach sehn historien unde geschefte. Wy bekennen frilick, dat wy in unsen kerken vele lögenbilden unde vele unnutte klotze hebben. Doch dat wy nicht mögen bildenstormere syn unde andere lüde, bekande edder frömede, sulks nicht vor ergerlick ansehn, hebbe wy alleyne wechgedän mit ordentliker gewalt unde overicheit de bilden, by unde vor welken sonderich anbedent unde afgoderye unde sonderge ere mit lichten unde luchteren angerichtet wärd. De anderen alle, de nicht hinderlick synt in der kerken, late wy stan

Of images good books have been written, that it is not wrong nor unchristian to have images, especially those wherein one may see histories and deeds. We confess freely that we have in our churches many lying images and many unprofitable blocks. Yet, that we may not be image-stormers, and that other folk, known or strangers, may not look upon such as offensive, we have put away by ordinary power and authority only those images by and before which special worship and idolatry and special honour with lights and candlesticks was set up. All the others, which are no hindrance in the church, we let stand.

Pomesania 1525. The bishop of Pomesania's theses put the rule at its simplest: images are not to be prayed to, and no light is to be lit before them. Pomesania, Themata episcopi Risenburgensis, 1525 (Sehling 4, p. 29):

> 16. Die bilder in häusern und kirchen soll man nicht anbeten, denselben auch kein licht anstecken.

16. The images in houses and churches one shall not pray to, nor light any light unto them.

The laity's Bible. The positive case came from Gregory the Great: pictures are the books of the unlettered. Thüngen 1564 removes idolatrous images "not agreeable to holy Scripture" and keeps those taken from both Testaments as "the laity's Bible and books"; pastors and sextons are to watch that no one, "especially the old women", misuse them for idolatry or sorcery. Thüngen, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 11, p. 739):

> 14. Von bildern und gemälden. Die abgöttischen bilde, so der heiligen schrift ungemeß, soll man, wie rechten christen und Gottes kinder eignet und gebüret, gar hinwegtun. Die anderen, so aus heiliger schrift alten und neuen testament genommen und den leuten zu erinnerung warhaftiger historien, zu christlicher lehr und exempel vieler löblicher und Gott wohlgefälliger tugenden dinstlich sind, die lassen wir bleiben und nach dem spruck Gregorii der laien bibel und bücher sein. Jedoch sollen die pfarhern und kirchner gute achtung darauf geben, das nicht jemand (wie leider zu vil geschieht, insonderheit von den alten weibern) solcher leidlicher und in Gottes wort gegründeter bilder entweder zu abgötterei oder zauberei mißbrauche.

14. Of images and paintings. The idolatrous images which are not agreeable to holy Scripture shall one put away altogether, as becometh and behoveth right Christians and God's children. The others, which are taken out of holy Scripture, Old and

> New Testament, and serve the people for remembrance of true histories, for Christian doctrine and for example of many laudable virtues well-pleasing to God, those we let remain, and be, according to the saying of Gregory, the laity's Bible and books. Yet shall the pastors and sextons take good heed thereto, that no one (as alas happeneth too much, especially of the old women) misuse such tolerable images, grounded in God's word, either for idolatry or for sorcery.

Oldenburg 1573. The Oldenburg order answers those who say "the images in the churches are mere idolatry" with the same distinction, and quotes Gregory in Latin: Quod legentibus est scriptura, hoc idiotis praestat pictura. Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1083):

> Was aber historien sind, die in heiliger schrift geschrieben stehen, von den patriarchen, aposteln und von dem Herrn Christo und seinen wunderzeichen, auch leiden, kreuzigung, sterben, auferstehen, die in bilder gefasset sind, kan man nicht allein mit guten gewissen, sondern auch mit grossem nutz in den kirchen und heusern haben zur erinnerung der grossen woltaten Gottes und zu danksagung für dieselbigen.

But what are histories written in holy Scripture, of the patriarchs, of the apostles, and of the Lord Christ and his miracles, also his suffering, crucifying, dying, rising again, which are set forth in images, those may one have not only with good conscience but also with great profit in the churches and houses, for remembrance of the great benefits of God and for thanksgiving for the same.

Regensburg 1567. Regensburg, which had dropped the Mass vestment (§14.7.3), still took a middle way with images, as with the organ, figural music and Latin song: neither abolishing them altogether nor making too much of them. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, [1567] (Sehling 13, p. 481):

> Mit den bildnissen (gleich wie auch mit andern mehr dingen, als orgeln schlagen, figural und lateinischen gesang) halten wir (den verstand unser christlichen freiheit gleicherweis darin anzuzeigen) dis mittel, das wir sie nit allerding abtun noch zuviel damit machen; machen auch die unterscheid deren bildnis und gemelde, so gewisse gute historien der schrift haben und nit zu abgötterei oder aberglauben gebraucht werden, auch sonst gute, nüzliche erinnerung geben mögen, gegen den andern vielfältigen, bäpstischen, lugenhaften, abgöttischen, unnützen bilden und gemelden.

With the images (even as also with more other things, as playing the organ, figural and Latin song) we hold (to show therein likewise the understanding of our Christian liberty) this mean: that we neither put them away altogether nor make too much of them; we make also the difference between those images and paintings which have certain good histories of Scripture and are not used for idolatry or superstition, and may otherwise give good, profitable remembrance, and the other manifold, popish, lying, idolatrous, unprofitable images and paintings.

The order goes on to say that the costly stone image of Mary and many wax figures of men and women, life-size, had already been removed "as Hezekiah did to the brazen serpent".

Gotha 1555 (Sehling 1, p. 569) likewise forbids "the idolatrous popish images which are not agreeable to biblical history". Schweinfurt 1543 (Sehling 11, p. 630) follows Luther: where preachers lead the people from idolatry to Christ, "the images are already stormed and put away, so that no one regards them much"; images whose histories are uncertain and lying are to be removed by an ordinary magistrate. Luther's *Deutsche Messe (Sehling 1, p. 16) wants Holy Week to be like other weeks, without "the hunger cloth, palm-shooting, covering of images and whatever more of the juggling-work there is".

14.4.2 Orderly removal

Strasbourg 1525 (Moderate Reformed). The orders insist that images be removed by authority, not by the people. The Strasbourg council's mandate of March 1525 forbids every citizen to take down anything, "small or great, in church or in the street", of images, altars, panels, iron or stone work, on pain of severe punishment; whoever has a grievance is to bring it to the council. Strasbourg, Mandat über Bilder und Altäre, 18 March 1525 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 166):

> Unnser herren rete unnd XXI londt gebietten allen unnd yeden iren burgern, geistlichen unnd weltlichen, das sie eygens gewalts unnd von inen selbs sampt oder sunder nichts hinweg thun oder abbrechen sollen, es sy clein oder groß, inn kyrchen oder uff der gassen, von byldern, altarn, daffeln, ysern oder steynen werck, gar nichts ußgenommen

Our lords the councillors and the Twenty-One command all and each of their burghers, spiritual and temporal, that they shall not of their own power and of themselves, together or severally, put away or break down anything, be it small or great, in churches or in the street, of images, altars, panels, iron or stone work, nothing at all excepted.

Mecklenburg 1552. The Mecklenburg visitors were to break down all altars but the high altar, use the stones for the church, nail the images to the walls, and take away offensive images and the ciboria. Mecklenburg, Visitations-Instruction, 12 November 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 220):

> sollen die visitatorn vorordenen und bevel thuen, alle die altare, so uber dem hohen altar vorhanden, abzubrechen, die steine zu der kirchen zu gebrauchen und die bilde in den kirchen mit nageln an den wenden anzuschlagen, schedliche und ergerliche bilde, und die ciboria hinweg zu thuen.

the visitors shall ordain and give command to break down all the altars that are present over and above the high altar, to use the stones for the church, and to nail the images in the churches to the walls with nails, [and] to put away harmful and offensive images, and the ciboria.

Upper Palatinate 1557. The Upper Palatinate instruction orders idolatrous images removed by night, "without special tumult and clatter", by the officials. Where idolatrous figures stand on one panel with biblical histories, the carved figures are to be taken out and the painted ones blacked over. Upper Palatinate, Visitationsinstruktion, 1557 (Sehling 13, p. 297):

> Doe auch abgottische pilder neben biblischen historien an einer tafel beisammen, sollen die ergerlichen geschnitzten pilder herausgetan und die gemalten mit schwarzer farben vermalt und verstrichen werden.

Where also idolatrous images are together with biblical histories on one panel, the offensive carved images shall be taken out, and the painted ones painted over and smeared with black colour.

Grubenhagen 1544. The Grubenhagen order clears everything except the crucifix, which "shall stand and remain in the midst of the church", and the Christian panels over the altars. Side altars, idolatrous panels, candlesticks, banners, poles and screens are to be removed, sold, destroyed or locked away. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1034):

> XV. Von den bildern in der kirchen. Alle gotzen und bilder, ausgenomen die biltniß des crucifixs unsers Hern Jesu Chr[ist]i, welchs soll mitten in der kirchen sthan und bleiben, sampt den christlichen tafeln uber den altarn, die andern sollen von stunden an sampt den winkelaltarn, abgottischen taffeln, leuchtern, fhanen, stangen, schranken und andere papistenstiftung abgethan und hinweggerumet, verkofft, vernichtiget oder verschlossen werden, darmit hinfürder davor keiner seine abgotterey und heucheley dreiben moge.

XV. Of the images in the church. All idols and images, excepting the image of the crucifix of our Lord Jesus Christ, which shall stand and remain in the midst of the church, together with the Christian panels over the altars: the others shall forthwith, together with the corner altars, idolatrous panels, candlesticks, banners, poles, screens and other popish foundations, be put away and cleared out, sold, destroyed or locked up, so that henceforth no one may practise his idolatry and hypocrisy before them.

Hermannstadt 1557. The Transylvanian Saxon synod of 1557 asks that "fabulous images and similar pictures" set up for worship be removed and sacred histories kept. Hermannstadt, Synodalbeschlüsse, 1557 (Sehling 24, p. 262):

> Cum in templis passim et ubique fabulosae imagines et similes picturae habeantur, quae ad cultum sunt praestitutae contra manifestum verbum Dei in veteri et novo testamento praescriptum, omnino, ut tollantur, necessum est, historiae vero sacrae et similes, quae docent et commonefaciunt de re gravi et seria, retineantur.

Seeing that in the churches here and everywhere fabulous images and like paintings are had, which are set up for worship against the manifest word of God prescribed in the Old and New Testament, it is altogether needful that they be taken away; but let sacred histories and the like, which teach and put in remembrance of a grave and serious matter, be retained.

14.4.3 New pictures

Kurland 1570. One order goes beyond tolerating old pictures and orders new ones. In Kurland the surplus altars and idolatrous images are to be cleared away, and in their place "other glorious histories out of the Old and New Testament, especially of the resurrection and of the Last Judgement", are to be painted "for the best of the poor non-Germans", that is, the native peasantry. Kurland, Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 98):

> Unsere kirchen sollen nebenst den kirchhöfen reinlich, ehrlich und zierlich zugerüstet sein und gebürlicher weise, wie in der reformation angezeigt, gehalten werden, und in den kirchen nicht mehr als ein altar, dafür das hochwirdige sacrament verreichet sein mus, die andern, so noch vorhanden, sollen weg gereumt und mit allen abgöttischen bilden abgethan, und dafür andere herliche historien aus dem alten und neuen testamente, sonderlich von der auferstehung und von dem jüngsten gericht, den armen undeutschen zum besten gemalet und christlich verordnet werden.

Our churches, together with the churchyards, shall be furnished cleanly, honestly and comely, and be kept in due manner, as is shown in the reformation; and in the churches [there shall be] not more than one altar, before which the most worthy sacrament must be ministered; the others, which are yet present, shall be cleared away and put away with all idolatrous images, and in their stead other glorious histories out of the Old and New Testament, especially of the resurrection and of the Last Judgement, shall be painted and ordained in Christian wise, for the best of the poor non-Germans.

14.4.4 The Reformed clearances

Ulm 1531 (Moderate Reformed). The Upper German and Reformed orders made no distinction between idols and histories. Ulm, under Bucer's hand, orders "such worshipped images" removed from all churches as soon as the people have been taught. Ulm, Kirchenordnung, 1531 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, p. 145):

> So wöllen wir, das sölche verehrte bilder auß allen kirchen und anndern ortten, so bald das volck durchs wort etwas der warheyt bericht würdt, durch yedes orts amptleut, denen wir des bevelch thon wöllen, hingethon werden

So will we that such worshipped images be put away out of all churches and other places, so soon as the people is somewhat informed of the truth through the word, by the officials of each place, to whom we will give command thereof.

The Heidelberg Catechism. The Palatine catechism of 1563 (Reformed) refuses Gregory's argument outright. Kurpfalz, Heidelberger Katechismus, Question 98, Kirchenordnung, 1563 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 362):

> [98.] Frag. Mögen aber nicht die bilder als der leyen bücher in den kirchen geduldet werden? Antwort. Nein, denn wir nicht sollen weiser sein denn Gott, welcher seine christenheyt nicht durch stumme götzen, sonder durch die lebendige predig seines worts wil underwiesen haben.

[98.] Question. But may not images be suffered in the churches as the laity's books? Answer. No; for we should not be wiser than God, who will not have his Christendom taught by dumb idols, but by the living preaching of his word.

Kurpfalz 1565 (Reformed). Two years later Frederick III ordered his officials to clear what remained: altars, Mount of Olives groups, crucifixes in church, in the street and before the church, sacrament houses, fonts and holy-water stoups. Kurpfalz, Befehl an die Amtleute, 3 October 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 429):

> so befinden wir noch teglich, das noch hien und wieder viel abgötterey uberig plieben, als nemlich altarien, ölberg, gotzenwerg, crucifix in der kirchen und uf den strassen, auch vor den kirchen, item sacramentheuslin, thaufstein, weichkessel und dergleichen götzenwergk mehr.

so we find still daily that yet here and there much idolatry is remaining, as namely altars, Mounts of Olives, idol-work, crucifixes in the church and on the streets, also before the churches, item sacrament houses, fonts, holy-water stoups, and more such idol-work.

The Reformed clearances that followed are quoted in §14.5.3: Nassau-Dillenburg's Siegen mandate of 1581 (images, panels, organs, altars and chalices), the Casimirian mandate of 1587 and Simmern 1598. Two Lutheran orders went the same way. The Sponheim Kirchen- und Zensurordnung of 1590/91 (Sehling 18, p. 653) orders "crucifix and other images which are still present" taken away, and the Lichtenberg instruction of 1579, in Lutheran Pfalz-Zweibrücken, does the same for crucifixes. Lichtenberg, Dienstanweisung für die Pfarrer, 1579 (Sehling 18, p. 379):

> 17.) Sollen auch die abgöttische Bilder, Crucifix, wo deren noch vorhandenn, vermög der visitation bevelch allenthalb mit Bescheidenheit hinweg geschafft werdenn.

17.) Shall also the idolatrous images, crucifixes, where such are still present, according to the command of the visitation, be everywhere put away with discretion.

The Lutheran reply. The Prussian order of 1568 answers the "wretched Calvinists and enthusiasts", who think a man cannot be evangelical unless he storms all paintings and tears down all images. Prussia, Kirchenordnung und Ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 73):

> Künden es derhalben auch mit den leidigen Calvinisten und schwermern nicht halten, welche sich dünken lassen, man künde nicht evangelisch sein, wenn man nicht alle gemelde stürmet, alle bilder darnieder reisst, alle ceremonien abthut, und grob, unbescheiden, ohne zucht und ordnung alles lest durcheinander gehen wie das unvernünftige vieh.

We can therefore also not hold with the wretched Calvinists and enthusiasts, which let themselves think that one cannot be evangelical unless one storm all paintings, tear down all images, put away all ceremonies, and let all things go rudely, indiscreetly, without discipline and order, one through another, like the unreasoning beast.

14.4.5 The crucifix

Kept and honoured. Hannover 1536 (§14.3.1) and Grubenhagen 1544 (§14.4.2) keep the crucifix by name. The Anhalt visitors of 1562 ordered pastors and churchwardens to keep altar and font clean, adorned with white linen cloths or tapestries, and to hold the Mass vestment and the crucifix "as a remembrance of the suffering of Christ" in comely state and honour. Anhalt, Kirchenordnung auf dem Lande, 22 July 1562 (Sehling 2, p. 562):

> Zum sechsten, haben wir auch allen pfarherrn und vorstehender bevohlen, das sie iren altar und tauf stetlich rein halden mit weissen leinen tuchern ader tapeten zieren, ir gemess gewand und was sonst zum gebrauch des heiligen mahls Christi gehort, desgleichen auch das crucifix, als ein erinnerung des leidens Christi, vor uns zur seligkeit geschehen, im zierlichen wesen und ehren halten sollen.

Sixthly, we have also commanded all pastors and wardens that they keep their altar and font continually clean, adorn [them] with white linen cloths or tapestries, [and] hold their Mass vestment and whatever else belongeth to the use of the holy supper of Christ, and likewise also the crucifix, as a remembrance of the suffering of Christ done for us unto salvation, in comely state and in honour.

At funerals. The Freiberg visitation of 1538 orders a crucifix carried before every funeral, "especially to the honour of the high and comforting article of the resurrection of the dead". Freiberg, Visitation Verordnung und Artikel, 1538 (Sehling 1, p. 468):

> 16. Das man auch hinfurt in alleweg zum begrebnus ein crucifix vortrage, sonderlich dem hohen und trostlichen artikel der auferstehung der toten zu eren.

16. That one henceforth in every case carry a crucifix before at burial, especially to the honour of the high and comforting article of the resurrection of the dead.

Wolfstein 1574 permits it as a witness "on whom the Christians die". Wolfstein, Christliche Instructio des Thomas Stieber, 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 586):

> Ein crucifix aber vorher zu tragen zum zeugnus, auf wen die christen sterben, nemlich auf den gecreuzigten Herrn Jesum Christum, das soll unverboten sein.

But to carry a crucifix before, for a witness on whom the Christians die, namely on the crucified Lord Jesus Christ, that shall be unforbidden.

The Nassau-Weilburg points of 1617, a Lutheran order, abolish the custom. Nassau-Weilburg, Erläuterungspunkte zur Kirchenordnung, 1617 (Sehling 10, p. 353):

> 2. Wo daß crucifix bißhero den leychen vorgetragen worden, soll es, wie in andern unsern graveunndt herrschafften mehrentheilß lengst gefallen undt verplieben, auch abgestellet werden.

2. Where the crucifix hath hitherto been carried before the corpses, it shall also be put down, as in our other counties and lordships for the most part it hath long since fallen and remained [fallen].

At the deathbed. Veit Dietrich's Nuremberg Agendbüchlein allows a crucifix at the bedside of the dying but points beyond it. Nuremberg, Agendbüchlein Veit Dietrichs, 1545 (Sehling 11, p. 522):

> Das man ein crucifix bei den sterbenden hat, ist an im selb nit bös. Aber wer den trost im wort hat, der hat das best crucifix, welchs nit allein die augen ansehen, sonder die ohren fassen und das herz in sich bilden kan

That one have a crucifix by the dying is not evil in itself. But whoso hath the comfort in the word, he hath the best crucifix, which not only the eyes can look upon, but the ears can grasp and the heart can image within itself.

On the oath table. In the Mansfeld consistory, oaths were sworn at a table covered with a black velvet pall bearing a white cross, with two great brass candlesticks and burning wax candles, a crucifix and the Bible. Mansfeld, Form und weise … mit den öffentlichen eidesleistungen, appended to the consistorial order, 1586 (Sehling 2, p. 214):

> 7. Wird der tisch gedecket mit einen schwarzen sambten leichtuch, welches ein weiss creuze hat. 8. Hinten auf den tische gegen dem hofefenster werden gesetzt zwene grosse messingene kirchenleuchter mit zweien brennenten wachs kerzen, ferner auf dem tisch ein crucifix und die bibel dabei gelegt.

7. The table is covered with a black velvet pall, which hath a white cross. 8. At the back upon the table, toward the court window, are set two great brass church candlesticks with two burning wax candles; further, upon the table a crucifix, and the Bible laid by it.

The form explains on the next page that the crucifix signifies Christ with the whole treasure of his merit, and the Bible all the promises of the gospel.

14.4.6 Banners, processional crosses and image plays

Banners (Fahnen), poles and processional crosses went with the processions they served. The Salza visitors of 1540 ordered the council to remove "all screens, candles, banners, idolatrous images and hindrances, and above all the altars save one" (Sehling 1, p. 654). Mecklenburg 1552 orders "the banners and crosses which one was wont to carry about in the papacy" taken out of the churches (Sehling 5, p. 220), and Grubenhagen 1544 lists "banners, poles" among the things to be removed (§14.4.2). Brunswick 1528 counts "lights, banners" among the needless splendour of baptism (Sehling 6/1, p. 356).

The image plays of the great feasts went with them. Hohenlohe 1553 abolishes the carrying about of the image of the risen Christ at Easter, its drawing up on Ascension Day, the letting down of the dove at Pentecost and the rocking of the Christ-child at Christmas (Sehling 15, p. 77; see Chapter 12, §12.10.10).

The rites of the feasts in which the image plays stood are treated in Chapter 13, §13.23.

14.5 The building and its furnishings

14.5.1 How many altars

Wittenberg 1522. The side altars served private Masses, and they went with them. The Wittenberg order of January 1522 is the earliest: images and altars are to be removed to avoid idolatry, "for three altars without images are enough". Wittenberg, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1522 (Sehling 1, p. 697):

> Item die bild und altarien in der kirchen söllen auch abgethon werden, damit abgötterei zu vermeiden, dann drei altaria on bild genug seind

Item, the images and altars in the church shall also be put away, that idolatry may be avoided, for three altars without images are enough.

One altar. Later orders keep a single altar for the Supper. Kurland 1570 allows "not more than one altar" (§14.4.3), and its sexton prepares only that altar, "since no other or more altars are to be used, much less to be permitted after popish custom" (Sehling 5, p. 87). Mecklenburg 1552 keeps the high altar alone (§14.4.2), and the Upper Palatinate instruction of 1557 orders "all altars save one, whereon one holdeth the Lord's Supper" taken away (Sehling 13, p. 297). Salza 1540 does the same (Sehling 1, p. 654).

Württemberg 1536. Where a church still had several altars, Württemberg let the minister choose the most convenient. Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 16, p. 107):

> ein solchen altar zu dem Nachtmal erwölen, der am allergelegnesten sein mag, da man am kommelichsten zu und von gehn und alle ding am deutlichsten hören möge, welcher altar auch mit brot und wein nach notturfft zugericht sein soll choose such an altar for the Supper as may be the most convenient of all, where one may go to and from most commodiously and hear all things most plainly; which altar also shall be furnished with bread and wine as need requireth.

Hermannstadt 1565. In Transylvania the danger ran the other way. The synod of 1565 forbids the altars to be destroyed, and where "turbulent men" have pulled them down, pastors are to see them restored without tumult. Hermannstadt, Synodalartikel, 1565 (Sehling 24, p. 293):

> Altaria nullo modo diruantur, sed, sicubi in nostris ecclesiis per homines turbulentos dirruta sunt, dent operam pii pastores, ut sine tumultibus restituantur. Et testimonia extant primitivae ecclesiae non in mensis ligneis, sed in altaribus administratam esse coenam Domini.

Let the altars in no wise be pulled down; but if anywhere in our churches they have been pulled down by turbulent men, let godly pastors take pains that they be restored without tumults. And testimonies of the primitive church are extant that the Lord's Supper was administered not on wooden tables but on altars.

14.5.2 Where the minister stands

Facing the people. Several Saxon visitations order the altars arranged so that the minister faces the people. Colditz, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 545):

> Zum zehenden das die altaria dermassen zugericht werden, domit der kirchendiner al sein kirchenampt gegen dem volk vorrichte

Tenthly, that the altars be so arranged, that the minister may perform all his church office toward the people.

Gotha, Artikel der Visitatoren, 1555 (Sehling 1, p. 569):

> Zum andern das die abgöttische papistische bilder, so biblischer historien nicht gemess, in der kirchen nicht geduldet, auch die altaria dermassen zugericht werden sollen, das die priester mit den angesichte kegen dem volk gekart ihr ampt vorrichten mogen

Secondly, that the idolatrous popish images which are not agreeable to biblical histories be not suffered in the church; also that the altars shall be so arranged, that the priests may perform their office with the face turned toward the people.

Not behind the table. "Facing the people" did not yet mean standing behind a freestanding table. That posture was associated with Karlstadt and Müntzer (Radical Reformation), and the Wittenberg theologians condemned it. The Wittenbergische Reformation of 1545 hopes for a uniform Mass "with standing before the altar, that there be not such disorder as in some places, that the priests stand behind the table" (Sehling 1, p. 214). The Allstedt visitation of 1533, in Müntzer's former parish, orders every pastor to celebrate "not behind the altar, as some have done from the time of Thomas Müntzer until now, but to stand before the altar", and not to turn to the people at the elevation (Sehling 1, p. 510).

Behind the table. At the end of the century the Reformed princes ordered exactly that. In Anhalt in 1596 Johann Georg ordered the ministers to lay aside lights, Mass vestments and chasubles, to step behind the table "be it of stone or of wood", face the people and break the bread; the village officers were to remove the panels from the altars and the carved crucifixes from the churches, and set up a table in place of the altar. Anhalt, Verordnung Johann Georgs, 3 November 1596 (Reformed; Sehling 2, p. 580):

> die lichter uf den altaren, mesgewant und caseln ablegen, bei administrirung und auspendunge des heiligen nachtmals des herren hinter dem dische (er sei steinern oder holzern) treten, das angesichte zu den volke kehren und geheiligete brot bei der austheilunge brechen und dem volke nach Christi wort und einsetzunge dasselbe geben solle, und das die schulzen und vorsteher die tafeln von dem altarn und die geschnitzte holzerne crucifix aus der kirchen hinweg thun, und anstatt des altars einen steinern oder holzern tisch

[that he] shall lay aside the lights upon the altars, Mass vestment and chasubles; at the administering and dealing out of the holy Supper of the Lord step behind the table (be it of stone or of wood), turn the face to the people, and break the hallowed bread at the distribution, and give the same to the people according to Christ's word and institution; and that the village headmen and wardens put away the panels from the altars and the carved wooden crucifixes out of the church, and in place of the altar a table of stone or of wood [set up].

Strasbourg 1537 (Moderate Reformed) had already set up an "altar-table" facing the people so that everyone might hear every word. Strasbourg, Agende, 1537 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 270):

> komet der pfarrer und gehet für den altartisch, so sie gegen dem volck, damit jederman alle wort vernemmen mög, haben lassen auffrichten, und fahet an das gemein ampt mit nachgenden worten

the pastor cometh and goeth before the altar-table, which they have caused to be set up toward the people, that every man may perceive all the words, and beginneth the common office with the following words.

14.5.3 Tables in place of altars

The Reformed princes replaced altars with tables outright. Simmern, Mandat zur Abschaffung der Bilder und Altäre, 2 October 1598 (Reformed, issued from Heidelberg after Simmern fell to the Electoral Palatinate; Sehling 19/2, p. 661):

> das in diesem gantzen ambt Simern allenthalben in den kirchen das gotzenwerck, altaria, tauffstein und dergleichen gentzlich abgeschafft unnd an der altarien statt gewonliche disch geordent werden sollen that in this whole district of Simmern, everywhere in the churches, the idol-work, altars, fonts and the like shall be wholly abolished, and in the altars' stead ordinary tables be ordained.

The Casimirian mandate for the Palatinate in 1587 (Reformed) is a list of such measures. Kurpfalz, Casimirianische Kirchenordnung, mandate, 1587 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, p. 757):

> 13. An stat altarien soll man hultzern tisch in der kirchen machen und setzen lassen. 14. Kein tauffstein soll in der kirchen geduldet werden. 15. An stat der kleinen runden hostien soll man breite kuchen oder weck in einer schußeln uff den tisch in der kirchen stellen

13. In place of altars one shall cause wooden tables to be made and set in the church. 14. No font shall be suffered in the church. 15. In place of the little round hosts one shall set broad cakes or loaves in a dish upon the table in the church.

The Siegen mandate of 1581 (Reformed) likewise orders "the actual abolition of the idols, panels, organs, altars, chalices, and the ordering in their stead in each place of a table and a beaker" (Sehling 10, p. 158).

Altar or table. The Lutheran order of Marienhafe in East Frisia (1593), surrounded by Reformed churches, uses both words: each church is to have its own table-cloth, chalice, dish and can, "to use cleanly upon the altar or table of the Lord". Marienhafe, Kirchenordnung, 1593 (Sehling 7/1, p. 710):

> Zum h. abentmall des Hern soll jede kirch eigen tischtug, kelch, schussel und kandel haben, aufen altar oder tisch des Hern fein sauber zu gebrauchen. Und sollens die communicanten kniend empfangen ahn einen ende des altars oder tisches das gesegentes [!] brot, ahm andren den kelch mit geburlicher reverenz und andacht.

For the holy Supper of the Lord each church shall have its own table-cloth, chalice, dish and can, to use finely and cleanly upon the altar or table of the Lord. And the communicants shall receive it kneeling: at one end of the altar or table the blessed bread, at the other the cup, with due reverence and devotion.

14.5.4 Lights

Two candles. The commonest Lutheran arrangement was two candles on the altar during the Supper. Allstedt 1533 orders "two burning lights during Mass" with alb and chasuble (§14.7.1), and the Calenberg synods of 1544/45 "two lights set upon the altar" (§14.7.1). Kurland 1570 has the sexton light both wax candles on the altar and a third on the pulpit, and forbids other lights by day. Kurland, Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 87):

> alsdenn bereitet der custos das altar, welchs allein zum gottesdienst und dem hochwirdigen sacrament verordnet, weil sonst keine andere oder mehr altare zugebrauchen, viel weniger nach papistischer gewonheit zuvergönnen, zündet auch an auf dem altar die beiden wachskerzen, wie in diesen landen allzeit gebreuchlich, desgleichen auf der canzel zündet er > an das dritte licht, sonst sollen keine andere lichte bei hellem tage von deutschen oder undeutschen ihrer abgöttischen gewonheit nach gebraucht oder gestattet then the sexton prepareth the altar, which is ordained only for the service of God and the most worthy sacrament, since no other or more altars are to be used, much less to be permitted after popish custom; he lighteth also upon the altar the two wax candles, as hath always been the use in these lands; likewise upon the pulpit he lighteth the third light; else shall no other lights in broad day be used or permitted, by Germans or non-Germans, after their idolatrous custom.

Lights at the Supper. The Hildesheim order of 1544 tells how an evangelical preacher, mocked for lighting candles on the altar in broad day, answered that Christ held his last supper at night in a hall full of lights. Hildesheim, Christlike kerckenordeninge, 1544 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 852):

> Ein evangelisch prediger wert spottisch gefraget: Worumme stecke gy lichte an up dem altare ym lichten dage, dar gy wol können ane lichte seen? De prediger vant balde ein gudt antwort unde sprack: Wy holden dar des Heren aventmal. Christus helt syn leste aventmal unde gaff dat sacramente yn der nacht, do he vorraden wart, dar weren vele lichte yn dem groten sale umme der düster nacht willen. So steke wy nu ock lichte an, nicht umme der nodt willen ym klaren dage, sunder to bedüdende unde to betekende, dat wy dar holden nicht eine middagesmaltidt edder etent, sunder datsülve aventetent

An evangelical preacher was asked in mockery: Wherefore light ye lights upon the altar in the light of day, when ye can well see without lights? The preacher found a good answer straightway and spake: We hold there the Lord's Supper. Christ held his last supper and gave the sacrament in the night in which he was betrayed; there were many lights in the great hall because of the dark night. So we also now light lights, not for need's sake in clear day, but to signify and betoken that we hold there not a midday meal or eating, but that same evening meal.

Wolfenbüttel 1569. The Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel order wants the altar adorned with clean cloths and lights burning "because this is also kept in the neighbouring reformed churches", the people being taught that it is a free thing without superstition. Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1569 (Sehling 6/1, p. 143):

> Es soll auch der altar mit reinen tüchern und andern ornatu gezieret und bekleidet sein, item liechte auf dem altar brennen, weil solches auch in den genachbarten reformierten kirchen gehalten, und kan gleichwoll das gemeine volk berichtet werden, das solchs nicht nothwendig, als das darin sonderlicher gottesdienst stünde oder die heiligung dieses sacraments daran gelegen, sonder wie ein frey mittelding ohne allen aberglauben gehalten werde.

The altar also shall be adorned and clothed with clean cloths and other ornaments; item, lights shall burn upon the altar, because the same is kept also in the neighbouring reformed churches; and yet the common people may be informed that such is not necessary, as though any special service of God stood therein or the hallowing of this sacrament lay thereon, but that it is kept as a free indifferent thing without all superstition.

Here "reformed" means the neighbouring evangelical churches, not the Calvinists. Ansbach 1548, an Interim order, wants the altar candles lit at the beginning of Mass and Vespers and not put out until the very end (Sehling 11, p. 327). Thüngen 1564 keeps them for peace (§14.3.3).

One lamp. The Palatine provisional order of 1546 (Lutheran; not an Interim order) reduces the lights to a single lamp and turns the cost of oil and wax to other uses. Kurpfalz, Gemaine maß, die kirchen- und gottesdinst anzurichten, 1546 (Sehling 14, p. 94):

> 7. Man soll nur ein ampel in der kirchen lassen, den uberigen kosten des oles und wachs abstellen, zu andern nötigen diensten der kirchen gebrauchen

7. One shall leave only one lamp in the church, [and] put down the remaining cost of oil and wax [and] use [it] for other needful services of the church.

Abolished. Regensburg dropped the lights with the Mass vestment (§14.7.3), and Anhalt in 1596 (Reformed) ordered them laid aside (§14.5.2).

Lights for the Supper, not for the feast. No order found varies the number of altar lights by the rank of a feast or by the season. Where the orders vary the lights, they vary them by whether the Supper is held. In the Prussian towns the lights are lit with the Mass vestment when there are communicants, and on other Sundays the minister wears only the surplice. Marggrabowa, Gottesdienstordnung, 1581 (Sehling 4, p. 149):

> In ceremonien soll er nichts neues anfangen und alle zeit, wenn communikanten vorhanden, das messgewand gebrauchen, die lichte aufm altar lassen anzünden und da keine communikanten vorhanden, den chorrock alle zeit auf die sontage gebrauchen.

In ceremonies he shall begin nothing new, and at all times, when communicants are present, use the Mass vestment [and] cause the lights upon the altar to be lit; and when no communicants are present, use the surplice at all times on the Sundays.

The Sensburg order of the same year has the same words (Sehling 4, p. 151). At Suhl in Henneberg, by contrast, the whole Sunday service with communion, two and a half hours of ringing, singing, reading, preaching and communion, was held without any lights. Suhl, Ordnung des predigamts und lektionen, 1562 (Sehling 2, p. 351):

> Dis alles geschicht ohn liechter, und wehret mit leuten, singen, lesen, predigt und communion bei dritthalber stund.

All this is done without lights, and lasteth, with ringing, singing, reading, sermon and communion, about two hours and a half.

The Gottorf visitors of 1587 still had to ask, parish by parish, whether the candles were lit or removed. Gottorf, Visitationsartikel, 1587 (Sehling 23, p. 371):

> 11. An Vestitus Ecclesiasticus tam lineus quam sericus in administratione Coenae sit usitatus an abolitus, cerei accensi an remoti.

11. Whether the church vesture, linen as well as silk, be in use at the administration of the Supper or abolished; [whether] the candles be lighted or removed.

Lights for the dark. Other lights were plainly practical. In the Neumark the guilds, which had burned candles every Sunday and feast day, were to give wax yearly instead, so that the church might have light "in the winter when the day is short". Neumark, Kasten-Ordnung, 1 March 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 32):

> Nachdem auch gross und klein gewercke zuvoren alle sontage und feiertage auf den kerzen lichte gebrandt, sollen die rähte gleichfalls mit den gewerken auf einige anzahl wachses jehrlich zu geben, handelen, damit des winters wenn der tag kurz ist, lichte zur notturft der kirchen möchte gehabt und gebraucht werden.

Whereas also the great and small crafts formerly burned lights on the candles every Sunday and feast day, the councils shall likewise treat with the crafts to give a certain quantity of wax yearly, that in winter, when the day is short, lights may be had and used for the need of the church.

The eternal light. The endowments for the perpetual lamp went into the common chest with the endowments for Masses and vigils. Württemberg, Kastenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 16, p. 96):

> Erstlich, von bestendigem und gewissem einkommen soll zusamen geschlagen unnd in ein Kasten eingezogen werden alles, was bißanher auff messen, vigilien, ewigen liecht, wachs und öl gewendt ist worden.

First, of steady and certain income there shall be put together and drawn into one chest all that hath hitherto been spent on Masses, vigils, the eternal light, wax and oil.

The Württemberg order of 1552 repeats the clause (Sehling 16, p. 202). The single lamp of Kurpfalz 1546, which the editor takes for the eternal light, is the only one found kept.

Blessed candles. The blessing of candles at Candlemas was abolished. Hesse, Homberger Kirchenordnung, 1526 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 49):

> Interdicimus autem in virtute omnipotentis Dei, ne quis in ipsis festis quicquam agat eorum, quae hactenus contra puritatem sermonum Dei introducta fuerunt, ut sunt benedictio candelarum in die praesentationis, et superstitiones, quae in diebus aliis praescriptis servabantur.

But we forbid in the power of almighty God that anyone do on these feasts any of those things which have hitherto been brought in against the purity of the words of God, as are the blessing of candles on the day of the Presentation, and the superstitions which were observed on the other days prescribed.

Brandenburg 1540 drops the blessing of "herbs, lights and other things" (Sehling 3, p. 88). Schweinfurt 1543 has the Candlemas preacher lead the people "from the folly and idolatry which they formerly had with the lights" to Christ, "the true, eternal light" (Sehling 11, p. 635). Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 forbids blessing the paschal candle (osterstock) with the Easter fire (§14.6.6), and the Lüneburg convent reform of 1555 stops the prioress's blessing of palms, Easter candles, water and fire. Lüneburg, Reformatio coenobiorum, 1555 (Sehling 6/1, p. 615):

> Weil dann die domina ein zeitlang die palm, osterkerzen, wasser und feuer geweihet hat und aber solchs ihr nicht geburet, dann es ohne das Gottes guthe creaturen sein und kein befelich in heiliger schrift darvon ist, sonder derselbigen mehr zuwider, so sol solchs furder underlassen werden.

Since then the prioress for a time hath hallowed the palms, Easter candles, water and fire, and yet such belongeth not to her, for they are without that God's good creatures, and there is no command thereof in holy Scripture, but rather it is contrary thereto, so shall the same henceforth be left off.

Tenebrae. The Holy Week Tenebrae survived in the Lutheran orders only as the responsory Tenebrae factae sunt, sung on Fridays or Good Friday, and in places as a Friday bell. No order keeps the hearse of candles put out one by one. Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 keeps the three Holy Week Matins "but without any knocking, rumbling and din" (Sehling 13, p. 95), the noise that ended the office in the dark.

14.5.5 The sacrament house

The evangelical orders gave communion at once and did not reserve the Sacrament, so the sacrament house lost its purpose. Hohenlohe 1553 forbids the Sacrament to be "kept, locked up or carried about" (Sehling 15, p. 77). Schönburg, Kirchen-Ordnung of Johann Pfeffinger, 18 October 1542 (Sehling 2, p. 175):

> 9. Sie sollen kein sacrament noch crysma oder dergl. in dem sacrament häuslein halten, noch brennende lampen dafür leiden.

9. They shall keep no sacrament nor chrism or the like in the sacrament house, nor suffer burning lamps before it.

Ambries. The Homberg synod (Moderate Reformed) forbids reservation in any form, "in ambries or little boxes". Hesse, Homberger Kirchenordnung, 1526 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 46):

> [27] Quia usus sanctae eucharistiae est perceptio eius, et communio fidelium in Christi commemorationem, nullibi a modo in armariis seu arcellis reservetur, nullaque ratione circumferatur. Haec namque figmenta hominum sunt, ideoque vitanda.

[27] Because the use of the holy eucharist is the receiving of it, and the communion of the faithful in remembrance of Christ, let it henceforth nowhere be reserved in ambries or little boxes, and by no means be carried about. For these are figments of men, and therefore to be shunned.

No order uses "tabernacle" (Tabernakel) for a furnishing. The word occurs only for the tabernacle of Israel and in the psalms.

Removal. The Pfalz-Neuburg visitation of 1560 counts sacrament houses and altars not used for communion among "idolatrous images", to be removed "with Christian discretion", as in the Upper Palatinate. Pfalz-Neuburg, Visitationsordnung, 1560 (Sehling 13, p. 135):

> So werden wir bericht, das noch abgöttische bilder als sacramentheuslein und altaria, so man nit zur communion gebraucht, in etlichen kirchen sein. Da sollen unsere visitatores uf mitl und weg denken, ob und wie solche bilder und anders, so zur abgötterei ursach geben kan, mit christlicher beschaidenhait abzuschaffen

So are we informed that idolatrous images, as sacrament houses and altars which are not used for the communion, are still in some churches. There shall our visitors think upon means and ways, whether and how such images and other things which can give cause for idolatry may be abolished with Christian discretion.

Nassau-Weilburg, Kirchenordnung, 1576 (Sehling 10, p. 310), joins them with the ossuary:

> 27. Hieher gehören auch die ubergebliebene Todtenbein [=Ossuarium] und genannte Heyligen- wie auch Sacramenthäußlin, die man gäntzlich soll abschaffen unnd die Todtenbeyn auff den Gottsacker in die Erde verscharren und begraben.

27. Hither belong also the remaining dead men's bones [= ossuary] and the so-called saints' and also sacrament houses, which one shall wholly abolish, and bury and inter the dead men's bones in the earth in the churchyard.

Magdeburg 1583 (§14.3.2) and Kurpfalz 1565 (Reformed; §14.4.4) name the sacrament house too.

14.5.6 The font

Kept. The Prussian order of 1525 baptizes in plain water "in the customary font, which may be renewed as often as is needful". Prussia, Artikel der ceremonien und anderer kirchen ordnung, 10 December 1525 (Sehling 4, p. 33):

> Die tauf sol gescheen in der kirchen wie vor, alleine in lauterem wasser, darzu im gewonlichen taufstein erhalten, welchs mag verneuet werden, so oft es von nöten ist, und bedarf nicht der osterlichen alten ceremonien, auch keines öls oder cresems

Baptism shall be done in the church as before, only in pure water, kept therefor in the customary font, which may be renewed as oft as it is needful; and it needeth not the old Easter ceremonies, nor any oil or chrism.

Moved to sight. Baptism was to be public, and the font was moved accordingly. Lüneburg 1564 sets the fonts "up before the choir and a step or two high". Lüneburg, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 6/1, p. 554):

> Derwegen ordenen und setzen wir, das in allen pfarren unsers fürstenthumbs die taufsteine, wo es nicht allbereit geschehen, oben vor dem chor und ein trit oder zween in die höhe gesetzet werden sollen

Therefore we ordain and appoint that in all parishes of our principality the fonts, where it hath not already been done, shall be set up before the choir, and a step or two on high.

Bentheim-Tecklenburg 1588 (Reformed) moves the fonts "out of the corners before the face of the church, as hath been done also in many reformed churches of the German nation". Bentheim-Tecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1588 (Reformed; Sehling 22, p. 268):

> Es sollen auch die Baptisteria oder Tauffsteine auß den Winckelen für das Angesicht der Kirchen geruckt werden, Wie dann auch in vielen reformirten Kirchen teutscher Nation beschehen

The baptisteries or fonts also shall be moved out of the corners before the face of the church, as hath been done also in many reformed churches of the German nation.

Adorned. Kaspar Löner at Nördlingen asks the council to rail the font about and adorn it. Nördlingen, Kirchenordnung Kaspar Löners, 1544 (Sehling 12, p. 314):

> Dazu ist auch mein bit, euere erbare weisheit wöllen den taufstein umbgittern und ziern lassen.

Thereto is also my request, that your honourable wisdom will cause the font to be railed about and adorned.

Kurland 1570 wants "a special, glorious font or font-vessel, with the needful two towels and cloths" (Sehling 5, p. 99).

Warm water. Bremen 1534 tells the sexton to provide warm water in a basin in frosty weather, so that baptism, given for salvation, does the child's body no harm. Bremen, Kirchenordnung, 1534 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 439):

> Im Wynter, wenn ydt gefraren ys, schal men dem köster anseggen, dat he warm water vorschaffe (nicht mit synem schaden unde nadeel) yn ein becken, dat de döpe, tho der salicheit gegeven, nicht dem kindeken am live schade

In winter, when it is frozen, one shall tell the sexton that he provide warm water (not to his own harm and hurt) in a basin, that the baptism, given for salvation, harm not the little child in its body.

Abolished. The Reformed orders removed the font altogether: Kurpfalz 1565 (§14.4.4), the Casimirian mandate of 1587 and Simmern 1598 (§14.5.3), all Reformed. The Lutheran Sponheim in 1607 complains that the "old, abolished fonts and corner-Mass altars" ordered removed still lie broken in some churches, "a great unseemliness" (Sehling 18, p. 669).

14.5.7 Pulpit, screens, pews, galleries and windows

The pulpit. The orders say little of the pulpit's form. It appears with altar and font as a thing to be covered (§14.6.1) and kept, and in Kurland it bears the third light (§14.5.4).

The choir screen. The Zweibrücken visitation of 1558 orders the screen in the nuns' choir "torn away", so that the preacher can see that they hear the sermon. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Visitationsordnung, 1558 (Sehling 18, p. 270):

> Mittler zeit aber, biß solche verenderung vorgenomen, sollen sy mit ernst angehallten werden, die predig Gottes worts zehörn, und darmit mann ihrer gewiß, das dieselbig von ihnen allen besuecht, soll ihnen das gitter uff dem Chor hinweg gerissen werden, das sy von einem prediger gesehen und sich nicht abziehen köndten.

But in the meantime, until such change be undertaken, they shall be earnestly held to hear the preaching of God's word; and that one may be sure of them, that the same be attended by all of them, the grating in the choir shall be torn away from them, that they may be seen by a preacher and could not withdraw themselves.

Salza 1540 removes "all screens" (gitter) with the side altars, and Grubenhagen 1544 lists schranken among the things to be cleared (§14.4.2).

Pews. By the later sixteenth century the nave was filling with pews, and the orders regulate them. Electoral Saxony in 1580 complains that pews built "here and there" block the view of the pulpit and of the altar at communion. Saxony, Ordnung Herzog Augusts, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 451):

> XXXVI. Von den stülen in der kirchen. Nach dem auch eine gemeine klage einkommen, das hin und wider in die kirchen stüle gebauet, dardurch die leute verhindert, das sie weder den prediger auf der canzel, noch zu dem altar, wenn das hochwirdige sacrament ausgeteilet wird, sehen können, desgleichen auch oftmals solche stüle in den gemeinen gengen aufgerichtet, das die leute für denselben nicht wol hin und wieder gehen können. Derwegen sol in den kirchen auf den dörfern und stedten hinfüro kein stuel ohne sonderlich vorwissen und erlaubnis des pfarrers und der kirchveter gebauet werden.

XXXVI. Of the pews in the church. Whereas also a common complaint hath come in, that here and there pews are built into the churches, whereby the people are hindered, that they can see neither the preacher in the pulpit nor [toward] the altar when the most worthy sacrament is dealt out; likewise also oftentimes such pews are set up in the common gangways, so that the people cannot well go to and fro before them: therefore in the churches in the villages and towns henceforth no pew shall be built without the special knowledge and leave of the pastor and the churchwardens.

No pew is to be hereditary; it is granted only for the holder's lifetime. At Hadersleben in 1571 Duke Johann ordered the old pews in the church torn out and new ones built, because a corpse could not be carried up the middle of the church and men and women stood mixed on both sides. Hadersleben, Mandat zu den Kirchenstühlen, 31 May 1571 (Sehling 23, p. 242):

> Nachdem unser thumbkirch zu Haderschleben mit stulen dermasen bebawet, das man mit keinem leich mitten in der kirchen khommen, sunder mit grosem beschwer dasselbe ander wegen umbher zu seiner legerstedte bringen mus, auch sunst diese unordenunge zubefinden, das mans und frawen personen uff beiden seiten durcheinander stehen

Whereas our cathedral church at Hadersleben is so built up with pews that one cannot come with any corpse up the middle of the church, but must bring the same with great trouble by other ways round about to its resting-place; also this disorder is found besides, that men and women persons stand one among another on both sides.

Thorn (1599) and Stargard (1596) have whole pew orders (Sehling 4, pp. 244, 520–521).

Galleries. The Wittenberg order of 1533 sends the schoolboys who cannot fit into the stall in the middle of the church up the tower stair to "the north gallery", to sing with those below and keep quiet. Wittenberg, Kirchen-Ordnung, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 704):

> mit den andern aber, die in den stuel nicht kommen mogen, soll ein schuldiener ordenlich in die thurmthur gehen und in aller stille auf die borkirchen gegen mitternacht steigen, aldo mit singen, was man darunten singt, auch vleissig aufsehen, > das die kinder stil sein, predig horen und nicht büberei treiben.

but with the others, which cannot come into the stall, a school servant shall go in order into the tower door and climb in all quietness up to the gallery toward midnight, there to sing with what is sung beneath, [and] also look diligently that the children be still, hear the sermon, and do no knavery.

Saxony 1580 forbids "levity and mischief with laughing, chattering or the like" on the galleries (Sehling 1, p. 440).

Windows. In the Neumark the craft guilds, which had once kept altars with their panels and candlesticks, were each to keep up one window in the parish church instead. Neumark, Kasten-Ordnung, 1 March 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 32):

> Die fenster. So dan von alters die werke in städten gemeiniglich sonderlich stiefft vorleichen gehabt dorzu sie einen altar mit tafeln leuchtern und andern altar geräthe haben erhalten müssen, sehen wir vor gut an, dos ein raht einer jeden stadt mit ihren werken handele, das sie dagegen ein jedes werk ein sonderliches fenster in der pfarrkirchen für und für erhalten

The windows. Whereas of old the crafts in towns commonly had special foundations granted to them, whereto they had to maintain an altar with panels, candlesticks and other altar-gear, we think it good that the council of each town treat with its crafts, that in return each craft maintain a particular window in the parish church for ever.

Salzwedel 1579 and other Brandenburg visitations order the council to make the guilds repair the windows they were wont to keep (Sehling 3, p. 285). Nothing is said of what the glass showed.

14.6 Paraments, linens and vessels

14.6.1 Covers for altar, pulpit and font

White linen. The orders seldom name individual paraments. What they ask for is that altar, pulpit and font be decently covered and clean. Anhalt 1562 wants altar and font "adorned with white linen cloths or tapestries" (§14.4.5), and Wolfenbüttel 1569 the altar "adorned and clothed with clean cloths and other ornaments" (§14.5.4).

Henneberg 1556. The Henneberg visitors at Römhild ordered fine covers made "from the ornaments", that is, from the old vestments, for altar, pulpit and font, with a funeral pall and a fine little cloth for the communicants. Henneberg, Abschied der Visitatoren für die Superintendenz zu Römhild, 20 December 1556 (Sehling 2, p. 328):

> Zum eilften in allen kirchen von ornat lassen schone deck machen umb den altar, predigstul, taufstein, leichtuch, ein schön tauftuchlin fur die communicantes

Eleventhly, in all churches to cause fine covers to be made from the ornaments, about the altar, pulpit, font; a pall; a fine little cloth for the communicants.

The Leiningen-Hardenburg visitation articles of 1609 ask the visitors to inquire whether "their altar, font, pulpit, desk, etc., are covered as is due". Leiningen-Hardenburg, Visitations- und Täuferordnung, 1609 (Sehling 19/1, p. 315):

> 42. Ob ihre altar, tauffstein, predigstul, pult etc. der gebühr bedeckt seyen?

42. Whether their altar, font, pulpit, desk, etc., be covered as is due?

The reading desk (Pult) appears here among the furnishings to be covered. No order names a lectern fall, superfrontal, dossal or runner.

Old vestments made into altar cloths. The Sponheim order of 1590/91, a Lutheran order, turns surplices and Mass vestments into altar cloths, and gives what is of little use to the poor. Hintere Grafschaft Sponheim, Kirchen- und Zensurordnung, 1590/91 (Sehling 18, p. 653):

> 15. Crucifix unnd anndere bilder, so noch vorhanndenn sein, soll mann hinweg thun unnd abschaffenn, Chorröck oder Chorhembder und Meßgewanndt sollenn zu altaar tucher zugericht werden, wo aber sie wenig nuz oder nicht zu gebrauchen, hatt mann es armen leuthen zu gebenn.

15. Crucifix and other images which are still present one shall put away and abolish; surplices or choir shirts and Mass vestments shall be made up into altar cloths; but where they are of little use or not to be used, one is to give it to poor folk.

14.6.2 Corporal and pall

Brandenburg 1540. The corporal and pall appear in the rite for the sick. The priest is to have a special chalice kept for the purpose, a corporal, the hosts in a case, a vessel for wine, "a special pall wherewith to cover the table further", a surplice and a light. Brandenburg, Kirchen-ordnung, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 80):

> Der priester aber sol ein sonderlichen kilch, darzu verordent, an eim bequemen ort haben, sampt einem corporal, und in einem futter die partes, darzu auch ein gefess zum wein, auch ein sonderlich palla, damit er den tisch ferner bedecken, item auch ein korrock und licht.

But the priest shall have a special chalice, ordained thereto, in a convenient place, together with a corporal, and in a case the particles, thereto also a vessel for the wine, also a special pall wherewith to cover the table further; item also a surplice and light.

No order in the corpus regulates the purificator, burse, chalice veil, lavabo or credence. The lavabo went with the offertory, which the evangelical orders dropped.

14.6.3 The communion cloth

Held by boys or men. Many Lutheran orders kept the cloth held under the communicants' chins, "to prevent mishap". At Hohenlohe two honest men go to the altar with a silk cloth and little kneeling benches. Hohenlohe, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 15, p. 71):

> Alsdann sollen zwen erbare menner mit einem seidenim duchlein und kleinen benklin, daruf die comunicanten niderknien, sich zum altar verfuegen

Then shall two honest men betake themselves to the altar with a silken little cloth and small benches, whereon the communicants kneel down.

At Regensburg under Justus Jonas the deacons hold it in surplices. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung unter Justus Jonas, 1553 (Sehling 13, p. 421):

> Der diaconus aber, so tercius ist, helt das tuechlein auf des priesters seiten, der den leib raicht. Derjenig aber, so quartus ist, helt das tuechle bei dem diacono, der das bluet raicht, in einem chorrock.

But the deacon who is third holdeth the little cloth on the side of the priest who reacheth the body. But he that is fourth holdeth the little cloth by the deacon who reacheth the blood, in a surplice.

At Speyer two boys hold the cloths "for the more reverence's sake". Speyer, Kirchenordnung, 1557 (Sehling 19/1, p. 92):

> dartzu zwen jungen, so die tuchlein umb meher reverentz willen halten, geprauchte werden sollen.

whereto two boys, which hold the little cloths for more reverence's sake, shall be used.

At Thorn boys stand on both sides of the altar with silk cloths, while the priests minister in chasuble and surplice. Thorn, Kirchenordnung, 1575 (Sehling 4, p. 237):

> Unter diesem stehen wie im ganzen amte die priester mit gewohnlichen kirchenkleidern, kasel und chorrock angethan und reichen dem volke das sacrament des leibes und blutes Jesu Christi, da auch zu beiden seiten des altars knaben stehen, die seidene tüchlein halten, unrath zuverhüten

Under this the priests stand, as in the whole office, clad in the customary church clothes, chasuble and surplice, and reach to the people the sacrament of the body and blood of Jesus Christ; where also on both sides of the altar boys stand, which hold silken little cloths, to prevent mishap.

Abolished. The Palatine Calvinists (Reformed) abolished the cloth with the surplice. Kurpfalz, Amberger Mandat, 20 January 1567 (Reformed; Sehling 13, p. 303):

> Zum andern, das das tuchlein, so man den comunicanten underhelt, abgeschafft werde.

Secondly, that the little cloth which is held under the communicants be abolished.

The Upper Palatinate visitation of 1579, a Lutheran order of Elector Ludwig VI, orders both things dropped; verbleiben here means "be left off", as the editor notes. Upper Palatinate, Visitationsordnung, 1579 (Sehling 13, p. 315):

> 3. Das der chorrock und die duchlein hinfort allerding verbleiben sollen, wie sich denn churf[ürstliche] pfalz uf etlicher entschuldigung des chorrocks halben expresse dahin erclert.

3. That the surplice and the little cloths shall henceforth be left off altogether, as the Electoral Palatinate hath expressly declared itself thereto upon the excuse of some touching the surplice.

When the parish of Sallern resisted, the elector ordered the abolition carried through, but only after the superintendent or pastor had preached to the people "de adiaphoris" (Sehling 13, p. 315). Nassau-Weilburg in 1617 abolishes the cloth "still held before the communicants in a few places". Nassau-Weilburg, Erläuterungspunkte zur Kirchenordnung, 1617 (Sehling 10, p. 351):

> 4. Wir seindt berichtet, das noch an etlichen wenig orten den communicanten ein tüchlein vorgehalten werde indem sie zue des herren disch gehen, daßelbige soll hiermit abgeschafft sein

4. We are informed that still in some few places a little cloth is held before the communicants as they go to the Lord's table; the same shall herewith be abolished.

14.6.4 The stock of vestments

Inventories. The first Saxon visitations dealt with paraments as property. At Schmiedeberg in 1528 two chalices and the three best Mass vestments are kept for the Mass; the albs are cut up for bed sheets in the hospital, and the rest sold for the common chest. Schmiedeberg, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1528 (Sehling 1, p. 664):

> Zwen kelch und drei messgewant die besten sollen zum gebrauch der messen behalten, was von alben ist zurschneiden in das hospital zur notturft der armen zu bettüchern gegeben, und die übrigen alben und kasslen verkauft, und das kaufgelt in den gemeinen kasten

Two chalices and three Mass vestments, the best, shall be kept for the use of the Mass; what there is of albs, cut up [and] given into the hospital for bed sheets for the need of the poor; and the remaining albs and chasubles sold, and the purchase money [put] into the common chest.

Zahna 1528 has the same provision (Sehling 1, p. 713).

No new purchases. The Homberg synod (Moderate Reformed) forbids any further outlay on altar paraments, chasubles, copes or mantles; what was spent on them is to go to the poor. A minister who has a chasuble may use it at the Supper or not. Hesse, Homberger Kirchenordnung, 1526 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 45):

> [22] Amodo nullae fiant impensae pro altariorum paramentis, casulis, cappis seu chlamidibus et similibus, sed magis dispensentur egenis, quae in his frustra consumi consueverunt. Nimirum qui se putat in his colere Deum, sine causa id facit, quod sint purae et vanae hominum traditiones. Liberum autem sit habenti casulam eadem in coenae dominicae ministerio uti vel non, tamen de caetero haud quaquam emantur

[22] From henceforth let no outlays be made for the paraments of altars, chasubles, copes or mantles and the like; but let that which was wont to be spent in vain on these be dispensed rather to the needy. Truly, he that thinketh to worship God in these doeth it without cause, for they are pure and vain traditions of men. But let it be free to him that hath a chasuble to use the same in the ministry of the Lord's Supper or not; yet for the rest let them by no means be bought.

14.6.5 Chalices and beakers

Two chalices. Kurland 1570 wants two chalices in every parish, "one for the healthy, the other for the sick" (Sehling 5, p. 99), and Brandenburg 1540 a separate chalice for the sick (§14.6.2).

Beakers. The Reformed replaced chalices with beakers. The Casimirian mandate of 1587 (Reformed) orders all but one of the chalices sent to the treasury and silver beakers used instead (Sehling 19/2, p. 757), and Siegen 1581 (Reformed) orders "a table and a beaker" (§14.5.3). At Zweibrücken in 1595, now Reformed, all chalices and patens were to be collected after Easter and handed to the goldsmiths to make beakers "for the more conformity with other reformed evangelical churches". Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Mandat zur Ablieferung der Vasa sacra, 7 April 1595 (Reformed; Sehling 18, p. 410):

> Nachdem auch ann statt der kelch, so mann bishero in administrirung des heilgen abentmals gebraucht, hinfüro umb mehrer gleichförmigkeit willen mit andern reformirten evangelischen Kirchen laut hiemit kommender ordnung silberne Becher gebraucht werden sollen, so ist hiemitt unser gnediger befelch, das ir den kirchenscheffner euers ahnbevolhenen ambts ufferleget, alle Kelch sambt den Patenen, sie seien waß materi, sie wöllen, zusammen zu bringen

Whereas also in stead of the chalices, which hitherto have been used in administering the holy Supper, henceforth, for the sake of more conformity with other reformed evangelical churches, according to the order herewith coming, silver beakers shall be used: so is herewith our gracious command, that ye lay upon the church steward of your committed district to bring together all chalices together with the patens, be they of what material they will.

14.6.6 Colours and the seasons

No sequence of colours. No order in the corpus prescribes liturgical colours, or a change of vestments or paraments by season or feast. The only accounts of the seasonal colour sequence are the editor's notes on the chasuble (for example Sehling 6/1, p. 424). Riga 1530 allows a cope or chasuble on the high feasts over the plain surplice, and Kurland 1570 "other silken vestments, chasubles, Mass vestment" on the high feasts "for a change" (§14.7.1). Neither says anything of colour.

Coloured vestments in use. Inventories show that coloured vestments remained in use and were even given new. The Mecklenburg visitors of 1578 found at Fürstenberg a red-and-green velvet chasuble that Duke Johann Albrecht had given that very summer, a red velvet chasuble, two red damask deacon's coats and two brass candlesticks on the altar. Mecklenburg, Ordnung der Visitatoren für Fürstenberg, 1578 (Sehling 5, p. 265):

> Inventarium. Drei silberne verguldete kilch. Zwei silberne verguldete patenen. Eine rote und grüne verteilte sampte kasell mit kleinen vergülten spengelin, das kreutz auf dem rugge mit der andern zugehorunge. Die hat M. G. F. und herr herr Johans Albrecht etc. diesen itzigen sommer zu Fürstenburgk in die kirche gegeben. Eine rote sammet kasell samt der zugehörunge. Noch zwei andere alte kaseln, die werden nicht gebraucht. Zwei rote dammaschen diakon röcke mit vergülten borten vorsetzet, und sunst das leinen wandt, das man notturftiglich zum altar gebraucht. Zwei misinsche leuchter auf dem altar.

Inventory. Three silver gilt chalices. Two silver gilt patens. A red and green parted velvet chasuble with small gilt clasps, the cross on the back, with the other appurtenances; the same hath my gracious prince and lord, lord Johann Albrecht, etc., given into the church at Fürstenberg this present summer. A red velvet chasuble together with its appurtenances. Two other old chasubles besides, which are not used. Two red damask deacon's coats set with gilt borders; and otherwise the linen cloth which is needfully used for the altar. Two brass candlesticks on the altar.

At Sorau in Lower Lusatia, the boys who held the communion cloths wore red choir smocks and green wreaths on their heads. The extract of the Sorau order of 1595 is known only from a chronicle of 1710, which lists it among customs "named therein and since fallen out of use". Sorau, Kirchenordnung, extract after J. S. Magnus, 1595 (Sehling 3, p. 372):

> 1. An hohen festtagen giengen alle personen, die in der kirche waren, männer und weiber, jung und alt zum opfer. 2. Nach geschehener consecration des brods und weins beim heil, abendmahl war die elevatio gebräuchlich. 3. Die knaben, so auf seiten des altars die tüchlein hielten, hatten rote chorkittel und grüne kränzlein auf ihren häuptern.

1. On high feast days all persons who were in the church, men and women, young and old, went to the offering. 2. After the consecration of the bread and wine was done at the holy Supper, the elevation was in use. 3. The boys who held the little cloths at the sides of the altar had red choir smocks and green garlands upon their heads.

The only other colours prescribed are those of mourning and penance: the black velvet pall with a white cross on the Mansfeld oath table (§14.4.5), and the black cloths hired out for funerals at Breslau in 1528 (Sehling 3, p. 399).

Veiling in Lent and Holy Week. The Lenten veiling of images is mentioned in only a handful of places in the corpus, and always in order to end it. Luther's Deutsche Messe rejects the Lenten veil ("hunger cloth") and the covering of images (§14.4.1). No order keeps either, and none prescribes veiling crosses or images in Passiontide.

The Mülhausen preachers' opinion on Holy Week of 1528 (Reformed) shows the other end of the veiling: the crucifix unveiled and shown at the Good Friday office. They ask that this "may well be left off, with some chants", together with the burial of the Lord in the sepulchre and the wooden clappers. Mülhausen, Gutachten zu den Gottesdiensten in der Karwoche, [1528] (Reformed; Sehling 20/2, p. 207):

> Des glichen die begrebniß des herrn yn das grab mitt andern brüchen abgestelt werde, ouch, das man nit mitt den hulzernen tafeln klöpfet, sunder wie andere mol mitt den gloggen zu den ämptern lüte. Man möcht auch wol das crucifix, so dann an dem selbigen tag in dem ampt zeigt wirdt, mitt etlichen gsangen underlassen.

Likewise that the burial of the Lord in the sepulchre, with other uses, be put down; also that one knock not with the wooden boards, but ring to the offices with the bells as at other times. One might also well leave off the crucifix which is shown on that same day in the office, with some chants.

The same opinion stops the washing of the altars in Holy Week, unless a man wishes to wash his own altar (Sehling 20/2, p. 206).

Veiled, but removed all the same. At Regensburg a carved Coronation of Mary on the high altar had been kept covered, apparently as a compromise. It was nonetheless taken away and replaced by a painted panel of the "sum of the evangelical preaching". Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, [1567] (Sehling 13, p. 481):

> Hernach ist gleicherweis die coronatio Mariae zur himmelkönigin auf dem hohen altar, wiewol verdeckt, dennoch hinweggereumt, dargegen aber anstat aufgericht ein gemalte tafel auf demselben altar, darin die summa der evangelischen predigten altes und neues testaments zu sehen.

Afterward the Coronation of Mary as Queen of Heaven on the high altar was likewise, although covered, nevertheless cleared away, and in its stead a painted panel set up upon the same altar, wherein the sum of the evangelical preaching of the Old and New Testament is to be seen.

Other Holy Week furnishings. The image plays of the church year went with the veils, as did the Easter sepulchre, the paschal candle and the blessings of the seasons. For the sepulchre and the Good Friday rite, see Chapter 13, §13.22.4. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 96):

> Dargegen sollen unterwegen bleiben erstlich alle spectacula und schauspil, so man mit bildern getriben hat als am Palmtag mit dem esel, am Karfreitag mit dem crucifix und grab, am Ostertag mit umbtragen des bilds der urstend Christi, am Auffartstag mit aufziehung desselben, am Pfingstag mit herablassen der tauben, am Christag mit dem kindlein wiegen und alles, was dergleichen allenthalben oder an etlichen fordern orten im brauch gewest ist. […] Man sol auch nicht mer weihen oder segnen weihwasser und salz, wie alle sonntag beschehen, noch wachs zu Lichtmeß [2. Februar] noch aeschen am Aschermitwoch noch palmen am palmtag noch osterstock noch tauf noch feur am osterabent

On the other hand there shall be left off, first, all spectacles and plays which have been practised with images: as on Palm Sunday with the ass, on Good Friday with the crucifix and the sepulchre, on Easter Day with carrying about the image of the resurrection of Christ, on Ascension Day with drawing up the same, on Whitsunday with letting down the dove, on Christmas Day with rocking the little child, and all that hath been in use of the like kind everywhere or in some places heretofore. […] Neither shall one any more hallow or bless holy water and salt, as was done every Sunday, nor wax at Candlemas [2 February], nor ashes on Ash Wednesday, nor palms on Palm Sunday, nor the paschal candle, nor the font, nor the fire on Easter Eve.

Hohenlohe 1553 repeats the list of image plays almost word for word (Sehling 15, p. 77).

Greenery and flowers. The orders treat seasonal greenery as folk custom, not as church furnishing. The Leiningen-Westerburg discipline order of 1566 forbids, among the "heathen" customs of Shrovetide and the year, setting up May branches, carrying banners and decking the church with flowers. Leiningen-Westerburg, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1566 (Sehling 19/1, p. 227):

> So dannoch der Haidnisch wandel getrieben und gehalten würt, nemlich mit pratten heischen, Butzen gehn, Lehen außruffen, Mayen stecken, Hagel baum brennen, Johans feuwer machen unnd drüber springen, auch andere Gottlose > narrenwerck, Fahnen tragen, Kirchen blümen unnd gegen dem Wetter leutten ubet, So wöllen Wir, daß solch ergerlich unnd unGöttlich wesen unnd werck abgeschafft

Whereas nevertheless heathenish conduct is practised and kept, namely with begging for roasts, going about in masks, crying out the "fiefs", setting up May branches, burning the hail-tree, making St John's fires and leaping over them, and other godless fool's-work, carrying banners, decking the church with flowers, and ringing against the weather: so will we that such offensive and ungodly conduct and work be abolished.

The Palatine mandates of 1562 (Reformed) likewise forbid the young men and maids to set up May branches (Sehling 14, pp. 272–273). The one approving mention is at Hof. On the anniversary of the 1572 dedication of St Michael's, the neighbours strewed the lane with grass and set up "fine May branches" on both sides for the procession, "to the honour of God and his church" (Sehling 11, p. 467; see Chapter 13, §13.14.3).

Not found. No order mentions an Advent wreath, a Christmas tree, a crib set up in church (only the rocking of the Christ-child, abolished), or Easter flowers. The Advent wreath and the church Christmas tree belong to later centuries.

14.6.7 The paten, the host box and the bread dish

The searches. The corpus was searched for the paten (Patene, Paten, patena, patina, pateen; 140 passages once the many godparents, also Paten, were set aside). It was also searched for the vessels beside it: the box for the hosts (Büchse, Lade, Schachtel, Kapsel, pyxis, ciborium) and the Reformed dish or plate (Schüssel, Teller, Platte).

An ordinary vessel, kept. The Lutheran orders kept the paten as they kept the chalice, as a plain instrument of the Supper. Hannover (1536): "We use the customary vessels for the administration of the holy sacraments: chalice, paten, etc. For what Scripture doth not forbid, that we will not let be forbidden us" (Sehling 6/2, p. 1005). The paten was set out on the altar with the other things:

- Regensburg (1542): the epistoler "setteth the chalice, book, particles and paten on the altar" (Sehling 13, p. 391).
- Regensburg (1567): the priest and the secundus carry chalice and paten out of the sacristy, and the secundus unwraps them and makes them ready on the altar (Sehling 13, p. 462).
- Ritzebüttel (1556): the priest stands at the altar in the customary Mass vestment, with "paten, chalice, bread and wine and burning wax lights" set on it (Sehling 5, p. 558).
- Gottleuba (1567): "in the office they use lighted candles on the altar, chalice, paten, Mass vestment and all other ornaments" (Sehling 1, p. 567).
- Danzig (1557): the sexton is to watch "so long as the book, the can, the chalice and the paten stand on the altar", that no harm or theft befall them (Sehling 4, p. 214).
- Strasbourg (1598): a box with the particles, a can of wine, the chalice and the paten are set on the altar at the beginning of the service (Sehling 20/1, p. 611).

In the hand at the Words of Institution. The commonest rubric puts the paten, with as many hosts as there are communicants, into the minister's hand while he says or sings the words over the bread. Kurpfalz, Gemaine maß, 1546 (Sehling 14, p. 97):

> Und wann er uf diese wort khompt: name er das brot, so nymbt er die paten, daruf die hostia alle liegen, sovil der communicanten, die sich dann zuvor angezeigt, absolvirt und zugelassen sein, in die hende und, wann die verba consecrationis vollendet sein, legt ers wider von sich. Deßgleichen thut er auch nachvolgents mit dem kelch

And when he cometh to these words, "he took the bread", he taketh the paten, on which lie all the hosts, as many as there are communicants who have announced themselves beforehand, been absolved and admitted, into his hands; and when the words of consecration are finished, he layeth it away from him again. Likewise doth he afterwards also with the chalice.

The same rubric appears in many orders:

- Livonia (1533): the priest takes "the bread upon the paten into his hand", turns about over the altar toward the people, and speaks the words aloud (Sehling 5, p. 16).
- Mecklenburg (1540/1545): after the Lord's Prayer he "taketh the paten with the bread into his hand" and sings the Verba, turned toward the altar (Sehling 5, p. 154).

- The Cellische Ordnungen (1545): the priest lays "as many particles as belong to the communicants" in the paten, turns with it toward the people, and says the Verba in German (Sehling 1, p. 301).
- Danzig (1557): he takes "the paten with the appointed host into his hand without all papistical crossing and other gestures" (Sehling 4, p. 168).
- Neuenrade (1564): "he taketh the paten with the bread and turneth to the people" (Sehling 22, p. 519).
- Schwarzburg (1574): "he taketh the paten of the bread, wherein are as many particles as there are communicants" (Sehling 2, p. 133).
- Henneberg (1582): the minister shall "always have the paten with the particles in his hand" when he says "This is my body" (Sehling 2, p. 309).

The number of hosts on the paten was counted to the number of communicants. The Palatinate (Reformed) wants nothing left over to be reserved (above). Württemberg in 1562 found the minister in some places repeating the Verba "when there is no more bread and wine on the paten and in the chalice", and in others not (Sehling 16, p. 436).

Held under the chin. At the sick communion of Brandenburg (1540) "the priest shall also specially hold the paten cleanly under" as he gives the host (Sehling 3, p. 80). Pfalz-Neuburg (1543) adds "that nothing fall" (Sehling 13, p. 88). The Palatine sick order of 1556 dropped the instruction (editors' note, Sehling 14, p. 111). In the Mass the same office passed to the communion cloth held by two men or boys (§14.6.3).

Shown, and then not shown. The paten could be shown to the people with the chalice. Havelberg (1558) insists that the elevation of the sacrament remain, "much less shall the paten be elevated in the stead of the chalice" (Sehling 3, p. 230). Hohenlohe abolished the showing in 1596. Hohenlohe, Verbesserungen der Kirchenzeremonien, 1596 (Sehling 15, p. 659):

> Also auch die monstration belangend patinae et calicis under der recitation verborum coenae achten wir auch, dieweyl brott und wein in der handlung des abendmalls ohne das auf dem altar offentlich aufgestelt sind, das derowegen solche monstratio panis et vmi (weyl es unsere gnedige herrschaft je also haben will) soll eingestelt werden

So also concerning the showing of the paten and the chalice during the recitation of the words of the Supper, we also judge, since bread and wine in the action of the Supper are in any case set out openly on the altar, that therefore such showing of bread and wine (since our gracious lordship will have it so) shall be given up.

Nassau-Weilburg's explanations of 1617 likewise call it "unnecessary that the minister, while he speaketh the words of institution of the holy Supper, layeth hold of the paten and the chalice severally", and order it stopped (Sehling 10, p. 351). At Hof, before Pangratius's time, the deacon of the week broke his large host, "left a particle lying in the paten after the old catholic custom", and after communion dropped it into the chalice (Sehling 11, p. 453).

In the inventories. Patens were counted with the chalices:

- Potsdam (1541): "2 patens" beside five chalices; at the chapel of St Gertrude "the patens and vestments are burnt" (Sehling 3, pp. 259–260);
- Oschatz (1555): "8 chalices with their patens" (Sehling 1, p. 628);
- Fürstenberg in Mecklenburg (1578): "two silver gilt patens" (Sehling 5, p. 265; §14.6.6).

The Merseburg visitors of 1544 asked what the church had "in store in patens, monstrances, chalices and other silver" (Sehling 2, p. 12). Other orders charge the church officers with the patens and other treasures:

- the Altermann of Ermsleben (1564) hands over "the treasures of chalices, patens, albs, chasubles" to his successors (Sehling 2, p. 488);
- Pfalz-Neuburg (1576) orders the church doors and windows barred "with strong grilles and iron bolts" for the sake of the "chalices, patens and other" treasures (Sehling 13, p. 207);
- the Sponheim visitation order of 1590/91 lists, among the things each church must have, "a chalice and a paten for the communion; a capsule or box for the wafers or hosts; a pewter can, or where needful two, for the wine" (Sehling 18, p. 655).

The host box. The particles were kept in a box (Lade, Schachtel, Kapsel): Sponheim and Strasbourg (above; both Lutheran). The ciborium for reservation went with the monstrance: Pomerania 1535 needs no ciborium (Sehling 4, p. 342), and Teschen 1584 names "the shutting of the sacrament into the ciborium" among idolatrous ceremonies (Sehling 3, p. 461). Reservation is treated in §14.5.5.

The Reformed dish. The Reformed gave up the paten with the chalice:

- Pfalz-Zweibrücken (1595, Reformed): all chalices and patens were to be collected and made into beakers (§14.6.5).
- Ysenburg-Birstein (1598, Reformed): the ministers are not to use "consecrated chalices, patens and altars", but ordinary bread, broken and given into the hands, and "a clean drinking vessel" for the wine (Sehling 10, p. 645).
- Wittgenstein (1605, Reformed): the Mass vestments, patens and chalices are to be sold to advantage and a beaker bought for each place (Sehling 22, p. 149).
- The dish. In its place the bread was carried in a dish (Schüssel). Micron's London order (Reformed), printed with the Emden orders, passes the dishes with the bread among those sitting at the table (editors' comparison of the Supper forms, Sehling 7/1, p. 576). The Lutheran Marienhafe order of 1593 also names "table cloth, chalice, dish and can" for the Supper (Sehling 7/1, p. 710).

Not found. No order regulates the paten's material or size, or the veil and burse that go with it. None mentions the paten's use at the offertory, or the minister's wiping of it.

14.7 Vestments

14.7.1 The Mass vestment kept

Allstedt 1533. In Electoral Saxony the Lutheran visitors restored the Mass vestment where radicals had dropped it. At Allstedt, where Müntzer (Radical Reformation) had celebrated in a surplice or in ordinary clothes, pastors are to wear alb and chasuble "as is now done at Allstedt and also at Wittenberg", with two burning lights. These ceremonies serve good discipline and do no harm. Allstedt, Ordnung der Visitatoren, 1533 (Sehling 1, p. 510):

> So auch etzliche bisanher ohne alben und casulen in einem korock, auch etzliche in schlechten kleidern mes gehalten, sollen sie furthin alben und casulen, wie itz zu Alstedt auch zu Wittenberg und anderswo gehalten wird, auch gebrauchen, darzu zwei brennende licht unter messen auch haben, dann diese ceremonien, welche zu ordnung guter zucht, dienen und unschedlich sein

Since also some until now have held Mass without albs and chasubles in a surplice, and some also in plain clothes, they shall henceforth also use albs and chasubles, as is now kept at Allstedt and also at Wittenberg and elsewhere, [and] have also two burning lights during Mass besides; for these ceremonies, which serve for the order of good discipline and are harmless …

Leisnig 1529. At Leisnig, where for six years the pastors had consecrated "without surplice and Mass vestment, simply in the coat", every pastor in the whole district is to use the Mass vestment whenever he consecrates, conforming to Torgau and Wittenberg. Leisnig, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 605):

> die pfarrer und jenigen, so dem volk das sacrament geraicht, ane korrock und messgewand siecht im rock consecrirt, ist ernstlich bevolen, das forthin alle pfarrer nicht allein zu Leisnik sunder im ganzen kreis messgewand und andere unschedliche cerimonien, so oft sie consecriren, brauchen, und allenthalben nach dem buchlen der visitator, auch dem angefangnem brauch der kirchen zu Torgau und Wittemberg sich gleichformig machen sollen.

[whereas] the pastors and those who have reached the sacrament to the people have consecrated without surplice and Mass vestment, simply in the coat, it is earnestly commanded that henceforth all pastors, not only at Leisnig but in the whole district, use the Mass vestment and other harmless ceremonies as oft as they consecrate, and everywhere conform themselves to the booklet of the visitors and to the begun use of the churches at Torgau and Wittenberg.

Calenberg 1544/45. The Calenberg synods order the chasuble and two lights and abolish the elevation, for uniformity and "for the simple and weak's sake". Calenberg-Göttingen, Synodalkonstitutionen, 1544/1545 (Sehling 6/2, p. 868):

> setzen demnach und ordenen, das die celebratio coenae dominicae nicht anders, dann in der ordenunge vermeldet, gehalten, die elevatio gar abgeschafft, die mesgewender oder casel angezogen und 2 liechte auf den altar gesetzt werden sollen, nicht, das an solchen ceremonien etwas sonderlichs gelegen sey, sonder das wir gerne eine gleicheit und ehrbarkeit umb der einfeltigen und schwachen willen

[we] appoint therefore and ordain that the celebration of the Lord's Supper be held no otherwise than is set forth in the order; the elevation wholly abolished; the Mass vestments or chasuble put on; and two lights set upon the altar: not that anything special lieth on such ceremonies, but that we would gladly [have] a uniformity and seemliness for the simple and weak's sake.

Wolfenbüttel 1569. The Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel order requires the ministers, when there are communicants, to come to the altar "not only in their customary clothes" but in their church ornaments. Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1569 (Sehling 6/1, p. 143):

> pastores und kirchendiener, so messe halten wöllen, wenn communicanten vorhanden sein, nicht bloß mit ihren gewönlichen kleidern, sondern in ihrem ornatu ecclesiastico, als alben, caseln und meßgewand fein ehrlich und mit grosser andacht und anruffung des Sons Gottes vor den altar tretten und das officium missae anfahen, halten und verrichten.

pastors and ministers who will hold Mass, when communicants are present, [shall] step before the altar not merely in their customary clothes but in their church ornaments, as albs, chasubles and Mass vestment, finely and honestly and with great devotion and calling upon the Son of God, and begin, hold and perform the office of the Mass.

Grubenhagen 1544. Grubenhagen orders alb and chasuble and lights at the Sacrament, "to the honour of the sacrament", and the surplice for all other offices in church. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1032):

> III. Vom kleyde und lichtern, die man zum sacrament gebrauchen sol. Und in solcher administrirung der heiligen sacramenta solen die pfarhern dem sacrament zu ehren alven und kassel anziehen und licht auf dem altar brennen, auch in deutsche sprache die episteln und evangelia mit einem gewonlichen accentu singen, aber ausserhalbe dem ampte in der kirchen sollen der pfarher und opperman ihre korrock anhaben und gebrauchen.

III. Of the clothing and lights which one shall use for the sacrament. And in such administering of the holy sacraments the pastors shall, to the honour of the sacrament, put on alb and chasuble and [have] lights burn upon the altar, and also sing the epistles and gospels in the German language with a customary accent; but outside the office in the church the pastor and the sexton shall have on and use their surplices.

Thorn 1575 has the priests minister "in the customary church clothes, chasuble and surplice" (§14.6.3), and Thüngen 1564 keeps the Mass vestment for peace (§14.3.3). Hildesheim 1544 keeps vestments and lights but leaves stole and maniple free (§14.3.3).

Riga 1530. The Riga order makes the variation itself a lesson in freedom: a plain surplice on Sundays, a cope or chasuble over it on high feasts, since there are still plenty of them, "that one may see that neither this nor that is needful". Riga, Kirchenordnung, 1530 (Sehling 5, p. 17):

> Auf die fest aber, mag er ein chorkappe oder casel (die weil ihr noch genug verhanden ist, und doch sonst, wiewol sie viel gelt gekost haben, da verterben) schlecht über das röckel ziehen, auf das durch solche stete verwandlung und enderung die freiheit solcher eusserlichen ding, destebas vermerckt werd, auf das man sehe, das wider dis noch jens nötig sei, und das eben so wenig an schwarze oder blaue röckel, als wenig als an chorröckel oder chormentel oder casel, die freiheit des evangeliums gebunden

But on the feasts he may simply draw a cope or chasuble over the little surplice (since there are still enough of them, and otherwise, though they have cost much money, they spoil there), that by such constant change and alteration the freedom of such outward things may be the better perceived; that one may see that neither this nor that is needful, and that the freedom of the gospel is bound as little to black or blue coats as to surplices or copes or chasubles.

Kurland 1570. Kurland follows Riga: a white linen garment or surplice at the altar, any festal vestment allowed on high feasts, none in the pulpit. Kurland, Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 99):

> demnach sollen die priester nach altem, löblichen, gebliebenem gebrauch dieser kirchen für dem altar, wenn sie des sontags oder zu andern zeiten die communion halten, in einem weissen, leinen kleide oder chor röcklein verkleidet, dem altar dienen [...] Wenn man aber auf die obnangezeigten hohen festen zur verendrung andere seitgewant, caseln, mesgewand, priesterliche kleidung und dergleichen wil für dem altar gebrauchen, ist auch niemands verboten. Auf der canzel aber sol man keine verkleidung, darum das es in diesen landen nach der Rijgischen kirchenordnung ungewöntlich, gebrauchen.

therefore the priests, according to the old, laudable, remaining use of this church, shall serve the altar before the altar, when they hold the communion on Sunday or at other times, clad in a white linen garment or little surplice [...] But if on the aforesaid high feasts one will use before the altar, for a change, other silken vestments, chasubles, Mass vestment, priestly clothing and the like, it is also forbidden to no one. But in the pulpit one shall use no vesting, because it is unaccustomed in these lands according to the Riga church order.

14.7.2 The cope when there is no communion

Where there were no communicants, several orders forbade the chasuble, so that the people should not think the private Mass had returned. The minister wore a cope or a surplice instead. Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 77):

> so sol der priester nit in gewonlichem meßgewand, sonder in einem chormantel oder nur in seinem chorrock für den altar treten und es aller ding halten, wie oben gesetzt ist then the priest shall step before the altar not in the customary Mass vestment, but in a cope or only in his surplice, and keep all things as is set above.

Brandenburg, Kirchen-ordnung, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 71):

> Es sollen auch, wenn solche empter gehalten werden, die priester kein casula, sondern allein ein korkappen oder auf den dörfern, do die korkappen nicht weren, ein schlechten korrock anhaben, damit das einfeltig volk nicht auf voriger meinung bleib oder geleitet werde, als wolt man die mess nach voriger weiss mit der communion on communicanten widerum anheben und halten

The priests also, when such offices are held, shall have on no chasuble, but only a cope, or in the villages, where there were no copes, a plain surplice; that the simple people abide not in, nor be led into, the former opinion, as though one would begin and hold again the Mass after the former manner, with the communion without communicants.

Schwäbisch Hall 1527. Brenz allows the deacon a cope at the common prayer, so that church vesture be not wholly rejected, but not a Mass vestment, "for it is neither a man's nor a woman's clothing". Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1527 (Sehling 17/1, p. 50):

> Und das die kirchencleydung nit gar verworffen werde, mocht der diaconus, so sich bezimen wolt, des gebets ernst und herlichait zuerzaigen, ain Cormantel anlegen, wie bißhieher zu vesper und metten gewont war, aber nit ein meßgewandt, dan es kein mans noch weybs claidung ist, sonder zu gar nerrisch anzusehen vor der gemeinen versamlung.

And that church vesture be not wholly rejected, the deacon, if it would beseem him to show forth the earnestness and majesty of the prayer, might put on a cope, as hitherto was the custom at Vespers and Matins; but not a Mass vestment, for it is neither a man's nor a woman's clothing, but altogether too foolish to look upon before the common assembly.

14.7.3 Vestments abolished

Dalmatic and tunicle. The Homberg synod of 1526 (Moderate Reformed) forbids the vestments of deacons and subdeacons outright, since it will not favour orders without warrant in God's word. Hesse, Homberger Kirchenordnung, 1526 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 46):

> [24] Dalmaticas, hoc est papisticorum diaconorum vestes aut subdiaconorum nemo de caetero induat. Nolumus enim favere ordinibus illis sine Dei eloquiorum testimoniis

[24] Dalmatics, that is, the vestments of the papistical deacons or subdeacons, let no one put on henceforth. For we will not favour those orders without the testimonies of the oracles of God.

Regensburg 1554. The fullest statement of reasons in the corpus is Regensburg's, written by Nikolaus Gallus to be read from the pulpit, on why the "Levite and Mass vestments" are to go. First, both come from the Levitical priesthood and the papal Mass. Regensburg, Warum die leviten- und meßgewand sollen abgetan werden, 29 April 1554 (Sehling 13, p. 432):

> Ein ehrbar rat hat sampt uns dienern des worts für gut angesehen, das die leviten- und meßgewand bei der communion in unser christlichen kirchen alhie wie bei vielen andern hinfort genzlich abgetan sein sollen. Dasselbig aus > nachvolgenden ursachen: Erstlich, das beide stück (wie zum teil die namen noch anzeigen) vom levitischen priestertum des alten testaments und von des bapsts messe in unser kirchen kommen und ihre bedeutung auf den zukünftigen Christum gehabt haben.

An honourable council together with us ministers of the word hath thought good that the Levite and Mass vestments at the communion in our Christian church here, as with many others, shall henceforth be wholly put away. The same for the following causes: First, that both pieces (as the names in part still show) have come into our church from the Levitical priesthood of the Old Testament and from the pope's Mass, and have had their signification upon the Christ to come.

Second, the pope still requires them as necessary. Third, they hinder the simple and make it look as if there were little difference between the papal and the evangelical service. Anyone still offended after so many years of teaching "is hardly any more to be counted among the weak". The surplice stays, but only as a mark of the minister. Regensburg, Warum die leviten- und meßgewand sollen abgetan werden, 29 April 1554 (Sehling 13, p. 433):

> Doch lassen wir leviten- und meßgewand also fallen, das wir noch zur zeit den chorrock lassen bleiben, wie wir ihn bisher haben behalten aus freiem willen weder umb des bapstes oder interims willen noch, das er ichts zum gottesdienst nötig sein sölte, sondern allein zu unterscheid der diener, dieweil sie da im ampt stehen und zwischen der andern gemeine

Yet we let the Levite and Mass vestments so fall, that we still for the time let the surplice remain, as we have kept it hitherto of free will, neither for the pope's nor for the Interim's sake, nor that it should be anything needful to the service of God, but only for a difference of the ministers, while they stand there in office, and the rest of the congregation.

The Regensburg order of [1567] repeats the reasons and adds the stole and the lights. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, [1567] (Sehling 13, p. 480):

> Demnach haben wir auch die kirchenkleidung, als meßgewand, stolen, leviten usw. gleich wie auch die liechter, so von anfang der reinen lere gleichwol lange zeit in unser pfarrhe mit gehalten worden, entlich sampt den obgemelten, etlichen feiertägen lassen fallen aus ursachen, das die ding aus dem alten testament von dem levitischen priestertum, so sein ende hat, mit unverstand sind in das neue testament eingefürt und in eitel bapstisch abgötterei gewendet.

Accordingly we have also at last let fall the church vesture, as Mass vestment, stoles, Levite [vestments], etc., even as also the lights, which nevertheless from the beginning of the pure doctrine were kept a long time in our parish, together with some of the aforesaid feast days, for the causes that these things were brought without understanding out of the Old Testament, from the Levitical priesthood, which hath its end, into the New Testament, and turned into mere popish idolatry.

Transylvania 1557. The Hermannstadt synod holds that burning candles, infulae and ornaments, though indifferent in themselves, have ceased to be indifferent because so many churches have cast them out as popish dregs. They are to be laid aside in time, once the people are taught. A seemly white linen garment without images may serve instead. Hermannstadt, Synodalbeschlüsse, 1557 (Sehling 24, p. 262):

> Incensio candelarum, infulae et ornatus, etiam si res mediae sint et per se neque prosint neque obsint, tamen cum plurimae ecclesiae eas ut feces Papisticas abiecerint et nunc sine scandalo retineri non possint ac in numero rerum mediarum propter hoc accidens esse desierint, successu temporis, ubi populus edoctus fuerit, verum usum sacramenti non in ista specie externa et fulgente consistere [...] abiici debent. Cum autem sine aliquo decoro speciali haec actio sacra et gravissima peragi non possit, linea veste alba decente, carente idolis id fieri potest, ut ex primitivae ecclesiae testimonio manifestum est.

The burning of candles, infulae and ornaments, even if they be indifferent things and of themselves neither profit nor hurt, yet since very many churches have cast them away as popish dregs, and they cannot now be retained without offence, and by this accident have ceased to be in the number of indifferent things, ought to be cast away in course of time, when the people shall have been taught that the true use of the sacrament consisteth not in that outward and shining show [...]. But since this sacred and most weighty action cannot be performed without some special seemliness, it may be done in a seemly white linen garment, void of images, as is manifest from the testimony of the primitive church.

Infula here most likely means the chasuble, as in other Transylvanian and Hungarian usage, not the mitre.

Others. The Sayn synod of 1575 drops the Mass vestment and keeps the surplice (Sehling 19/1, p. 356). Anhalt 1596 (Reformed) orders "Mass vestment and chasubles" laid aside (§14.5.2), and the Lutheran Sponheim 1590/91 turns them into altar cloths (§14.6.1).

14.7.4 The surplice

The minimum. Where nothing else survived, the surplice (Chorrock) usually did. It is the vestment most often named in the corpus, and the reasons given for it are always the same: to distinguish the minister in office from the congregation, and to keep the service seemly. Duke Albrecht's Prussian ordinance of 1543 forbids any pastor to preach, baptize or give the sacraments without at least a white surplice. Prussia, Befehl, 1 February 1543 (Sehling 4, p. 60):

> kein predig thun, taufen oder sacramenta reichen, es sei dann, sie haben zum wenigsten einen weissen chorrock an, domit dannoch hierinnen auch eusserlich ein weltlicher unterscheid zwischen dem diener des worts, wann er in seinem ambt ist, und einem andern, der nicht darzu berufen, zu sehen.

[shall] do no preaching, baptizing or reaching of sacraments, unless they have on at the least a white surplice, that so herein also outwardly a worldly difference may be seen between the minister of the word, when he is in his office, and another who is not called thereto.

Hesse 1532 (Moderate Reformed). The Hessian order uses the surplice "for the people's sake", to revive a reverence "almost wholly extinguished". Hesse, Ordenung der Christlichen kirchen, 1532 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 76):

> und, wen es versamlet ist, ists umb des volks willen fur geschickt angesehen (ut vel sic quodam modo plebis reverentiam pene prorsus extinctam alamus), einen chorock zu brauchen and, when it is assembled, it is thought fit for the people's sake (that even so we may in some manner nourish the reverence of the common people, almost wholly extinguished) to use a surplice.

Württemberg 1535. The preface to the Württemberg order of 1535 grants that clothing makes no man godly or ungodly, but rules the surplice in for all church offices. It is "not the least outward ornament of the church" that the minister be known by an honest, distinct garment. Many weak believers had been put off the gospel by seeing ministers stand "in a stumpy little coat". Württemberg, Vorrede zur Kirchenordnung, 1535 (Sehling 16, p. 133):

> Von der klaidung im kirchenampt. Die kleidung macht an ir selbs weder frum noch unfrum unnd wurdt under die freyen stuck gezelet. […] so soll fürohin alwegen in den kirchen emptern der Chorrock gebraucht werden. Dan dieweyll alles in der kirchen zierlich und ordenlich zu ghen soll, so ist es nicht die geringst eusserlich kirchen zier, das der jenig, so im brauch des kirchenampts vor der gemeinen kirchen versamblung stheet, bey einem erbarn underschidlichen claid erkennet werde. Darzu ists offenbar, das vill schwach glaubige on andere ursach, auch von wegen diser ursach, das sie den kirchendienern on biß anher gewonliche kirchen cleidern allein in einem stumpfen rocklin in den emptern sehen sthen, ein mercklich abscheuhen von der predig des hailgen evangelium, auch von brauch der sacramenten uber komen.

Of the clothing in the church office. Clothing of itself maketh neither godly nor ungodly, and is reckoned among the free things. […] so shall henceforth the surplice be used always in the church offices. For since all things in the church should go comely and in order, it is not the least outward ornament of the church that he who standeth before the common assembly of the church in the exercise of the church office be known by an honest, distinct garment. Moreover it is manifest that many weak in faith, for no other cause but this cause also, that they see the ministers standing in the offices without the hitherto customary church clothes, only in a stumpy little coat, have gotten a notable abhorrence of the preaching of the holy gospel and also of the use of the sacraments.

The great Württemberg order of 1553 confirms it "until our further decision". Württemberg, Kirchenordnung, 1553 (Sehling 16, p. 266):

> So mögen wir leiden, das die kirchendiener in allen ämptern, so sie in der kirchen verrichten sollen, den gwonlichen Chorrock biß auff ferner unsern bescheid gebrauchen und sonst auch in allweg sich einer ehrlichen, gebürlichen kleidung fleissigen, damit nicht allein ir wort und predig, sonder auch ir kleidung, weiß und geberde ein leer der tugendt seien.

So may we suffer that the ministers in all offices which they are to perform in the church use the customary surplice until our further decision, and otherwise also in every way study an honest, seemly clothing, that not only their word and preaching but also their clothing, manner and bearing may be a teaching of virtue.

The Cellische Ordnungen 1545. The Albertine Saxon ordinances of 1545 make it a rule of clerical discipline. Albertine Saxony, Die Cellischen Ordnungen, 1545 (Sehling 1, p. 302):

> 2. In ubunge gotlicher ampter in der kirchen söllen die priester allewege ein chorrock anhaben, dan es sol in der kirchen decenter venuste et honeste zugehen.

2. In the exercise of divine offices in the church the priests shall always have on a surplice, for in the church things shall go decently, comely and honestly.

Wittgenstein 1563. Wittgenstein leaves the old vestments free but keeps the surplice "with one accord", since a minister should be somewhat distinguished from others in his clothing. Wittgenstein, Kirchenordnung, 1563 (Sehling 22, p. 97):

> Dieweil es aber gleichwoll billich und ehrlich ist, das ein kirchendiener sein ampt züchtig vor der gemeine verrichte und in der kleidung von andern etwas underschieden werde, soll man den chorrock darzu eintrechtiglich erhalten und brauchen. Und sollen die pastores sampt den kirchenmeistern versehung thun, das die gebreuchliche kirchen ornamenta bestellet und sauber gehalten werden.

But since it is nevertheless meet and honest that a minister perform his office modestly before the congregation and be somewhat distinguished from others in his clothing, one shall keep and use the surplice thereto with one accord. And the pastors together with the churchwardens shall take order that the customary church ornaments be provided and kept clean.

Anhalt 1568. In Anhalt the surplice is worn at all three Sunday sermons and may be left off on weekdays. Anhalt, Abschied of Prince Bernhard, 1568 (Sehling 2, p. 570):

> desgleichen soll des sontags zu allen dreien predigten der chorrock gebraucht, die wochen uber auch nachgelassen werden.

likewise the surplice shall be used on Sunday at all three sermons, and over the week also be let go.

Limited. In Ernestine Saxony after 1554 the surplice was dropped in the pulpit but kept at the altar. Ernestine Saxony, Instruction of the dukes, 1554 (Sehling 1, p. 224):

> idoch solle der chorock auf der canzel zugebrauchen in alwege und an allen orten durchaus abgeschaft, aber von dem altar unter der sacrament raichung nochglassen werden yet the use of the surplice in the pulpit shall be abolished in every way and in all places throughout, but at the altar during the reaching of the sacrament be permitted.

Coburg in the same year limits it to the communion, worn only by the one who celebrates. Coburg, Vorschaffung, 1554 (Sehling 1, p. 544):

> Zum sechsten der chorock sol wider zu den begrebnussen noch auf der canzel noch sonsten in andern kirchenampten, sondern allain zur communion von der ainigen person welche das ampt heldet, gebraucht werden.

Sixthly, the surplice shall be used neither at burials nor in the pulpit nor otherwise in other church offices, but only at the communion, by the one person who holdeth the office.

Abolished. The Palatine Calvinists abolished the surplice with the communion cloth at Amberg in 1567 (Reformed), and the Lutheran Upper Palatine visitation of 1579 dropped both again under Ludwig VI (§14.6.3). The Sayn consistory did the same in 1582, in the same protocol that orders the remaining images removed (Sehling 19/1, p. 377).

The black gown. The Wild- und Rheingrafschaft order of 1603 is the only order found that prescribes a black gown. Each minister is to have a black church gown with sleeves made "at the first opportunity" and wear it in his office. White surplices are to be kept where they are in use, without superstition, and not abolished without the count's knowledge. Wild- und Rheingrafschaft, Kirchenordnung, 1603 (Sehling 19/2, p. 630):

> Beßonders aber wollen wir, daß jeder unßerer kirchendiener erster gelegenheit nach ihme ein schwartzen kirchenrock mit ermeln zeuge und in verrichtunge seines ampts anziehe. Waß aber die weiße chorröck anlangett, wo dieselbige in unßern kirchen in usurpantz und gebräuchlich sein, da soll man solche ohn superstition oder aberglauben behalten und ohn unßer vorwißen nit abschaffen.

But especially we will that each of our ministers at the first opportunity get himself a black church gown with sleeves, and put it on in the performing of his office. But as for the white surplices, where the same are in practice and use in our churches, there shall one keep them without superstition or superstitious belief, and not abolish them without our knowledge.

14.7.5 What the orders do not mention

The orders never mention the amice, cincture, maniple (except to leave it free at Hildesheim), tunicle (except under "Levite vestments"), humeral veil, rochet, biretta, zucchetto, galero, pallium, rationale, episcopal gloves, tippet or hood, nor any preaching bands. No evangelical order provides a mitre or crosier, and none prescribes liturgical colours (§14.6.6). See §14.2.3.

14.8 Clerical dress outside the service

Long priestly coats. The orders want the minister to be recognisable in the street as well as in church. Grubenhagen 1544 adds to its rule on vestments (§14.7.1) that pastors are otherwise to go in long priestly coats. Grubenhagen, Kirchenordnung, 1544 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1032):

> Sonsten sollen sie in zimlichen, ehrlichen, langen pristerlichen rocken oder kleydungen ghan und nicht hertretten wie landsknechte und andere wilde junge leute.

Otherwise they shall go in seemly, honest, long priestly coats or clothing, and not stride along like soldiers and other wild young people.

The Albertine ordinances of 1545 give the same rule more fully. Albertine Saxony, Die Cellischen Ordnungen, 1545 (Sehling 1, p. 302):

> 1. Die priester söllen eherliche lange cleider tragen, nicht also verkürzt und verstummelt, wie die leichtfertigen leute einher gehen, auch nicht zur schnitten ader bunte kleider tragen und in götlichen ampten keine ausgeschnittene schue tragen, die do ergerlich seind.

1. The priests shall wear honest long clothes, not so shortened and docked as the light-minded folk go about, nor wear slashed or coloured clothes, and in divine offices wear no cut-out shoes, which are offensive.

To be known. Regensburg [1567], which kept the surplice so that ministers in office might be known, adds that "outside the office also they should have their honest, priestly clothing for distinction's sake". Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, [1567] (Sehling 13, p. 481):

> auch darumb, das die kirchendiener, wenn sie in ihrem ampt sind, in und für der andern gemein dester mehr erkent werden, wie sie sonst auch außer dem ampt unterscheids halben ihre ehrliche, priesterliche kleidung haben söllen.

also for this cause, that the ministers, when they are in their office, may be the more known in and before the rest of the congregation, as they should also otherwise, outside the office, have their honest, priestly clothing for distinction's sake.

The Wild- und Rheingrafschaft order of 1603, which introduced the black gown (§14.7.4), says the same. Wild- und Rheingrafschaft, Kirchenordnung, 1603 (Sehling 19/2, p. 630):

> Dann obwohl die kleidung in der kirchen, auch außerhalb derselben, keinen menschen weder heiliger noch unheiliger machen, jedoch weil alles ehrlich unndt zierlich zugehen soll, demnach wollen wir, daß unßere kirchendiener in undt außer ihrem ampt sich also mit kleidung tragen, daß dem ansehen deß ministerii und kirchendieners, so viel möglich, nichts benohmen werde.

For although clothing in the church, and also outside it, maketh no man either holier or unholier, yet because all things should go honestly and comely, therefore we will that our ministers, in and outside their office, so bear themselves in clothing that nothing be taken from the dignity of the ministry and of the minister, so far as is possible.

Württemberg 1553 asks the same "honest, seemly clothing", so that the ministers' dress, manner and bearing may be "a teaching of virtue" (§14.7.4). Riga 1530 reminds them that the gospel is not bound to "black or blue coats" any more than to surplices (§14.7.1).

Related. Freiberg 1537 abolishes "wearing tonsures [and] cowls" among the merely human ordinances, and Brunswick 1528 wants no tonsure and no special coat for deacons (see Chapter 16, §16.3.3).

The conduct required of ministers and their households is treated in Chapter 15, §15.3.3.

14.9 Table by order

Key.

- The orders are listed by date.
- "—" means that nothing on the point was found in the passages examined. It does not mean that the order forbids it.
- Each cell reports only what the order itself says. The § column gives the sections of this chapter where the evidence is quoted or cited.

Chapter 15. Ecclesiastical Duties

This chapter sets out what the evangelical church orders of the sixteenth century, printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts, required of each estate in the church. It asks:

- Clergy. What were pastors and deacons, superintendents, members and presidents of consistories, and professors of theology expected or required to do?
- Training. How were ministers trained: school, university and stipend, practice preaching, examination, a probationary period, and continuing study after ordination?
- Laity. What did the orders require of ordinary church members: attendance, prayer at home, confession and communion? Were sextons, schoolmasters and other church workers held to a higher standard?
- Schoolmasters. What were their church duties?
- The magistrate. What were the prince's and the council's duties towards the church?
- Catechesis. How often was the catechism taught, and for how long? What did it require? Was first communion separate from confirmation, and did each require instruction? Did any order give communion to infants? Was there catechesis or counselling before marriage?

How the chapter is laid out.

- §15.1 answers each question in brief, and §15.2 sets out the scope, the sources and the negative findings.
- §§15.3–15.6 cover the clergy:
  - §15.3, pastors and deacons;
  - §15.4, superintendents and deans;
  - §15.5, consistories, their presidents and members;
  - §15.6, professors of theology.
- §15.7 covers the training of ministers.
- §15.8 covers the laity and the church workers.
- §15.9 covers schoolmasters, and §15.10 the magistrate.
- §15.11 covers catechesis, where all the estates meet: its frequency and length, first communion, confirmation, instruction before marriage, and infant communion.
- §15.12 is a table by order, and §15.13 a concordance of every order quoted.

15.1 Summary of findings

1. Pastors: preach, administer, catechize, visit, study, and live as an example (§15.3). The visitation questions sum up the office: preaching, the sacraments, the catechism, weddings, and visiting the sick and sorrowful (Strasbourg 1598). The pastor's other duties:

- study a set list of books: the Bible, Luther's postil, Melanchthon's Loci and the Augsburg Confession, with copies bought for every parish (Saxony 1557; Hoya 1581);
- marry, keep out of taverns and trade, and bring up wife, children and servants as a model household, which the visitors inspected;
- reside, never leaving the parish overnight without leave and a substitute (Hoya 1581);

- keep registers of baptisms, marriages and burials from mid-century (Saxony 1580).

The deacons had the catechism and the sick as their particular charges, "readier to serve the poor herein than the rich" (Saxony 1555).

2. Superintendents: visit, hold synod, examine, report (§15.4). The Saxon pattern of 1555–1557 gives the superintendent four tasks:

- to watch over the doctrine, life and diligence of the pastors;
- to visit unannounced, hearing sermons and examining the youth;
- to hold a synod every year between Easter and Whitsun;
- to examine and install new pastors, and send to the consistory what he cannot mend.

By 1600 the superintendent was sworn to the confessional corpus and acted as the consistory's agent (Grubenhagen). In Transylvania the chapters elected their own deans (Lasseln 1572).

3. Consistories: theologians and jurists; the president disputed (§15.5). The consistory judged marriage cases, church discipline "so far as the degrees of admonition" go, the affairs of ministers, and church property (Saxony 1580). The orders differed over who should preside:

- the prince in person (Weimar 1561);
- the superintendent (Jena 1569);
- a nobleman (Dresden 1580);
- a lay councillor, so that the clergy should not seem to "lay hold on the worldly sword … like the Pope" (Regensburg 1588).

The consistories met weekly and were sworn to secrecy.

4. Professors: no seminaries (§15.6). No order founds a seminary. Professors of theology appear in the orders as members of consistories, as examiners and ordainers (Wittenberg, Leipzig, Marburg, Helmstedt), as overseers of the stipendiaries, and as public lecturers.

5. Training: stipend, practice sermon, examination, probation, synod (§15.7). There was no vicarage year, but training had parts that did similar work:

- stipends for poor students, bound to serve the territory;
- the Tübingen Stipendium (1559), where masters preached in the house and were corrected "in inventione, dispositione oder pronunciatione" the same day;
- practice sermons in the parish with the pastor's leave (Saxony 1555);
- examination and a trial sermon before ordination, and if needed some weeks of instruction at Wittenberg or Marburg;
- a probation as deacon before a parish, with a re-examination (Palatinate 1564, Reformed), and the new deacons' sermon outlines sent in for criticism after a year (Palatinate 1607, Reformed).

After ordination the synods set reading "that the priests may be moved the more diligently to read and the sooner to buy books" (Nassau 1552). The Reformed monthly convents criticized each member's sermon and disputed theological questions (Palatinate 1571, Reformed).

6. Laity: attend, pray at home, commune, be examined (§15.8). Every householder had to bring children and servants to sermon and catechism. Absentees were counted house by house and fined (Nassau-Weilburg 1576). The legal minimum for communion was once or twice a year (Hohenlohe 1588), with Luther's "once or four times" as the ideal. Parents were to teach the catechism at home, and the youth to pray "morning and evening, also before and after meals and at their work" (Dillenburg 1582).

7. Church workers: a higher standard (§15.8.4). Sextons, schoolmasters and organists were held to the conduct required of ministers: "like other ministers of the church, of honest and godly conduct, no drunkards" (Hesse 1566, Moderate Reformed). They were barred from taverns (Hoya 1581) and questioned at visitation about their own communion. The minister's wife, children and servants were inspected with him.

8. Schoolmasters: the catechism as primer (§15.9). The schoolmaster taught the catechism, used it as the reading book, led the boys to sermon and catechism, led the singing, and was visited four times a year by the pastor (Esslingen 1534, Moderate Reformed; Saxony 1555, 1580). In the towns schoolmistresses brought the girls (Palatinate 1595, Reformed).

9. The magistrate: keeper of both tables (§15.10). The Lutheran magistrate was to "uphold both tables of the Ten Commandments … in maintaining outward discipline" (Mecklenburg 1552). He was the "defender and nourisher" of churches and schools (Transylvania 1572). In practice he:

- ordered visitation;
- appointed and paid ministers;
- enforced attendance;
- punished what the church could only admonish;
- in the Palatinate (1599, 1608, Reformed), refused citizenship and marriage to those who did not know the catechism.

The Reformed limited his office to "the body and temporal goods" (Hanau 1609, Reformed).

10. Catechesis: how often, how long, and what it required (§15.11).

- Rhythm: a weekly Sunday catechism of about half an hour, quarterly fortnight-long series (Saxon visitations 1529), a yearly examination in Lent, and house-by-house examinations.
- Requirement: the text of the five or six chief parts by heart, and enough understanding to "pray and give a fair account of the chief articles" (Saxony 1555).
- Before first communion: at Hohenlohe (1578), children of about twelve were taught "every day for an hour" from Invocavit to Palm Sunday.

11. First communion and confirmation: usually one act (§15.11.3). Where the orders have confirmation, the children are "confirmed and admitted to communion for the first time" together (Hesse 1566, Moderate Reformed). One course of instruction served both. Mansfeld (1580) examined them publicly the day before, monthly. Lauenburg (1585) confirmed twice a year, and Hessen-Kassel (1610, Reformed) heard them again after six months. Where there was no rite, as in Electoral Saxony, examination alone admitted to communion.

12. Infant communion: acknowledged as ancient, set aside (§15.11.6). No order gives the Supper to infants or argues for it. Four orders name the practice:

- Hesse (1566, Moderate Reformed) and Hohenlohe (1578) grant that infants communed in the time of Cyprian and Augustine, but defer the Supper because of 1 Corinthians 11:28 and "the common judgment of the first church". Hesse leaves the old custom "in its worth".
- Oldenburg (1573) says that infants cannot examine themselves or discern the Lord's body.
- The Reformed preacher at Markirch (1561) calls it an error of the ancients, who thought that the uncommunicated were lost.

Children who died before first communion were buried like adults (Regensburg 1572/1588; Henneberg 1582). A dying child who knew the catechism might commune before confirmation (Nassau-Dillenburg 1575, Philippist).

13. Before marriage: examination, not counselling (§§15.11.4–15.11.5). From the 1560s many orders refused to proclaim or marry young people who did not know the catechism (Saxony 1580; Hesse 1566, Moderate Reformed; Pfalz-Veldenz 1574), "since they are to keep house and get children and servants". Some married them on a pledge, backed if need be by sureties, to attend the catechism afterwards (Wied 1616, Reformed). There was no counselling course. What the orders required was:

- an interview some weeks before, on freedom to marry, parents' consent and the catechism (Limpurg 1610: three weeks);
- confession and communion before the wedding (Schwäbisch Hall 1615; Freudenthal 1592);
- the public exhortation and wedding sermon on the duties of marriage.

15.2 Scope, sources and method

15.2.1 Sources and searches

The chapter draws on the full text of the Sehling edition in `eko.db`: the church orders, consistorial and visitation orders, synodal decrees, school and stipend ordinances, and visitation protocols printed with them. The corpus was searched for the vocabulary of each question, in High and Low German and Latin spellings:

- Offices: Pfarrer, Diaconus, Kaplan, Superintendent, Superattendent, Inspector, Decanus, Consistorium, Präsident, Director, Professor, facultas theologica.
- Training: Stipendium, Stipendiat, Alumnus, Probpredigt, examen, ordinandus, Synodus, Convent, censura, studieren, Bücher.
- Laity: Hausvater, Gesinde, daheim, Kirchgang, Strafe, Küster, Opfermann, Schulmeister, Schulfrau.
- Magistrate: Obrigkeit, custos utriusque tabulae, beide Tafeln.
- Catechesis: Katechismus, Kinderlehre, Verhör, Examen, zum ersten Mal with Sakrament or Nachtmal, confirmieren, and Katechismus within a short distance of Braut, Eheleute, copulieren, aufbieten or Hochzeit.
- Infant communion: kinder, kindlein, unmündig, infantes, parvuli and pueri within a short distance of Nachtmal, Abendmahl, Sakrament, coena or communio; prüfe sich selbst and probet se ipsum near Kinder; Cyprian, Augustin and alte Kirche near Kinder; Böhmen, Picarden and Hussiten.

Each hit was read in its context. Pages were checked against Sehling's running heads, which often correct the database's record headings. Among the corrections:

- the Mansfeld agenda quoted is of 1580, though its record is dated 1562;
- the Schwäbisch Hall passages on marriage belong to the revision of 1615, not the order of 1543;
- the consistory order of 1608 is Ysenburg-Birstein's (Reformed), and the deacons' rule of 1550 is Breslau's;
- the Palatine passages (Reformed) on probation and convents are from the Kirchenratsordnung of 1564 and Wenzel Zuleger's report of 1571, though their record is dated 1585.

15.2.2 What was not found

- No seminary. No order founds an institution for training ministers apart from the universities, the stipend houses and the Latin and cloister schools. The word seminarium occurs only in the old sense of a "nursery" of church and state.
- No vicarage year. No order prescribes a fixed period of practical training under a pastor before ordination. The nearest equivalents are practice preaching (§15.7.2), the probation as deacon (§15.7.4), and Wittenberg's "some weeks" of instruction (§15.7.3).
- No continuing-education requirement in hours or courses. Continuing study was enforced through synods, convents, assigned reading and visitation questions (§15.7.5).
- No premarital counselling course. Instruction before marriage meant an examination in the catechism and in the freedom to marry, and often confession and communion. The teaching on marriage itself was given publicly in the wedding exhortation and sermon (§15.11.5).
- No paedocommunion. No order gives the Supper to infants or defends the practice, and none mentions the Bohemian communion of infants. The orders that name it treat it as an ancient custom now set aside (§15.11.6).
- No separate confirmation course. Where confirmation existed it coincided with first communion, and one instruction served both (§15.11.3).
- No prayer rule for lay church workers. The lay offices had duties of conduct and attendance, not of prayer. The daily office bound schools and convents, not sextons (§15.8.4).

15.3 Pastors and deacons

15.3.1 The office in a list

The visitation questions. The orders rarely define the pastor's office in the abstract. They list what the visitors are to ask about, and those lists are the best summary of what was expected. Strasbourg's order of 1598 puts the whole office in one sentence and then turns to the minister's life and household. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 1598 (Sehling 20/1, p. 689):

> Soll derwegen bei der Kirchen Visitation gehandelt werden: 1. Von der Kirchendiener (es seie deren an jedem Orth einer oder mehr) offentlichem Ampt und Befelch, Ob sie denselben mit gebürendem Fleiß und Trew verrichten, Als mit Predigen, Sacramenta reichen, Catechismum halten, Hochzeiten einsegnen und Krancke und Betrübte besuchen und trösten und anderm dergleichen, 2. Von ihrem, der Kirchendiener, Leben und Wandel, Auch von ihrer Haußhaltung, Weib, Kinder und Gesinde, Therefore at the visitation of the church there shall be dealt with: 1. The public office and charge of the ministers of the church (whether there be one or more of them in each place), whether they perform the same with due diligence and faithfulness, as with preaching, giving the sacraments, holding the catechism, blessing weddings, and visiting and comforting the sick and the sorrowful, and other such things; 2. Their life and conduct, the ministers', and also their housekeeping, wife, children and servants.

The same headings recur everywhere: preaching (Chapter 11), the sacraments and the occasional rites (Chapter 13), the catechism (§15.11 below), the sick, and the minister's own life. The daily office laid no breviary obligation on the parish pastor (Chapter 10, §10.6.5).

15.3.2 Study and the pastor's books

A reading list. The Saxon General Articles of 1557 name the books every pastor must read: the Bible, Luther's postil, Melanchthon's Loci, and the Augsburg Confession with its Saxon Repetition of 1551. The elector had a copy of the confessions printed for every parish, to stay in the church's inventory. Electoral Saxony, General-Artikel und gemeiner Bericht, 1557 (Sehling 1, p. 322):

> Sie sollen ihr weib und kind zur zucht und erbarkeit ziehen, aller unehrlichen hantierungen, auch wein - oder bierschenkens, kaufmanschaft und dergleichen hendel sich enthalten, auf der canzel die leute ex affectu nicht schmehen, ires studii und ambts warten, und sonderlich neben der biblia die postillen Lutheri, locos theologicos Philippi lateinisch oder deutsch, die augspurgische confession sampt derselben obbemelten repetition sollen sie oft und fleissig lesen, und alle ire predigten und lehr auf dieselben confessionen und declarationen gründen und richten, damit einerlei form und eintrechtigkeit in der lehr in s. churf. g. landen erhalten, und auf die nachkommenden gepflanzt werde

They shall bring up their wife and children in discipline and honesty, abstain from all dishonest dealings, also from selling wine or beer, from merchandise and such trades, not revile the people in the pulpit ex affectu, wait upon their study and office; and especially, besides the Bible, they shall read often and diligently Luther's postils, Philip's Loci theologici in Latin or German, [and] the Augsburg Confession together with its aforesaid Repetition, and ground and direct all their sermons and teaching upon these same confessions and declarations, that one form and concord in doctrine may be kept in his Electoral Grace's lands and planted for those that come after.

Books bought by the parish. Where a pastor was too poor to buy them, the parish bought them. Hoya in 1581 orders the churchwardens to provide "a good Wittenberg Bible, Doctor Luther's postils and catechisms", the parish making up any shortfall, "that such books may be bought for the church and remain there" (Sehling 6/2, pp. 1140–1141). The pastor's private study was an item of visitation: the Limpurg visitation order of 1611 asks "what writings and books he readeth, and what his private studies be", and the visitor is to exhort him to study if he is found idle (Sehling 16, p. 627). Synods set reading for the year ahead (§15.7.5).

15.3.3 Life, household and conduct

An example to the flock. The same Saxon articles require ministers and schoolmasters to be "right and pure in doctrine" and blameless in life, to marry, and to keep out of taverns. Electoral Saxony, General-Artikel und gemeiner Bericht, 1557 (Sehling 1, p. 322):

> so wollen s. churf. g. das beide kirchen - und schulen - diener vornemblich in der lehre richtig und reine sein, auch sonsten in irem leben und wandel sich beide in worten, werken und kleidunge erbarlich gegen menniglich, freundlich, züchtig und demütig, und in summa allenthalben und in allem christlich und also vorhalten, das sie menniglich, und sonderlich ihren schul- und kirchen-kindern nicht anstössig, sondern dermassen mit gutem exempel Vorgehen, das die pfar-kinder und sonsten menniglich denselbigen mit lust und frucht seliglichen und ane ergernis folgen mügen, hiezu dann vornemblich dienen würde, da sie zu vormeidunge menschlicher uppigkeit und heraus folgenden Verdachts sich in den heiligen ehestand begeben, [...] ires ampts und studirens fleissig abwarteten, saufens, spaciren - gehens und anderer ergerlichen leichtfertigkeit, auch aller taberneu und schenk - heuser enthielten his Electoral Grace will that both ministers of churches and of schools be above all right and pure in doctrine, and otherwise in their life and conduct, both in words, works and clothing, behave themselves honestly towards every man, friendly, chastely and humbly, and in sum everywhere and in all things christianly, and so that they be no stumbling block to any man, and especially to their school- and church-children, but go before with so good an example that the parishioners and every man else may follow them blessedly with delight and fruit and without offence. Whereto it would chiefly serve that they, to avoid human wantonness and the suspicion that followeth from it, enter into holy matrimony, […] wait diligently upon their office and study, [and] abstain from drinking, from walking abroad and other offensive frivolity, and from all taverns and ale-houses.

The articles allow a pastor to sell by the cask the wine or beer of his own glebe or tithe, "only that they hang out no tavern sign nor set guests to drink in the house" (Sehling 1, p. 322). Their dress is treated in Chapter 14, §14.8.

The household inspected. The minister's wife, children and servants were visited with him. The Württemberg visitation order of 1559 tells the special superintendent to find out "whether the ministers instruct their children in prayer and the catechism, and keep their boys at school or teach them themselves at home", and to ask each pastor about the "doctrine, life and housekeeping" of his colleagues and neighbours "and of their wives and children" (Sehling 16, p. 387). A Württemberg visitation order of 1547 gives the reason from 1 Timothy 3: "he that ruleth not his house well, how shall he rule the house of the Lord?" (Sehling 16, p. 151). The Oldenburg visitation articles of 1609 ask the parish "how the pastor's wife and children behave themselves towards divine service and live" (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1192).

15.3.4 Residence and records

Residence. A pastor was not to leave his parish overnight without leave and a substitute. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1140):

> Derhalben befehlen wir allen und jeden unsern pfarherrn, schulmeistern und küstern, das sich niemand lange von seinem kaspel und ampt, es sey eine oder mehr nacht, ohne nötige ursach begebe und habe von unsern verordneten inspectorn ein jeder in seinem eingesetzten ampt verlaub genommen und eine tüchtige und wolbekante person aus seiner nachbarschaft in unser graffschaft in seinem abwesen gefördert und bestellet.

Therefore we command all and every one of our pastors, schoolmasters and sextons that none betake himself long from his parish and office, be it one night or more, without needful cause, and [unless] each have taken leave of our appointed inspectors in his appointed office, and have procured and appointed a fit and well-known person out of his neighbourhood in our county [to serve] in his absence.

Marienhafe in East Frisia copied the rule in 1593 (Sehling 7/1, p. 728). In the towns the deacons needed the pastor's leave, as at Breslau in 1550 and Regensburg in 1556 (Sehling 3, p. 418; 13, p. 443).

The parish register. From mid-century the pastor kept registers of baptisms, marriages and burials, and the visitors inspected them. Saxony, Kirchenordnung, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 397):

> Damit man auch gewiss sein möge, das ein jeder pfarrer in seiner kirchen vermög unser ordnung die neugetauften kinder, sampt ihrer eltern und paten namen, auf welchen tag sie getauft, desgleichen auch der neuen eheleut namen, auf welchen tag sie getrauet und hochzeit gehalten, auch welchen tag ein jeder verstorben, verzeichnis und register halte, sol der visitator, so oft er visitieret, ihme solches buch, darein es alles ordentlich verzeichnet, vorbringen lassen

And that it may be certain that every pastor in his church, according to our order, keepeth a list and register of the newly baptized children together with their parents' and godparents' names, on what day they were baptized, likewise of the names of the new married folk, on what day they were wedded and held their wedding, and also on what day each one died, the visitor, as often as he visiteth, shall have that same book, wherein all this is orderly written, brought before him.

The register was to stay with the church and not leave with the pastor or his widow. Nassau-Weilburg (1576) adds confirmations (Sehling 10, p. 307), and some orders add the communicants (Kapellendorf 1569, Sehling 1, p. 583). In Pirna (1578) the sexton kept the book, and at Regensburg (1572) he kept the register of the dead (Sehling 1, p. 645; 13, p. 509).

15.3.5 Deacons and chaplains

The assistant ministers. The Diaconus or Kaplan was an ordained assistant (Chapter 16, §16.5.1). His particular charges were the catechism and the sick. Electoral Saxony, Generalia, alle superintendentes belangende, 1555 (Sehling 1, p. 315):

> Den catechismum sollen sie der jugent vleissig furtragen, und im leren derselben nit ihre kunst und geschicklichkeit beweisen wollen, sundern die kindern lehr dem unverstendigen jungen volk ufs aller einfeltigst und immer uf einerlei > form und weiss fursagen, und also wider von ihnen fordern und examinieren. In besuchung der kranken sollen sie willig und unverdrossen sein, und mehr bereit, den armen hierin zu dienen, denn den reichen

They shall diligently set forth the catechism to the youth, and in teaching it not seek to show their art and skill, but say the children's doctrine before the unlearned young folk in the simplest way and always in one form and manner, and so require it again of them and examine [them]. In visiting the sick they shall be willing and unwearied, and readier to serve the poor herein than the rich.

They were to honour and obey their pastor and superintendent and "not belittle them before the congregation, nor practise against them, nor stir up factions" (Sehling 1, p. 315). The deacon was chosen by the pastor together with the council (Sehling 1, p. 323).

15.4 Superintendents and deans

15.4.1 The name and the office

One overseer, many names. The evangelical orders replaced the bishop's oversight with a superintendent (Superattendens, Inspector, Dechant, Decanus, Propst). Augsburg in 1537 (Moderate Reformed) justifies the office from the apostolic church and says outright that the titles are one. Augsburg, Kirchenordnung, 1537 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 12, p. 55):

> derhalb bei den aposteln und hernacher in den kirchen allweg ain oder gar wenig furnemer ufseher, furgänger, superattendeten oder bischof, welche namen all ainerlai heischen, in jeder gemain verordnet worden send, damit dann nicht alhie durch vil hirten dester ubler gehuetet werde […] In suma: sie sollen allerdingen die höchste sorg und fursehung der gemainen Christi uf in haben, versehen und versorgen.

therefore among the apostles, and afterwards in the churches, there have always been appointed in every congregation one or very few chief overseers, leaders, superattendents or bishops, which names all mean one thing, that here the flock be not the worse kept through many shepherds […] In sum: they shall in all things have upon them, oversee and provide the highest care and provision of the congregation of Christ.

At Augsburg (1537, Moderate Reformed) the office rotated quarterly between the council's president and the senior provost. In the territories it was a standing office. Its installation is in Chapter 13, §13.11.4.

15.4.2 Electoral Saxony, 1555–1557: visitation, synod, report

The Saxon pattern. The Saxon General Articles of 1557 set out the superintendent's duties that most later Lutheran orders follow:

- watch over "the doctrine, life and diligence" of all pastors and church servants in his district;
- summon the village pastors once a year, and visit unannounced, to hear their sermons, ask the parishioners about their pastor's conduct, examine the youth in the catechism and inspect the schools;
- hold a synod every year;
- admonish privately, and report what he cannot mend to the consistory.

Electoral Saxony, General-Artikel und gemeiner Bericht, 1557 (Sehling 1, pp. 320–321):

> Darüber sol ein jeder superattendens nach seiner und der benachbarten pfarherrn gelegenheit alle jar zwischen ostern und pfingsten einen synodum halten, und darzu berufen aus den stedten, flecken und dörfern alle pastores, so in seine superattendents gehören, und sich dorinnen irer lahr und sitten, auch anderer vorfallenden gebrechen erkunden, dieselben in besserung richten, insonderheit auch ire relation hören, wie sie ire pfarkinder in examine befunden, und was sie sonst vor irrige sachen anzuzeigen haben, und do etwas fürfiele, das er nicht vorrichten könte, sol er das an das consistorium, dohin die person und sachen gehörig, weisen und gelangen lassen. Do auch der superattendens etwas ungebürlichs oder streflichs von einigem pfarherr in seine superattendents gehörig selbst erfaren, oder aber vom lehenherrn, oder den eingepfarten erkundigung bekommen hette, sol er denselben in geheim darumb ansprechen, und nach gelegenheit der vorbrechunge strafen, mit vorwarnung, do keine besserung folgen, und dergleichen klage mehr für ihn kommen würde, das er solches an das consistorium gelangen lassen müste

Moreover every superattendent shall, as it suiteth him and the neighbouring pastors, hold a synod every year between Easter and Whitsun, and call thereto out of the towns, market towns and villages all the pastors that belong to his superintendency, and therein inquire into their doctrine and manners and other defects that fall out, and bring the same to amendment; and especially hear their report, how they have found their parishioners in the examination, and what other erroneous matters they have to declare. And if anything fell out that he could not settle, he shall refer it and bring it to the consistory to which the person and matter belong. And if the superattendent himself have learned of anything unseemly or blameworthy in any pastor belonging to his superintendency, or have received information of it from the patron or the parishioners, he shall speak to him about it in secret and rebuke him according to the circumstances of the offence, with warning that, if no amendment followed and more complaints of the like came before him, he must bring it before the consistory.

Other charges. The superintendent also:

- examined candidates for a parish before sending them to Wittenberg or Leipzig for ordination (§15.7.3);
- installed new pastors before the altar and charged both pastor and people (Sehling 1, p. 321);
- saw that no pastor was dismissed without his knowledge (Sehling 1, p. 312);
- settled the widow's year and the parish inventory when a pastor died (Sehling 1, p. 312).

The 1555 Generalia add a yearly meeting of all the superintendents of the Electoral circle at Wittenberg on the Wednesday after Whitsun, where they reported to the pastor of Wittenberg "as the upper superintendent" (Sehling 1, p. 312). The visitor's travelling costs were refunded on a weekly account sent to the elector "into his own hands" (Sehling 1, p. 311).

15.4.3 The superintendent's charge: Grubenhagen, 1600

An instruction under oath. The Brunswick consistory's instruction for the superintendent of Grubenhagen, on which he was sworn in 1600, shows the office at the end of the century: guardian of doctrine, visitor, and agent of the consistory. Grubenhagen, Officium superintendentis Grubenhagici, 1600 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1109):

> 1. Das er sich, dem corpori doctrinae Julio und formulae ooncordiae im gesunden verstande durchaus gleichmeißig in thesi et antithesi zu lehren und, das seine untersetzten pfarherrn dergleichen thun mugen, vleisiche aufsicht zu haben verpflichte. […] 4. Das er kein dorf oder hauß von seiner superintendenz eximiret achte, noch jemands mit seiner befohlnen visitation in seinem untergegebenen gezirk praeterire […] 5. Es soll der superintendens keine offentliche sunde oder ärgerliche handel den pastoribus und kirchendienern ubersehen

1. That he bind himself to teach in sound understanding, wholly in accord with the Corpus doctrinae Julium and the Formula of Concord, in thesi et antithesi, and to keep diligent oversight that the pastors under him may do the like. […] 4. That he hold no village or house exempt from his superintendency, nor pass over anyone in his appointed visitation within the district put under him […] 5. The superintendent shall overlook no public sin or offensive dealing in the pastors and ministers of the church.

He was to change no ceremony without the consistory's ruling, to act always pro matrimonio in marriage cases, and to settle small matters with the district governor rather than "trouble the consistory lightly" (Sehling 6/2, p. 1109).

15.4.4 Deans of the Transylvanian chapters

Elected deans. Among the Transylvanian Saxons the pastors of each chapter elected their own dean (decanus). Transylvania, Statutes of the Chapter of Lasseln, 1572 (Sehling 24, p. 361):

> Officium decani est ecclesiarum et scholarum sua dioecesis agere inspectorem ac pro virili sua parte cavere, ne haereses, schismata morumque vitia pullulent. Deinde publicis invigilare commodis atque conventus indicere fratribus non nisi sufficiente aliqua ingenti causa. Ad haec defendere bonos ac insontes contra quasvis iniurias intra et extra capitulum ipsis illatas. Econtra vero severissime animadvertere in rebelles, ignavos, fucos aut quoquomodo infamiam et sibi privatim et toti fraternitati palam creantes.

The office of the dean is to act as inspector of the churches and schools of his diocese, and to take care to the utmost of his power that heresies, schisms and vices of manners spring not up. Next, to watch over the common good, and to call the brethren to assembly only for some sufficient and weighty cause. Besides this, to defend the good and innocent against all wrongs done them within and without the chapter. But on the other hand to punish most severely the rebellious, the slothful, the drones, and those who in any way bring disgrace both privately on themselves and openly on the whole brotherhood.

For his pains each brother paid him one florin a year. The chapter also judged marriage cases, "which pious magistrates of old, not without weighty counsel, referred to the ecclesiastical court" (Sehling 24, pp. 361–362).

15.5 Consistories, their presidents and members

15.5.1 Composition: theologians and jurists

A mixed court. The consistory was a standing court of theologians and lawyers under the prince, for marriage cases, church discipline and the affairs of ministers and church property. Wittenberg's of 1539 had two theologians and two doctors of law, mostly professors of the university (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 306, n. 2). Jena's in 1569 was presided over by the superintendent of Jena, who was to be a doctor of theology. Saxe-Weimar, Ordnung und reformation ecclesiastici consistorii zu Jena, 1569 (Sehling 1, p. 234):

> Wir ordnen und wollen auch, das in diesem consistorio der superintendens zu Jen, so ein doctor theologiae sein soll, praeses sein, und im zween andere theologi, aus den professorn, oder kirchendienern, und dann zween geschickte gottsfürchtige juristen, und unser amptman daselbst, oder ein ander person vom adel, als assessores zugeordnet werden

We ordain and will also that in this consistory the superintendent of Jena, who shall be a doctor of theology, be president, and that two other theologians, out of the professors or the ministers of the church, and then two able, God-fearing jurists, and our district officer there, or another person of the nobility, be joined to him as assessors.

15.5.2 The president: prince, nobleman or councillor

Who presided. The orders disagree about who should preside:

- The prince himself. At Weimar in 1561 Duke Johann Friedrich made himself "the supreme president" and meant to attend "in our own princely person", with his brothers deputizing (Sehling 1, pp. 230–231).
- A theologian. At Jena in 1569 the superintendent presided (above).
- A nobleman. Electoral Saxony in 1580 set over its upper consistory at Dresden "an understanding, well-qualified [man] of the nobility as president and director of all the consistories' affairs", with two jurists and two theologians, the court superintendent and the preacher of Dresden (Sehling 1, p. 405).
- A lay councillor, to keep the clergy from the sword. Regensburg in 1588 gave the presidency to one of the political members. Regensburg, Ordnung des consistorii, 1588 (Sehling 13, pp. 513–514):

> damit auch disfalls des consistorii autorität gegen allen personen, so für dasselbig erfordert und beschieden, künftiglich, wie sich gebührt und die notturft erfordert, erhalten und die kirchendiener aus dem verdacht gesezt, als solten sie widerumb nach dem weltlichen schwert greifen und wie der pabst in der kirchen ihres gefallens regieren wollen, soll aus den dreien zum consistorio verordneten, politischen, gelehrten männern einem, so propter authoritatem, eruditionem et prudentiam vor andern darzu dichtig erkennt, das präsidentenambt und directorium des consistorii befohlen werden and that in this respect also the consistory's authority towards all persons summoned and cited before it may henceforth be upheld, as is fitting and need requireth, and the ministers of the church set free from the suspicion that they would again lay hold on the worldly sword and rule in the church at their pleasure like the Pope, the office of president and the direction of the consistory shall be committed to one of the three learned political men appointed to the consistory, who is judged fitter for it than the others propter authoritatem, eruditionem et prudentiam.

Pfalz-Neuburg (1576) likewise set "a director among the three political councillors" (Sehling 13, p. 237).

What the president did. The director:

- put the business to the members and took the vote, "the umbfrage", alternating clerical and lay members at his discretion (Hanau 1612, Reformed, Sehling 10, p. 539);
- alone made the proposals, "to avoid confusion and ill-will" (Ysenburg-Birstein 1608, Reformed, Sehling 10, p. 686).

The Saxon president of 1580 also gave each newly examined pastor a formal charge on his office before he was sent to his parish (Sehling 1, p. 380).

15.5.3 The business of the consistory

Its competence. Electoral Saxony in 1580 sets out the matters that belonged to the consistory, so that "worldly and church courts be not mixed together". Saxony, Kirchenordnung, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 403):

> Erstlich alle ehesachen, wie sie namen haben, welche durch die superintendenten und jedes orts oberkeit auf die ihnen zugestellete ordnung nicht können vorrichtet und verglichen werden. Alle ergerliche sünde und laster an den lerern und zuhörern wider die erste und andere tafel der gebot gottes, allein soviel die gradus admonitionum, und nicht die weltliche strafe belanget, wie solche in den synodis verordnet worden. Alle sachen, die pfarrer, kirchen und schuldiener, vocation, ampt, dienst, leben, wandel, translation, dimission, suspension, handlung und verbrechung belangend, auf mass, wie bei den synodis verzeichnet. Alle sachen, so der kirchen, schulen, hospitaln, und gemeiner kasten güter, lehen, einkommen, nutzung, gebeud, und besserung, darzu der kirchendiener besoldung betreffen.

First, all marriage cases, whatever their names, which cannot be settled and composed by the superintendents and the authorities of each place according to the order given them. All offensive sins and vices in teachers and hearers against the first and second table of God's commandments, so far only as concerneth the degrees of admonition, and not the worldly punishment, as these have been ordained in the synods. All matters concerning pastors, ministers of churches and schools: their calling, office, service, life, conduct, translation, dismissal, suspension, dealings and offences, in the measure set down for the synods. All matters concerning the goods, fiefs, income, use, buildings and repair of churches, schools, hospitals and common chests, and also the salaries of the ministers of the church.

The Saxon upper consistory also had a "general inspection and oversight" of the universities of Leipzig and Wittenberg, the princely schools and the two lower consistories. Books were not to be printed without the consistory's censorship (Sehling 1, pp. 402, 407). Brandenburg-Ansbach (1594) forbade booksellers to sell "new, impure, suspect books" without the consistory's knowledge, and set the president and political councillors over the endowments of churches and schools (Sehling 11, p. 382).

Sessions and secrecy. The consistories met weekly:

- Hanau (1612, Reformed): every Tuesday afternoon from one o'clock until evening, with extraordinary sessions at the director's discretion (Sehling 10, p. 538);
- Ysenburg-Birstein (1608, Reformed): every Wednesday afternoon from one until four or five, members arriving late being fined (Sehling 10, p. 685).

Members, secretary and copyists swore to keep the business "in the highest secrecy" (Brandenburg- Ansbach 1594, Sehling 11, p. 385; Pfalz-Neuburg 1576, Sehling 13, p. 240).

15.6 Professors of theology

No seminaries. No order founds a seminary in the later sense. Ministers were trained at the universities, often on a territorial stipend (§15.7), and the church orders treat the professors of theology only where their work touched the church's government.

What the orders ask of professors.

- Sitting in the consistory. The Wittenberg and Jena consistories drew on the theology faculty (§15.5.1), and the Prussian consistorial order of 1584 names "the primarius professor theologiae at the university" among its three theologians (Sehling 4, p. 123). Because the Saxon consistorials of Leipzig and Wittenberg "each also hath his profession at the high school", their sessions were to be timed "that they be in no way hindered in their lectures, and the youth not neglected in their studies" (Sehling 1, p. 402).
- Examining and ordaining. Candidates were examined and ordained at Wittenberg and Leipzig (Saxony 1557, Sehling 1, p. 321), at Marburg before "the teachers of God's word and the professors of holy Scripture" (Hesse 1566, Moderate Reformed, Sehling 8, p. 201), and by the theological faculty of Helmstedt, which was not to keep a candidate more than two days nor take more than two thalers (Gandersheim recess 1601, Sehling 6/2, p. 892).
- Overseeing the stipendiaries. The prefect of the Marburg stipendiaries examined them twice a year "in the presence of all the professors of theology, that the examination may have the more weight and the wits be stirred to greater diligence". Hesse, Stipendiatenordnung, 1546 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 159):

> Zum vierten soll er sie alle, des jars zweimal in beisein aller professoren theologiae examiniren, damit das examen soviel mehr ansehens habe und die ingenia zu großerm vleiß excitirt werden.

Fourthly, he shall examine them all twice a year in the presence of all the professors of theology, that the examination may have so much the more authority, and the wits be stirred up to greater diligence.

- Lecturing the clergy. Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel (1543) appointed at the cathedral "a lector theologiae, who is charged with nothing else than to read some lessons publicly in holy Scripture" (Sehling 6/1, p. 47). The monks and canons in the monasteries were to hear such lectures every weekday morning and evening, "that afterwards, learned in the word of God, they may be set over churches and schools" (Sehling 6/1, p. 81).
- The academy and the church. At Strasbourg the church convent and the academy quarrelled over seats and over "the provision and ordering of the theological lectures and disputations"; an agreement of 1575 settled it (Sehling 20/1, p. 507).

15.7 Training of ministers

15.7.1 School, university and stipend

No seminary, no vicarage. The orders know nothing of a seminary or of a vicarage year in the modern sense. The path to the ministry ran through the Latin school and the university, and the churches paid for it with stipends:

- Territorial stipends. Electoral Saxony raised "the number of our stipendiaries … who shall all be drawn to the service of churches and schools" (1580, Sehling 1, p. 376).
- Stipends on vacant benefices. The Saxon visitors of 1540 meant to turn church fiefs into stipends as they fell vacant (Sehling 1, p. 288).
- Stipends from the old monastic goods. Nassau in 1546 created stipends of 24 florins a year from surplus church income, for boys of at least seventeen (Sehling 10, p. 88).
- Boarding colleges. Württemberg's boys passed from the Pädagogium at Stuttgart and the cloister schools to the Stipendium at Tübingen (1559, Sehling 16, p. 359). The Reformed Palatinate admitted to its stipend only those found fit in the half-yearly examinations of its four paedagogia (1593, Sehling 14, p. 553).

Stipendiaries were bound by a written obligation to serve the territory that paid for them (Württemberg 1559, Sehling 16, p. 364; Hohenlohe 1556, Sehling 15, p. 108).

15.7.2 Practice preaching in the stipend: Tübingen, 1559

Preaching under correction. The Tübingen Stipendium is the nearest thing in the orders to a training house for preachers. After the master's degree each stipendiary heard the theology lectures, studied Greek and Hebrew, and preached in the house until he was called. Württemberg, Ordnung des Tübinger Stipendiums, 1559 (Sehling 17/1, p. 561):

> Es soll ein jeder nach erlangtem gradu Magisterii im Studio Theologiae diser Ordination nach one verzug die Lectiones Theologicas fleissig neben dem studio graecae et hebraicae linguae zuhoren unnd mit predigen im Stipendio sich zu üben verbunden sein, so lang und biß dero einer oder mehr zum Ministerio erfordert würdt.

Every one, after attaining the degree of Master, shall be bound in the study of theology, according to this ordinance, without delay to hear the theological lectures diligently, besides the study of the Greek and Hebrew tongues, and to exercise himself in preaching in the Stipendium, so long and until one or more of them be called to the ministry.

The texts were assigned to them, not chosen. They were to handle them by "an understanding, right and orderly method, according to the precepts of dialectic and rhetoric". The superintendents of the house were to tell a preacher "privately, the same day, after the sermon is held", any faults they found "in inventione, dispositione oder pronunciatione" (Sehling 17/1, p. 561). The stipendiaries also kept "their disputations, declamations and exercises of style" in the arts faculty (Sehling 17/1, p. 577). The Coburg synod of 1580 asked for a similar house with "exercitia disputationum, repetitionum, concionum" led by magistri repetentes (Sehling 1, p. 253).

Preaching in the parish. A young man could also practise in a parish pulpit, with the pastor's leave and on showing his sermon first. Electoral Saxony, Generalia, alle superintendentes belangende, 1555 (Sehling 1, p. 314):

> Do aber ein junger gesell, der sich ' begert zuversuchen und zu üben, umb erlaubniss zupredigen bitten wurde, soll ihm der pfarrer solchs zu lassen, doch also, das ime der junge gesell zuvur jemands schriftlichs zeugnis und seiner furgenomenen predigt concept schriftlich oder mundlich furlege.

But if a young fellow, who desireth to try and exercise himself, should ask leave to preach, the pastor shall allow it him, yet so that the young fellow first lay before him someone's written testimony and the draft of the sermon he purposeth, in writing or by mouth.

Schwäbisch Hall's synod ruled in 1606 that no student of theology "who will exercise himself in preaching" should do so without the dean's consent (Sehling 17/1, p. 191).

15.7.3 Examination, trial sermon and instruction before ordination

The examination. Before ordination the candidate was examined in doctrine and had to preach. Electoral Saxony, General-Artikel und gemeiner Bericht, 1557 (Sehling 1, p. 322):

> Und es sol unter andern der ordinandus vor der ordination gefragt, wo und was er studirt, auch wo und womit er sich zuvor enthalten und genehret habe, endlich auch fleissig examinirt werden in der christlichen lahr, auch einmal oder öfter offentlich predigen, und do befunden, das derselbe an lahr und wandel ungeschickt were, sollen die, so inen gesandt und zu der pfarr berufen haben oder wöllen, schriftlich von dieses ungeschickligkeit berichtet und vorwarnet werden, das sie auf einen andern bedacht sein wollen, der zu solchem pfarrambt tüglich sei.

And among other things the ordinand shall be asked before ordination where and what he hath studied, also where and wherewith he hath before maintained and supported himself; finally also be diligently examined in Christian doctrine, and preach publicly once or oftener. And if it be found that he is unfit in doctrine and life, those that sent him and have called, or would call, him to the parish shall be informed in writing of his unfitness and warned to think upon another who is fit for such a pastoral office.

The trial sermon (Probpredigt) became standard. In the Reformed Palatinate it was to show "how he can teach the common people out of Scripture, exhort them to amendment and comfort them", with attention to "his pronunciation" (Kirchenratsordnung 1564, Sehling 14, p. 412). Henneberg sent the candidate to preach before the parish, which reported back "how the man sent pleased them with his person, delivery, bearing [and] repute" (1555, Sehling 2, p. 294).

Weeks of instruction at Wittenberg. A candidate who was teachable but not yet fit was not simply rejected. The superintendent was to send him to Wittenberg "with warning that he be provided beforehand by those that called him to the pastorate with needful expenses, that he may be instructed at Wittenberg some weeks, if need be, and await ordination without burdening anyone" (Saxony 1555, Sehling 1, p. 312). Hesse in 1566 (Moderate Reformed) told examiners to keep promising candidates at Marburg for a time. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 201):

> So aber die examinatores etlich aus denen, so zum examen gesant und geschickt befunden werden, sollen sie dieselbige vermanen, daß sie ein zeitlang bleiben, die lectiones fleißig visitiren und insonderheit in der heiligen schrift sich wol uben, domit sie mögen hernach zum examen geschickter kommen.

But if the examiners find some of those that are sent to the examination [not yet] fit, they shall exhort them to stay a while, to attend the lectures diligently, and especially to exercise themselves well in holy Scripture, that afterwards they may come to the examination better prepared.

15.7.4 Probation: deacon before pastor

The diaconate as apprenticeship. The closest thing to a vicarage is the rule that a new man should first serve as deacon under a pastor. Palatinate, Kirchenratsordnung, 1564 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 413):

> Und soll keinem neuling, der zuvor im ministerio nit gewesen, leichtlich eine pfarr bevolhen werden, es were dann sach, das einer so geschickt, alt und erfarn, das auß den umbstenden und seinem wesen erschiene, das er ein pfarr versehen kundte, so mag man ime wol eine pfarr vertrauen, sonst aber nit leichtlich, sonder soll zuvor zu einem diacono gebraucht > und nach etlicher zeit, wann man ime eine pfarr bevelhen wolte, wider examinirt werden, auf das man darauß judiciren möge, ob er in der lere zugenommen

And no novice that hath not been in the ministry before shall lightly be entrusted with a parish, unless one be so able, old and experienced that it appeared from the circumstances and his bearing that he could have charge of a parish; then one may well entrust a parish to him, but otherwise not lightly. Rather he shall first be used as a deacon, and after some time, when one would commit a parish to him, be examined again, that one may judge thereby whether he hath increased in doctrine.

The Palatine Kirchenratsordnung of about 1593 (Reformed) repeats the rule (Sehling 14, p. 548). In 1607 the Elector's church council found that "the young sapientisten and other new ministers sent out mostly do not increase but decrease". Palatinate, Mandat zu den Konventen, der Predigtaufsicht und den Diakonen, 1607 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, p. 957):

> Bevelhen demnach, das ihr allen solchen neuen diaconis, wen sie 1 jar in euer inspection geweßen, ihre dispositiones concionum abfordern solt, dieselbige nach obgedachtem ecclesiaste Buccani censurirent, solche eure censuras oben daruf schreiben und sie uns zuschicken, damit auch wir dieselbige, ehe sie alhero citirt werden, leßen, die mängel ihnen daruf undersagen und alßdan solche ihre dispositiones ihnen wieder zustellen können.

We command you therefore that from all such new deacons, when they have been a year in your inspection, you require their outlines of sermons, censure the same according to the aforementioned Ecclesiastes of Bucanus, write your censures above them, and send them to us, that we also may read them before they be cited hither, show them their faults therein, and then give them their outlines back.

Elsewhere the new man stood under the eye of his superintendent. Pfalz-Neuburg's consistory kept "a book … wherein every pastor's or minister's name and surname, age, where he studied, how he stood in the examination, [how he] held [himself] in the trial sermon" were written (Pfalz-Neuburg 1576, Sehling 13, p. 172; Hohenlohe 1580, Sehling 15, p. 491).

15.7.5 Continuing study: synods, convents and assigned reading

Reading set from synod to synod. The yearly synod was also a school for the pastors. The Saxon superintendent was to give his pastors "a useful little book, or a piece of the Bible, to read this coming year", on which they would hear one another at the next synod (1555, Sehling 1, p. 312). Nassau-Dillenburg in 1552 made the same rule into an examination. Nassau-Dillenburg, Synodalabschied, 1552 (Sehling 10, p. 93):

> daß in einem jeden synodo den priestern ein oder mher locos proponiert werden soll, uff den andern nachvolgenden synodum dieselbigen zu repetiren unnd durchaus zu examiniren und alßdan einen andern oder mher zuproponiren, uff den volgenden synodum zu examiniren unnd also forthan, damit die priester desto vleissiger zulesen und desto ehe bucher zukauffen verursacht werden.

that in every synod one or more loci shall be set before the priests, to be repeated and thoroughly examined at the next synod following, and then another or more set, to be examined at the following synod, and so forth, that the priests may be moved the more diligently to read and the sooner to buy books.

Monthly convents with sermon criticism. The Reformed Palatinate made the convent of the pastors a monthly exercise. The president of the church council reported to the Elector in 1571. Palatinate, Wenzel Zuleger's report on the classical convents, [1571] (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 446):

> Erstlich ist den kirchen- und schuldienern bevolhen, das sie alle monat einmal uf iren kosten sollen an bestimpten orten zusamenkhommen. Doselbst soll einer auß inen ein locum scripture teutsch in conventu predigtweiß erkleren. Wan solchs geschehen, soll er abtreten, di andere kirchendiener urtheilen, ob er di meinung deß texts recht verstendtlich und erbeulich dargeben, auch di lehr, vermanung und straf daraus recht und zu erbauung angezogen. Wo er gefelt, soll im das freundtlich undersagt und zur beßerung ermanet werden. Hernach soll durch den praesidem […] ein par quaestiones theologicas proponiren, sie latine under sich oder theutsch, wo es erbeulich, tractiren

First, the ministers of churches and schools are commanded to come together once every month, at their own cost, at appointed places. There one of them shall expound a passage of Scripture in German in the convent, after the manner of a sermon. When this is done he shall withdraw, and the other ministers judge whether he hath set forth the meaning of the text rightly, understandably and edifyingly, and drawn from it doctrine, exhortation and rebuke rightly and to edification. Where he faileth, he shall be told so in a friendly way and exhorted to amend. After that the president [...] shall propose a couple of theological questions, [which] they [shall] handle among themselves in Latin, or in German where it is edifying.

The later Palatine and Hanau convent orders (1607, 1609, both Reformed) turned this into a full procedure, with the pastors bound by oath to "submit willingly to the censure of my brethren" (Sehling 14, p. 609; 10, p. 542).

Trial sermons for serving pastors. In Brandenburg the village pastors took turns preaching trial sermons at the weekday service in the town church, besides the yearly convents, "that they may be better informed in the articles of faith and the controversies of religion … and have occasion for more diligence in the study of doctrine" (visitation recess of 1600, Sehling 3, p. 212). At Neuruppin in 1558 the rural pastors were, in Sehling's summary, to be summoned, examined and made to preach once a quarter (Sehling 3, p. 264).

15.8 The laity

15.8.1 Attending church

Sermon and catechism. Every order requires attendance at the Sunday sermon, and most the afternoon catechism. The duty fell on the head of the household for children and servants. Hohenlohe, Polizei- und Rügordnung, 1588 (Sehling 15, p. 594):

> Eß söll jederman an son- und feyertagen die predig besuchen, auch ihre kinder und ehehalten dartzue schicken und anhalten. Eß soll ein jeder, so seinen verstand erreicht, im jar zum wenigsten einmall oder zway das nachtmall empfahen.

Every man shall attend the sermon on Sundays and holy days, and send and hold his children and servants thereto. Every one that hath reached his understanding shall receive the Supper at the least once or twice in the year.

Counted and fined. In Nassau-Weilburg church censors went round during the service to note those in the streets, churchyard, taverns, workshops or barns. In the villages the people were counted house by house. Nassau-Weilburg, Kirchenordnung, 1576 (Sehling 10, p. 309):

> daß insonderheit in Flecken und Dorffschafften, bevorab Sontags und uff die höhere Fest-, Feyer- und Bettage, vor der Kirchen von Hauß zu Hausse umbgezehlet unnd diejenige, so ohne erhebliche Ursach und vorher gebettener Erlaubnus abwesendt befunden, ohnnachlässig mit einer gewissen Mulcta oder Kirchenbuß nach Inhalt dieser Censur Ordnung gestrafft werden.

that especially in market towns and villages, above all on Sundays and on the higher feasts, holy days and prayer days, a count be made from house to house before the church, and those found absent without weighty cause and without leave asked beforehand be punished without fail with a fixed fine or church penance, according to this order of censure.

No one was exempt: not the lords' servants, nor those in privileged houses, nor millers, bakers, innkeepers, journeymen and carters (Sehling 10, p. 309). Belzig in 1529 already bound "all householders" to send children and servants to the quarterly catechism sermons on pain of punishment by the district officer and the council (Sehling 1, p. 527). Where a war or plague service was called by the bell, Hohenlohe in 1588 required "at the least one person out of every house" to come, and those at home to pray with them (Sehling 15, p. 542).

15.8.2 Prayer and teaching at home

The household as a church. The orders assume that the head of the household teaches the catechism at home and leads prayer, as Luther's Small Catechism directs ("how a householder should teach his household"). Brandenburg-Nürnberg (1533) has the pastors exhort parents. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1533 (Sehling 11, p. 188):

> Sie sollen auch die eltern und hausväter fleißig vermanen, das sie ire kinder und hausgesind zur predig und gemainen gebet ziehen und sunderlich darauf acht haben, das sie nicht one redliche ursach sich allzulang vom heiligen sacrament entziehen.

They shall also diligently exhort the parents and householders to draw their children and household to the sermon and to common prayer, and especially to take heed that they withdraw not themselves too long from the holy sacrament without honest cause.

Saxony in 1580 tells parents to teach their children and servants "at home in the chief parts of the catechism" before sending them to confession, "for some are found so unskilled that they know not even what the holy sacrament is" (Sehling 1, p. 427). The Reformed synod of Dillenburg in 1582 sent pastors and elders into the houses. Nassau-Dillenburg, Abschied der Dillenburger Generalsynode, 1582 (Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 173):

> 1. Die pfarherren oder seniores und presbyteri halten visitationem domesticam, dabey sie mitt aller freundlicheit die leuthe ermahnen und erbauwen sollen, und sonderlich darane seyen, daß die jugendt daheim morgents und abents, auch vor und nach eßens und an der arbeit, zum gebeth und psalmen zu singen angehalten werden.

1. The pastors, or the seniors and presbyters, shall hold domestic visitation, wherein they shall exhort and edify the people with all friendliness, and especially see to it that the youth be held at home, morning and evening, also before and after meals and at their work, to prayer and to the singing of psalms.

The bells called the absent to prayer as well: when the Litany began, Hohenlohe in 1581 had the great bell rung "so that every man in the field or in the houses be reminded of the common prayer", to join it "in spirit" though absent in body (Sehling 15, p. 452; Chapter 9).

15.8.3 Confession and communion

How often. The orders cite Luther's preface to the Small Catechism: whoever does not seek the sacrament "at the least once or four times a year" is to be feared a despiser of it (Palatinate 1556, Sehling 14, p. 135; Danzig 1557, Sehling 4, p. 230). The legal minimum was usually once or twice a year (Hohenlohe 1588, above). The Schulenburg order of 1572 had pastors admonish and then report to the lords those who did not go "at the least once or twice in the year" to confession and the sacrament, "and such a one shall not be suffered in the parish at all" (Sehling 3, p. 149). Before communion every communicant went to confession or to the examination (Verhör) (Chapter 3).

Private confession and absolution are treated in Chapter 13, §13.17.

15.8.4 Church workers: a higher standard

Lay officers held to the minister's standard. Sextons, organists, schoolmasters and church wardens were not ordained, but the orders held them to the conduct required of ministers. Hesse in 1566 (Moderate Reformed) says so of the sextons ("Opfermänner"). Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 211):

> Es sollen auch dieselbige gleich wie andere diener der kirchen eines erbaren und gottseligen wandels sein, kein volseufer, nit unehrlich hantierung treiben. Es sollen aber gemelte opfermenner durch die pfarherr und eltesten darzu mit wissen und willen eines superintendenten angenommen werden.

These also, like other ministers of the church, shall be of honest and godly conduct, no drunkards, nor ply dishonest trades. And the said sextons shall be taken on thereto by the pastors and elders with the knowledge and will of a superintendent.

Oldenburg in 1573 complained that "godless knaves who go about with the black art, soothsaying, charming, conjuring devils, treasure-digging, also with blasphemy, drunkenness and other offensive wicked pieces" had been taken on as sextons (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1121). Hoya (1581) forbade "our pastors, schoolmasters and sextons" to be found "in offensive company in common drinking-bouts and public taverns" (Sehling 6/2, p. 1141). Visitors asked about the sexton's communion as about the pastor's. In the Oldenburg visitation protocols of 1609, quoted in Sehling's notes, one sexton was found "not yet [to have gone] ad coenam", and another had kept from the sacrament nine years over a quarrel (Sehling 7/2.1, pp. 1185, 1189).

The minister's household. The higher standard reached the minister's wife, children and servants (§15.3.3). The elders of the Reformed churches were to be "blameless" by the rule of 1 Timothy 3; their duties are in Chapter 16, §16.6. No order found lays a special prayer rule on the minor offices; their duty was attendance, good conduct, and the service of the choir or the church door.

15.9 Schoolmasters

15.9.1 A church office

Teacher, singer and catechist. The schoolmaster was counted among the "ministers of churches and schools" and was bound to the same life (§15.3.3). His church duties were:

- to teach the catechism and prayers;
- to lead the boys in church and lead the singing;
- to bring them to the sermon and watch them there;
- to obey the pastor and the visitors.

His installation and oath are in Chapter 13, §13.12.3, and the choir service in Chapter 10, §10.6.1. Esslingen's ten articles for the German schoolmaster (1534, Moderate Reformed) are the shortest complete statement. Esslingen, Artikel für den deutschen Schulmeister, [1534] (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, p. 381):

> 1. Er sol sich beflyssen, die kinder zu underwysen und uffzuziehen in gottesforcht, zucht und erberkeit lut des heilgen evangelionß und der teglichen predigen. […] 3. Der schulmeister sol sich mit leer und gantzem leben allergstalt halten, domit die kinder kein böß exempel von im nemmen, wie sich gezympt eynem christlichen, getruwen lermeister. 4. Die fragstuck, klein und groß kinderbericht, sullen in der schul in steter übung gehalten werden und den kindern furgegeben zu buchstaben und lesen an stat der nammen buchlin, ehe denn sy andere brieff oder bucher angryffen. 5. Er sol die kinder mit flyß zu predigen füren, namlich am suntag und uff mitwoch zum kinderbericht. […] 7. Er sol die kinder wol uben in zehen gebotten, glauben, vatter unser, sacramenten, in psalmen singen und derglychen, wie die buchlin der fragstuck ußwysen. 8. Das groß fragstuck sol mann lesen, das klayn sol man ußwendig lernen.

1. He shall endeavour to instruct the children and bring them up in the fear of God, discipline and honesty, according to the holy gospel and the daily sermons. […] 3. The schoolmaster shall so behave himself in teaching and in his whole life that the children take no evil example from him, as becometh a Christian, faithful teacher. 4. The questions, the small and great children's instruction, shall be kept in constant use in the school and given to the children for spelling and reading instead of the name-book, before they take up other letters or books. 5. He shall diligently lead the children to the sermons, namely on Sunday, and on Wednesday to the children's instruction. […] 7. He shall exercise the children well in the Ten Commandments, the Creed, the Our Father, the sacraments, in singing psalms and the like, as the booklets of questions direct. 8. The great questions they shall read; the small they shall learn by heart.

The catechism thus served as the reading primer.

15.9.2 In church with the boys

Leading them to the sermon. In the towns the German schoolmasters brought their pupils to the weekday sermon and sang before and after it, so that the Latin school need not lose its hours. Saxony, Kirchenordnung, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 370):

> ist für rathsam angesehen, da in einer stadt deutsche schulen seind, das dieselben schulmeister mit ihren knaben zu rechter zeit, wenn zu der predigt geleutet wird, in die kirchen kommen, und mit ihnen einen deutschen gesang oder zweene singen, darauf die predigt folgen sol. Und wenn dieselbige volendet, sol abermals ein deutscher gesang von ihnen sampt dem volk gesungen werden.

it is deemed advisable, where there are German schools in a town, that the same schoolmasters come with their boys into the church at the right time, when the bell is rung for the sermon, and sing with them a German hymn or two, whereupon the sermon shall follow; and when it is ended, a German hymn shall again be sung by them together with the people.

At Wittenberg (1533) a school servant sat with the boys who could not get into the pew, "to see that they hear the sermon and play no knavery" (Sehling 1, p. 703). In Norderdithmarschen (1597) the boys gathered at their teacher's house before the service on Sundays and feasts and went with him "in orderly, modest array into the church, to hear the sermon and help with the singing" (Sehling 23, p. 502). The Oschatz visitors of 1555 wanted the boys "held to diligent attention and to noting down the sayings from God's word, and always diligently asked what they have learned from the sermon" (Sehling 1, p. 631).

15.9.3 Girls' schools and schoolmistresses

Schoolmistresses. Girls had their own schools in the larger towns, with schoolmistresses or a schoolmaster for the girls:

- Brück (1530) has the schoolmaster teach "the young maidens … under eleven years with reading and writing, also in the catechism and good sayings of Scripture" (Sehling 1, p. 535);
- Wittenberg's maidens came on weekday mornings while the sermon bell rang (1533, Sehling 1, p. 706);
- in the Reformed Palatinate in 1595 "every schoolmaster" was to lead his boys, and "every schoolwoman her schoolgirls", to the catechism sermon and present them to the ministers (Sehling 19/2, p. 856).

15.9.4 Oversight

Visited by the pastor. The pastor visited the school. Saxony in 1555 required the pastors, "at the least four times every year", with a burgomaster or councillor, to "view the schools, examine the children", and see that the school servants "live without offence … and abstain from frivolous clothing, also from ale-houses, gluttony and such vices" (Sehling 1, p. 313). The Württemberg special superintendent asked "whether the schoolmaster with his colleagues keep the school in order and at its time … and furnish the church with Christian hymns, and what conduct he and his colleagues lead" (1559, Sehling 16, p. 388).

15.10 The magistrate

15.10.1 Keeper of both tables

Lutheran doctrine. The Lutheran orders follow Melanchthon in making the Christian magistrate "keeper of both tables" of the Law: responsible not only for the second table (civil order) but for the first (true worship), so far as outward discipline goes. Mecklenburg in 1552 states it plainly. Mecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 189):

> Sondern die weltliche oberkeit ist gott diesen dienst schuldig im ganzen göttlichen, ewigen gesetz, das ist erstlich alle eusserliche, erkante abgötterei, zeuberei, eidbruch, gotteslesterung, öffentliche ketzerei sollen sie abthun und strafen, und dagegen rechte lere von gott pflanzen lassen und helfen erhalten […] Und in summa, die oberkeit sol beide tafeln der zehen gebot, gott zu ehren, in erhaltung eusserlicher zucht handhaben mit ernstlicher execution.

But the worldly authority oweth God this service in the whole divine, eternal law: that is, first, they shall put away and punish all outward, known idolatry, sorcery, perjury, blasphemy, open heresy, and on the other hand let true doctrine of God be planted and help to maintain it […] And in sum, the authority shall uphold both tables of the Ten Commandments, to the honour of God, in maintaining outward discipline with earnest execution.

The Palatinate repeated the passage almost word for word in 1556 (Sehling 14, p. 219).

Nourisher of churches and schools. The Transylvanian Saxons add the image of the magistrate as foster-father of the church, from Isaiah 49:23. Transylvania, Bekenntnisformel der Mediascher Synode, 1572 (Sehling 24, p. 349):

> ad cuius conservationem opus est ecclesiis et scholis earumque doctoribus, quorum pii magistratus debent esse defensores et nutritores, Esaiae 49 cap. dicitur. Debet quoque magistratus Christianus tollere scandala manifesta ex ecclesia, ut idolatria et impia dogmata pugnantia cum verbo Dei horrendasque blasphemias in Deum for whose preservation there is need of churches and schools and their teachers, of which pious magistrates ought to be defenders and nourishers, as it is said in the 49th chapter of Isaiah. The Christian magistrate ought also to remove manifest offences out of the church, such as idolatry and impious doctrines contrary to the word of God, and horrible blasphemies against God.

15.10.2 What the magistrate did

Duties in practice. The magistrate's duties were these:

- To order visitation. The prince sent the visitors and gave the reason. Lüneburg, Instruktion zu den Visitationen, 1565 (Sehling 6/1, p. 576):

> Weil uns der allmechtig in dis hohe ampt der oberkeit gesetzt, das wir uns schuldig erkennen, vor allen dingen Gotts ehr und unser bevolen underthanen selen und seligkeit zu furdern und fleiss zu haben, das sein wort lauter und reine geleret, sacramenta recht administriret, alle ergernuß abgeschaffet, gute disciplina und christliche zucht erhalten werde

Because the Almighty hath set us in this high office of authority, so that we acknowledge ourselves bound above all things to further God's honour and the souls and salvation of the subjects committed to us, and to take care that his word be taught clear and pure, the sacraments rightly administered, all offences removed, good discipline and Christian order maintained.

- To appoint, pay and protect ministers. Patrons and councils called ministers, but subject to the superintendent's examination (§§15.4, 15.7). The Saxon articles forbade patrons to charge "fief money" or to dismiss a pastor without cause shown before the consistory (1557, Sehling 1, p. 321). Councils paid ministers and schoolmasters from the common chest.
- To enforce attendance and the Sabbath. The district officer and council punished those who kept children and servants from the catechism (Belzig 1529, Sehling 1, p. 527). Absentees were fined (Nassau-Weilburg 1576, §15.8.1), and at Dillenburg in 1618 (Reformed) the fines went into the alms chest (Sehling 10, p. 203).
- To punish what the church could only admonish. The consistory handled "the degrees of admonition, and not the worldly punishment" (Saxony 1580, §15.5.3). What the church could not mend went to the magistrate: the Schulenburg lords were to punish or expel those who would not come to the sacrament (1572, Sehling 3, p. 149).
- To refuse citizenship and marriage to the ignorant. The Reformed Elector Palatine in 1599 and 1608 forbade his officials to admit anyone as a citizen, or let anyone marry, who did not know the catechism (§15.11.4).
- To be preached to. At Schwäbisch Hall a sermon "on the office of the magistrate" was preached each year before the council election (1615, Sehling 17/1, p. 165). The visitor began each rural visitation with an exhortation "on the office of Christian magistrates … namely, among other things, to take the church diligently in hand after the example of the pious King of Judah, Jehoshaphat" (Sehling 17/1, p. 186).

15.10.3 The Reformed limit

Bodies, not souls. The Reformed orders drew the line more sharply. Hanau-Münzenberg, Presbyteriumsordnung, [1609] (Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 512):

> Dan erstlich erstreckt sich das ampt der obrigkeit allein uber den leib und zeitliche guter der underthanen, uber die seelen aber der menschen und ihre ewige wolfahrt haben sie gar nicht zue herschen. Hingegen das ampt der eltesten gehet auf die gewißen der menschen, welche sie durch ihre vermahnung aus den sunden aufmuntern, durch den hamer des gottlichen gesetzes zerknirschen und zue Gott führen und durch die gnadenverheisung des evangelii widerumb aufrichten und trösten.

For first, the office of the magistrate extendeth only over the body and temporal goods of the subjects, but over the souls of men and their eternal welfare they have no rule at all. On the other hand, the office of the elders goeth to the consciences of men, which they rouse out of sin by their admonition, crush with the hammer of the divine law and lead to God, and raise up and comfort again by the promise of grace of the gospel.

Even so, a Hanau sermon plan of 1609 (Reformed) still called the magistrate custos utriusque tabulae quoad disciplinam externam, keeper of both tables as far as outward discipline goes (Sehling 10, p. 469). The ceremonies by which magistrates were installed and prayed for are in Chapter 13, §13.13.

15.11 Catechesis: where the estates meet

Catechesis was the one duty shared by every estate:

- the pastor and deacon preached and examined;
- the schoolmaster drilled;
- the householder repeated it at home;
- the magistrate compelled attendance;
- the superintendent tested the results at visitation and synod.

The confirmation rites themselves are in Chapter 13, §13.6, and the catechism sermon in Chapter 11, §11.4.3. The catechism service itself, its hour, length and order, is in Chapter 10, §10.10.

15.11.1 How often and how long

Three rhythms. The orders combine three rhythms of catechism teaching:

- Weekly. A catechism sermon or children's instruction on Sunday afternoon, often with a weekday repetition: Wednesday and Friday at Reuss (1528), "always half an hour" (Sehling 2, p. 151). The sermon was to last no more than half an hour (Nassau-Weilburg 1576, Sehling 10, p. 235). In a filial village the Sunday sermon was split, "half an hour" for the gospel and the other half for the catechism, said "word for word without exposition" (Eisfeld 1554, Sehling 1, p. 562).
- Quarterly series. The Saxon visitors of 1529 ordered the catechism preached four times a year, a fortnight each time, with penalties for householders who did not send their children and servants. Belzig, Ordnung der Stadt Belzig, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 527):

> Desgleichen das der katechismus zu vier maln im jar alweg 14 tag ufs wenigst nacheinander gepredigt werden, dohin wir alle beerbeten ire kind und gesind bei vormeidung des ambts und rats straf zuschicken vorbinden thuen

Likewise that the catechism be preached four times in the year, each time at the least fourteen days one after another, whither we bind all householders to send their children and servants on pain of punishment by the district office and the council.

At Brück (1530) the pastor preached "the long catechism every day" for a fortnight before each of the high feasts (Sehling 1, p. 535).

- A yearly examination in Lent. Saxony (1580) prescribed a "yearly examination of the catechism, which shall be held in Lent with the young servants" (Sehling 1, p. 424). Gotha (1555) taught the catechism daily in Lent from Invocavit to Palm Sunday (Sehling 1, p. 569). Pfalz-Neuburg (1576) held the yearly examination "most fitly in Lent, before the ordinary visitation", and told the pastors to use "all gentleness" and be content with "a fair answer" (Sehling 13, p. 177).

House to house. In small places the Saxon pastor examined his people one household at a time. Electoral Saxony, Generalia, alle superintendentes belangende, 1555 (Sehling 1, p. 313):

> Auch in den flecken, do der inwoner nit all zuvil, soll der pfarrer ein zeit im jar da zu nehmen, und ein haus nach dem andern fur sich bescheiden, und die, so nit lesen konnen oder den pfarrern unbekant und vordechtig sein, sonderlich aber kinder und dienstboten in sunderheit im catechismo examinieren. So kan er nachmals dieselben, die in solcher verhor geschickt befunden sind, mit besserem gewissen zu dem abentmal des herrn kummen lassen [...] Denn solchs durchaus soll gehalten werden, das niemand zu dem hochwirdigen sacrament zugelassen werde, der nit beten konne, und von den furnemsten artikeln der christlichen lehr, nit zimlichen bescheid an zeigen kann.

Also in the market towns where the inhabitants are not too many, the pastor shall take a time in the year for it and summon one house after another before him, and examine in the catechism those that cannot read or are unknown or suspect to the pastors, but especially children and servants, each by himself. So can he afterwards let those that are found fit in such examination come to the Lord's Supper with the better conscience [...] For this shall be kept throughout, that none be admitted to the holy sacrament who cannot pray and cannot give a fair account of the chief articles of Christian doctrine.

What had to be known. The minimum was the text of the chief parts: five in some orders (Ten Commandments, Creed, Our Father, Baptism, the Supper), six where the Office of the Keys was added. The Small Catechism was learned by heart, the Large one read or preached (§15.9.1).

15.11.2 Before first communion

An examination, and often a set course. Every order requires an examination before a child's first communion. Saxony (1580) puts it briefly. Saxony, Kirchenordnung, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 424):

> Zum fünften, sollen die pfarrer sonderlich die das erste mal zu dem hochwirdigen sacrament des leibs und bluts Christi gehen, im catechismo mit fleis examinieren, ob sie denselben gelernet haben, auch ob sie zu der communion sonsten zuzulassen, eigentlich erkundigen.

Fifthly, the pastors shall especially examine with diligence in the catechism those that go for the first time to the holy sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, whether they have learned it, and also inquire carefully whether they are otherwise to be admitted to the communion.

Hohenlohe (1578) gives the clearest answer to "how long". The children of about twelve were taught for an hour a day through Lent. Hohenlohe, Kirchenordnung, 1578 (Sehling 15, p. 277):

> Weiter sollen auch alle und jede pfarrer in stetten und dörfern alle jar, von Invocavit an biß auf Palmarum, diejenigen kinder, die umb das 12. jar sind und nun alters halben das heihg abendmal zum ersten mal empfahen sollen, im heiligen catechismo und den artikeln christlicher lehr alle tag ein stund, von 12 biß auf 1 uhr, unterrichten und dahin sehen, das keins zum abendmal gelassen werde, das mcht zuvor die sechs stück des catechismi könne und ein notwendigen verstand der christlichen lehr habe.

Further also all and every pastor in towns and villages shall every year, from Invocavit until Palm Sunday, instruct those children that are about twelve years old and by reason of age are now to receive the holy Supper for the first time, in the holy catechism and the articles of Christian doctrine, every day for an hour, from twelve until one o'clock; and see to it that none be admitted to the Supper who cannot first [say] the six parts of the catechism and have a needful understanding of Christian doctrine.

That is some five or six weeks of daily instruction, on top of years of Sunday catechism and school.

Age. The orders that name an age put first communion at about twelve:

- the Ansbach theologians in 1556 speak of children "of twelve years and above" (Sehling 11, p. 335);
- the Limpurg visitors in 1611 asked whether the pastor "communicates children under twelve years" (Sehling 16, p. 629);
- at Regensburg (1572/1588) children of "eight, nine, ten years" came to confession, and if they lacked understanding the parents were to be told "not to hurry with them" (Sehling 13, p. 510; §15.11.6);
- the Reformed church at Emden admitted children "about fourteen years", after a public profession before the congregation eight days before the Supper (Micron's Ordinancien, German edition of 1565, Sehling 7/1, p. 606).

15.11.3 First communion and confirmation

Usually one act. Was first communion separate from confirmation? In most orders that have a confirmation it is the same occasion: the children are examined, confirmed, and admitted to their first communion together. The Hessian form of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) is headed "Questions and answers for the children who are to be confirmed and admitted to communion for the first time" (Sehling 8, p. 300). The heading recurs in the Hessian Agende of 1574 (Philippist), Nassau-Weilburg 1576 and Hanau 1609 (Reformed) (Sehling 8, p. 433; 10, pp. 254, 498). Mansfeld held the examination publicly in church the day before. Mansfeld, Kirchen-agenda, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 233):

> Nach dem auch in unsern kirchen bis daher diese christliche gewonheit erhalten ist, das man die kinder, so zum ersten mal zum hochwirdigen sacrament gehen sollen, den nehesten tag zuvor, ehe denn es geschiehet, in der kirchen offentlich verhöret, und hierzu alle monat ein gewisser tag in jeder kirchen geordnet und benennet wird, das sie auch, wenn sie im catechismo verhöret und bestanden sind, alda nach altem und löblichen gebrauch der kirchen confirmiret, und uber sie gott der herr angerufen und gebetet wird, so ermanen wir alle christliche, gottfürchtige eltern und hausherren, auch schulmeister und schulmeisterin, das sie solche gewonheit erhalten helfen, und auf benente zeit ire kinder, gesind, Schulkinder, den seelsorgern zuverhören selbst fürstellen

Whereas also in our churches this Christian custom hath been kept hitherto, that the children who are to go for the first time to the holy sacrament are publicly examined in the church on the next day before it happeneth, and for this a fixed day is ordained and named every month in every church, and that when they have been examined in the catechism and have passed, they are there confirmed according to the old and laudable use of the church, and the Lord God is called upon and prayed to over them: so we exhort all Christian, God-fearing parents and householders, also schoolmasters and schoolmistresses, that they help to maintain this custom, and at the named time themselves present their children, servants and schoolchildren to the pastors to be examined.

Twice a year at Lauenburg. Saxe-Lauenburg (1585) confirmed twice a year, on the Sunday before Michaelmas and on Quasimodogeniti. The parents first examined the children at home and had their schoolmasters hear them, "that they may give good account … distinctly, with clear voice, without shyness", and then presented them before the altar with the godparents (Sehling 5, pp. 458–459).

A second hearing. Hessen-Kassel (1610, Reformed) required the newly confirmed to repeat their confession half a year later before the second communion. Hessen-Kassel, Konsistoriumsordnung, 1610 (Reformed; Sehling 9, p. 118):

> so sollen die kinder, beits, knaben und megtlein, nicht allein, wann sie zum ersten mahl zum h. nachtmal gelaßen und confirmirt werden, zuvor ihr bekantnis nach allen fünff hautpstucken christlicher lehr dem pfarherrn thun, sondern sie > sollen auch dieselbe jahr ihre bekantnis zu mehrer und fernerer behaltnis alzeit ein halb jar nach der confirmation fur dem pfarherrn wiederholen und darauff zum andern mahl communiciren the children, both boys and girls, shall not only, when they are admitted for the first time to the holy Supper and confirmed, first make their confession before the pastor according to all five chief parts of Christian doctrine, but they shall also in the same year, for the better and longer keeping of it, always repeat their confession before the pastor half a year after the confirmation, and thereupon communicate the second time.

Examination without confirmation. Where there was no confirmation rite, as in Electoral Saxony, the examination alone admitted the child to communion (above; Chapter 13, §13.6.7). No order requires a separate course for confirmation apart from the course for first communion. The one instruction served both.

15.11.4 Before marriage

No catechism, no banns. Many orders refused to proclaim or marry the young who did not know the catechism. Saxony, Kirchenordnung, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 436):

> und da es junge leute, ob sie auch iren catechismum gelernet, ohne dessen erkentnis sie nicht aufgeboten werden sollen.

and if they be young folk, [the pastor shall inquire] whether they have also learned their catechism, without knowledge of which they shall not be proclaimed.

The pastor was also to ask "whether they have received the holy sacrament publicly in the church with the congregation of God" (Sehling 1, p. 436). Pfalz-Neuburg (1576) set out the whole interview: kinship, parents' consent, freedom from other promises, and the catechism. Pfalz-Neuburg, Generalartikel, 1576 (Sehling 13, p. 195):

> erstlich, ob und wie si einander mit sipp- oder magschaft verwandt, zum andern, ob es mit wissen und willen der eltern und nit heimblicher weise beschehen, zum dritten, ob si beede ledig und sonst niemands anderm versprochen seien, solchem nach si beede aus dem catechismo, wie si desselben einen underricht haben, verhören. Da nun in solchem allen kain mangl befunden, sollen die neue eheleut ohne alle hindernus vermög der kirchenordnung eingesegnet werden.

first, whether and how they be related to one another by blood or by marriage; secondly, whether it hath been done with the knowledge and will of the parents and not secretly; thirdly, whether they be both single and not promised to any other; and after this, examine them both out of the catechism, how far they have instruction in it. If now no defect be found in all this, the new married folk shall be blessed without any hindrance according to the church order.

Why the household needed it. Pfalz-Veldenz (1574) gives the reason: the couple would have to teach their own children and servants. Pfalz-Veldenz, Kirchenordnung, 1574 (Sehling 18, p. 529):

> Es sollen auch die Pfarrer die newen eheleuth zu sich vor dem kürchgang fordern und von ihnen Rechenschafft ires glaubens und der lehr des Catechismi begehren. Dann weil sie haußhalten sollen, khinder und gesünde bekhommen, ist jhe nutz, ja es erforderts die hohe nott unnd der ernnste bevelch Gottes, das sie sich und die selbigen wissen in bekantnus Christlicher lehr und wahrer Religion Recht zu underrichten und auffzuziehen

The pastors shall also call the new married folk to them before the church-going and require of them an account of their faith and of the doctrine of the catechism. For since they are to keep house and get children and servants, it is profitable indeed, yea, the high necessity and the earnest command of God require it, that they know how to instruct and bring up themselves and them rightly in the confession of Christian doctrine and true religion.

Hesse (1566, Moderate Reformed) has the same rule (Sehling 8, p. 322). The rule was repeated across the later century:

- Mansfeld, by resolution of its ministers, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 233);
- the Transylvanian synod of Hermannstadt, 1565: if they cannot answer, "one shall delay the copulation until they learn" (Sehling 24, p. 296);
- Prussia, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 93);
- the Hessian Reformationsordnung of 1572 (Philippist): the ignorant were not to be married, nor admitted to communion or to stand godparent, and were to be reported to the authorities (Sehling 8, p. 398);

- Nassau-Diez 1585 (Reformed), Ysenburg-Birstein 1588, Marienhafe 1593 and the Solms discipline order of 1599 (Reformed) (Sehling 10, p. 177; 10, p. 632; 7/1, p. 717; 9, p. 339).

The Reformed Elector Palatine in 1599 and 1608 forbade his officials to accept anyone as a citizen, or let anyone marry, without a pastor's written certificate that they could recite the chief parts (Sehling 19/2, pp. 963–964).

Married on a promise. Where a wedding could not be put off, Wied (1616, Reformed) married the couple on a pledge, backed if need be by sureties. Wied, Kirchen- und Polizeiordnung, 1616 (Reformed; Sehling 19/1, p. 500):

> Und da auß erheblichen ursachen etwa die copulation angehender, junger eheleut länger nicht uffgeschoben werden könte, so sollen die angehende eheleut handtgegebener trew zusagen, auch, da nötigh, deßwegen burgen setzen, das sie bei der catechismi predigten sich fleißigh einstellen und finden laßen wollen, biß sie die lehr desselben wolgelernet und gefaßet haben.

And if for weighty reasons the copulation of young folk about to marry could be put off no longer, then the couple shall promise by giving their hand, and also, if need be, set sureties for it, that they will diligently attend and be found at the catechism sermons until they have well learned and grasped its doctrine.

15.11.5 Premarital instruction and counsel

No counselling course. No order prescribes premarital counselling in the modern sense: a series of meetings on the duties of marriage. What the orders require is three things.

1. An interview some weeks before. The couple, or their parents, came to the pastor in good time. At that meeting the pastor established their freedom to marry and examined their faith. Limpurg, Kirchenordnung, 1610 (Sehling 16, p. 621):

> Erstlichs sollen die Newe Eheleuth oder an ihrer statt die Eltern, Vormundt oder Freundt beederseits drey wochen vor ihrem Kirchgang bey dem Pfarherr sich einstellen oder, do ein oder ander theil abwesent, von ihnen schrifftlichen beglaubten schein bringen, der dann fleissig auffsehen und forschen soll, ob es mit wissen und willen geschehe deren, in welcher gewaldt sie sein, sonderlich der Eltern, ob kein verhinderung wegen naher verwandtschafft oder anderer wichtigen ursachen

First, the new married folk, or in their stead the parents, guardians or kinsfolk on both sides, shall present themselves before the pastor three weeks before their church-going, or, if one or the other party be absent, bring a written attested certificate from them. And he shall diligently look and inquire whether it be done with the knowledge and will of those in whose power they are, especially the parents, [and] whether there be no hindrance by reason of near kinship or other weighty causes.

In the villages of Brieg (1592) "the bride and bridegroom shall first recite the parts of the catechism to their pastor on a set day" (Sehling 3, p. 447). The Brieg visitation instruction of 1542 had already ordered people to come when the pastor sent for them, "especially when people would enter into the estate of marriage" (Sehling 3, p. 441).

2. Confession and communion before the wedding. Schwäbisch Hall's revised order of 1615 joins the examination to confession. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung, 1543, revised text of 1615 (Sehling 17/1, p. 155):

> Sonderlich aber sollen Newe Eheleuth den H. Ehestandt in Gottesforcht anfahen, mittlen und volenden, den Segen von Gott zuerlangen, auch vor der Hochzeit sich zur Beicht schicken und darauff die Absolution und das H. Abendtmal empfahen zu erweckung und stärckung eines guoten Fürsatzs, Gott in disem Standt nach seinem Wort zudienen und also Christum zur Hochzeit laden, der kan im Ehestandt auß Wasser Wein machen, das ist, Leyd inn Frewd verwandlen. In der Beicht sollen billich die Jungen, Newen Eheleuth auff deß Pastoris examen von der Lehr deß H. Catechismi Rechenschafft geben

But especially shall new married folk begin, continue and end holy matrimony in the fear of God, to obtain the blessing from God, and also before the wedding betake themselves to confession and thereupon receive absolution and the holy Supper, for the awakening and strengthening of a good purpose to serve God in this estate according to his word, and so to invite Christ to the wedding, who can turn water into wine in matrimony, that is, sorrow into joy. In confession the young new married folk ought rightly to give account, upon the pastor's examination, of the doctrine of the holy catechism.

Freudenthal (1592) required bride and groom to come "together to confession and to God's table before the wedding" (Sehling 3, p. 480).

3. The exhortation and the wedding sermon. The teaching on marriage itself was given publicly, in the exhortation read at the wedding and in the wedding sermon (Chapter 11, §11.4.7). Pfalz-Neuburg allowed the exhortation, "which is in itself a fine short sermon on marriage", to be read "for the instruction and reminding of the new married folk" when there was no time for a sermon (1576, Sehling 13, p. 197). Schwäbisch Hall's pastors were pointed for marriage cases to the handbooks of Hemmingsen, Heshusius, Bidembach, Beust, Porta's Pastorale Lutheri and Sarcerius (1615, Sehling 17/1, p. 155).

15.11.6 Infant communion

No order gives the Supper to infants. Did any order give communion to baptized infants, or argue for it? None does. Every order that speaks of first communion requires instruction and examination first (§15.11.2). Four orders name the communion of infants outright, and all four set it aside. Their reasons are three:

- the Apostle's command to examine oneself and discern the Lord's body (1 Corinthians 11:28–29), which infants cannot do;
- the judgment of the early church;
- the children of Christians are saved by baptism and faith without the Supper, so to wait does them no harm.

The orders of Hesse (Moderate Reformed) and Hohenlohe (Lutheran) grant that infant communion was the custom in the time of Cyprian and Augustine. Hesse leaves the custom "in its worth" and does not condemn it. The Reformed preacher at Markirch (1561) calls it an error of the ancients.

Hesse: the ancient custom left unjudged. The Hessian order of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) prefaces its rite of confirmation with the history. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, pp. 286–287):

> Vor zeiten ward den kindern gleich wie den alten, so bald sie getauft, auch das sacrament des leibs und bluts Christi zu essen und zu trinken gereicht, wie das bezeugt Cyprianus in der predig de lapsis und Augustinus, wie zuvor vermeldt. Solchs lassen wir in seinem wert beruhen. Wir aber, zum teil bewegt durch den spruch des apostels: Der mensch prüffe sich selbst und also esse er von diesem brot und trinke von diesem kelche, etc., zum teil folgende dem gemeinen urteil der ersten kirchen, verziehen, das heilig abendmal den kindern zu reichen uf ein ander zeit, und achten notwendiger sein, daß, welche in der kindheit, da sie noch nicht vor sich selbst dem teufel absagen noch den glauben Christi bekennen mögen, durch die hei. taufe gereiniget und dem Herrn Christo und seiner kirchen eingeleibt seind, so bald die zeit kompt ihres verstands, daß sie mögen in den heuptartickeln christlicher lehr und religion underwiesen werden und itzt etlichermaßen underrichtet sein, daß sie alsdenn ihren glauben vor der kirchen bekennen und bericht geben von den vornemsten heuptpunkten christlicher religion [...]

In times past the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ was given to the children to eat and to drink, even as to the old, as soon as they were baptized, as Cyprian testifieth in the sermon de lapsis, and Augustine, as was said before. That we leave in its worth. But we, moved partly by the saying of the apostle, Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of this bread and drink of this cup, etc., and partly following the common judgment of the first church, defer the giving of the holy Supper to the children unto another time. And we hold it more needful that those who in their infancy, when they could not yet of themselves renounce the devil nor confess the faith of Christ, were cleansed by holy baptism and incorporated into the Lord Christ and his church, should, so soon as the time of their understanding cometh, that they may be instructed in the chief articles of Christian doctrine and religion and are now somewhat taught, then confess their faith before the church and give account of the foremost chief points of the Christian religion [...]

Earlier, the same order explains the ancient custom by the early church's joining of baptism and the Supper. The newly baptized "all went straightway to the holy Supper, and so also in the times of holy Augustine it was given to the children, which we yet leave in its worth" (Sehling 8, p. 273).

Oldenburg: infants cannot examine themselves. The Oldenburg order of 1573 argues for infant baptism and, in passing, against infant communion. Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1047):

> Nun kan man durchs blosse wort alleine mit den kinderlein nicht handeln, denn man kan sie noch nicht lehren, derhalben mus es durch die sacrament geschehen, wie im Alten Testament durch die beschneidung. Vom abentmal aber des Herrn > spricht Paulus: Der mensch prüfe sich selbs, item, er sol unterscheiden den leib des Herrn, 1.Cor. 11, welches die jungen kinderlein noch nicht tun können.

Now one cannot deal with the little children by the bare word alone, for one cannot yet teach them; therefore it must be done through the sacrament, as in the Old Testament through circumcision. But of the Supper of the Lord Paul saith, Let a man examine himself; and again, he shall discern the Lord's body, 1 Cor. 11; which the young little children cannot yet do.

Hohenlohe: children saved without the Supper. Hohenlohe in 1578 answered those who held the Supper needless to the baptized believer. Hohenlohe, Kirchenordnung, 1578 (Sehling 15, p. 334):

> Darnach, so ist es war, die kinder der Christen werden durch den glauben und tauf selig, on den gebrauch des nachtmals, wie Christus sagt: Wer glaubt und getauft wird, der wird selig. Wiewol es zu der zeit Augustini der brauch ist gewesen, das man die jungen kinder mit dem kelch des Herrn getrenkt hat, jedoch so volget hierauß nicht, das die erwachsenen nicht bedörfen des heiligen nachtmals und sey inen genug die empfangenen tauf und glauben.

Moreover, it is true that the children of Christians are saved through faith and baptism, without the use of the Supper, as Christ saith, He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. Although in the time of Augustine it was the custom that the young children were given to drink of the cup of the Lord, yet it followeth not hereof that the grown need not the holy Supper, and that the baptism and faith they have received are enough for them.

Markirch: an error of the ancients. Arnaud Banc, preacher of the Reformed French congregation in the Leber valley at Markirch, in the lordship of Rappoltstein, explained in 1561 why his church would not carry the Supper to the sick. Private communion, he wrote, rested on a false belief. Rappoltstein, Arnaud Banc's report on the doctrine of the French congregation, 1561 (Reformed; Sehling 20/2, p. 142):

> Raichet uff die opinion unnd meinung deren, die vermeinen, das alle personen, so das nachtmal nit entpfanngen heten, verloren werden; in welchem die alten auch geirt haben, welche deßhalben den kleinen kindern das nachtmal geraicht haben.

This pertaineth to the opinion and belief of those who suppose that all persons who had not received the Supper are lost; wherein the ancients also erred, who for that cause gave the Supper to the little children.

Instruction first. Other orders reach the same practice without naming the ancient custom. Brenz at Schwäbisch Hall in 1527 drew the line from the catechumenate of the early church. Schwäbisch Hall, Ordnung der Gottesdienste an Werk- und Feiertagen, 1527 (Sehling 17/1, p. 66):

> Fuit et is mos in ecclesia recens orta, ut nemo ad baptismum admissus fuerit nisi qui ante sit cathecuminus. Nunc cum baptisemur pueri, instituendi sumus in rebus fidei, priusquam ad communionem cene dominice admittamur.

This also was the custom in the church newly risen, that none was admitted to baptism but he that had first been a catechumen. Now, since we are baptized as children, we must be instructed in the things of faith before we be admitted to the communion of the Lord's Supper.

The Limpurg visitors' question of 1611, whether the pastor "communicates children under twelve years" (§15.11.2), presumes the same rule.

No harm to the child who waits. An order that deferred the Supper had to say what became of a child who died before first communion. Regensburg told the confessors to warn parents not to hurry children of eight, nine or ten years who lacked understanding. Regensburg, Kirchenregimentsordnung, 1572/1588 (Sehling 13, p. 510):

> weil zu diesem sacrament ein sonderer verstand und prob gehörig, und daß ihnen an ihrer seligkeit, da sie sonsten wol erzogen, nicht nachteilig, wie die dann, so sie Gott aus diesem leben, ehe dann si zur communion kommen, abfordern solte, sowol als andere erwachsenen auf ihrer, der eltern begern sollen mit der gewöhnlichen proceß und ceremonien, laut der regimentsordnung zur erden bestättigt werden.

because to this sacrament belongeth a special understanding and trial; and that it is no hurt to their salvation, if they be otherwise well brought up; as also such children, if God should call them out of this life before they come to the communion, shall at their parents' desire be laid in the earth with the accustomed procession and ceremonies, as well as other grown persons, according to the order of government.

Henneberg abolished a custom of burying such children apart. Henneberg, Kirchenordnung, 1582 (Sehling 2, p. 316):

> Weil auch an etlichen orten bisanhero der brauch gehalten, das man die kindlein, so das abendmal Christi noch nicht empfangen, nicht mit den schülern, wie die alten, zur erden bestattet, so sol doch hinfort hierinnen kein unterscheid gemacht, sondern die kinder weniger nicht, als die alten, mit vorgesetzten ceremonien zum begrebnus gebracht werden.

And whereas in some places the custom hath hitherto been kept that the little children which had not yet received the Supper of Christ were not laid in the earth with the scholars, as the old are, henceforth no difference shall be made herein, but the children shall be brought to burial with the ceremonies set down above, no less than the old.

The sick child. The one exception to the order of instruction, confirmation and communion was the child in danger of death. Nassau-Dillenburg (1575, Philippist) kept the unconfirmed from the sacrament, but not a dying child who understood the catechism and asked for it. Nassau-Dillenburg, Agende, 1575 (Philippist; Sehling 10, p. 155):

> Welche kinder auff solche weis noch nit verhort und confirmirt seint, die soll man vom sacrament abhalten, biß sie durch die confirmation aufgenomen werden. Doch so jemant under den kindern kranck und die schwachheit sich etwa geferlich ansehen ließ, so dasselbige zimlichermassen verstendigh und mit dem catechismo gefaßet und das abentmahell begeren wurde, soll es ime keineswegs abgeschlagen werden, ohnerachtet, das es die confirmation noch nicht entpfangen. Es soll aber nicht destoweniger ein solch kindt sich zur confirmation nach gelangter gesundheit eintzustellen verpflichten.

Those children that have not yet in such wise been heard and confirmed shall be kept from the sacrament, until they be received by confirmation. Yet if any among the children be sick, and the weakness seem somewhat dangerous, and the child be fairly understanding and grounded in the catechism, and desire the Supper, it shall in no wise be denied it, notwithstanding that it hath not yet received confirmation. But such a child shall none the less bind itself to present itself for confirmation when it hath recovered its health.

Chapter 16. Minor Orders, Deacons and Elders

This chapter covers what became of the medieval grades and liturgical offices below the priesthood in the evangelical church orders printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts. It also covers the new offices that took their place. It asks ten questions:

- Were any of the minor orders (porter, lector, exorcist, acolyte) or the subdiaconate kept as formal orders?
- Do the orders mention or prescribe the liturgical roles: lector, thurifer, candle-bearer (accensor, ceroferarius), cross-bearer, torch-bearer, boat-bearer and master of ceremonies? This is asked whether or not a formal order stood behind the role.
- Where was the diaconate kept? Was it kept as an order below the presbyterate, as a liturgical role at the altar, or as a lay office for the poor?
- Where it was kept, was it held to be a separate order by divine right, or only by human right? Were there lay deacons?
- Did any order have lay elders or ruling elders? Were they ordained?
- What did each of these offices do, and what were they forbidden to do?
- Which offices were abolished or forbidden?
- On what grounds were the offices kept, created or abolished?
- What became of the sacristan, of lay care of the altar, of deaconesses, and of monks, nuns, tertiaries and other members of religious communities? How were they received or installed?
- What might women, and laymen who were not ministers, do in the church's services? Could women be elders, churchwardens or lay deacons, hold a lesser office, read or lead the prayers, be cantors, or sing in or direct the choir? Could laymen give the bread and the cup, lead the prayers, or read the bids?

The findings are summarised in §16.1, and §16.2 explains the method and the words that most often mislead. §16.3 deals with the minor orders and the subdiaconate, and §16.4 with the liturgical roles. §16.5 covers the diaconate in its three forms and the question of divine or human right. §16.6 covers elders. §16.7 covers sacristans, altar care, deaconesses, monks, nuns, tertiaries and confraternities. §16.8 gathers how each office was installed, and whether it was ordained. §16.9 asks what women and laymen might do in the church's services. §16.10 is a table by order, and §16.11 a concordance of every order quoted.

16.1 Summary of findings

1. The minor orders were not kept as orders anywhere in the German church orders. No order in the corpus ordains a porter, lector, exorcist or acolyte, nor a subdeacon in the medieval sense. Their disappearance is mostly silent. Where it is argued, the grounds are three:

- They have no warrant in Scripture. Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed) says "Scripture knows no other ministers than bishops, that is presbyters, and deacons of the poor" (§16.3.2).
- They were later human additions to the apostolic diaconate. The Strasbourg examination order of about 1539 (Moderate Reformed) gives a short history of the grades (§16.3.1).
- They belong with the tonsure, the "platten", and other merely human ordinances. Freiberg 1537 and Brunswick 1528 say so (§16.3.3).

The one exception lies outside the Lutheran and Reformed territorial churches. The Ordo ecclesiasticus of the Bohemian Brethren (Hussite), printed among the Polish orders, keeps the acolyte as the first ordained grade, under the deacon (§16.3.4). The young men are received before the synod with a handshake, a promise and a blessing.

2. The functions of the minor orders survived without the orders.

- Porter: the porter's keys passed to the sexton (Opfermann, Küster). Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed) calls him the ianitor of the Old Testament and the aedituus or custos of today (§16.3.5).
- Lector: reading passed to the schoolboys, who read the epistle at Vespers (Rostock 1560), and to the deacon, the assistant minister.
- Exorcist: the office disappeared altogether. Strasbourg (1539, Moderate Reformed) says exorcism was "rather a singular gift than a common function".

3. The liturgical roles were rarely prescribed and soon dropped.

- Ministrants: in the 1520s–1540s some Mass-shaped orders still have ministrants (Ministranten) at the altar. Examples are Nürnberg 1524 and Brandenburg 1540, the latter "in deacons' dalmatics" where there are enough clergy. In Pfalz-Neuburg 1543, "where there are ministrants", the subdeacon reads the epistle and the deacon the gospel and gives the cup (§16.4.1–16.4.2).
- Levites: Regensburg 1542 kept a full levitical service, with a priest celebrant and two "levites", a gospeller and an epistoler. Regensburg abolished the levites and their vestments in 1554, and again in its church order of 1567. Brandenburg-Ansbach's chapter order of 1565/78 forbade "levites after the papistical use" (§16.4.3).
- Thurifer: Luther left incense free in 1523, "we neither forbid it nor require it". Incense then disappears from the rubrics (§16.4.4).
- Cross: a cross is carried in a rogation procession at Stendal (1541) and before the coffin at funerals in many orders (Brandenburg 1540, Waldeck 1556, Anhalt, Prenzlau 1557). The bearer is a schoolboy or the sexton. Schwäbisch Hall (1615) allows it "significatively, not effectively" (§16.4.5).
- Not found: the corpus holds no candle-bearer (accensor, ceroferarius), torch-bearer, boat-bearer or master of ceremonies as a prescribed role. Lights might still be carried at Brandenburg funerals and before the sacrament in Baden 1533, by bearers the orders do not name.

4. The diaconate survived in three distinct forms, which the same word hides:

- The Lutheran Diaconus. This is the second or third minister of a town church: a Helfer, Kaplan or Capellan. He is a full minister of the word and sacraments, ordained with the same rite as a pastor, and usually a step on the way to a pastorate. Electoral Saxony 1580 allows a gifted man to become a pastor "without passing through the diaconate" (§16.5.1). Württemberg and Saxony also have a Subdiaconus, a third minister. These are grades of benefice and seniority, not separate orders.
- The liturgical deacon and subdeacon at the altar. These occur in a few early orders and are normally priests acting as levites (§16.4.2).
- The lay deacon of the poor. This office was built on Acts 6 and 1 Timothy 3:
  - In Bugenhagen's orders the treasury and alms deacons (diakene) are honest laymen who handle the common chest and visit no one with the word. Brunswick 1528 says they serve as Stephen and Lawrence did, "without tonsure and without deacon's coat" (§16.3.3, §16.5.2). The same office appears in Hamburg 1529, Lübeck 1531, Pomerania, and the Lutheran Dutch congregation at Frankfurt (1585).
  - Elsewhere they are called leviten (Hadeln 1526), subdiaconi oder bittherren (Naumburg 1537), or diaconi ecclesiae et pauperum. In Pomerania 1574 the diaconi ecclesiae et pauperum are bound by oath; in Pyritz 1539, by express decision, by no oath.
  - In Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed) and the Reformed churches (Micron 1554/65, Kurpfalz, Nassau, Bentheim) the deacons of the poor are one of the four offices. They are elected, examined, and in Hesse and Micron ordained with laying on of hands (§16.5.3).

5. Divine or human right. No church order sets the deacon as a separate order by divine right above the people and below the presbyter in the Roman sense. The positions are these:

- One ministry of the word by divine right; grades by human right.
  - Bugenhagen writes "bishops or preachers (which is all one thing)".
  - Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1539 speaks of "the nearest bishops, whom men also call pastors".
  - Melanchthon's Wittenberg Reformation (1545) puts bishops "as a grade above other priests" on grounds of "human foresight".
  - The Lutheran diaconate falls under this rule. It is one ministry, graded for order's sake (§16.5.4).
- The lay deacon of the poor as an apostolic institution.

- Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed) says Scripture knows "deacons of the poor".
- Strasbourg (1539, Moderate Reformed) says the diaconate was instituted "by the Holy Ghost through the Apostles", the subdiaconate and the rest only "afterwards".
- Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed) cites Acts 6, and so do the Reformed orders. The editors of the Hildesheim volume read Bugenhagen's ranking of poor relief among "divine ordinances" as making the deacon's office one of divine right (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 811).
- The Bohemian Brethren (Hussite) keep the diaconate as a grade which "it is not fitting to cast out of the church", though "the Antichrist drew it into abuse".

6. Lay elders existed, chiefly in the Bucerian and Reformed orders, and were often ordained.

- Strasbourg (about 1539) (Moderate Reformed) teaches two "orders of presbyters": those who administer word and sacraments, and those "employed only for the discipline of the church". Its churchwardens (Kirchenpfleger) of 1553, in Marbach's Lutheran order, are these seniores and presbyteri (§16.6.1).
- Hesse (1539, 1566) (Moderate Reformed) has the elders elected by the ministers and congregation and confirmed with prayer. In 1566 they are "ordained" with laying on of hands under Acts 14:23. Elders also lay hands on new ministers at their ordination (§16.6.2).
- The Reformed orders have elected elders who govern with the ministers, exercise discipline (Matthew 18) and oversee the ministers' doctrine and life. The installation forms differ:
  - laying on of hands: Micron 1554/65 and Kurpfalz 1592 (both Reformed);
  - prayer and commendation only: Pfalz-Veldenz 1574;
  - handfast vow and public prayer: Kurpfalz about 1601 and Hanau 1609 (both Reformed);
  - a sworn oath: Solms 1594 (Reformed; §16.6.3).
- The Bohemian Brethren (Hussite) elect lay "political presbyters" (presbyteri politici), and female presbyterae for the women. These bind themselves by voice and handshake but receive no laying on of hands (§16.6.4).

7. In the Lutheran orders "elder" is usually not an office of governance.

- The Kirchenväter, Kirchgeschworene, Kastenherren and Kirchenpfleger are lay stewards of church goods and alms.
- Memmingen (1532, Moderate Reformed) gives its churchwardens "no temporal jurisdiction", "so that two temporal authorities arise not again in our city" (§16.6.5).
- Seniores in Ansbach, Pomerania and Silesia are senior clergy of a chapter or synod.

8. What the offices could not do.

- Lay deacons and lay elders did not preach or administer the sacraments.
- In the Bohemian order even the ordained deacon might distribute the bread and the cup, but only a minister "having the power of the keys" might pronounce absolution and recite the words of institution (§16.5.3).
- Reformed elders had spiritual discipline but no civil punishment. In the Reformed Kurpfalz the advocates of presbyteries pleaded their divine right against Erastus. By the editors' account the dispute was settled in 1569 by opinions of Beza, Ursinus and Zanchi, and in 1570 an edict set up church discipline (Sehling 14, p. 53; §16.6.3).

9. Sacristans, altar care, deaconesses and the religious.

- Sacristans. No order has a sacristan distinct from the sexton. The Küster, Custos, Mesner or Sigrist kept the chalices, vestments and font, prepared the altar, vested the pastor and went with him to the sick. Anhalt (1594, Philippist) and Sayn (1590) spell out the duties; Heilbronn (1543) forbids women to serve at the font (§16.7.1).
- Altar guild. None exists in the corpus. The altar was kept by the sexton and the lay churchwardens or deacons. Pomerania (1574) charges the diaconi with "the altar with its ornament". The confraternities and Kalands that had kept altars and lights were dissolved into the common chest from Leisnig (1523) onward (§16.7.2).
- Deaconesses. There is no order of deaconesses. The word diaconissa appears once, for the almoner of the convent of Keppel (1570). The nearest equivalents are the Bohemian presbyterae and the Seelfrauen and beguines appointed to nurse the sick under the pastor (Regensburg 1543, Nördlingen 1544, Heilbronn 1531) (§16.7.3).
- Monks. New professions ended everywhere. Monks might leave and marry with a settlement or stay with maintenance. A few abbeys (Herrenalb, Ravengiersburg) were kept as evangelical schools for the ministry under an evangelical abbot or prior, without vows (§16.7.4).

- Nuns. Many women's houses survived as evangelical convents. Admission was put under the prince or council; the vows were declared not binding; the consecrated habit was abolished or made optional, "for all Christians alike are clothed in baptism" (Mecklenburg 1572). Keppel (1570) prints a full evangelical rite of clothing with an oath, and elected dominae, abbesses and prioresses swore oaths of office (§16.7.5).
- Tertiaries and confraternities. Beguine and Lollard houses were closed to new members. Heilbronn turned its beguines into visitors of the sick. Herford counted the separate houses of the Brethren and Sisters of the Common Life among "factions and sects". No order kept or founded a third order (§16.7.6).

10. Women in the church's services (§16.9).

- Kept from the ministry and its parts. The orders read 1 Corinthians 14:34 and 1 Timothy 2:12 broadly. Hesse in 1566 (Moderate Reformed) and the orders that copied it forbade women "all the actions of the church's service". Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed) let them attend the congregation's assembly, but not speak in it.
- No elder, churchwarden, deacon of the poor or sexton was a woman, the Bohemian women elders (presbyterae) excepted (§16.6.4). The one parish office open to women was that of the girls' schoolmistress. The midwife was sworn because she might have to baptize.
- In the convents the sisters read the lessons, led the prayers by weekly turns, and had their own precentress (cantrix), sacristaness and almoner.
- Singing. Women sang with the congregation, and were told to. In some towns the schoolgirls sang as a choir of their own, led by men (Naumburg 1537/38, Hof 1592); Zwickau abolished one in 1529.

11. Laymen in the church's services (§16.9).

- The bread and the cup were the ministers'. Hesse (1566, Moderate Reformed) let a senior, a keeper of the chest, a schoolmaster or the sexton help with the cup when there were many communicants. Nassau-Weilburg forbade lay ministers of the cup in 1617. Micron's Reformed communicants passed the bread and the cups to one another along the table.
- Prayer. Schoolboys, schoolmasters and sextons sang the Litany. In filial churches the sexton read the epistle, the gospel and the catechism, and he might close with a collect in the pastor's absence. But he might not preach unless examined and ordained (Electoral Saxony 1557).
- The bids of the general prayer were read by the pastor, the deacon or the chaplain. Laypeople asked for prayers, by word or by slips laid on the pulpit.

16.2 Scope, sources and the words that mislead

Sources. The `eko.db` database was searched for the names of every grade and role in question, in German, Low German and Latin spellings. The searches covered:

- ostiarius, Türhüter, ianitor;
- lector, Leser;
- exorcista, Beschwörer;
- acoluthus, Akolyth;
- subdiaconus, Unterdiakon;
- ministrant, Levit, Evangelier, Epistler;
- thuribulum, Rauchfass, Weihrauch, navicula, Schiffchen;
- ceroferarius, Kerzenträger, Fackel, Leuchter;

- Diaconus, Diakon, diaken, Helfer, Kaplan;
- Eltesten, Senior, Presbyter, Kirchenpfleger, Kirchenälteste, Censor;
- for §16.7: Sakristei, Sigrist, Mesner, Küster, Custos, Glöckner; Oblaten, Altartuch, Bruderschaft, Kaland; diaconissa, Seelfrau, Seelnonne, Krankenwärterin; Kloster, Novize, Profess, Gelübde, einkleiden, Kappe, Weihel, Domina, Äbtissin, Priorin; Begine, Nollhart, Fraterhaus, Terziarin;
- for §16.9: the words for women, maidens, girls, widows and matrons, with mulier, puella and matrona; the feminine titles of office (schoolmistress, sextoness, custorin, cantrix, precentress, reader); and, for laymen, the giving of the cup, the Litany, the reader, the intercession and the slip laid on the pulpit.

The registers of the edition were used to find further passages. The passages were then read in context.

The corpus is very uneven on these matters:

- The Lutheran orders say almost nothing about the minor orders. They simply stopped ordaining them, and the Mass rubrics assume a pastor, a deacon (assistant minister), a sexton and a school choir.
- The Bucerian, Hessian and Reformed orders (Strasbourg and Hesse, Moderate Reformed; East Frisia, Kurpfalz, Nassau and the Wetterau counties, Reformed) say a great deal about elders and deacons. They argue for them from Scripture and the early Church.
- The Bohemian Brethren's Ordo ecclesiasticus (Hussite), printed in Sehling's Polish volume (vol. 4), is the only order in the corpus with a graded clergy below the presbyter.

Words that mislead. The same word often names quite different offices:

Word	Usual meaning in the corpus	Also used for
Diaconus, Diacon, Helfer, Kaplan	In Lutheran towns, the second or third ordained minister of a parish (§16.5.1)	The lay deacon of the poor (Bugenhagen; Hesse, Moderate Reformed; the Reformed churches; §16.5.2–16.5.3); the ministrant at the altar in a few early Mass orders (§16.4.2)
Subdiaconus, Unterdiacon	In Saxony, Württemberg and Halle, the third minister of a town church (§16.3.3)	Naumburg 1537: a lay alms-collector (bittherr, §16.5.2); Pfalz-Neuburg 1543: the epistoler at Mass (§16.4.2)
Levit, Leviten	In Regensburg and Nürnberg, the two assisting clergy (gospeller and epistoler) at Mass (§16.4.3)	Hadeln 1526: the lay deacons of the poor (§16.5.2)
Eltesten, Seniores, Presbyteri	In Hesse (Moderate Reformed) and the Reformed orders, lay governing elders (§16.6.2–16.6.3)	Also the ministers of the word, the "elders who labour in the word" (Hesse 1566, Moderate Reformed; Micron and Kurpfalz 1592, Reformed); in Ansbach, Pomerania and Silesia, the senior clergy of a chapter or synod (§16.6.5)
Kirchenpfleger, Kirchenväter, Kastenherren	In most Lutheran orders, lay stewards of church goods (§16.6.5)	Strasbourg 1553 (Lutheran): the disciplinary elders, "whom they named seniores and presbyteri" (§16.6.1)
Ordinieren	The ordination of a minister of the word	Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed), Lippe 1538 and Pfalz-Veldenz 1574 also use it of elders and deacons. In Lippe it means simply to "appoint" deacons

Two consequences follow:

- A list of the Diaconi of a Saxon or Württemberg town is a list of clergy. A list of the diakene of Brunswick or Hamburg is a list of laymen.
- "Elder" in a Lutheran church order usually means a churchwarden or a senior pastor, not a governing elder in the Reformed sense.

Not covered. The following are outside the scope of this chapter, except where they explain an office:

- Schoolmasters, cantors and organists, except where they led the prayers or the singing (§16.9). (Hamburg 1529 lists the sexton and the organists among the church servants, and the midwives "may well be called church servants" too.)
- Visitors and superintendents.
- Consistories.

16.3 The minor orders and the subdiaconate

No evangelical church order in the corpus ordains porters, lectors, exorcists or acolytes, nor a subdeacon in the medieval sense of a major order. No order forbids them by name either: the minor orders are not abolished by statute but simply left out of the new ordination rites, which know only the one ministry of the word. Three passages give reasons for this. One order, that of the Bohemian Brethren, keeps the acolyte as a grade of its own.

16.3.1 Strasbourg: a short history of the grades

The Strasbourg examination order for candidates for the ministry (1539, Moderate Reformed) asks the candidate to account for the grades of the clergy. Its answers are the fullest statement in the corpus of how the reformers viewed them:

- There are two "orders of presbyters": those who preach and administer the sacraments, and the lay seniores "employed only for the discipline of the church" (on these see §16.6.1).
- The diaconate alone was instituted "by the Holy Ghost through the Apostles".
- The subdeacons, archdeacons, lectors, acolytes and porters were added "afterwards" as helpers to the deacons.
- The exorcist's work was a charism, not an office.

Strasbourg, Examensordnung, Latin version, after 9 September 1539, questions 93–95 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 310):

> 93. Quot sunt ordines presbyterorum? Responsio: Duo. Unus eorum, qui Evangelium et Sacramenta administrant, una cum disciplina, de quibus Paulus apostolus praecipit I Timoth. 3 [1-7] et Tit. 1 [7-9], Qui et Episcopi vocantur ab Apostolo. Alter eorum, qui tantum adhibentur ad disciplinam ecclesiae, quales seniores, ut olim Synagoga, ita postea ecclesia quoque habuit, sine quorum consilio nihil agebatur in ecclesia. […] 94. Quos alios sacros cleri ordines habet ecclesia? R.: Prima institutione Spiritus S[ancti] per Apostolos prodita habet ecclesia Diaconos. Postea substituti sunt his subdiaconi et praefecti archidiaconi, quorum munus fuit communes fidelium oblationes et Eleemosynas procurare et dispensare et in conservanda disciplina ecclesiae caeterisque ministeriis ecclesiae, presbyteris inservire ac ministrare, quare Diaconi, hoc est ministri, sunt vocati. Accesserunt etiam lectores, qui sacros libros in ecclesia recitabant, et Acoluthi, qui presbyteros sectabantur testimonii et ministerii gratia, et ostiarii, qui indignos sacris coetibus arcebant. Exorcistarum enim munus magis doni singularis erat quam communis functionis, quae sacro ministerio proprie et semper competat.
> 94. Quot sunt necessaria ministeria ecclesiae, quae et hodie habere oporteat? R.: Tria: Ministerium muneris pastoralis, procurationis pauperum et Scholae ad instituendam adolescentiam ecclesiae.

93. How many are the orders of presbyters? Answer: Two. The one, of them which administer the Gospel and the Sacraments, together with discipline, of whom Paul the apostle giveth charge, 1 Timothy 3 and Titus 1, who also are called Bishops by the Apostle. The other, of them which are employed only for the discipline of the church; such elders as of old the Synagogue had, so afterward the church also had, without whose counsel nothing was done in the church. […] 94. What other holy orders of the clergy hath the church? Answer: By the first institution of the Holy Ghost, delivered through the Apostles, the church hath Deacons. Afterward were set under these the subdeacons, and archdeacons set over them, whose office was to take charge of and dispense the common offerings and alms of the faithful, and in the keeping of the discipline of the church and in the other ministries of the church to serve and minister unto the presbyters; wherefore they were called Deacons, that is, ministers. There were added also lectors, which recited the holy books in the church; and Acolytes, which followed the presbyters for the sake of witness and of ministry; and porters, which kept the unworthy from the holy assemblies. For the office of the Exorcists was rather of a singular gift than of a common function, such as belongeth properly and always to the holy ministry. 95. How many are the ministries of the church which are necessary, which it behoveth to have even today? Answer: Three: the Ministry of the pastoral office, that of the care of the poor, and that of the School for the instructing of the youth of the church.

The same order gives the place once held by the deacons and subdeacons to the schoolmasters. They are to be "second from the order of priests". Strasbourg, Examensordnung, Latin version, 1539 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 304):

> ut sit ordo eorum, qui in scholis ministrant, secundus ab ordine Sacerdotum. Inter ministros ecclesiae et eo loco, quo olim Diaconi et subdiaconi erant, qui hanc quoque functionem, cum muneribus clerici non funguntur, procuratione eleemosynarum administrabant.

[…] that the order of them which minister in the schools be the second after the order of Priests: among the ministers of the church, and in that place where of old the Deacons and subdeacons were, which also administered this function, when they were not performing the duties of clerics, [together] with the care of alms.

16.3.2 Homberg 1526: "Scripture knoweth no other ministers"

The Homberg church order (Moderate Reformed), which Francis Lambert drafted for the Hessian synod of 1526 and which was never put into force, is the only order that rejects the higher grades in so many words. It forbids the dalmatic and tunicle of the deacon and subdeacon because the orders they signify were "brought in without the testimony of God's words". Hesse, Homberger Kirchenordnung, 1526, chapter [24] (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 46):

> Dalmaticas, hoc est papisticorum diaconorum vestes aut subdiaconorum nemo de caetero induat. Nolumus enim favere ordinibus illis sine Dei eloquiorum testimoniis introductis. Caeterum Scriptura alios nescit ministros, praeterquam episcopos, seu presbyteros et pauperum diaconos. De missariis autem diaconis nec iota quidem unum in utroque instrumento reperimus, tametsi episcoporum adiutores non incongrue diaconi, id est, ministri vocentur. Diaconus enim ministrum, et diaconia ministerium significat.

Let no man henceforth put on dalmatics, that is, the vestments of the papistical deacons, or of the subdeacons. For we will not favour those orders, which were brought in without the testimonies of the words of God. Moreover, Scripture knoweth no other ministers save bishops, or presbyters, and deacons of the poor. But of deacons of the mass we find not one jot in either testament; albeit the helpers of the bishops be not unfitly called deacons, that is, ministers. For deacon signifieth a minister, and diaconia a ministry.

The passage shows the whole later position in small:

- There is one ministry of the word, in which bishop and presbyter are one.
- There is one apostolic diaconate, for the poor.
- A "deacon" who is the pastor's assistant is allowed, but only in the loose sense of "minister" or helper.

16.3.3 Human ordinances, tonsure and vestment

Elsewhere the minor orders go silently, together with the tonsure, the processional cross and the other "human ordinances" that the visitations swept away. Freiberg, Visitationsartikel of Dr Jacob Schenk, 1537 (Sehling 1, p. 466):

> Alle menschliche satzungen, so bisher als nötig gehalten, sollen abgethan werden, unangesehen, ob sie wol got nicht verpoten hette, als leuten anders dan zu gotlichen emptern, mit dem creuz gehen, platten, kappen tragen, fasttage und andere gewisse zeit wehlen.

All human ordinances which have hitherto been held as necessary shall be done away, notwithstanding that God had not forbidden them: as ringing [of bells] otherwise than for divine offices, going with the cross, [wearing] tonsures, wearing cowls, fast days, and choosing other set times.

Bugenhagen makes the same point positively about deacons. The true deacon of Acts 6 needs neither tonsure nor deacon's vestment: Stephen and Lawrence were deacons without them. Brunswick, Kirchenordnung of Johannes Bugenhagen, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 449):

> Sulke diakene, dewile se hebben de heymelicheit des loven in reyner conscientie, konen ock wol trösten mit Gades wörde de armen unde elenden, den se mit gelde to hulpe kamen, alse Sanctus Stephanus to Hierusalem dede unde Sanctus Laurentius to Rome ane platte unde ane diakenrock. By uns overs, wat deme worde Gades by den kranken tokumpt, dohn de predicanten mit der heymsökinge, also dat unse diakene alleyne van deme gemeynen gude gelt vorschaffen den notroftigen.

Such deacons, since they hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, can also well comfort with God's word the poor and wretched whom they help with money, as Saint Stephen did at Jerusalem, and Saint Lawrence at Rome, without tonsure and without deacon's coat. But with us, whatsoever pertaineth to the word of God with the sick, that do the preachers with their visiting; so that our deacons only procure money from the common chest for the needy.

Hamburg repeats the point when it allows Lawrence to be remembered in the sermon. Hamburg, Hamburger Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 514):

> He droch nene platte edder diakene rock, sunder was ein diaken, alse geschreven steit Actor. 6 und 1. Tim. 3.

He bare no tonsure nor deacon's coat, but was a deacon, as it is written, Acts 6 and 1 Timothy 3.

What survived of the name Subdiaconus. In Württemberg, Electoral Saxony and some towns, Subdiaconus survived as the name of a benefice: the third preaching post of a town church, below the pastor, the preacher and the Diaconus. It was not a separate order. Württemberg's order for filling church posts treats "pastors, preachers, deacons, subdeacons" as one list of ministers of the word, each "called" and examined in the same way. Württemberg, Ordnung der Besetzung von Kirchendienerstellen, 1559 (Sehling 16, p. 348):

> Demnach soll keiner zu Pfarrer, Prediger, Diacon, Subdiacon, Catechisten oder anderm Kirchendienst vociert noch verordnet werden, er bringes dann zuvor seine Glaubwürdige, Rechtmessige Testimonia seiner geburt, herkommens, haltens

Accordingly shall none be called or ordained to [be] Pastor, Preacher, Deacon, Subdeacon, Catechist, or to other service of the church, unless he first bring his credible and lawful testimonies of his birth, descent, [and] conduct […]

Electoral Saxony's great order of 1580 has a chapter "how all parishes, preacherships, diaconates and subdiaconates shall be filled". Electoral Saxony, Kirchenordnung of Elector August, 1580, table of contents and chapter heading (Sehling 1, pp. 363, 375):

> Vom beruf und annemung der kirchendiener, und wie alle pfarren, predicaturen, diaconat und subdiaconat, bestellet werden sollen.

Of the calling and receiving of the ministers of the church, and how all parishes, preacherships, diaconate and subdiaconate shall be filled.

At Halle the Unterdiaconi, the junior ministers, were bound to visit those they had communed in sickness. They were thus ministers of the sacrament, not servers. Halle, Kirchen-Ordnung der christlichen Gemein zu Hall in Sachsen, 1573(?) (Sehling 2, p. 441):

> Die diaconi aber und sonderlich die unterdiaconi sollen diejenigen, so sie in leibesschwacheiten communicirt haben, unerfordert in ihrer krankheit zu besuchen verpflichtet sein.

But the deacons, and especially the subdeacons, shall be bound to visit, unasked, in their sickness those whom they have communicated in bodily infirmities.

16.3.4 The one exception: the acolytes of the Bohemian Brethren

The Ordo ecclesiasticus in unitate fratrum Bohemorum (1576; Bohemian Brethren), printed in Sehling's Polish section, keeps a five-step clergy:

- acolytes, then deacons, then ministers (presbyters);
- above them, con-seniors and seniors (bishops).

The acolytes are boys and young men taken into the pastor's household to be trained for the ministry. The order justifies the grade from Samuel under Eli, Elisha under Elijah, the sons of the prophets, Christ's disciples and Paul's companions, and calls it apostolic. Bohemian Brethren, Ordo ecclesiasticus in unitate fratrum Bohemorum, 1576 (Bohemian Brethren; Sehling 4, pp. 275–276):

> Acoluthi, sunt adolescentuli a pastoribus ecclesiarum in domesticam societatem, eo fine ut in futurum ecclesiae usum litteris et moribus diligentius quam apud parentes, vel alibi, instruantur, admissi. Sic etenim Samuel apud Eli, 1. Sam. III. 1. Elisaeus apud Eliam, 2. Reg. IV. 38. et turba filiorum prophetarum apud seniores suos, 2. Reg. IV. 20. exerceri soliti sunt. Sic et Christus discipulos antequam illis ministerium concredidisset, apud se fovit et exercitavit. […] Atque hinc est, quod iam inde ab apostolicis temporibus gradus iste in ecclesia usurpatus fuerit.

Acolytes are young lads admitted by the pastors of the churches into [their] household fellowship, to this end, that for the future use of the church they may be instructed in letters and manners more diligently than with their parents or elsewhere. For so Samuel was wont to be exercised with Eli, 1 Samuel 3:1; Elisha with Elijah, 2 Kings 4:38; and the company of the sons of the prophets with their elders, 2 Kings 4. So also Christ cherished and exercised the disciples with himself before he had entrusted the ministry to them. […] And hence it is that this grade hath been used in the church even from the apostolic times.

What the acolytes did, according to the same order (p. 276):

- live modestly and in willing service;
- learn the catechism, the Gospels, the shorter Epistles, the Psalms and the hymns by heart;
- read the sacred text at household prayers, and sometimes give a short exhortation on it.

They had no altar duties. The medieval acolyte's candles and cruets have become a seminary apprenticeship.

The order calls their admission an ordinatio, "the first grade of calling". It takes place before the synod, after an examination, and it has no laying on of hands; the Brethren kept that for deacons and ministers (§16.5.3, §16.8). Bohemian Brethren, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1576, "Acoluthorum ordinatio" (Bohemian Brethren; Sehling 4, p. 279):

> Est autem ordinatio I. Acoluthorum. II. Diaconorum. III. Ministrorum. IV. Conseniorum. V. Seniorum. […] 2. Provocantur nominatim ex ordine, et se in ecclesiae conspectum sistunt. 3. Interrogantur coram tota synodo, num se ecclesiae usibus consecrare velint? num obsequia promittant? 4. Praeleguntur ipsis officia; de quibus supra. 5. Horum observationem illi manu stipulata promittunt. 6. Priores acoluthi dextrae porrectione in societatem eos cooptant. 7. Omnia votis, benedictione, et cantu sacro, concluduntur.

Now the ordination is: I. Of Acolytes. II. Of Deacons. III. Of Ministers. IV. Of Con-seniors. V. Of Seniors. […] 2. They are called forth by name in order, and present themselves in the sight of the church. 3. They are asked before the whole synod whether they will consecrate themselves to the uses of the church, [and] whether they promise obedience. 4. Their duties are read to them, of which above. 5. The keeping of these they promise with hand given. 6. The former acolytes take them into [their] fellowship by reaching forth the right hand. 7. All is concluded with prayers, a blessing, and a sacred song.

16.3.5 Where the functions went

Porter. The porter's keys passed to the sexton (Opfermann, Küster, Kirchner, Mesner). This was a lay church servant, engaged and paid by the parish. Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed) draws the line from the Old Testament gatekeepers to the aeditui and custodes of its own day. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 211):

> Ahn die superintendenten, pfarherr, eltesten und diacon haben auch unser kirchen etlich andere diener, welche, dieweil sie die schlüssel zur kirchen, darin die christliche gemein zusammenkompt, haben und verwaren, auf- und zuschließen, beinahe denjenigen gleich sein, welche man im alten testament janitores genennet und heut, wiegebreuchlich, aeditui und custodes heißen. Es sollen auch dieselbige gleich wie andere diener der kirchen eines erbaren und gottseligen wandels sein, kein volseufer, nit unehrlich hantierung treiben. Es sollen aber gemelte opfermenner durch die pfarherr und eltesten darzu mit wissen und willen eines superintendenten angenommen werden.

Besides the superintendents, pastors, elders and deacons, our churches have also certain other ministers, which, forasmuch as they have and keep the keys of the church wherein the christian congregation cometh together, [and] open and shut [it], are well nigh like unto them which in the old testament were called janitores, and today, as is customary, are called aeditui and custodes. These also, like other ministers of the church, shall be of an honest and godly conversation, no drunkards, [and] shall ply no dishonest trade. But the said sextons shall be received by the pastors and elders, with the knowledge and will of a superintendent.

Hamburg puts the sexton under the pastor "with locking, with ringing at the right time". He is hired and dismissed by the lay deacons who keep the church building (Sehling 5, p. 512). Nassau-Dillenburg 1582 (Reformed) has the aeditui elected by the presbytery with the elders and deacons (§16.5.3).

Lector. Public reading passed to three groups:

- Schoolboys. At Rostock a boy reads the epistle at Vespers in Latin and another reads it in German "to the people". Rostock, Conformitas ceremoniarum in singulis templis ecclesiae Rostochiensis, 1560–1576 (Sehling 5, p. 289):

> Darnach soll die epistel von einen iungen gelesen werden lateinisch, und nach der epistel das responsorium gesungen werden, drauf sol die epistel deutesch von einem knaben dem volke furgelesen werden

Thereafter shall the epistle be read in Latin by a youth, and after the epistle the responsory be sung; whereupon shall the epistle be read in German by a boy unto the people [...]

- The junior minister. At Hof the subdiaconus, "a minister of the church", reads a collect drawn from the Sunday epistle, then the epistle, then its summary. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, p. 425):

> Minister ecclesiae, puta subdiaconus, precatiunculam ex epistola dominicali seu festivali concinatam legit, post ipsam epistolam et tandem huius summam.

A minister of the church, to wit the subdeacon, readeth a little prayer composed out of the Sunday or festival epistle; after that the epistle itself; and lastly the sum thereof.

- The assisting minister (levite) in Nürnberg, who reads a whole chapter "in place of the lesson" and expounds it (§16.4.3).

Exorcist. No exorcist appears anywhere. Strasbourg's view (1539, Moderate Reformed) that exorcism was a charism, not an office (§16.3.1), explains why. Where the exorcism in the baptismal rite was kept, the minister who baptised spoke it. The Reformed orders dropped even that. Bentheim-Tecklenburg orders the baptismal "exorcisms, which have no ground in the Word of God", to be abolished (Sehling 22, p. 269).

Acolyte. Outside the Bohemian Brethren (Hussite; §16.3.4), the acolyte's tasks at the altar either lapsed or fell to the ministrants of the early Mass orders (§16.4.1–16.4.2). The training role that the Brethren gave their acolytes was filled elsewhere by the school. Strasbourg calls the school ministry "second after the order of priests" (§16.3.1).

16.4 The liturgical roles

Most evangelical orders assume that the service is led by one minister at the altar, with the schoolmaster and boys as the choir and the sexton ringing the bells. The roles asked about are mostly absent:

- Common: the reader (§16.3.5).
- Occasional: the server or ministrant, and the assisting deacon and subdeacon at the altar.
- Common only at funerals: the cross-bearer, who is a schoolboy or the sexton, never a cleric.
- Never prescribed as a role: the thurifer, the boat-bearer, the candle-bearer and torch-bearer, and the master of ceremonies. Lights could still be carried at Brandenburg funerals (§16.4.4).

The early Mass-shaped orders of Nürnberg, Brandenburg, Pfalz-Neuburg and Regensburg are the exception. They keep assisting ministers at the altar for a time. Where those assistants are named, they are usually ordained ministers taking turns, not boys or men in minor orders.

16.4.1 Ministrants

The Nürnberg parish churches' order of 1524 keeps a ministrant at the altar. The priest asks him who has announced himself for communion. Nürnberg, Gottesdienstordnung der Pfarrkirchen, 1524 (Sehling 11, p. 52):

> Nach dem alleluia fragt der priester den ministranten, ob sich jemand hab angesagt, das heilig sacrament zu empfahen.

After the alleluia the priest asketh the ministrant whether any have announced himself to receive the holy sacrament.

Elector Joachim II's order for Brandenburg (1540) has the celebrant wear a cope or surplice, not a chasuble. It allows ministrants "in deacons' coats" (dalmatics) where there are enough clergy, as in collegiate churches, monasteries and some large towns. Brandenburg, Kirchenordnung of Joachim II, 1540 (Sehling 3, p. 71):

> da man es auch an kirchendienern haben kan, als in stiften und klöstern, auch in etlichen grossen stedten mag man zu solchem ampt auch ministranten in diaconröcken brauchen.

[…] where there can be had ministers of the church enough for it, as in foundations and cloisters, and also in certain great towns, ministrants in deacons' coats may also be used for such an office.

The same order keeps the "customary lights" at the hours and Masses. It abolishes only the special lights of the confraternities and guilds (Sehling 3, p. 71).

16.4.2 Deacon and subdeacon at the altar

Pfalz-Neuburg 1543 has the celebrant come to the altar "with his ministrants, where and when they are wont to be used". It then gives the epistle to the subdeacon, the gospel to the deacon, and the chalice to the deacon. Each of these applies only "where there are ministrants". Pfalz-Neuburg, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 13, pp. 70–71):

> Erstlich soll der priester, so die meß halten will, sampt seinen ministranten, wo und wann man dieselben zu gebrauchen pflegt, in iren gewonlichen kirchenornaten nach gewonheit einer jeden kirchen zu dem altar gehn und anfenglich darvor kniend das Confiteor oder ein feinen bußpsalm sprechen. […] Nachvolgends sol er oder der subdiaconus, wann man ministranten hat, die epistel teutsch mit lauter, verstendlicher stimme lesen […] Darnach sol er oder der diaconus, wann man ministranten hat, das evangelion auch mit lauter, verstentlicher stimm lesen

First shall the priest which will hold the mass, together with his ministrants, where and when they are wont to be used, go to the altar in their customary church vestments after the custom of each church, and at the beginning, kneeling before it, say the Confiteor or a goodly penitential psalm. […] Afterward shall he, or the subdeacon if there be ministrants, read the epistle in German with a loud and understandable voice […] Thereafter shall he, or the deacon if there be ministrants, read the gospel likewise with a loud and understandable voice […]

At the distribution (Sehling 13, p. 75):

> Desgleichen, wo man ministranten hat, sol der diaconus den kelch reichen denen, so den leib Christi genossen haben […] Wo man aber nit ministranten hat, da sol der priester den leib des Herrn erstlich jederman reichen und darnach erst den kelch

Likewise, where there are ministrants, the deacon shall reach the cup to them which have partaken of the body of Christ […] But where there are no ministrants, there shall the priest first reach the body of the Lord to every man, and only after that the cup.

Heilbronn's order of 1530 has the preacher stand at the rood altar "with his two deacons in surplices". The preacher speaks the words of Christ, and the deacons distribute. Heilbronn's Diaconi were the town's assistant preachers. Heilbronn, „Confessio Heilbronnensis“ und Kirchenordnung, 1530 (Sehling 17/1, p. 285):

> Nach demselben went sich der prediger ob dem Creutzaltar mit seinen zweien Diaconis in korröken gegen dem volkh, verkundigt den thod Christi, was man suchen soll im abenntmall, denen, die dann vorhanden sind. Darnach spricht der prediger die wortt Christi uber das brott und den wein unnd nach demselben reichen die Diaconi daß sacrament von dem altar denen, so deß begeren

After the same the preacher turneth himself at the rood altar, with his two Deacons in surplices, toward the people, [and] proclaimeth the death of Christ, [and] what one ought to seek in the supper, to them that are then present. Thereafter the preacher speaketh the words of Christ over the bread and the wine; and after the same the Deacons reach the sacrament from the altar to them that desire it […]

In both orders the deacon distributes but does not consecrate. This division of labour runs through all the orders that have an assisting deacon.

The Regensburg order of 1553, drawn up under Justus Jonas, works with a weekly rota of the town's ordained ministers:

- the Wochner (the minister on duty that week) celebrates;
- the second minister, "ministrant or deacon", says the Confiteor with him and gives the cup;
- the third reads a chapter from the pulpit and holds the houseling cloth;
- the fourth, in a surplice, holds the cloth by the cup.

Regensburg, Kirchenordnung unter Justus Jonas, 1553 (Sehling 13, pp. 419–421):

> Erstlich so kombt der priester (das ist der minister, welcher, wie obstehet, wochner ist) sambt zwaien ministranten oder diaconen fur den altar […] Der priester selb raicht den leib Christi dem volk auf seiner seiten, der ministrant oder diaconus (der secundus ist) raicht das bluet Christi dem volk auf der andern seiten des altars. Der diaconus aber, so tercius ist, helt das tuechlein auf des priesters seiten, der den leib raicht. Derjenig aber, so quartus ist, helt das tuechle bei dem diacono, der das bluet raicht, in einem chorrock. Wo aber kein minister vorhanden, so tuet es der prediger oder pfarherr.

First cometh the priest (that is, the minister which, as is above said, is of the week) with two ministrants or deacons before the altar […] The priest himself reacheth the body of Christ to the people on his side; the ministrant or deacon (which is second) reacheth the blood of Christ to the people on the other side of the altar. But the deacon which is third holdeth the little cloth on the side of the priest which reacheth the body. And he which is fourth holdeth the cloth beside the deacon which reacheth the blood, in a surplice. But where no minister is at hand, then the preacher or the pastor doeth it.

The places of the ministers at the altar are treated in Chapter 2, §2.15.8.

16.4.3 Levites: kept, then abolished

In the south German imperial cities, the two assistants at the altar were called levites, a gospeller and an epistoler. Sehling's editor notes that outside cathedrals they were in practice priests (Sehling 13, p. 391, note 6). Regensburg's first evangelical service, described in the "True Report" of 1542, has them in full. Regensburg, Wahrhaftiger Bericht, 1542 (Sehling 13, pp. 391, 393):

> Unter diser letanei geen drei kirchendiener, nemlich der priester, so das ambt singet, sambt zwaien leviten, nemlichen einem evangelier und einem epistler, aus dem sagra zum altar, darauf das volk gespeiset werden solle, und betet der priester sambt dem evangelier das Confiteor. So verordnet dhweil der epistler den kelch, buech, partikl und paten auf den altar. […] Der epistler aber helt das tuchle, daruber das volk den leib Christi empfecht und, so jemants aus einfalt etwo ein ungeschickligkeit brauchte, den unterweist und bericht er, wie er sich halten solle.

During this litany three ministers of the church go out of the sacristy to the altar whereat the people is to be fed, namely, the priest which singeth the office, together with two levites, namely a gospeller and an epistoler; and the priest with the gospeller prayeth the Confiteor. Meanwhile the epistoler setteth in order the chalice, book, particles and paten upon the altar. […] But the epistoler holdeth the little cloth over which the people receiveth the body of Christ; and if any out of simplicity should use some awkwardness, him he instructeth and informeth how he ought to behave himself.

Nürnberg's report to the council of Goslar (1528) gives the levites the reading and the exhortation. One reads and expounds a whole chapter of the Epistles "in place of the lesson". One gives the exhortation to the communicants before the altar. Nürnberg, Bericht der Stadt Nürnberg für den Goslarer Rat, 30 March 1528 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 230):

> Nach solichem tritt der leviten eyner uff den predigestol und liest an stadt der lection ein gantz capittel auß Sanct Petrus, Sanct Paulsen oder Sanct Johannesen epistolen […] Darauff alßbalde tritt der leviten eyner fur den altar und thut in teutscher sprach ein christliche ermanunge

After this one of the levites goeth up into the pulpit, and readeth in place of the lesson a whole chapter out of the epistles of Saint Peter, Saint Paul or Saint John […] Thereupon straightway one of the levites goeth before the altar and maketh in the German tongue a christian exhortation […]

Abolition. The levites, and the dalmatics and chasubles that went with them, were the target of deliberate abolition in the 1550s and 1560s. In April 1554 Nikolaus Gallus and the council of Regensburg had a declaration read to the congregation. It gives two grounds:

- The levitical garments come from the Old Testament priesthood and the papal Mass, both now ended in Christ.
- The pope now requires them as necessary to true worship, and Christian liberty must show "the contrary".

Regensburg, Warum die leviten- und meßgewand sollen abgetan werden, 29 April 1554 (Sehling 13, p. 432):

> Ein ehrbar rat hat sampt uns dienern des worts für gut angesehen, das die leviten- und meßgewand bei der communion in unser christlichen kirchen alhie wie bei vielen andern hinfort genzlich abgetan sein sollen. Dasselbig aus nachvolgenden ursachen: Erstlich, das beide stück (wie zum teil die namen noch anzeigen) vom levitischen priestertum > des alten testaments und von des bapsts messe in unser kirchen kommen und ihre bedeutung auf den zukünftigen Christum gehabt haben. Weil wir denn im neuen testament von gesetzen des levitischen priestertums frei und von des bapsts gotteslesterischen messe ledig sind, den cörper Christum selbs und im abendmahl nach den worten Christi nit mehr denn ein communion haben, so lassen wir billich den jüdischen schatten faren sampt demjenigen, was des bapsts messe anhanget und dienet. Zum andern sind die leviten- und meßgewand nit allein vom bapst unrecht in die christliche kirchen des neuen testaments eingefüret, sondern werden von ihm noch aufs neu geboten und als nötig zum waren gottesdienst mit aberglauben und abgöttischer meinung erfordert. Derhalben, wie wir sonst vom bapst, von seiner falschen lere und falschen gottesdienst recht abgesondert sind, also sollen wir auch hierin von ihm fort ganz sein gescheiden und zu erzeigung unser christlichen freiheit dieses fals das widerspiel beweisen.

An honourable council, together with us ministers of the word, hath thought good that the levites' and mass vestments shall henceforth be wholly done away at the communion in our christian church here, as with many others. And that for the following causes. First, that both pieces (as in part the names yet shew) came into our church from the levitical priesthood of the old testament and from the pope's mass, and had their signification upon Christ which was to come. Since then in the new testament we are free from the laws of the levitical priesthood and quit of the pope's blasphemous mass, [and] have the body, Christ himself, and in the supper, according to the words of Christ, no more than a communion, we rightly let the Jewish shadow go, together with that which hangeth upon and serveth the pope's mass. Secondly, the levites' and mass vestments were not only wrongly brought by the pope into the christian church of the new testament, but are yet commanded by him anew, and required as necessary to the true service of God with superstitious and idolatrous opinion. Therefore, as we are otherwise rightly separated from the pope, from his false doctrine and false service of God, so shall we also herein be wholly parted from him henceforth, and, for the shewing of our christian liberty, prove the contrary in this case.

Regensburg's church order of 1567(?) records that the levites, the vestments and the altar lights were all "let fall" in the end. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, 1567(?) (Sehling 13, p. 480):

> Demnach haben wir auch die kirchenkleidung, als meßgewand, stolen, leviten usw. gleich wie auch die liechter, so von anfang der reinen lere gleichwol lange zeit in unser pfarrhe mit gehalten worden, entlich sampt den obgemelten, etlichen feiertägen lassen fallen aus ursachen, das die ding aus dem alten testament von dem levitischen priestertum, so sein ende hat, mit unverstand sind in das neue testament eingefürt und in eitel bapstisch abgötterei gewendet.

Accordingly we have also at last let fall the church vesture, as chasubles, stoles, levites etc., as also the lights, which from the beginning of the pure doctrine were nevertheless kept a long time in our parish, together with certain of the holy days above mentioned; for the causes that these things were brought without understanding out of the old testament, from the levitical priesthood, which hath its end, into the new testament, and turned into mere papistical idolatry.

The chapter order of Brandenburg-Ansbach (1565, revised 1578) forbids them outright at the clergy's chapter meetings. Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Kapitelsordnung, 1565/78 (Sehling 11, p. 357):

> Es sollen auch keine leviten bapstischem prauch nach dargestellet werden.

Neither shall any levites be set forth after the papistical use.

16.4.4 Thurifer, boat-bearer and candle-bearer

Luther's Formula missae leaves both candles and incense at the gospel free. Luther, Formula missae et communionis pro ecclesia Wittembergensi, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 5):

> Sexto sequitur evangelii lectio. Ubi nec candelas neque thurificationem prohibemus, sed nec exigimus. Esto hoc liberum.

Sixthly followeth the reading of the gospel. Wherein we neither forbid candles nor censing, but neither do we require them. Let this be free.

Lippe (1538) lists incense among the abuses to be dropped from the Mass, while it leaves vestments, albs and lights free. Lippe, Lippische Kirchenordnung, 1538 (Sehling 21, p. 318):

> mit itlichen korten ceremonien, ahne water in den kelch, wirock, vele creutze tho makende unnd andere mißbruke. Averm missewant, alven, lechte, ruchellen sint friggn.

[…] with certain short ceremonies, without water in the chalice, incense, the making of many crosses, and other abuses. But chasubles, albs, lights [and] rochets are free.

No later order in the corpus takes up Luther's freedom for incense. No order prescribes a thurifer or a boat-bearer. Censing is mentioned only in descriptions of the old Mass, or in lists of things abolished.

Altar lights were kept in many Lutheran territories, as in Brandenburg 1540 above. But they were lit and tended by the sexton, and no order makes carrying them a liturgical role. No candle-bearer (accensor, ceroferarius) or torch-bearer is prescribed, not even at the gospel or the elevation. Regensburg let its lights fall with the levites (§16.4.3). Lights were still carried in two places outside the service. Electoral Brandenburg let the old custom of carrying lights at funerals "remain with measure" (Sehling 3, p. 81). The early Baden order of 1533 kept the sacrament carried to the sick "with light and bells going before" (Sehling 16, p. 510). Neither names who carried them.

16.4.5 Cross-bearer, and the roles not found

The processional cross went with the processions themselves. Freiberg 1537 lists "going with the cross" among the human ordinances to be done away (§16.3.3). In Brandenburg it survived in the Rogation-tide procession, where it is carried before the schoolboys, the priests and the people. Stendal, ordinance of the visitors of the Mark Brandenburg, 1541 (Sehling 3, p. 314):

> und hernach die processionen ordentlich halten, als am ersten ein kreuz vorher tragen, dornach die schuler, folgend die priester und hernach die man, junkfrauen und frauen

[…] and afterward hold the processions in order: as, first, to carry a cross before, thereafter the scholars, following them the priests, and after them the men, maidens and women […]

Schwäbisch Hall's church order of 1543, in its revision of 1615, allows a cross before a coffin. It must be used "not effectively but significatively", that is, as a sign that the dead died trusting in Christ's cross, not as a thing that works anything. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung 1543/1615, *Ordnung der Begrebnus (Sehling 17/1, p. 173):

> Inmassen auch an ihm selbst nit unrecht ist, ein Creutz vor der Leich hertragen, wann es ohne Aberglauben und Abgötterey geschicht, Nemblich also, daß es nit effective, sondern significative gebraucht wirt, anzuzeigen, daß der Todte auff das Creutz Jesu Christi abgestorben.

Inasmuch as it is also not in itself wrong to carry a cross before the corpse, when it is done without superstition and idolatry; namely so, that it be used not effectively but significatively, to shew that the dead man died upon the cross of Jesus Christ.

No order makes the crucifer an office, but several name the bearer, and he is never a cleric:

- A schoolboy. In Anhalt's order of the German hymns (before 1551) "a boy from the school shall carry a cross on a staff before the procession" at burials (Sehling 2, p. 555). At Prenzlau in 1557 the cross is "carried before by the scholars" (Sehling 3, p. 261).
- The sexton. In Waldeck in 1556 "the sexton or Opfermann shall go with a cross", followed by the schoolboys, the schoolmaster and the pastor (Sehling 9, p. 256).

In Electoral Brandenburg the cross went before the schoolboys and the priests at every funeral (Sehling 3, p. 81). Freiberg in 1538 required a crucifix at every burial (Sehling 1, p. 468). The full evidence on who walked in processions and what was carried is in Chapter 13 §13.18.4.

Not found. The corpus contains no prescribed role of candle-bearer (accensor, ceroferarius), torch-bearer, boat-bearer or master of ceremonies. The nearest thing to the last is the cantor or schoolmaster, who directs the choir and the sung parts of the service. He is a school officer, not a liturgical minister. The orders of service are addressed to the pastor himself, and they set out the ceremonies he is to observe.

16.5 The diaconate

The diaconate survived in three forms, and an order often has more than one of them under the same name:

- the Lutheran *Diaconus: an ordained assistant minister of the word and sacraments (§16.5.1);

- the liturgical deacon: an assistant at the altar, normally himself one of the ordained ministers (§16.4.2–16.4.3);
- the lay deacon of the poor: an elected steward of alms and church goods, based on Acts 6 (§16.5.2–16.5.3).

16.5.1 The Lutheran Diaconus: an assistant minister, ordained like a pastor

In the Lutheran town churches the Diaconus (also Helfer, Kaplan, Capellan) is a second or third minister, and the Subdiaconus (§16.3.3) a third or fourth. Each preaches, baptises, hears confession, communes the sick and gives the cup at the altar. Halle provides each of its three parish churches with "a pastor and two deacons, who are all fit to preach, to reach the sacrament and to perform other church business". Halle, Kirchen-Ordnung der christlichen Gemein zu Hall in Sachsen, 1573(?) (Sehling 2, p. 442):

> dass itzt bestelte oft ernannte drei pfar kirchen S. Mariae, S. Ulrici und Mauritii, und mit drei personen, nämlichen einen pfarher und zweien diaconis versehen und erhalten werde, die alle zu predigen, sacrament zu reichen und andere kirchengeschäfte zuverrichten tüchtig sind.

[…] that the three parish churches now established and oft named, St Mary, St Ulrich and [St] Maurice, be provided and maintained with three persons, namely one pastor and two deacons, which are all fit to preach, to reach the sacrament, and to perform other business of the church.

The same ordination. The Diaconus is ordained with the same rite as the pastor. Electoral Saxony's form for ordaining and investing "a new minister of the church" names "the new pastor or deacon" throughout. The superintendent lays his right hand on him, as a ceremony "of christian liberty". He then "ordains, confirms and establishes" him, "by divine command and ordinance, to be a minister and curate of souls of this congregation". Electoral Saxony, Kirchenordnung of Elector August, 1580 (Sehling 1, pp. 382–383):

> Unter dem gesang sol der superintendens vor den altar treten, den neuen pfarren oder diacon zu sich berufen, und vor ihm zu dem gebet niederknien lassen […] sol sich der superintendens vor dem altar gegen dem volk wenden, und wie (nach christlicher freiheit, so von dem herrn Christo der kirchen in eusserlichen mittelmessigen ceremonien gegeben) gebreuchlich, sein rechte hand dem neuen pfarrer oder diacon auf sein blos heubt legen, und also sagen. Dieweil wir im heiligen geist versamlet, gott unsern himlischen vater durch Jesum Christum unsern herrn und heiland uber dich angerufen und gebeten, und deshalben nicht zweifeln, er werde uns, laut seiner göttlichen zusagung, gnediglich erhört und gewert haben, demnach so ordne, confirmire und bestetige ich dich, aus göttlichem befehl und ordnung, zu einem diener und seelsorger dieser gemein

During the singing the superintendent shall step before the altar, call the new pastor or deacon to him, and cause him to kneel before him to prayer […] the superintendent shall turn himself before the altar toward the people, and, as is customary (according to the christian liberty given by the Lord Christ to the church in outward indifferent ceremonies), lay his right hand upon the bare head of the new pastor or deacon, and say thus: Forasmuch as we, gathered in the Holy Ghost, have called upon and prayed God our heavenly Father through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour over thee, and therefore doubt not that he, according to his divine promise, hath graciously heard and granted us; therefore I ordain, confirm and establish thee, by divine command and ordinance, to be a minister and curate of souls of this congregation […]

A step, not an order. The diaconate is normally the first post of a young minister, but it is not a necessary stage. The same order allows a candidate of exceptional gifts to be made a pastor "without the means of the diaconate". Electoral Saxony, Kirchenordnung, 1580 (Sehling 1, pp. 381–382):

> Da aber einer im examine dermassen gelert, geschickt und erfaren, und mit gaben zuleren ausgerüstet, und im predigen schon geübet, darzu der rituum ecclesiae notdürftiglich berichtet erfunden, mag mit demselben dispensiret, und solche person ohne mittel des diaconats, zu einem pfarrer verordnet und angenommen werden.

But if one be found in the examination so learned, apt and experienced, and furnished with gifts to teach, and already practised in preaching, and moreover sufficiently instructed in the rites of the church, then may there be dispensation with him, and such a person may be appointed and received to be a pastor without the means of the diaconate.

This Lutheran diaconate is therefore a rank in one ministry, distinguished by benefice, seniority and duties. It is not a sacramental grade. The Diaconus could do everything the pastor did. He was subject to the pastor, as the pastor was to the superintendent, by "human" order (§16.5.4).

The deacon's duties alongside the pastor are treated in Chapter 15, §15.3.5.

16.5.2 Lay deacons of the poor in the Lutheran orders

Bugenhagen's orders for Brunswick (1528), Hamburg (1529) and Lübeck (1531) created the most widespread lay diaconate of the Reformation. These are the deacons of the common chest (diakene der schatkaste) and deacons of the poor (diakene der armen): honest burghers elected for a term to keep the treasury, collect and distribute alms, and look after the ministers' maintenance. Bugenhagen grounds the office on Acts 6 and the qualifications in 1 Timothy 3, which he expounds clause by clause. In passing he equates bishops and preachers. Brunswick, Kirchenordnung of Johannes Bugenhagen, 1528 (Sehling 6/1, p. 449):

> dat de diakene scholen syn redelick, de eyn gut ruchte hebben, dat se alse ehrlike frame lude in allen dingen nicht unrecht handelen. Item dat se nicht twetungich syn, wen wo kan me deme sulk gelt unde denst der armen bevehlen, de gerne legen unde achterkosen, vor mynen ogenen wit seggen unde anderswör swart. Sulke plegen ock hader unde afval wedder de bischoppe edder predicanten (welk alle eyn dink is) anrichten etc. Item: Nicht wynsuchtich edder eyn drunkenbolt, wente sulk eyn wert syne collatie söken van der armen gelde

[…] that the deacons shall be honest, such as have a good report, that as honourable, godly people they deal not wrongly in any thing. Item, that they be not double-tongued; for how can one commit such money and the service of the poor to him that loveth to lie and to backbite, [that] saith white before mine eyes and elsewhere black? Such are wont also to stir up strife and falling away against the bishops or preachers (which is all one thing), etc. Item: not given to wine, or a drunkard; for such an one will seek his collation out of the money of the poor […]

What they might not do. Bugenhagen's deacons do not minister the word. In the early Church Stephen and Lawrence comforted the poor with God's word, but "with us" the visiting of the sick belongs to the preachers, and "our deacons only procure money from the common chest for the needy" (§16.3.3).

Collegiate control. In Hamburg 3 or 4 deacons alone may not lend or make any substantial grant from the poor's goods. That is done only when "the sixteen deacons" meet on Saturday. Hamburg, Hamburger Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 535):

> Vorlenen edder wat stadliken geven van dussem gude der armen schollen sick dre edder veer diakene nicht understaen, sunder id schall scheen, wen des sonnavendes de sostein diakene edder de meisten van en, wen jo etlike nicht kamen konnen, tosamende sint

To lend, or to give any thing of substance, out of these goods of the poor, three or four deacons shall not take upon themselves; but it shall be done when on the Saturday the sixteen deacons, or the most of them if some cannot come, are together […]

Lübeck's order of 1531 follows Hamburg's. Every Saturday the three youngest deacons of each parish, who hold the keys, empty the poor chest and carry its contents to St Mary's (Sehling 5, p. 359).

Hamburg's deacons also hire and dismiss the sexton and the organists. They care for the widows and orphans of deceased preachers. They give yearly gifts to the midwives, who in turn report poor women in childbed to them (Sehling 5, pp. 512–513).

Other names for the same office. The lay deacon of the poor appears under several names:

- Leviten in the Land Hadeln. They collect at the church door during the general prayer, go from house to house once a year for corn, admit the deserving poor to the hospitals "by the counsel and with the will of the pastor", and maintain the preachers and the poor from the common chest. Hadeln, Hadelner Kirchenordnung, 1526 (Sehling 5, p. 472):

> dat de leviten, alse men se nöhmet, de predicanten und rechte armen darmit schölen underholden. […] Alle sondage und hoge feste schall ein van den leviten mit der bede umme gan in der kerken, dewile de predicante up dem stole steit und deit dat gemene gebedt. […] Na rade unde mit willen des pastors schölen de leviten in de gasthuse nehmen edder hospitale andere hussarmen, dat rechte armen sint.

[…] that the levites, as they are called, shall maintain therewith the preachers and the true poor. […] Every Sunday and high feast one of the levites shall go about with the bag in the church while the preacher standeth in the pulpit and maketh the common prayer. […] By the counsel and with the will of the pastor the levites shall take into the guest-houses or hospitals other house-poor, which are truly poor.

- Subdiaconi oder Bittherren at St Wenzel's in Naumburg. There are twelve: three from the council and the rest from the community. They stand at the church doors with collecting boards. Naumburg, Kirchen-Ordnung für die St. Wenzelskirche, 1537 (Sehling 2, p. 64):

> Von den bitthern. Darnach sollen zwölf subdiaconi oder bittherrn, drei aus dem rathe, sieben aus der gemeine verordnet werden, under welchen alle feiertage sechse für der kirchenthür, so balde die predigt aus ist, vor jeder thuer einer mit einer tafel stehen und den armen leuten das almosen bitten

Of the beggar-lords. Thereafter shall twelve subdeacons, or beggar-lords, be appointed, three out of the council, seven out of the community; of whom every holy day six shall stand before the church doors as soon as the sermon is out, before each door one, with a board, and beg the alms for the poor people […]

- Diaconi in Pomerania. At Pyritz (1539) two come from the council and two from the guilds. They are expressly not put under oath, but they must render account yearly. Pyritz, Abschied, 1539 (Sehling 4, p. 519):

> Visitatores wollen verständigt sein, aus welchem corpore die diaconi erwählt werden. Darauf geantwort, dass zwei aus dem rathe und zwei von den werken zu diaconis erwählt, aber nicht mit keinem eide beladen werden und müssen alle jahre vor dem rathe zu Pyritz rechnung thun.

The visitors desire to be informed out of what body the deacons are chosen. Whereto answer was made, that two out of the council and two from the guilds are chosen to be deacons, but are not laden with any oath, and must every year render account before the council at Pyritz.

The Pomeranian synod of 1574 requires the opposite, an oath. Pomerania, Statuta synodica, 1574 (Sehling 4, p. 491):

> II. Pastores attendant, ut idonei eligantur diaconi ecclesiae et pauperum, et ut iidem jurejurando fidem suam ecclesiae vel pauperibus, juxta ordinationem ecclesiasticam obstringant, et quotannis, praesente magistratu et pastore, rationem reddant.

II. Let the pastors take heed that fit deacons of the church and of the poor be chosen, and that the same bind their faith to the church or to the poor by oath, according to the church order, and yearly render account in the presence of the magistrate and the pastor.

- Diaconi, dat is der armen dieners in Lippe (1538). Every parish church is to "ordain" them and set up a common chest. The word ordiniren here means no more than to appoint. Lippe, Lippische Kirchenordnung, 1538 (Sehling 21, p. 335):

> Hirumb is nodig einer ideren kespelkirchen, diaconos, dat is der armen dieners, tho ordinirende und einenn gemeinenn kasten anthorichtende

Therefore it is needful for every parish church to ordain deacons, that is, servants of the poor, and to set up a common chest […]

The office spread to the Lutheran stranger churches. The Dutch congregation of the Augsburg Confession at Frankfurt founded its poor chest in 1585 and chose as its first diaconi Michael Bode and Lorenz, "the schoolmaster here". Frankfurt, Stiftungsbrief des Armenkastens der Niederländischen Gemeinde A. C., 1585 (Lutheran; Sehling 9, p. 604):

> indem sie zu den ersten diaconis erwählet Michael Bode und Lorenz, allhiesigen schulmeister, und zu deputirten die herrn Arnd van Nieden, Peter van Leyden und Renatus Verbeke, absens, welche im nahmen des herrn dieses ihr amt angenommen haben.

[…] in that they chose for the first deacons Michael Bode and Lorenz, the schoolmaster here, and for deputies the lords Arnd van Nieden, Peter van Leyden and Renatus Verbeke (absent), which in the name of the Lord have taken upon them this their office.

Sehling's editors of the Hildesheim volume point out that Bugenhagen counted the maintenance of ministers and the poor as part of "divine order". They conclude that the deacon's office must, by its function, be of divine right (§16.5.4).

16.5.3 Hesse, the Reformed churches and the Bohemian Brethren: deacons as an ordained lay office

In the Hessian order of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) and in the Reformed orders, the deacon of the poor becomes one of the standing offices of the congregation, alongside the ministers of the word and the elders. He is chosen by the Spirit's own rule (Acts 6:3; 1 Timothy 3:8–12), put on probation (1 Timothy 3:10), and ordained.

Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed) gives the scriptural qualifications. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 210):

> hat uns der heilig Geist selbst gezeiget, was vor leut zu diesem ampt erwelet und gebraucht werden sollen. Man muß erwelen, sagen die aposteln (Act. 6, 3), menner, die ein gut gerucht haben und vol heiliges Geistes und weisheit seint. Und der heilig apostel Paulus, 1. Tim. 3 (8f. 12), die diacon sollen erbar sein, nit zweizüngig, nicht weinseufer, nicht unehrliche handtirung treiben, die das geheimnis des glaubens in reinem gewissen haben, eines weibes mann […] und die ihr kinder und ganzes hausgesind wol regiren. (a. R.: Probatio) Welche nun erwelet seint, die sollen mit den andern, so in diesem ampt sein, ein zeitlang sich uben und brauchen, damit sie sich zu diesem ampt zuvor bereiten und geschickt machen, auf daß auch hiemit ihr glaub, fleiß und aufrichtigkeit an ihn probirt und bewert werde.

[…] the Holy Ghost himself hath shewed us what manner of men should be chosen and used for this office. Ye must choose, say the apostles (Acts 6:3), men which have a good report and are full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom. And the holy apostle Paul, 1 Timothy 3: the deacons shall be grave, not double-tongued, not given to wine, not plying a dishonest trade, which hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, the husband of one wife […] and which rule their children and whole household well. (In the margin: Probation.) They then which are chosen shall exercise and employ themselves for a time with the others which are in this office, that they may prepare and make themselves apt for this office beforehand, to the end that hereby also their faith, diligence and uprightness may be proved and tried in them.

Hesse (1566, Moderate Reformed) holds that the apostles ordained deacons "with common prayer and laying on of hands". It therefore ordains both elders and deacons in their own church, while noting that the deacon's office "is not equal to the service of the elders". Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, pp. 207–208):

> Es haben auch die aposteln mit dem gemeinen gebet und auflegung der hende die diacon ordiniret und bestetiget, Act. 6 [1-6], welches ampt doch dem dienst der eltesten beiweilen nicht gleich ist. Es sollen aber alweg diese eltesten und auch die diacon in derselbigen kirchen ordiniret werden, welcher sie dienen sollen, und dies soll entweder der superintendens, wan er daselbst visitiret, oder sonst irgents ein pfarherr sampt einem oder zweien dienern des worts verrichten.

The apostles also ordained and confirmed the deacons with common prayer and laying on of hands, Acts 6; which office nevertheless is by no means equal to the service of the elders. But these elders, and the deacons also, shall always be ordained in the same church which they are to serve; and this shall be performed either by the superintendent, when he visiteth there, or else by some pastor together with one or two ministers of the word.

Micron's Ordinancien (Reformed). These are the order of the Dutch stranger church in London (1554), as printed for Norden in East Frisia in 1565. They set "four deacons or ministers of the poor, after the apostolic order" beside the elders. Micron, Ordinancien (1554) 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 583):

> Bald darnach haben wir auch vier diaken oder diener der armen nach der apostolischen ordnung mit bewilligung der gemeine angenommen.

Soon after we also received, with the consent of the congregation, four deacons or ministers of the poor after the apostolic order.

The deacons are confirmed with a form modelled on that for the elders (§16.6.3). They are presented to the congregation and questioned:

- whether they feel the inward witness of the Spirit;
- whether they hold the prophetic and apostolic doctrine sufficient;
- whether they will gather and distribute the alms faithfully "without respect of persons";
- whether they will submit to Christian discipline.

The congregation prays, "as thou didst give thy Spirit to Stephen". Then hands are laid on them. Micron, Ordinancien (1554) 1565, chapter VII, "Form der bestetigung der diaken oder almosenpfleger" (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, pp. 597–598):

> Wollet ihr nicht die almussen zum nutz der armen fleisig samlen und die versamleten treulich und weißlich den armen außteilen, und insonderheit den haußgenossen des glaubens, one einigs eusserliches ansehen der person, sonder allein nach eines jeden noturft und armut? Sie antworten: Ja, wir, durch die gnade Gottes. […] Wann das gebet volendet ist, werden ihnen die hende aufgelegt, und der diener spricht mit heller stimme also: Gott der Herr und unser himlischer Vater, der euch zu dem dienst der diakeney beruffen hat, der regiere euch gendiglich mit seiner göttlichen kraft, weißheit und gütigkeit

Will ye not diligently gather the alms for the profit of the poor, and faithfully and wisely distribute that which is gathered unto the poor, and especially unto the household of faith, without any outward respect of the person, but only according to each one's need and poverty? They answer: Yea, we will, by the grace of God. […] When the prayer is ended, hands are laid upon them, and the minister saith with a clear voice thus: God the Lord and our heavenly Father, which hath called you to the service of the diaconate, govern you graciously with his divine power, wisdom and goodness […]

Sehling's editor notes that in London (Reformed) the elders and the deacons had been installed with prayer and laying on of hands since 1550. In Emden (Reformed) laying on of hands "is not attested", and the deacons there were apparently not installed after the same pattern as the elders (Sehling 7/1, pp. 554–555, editor's introduction).

Without laying on of hands. Several Reformed orders install deacons with no laying on of hands:

- Kurpfalz (1563), followed by Moers (1581) and Bentheim-Tecklenburg (1588/1619), all Reformed. They have "pious and godly men, whom they call diaconi or almoners", elected per 1 Timothy 3:8. They collect the alms on Sundays and distribute them, and are confirmed "with the knowledge and will of the pastors and appointed seniors". No laying on of hands is mentioned. Bentheim-Tecklenburg, Bentheim-Tecklenburger Kirchenordnung, 1588/1619 (Reformed; Sehling 22, p. 276):

> fromme und gottselige Männer, die man Diaconos oder Almusenpfleger nennet, erwehlet und mit wissen und willen der Pastorn und verordneten Senioren bestettigt werden, vermug der Lehr und gebrauchs der H. Aposteln

[…] pious and godly men, whom men call Deacons or Almoners, be chosen, and confirmed with the knowledge and will of the Pastors and the appointed Seniors, according to the doctrine and use of the holy Apostles […]

- Nassau-Dillenburg (1582) (Reformed). Here the deacon is the fourth of four offices: ministers, doctors, seniors and deacons. The presbytery elects the seniors, the deacons of the poor and the sextons (aeditui), and the classis confirms them. The minister alone receives "confirmation or ordination". Nassau-Dillenburg, Kirchenordnung, 23 January 1582 (Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 160):

> Officia sunt quadruplicia, alia ministrorum, alia doctorum, alia seniorum, alia diaconorum. […] 4. Vocatio ministrorum fiat iudicio classis et aliquot seniorum, ad quam pertinent haec quatuor: electio, examen, approbatio et confirmatio seu ordinatio. […] 5. Quod ad seniores, diaconos pauperum et aedituos eligendos, potestas eligendi sit penes presbyterium, qui postea suffragio classici conventus confirmandi ac diligenter de officio admonendi erunt.

The offices are fourfold: some of ministers, some of doctors, some of seniors, some of deacons. […] 4. Let the calling of ministers be made by the judgement of the classis and of some seniors; whereunto pertain these four: election, examination, approbation, and confirmation or ordination. […] 5. As touching the choosing of seniors, deacons of the poor and sextons, let the power of choosing be with the presbytery; who afterward shall be confirmed by the vote of the classical assembly and be diligently admonished of [their] office.

The Bohemian Brethren (Hussite). Their deacon is something else: an ordained clerical grade between acolyte and minister. The deacons are "older acolytes", preparing for the ministry. The order defends the grade as kept "constantly in the primitive church", which must not be cast out though Antichrist abused it. Bohemian Brethren, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1576 (Hussite; Sehling 4, p. 276):

> Diaconi sunt adultiores acoluthi, futuro ministerio iam iam sese praeparantes. Hos fratrum ministri pro administris, sive adiutoribus, habent, apostolorum exemplo, Act. VI. v. 2. et Philipp. I. 1. Quamuis enim ab apostolis primario ad mensarum ministeria ordinati erant; constat tamen et praedicasse ipsos, et baptizasse (ut Stephanus, Act. VI. 10. et Philippus Act. VIII. 5. 12. 35. 38.) et ad gradum superiorem, ministerii nempe seu presbyterii, promotos fuisse, 1. Timoth. III. 13. Itaque > gradus hic diaconatus in primitiva ecclesia constanter fuit servatus: ut ex conciliorum canonibus patet. Quem proinde, etiamsi ab antichristo cum ceteris in abusum tractus sit, ab ecclesia eliminari non convenit.

Deacons are the older acolytes, now presently preparing themselves for the future ministry. These the ministers of the brethren have for assistants or helpers, after the example of the apostles, Acts 6:2 and Philippians 1:1. For although they were ordained by the apostles primarily to the ministry of tables, yet it is certain that they both preached and baptised (as Stephen, Acts 6:10, and Philip, Acts 8:5, 12, 35, 38) and were promoted to a higher grade, namely of the ministry or presbytery, 1 Timothy 3:13. Therefore this grade of the diaconate was constantly kept in the primitive church, as appeareth from the canons of the councils. Which therefore, although it hath been drawn into abuse by the antichrist with the rest, it is not fitting to cast out of the church.

What the Brethren's deacons did (same page):

- study theology;
- teach the young the rudiments;
- practise preaching;
- baptise "as often as the pastor shall command".

At a crowded communion they help distribute both the bread and the cup, but with one limit: only a minister "having the power of the keys" pronounces the absolution and recites the words of institution. Bohemian Brethren, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1576 (Hussite; Sehling 4, p. 276):

> Quoties frequentiori coetu sacra coena administratur, nec sufficientes adsunt ministri, adhibentur etiam diaconi ad distribuendum, nonsolum calicem, sed et panem; ita tamen, ut non nisi minister, clavium potestatem habens, absolutionem populo annuntiet, et verba institutionis solemniter praemittat.

As often as the holy supper is administered in a more numerous assembly, and sufficient ministers are not present, the deacons also are employed to distribute not only the cup but also the bread; yet so that none but a minister having the power of the keys announce the absolution to the people and solemnly set forth before the words of institution.

They are ordained before the synod, with an examination by the seniors, a vow, prayer and the laying on of hands, "Acts 6:6". Bohemian Brethren, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1576, "Diaconorum ordinatio" (Hussite; Sehling 4, p. 279):

> 3. Illi Christo et ecclesiae voto se obstringunt. 4. Preces pro ipsis fiunt, ordinatorque manuum impositione eos confirmat, Act. VI. 6. 5. Offerunt novi diaconi senioribus et ministris obedientiae sanctae; priores vero diaconi illis societatis, dextram. 6. Benedictione actus clauditur.

3. They bind themselves to Christ and the church by a vow. 4. Prayers are made for them, and the ordainer confirmeth them by the laying on of hands, Acts 6:6. 5. The new deacons offer to the seniors and ministers the right hand of holy obedience; and the former deacons [offer] to them [the right hand] of fellowship. 6. The act is closed with a blessing.

16.5.4 Divine right or human right?

The question as the church orders put it. No order asks whether the diaconate is a separate order by divine right in the Roman sense. The orders ask two other questions:

1. Is there one ministry of the word, of which bishop, pastor and deacon are grades?
2. Is the deacon of the poor a lasting institution of the apostles?

One ministry; grades by human right. The orders consistently say that bishop, presbyter and pastor are one office:

- Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed): "bishops, or presbyters" (§16.3.2).
- Bugenhagen 1528: "bishops or preachers (which is all one thing)" (§16.5.2).
- Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1539. It describes the ancient Church as installing a minister "by one or two of the nearest bishops, whom men also call pastors". It says that it now has "certain of the nearest pastors or elders" lay hands on the new minister. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Kirchenordnung „Form und Ordnung“, 1539 (Sehling 18, p. 63):

> das die gemein einen welet, der ward von einem oder zweien der nechsten bischoffen, die man auch pastores oder pfarher nennet, eingesetzt und bestetigt. […] Die nu in lere und leben zu diesem ampt thetig erfunden wurden, denen > haben wyr furgemelt ettlich der nechsten pfarher oder eltesten in der gemein gottes, die hend auff das haupt gelegt und gebetten, das der heilig geist die diener des worts in Christlicher lere und leben erleuchten und erhalten wölle.

[…] that the congregation chose one, who was set in office and confirmed by one or two of the nearest bishops, whom men also call pastors or parsons. […] Those then which were found apt for this office in doctrine and life, upon them have certain of the nearest pastors or elders in the congregation of God, as aforesaid, laid hands upon the head, and prayed that the Holy Ghost would enlighten and preserve the ministers of the word in christian doctrine and life.

Where distinctions within the ministry are defended, they are defended as human order for the sake of good order. Melanchthon's Wittenberg Reformation (1545) keeps bishops "as a grade above other priests" so that, "so far as human foresight can consider", there may be a lasting order. Ernestine Saxony, Wittenbergische Reformation, 1545 (Sehling 1, p. 217):

> unter diesen seelsorgern muss dennoch eine ordnung sein; sie haben nicht alle gleiche gaben, können nicht alle richter sein in schweren artikeln der lehre; sie können nicht alle die gericht ordnen und halten. […] und die selbigen ort müssen mit personen und unterhaltung also versorgt sein, dass es, so viel menschliche fürsichtigkeit bedenken kann, eine beständige ordnung sei. Darum müssen bischofe, als ein grad über andre priester, sein

[…] among these curates of souls there must nevertheless be an order; they have not all like gifts, they cannot all be judges in weighty articles of doctrine; they cannot all order and hold the courts. […] and the same places must be so provided with persons and maintenance that there be, so far as human foresight can consider, a lasting order. Therefore must there be bishops, as a grade above other priests […]

The same text sets "divine and eternal right" apart from "human, transitory ordinance of things indifferent" (Sehling 1, p. 218). The Lutheran Diaconus, the Subdiaconus and the superintendent all stand on the second footing. Electoral Saxony can therefore dispense a candidate from the diaconate altogether (§16.5.1). Its ordination rite also calls the laying on of hands a ceremony of "christian liberty", while it calls the ministry itself a "divine command and ordinance".

The deacon of the poor as apostolic. The lay deacon of the poor is, by contrast, defended as apostolic in origin:

- Homberg (1526, Moderate Reformed; §16.3.2) knows only "bishops, or presbyters, and deacons of the poor".
- Strasbourg (1539, Moderate Reformed; §16.3.1) says the deacon alone of the lower grades was instituted "by the Holy Ghost through the Apostles". Its list of the three ministries that every church needs "even today" includes "the care of the poor".
- Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed) and Micron (Reformed) cite Acts 6 and 1 Timothy 3. They say the Holy Ghost "himself hath shewed" what men should be chosen, and they ordain deacons as the apostles did.
- The Bohemian Brethren (Hussite) hold that the diaconate "was constantly kept in the primitive church" and must not be cast out. In practice, though, they treat it as a probationary step towards the presbyterate.

Of Bugenhagen, the editors of the Hildesheim volume write (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 811, editor's introduction):

> Bemerkenswert ist, daß Bugenhagen in seiner Schleswig-Holsteinischen KO von 1542 und in seiner Wolfenbüttler KO von 1543 die Versorgung der Kirchen- und Schuldiener sowie auch der Armen zur göttlichen Ordnung zählt, der er die menschliche Ordnung gegenüberstellt. Von daher, nach seiner Funktion, muß demnach das Diakonenamt göttlichen Rechts sein. Es steht in der göttlichen Rechtsordnung neben dem Predigtamt!

It is noteworthy that Bugenhagen, in his Schleswig-Holstein church order of 1542 and in his Wolfenbüttel church order of 1543, reckoneth the maintenance of the ministers of church and school, and also of the poor, to the divine order, over against which he setteth the human order. From this, by its function, the office of deacon must accordingly be of divine right. It standeth in the divine order of right beside the office of preaching!

Lay deacons. In this sense every Lutheran deacon of the common chest, and every Reformed deacon, was a lay deacon. He was a man who kept his trade and served a term, elected by council and congregation or by the presbytery, and he had no part in preaching or the sacraments. The Lutheran Diaconus, by contrast, was never a layman. The Bohemian deacon was a cleric in training.

16.6 Elders

Two kinds of elders. Almost every order that speaks of governing elders starts from 1 Timothy 5:17, "the elders that rule well [...] especially they who labour in the word and doctrine". From that verse it distinguishes two kinds of elder (presbyter, senior, Eltester):

- those who labour in the word: the ministers;
- those who only govern: the lay elders.

Lineage. The lay elder came into the German orders through Bucer, at Strasbourg and in Hesse (both Moderate Reformed). It was then generalised in the Reformed orders of East Frisia, Kurpfalz, Nassau and the Wetterau counties.

In the Lutheran orders "elder" is either a churchwarden without spiritual jurisdiction or a senior pastor (§16.6.5).

16.6.1 Strasbourg: the disciplinary seniores

The Strasbourg examination order of about 1539 (Moderate Reformed) already speaks of a second "order of presbyters", those "employed only for the discipline of the church" (§16.3.1). Its authority is twofold:

- the elders of the synagogue;
- Ambrose on 1 Timothy 5. Ambrose complains that such elders had lapsed through "the sloth or rather the pride of the teachers, who alone wish to seem something".

Marbach's Lutheran church order of 1553 identifies the city's Kirchenpfleger with those seniores. They are elected to oversee the "whole householding of the church", which the preachers cannot manage alone. It reads the "church" of Matthew 18 as these elected men, not the whole assembly. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung of Johannes Marbach, 1553, "Von den kirchenpflegern und irem ampt" (Sehling 20/1, p. 441):

> Auß der Apostel geschicht ist zu sehen, das in der ersten christlichen kirchen neben den aposteln, so das evangelium verkündigt haben, etliche von der gemein dazu erwellet und verordnet sind, die da ein sonderlich auffsehen haben solten, damit allentalben recht haußgehalten, niemands nicht gottselig nach seinem beruff zu leben versaumpt und also gute ordnung in der kirchen als im hauß Gottes gehaltenn würde, die sie seniores und presbyteros genennt haben. [...] Derenhalben der herr Christus, Matth. 18 [15-18], die unbußfertigen und hartneckigen heist der kirchenn anzeigen, das sie von deren gestrafft und zu warer bekerung vermanet werden. Die kirche aber versthet der herre nicht die gantze gemein, wie die das wort zuhören zusamen kompt, sonder die jenigen, so ordenlicher weiß von solcher versamlung darzu erwölet und geben sind, in namen unnd von wegen der kirchen allerley fürgefalne kirchen sachen zu verhandlen

Out of the Acts of the Apostles it is to be seen that in the first christian church, beside the apostles which preached the gospel, certain were chosen and ordained thereto by the congregation, which should have a special oversight, that everywhere house might be rightly kept, that none might neglect to live godly according to his calling, and so good order be kept in the church as in the house of God; whom they named seniores and presbyteri. [...] Therefore the Lord Christ, Matthew 18, biddeth that the impenitent and obstinate be told to the church, that they may be rebuked by it and admonished to true conversion. But by the church the Lord understandeth not the whole congregation as it cometh together to hear the word, but those which in orderly wise are chosen and given thereto by such assembly, to treat in the name and on behalf of the church all manner of church matters that fall out [...]

16.6.2 Hesse: elders elected, "sanctified" and finally ordained

The Ziegenhain discipline order (1539) (Moderate Reformed), written under Bucer's influence, introduces elders into every Hessian congregation. They are chosen by the church "according to the canon of Paul", as the ministers are. It would be good, the order says, to confirm them publicly "with prayer and exhortation" and so to "sanctify their office". The civil authority is to uphold their office as the most necessary "after the office of teaching". Hesse, Ziegenhainer Zuchtordnung, 1539 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 103):

> Diese eltesten solle jede kirche, wie auch die diener des wortes mit getreuem ufsehen auf den canonem Pauli welen. Und wer auch gut, daß man sie in der kirchen mit offentlichem gebet und vermanung zu ihnen den eltesten, ihres ampts fleißig zu warten, zu der gemein, denselbigen eltesten im Herren herzlich zu gehorchen, bestetigete und ihr ampt also heiligte. Dero ampt und dienst auch die oberkeit getreulich erheben und darob halten soll, als ob dem notwendigsten und heilsamsten dienst und ampt, so nach dem ampt der leer in der kirchen sein mag.

These elders shall every church choose, as also the ministers of the word, with faithful regard to the canon of Paul. And it were good also that they should be confirmed in the church with public prayer and exhortation (to them, the elders, to attend diligently to their office; to the congregation, to obey the same elders heartily in the Lord), and their office so be sanctified. Whose office and service the magistracy also shall faithfully exalt and uphold, as the most necessary and wholesome service and office that may be in the church after the office of teaching.

The Hessian church order of 1566 (Moderate Reformed) makes the elders a permanent college in every parish. The superintendent's instructions open with this (Sehling 8, p. 195):

> Das erste ist, daß in allen kirchen euers zirks seniores, das ist eltesten, erwelet und ordinirt werden, welche euch beide an diesem ort und den andern pfarherrn in ihren kirchen mit rat und tat und all ihrem vermögen behülflich seien, mit welchen ihr auch von allen sachen, so im kirchenregiment fürfallen, ratschlagen und bedechtlich von allen dingen zum furderlichsten teilen und handlen mögen. Davon sagt also Lucas (Act. 14,23): Sie ordneten hin und her eltesten in der gemein, beteten und fasteten und befolhen sie dem Herrn, an den sie gleubig worden waren.

The first is, that in all churches of your district seniors, that is, elders, be chosen and ordained, which may be helpful both to you in this place and to the other pastors in their churches with counsel and deed and all their power; with whom ye may also take counsel of all matters which fall out in the government of the church, and advisedly treat of all things with all speed. Thereof saith Luke thus (Acts 14:23): They ordained elders here and there in the congregation, prayed and fasted, and commended them to the Lord on whom they believed.

Election and qualifications. The order appeals to Ambrose for the antiquity of the office. The ministers, together with men of the council and the congregation, elect the elders by vote (Acts 14:23). The elders must be of the same zeal and life as preachers, "only that they need not be so excellently learned". Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566, "Wie man die eltesten zur verwaltung der kirchen erwelen und ordiniren sol" (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 207):

> Darumb sollen in einer jeden kirchen die diener derselbigen gemein sampt etlichen, beid vom rat und aus der gemein darzu verordnet, diese eltesten erwelen. Von der form und weis der erwelung findet man Act. 14 [23], daß es gemeinlich durch suffragia und stimme geschehen. Zu diesem ampt aber muß man eben solche leut, so viel den eifer und das leben betrifft, erwelen und haben, wie auch zum predigampt, on allein, daß sie nicht dürfen also vortrefflich gelert sein.

Therefore in every church the ministers of the same congregation, together with certain appointed thereto both from the council and from the congregation, shall choose these elders. Of the form and manner of the election it is found in Acts 14 that it was done commonly by suffrages and voices. But to this office one must choose and have even such people, so far as concerneth zeal and life, as for the office of preaching; save only that they need not be so excellently learned.

Their charge. The ordination address sets the elders "beside the bishops", placed by the Holy Ghost to rule the church. They are to assist the ministers as councillors assist a burgomaster. Above all they are to guard against falsification of doctrine, whether by the public preachers or by "false teachers and wolves". Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 208):

> Ihr habt gehort, mein geliebten im Herrn, daß neben den bischoffen auch eltesten vom h. Geist zur verwaltung der kirchen Gottes gesetzt seind. Darumb will es euch gebüren, daß ihr sonderlich große sorge tragt und darauf geflissen seid, wie die kirche wol möge regirt werden, und daß ihr den andern dienern, so im wort arbeiten, in allen dingen mit treuem rat und hülf forderlich seid, gleich wie sich dan auch dapfere und weise radsherrn gegen dem burgemeister halten, wo ein gute ordnung in gemeinem nutz soll angerichtet werden. (1) Vor allen dingen aber solt ihr sampt den andern kirchendienern mit höchsten fleiß verhüten, daß nicht etwan ein verfelschung der lehr, entweder durch die, so in der kirchen offentlich predigen, oder durch falsche lehrer und wölfe, so heimlich neben einschleichen und listiglich betrigen wöllen, eingefiiret werden

Ye have heard, my beloved in the Lord, that beside the bishops elders also are set by the Holy Ghost for the government of the church of God. Therefore it will behove you that ye take especial great care and be diligent how the church may be well ruled, and that ye be furthersome in all things to the other ministers which labour in the word with faithful counsel and help, even as valiant and wise councillors also behave themselves toward the burgomaster where a good order is to be set up in the common weal. (1) But above all things ye shall, together with the other ministers of the church, with highest diligence prevent that no falsifying of doctrine be brought in, whether by those which preach publicly in the church, or by false teachers and wolves which secretly creep in beside and will craftily deceive […]

Ordination. After the prayer the pastor and the other ministers lay hands on the elders, "as also before said", using the rite of the ministers' ordination (Sehling 8, p. 209):

> Darnach soll der pfarherr und die andern ministri ihnen die hende auflegen, wie auch zuvor gesagt, etc. (9) Nach dem allen soll man die ordinanden in die mit stellen und ihn die kirch zu versorgen und zu verwalten mit solchen worten befehlen: So befehlen wir euch diese kirch, in welcher ihr zu eltesten seid erwelet worden

Thereafter shall the pastor and the other ministers lay their hands upon them, as is also said before, etc. (9) After all this, the ordinands shall be set in the midst, and the church committed to them to care for and to govern with such words: So we commit unto you this church, in which ye have been chosen to be elders [...]

Elders at the ordination of ministers. The traffic also runs the other way. At the ordination of a new minister of the word, the elders lay on hands with the superintendent and the ministers (Sehling 8, p. 205):

> Nach dem gebet soll der superintendens sampt den andern dienern des worts und eltesten den ordinanden die hend auflegen

After the prayer the superintendent, together with the other ministers of the word and elders, shall lay hands upon the ordinands [...]

The editor of the Hessian volume notes that Johannes a Lasco (Reformed) also knew an ordination of the governing elders and of the deacons (Sehling 8, p. 208, note 97).

16.6.3 The Reformed orders: four offices, elders who govern with the ministers

Micron's Ordinancien (London 1554, printed for Norden 1565; Reformed) gives the classic Reformed account. There are two "kinds" (geschlechte) of elders. Some labour in word and doctrine, and are called bishops, shepherds and teachers. Others "minister not the public service of the word and sacraments", but are helpers of the ministers. Paul calls these "governments" (1 Corinthians 12:28). One of the elders presides, and the king's charter calls him the superintendent. Micron, Ordinancien (1554) 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, pp. 587–588):

> und die andere eltesten, wiewol sie den offentlichen dienst des worts und der sacramenten nit bedienen, dennoch sind sie gehülfen der ander diener und stehen ihnen bey mit allem ernst, mit rat und hülf, auf daß die gemeine Gottes in aller gottseligkeit, heiligkeit, friede, ordnung und erbarkeit nach dem wort Gottes regieret und erhalten werde; darumb werden sie auch von Paulo regenten genennet. Unter disen zweien geschlechten der eltisten ist einer auß ihrer zale der vornemest, darzu ordentlich erwehlet, auf daß durch seine autoritet ein eintrechtige vergleichung unter allen in allen dingen nach dem wort Gottes gehalten werde. Und dieser ist von k. m. in ihrem privilegio genennet superintendens, das ist aufseher. Die diaken aber tragen sorge für die armen der gemein.

[...] and the other elders, although they minister not the public service of the word and of the sacraments, yet are they helpers of the other ministers, and stand by them with all earnestness, with counsel and help, that the congregation of God may be ruled and preserved in all godliness, holiness, peace, order and honesty according to the word of God; wherefore they are also called by Paul governments. Among these two kinds of elders one out of their number is the chief, orderly chosen thereto, that by his authority an accordant agreement may be held among all in all things according to the word of God. And he is called by the king's majesty in their privilege superintendent, that is, overseer. But the deacons take care for the poor of the congregation.

The elders are confirmed after questions and prayer by laying on of hands, "by the other ministers and by the minister of the word" (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 596). The words are nearly those later used in Kurpfalz, given below.

Kurpfalz (Reformed). The elders of the Electoral Palatinate were set up by the edict of 1570, after the dispute with Erastus. Sehling's editors describe that dispute in their introduction (Sehling 14, p. 53, editors' introduction):

> Umstritten war nicht die Zuchtübung als solche, sondern die Frage, von wem, in welchen Fällen und in welcher Weise sie zu handhaben sei. Die Befürworter der calvinischen Kirchenzucht standen auf der Linie von Katechismus und Kirchenordnung und unterstrichen das göttliche Recht der Presbyterien, die Notwendigkeit der Abmahnung vom Abendmahl bei Irrlehrern und besserungsunwilligen Sündern durch dieses und im Prinzip die scharfe Trennung einer weltlichen und kirchlichen Strafgewalt.

What was in dispute was not the exercise of discipline as such, but the question by whom, in what cases and in what manner it was to be handled. The advocates of the Calvinist church discipline stood on the line of the Catechism and the church order, and underlined the divine right of the presbyteries, the necessity of exclusion from the supper of false teachers and of sinners unwilling to amend, by this [presbytery], and in principle the sharp separation of a temporal and an ecclesiastical power of punishment.

The decision fell in 1569, with opinions by Beza, Ursinus and Zanchi against Erastus. On 13 July 1570 the edict set up church discipline and the classical assemblies. The editors add that Erastus still won concessions, including the involvement of the magistrate in excommunication (same page).

Under Frederick IV a new form for installing the elders was issued, dated 9 December 1592; the editors say the new elders were installed at the end of the New Year's service. Its title is "Form, how the elders which labour not in the word are confirmed in the congregation". The elders are questioned:

- whether they feel the witness of the Spirit;
- whether Scripture contains all that is needful to salvation;
- whether they will assist the ministers and accept correction themselves.

The congregation prays, and then hands are laid on them. Kurpfalz, Einführung der Senioren, 9 December 1592 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, pp. 789–790):

> Form, wie man die eltesten, so in dem wort nit arbeyten, in der gemein bestediget etc. […] Darnach werden ihnen die händt aufgelegt von den andern dihnern und vom diener des worts, welcher spricht mit heller stim also: Gott und unser himlischer vater, der euch mit uns zu dem regiment diser seiner gemeindt (nach der lehr seines worts) berufen und ausgesondert hat, der erleuchte euch auch durch seinen heiligen geist und stercke euch mit der kraft seiner unuberwindtlicher handt, das ihr euern dihnst treulich und bestendig volnfuhren moget zu ehren seines namens und erbauung seiner gemeindt, Amen. […] Zum letzten wendet er seine red zu den angenommenen eltesten und vermahnet sie, das sie keine acht haben sollen auf die verachtung undt haß der welt, keine person ansehen, sondern das sie einen jeden ohne ansehen der person vermahnen, bessern und strafen nach dem prauch der christlichen strafe, das sie auch uf die lehr, sitten, ja auf das gantze leben aller diner des worts ernstlich acht haben, die wölf vor der herdt der gemeyne mit den dihnern des worts wehren

Form, how the elders which labour not in the word are confirmed in the congregation, etc. […] Thereafter hands are laid upon them by the other ministers and by the minister of the word, who speaketh with a clear voice thus: God and our heavenly Father, which hath called and separated you with us to the government of this his congregation (according to the doctrine of his word), enlighten you also by his Holy Spirit and strengthen you with the power of his invincible hand, that ye may fulfil your service faithfully and constantly, to the honour of his name and the edifying of his congregation. Amen. […] Lastly he turneth his speech to the elders received, and admonisheth them that they regard not the contempt and hatred of the world, respect no person, but that they admonish, amend and rebuke every one without respect of person according to the use of christian rebuke; that they also take earnest heed to the doctrine, manners, yea, to the whole life of all ministers of the word; [and] ward off the wolves from the flock of the congregation together with the ministers of the word […]

The editors of the volume stress the point: "it is especially noteworthy that they are ordained by laying on of hands by the minister of the church and the individual elders continuing in office" (Sehling 19/2, p. 695, editors' introduction). The same form was adopted in Ysenburg-Ronneburg in 1592 (Reformed) (Sehling 10, p. 601).

Kurpfalz about 1601 (Reformed). The Palatine Presbyterordnung of about 1601 defines the presbytery as "certain persons chosen yearly" beside the ministers, "as elders and overseers", to deal with offences in doctrine and life. Their sanctions:

- admonition, once, twice and three times;
- for the obstinate, being "quietly" warned off the sacraments.

The order grounds the office on Christ's own institution in Matthew 18. Kurpfalz, Presbyterordnung, about 1601 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 595):

> daß durchs presbyterium oder eltistenrhat dieses und anders nicht verstanden werde, dan das neben den kirchendienern jedes orts etliche gewiße personen zue eltisten und aufsehern der christlichen gemein jerlich erwehlet werden, welche > anstatt der gantzen gemein zue gewißen zeiten, nachdeme es die not erfordert, zusammenkommen und, was sich in lehr und leben für ärgernus in der gemain zuetragen, sich dieselben zue verbeßern und abzueschaffen miteinander underreden, auch vermanungen aus dem wort Gottes nach der ordnung des herren Christi zum ersten, andern und dritten mahl [...] thun und, da einer in offenen sunden und ergernus mutwillig verharren wolt, denselben von den hailigen sacramenten in der still mit christlicher beschaidenhait abmahnen, biß er beßerung verhaiset und erzeiget. Daß nun diese ordnung in Gottes wort gegrundet und Christus selbst solche angeordnet und befolhen habe, weisen nachfolgende spruch der heiligen schrift clarlich aus.

[...] that by the presbytery or council of elders nothing else is to be understood than this: that beside the ministers of the church in every place certain particular persons are chosen yearly to be elders and overseers of the christian congregation, which in the stead of the whole congregation come together at certain times, as need requireth, and confer together how the offences which arise in doctrine and life in the congregation may be amended and done away; and also make admonitions out of the word of God, according to the order of the Lord Christ, the first, second and third time [...] and, if one would wilfully continue in open sins and offence, warn him off from the holy sacraments quietly, with christian discretion, until he promise and shew amendment. Now that this order is grounded in God's word, and that Christ himself hath ordained and commanded it, the following sayings of holy scripture clearly shew.

These elders take a handfast vow (angeloben) to the published order. They are "confirmed" and announced from the pulpit on New Year's Day, then "confirmed through the common christian prayer". There is no laying on of hands. Kurpfalz, Presbyterordnung, about 1601 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 598):

> angeloben laßen und sie also confirmirn und mit pflichten annehmen sollt. Nochmals sollen sie der gemeine auf den neuen jarstag von der cantzel verkündet und durch das christliche, gemaine gebet bestetiget werden mit fleißiger ermahnung, daß sie jederman für ordentliche eltisten und vorsteher der gemein erkennen, in gebürlichen ehren halten und ihnen gehorsam leisten sollen.

[...] thou shalt cause them to vow by handfast, and so confirm them and receive them under obligation. Afterward they shall be proclaimed to the congregation from the pulpit on New Year's day, and confirmed through the christian common prayer, with diligent admonition that every man acknowledge them for orderly elders and governors of the congregation, hold them in due honour, and render them obedience.

Hanau-Münzenberg (1609) (Reformed) copies this procedure. It adds that the minister must teach the congregation "that the office of elders is of God". This is said partly to comfort the elders, partly so that the people will not "exempt themselves" from their rebukes. Hanau-Münzenberg, Presbyteriumsordnung, 1609 (Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 508):

> in handgelübdnus genommen werden. Darauf fürters folgenden sontag nach einer kurzen predigt die eltesten der gemeinde wider sollen verkündiget und also nach beschehener fleißiger ermahnung, daß sie jederman fur ordentliche eltesten und vorsteher der gemein erkennen, in gebürlichen ehren halten und ihnen gehorsamb leisten sollen, durch das christliche gemeine gebet bestettiget werden. Es ist aber bei solcher ankündigung und bestettigung von nöten, daß der kirchendiener der gemeinde aus dem wort Gottes deutlich anzeige, 1. daß der eltesten ampt von Gott seie aus obgesetzten zeugnußen der heiligen schrift, den eltesten zum besten, damit sie solch ampt als einen gottlichen beruf uf sich nehmen [...] darnach der gemeinde wegen, daß sie solchem ampt sich nicht widersetzen noch davon eximiren

[...] shall be taken under handfast vow. Whereupon on the following Sunday after a short sermon the elders shall be proclaimed again to the congregation, and so, after diligent admonition made that every man acknowledge them for orderly elders and governors of the congregation, hold them in due honour and render them obedience, be confirmed through the christian common prayer. But at such proclamation and confirmation it is needful that the minister of the church shew the congregation plainly out of the word of God, 1. that the office of elders is of God, from the testimonies of holy scripture set down above: for the elders' good, that they may take such office upon them as a divine calling [...]; next, for the congregation's sake, that they set not themselves against such office nor exempt themselves from it [...]

Pfalz-Veldenz (1574) calls its elders "censors". They are presented to the assembled congregation, "commended" from the pulpit with prayer and "set into this high office", "as we see that the apostles ordained the Elders and commended them to the congregation, Acts 14; likewise also the Deacons, Acts 6". Pfalz-Veldenz, Kirchenordnung, 1574, "Ordnung der Eltisten" (Sehling 18, p. 573):

> Wölche zu disem hohen ampt erwöhlet sein, die sollen darnach uff einen gewissen tag, wann die gemein beyeinander versamlet (wölche auch vermahnet soll werden, fleissig zuerscheinen und Gott anzurueffen), berueffen und der gemein fürgestelt, also offentlich mit dem gebett von der Cantzel durch den Pfarrer der gantzen Gemein commendirt und inn diß hohe ampt eingesetzt werden […] wie wir dann sehen, das die apostel die Eltisten geordinirt und der gemein befolhen, Actor. 14. Dessgleichen auch die Diacon, Actor. 6.

Those which are chosen to this high office shall thereafter, upon a set day when the congregation is assembled together (which also shall be admonished to appear diligently and to call upon God), be called and set before the congregation, and so publicly with prayer from the pulpit by the Pastor be commended to the whole Congregation and set into this high office […] even as we see that the apostles ordained the Elders and commended them to the congregation, Acts 14; likewise also the Deacons, Acts 6.

Solms (1594) (Reformed), in the discipline order of Count Johann Albrecht of Solms-Braunfels, binds its elders by an oath, "so help us God and his only Son", to watch over all offence and idolatry. They are to admonish offenders and, if admonition fails, report them to the proper authority. Solms, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1594, "Eyd der eltesten" (Reformed; Sehling 9, p. 338):

> Wir schweren und geloben, daß nach ausweisung unsers hohen ampts wir fleißig uffsicht haben wollen uff alles ergerlich wesen in der kirchen, alle abgötterei, gotteslesterung, leichtfertigkeit und anderß, so wieder die ehre Gottes und daß h. evangelium streittet, das wir dieselbige, so viel uns möglich, verhindern und die ubertretter, wie immer die gelegenheit sein mag, zu einem bessern leben ermahnen wollen, da aber solch ermahnung nicht fruchten wolte, daß ohne neidt, haß, freundschafft, feindschafft solch unbußfertig wesen wir an geburende ort gelangen und von dannen hulf, rath und beistand erwarten wollen […] so wahr uns Gott helf und sein einiger sohn.

We swear and vow that, according to the tenor of our high office, we will have diligent oversight upon all offensive dealing in the church, all idolatry, blasphemy, levity and other things which strive against the honour of God and the holy gospel; that we will hinder the same so far as is possible for us, and admonish the transgressors, howsoever the occasion may be, to a better life; but if such admonition will not profit, that without envy, hatred, friendship [or] enmity we will bring such impenitent dealing to the proper place, and from thence await help, counsel and support […] so help us God and his only Son.

Similar sworn censors are found in the Wild- and Rhinegraviate (1603). They are chosen by the pastor and the old censors and confirmed "under oath" by the superintendent and officials (Sehling 19/2, p. 600).

Nassau-Dillenburg (1582) (Reformed) counts the seniors as the third of the four offices. They are elected by the presbytery and confirmed by the classis (§16.5.3).

16.6.4 The Bohemian Brethren: lay presbyters and presbyterae

The Bohemian Brethren (Hussite) have lay presbyteri politici. These are "political presbyters" or "censors of manners", who oversee the life of the congregation and sit in a place of honour in church. The men of the congregation elect them by free vote after a visitor's admonition. They bind themselves "by voice and by hand given" to the bishops, the pastor and the church. The same is done for the women elders (presbyterae), with only women present. There is no laying on of hands. Bohemian Brethren, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1576, "Presbyterorum politicorum ordinatio" (Bohemian Brethren; Sehling 4, p. 289):

> Presbyterorum ordinatio, quum opus est, hoc ritu peragitur. Iubentur ante concionem vespertinam mature se sistere omnes viri, ibique praemissa a visitatoribus admonitione, eligunt liberis votis quos munere illo dignos existimant. Pluribus itaque votis designati, vespertina concione finita a visitatore evocantur, illisque officia muneris huius (toto auscultante coetu) praeleguntur; illi vero voce et stipulata manu antistitibus unitatis, pastori, ecclesiaeque suae, fidem et diligentiam obstringunt. Atque ut in templo quoque inspectorum munere fungi possint, peculiari etiam sessionis loco (ad commodiorem populi intuitum) cohonestantur. Similiter proceditur cum eliguntur presbyterae; excepto, quod solo foemineo sexu praesente res peragitur.

The ordination of presbyters, when there is need, is performed with this rite. All the men are bidden to present themselves early before the evening sermon; and there, an admonition having first been given by the visitors, they choose by free votes those whom they judge worthy of that office. Those therefore which are designated by the most votes are called forth by the visitor when the evening sermon is ended, and the duties of this office are read to them (the whole assembly hearkening); and they bind their faith and diligence by voice and by hand given to the bishops of the unity, to the pastor, and to their church. And that they may also discharge the office of overseers in the church, they are honoured with a peculiar place of sitting (for the more convenient view of the people). The like is done when presbyteresses are chosen, except that the matter is performed with the female sex alone present.

Like the acolytes (§16.3.4), these presbyters are said to be "ordained", but by a handfast vow alone. This sets them clearly apart from the deacons and ministers, on whom hands are laid (§16.5.3).

16.6.5 The Lutheran orders: churchwardens and clerical seniors

Churchwardens. In the Lutheran orders the lay officers of the parish are the churchwardens, called Kirchenväter, Kirchgeschworene, Kastenherren or Kirchenpfleger. They administer church goods, buildings and alms, often with the council. They are not given spiritual jurisdiction. Memmingen's discipline order (1532, Moderate Reformed) does give its Kirchenpfleger a wide advisory role over worship, schools, alms and the ban. But it expressly denies them any temporal jurisdiction, "so that two temporal authorities arise not again in our city". Memmingen, Zuchtordnung, 1532 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 12, p. 248):

> Dann wir solchen kirchenpflegern thain zeitlich jurisdiction in unser stat geben noch furter zu geben gedenken, auf daz nit abermals zwo zeitlich oberkaiten in unser statt aufkomen

For we give such churchwardens no temporal jurisdiction in our city, neither think to give [any] hereafter, to the end that two temporal authorities arise not again in our city […]

Dinkelsbühl's twelve Kirchenpfleger fill their own vacancies "together with the pastor, who shall bring the Bible or the church order with him" (Kirchenpflegeordnung, 1574; Sehling 12, p. 131). In Augsburg the Vergleichsartikel of 1591 provide six Kirchenpfleger of the Augsburg Confession: three appointed by the council and three chosen by the evangelical citizens. They take part in the examination of new ministers (Sehling 12, pp. 109–110). The orders give no rite of installation for any of these wardens.

Clerical seniors. Where Lutheran orders speak of seniores, they usually mean senior clergy:

- In Brandenburg-Ansbach each dean, with the counsel of the whole chapter, chooses "two seniors, the fittest among all his subordinates", as assessors and definitors. They administer the superintendency in a vacancy and join him in visitation (Kapitelsordnung, 1565/78; Sehling 11, pp. 347, 350).
- Pomerania and the Silesian duchies (Liegnitz) use seniores in the same sense. The Pomeranian synod of 1574 bids the younger ministers honour the seniores, and has the superintendent punish unruly ministers with the counsel of the provosts and seniors (Sehling 4, p. 489).

"Elders" meaning the pastors. The ordination rite of the Erbach church order (1560) reads Titus 1:5 of the pastors themselves. Christ commanded his apostles "to choose and set elders in all his congregations, which shall preach his gospel pure and unfalsified, dispense the most worthy sacraments, and diligently provide and perform all cure of souls and shepherd's service". Erbach, Erbacher Kirchenordnung, 1560, ordination rite (Sehling 9, p. 446):

> auch den Seinigen durch seine Apostel befohlen, bey allen seinen Gemeinen Eltesten zu erwehlen und zu setzen, die sein Evangelion Rein und unverfälscht predigen, die Hochwürdige Sacramenta dispensiren und alle Seelsorg und Hirtendienst fleissig versehen und verrichten sollen.

[…] and also commanded his own through his Apostles to choose and set Elders in all his congregations, which shall preach his Gospel pure and unfalsified, dispense the most worthy Sacraments, and diligently provide and perform all cure of souls and shepherd's service.

No ruling elders in the Lutheran orders. In short, a Lutheran order that speaks of "elders" is speaking of the pastors, of the senior pastors, or of the churchwardens. The ruling elder with a share in the power of the keys belongs to the Bucerian and Hessian (Moderate Reformed) and the Reformed orders.

The oaths of churchwardens and stewards are treated in Chapter 13, §13.12.4.

16.7 Sacristans, altar care, deaconesses and the religious life

This section treats six groups that stood beside the clergy without being clergy:

- the sacristan, who kept the vessels, vestments and font (§16.7.1);
- the people who cared for the altar, the nearest thing in the corpus to an altar guild (§16.7.2);
- deaconesses and the women who served the sick (§16.7.3);
- monks (§16.7.4) and nuns (§16.7.5);
- beguines, tertiaries, the Brethren of the Common Life and the lay confraternities (§16.7.6).

How each of them was received or installed is set out with the full forms in Chapter 13 §§13.12.2 and 13.12.6–13.12.10, and summarised in the table of §16.8 below.

16.7.1 Sacristans

No separate office. No evangelical order has a sacristan distinct from the sexton. The medieval sacristan (sacrista, custos, Sigrist, Mesner) and the bell-ringer, sweeper and doorkeeper were one lay servant, called Küster, Custos, Kirchner, Glöckner, Opfermann, Mesner or Sigrist according to region. The porter's keys passed to him (§16.3.5). So did the sacristan's charge: the chalices, the vestments and linen, the font and its water, the bread and wine, and the lights. In most villages he was also the schoolmaster.

Anhalt 1594: the sacristan's duties (Philippist). The appointment of the sexton of Törten in Anhalt is printed by Sehling as a "sexton's ordinance". It lists the sacristan's work with the rest: ringing, singing, opening and shutting the church, sweeping, "preparing the altar and font", and "vesting and unvesting the pastor". The post was granted for one year at a time. Anhalt, Ordnung für den Küster zu Törten, 8 November 1594 (Philippist; Sehling 2, pp. 579–580):

> Der custos sol nicht allein in gemein alles, was ihme mit leuten, singen, kirchuf und zuschliessen, kehren, altar und taufstein bereiten, an und auskleidung des pfarners, nichts ausgenommen, zustendig und gehorig, hochstes und treues vleisses vorrichten, sondern auch insonderheit alle tage in der wochen, wie in schulen breuchlich, vor und nachmittage idesmals zwo stunden […] vor knaben und megdlein (die ernte ausgenommen) schule halten […] alles bei vorlust des dienstes, welcher dan einem jeden custodi nur ein jahr lang sol zugesagt werden, und er schuldig sein, kurz vor michaelis bei dem pfarner von neuen darumb zu werben.

The sexton shall not only perform in general, with highest and faithful diligence, all that pertaineth and belongeth to him in ringing, singing, opening and shutting the church, sweeping, preparing the altar and font, [and] vesting and unvesting the pastor, nothing excepted; but also in particular every day in the week, as is customary in schools, before and after noon, two hours each time […] keep school for boys and maidens (the harvest excepted) […] all on pain of losing the service, which shall be promised to every sexton for one year only; and he shall be bound, shortly before Michaelmas, to sue anew for it with the pastor.

The keeper of the vessels. Because the vessels and vestments were in his keeping, the sexton had to be of known honesty or give surety. Sayn, Kirchenordnung, 1590 (Sehling 19/1, p. 438):

> Weil auch den Glöcknern die Kelch, Kirchen Ornat und anders, so in der Kirchen verwahret werden soll, vertrauwet, soll keiner zum Glöckner angenommen werden, er sey dann wol bekandt oder habe einen Vorstandt oder Bürgen, damit, wann etwas durch seinen Unfleiß oder Untreuw der Kirchen entwendet, die Kirch sich deß erlittenen Schadens widerumb bey im zuerholen habe.

Forasmuch also as the chalices, the church's ornaments and other things which are to be kept in the church are entrusted to the bell-ringers, none shall be received as bell-ringer unless he be well known or have a warrantor or surety; that if anything be taken away from the church through his negligence or unfaithfulness, the church may recover the loss suffered again from him.

The Heidelberg bell-ringer of 1572 (Reformed) likewise received "the cloths, silver and vessels for the Supper and baptism" by inventory (Chapter 13 §13.12.2).

At the altar and the font. The sacristan's liturgical tasks recur across the orders:

- The sick. In Hohenlohe the pastor called to the sick takes "with him, together with his sexton, the particles, chalice, corporal, surplice" (Sehling 15, p. 73). Württemberg's German-school order of 1559 bids schoolmasters who also held the Meßnerei go with the pastor to the sick "and carry the chalice" (Sehling 17/1, p. 585).

- The font. The Lippe sexton was to "fill the font often with clean, fresh water" (Sehling 21, p. 447). Baden in 1601 told the Sigristen to bring fresh water, "yet not too cold", and not to let it stand for weeks in the font (Sehling 16, p. 551).
- Bread and wine. Veit Dietrich forbade pastors to set hosts and wine on the altar without measure and leave the rest "to the sexton for his use at home" (Sehling 11, p. 531). In the Schönburg lordships in 1542 the sexton was no longer to buy the communion wine with his own money; the church was to pay and he to fetch it (Sehling 2, p. 176).

Not women. At Heilbronn in 1543 the council reserved the sacristan's office at the font to the sexton, and forbade it to women and maids, lest "the holy act of baptism be mocked by wicked people". Heilbronn, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 17/1, p. 315):

> Darzu will ein Er. w. für. Rath haben, das die Mesner unnd nicht Fraw oder Medlen den Tauff zuund aufthuendt oder dem pfarrherrn, seinen diacon, die handtzweel, zu trocknen die hend, reichent, sonder er soll es selbs thon, damit der heilig actus des tauffs von bösen leuten nicht verlacht werdte.

Moreover an honourable, wise [and] provident council will have it that the sextons, and not women or maids, open and shut the font, or reach the towel to the pastor [and] his deacon to dry the hands; but he shall do it himself, that the holy act of baptism be not mocked by wicked people.

The old abuses. The sacristan's access to the font water and the hosts made him suspect of the old "sorcery". Electoral Saxony in 1580, copied by Brandenburg-Ansbach in 1594 (Sehling 11, p. 391), ordered the pastors to stop it. Electoral Saxony, Kirchenordnung of Elector August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 426):

> Nach dem an etlichen orten noch von der papistischen zauberei geblieben, das die glöckner das ubergeblieben taufwasser verkaufen, wie auch etliche mit den ubergebliebenen hostien handlen, welche nachmals zu zauberei gebraucht, sollen die pfarrer die glöckner deshalben ernstlich vermanen, das sie es abschaffen, und da es nachmals wieder geschehe, hertiglich gestraft werden sol.

Forasmuch as in some places there yet remaineth of the papistical sorcery, that the bell-ringers sell the baptismal water left over, as also some deal in the hosts left over, which are afterward used for sorcery, the pastors shall earnestly admonish the bell-ringers thereof, that they put it away; and if it happen again afterward, it shall be sharply punished.

Appointment. The sacristan was appointed, not ordained. In Strasbourg (1531, Moderate Reformed) the vacant offices of "helpers or Sigristen" were filled "by the pastors and parish churchwardens, and not otherwise" (Sehling 20/1, p. 226). Elsewhere the council, the patron or the pastor with the parish chose him, and he bound himself by pledge, oath or written Revers (§16.8).

In the convents. The one sacristan with a distinct title is a woman: the custorin among the "spiritual or church offices" of the evangelical convent of Keppel (§16.7.5).

16.7.2 Altar care: no altar guild

No guild. The corpus knows no altar guild: no society of women or laymen charged with washing the altar linen, baking the hosts or adorning the altar. The care of the altar fell to three others:

- the sexton or sacristan (§16.7.1);
- the lay churchwardens, deacons of the chest or Altarleute, who bought the bread, wine and candles and kept the church's ornaments;
- in the convents, the sisters who held the church offices (§16.7.5).

The deacons of the church keep the altar. The Pomeranian synodal statutes of 1574 charge the lay diaconi ecclesiae et pauperum (§16.5.2) with the altar and its ornaments. Pomerania, Statuta synodica, 1574 (Sehling 4, p. 491):

> Vigilent etiam pastores, ne structuram ecclesiae diaconi negligant, sed in templis aram, cum ornatu suo, suggestum, baptisterium, sedilia, et omnia honeste et decenter conservent, et coemiteria honeste muniri curent.

Let the pastors also watch that the deacons neglect not the fabric of the church, but that in the churches they keep the altar with its ornament, the pulpit, the font, the seats, and all things honestly and decently, and take care that the churchyards be honestly fenced.

In Pfalz-Neuburg it was the churchwardens who received a florin "for the buying of hosts and wine" (Sehling 13, p. 208).

The confraternities dissolved. Before the Reformation the lights and adornment of many altars were kept by lay confraternities. These were dissolved, and their goods went to the common chest. The first such order, Leisnig's, names the brotherhoods of the Kaland, of St Anne and of the shoemakers' journeymen. Leisnig, Ordnung eines gemeinen Kastens, 1523 (Sehling 1, p. 599):

> Was an barem gelde, zinskaufen, cleinoden silberwerk, vorrathe und farende habe, zu den berumbten bruderschaften, des kalands, Sanct Annen, und der schuknechte, bis anher eingesamlet, und den selbigen zustendig ist, mit den brivlichen urkunden, verzeichnussen und registern, allenthalben in diesen gemeinen kasten geschlagen und verordent, dabei zubleiben.

Whatsoever in ready money, bought rents, jewels, silver plate, stores and movable goods hath been gathered hitherto for the said brotherhoods, of the Kaland, of St Anne and of the shoemakers' journeymen, and belongeth to the same, together with the deeds, inventories and registers, is altogether cast into and ordained for this common chest, there to remain.

Women at the altar. No order gives women a role at the altar. Heilbronn forbade them even to open the font or hand the towel (§16.7.1).

16.7.3 Deaconesses, sick-women and Seelfrauen

The word. The word diaconissa occurs once in an order of the corpus, at Keppel in 1570, for the sister "who distributeth the alms" (§16.7.5). There is no order of deaconesses and no rite for them. But three kinds of women did work that the early Church had given to deaconesses and widows:

- the convent almoner at Keppel;
- the women elders (presbyterae) of the Bohemian Brethren (Hussite), elected by the women of the congregation and bound by handfast vow (§16.6.4);
- the sick-women (Seelfrauen, Krankenwärterinnen), appointed by the council or the pastor to nurse and comfort the sick and dying. Some had been beguines.

Keppel 1570: the deaconess as almoner. Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 141):

> Geystliche oder kirchenambter seindt: Leßmeisterin oder priorin, vorsengerin, diaconissa, das ist, die almusenn außtheylett, […] catecheten, […] custorin. Weltliche ampter seind: Kellerin, kirchenmeisterin, kuchenmeisterin, speichermeisterinn, die der scheiben wartet, die die kinder nehen, stickhen unnd wirckhen lernen […]

The spiritual or church offices are: the lecturess or prioress; the precentress; the deaconess, that is, she who distributeth the alms; […] the catechists; […] the sacristaness. The temporal offices are: the cellaress, the church-mistress, the kitchen-mistress, the granary-mistress, she that keepeth the plate, [and] they that teach the children to sew, embroider and weave […]

The Seelfrauen. In the Franconian and Bavarian towns the Seelfrauen were the inmates of the Seelhäuser, foundations for poor widows and single women who nursed the sick and prayed for the dying (Sehling 11, p. 320, editors' note). The orders kept them, but under the pastor and the word:

- Brandenburg-Ansbach 1536. The visitors asked for oversight "of the Seelfrau and other such women who may serve the sick", that they serve for a reasonable wage (Sehling 11, p. 320).
- Regensburg 1543. The order appointed Seelfrauen, and men also, to attend the sick and dying, and prescribed what they were to say. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung des Noppus, 1543 (Sehling 13, p. 410):

> Das sünst verordnet werden seelfrauen, auch manspersonen, die zu den kranken, wu man ir begert, sich gebrauchen lassen und der sterbenden warten. Und solche sollen ein christlichen verstand haben, das sie die sterbenden allein auf das verdinst Christi weisen, nicht auf eigen verdinst oder fürpitt der heiligen, inen das vaterunser und den glauben fürsprechen und, wus zeit hat, gegründete psalm und geseng, als: Aus tiefer not schrei ich zu dir etc., In fried und freud ich far dahin, Nun freut euch, lieben christen gemein, von der tauf, vom sacrament des leibs und bluts etc., nicht alte, irrige gebet und spruch.

That besides there be appointed Seelfrauen, and men also, who shall let themselves be used for the sick where they are desired, and attend upon the dying. And such shall have a christian understanding, that they point the dying to the merit of Christ alone, not to their own merit or the intercession of the saints; [that they] say the Lord's Prayer and the Creed before them, and, where there is time, well-grounded psalms and songs, as: "From Depths of Woe I Cry to Thee", etc., "In Peace and Joy I Now Depart", "Dear Christians, One and All, Rejoice", [the hymns] of baptism [and] of the sacrament of the body and blood, etc.; not old, erroneous prayers and sayings.

- Nördlingen 1544. Kaspar Löner asked that the women whom the council had appointed to tend the sick be sent to him, so that he might examine their faith and understanding and teach them what they did not know (Sehling 12, p. 315). Sehling's editors note that this had been the task of the Seelnonnen of the town's beguine house, closed in 1536.
- Wolfstein 1574. Women who served the sick were to visit them often (Sehling 13, p. 582); the editors compare the Nuremberg Seelfrauen.

Beguines turned sick-visitors. Heilbronn in 1531 gathered its beguines into one house and charged them, as their service, to visit the sick and instruct them by God's word (§16.7.6).

Hospital nurses. The later Reformed orders put the sick-nurse under the hospital master. The Heidelberg hospital order of 1594 (Reformed) lets the hospital master engage "fit sick-nurses" (kranckenwärterin) and dismiss them for misconduct, with the advice of the inspectors, preacher, physician and surgeon (Sehling 19/2, p. 827). Here the office is a domestic service, without any churchly character.

16.7.4 Monks

Profession ended. Every evangelical territory ended new professions. The monks were offered three choices:

- to leave, marry or take up a trade, with their goods or a pension;
- to stay for life in a house set apart for them, with maintenance;
- in a few great abbeys, to live under an evangelical rule as teachers and students for the ministry.

Württemberg 1535. The first Württemberg monastery order forbade all new admissions, to the monasteries and to the houses of beguines and Lollards alike, and sent the unprofessed novices home. Württemberg, Klosterordnung, 1535 (Sehling 16, p. 79):

> Fürohin söllen ouch kaine personen in die Clöster auffgenomen werden, desgleichen ouch in die beginen- und Nollhart haußer. Wa ouch jetzund novitzien, die noch nit profession gethon, vorhanden weren, söllen mit zimlicher zerung iren eltern oder frainden unverzogenlich haimgeschickt werden.

Henceforth also no persons shall be received into the cloisters, nor likewise into the houses of the beguines and Lollards. And where there be now novices which have not yet made profession, they shall be sent home to their parents or kinsfolk without delay, with reasonable provision for the way.

Those who left received back what they had brought in, or forty florins a year for life. The few remaining mendicant friars were gathered into one house, the old and weak to be cared for "that they may so die in peace" (Sehling 16, pp. 79–80). In 1552 Duke Christoph forbade the abbots to "entangle" boys with "superstitious ceremonies and vows" to remain in the cloister (Sehling 16, p. 199).

Esslingen 1535: the friars who stayed (Moderate Reformed). Esslingen's order for the remaining Franciscans let any friar marry with a settlement from the council. Those who stayed received board and a yearly allowance. Esslingen, Ordnung für die Konventualen im Barfüßerkloster, 6 September 1535 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, p. 382):

> Welcher under den ordenspersonen sich in ain ander erbar, christenlich wesen schicken und sich in den ehelichen stannd wurde begeben, des ainem jeden nach Gottes lob und seiner seelen hail anzerichten erlaubt sein soll, derselbig soll durch ainen ersamen rath als die obrigkait nach einkomen ains jeden klosters mit zimblicher leibsunderhaltung, wie es ainem ersamen rath gefellig, außgesteurt und versorgt werden. Und welche ordenspersonen nit herausser khomen, besonder also im kloster zuverharren gedechten, dieselbigen sollen mit zimblicher leibsnarung versorgt und demselbigen, so er ain priester gewesen, zehen guldin unnd ainem layen bruder funff guldin alle jar fur klaidung und anndere leibs notturfft gegeben werden.

Whosoever among the persons of the order would betake himself to another honest, christian estate and enter into the estate of matrimony, which shall be permitted to every one to undertake to the praise of God and the health of his soul, the same shall be set out and provided for by an honourable council, as the magistrate, according to the revenue of each cloister, with reasonable maintenance, as it shall please an honourable council. And those persons of the order which come not out, but purpose so to remain in the cloister, shall be provided with reasonable sustenance; and to him that hath been a priest ten florins, and to a lay brother five florins, shall be given every year for clothing and other bodily necessity.

Evangelical monasteries. Where the princes kept the great abbeys, they kept them as schools for the ministry. Their "conventuals" and "novices" were students under an evangelical abbot:

- Württemberg. At Herrenalb in 1556 the first Lutheran abbot agreed statutes by which "the conventuals and novices" were to pray morning and evening a Latin prayer for the church, the emperor, the duke and the abbot, and to live under discipline and study (Sehling 16, p. 317). The installation of the Württemberg prelates is in Chapter 13 §13.11.3.
- Pfalz-Simmern. At the Augustinian house of Ravengiersburg in 1560 no novice or prebendary was to be received without the duke's and the prior's knowledge. The young men were to be trained for the preaching office, and the convent might sing in Latin. Pfalz-Simmern, Klosterordnung Ravengiersburg, 1560 (Sehling 19/2, p. 658):

> Further soll auch kein Junger oder Prebender on unser, Hertzog Georg als Landtßfürsten, auch mein, des Paters, wissen und willen angenommen werden, und soln solige junge herrn und schuler, so jetzundt albereit im Closter oder konfftiglich mit unserm wissen, wie obgemelt, angenommen, dahin mit Ernst geleret, gewiesen und gehalten werden, das sie konfftiglichen in unserm Fürstenthumb das PredigAmt oder sunst ein ander ehrlig Kirchendienst, darzu sie duchtig erkhannt, verwessen und verwalten mugen

Further also no youth or prebendary shall be received without the knowledge and will of us, Duke George, as prince of the land, and of me, the Father [prior]; and such young lords and scholars as are now already in the cloister, or shall hereafter be received with our knowledge as aforesaid, shall be taught, directed and held earnestly to this end, that they may hereafter in our principality hold and administer the preaching office or some other honourable church service for which they are found apt.

No vows. None of these houses required a vow. Ravengiersburg's scholar who was sent to the university bound himself only to serve the duke and the house (Sehling 19/2, p. 658).

16.7.5 Nuns

The women's houses survived longest. Many nunneries, above all the noble foundations of the north, survived the Reformation as evangelical convents or Stifte. They became homes and schools for unmarried women, keeping a rule, a habit of sorts, the hours in German or Latin, and an elected head (abbess, prioress or domina). The orders reformed them on four points:

- Admission. No one was to be clothed without the prince's or council's consent. At Goslar's convent of Frankenberg (1542) and in Württemberg no one was to be admitted at all.
- Vows. The vows of perpetual chastity and the cloister were not binding. A sister might leave and marry with her goods.
- Habit. The consecrated habit (cowl, scapular, veil and crown) was abolished or made optional. Baptism was declared the true clothing.
- Worship. The hours and the Mass were reformed. Daily preaching, the catechism and schooling for girls were added.

Goslar 1542: no new nuns, free to marry. Goslar, Ordnung für das Frauenkloster Frankenberg, 1542 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 275):

> 5. Nullas imposterum personas ad habitum sui ordinis admittent, eas vero, quae nondum professionem emiserint, cum omnibus, quae coenobio contulerunt, ab se dimittent. 6. Unicuique conventus personae liberum licitumque erit vel in coenobio toto tempore vitae permanere vel cum honesto aliquo matrimonium inire.

5. They shall admit no persons hereafter to the habit of their order; but those which have not yet made profession they shall send away from them, with all that they brought to the convent. 6. It shall be free and lawful to every person of the convent either to remain in the convent all the time of her life, or to enter into matrimony with some honest man.

Lüneburg 1574: clothing kept, the habit changed. The Lüneburg houses still received girls, but under the duke's control. The cowl, scapular, veil and crown were replaced by a plain black or white gown. Lüneburg, Klosterordnung of Duke William the Younger, 1574 (Sehling 6/1, p. 622):

> So soll auch kein kind und jungfrau eingekleidet werden ohne unsern vorwissen und befelch. Und weil die kappen und schepler und weichel und kreuz auf dem haupt, wie sie die klosterpersonen itz dragen, vielen frommen Christen ergernuß geben […] so sollen furder keine jungfrau in kappen und mit wichel und kreuz bekleidet werden, sonder sie sollen ehrliche schwarze oder weisse rocke von einerlei art und wande und auf dem haupt weisse tucher, wie sie itz haben, ohne seitenburten oder gewirkten hauben tragen, aber keine weichel oder kreuz. […] Es soll auch keine klosterperson in kappen, schefflern, weicheln etc., sondern wie andere Christen in leinenlaken begraben werden.

So also no child or maiden shall be clothed without our foreknowledge and command. And whereas the cowls and scapulars and veils and the cross upon the head, as the persons of the cloister now wear them, give offence to many godly Christians […] henceforth no maiden shall be clothed in cowl and with veil and cross; but they shall wear honest black or white gowns of one fashion and cloth, and upon the head white kerchiefs, as they now have, without side-bands or wrought hoods, but no veil or cross. […] Also no person of the cloister shall be buried in cowl, scapular, veil, etc., but in a linen sheet like other Christians.

Mecklenburg 1572: baptism the true clothing. The Mecklenburg convent order of 1572 rejects the blessing of the habit "with certain little prayers" and holy water, and the "superstitious little books of consecration". Mecklenburg, Klosterordnung, 1572 (Sehling 5, p. 254):

> Desgleichen abergläubischer irthum ist, dass die closterkleider oder cappen, scheppler und weihler, mit gewissen gebetlein eingeweihet und mit weiwasser besprenget, geistlich und herlichere kleider sein, als andere, dadurch sie ihre sünde vor gottes angesicht bedecken und für des teufels anlauf als mit einem harnisch bewahret, Christum anziehen und Christi braut und königinnen werden. Da doch alle christen zugleich in der taufe in einerlei geistlich kleid eingekleidet, den herrn Jesum Christum anziehen

Likewise it is a superstitious error that the cloister garments, or cowls, scapulars and veils, consecrated with certain little prayers and sprinkled with holy water, should be spiritual and more glorious garments than others, whereby they cover their sins before the face of God and are preserved against the assault of the devil as with a harness, put on Christ, and become Christ's bride and queens; whereas all Christians alike are clothed in baptism in one spiritual garment, [and] put on the Lord Jesus Christ […]

On vows the same order teaches that "there is no higher vow than that which we have made in holy baptism", and that vows against God's command are not to be kept (Sehling 5, p. 255). Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel in 1569 argues the same at length. In baptism all Christians are clothed "in a red cowl, which is the most holy rose-coloured blood of our Lord Jesus Christ" and crowned, so that the sister who lays aside her habit and crown loses nothing (Sehling 6/1, pp. 324–326). The form of words for laying it aside is in Chapter 13 §13.12.10.

Admission by the magistrate. Strasbourg in 1555 took admission to its remaining women's houses out of the hands of the prioress. The council was to decide, and no girl was to be received under eight years old (Sehling 20/1, p. 454).

Keppel 1570: an evangelical clothing. The fullest evangelical form for receiving a nun is the Nassau order for the convent of Keppel. It has the following elements:

- a probation of at least two years;
- questions to the parents, the domina and the candidate;
- an oath;
- a sermon;
- the clothing in the sacristy;
- Veni Sancte Spiritus and an exhortation at the altar;
- the Te Deum.

The exhortation tells the new sister that her vows earn nothing, that the convent is "not a prison" but "as it were a school", and that she may marry in an orderly way. The full rite is in Chapter 13 §13.12.7.

The offices of the convent. Keppel divides the sisters' offices into "spiritual or church offices" and "temporal offices" (quoted in §16.7.3):

- Spiritual. The lecturess or prioress, the precentress, the deaconess or almoner, the catechists and the sacristaness (custorin).

- Temporal. The cellaress, the church-mistress (kirchenmeisterin), the kitchen-mistress, the granary-mistress, the keeper of the plate and the needlework teachers.

The domina assigned these offices. She herself was proposed by the convent from two or three names, confirmed by the count and deposable by him, and swore an oath (Sehling 10, pp. 141–142).

Abbess and prioress. In Schleswig-Holstein the abbess of Itzehoe and the prioresses of the other houses were still elected by the convent "according to old custom", under oath in the provost's presence. The sisters swore obedience to them (Sehling 23, p. 182). At Strasbourg the "mother or prioress" and six elder "council-mothers" were chosen and gave a promise (Sehling 20/1, p. 456). Both forms are in Chapter 13 §13.12.8.

16.7.6 Beguines, tertiaries, Brethren of the Common Life and confraternities

Semi-religious communities. The orders say little about the beguines, the tertiaries of the mendicant orders, the Nollharden or Lollards (lay brothers who nursed the sick and buried the dead), and the Brethren and Sisters of the Common Life. What they say is of three kinds:

- the houses were closed to new members;
- the existing members were maintained or bought out;
- the communities were turned to the service of the sick or the school.

No order creates a third order or a lay religious community.

Closed to new members. Württemberg's order of 1535 shut the "houses of the beguines and Lollards" with the monasteries (§16.7.4). The beguines might keep or divide what they had brought in, and sell the houses they had built themselves, with the duke's knowledge (Sehling 16, p. 80). Sehling's editors record four houses of tertiary sisters at Reutlingen before the Reformation (Sehling 17/2, p. 28, editors' introduction). In Württemberg only the Franciscan tertiaries of Weiler used their right to emigrate, and went as a community to a convent near Augsburg (Sehling 16, p. 50, editors' introduction).

Heilbronn 1531: beguines as visitors of the sick. Heilbronn gathered its beguines into one house and gave them a service, which comes closest in the corpus to an evangelical diaconate of women. Heilbronn, Instruktion zur Zusammenlegung beider Beginenhäuser, 8 December 1531 (Sehling 17/1, p. 298):

> Item, so sy dan also bey einander wonen werden, sollen sy uff ansuchen zu den kranken zu geen willig sein und die kranken gottlichem wort gemeß underweysen. Item, so wolle sich ain rate versehen, sy werden in bedacht, das irenthalb ain gut ansehen gepere, nit […] uff underschiedlicher klaydung hafften, sonder sonsten erbarlich beklayden und fleyssig in das wort Gottes zu horen geen.

Item, when they shall so dwell together, they shall be willing upon request to go to the sick, and to instruct the sick according to God's word. Item, a council trusteth that they, considering that a good appearance becometh them, will not […] cleave to a distinct clothing, but otherwise clothe themselves honestly, and go diligently to hear the word of God.

Herford: the Brethren of the Common Life. Herford had both a brothers' and a sisters' house of the Common Life, and its Brethren were early supporters of the Reformation (Sehling 21, p. 160, editors' introduction). Its church order of 1532 nonetheless counted the separate communion of such houses as sectarian. Herford, Kirchenordnung, 1532 (Sehling 21, pp. 173–174):

> dat enhet jo nicht Convenire, wen me sick van der gemeine affsundert inn Fraterhuse, Susterhuse und ander Rotten und Secten, sunder mit den gemeinen Christen tho der gedechtnisse des Heren sick vorgadderen tho dem bruck des Sacramentes.

That is surely not called convenire [to come together], when one separateth oneself from the congregation into brothers' houses, sisters' houses and other factions and sects; but [it is] to gather with the common Christians to the remembrance of the Lord, to the use of the sacrament.

Confraternities. The lay brotherhoods (Bruderschaften) and the Kalands, which had kept altars, lights and anniversary Masses, were dissolved and their goods put into the common chest from Leisnig in 1523 onward (§16.7.2). Lemgo in 1537 gave the revenues of the brotherhoods and of the Kaland of Corpus Christi to the schoolmaster and preachers (Sehling 21, p. 302).

Nassau in 1537 kept a common meal for its clergy synod, but without the "disorderly feasting … as hitherto at the Kalands" (Sehling 10, p. 84).

The answer in brief. The Reformation in the Sehling corpus kept no third order and founded none. It turned the surviving beguines and Seelfrauen into nurses of the sick under the pastor. The lay confraternities were dissolved into the common chest, and the Brethren of the Common Life were absorbed into the parish and the school.

16.8 Ordained or not: how each office was installed

Words that do not settle the question. "Ordain" (ordiniren, ordinatio) is not decisive in these texts:

- Lippe uses it of appointing deacons of the poor.
- The Bohemian Brethren (Hussite) use it of a handfast vow.
- Hesse (Moderate Reformed) uses it of a full rite with laying on of hands.

How the table classifies. The table below therefore classifies by what the rite actually does, in four degrees, from strongest to weakest:

- hands: laying on of hands, with prayer;
- prayer: public commendation with prayer, without hands;
- vow: a handfast vow (Handgelübde, manu stipulata) or an oath;
- none: appointment only.

Summary. Laying on of hands was used for four groups:

- ministers of the word, everywhere;
- deacons of the poor, in Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed) and in Micron (Reformed);
- lay elders, in Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed), Micron and Kurpfalz 1592 (Reformed);
- the Bohemian Brethren's clerical deacons (Hussite).

It was not used for:

- sacristans, sick-women, nuns, convent heads or the scholars of the evangelical monasteries;
- Lutheran deacons of the poor or churchwardens;
- the Reformed elders of the Kurpfalz Presbyterordnung, Hanau or Solms, and the elders of Lutheran Veldenz;
- any minor grade, including the Bohemian acolytes.

Answer to the question asked. Were ruling elders ordained? Yes, in Hesse 1566 (Moderate Reformed), the London-Norden order of Micron and the Palatinate form of 1592 (both Reformed). Elsewhere they were installed with prayer, a handfast vow or an oath, and none of these used the language of ordination except Veldenz, which uses it of the apostles.

16.9 Women and laymen in the church's services

This section asks what women, and laymen who were not ministers, might do in the worship and offices of the church.

- Women. Could they be elders where there were elders, or churchwardens? Could they be lay deacons of the poor, as distinct from deaconesses (§16.7.3)? Which of the minor or lesser offices could they hold? Could they read in church, lead the prayers or bid them? Could they be cantors, sing in the choir or direct it?
- Laymen. Could they give the bread and the cup? Could they lead the prayers in church? Who read the bids of the prayers?

The answers come from the parish orders and from the orders for the evangelical women's convents. The convents gave women a liturgical part that the parish orders did not. Several related matters are treated elsewhere and only cited here:

- emergency baptism by midwives and other women: §13.3.7; the appointment of midwives: §13.12.5;
- the hours in the women's convents: §10.4.4, §10.8.2; the convent offices of Keppel: §16.7.5;
- girls' schools and schoolmistresses: §15.9.3; a girl leading the prayers in the Torgau girls' school: §10.12.7;
- the girls' choirs at Naumburg and Hof: §9.3.3, §2.6.1, §8.16.10, §10.11.4;
- the Litany and its singers: §10.12.3, §13.21;
- the communion cloth and who held it: §14.6.3;
- who said the general prayer: §6.1.2.

16.9.1 Summary of findings

Women

1. The rule. The orders read Paul's "let your women keep silence in the churches" (1 Corinthians 14:34; 1 Timothy 2:12) broadly:
   - Hesse in 1566 (Moderate Reformed) held that Paul forbade women not only to teach and preach but "all the actions of the church's service", the sacraments included. The Hessian Agende of 1574 (Philippist), Pfalz-Veldenz 1574 and Nassau-Weilburg 1576 repeat it.
   - Homberg 1526 (Moderate Reformed) let women attend the congregation's assembly, but "the men alone shall decide".
   - Württemberg in 1556 gave the rule as the reason why the women's convents, unlike the men's, could not be made schools for the church (§16.9.2).
2. Elders: no. The orders that say whom to choose as elders, censors or seniors ask for "honourable men". Where the congregation votes, the men vote. The one exception is the women elders (presbyterae) of the Bohemian Brethren (Hussite), chosen by the women for the women (§16.6.4). Women governed women only in the convents (§16.9.3).
3. Churchwardens: no. The churchwardens and keepers of the chest are "god-fearing men". The only woman with a warden's title is the "church-mistress" of the convent of Keppel (1570).
4. Lay deacons: no. The deacons of the poor were men. The nearest offices for women were:
   - the four "honourable widows and godly matrons" of the Emden hospital (1594, Reformed);
   - the convent's almoner (diaconissa) at Keppel;
   - the sick-women (§16.7.3);
   - the matrons who helped the Bohemian preacher examine the girls.
5. The lesser offices.
   - No minor order survived for anyone (§16.3).
   - The sexton's work was kept from women. Heilbronn (1543) forbade them the font, and Hoya (1581) the church clock. Only the convents had a sacristaness: at Keppel (custorin) and at Fischbeck (Küsterin).
   - The one parish office open to women was that of schoolmistress of the girls' school. She was appointed by the council or the visitors and paid by the council, the chest or the parents. She was bound to the church order, and visited for her conduct "in the church and school" together with the sextons and schoolmasters (Electoral Saxony 1577) (§16.9.4).

6. Reading: not in the parish service, but in the convent choir.
    - No parish order gives a woman a lesson to read.
    - In the convents the sisters read the lessons, chapters and collects themselves (Pfalz-Neuburg 1543, Württemberg 1556, Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel 1569, Mecklenburg 1572, Obernkirchen 1603).
    - Girls spoke in church as catechumens. In Honterus's Transylvanian order (1543) the schoolgirls put the catechism questions to one another "for the instruction of the hearers" (§16.9.5).
7. Leading prayers: in the convents. There the domina, and after her each sister for a week, led the Lord's Prayer, the versicles and the prayers (Mecklenburg 1572; Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel 1569). In the parish church no woman led the prayers.
8. Bidding prayers: no. The bids were the minister's. Women asked for the church's prayer, in childbirth and in sickness, and the minister announced it (§16.9.9).
9. Cantors: only in the convents. No parish order has a woman cantor. In the convents the cantrix or precentress began the antiphons and psalms and "ordered the singing in the choir" (Soest 1543; Keppel 1570) (§16.9.6).
10. The choir.
    - Women sang with the congregation, and were told to. Hoya (1581) commanded the women, maidens and maids who kept silent in church to "open their mouth" and sing.
    - In some towns the schoolgirls sang as a choir of their own, in alternation with the boys (Naumburg 1537/38, Hof 1592), or sang the whole German hymn (Dresden 1574).
    - At Schmalkalden (1555) they helped to sing the Litany, and Nördlingen (1555) hoped to train such a choir. Zwickau abolished its maidens' choir in 1529.
    - In the convents the sisters were the choir.
11. Directing the choir. In the parish church men led the girls' singing: the girls' schoolmaster, or at Hof the superintendent or the deacon of the week. Only the convent cantrix directed a choir as a woman.

Laymen

12. The bread and the cup: the ministers'.
    - The Lutheran orders give the bread and the cup to the pastor and his ordained deacon.
    - Hesse (1566, Moderate Reformed) let a senior, a keeper of the chest, a schoolmaster who studied theology, or the sexton help with the cup when the communicants were many, but "not a person of a worldly office".
    - Nassau-Weilburg in 1617 forbade laymen to serve the cup any longer.
    - In Micron's Reformed order the communicants passed the dishes of bread and the cups to one another along the table.
    - Laymen held the communion cloth: boys, honest men or the churchwardens (§16.9.7).
13. Leading prayer: yes, in set forms, but not preaching.
    - Schoolboys, the schoolmaster or the sexton sang the Litany (Regensburg 1542, Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel 1543, Steuerwald and Peine 1561).
    - In filial villages the sexton read the Sunday epistle and gospel, sang the hymns and read the catechism (Electoral Saxony 1557).
    - He closed with the collect when the preacher was absent (Kolberg 1586), and the schoolmaster held the daily prayer (Homburg 1605, Reformed).
    - But "no bell-ringer who is not examined and ordained" might preach (1557).
    - In Micron's London church, elders, deacons and "other able men" might speak in the "prophecy" (§16.9.8).
14. The bids: the minister's.
    - The pastor, deacon or chaplain read the exhortation to prayer and the bids, usually from the pulpit (Nördlingen 1555, Prussia 1568, Aschersleben 1575; §6.1.2).
    - The petitions of the Litany were the exception: boys or the sexton sang them.
    - Laypeople asked for prayers, by word or by a slip laid on the pulpit, and the minister read them out. Stendal (1578) had the council's notices read by the clergy, and kept "the town servants off the pulpit" (§16.9.9).

16.9.2 "Let your women keep silence": the rule

The Hessian reading of Paul. The orders seldom state the rule, because they seldom imagine the case. Where they do, it is in the section on emergency baptism, the one sacramental act that might fall to a woman. Hesse in 1566 (Moderate Reformed) begins that section with 1 Corinthians 14:34. Paul "will not that a woman speak in the congregation", and so he forbids women "without doubt all the actions of the church's service, and not only the teaching and preaching, but also the administration of the holy sacraments" (Sehling 8, p. 282). The Hessian Agende of 1574 (Philippist) recast the passage and added a reason: these acts had always belonged to men, in both Testaments. Hesse, Agende, 1574 (Philippist; Sehling 8, pp. 428–429):

> Der apostel Paulus sagt [1. K 14, 34], die weiber söllen stillschweigen in der gemeine, damit er ihnen nicht alleine das offentlich lehren und predigen in gemeinen christlichen versamblungen, sondern auch das sacramentreichen und andere zum gemeinen kirchendienst gehörige actiones und handlungen, darzu beide im alten und neuwen testament jederzeit die mannspersonen bestellet gewesen seind, benommen und verboten haben will. […] Derhalben soll den wehemüttern und andern weibern mit allem ernst undersagt und sie dahin angehalten werden, daß sie, wo etwa die kinder schwach weren, des teufens sich nicht undernemen, sondern den kirchendiener, es sei am tage oder in der nacht, fordern

The apostle Paul saith [1 Cor. 14:34] that the women shall keep silence in the congregation; whereby he will have taken from them and forbidden not only the public teaching and preaching in the common Christian assemblies, but also the reaching of the sacrament, and the other actions and dealings belonging to the common service of the church, for which men have at all times been appointed, in both the Old and the New Testament. [...] Therefore the midwives and other women shall be most earnestly forbidden, and held thereto, that where the children happen to be weak they undertake not to baptize, but send for the minister, be it by day or by night.

Copied in Lutheran orders. The same passage stands, with small changes, in the Lutheran orders of Pfalz-Veldenz (1574), Nassau-Weilburg (1576) and the Corvey village of Bruchhausen (1603) (Sehling 18, p. 473; 10, p. 249; 21, p. 253). Pfalz-Veldenz first gives the Latin of 1 Corinthians 14:34 and 1 Timothy 2:12. It then forbids women "all the Lectiones of the church's service", that is, the lessons, where Hesse has actiones, the actions. So its text forbids women the readings in so many words. Hesse 1566 and Pfalz-Veldenz both cite:

- Tertullian's De virginibus velandis;
- Epiphanius on the Quintillians and the Collyridians, who "allowed women to perform the church's offices";
- the Fourth Council of Carthage, which forbade a woman to baptize.

The rule did not end emergency baptism. Neither order went as far as the Reformed Palatinate, which abolished emergency baptism by laypeople (§13.3.7). If the minister could not be had and "the highest need" was at hand, those present were to call upon God, pray the Lord's Prayer and baptize. The child was then "rightly and sufficiently baptized" (Hesse 1566, Sehling 8, p. 283; Agende 1574, p. 429). Those present at a birth were the midwife and the women. Sehling's editors note the tension in the 1566 order: its liturgical part presupposes emergency baptism by midwives, while its historical part denies it (Sehling 8, p. 282, note). The Lutheran orders kept the midwife's baptism without such reserve (§13.3.7, §18.4.1).

Homberg 1526: present, but silent. The Homberg synod (Moderate Reformed) made the assembly of the faithful the judge of the church's business. Women might attend it, but not speak. Hesse, Homberger Kirchenordnung, 1526 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 52):

> Ordinamus idciro, ut in quavis parochia, posteaquam verbum Domini fuerit in ea aliquandiu praedicatum, singulis diebus Dominicis, aut mox a coena Dominica, aut a prandio fiat conventus fidelium in congruo loco, ad quem, quotquot ex viris Christi negotio favent, et in sanctorum numero habentur, conveniant, ut cum episcopo de universis, quae in ecclesia tractanda occurrerint, definiant ex verbo Domini. [...] Huic fideles mulieres interesse quidem possunt, verum eis loqui in ecclesiis non permittitur 1. Cor. 14 (34) et 1. Tim. 2 (12). Soli ergo viri definient.

We ordain therefore that in every parish, after the word of the Lord hath been preached therein for some while, on every Lord's day, either straight after the Lord's Supper or after dinner, there be an assembly of the faithful in a fit place; to which as many of the men as favour the cause of Christ, and are held in the number of the saints, shall come together, that with the bishop they may determine out of the word of the Lord all things that fall to be dealt with in the church. [...] At this the faithful women may indeed be present; but it is not permitted them to speak in the churches, 1 Cor. 14 and 1 Tim. 2. Therefore the men alone shall determine.

Württemberg 1556: no schools in the women's convents. Duke Christoph turned the men's monasteries into schools for the ministry (§16.7.4), but the women's houses could not follow. Württemberg, Ordnung für Frauenklöster, 3 February 1556 (Sehling 16, p. 304):

> Dieweil die frowen Cleuster, wie sie biß anher gestifft unnd im brauch, der kirchen gemeinem nutz nit fürstendig gewesen noch zu verstand derselbigen darinn schulen angericht mögen werden, dann nach der leer Pauli sollen die weiber unnder der gemein schweigenn unnd inen nit zugelassen werden, das sie reden, sonnder unnderthon sein

Forasmuch as the women's convents, as they have hitherto been founded and used, have not been profitable to the common good of the church, nor can schools be set up therein for the understanding of the same (for according to the doctrine of Paul the women shall keep silence in the congregation, and it shall not be permitted them to speak, but to be in subjection)

A model of church order. Veit Dietrich's Agendbüchlein (Nürnberg 1545), copied by Hohenlohe in 1553, gives Paul's rule as its example of a lawful church ordinance: "Paul commandeth that there be an order in the church with the reading and preaching, and forbiddeth the women that they should preach" (Sehling 11, p. 549; 15, p. 57). Hesse in 1566 sets it beside the rule of 1 Corinthians 11 on covered and uncovered heads (Sehling 8, p. 180).

16.9.3 Women and the offices of governance

Elders: men. The orders that say whom to choose as elders, censors or seniors ask for men:

- Rothenburg (1558) recalls that in the first church "certain elders, god-fearing, wise and valiant men" stood beside the ministers (Sehling 11, p. 610).
- Pfalz-Veldenz (1574) has six or so "honourable men" chosen in each parish to watch over "the common people, men and women" (below).
- The Wild- and Rhinegraviate (1603) has "seven or fewer honourable men" (Sehling 19/2, p. 600).
- Micron's London order (Reformed) admits to the "prophecy" only "god-fearing and able men" from the elders, deacons and congregation (§16.9.8).

Where the congregation votes, the men vote: at Homberg (1526, above), and among the Bohemian Brethren, where "all the men" elect the presbyters (§16.6.4). Pfalz-Veldenz, Kirchenordnung, 1574 (Sehling 18, pp. 572–573):

> Inn jeder Pfarr sollen sechs, mehr oder weniger nach gelegenheit des orts und des Volckhs, erbarer Männer eines guten geruchts und wanndels auß der gemein erwöhlet, geordnet und mit hanndtgebender trew an aidsstatt angenohmmen und inen bevelch gegeben werden, uff die zucht und Erbarkeit des gemeinen Volckhs, von mannen unnd frawen, Jungen und alten, ohn einiges ansehen der Personen […] ein fleissiges, getrew uffsehens zu haben.

In every parish six honourable men, more or fewer according to the occasion of the place and of the people, of good report and conversation, shall be chosen out of the congregation, appointed, and received with troth given by the hand in the stead of an oath; and charge shall be given them to have a diligent, faithful oversight of the discipline and honesty of the common people, men and women, young and old, without any respect of persons.

Women over women: the Bohemian matrons and the convents. The one parish order that gives women a part in oversight is that of the Bohemian Brethren. Besides the women elders (presbyterae, §16.6.4), matrons helped the preacher to examine the older girls on the sermon. Bohemian Brethren, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1576 (Hussite; Sehling 4, p. 282):

> Concione meridiana et pomeridiana finita, remanent adolescentes et puellae adultiores, examinanturque a concionatore (auxiliantibus ibi quidem e presbyteris aliquo, hic autem matronis) quam attentos se ea die in audiendo verbo dei praebuerint, quantumque observaverit quisque.

When the midday and the afternoon sermon is ended, the young men and the older girls remain, and are examined by the preacher (one of the presbyters helping him with the one, but matrons with the other), how attentive they have shown themselves that day in hearing the word of God, and how much each hath observed.

In the convents women governed women: the domina or prioress, chosen by the sisters, and at Strasbourg six "council-mothers" beside the prioress (§16.7.5). Even there the word and the sacrament came from outside. At Nimbschen and Remse (1533) no one but "their appointed preacher" was to preach to the maidens or hear their confession (Sehling 1, pp. 619, 652). At Salzwedel (1540) the chaplain was to preach to them on Sundays and Wednesdays, hear their confession, and give them the sacrament "as often as he is asked" (Sehling 3, p. 272).

Churchwardens: men. The wardens of the church's goods and the keepers of the chest were men:

- Lippe (1571) wants "god-fearing, honourable men, understanding and experienced in writing and reading" (Sehling 21, p. 449).
- Pomerania (1569) wants "god-fearing, understanding, upright men" as deacons of the chest (Sehling 4, p. 409).

The Transylvanian Saxons (1587) put it in one sentence. Transylvania, Gemeinsame Landesordnung, 8 July 1587 (Sehling 24, p. 463):

> daß jährlich aus den aeltesten der gemeinde sollen zwei redliche, gegen Gott und das heilige predig-ampt wohl-gewogene männer zu kirchen-vätern erwohlet werden, welchen das kirchen-gut sol eingehändiget werden that every year two upright men, well affected toward God and the holy office of preaching, shall be chosen out of the elders of the congregation to be church-fathers, to whom the goods of the church shall be handed over

The only woman with a warden's title is the "church-mistress" (kirchenmeisterin), among the temporal offices of the convent of Keppel (1570; §16.7.5).

Deacons of the poor: men, and matrons for the hospital. The lay deacons of the poor (§16.5.2–16.5.3) were men in every order. The Reformed church of Emden set women beside them in one place, the hospital (Gasthaus). Emden, Summarische beschryvinge der ordnung in der christlicken kercken to Embden, 1594 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 505):

> Baven dat sind veer erbare weduwen unde godtsalige matronen erwehlet, so up bedden unde linnen, flaß unde wat to demsülvigen gehöret, flytige acht nehmen, frouwen unde megede to werken stellen unde darto wekentlick dremal in dem Gasthuse an ehrem vorordenten ort vorsamlen, und wat ehn hyrto nödich, eysschen und jährlicks einmal umme linnen unde andere notdrufft des Gasthuses, und sonderlick der wäysekinder, de borgerschop van huß to huß besöcken.

Besides that, four honourable widows and godly matrons are chosen, which take diligent heed to the beds and linen, the flax and what belongeth thereto, and set the women and maids to work; and for that purpose meet three times weekly in the hospital in their appointed place, and ask for what they need thereto; and once yearly visit the citizens from house to house for linen and other necessaries of the hospital, and especially of the orphans.

They were chosen, but the order does not call them deacons, and they kept house rather than gave alms. The almoner of Keppel was called diaconissa, but she served her sisters (§16.7.3).

16.9.4 Women in the lesser offices: sexton, schoolmistress and midwife

Not the sexton's office. No parish order lets a woman do the sexton's work. Heilbronn in 1543 kept the font and the towel for the sexton, "and not women or maids" (§16.7.1). Hoya in 1581 forbade the sexton to leave the church clock to his household. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1142):

> Da man uhrwerk hat, so vom küster gestellet werden, sol der küster dazu gedenken, das er das werk selbst abends und morgens regiere und weib und kinder davon lasse, wo nicht und es drüber verdürbe und unrecht gienge, sol er dafür antworten.

Where there is a clock which is set by the sexton, the sexton shall see to it that he govern the works himself, evening and morning, and keep his wife and children from it; if not, and it be spoiled thereby and go wrong, he shall answer for it.

The sexton's wife worked beside him in another way. Lauenburg (1585) let the sextons keep German girls' schools in the small towns, with their wives teaching the needlework. Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 422):

> Knaben und megdlein aber, mügen sie auf den dörfern, wol umb der leute billige belohnunge, lesen und schreiben, und den catechismum beten lehren. Und in den stedtlein sol ihnen unverhindert sein, deutsche mägdlein schulen zu halten, und über das lesen, schreiben, catechismum lehren, auch mit nehende, stickende, wirkende und dergleichen durch ihre weiber sie zu unterrichten.

But boys and maidens they may well teach in the villages, for the people's reasonable reward, to read and write and to pray the catechism. And in the small towns they shall be free to keep German schools for maidens, and, over and above the reading, writing and teaching of the catechism, to instruct them also in sewing, embroidering, weaving and the like through their wives.

In the convents the sacristan was a sister. Keppel (1570) had its custorin (§16.7.5). At the Stift of Fischbeck, Agnese von Mandelsloh was Küsterin from 1580 to 1582, and abbess from 1587 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 81, editors' note).

The schoolmistress. The one parish office open to women was that of the girls' schoolmistress. She was not a church servant in the full sense. But she was chosen with the superintendent's or the pastor's knowledge, paid, bound to an order, and visited. At Schmalkalden in 1555 the visitors allowed a matron or an old man, and counted the Litany among the things the girls were to learn. Schmalkalden, Ordnung der Visitatoren, 1555 (Sehling 2, p. 348):

> Zum siebenten soll ein erbarer rath ein christliche und gottfürchtige matron oder einen erbarn alten man verordnen, der eine jungfraue schule anfahe, mit vorwissen des superintendenten und pfarrherrn, die jungfrauen umb einen zimlichen lon ime catechismo, geistlichen liedern und psalmen unterweise, sie schreiben und lesen lere, die litanei in der kirchen singen helfen.

Seventhly, an honourable council shall appoint a Christian and God-fearing matron, or an honest old man, to begin a school for maidens, with the foreknowledge of the superintendent and pastor; to instruct the maidens for a reasonable wage in the catechism, spiritual songs and psalms, to teach them to write and read, [and] to help to sing the Litany in the church.

At Cottbus in 1579 the visitors confirmed a widow in the office for life, and bound her to the general superintendent's printed order. Cottbus, Visitations-Abschied, 1579 (Sehling 3, p. 201):

> Die jungfrauenschule ist durch frau Annen, des herrn Georg Lehmanns wittwe, vorsorgt. Als wollen die herren visitatores dieselbige zur schulmeisterin perpetuirt haben und wird sich die schulmeisterin hinfuro der ordnung, so der herr D. Andreas Muskulus, superintendes generalis, in druck verfertigen lassen, vorhalten und die jungfrauen, so ir befohlen, in aller zucht und erbarkeiten auferziehen

The maidens' school is provided for by Mistress Anna, widow of Master Georg Lehmann. So the lords visitors will have her made schoolmistress for good; and the schoolmistress shall henceforth keep to the order which Dr Andreas Musculus, general superintendent, hath caused to be put in print, and bring up the maidens committed to her in all discipline and honesty

The Saxon visitors of 1577 asked after her together with the church's other servants. Electoral Saxony, Visitations-Instruktion, 1577 (Sehling 1, p. 350):

> 5. Wie sich die deutschen schulmeister, auch der meidlin schulmeisterin in stedten und die custodes uf den dörfern jedes in seinem ampt in der kirchen und schule vorhalten.

5. How the German schoolmasters, also the maidens' schoolmistress in the towns, and the sextons in the villages, each conduct themselves in their office in the church and school.

The same office appears in other forms:

- The Reformed Palatinate (1595) had "every schoolwoman" bring her girls to the catechism sermon (§15.9.3).
- Lauenburg (1585) wanted "honourable, unsuspected, Christian matrons" as schoolmistresses (Sehling 5, p. 446).
- At Stendal (1540) the girls' school was to be kept by "a woman, or one or more of the convent maidens of St Anne" (Sehling 3, p. 310).
- In the convents the sisters chose a schoolmistress from among themselves (Soest 1543, Sehling 22, p. 468), or a matron or maiden was engaged (Mecklenburg 1572, Sehling 5, p. 260).

The midwife. The midwife was the other woman whom the church examined and swore, because she might have to baptize (§13.12.5). Bugenhagen's Hamburg order of 1529 says that the midwives "may well be called church servants" (§16.2).

16.9.5 Women reading and praying aloud

In the parish church: not in the service. Under the Hessian rule (§16.9.2) no woman read or prayed aloud in the congregation, and no parish order gives her a reading. Girls spoke in church as catechumens: they said the parts of the catechism and the prayers at the catechism examinations (§10.12). At Regensburg the boys' and the girls' schools sang from the catechism together, but two boys did the questions and answers. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, 1567(?) (Sehling 13, p. 464):

> Anfangs singen die schulen, beide kneblin und mägdlin, etwas vom catechismo, was den tag fürnemlich für ein stück darvon gehandlet wird, als die 10 gebot oder den glauben oder das Vater unser, von tauf oder von dem abentmahl. Darnach lieset der prediger von der canzel ein stücklin der gestelten methodischen summa, wie die hernach hiebei zustehen. Auf dasselbig stehen dann zween knaben auf stulen, darzu gegeneinander bereitet, deren einer fragt, der ander antwortet

First the schools, both boys and girls, sing something from the catechism, according to the part of it that is chiefly handled that day, as the Ten Commandments, or the Creed, or the Lord's Prayer, of baptism or of the Supper. Thereafter the preacher readeth from the pulpit a little piece of the methodical summary set forth, as it standeth hereafter. Upon that, two boys stand on stools prepared for this over against one another, of whom the one asketh and the other answereth

In Honterus's order for Kronstadt the schoolgirls took the part that fell to boys elsewhere. After Vespers they sang in the church, or put the catechism questions to one another before the congregation. Transylvania, Honterus, Reformationsbüchlein, 1543 (Sehling 24, p. 184; Latin):

> Peractis omnibus puellulae scholasticae aut aliquas cantiunculas in templo decantant aut quaestiones de praecipuis partibus catechismi mutuo proponunt et ad instructionem auditorum explicant. Interdum etiam aliquis ministrorum rudimenta catechismi iuventuti pronunciat.

When all is done, the little schoolgirls either sing some little songs in the church, or put questions to one another on the chief parts of the catechism and explain them for the instruction of the hearers. Sometimes also one of the ministers pronounceth the rudiments of the catechism to the youth.

The German version has "the taught maidens" (dye gelerte meydleyn) do the same (Sehling 24, p. 196). In the Torgau girls' school (1575) a girl led the prayers, but that was in school, not in church (§10.12.7).

In the convent choir: the sisters read and pray. In the evangelical convents the women kept their own office in the choir (§10.4.4), and the orders gave its readings and prayers to the sisters. Pfalz-Neuburg (1543) has the women of the convents "read their lessons, chapters and collects in German" (§10.8.2). In Württemberg (1556) one sister reads a chapter aloud, so that "the reader and the hearers" may profit. Both words are feminine. Württemberg, Ordnung für Frauenklöster, 1556 (Sehling 16, p. 307), on the morning exercise:

> Da sollen sie erstlichs zum eingang mitainander das vatter unser oder ainen teutschen psalmen ußer dem gmainen psalmen gsang büechlin singen und daruff nur zwen oder drey psalmen von anfang des psalters nach seiner ordnung, uff zwaien Choren gegenainander und daruff ir aine im alten Testament ain Capittel, alles mit rechter, verstentlicher mensur und erhebter, lautter stimm lesen, das die Leserin und die zuhörerin ain nutz daruß empfahen mögen

There they shall first, for the entrance, sing together the Lord's Prayer or a German psalm out of the common psalm-book; and thereupon only two or three psalms from the beginning of the Psalter in its order, on two choirs one against the other; and thereupon one of them shall read a chapter in the Old Testament, all with right, understandable measure and with raised, loud voice, that the reader and the hearers may receive profit thereof

In Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel (1569) "one of the maidens" says the morning prayer "with a loud voice, for the others to pray with her", and then reads the chapter (Sehling 6/1, p. 260). In Mecklenburg (1572) the office goes round the convent by the week, beginning with the domina. Mecklenburg, Klosterordnung, 1572 (Sehling 5, p. 257):

> also dass die domina die erste wochen und hernach eine nach der andern, jegliche eine ganze wochen, wen sie im chor versamlet, die verordnete gebete und lectiones lesen, und anfangs mit lauter stimme das gebet, welches allen christen unser herr und heiland Jesus Christus selbst fürgeschrieben hat, den andern fürspreche. Darnach singet: die jungfrau: Herr thue meine lippen uf. Ehre sei dem vater und dem sohne und dem heiligen geiste. Chor: Dass mein mund dein lob verkündige.

so that the domina the first week, and thereafter one after another, each a whole week, when they are assembled in the choir, shall read the appointed prayers and lessons, and at the beginning say before the others, with a loud voice, the prayer which our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ himself hath prescribed to all Christians. Thereafter the maiden singeth: Lord, open thou my lips. Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost. Choir: That my mouth may shew forth thy praise.

The Schaumburg order for the Stift of Obernkirchen (1603) speaks of the sisters as administering their own service. Schaumburg, Ordnung für das Stift Obernkirchen, 6 August 1603 (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 88):

> Wie die jungkfrawen ihre sacra und gantzen gottesdienst teglichs unnd auch uf die Sontage unnd andere festa in der kirchen verwalten unnd außrichten sollen [...] Zur Metten 1. Den morgen, wen die junckfrawen in ihrem chor versamlet, sollen sie eindrechtiglich unnd mit andacht singen oder beten das Veni Sancte spiritus. 2. Darnach auß dem Psalterio Davidis etzliche teudtsche psalmen mit lauter stimme leßen [...] 5. Hierauf eine collecta gesungen oder gesprochen vor erhaltung geistlichs und weltlichs regiments

How the maidens shall administer and perform their holy offices and their whole service in the church daily, and also on Sundays and other feasts [...] At Matins: 1. In the morning, when the maidens are assembled in their choir, they shall with one accord and with devotion sing or pray the Veni Sancte Spiritus. 2. Thereafter read with a loud voice certain German psalms out of the Psalter of David [...] 5. Hereupon a collect [shall be] sung or spoken for the preservation of the spiritual and temporal government

Reading at table was the young sisters' task too. At Soest (1543) they read "one after the other" a lesson from the Old or New Testament at the midday and evening meals, appointed by the schoolmistress (Sehling 22, p. 468). At Spandau (1541) one of them read an article of the church order in the refectory (§10.4.4).

The limit was the sermon and the sacrament. The sisters read, sang and prayed, but a man was appointed to preach to them and give them the sacrament (§16.9.3). At Kolberg (1586), whose maidens lived on the convent's alms, even the collect fell to a man: the convent's preacher, or in his absence the sexton (§16.9.8).

16.9.6 Women singing, and who led the singing

With the congregation. The German hymn was for everyone. At Naumburg in 1527, after the priest had intoned the Creed, the whole congregation took it up in German. Naumburg, Kirchen-Ordnung für die St. Wenzelskirche, 1527 (Sehling 2, pp. 59–60):

> Alsobalde hebet dorauf an die ganze kirche und vorsamelung von mannen, junkfrauen und frauen, wer es kan und singen will, den glauben zu deutsch zu singen

Straightway thereupon the whole church and assembly, of men, maidens and women, whoever can and will sing, beginneth to sing the Creed in German

The later orders complain when the women do not sing. Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1192):

> Zum neunden befindet sich auch, das die frauen, jungfrauen und megde, welche doch sonst gerne an andern örtern weltliche lieder singen, in der kirchen stille schweigen oder heimlich bey sich selbst zischern und sich, ihren Gott und Herrn zu loben, schemen. Derhalben wir denselben ernstlich gebieten, das sie ihren mund aufthun, ihre stimme erheben und uber laut Gott loben, danken und preisen helfen, auch darob sein, das sie die psalmen und geistlichen lobgesenge lernen und die, so lesen können, ihre psalmbücher mit in die kirche bringen und daraus singen

Ninthly, it is found also that the women, maidens and maidservants, which elsewhere gladly sing worldly songs, keep silence in the church, or whisper secretly to themselves, and are ashamed to praise their God and Lord. Therefore we earnestly command them that they open their mouth, lift up their voice, and help to praise, thank and glorify God aloud; and that they see to it that they learn the psalms and spiritual songs of praise; and that those which can read bring their psalm-books with them into the church and sing out of them

At Münster in the Gregoriental (1578) the schoolmasters were to lead the singing so that "not only the scholars, but also the common people, men and women, can sing along" (Sehling 20/2, p. 394). At Schweinfurt the schoolmaster resisted. Schweinfurt, editors' introduction (Sehling 11, p. 622):

> Beim Wiederaufbau versuchte Pfarrer Wolfgang Ruprecht (1556-1563) auch eine Neugestaltung der Kirchenordnung, indem er die Gemeinde stärker unmittelbar am Gottesdienst beteiligte. Er wollte sie deutsche Lieder singen lassen. Dagegen beschwerte sich aber der Schulmeister mit der Behauptung, „es gebühre der Schul und nicht... den alten Weibern, zu singen“. Der Rat stellte sich auf die Seite des Schulmeisters und gestattete nur, daß an den drei hohen Festen ein deutsches Lied von der Gemeinde gesungen werde.

In the rebuilding, Pastor Wolfgang Ruprecht (1556–1563) also tried to reshape the church order by giving the congregation a more direct part in the service. He wanted to let them sing German songs. But the schoolmaster complained, asserting that "it belongeth to the school, and not … to the old women, to sing". The council took the schoolmaster's side, and allowed only that a German song be sung by the congregation on the three high feasts.

Girls' choirs. In some towns the schoolgirls sang as a choir of their own. Zwickau ended one in 1529. Zwickau, Verordnung der Visitatoren, 1529 (Sehling 1, p. 722):

> Auch mag man an hohen festen das ampt der messe und vesper lateinisch vorsingen. Der meidlen kor mit irem gesange soll abgeen, dann sie mit derselben arbeit zubeschweren von unnoten.

Also the office of the Mass and Vespers may be sung in Latin on high feasts. The maidens' choir with its singing shall cease, for there is no need to burden them with that labour.

Naumburg's St Wenzel order of 1537/38 counts four choirs "when the maidens also sing in choir" (§9.3.3). When Nördlingen took over the passage in 1555, it added that its girls' choir had still to be founded. Nördlingen, Ordnung der ceremonien, 1544, revised 1555 (Sehling 12, p. 320):

> Wenn aber auch die jungfreulin zu chor singen, die wir mit der zeit, so Gott gnad gibt, darzu wöllen anrichten, so werden vier chor gehalten

But when the maidens also sing in the choir, whom in time, if God give grace, we will train thereto, four choirs are held

At the Dresden Kreuzkirche (1574) the girls and maidservants sang the whole German hymn before the midday sermon. Dresden, Gottesdienst-Ordnung der Kreuzkirche, 1574 (Sehling 1, p. 555):

> Mittags predigt. Circa horam undecimam a prandio fit pulsus ad contionem. Luditur in organis germanicae alicujus cantionis primus versus, puellae et famulae canunt totam cantionem germanicam, canit autem ecclesia, per totam illam horam ab undecima usque ad duodecimam.

The midday sermon. About the eleventh hour after dinner the bell is rung for the sermon. The first verse of some German song is played on the organ; the girls and maidservants sing the whole German song, and the church singeth too, through all that hour from eleven until twelve.

Hof (1592) gives the fullest picture. Its girls' choir sang one acclamation of the Kyrie (§2.6.1), alternate verses of the German Magnificat (§10.11.4), and the German verses of the Latin festal songs (§8.16.10). The order also says who led the two choirs. Hof, Ordo ecclesiasticus, 1592 (Sehling 11, pp. 428, 474):

> Ad vespertinas preces aliquis hymnus vel alia pia cantilena serviens tempori per binos choros, unum scholasticorum, quem gubernat ludirector, alterum puellarum, canitur praeeunte hos organicine ita, ut primum versum seu paragraphum pueri, secundum puellae canant, et sic consequenter. […] Für das erste wird ein christlich gesang […] von zweien unterschidlichen choren gesungen, da dann der cantor mit seinen knaben das erste, der h[err] superattendens aber oder der diaconus, so da wöchner, das ander gesetz mit den schulmegdlein und so fortan verrichtet. Nach vollendung dieses gesangs lieset ein tertianus innerhalb des gegitters des altars, facie ad auditores conversa, ein capitel aus dem buch Jesus Sirach

At the evening prayers a hymn, or other godly song serving the season, is sung by two choirs, the one of the scholars, which the rector governeth, the other of the girls, the organist going before them; so that the boys sing the first verse or paragraph and the girls the second, and so on. […] First a Christian song […] is sung by two distinct choirs, in which the cantor with his boys performeth the first stanza, but the lord superintendent, or the deacon who is of the week, the second with the schoolgirls, and so on. When this song is ended, a scholar of the third class readeth a chapter out of the book of Jesus Sirach within the rails of the altar, with his face turned to the hearers

In the Whit Monday procession "the maidens' schoolmaster beside his schoolgirls and other maidens, and behind them the womenfolk" followed the men, singing Sei Lob und Ehr mit hohem Preis "at the maidens' schoolmaster's beginning" (Sehling 11, p. 463). At Aschersleben (1575) the girls of the maidens' school were catechized at Vespers three days a week, while the sexton sang the German psalm (Sehling 2, p. 480).

The convent choirs and their precentresses. In the convents the sisters were the choir, and a sister led it. The order for St Walburgis at Soest (1543) makes the cantrix its director. Soest, Ordnung für das Kloster St. Walburgis, 1543 (Sehling 22, p. 468):

> Van der sengerschenn De cantrix und ere adiutrix sollen im core anheven de antiphonen, psalmen, hymnos etc., ock sall de cantrix dat syngen ym cor na gelegenheit der tyt und der junfferen up dat vorderlixte und beste verordenen. Ock ys unse bevell, dat de junfferenn mer dutsch dan latin singen, unde wes se latinisch singet, datselve sal dorch den prediger wol declareret werden, up dat se wetten und verstan, wat see singen. Deselbige sal ock eyn upsent hebben, dat de gesanck reyne sy und blive.

Of the singer. The cantrix and her assistant shall begin the antiphons, psalms, hymns, etc., in the choir; and the cantrix shall order the singing in the choir according to the occasion of the season and of the maidens, to the most profitable and best. It is also our command that the maidens sing more German than Latin; and what they sing in Latin shall be well declared by the preacher, that they may know and understand what they sing. The same shall also have an oversight that the singing be and remain pure.

At Keppel (1570) the precentress began Matins. Nassau-Dillenburg, Ordnung für das Kloster Keppel, 1570 (Sehling 10, p. 133):

> Zur mettenn aber soll die vorsengerin anheben zu teutsch: Venite exultemus Domino, darnach sollenn sie drei psalmen singen unnd bey jedem psalmen ein kurtz summarium fur oder nach lesenn

But at Matins the precentress shall begin in German: Venite exultemus Domino; thereafter they shall sing three psalms, and with each psalm read a short summary before or after Keppel also had a "lecturess or prioress" (Leßmeisterin) among its spiritual offices (§16.7.3). Lüneburg (1574) sent home any girl who would not learn enough Latin to "help to sing and read in the choir" (Sehling 6/1, p. 622). The Neuenwalde order (1606/1614) bade the sisters come into the choir before the service on feast days "and help to sing" (Sehling 7/1, p. 41).

No woman cantor in the parish. The parish cantor was a schoolman (§15.9). At Naumburg and Nördlingen even the people's choir "hath its own cantor" (Sehling 2, p. 72; 12, p. 320), a precentor for the congregation whom the orders do not name. No parish order names a woman as cantor or precentor, and at Hof the girls' choir itself was led by men.

16.9.7 Laymen at the Lord's Table

The rule: the ministers give the bread and the cup. In the Lutheran orders the pastor gives the bread, and the cup is given by the deacon, who is an ordained minister (§§16.4.2, 16.5.1). Laymen served around the altar:

- the sexton prepared the altar and carried the vessels to the sick (§16.7.1);
- boys or honest men held the communion cloth (§14.6.3);
- at Thorn (1575) the sexton stood by "to help the old, weak and sick people up and down" at the altar (Sehling 4, p. 237).

But no Lutheran order gives a layman the bread. Hesse argued the rule from the early church, and then allowed exceptions for the cup. Hesse, Kirchenordnung, 1566 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 312):

> So sagt auch die epistel synodi Alexandrinae apud Athanasium, Apolog. 2 ausdrücklich: Es gebürt niemand, das blut Christi darzureichen, denn allein den ordentlichen vorstehern der kirchen. […] Wo man aber kein kaplan hat, verrichtets der pfarherr allein, oder da die zal der communicanten groß, mit hilf eines aus den senioribus, schulmeister oder opfermanns. Und wo sich dieser fall zutregt, daß kein kaplan oder zum predigampt verordenter kirchendiener verhanden, der da könt zu uberreichung des kelchs, wenn es die not erfordert, gedienet sein, wird alwegen hierzu gebraucht nicht ein person eins weltlichen ampts, sondern ein diacon, senior oder castenmeister, schulmeister (sofern er theologiae und nicht einer andern facultet studiosus ist) oder ein opfermann. Da soll aber dieser underschied gehalten werden, daß diejenigen, so man hierzu brauchen will, ansehnlich in der lehr und glauben aller heuptartikeln christlicher religion, sonderlich im artikel vom nachtmal rein und bei der gemeine eines guten geruchts und namens seien.

So also the epistle of the synod of Alexandria in Athanasius, Apology 2, saith expressly: It belongeth to none to reach the blood of Christ but to the ordained presidents of the church alone. […] But where there is no chaplain, the pastor doeth it alone, or, if the number of the communicants be great, with the help of one of the seniors, the schoolmaster or the sexton. And where this case falleth out, that no chaplain or minister appointed to the office of preaching is at hand who could serve in the reaching of the cup when need requireth, there shall always be used for it not a person of a worldly office, but a deacon, senior or keeper of the chest, a schoolmaster (so far as he is a student of theology and not of another faculty), or a sexton. But this distinction shall be kept: that those whom one will use for it be of repute in the doctrine and faith of all the chief articles of the Christian religion, sound especially in the article of the Supper, and of good report and name with the congregation.

The Hessian seniors and deacons were themselves ordained with laying on of hands in 1566 (§§16.5.3, 16.6.2). The schoolmaster and the sexton were not.

Nassau-Weilburg 1617: no more laymen at the cup. The Lutheran county of Nassau-Weilburg ended the practice, together with the communion cloth. Nassau-Weilburg, Erläuterungspunkte zur Kirchenordnung, 1617 (Sehling 10, p. 351):

> 4. Wir seindt berichtet, das noch an etlichen wenig orten den communicanten ein tüchlein vorgehalten werde indem sie zue des herren disch gehen, daßelbige soll hiermit abgeschafft sein [...] 5. Eß sollen die pfarrer unndt kirchendiener die communicanten uff der cantzel in das gemeine gebeth einschließen. 6. Kein layhe soll hienfuro mehr den kelch bedienen, sondern die kirchendiener selbst.

4. We are informed that in some few places a little cloth is still held before the communicants as they go to the Lord's table; the same shall hereby be abolished [...] 5. The pastors and church ministers shall include the communicants in the common prayer from the pulpit. 6. No layman shall henceforth serve the cup any more, but the church ministers themselves.

The Reformed table: passed from hand to hand. In Micron's order for the Dutch church in London (Reformed), the communicants sat at the table. The minister gave the bread and the cup only to those nearest him, and the rest passed them on. Micron, Ordinancien (1554), German edition, 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, p. 634):

> Denn werden die zwo schüsselen auf beiden seiten biß zum ende des tisches von ihm und andern ansitzenden brüdern ordentlich fortgeschoben, auf daß ein jeder ein stück für sich selbs darauß nemme und esse zu der gedechtnuß des leibs Christi, so für ihn in den tod gegeben ist. [...] Und denn gibt er die zwey trinkgeschir den brüdern, so zu beiden seiten sitzen

Then the two dishes on both sides are pushed along in order to the end of the table, by him and the other brethren sitting there, that every one may take a piece out of them for himself and eat it in remembrance of the body of Christ, which was given into death for him. [...] And then he giveth the two cups to the brethren which sit on both sides

Laymen at the cloth. In Hohenlohe the answers to the questions on church ceremonies of 1596 show the cloth held in every parish. The only difference was who held it: "at Weikersheim it is schoolboys; at Adolzhausen, Hollenbach and Schäftersheim the two churchwardens (Heiligenpfleger)" (Sehling 15, p. 534, editors' note).

16.9.8 Laymen leading prayer and reading in church

The Litany. The Litany was the one long prayer of the church that laymen led. Usually two to four boys knelt before the altar and sang the petitions, and the choir and people answered (§10.12.3, §13.21.3). In some orders the schoolmaster or the sexton led it. Regensburg, Wahrhaftiger Bericht, 1542 (Sehling 13, p. 391):

> das anfenklich nach der predig vor demselben ambt der schulmaister sambt seinen knaben und mithelfern die letanei, das ist: das gemein gebet fur alle stende und note der christenheit, singet, also das etliche aus denselben den ersten chor anfahen zu singen und der ander chor darauf antwortet.

that at the beginning, after the sermon and before the same office, the schoolmaster with his boys and helpers singeth the Litany, that is, the common prayer for all estates and needs of Christendom; so that certain of them begin to sing the first choir, and the other choir answereth thereupon.

Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, Christlike kerken-ordeninge, 1543 (Sehling 6/1, p. 58), on the villages:

> Up den dörpern scholen de kerckheren yd ock also holden und so vele alse en mögelick is, mit den buren singen. Se mit eren köstern scholen sick vliten, dat se den buren eindrechtich singen und Got laven leren. Wenn se des hilgen dages na der predike in der missen nene communicanten hebben, so schal de kerckhere edder köster na der predike de düdesche litania singen und gewennen dat volk dartho, dat se fyn eindrechtich in der litania antwerden könen. Darup volget eine düdesche collecta vor allerley not und de leste benedictio dorch den kerckheren dem volke gegeven.

In the villages the pastors shall hold it so too, and sing with the peasants as much as is possible for them. They with their sextons shall take pains to teach the peasants to sing with one accord and to praise God. When on the holy day they have no communicants at the Mass after the sermon, the pastor or the sexton shall sing the German Litany after the sermon, and accustom the people thereto, that they can answer finely with one accord in the Litany. Thereupon followeth a German collect for all manner of need, and the last blessing, given to the people by the pastor.

In the Hildesheim order for Steuerwald and Peine the sexton alone sings it. Steuerwald and Peine, Kirchenordnung, 1561 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 783):

> Wan aber kaine communicanten furhanden seint, so sol der opferman nach der predig die deutschen letaney singen, darauf volget ein deutsche collecta fur allerley nodt und zuletzt der segen wie droben.

But when there are no communicants, the sexton shall sing the German Litany after the sermon; thereupon followeth a German collect for all manner of need, and lastly the blessing, as above.

So where there was no Supper, the Litany led by a layman took the place of the Communion (§13.21.1). At Aschersleben (1575) "the boys shall begin the Litany" (Sehling 2, p. 480).

The sexton's service in the filial churches. The Saxon General Articles of 1557 gave the sexton a reading service where the pastor could not come, and drew the line at preaching. Electoral Saxony, General-Artikel und gemeiner Bericht, 8 May 1557 (Sehling 1, p. 326):

> so sollen die kirchner an denen orten, da die pfarkirchen filial haben, so ofte der pfarherr an derselbigen orte einem frue predigt, mitler zeit dem volke an andern orten, do sie des pfarherrn predigt nicht hören können, die epistel und evangelium desselbigen sontags vorlesen, und etzliche christliche deutsche lieder singen. Wann aber der pfarherr desselbigen orts nach mittage predigt, sol der custos alsdann am andern orte der jugent den catechismum vorlesen, und mit inen fleissig uben. the sextons, in those places where the parish churches have filials, shall, as often as the pastor preacheth early in one of the same places, meanwhile read to the people in the other places, where they cannot hear the pastor's sermon, the epistle and gospel of the same Sunday, and sing certain Christian German songs. But when the pastor of the same place preacheth in the afternoon, the sexton shall then read the catechism to the youth in the other place, and exercise them diligently therein. But no bell-ringer that is not examined and ordained shall be permitted to preach beyond this. But if they be examined and ordained, and called also to take charge of the office of the diaconate, they shall be granted and permitted not only to preach, but also the other offices of the church, with hearing confession, reaching the sacrament and the like.

The Saxon order of 1580 repeats the rule, but asks only that the bell-ringer be "examined" (Sehling 1, p. 452). In the Weimar superintendency (1570) the sexton "sings Vespers at the other place, and reads the catechism to the people and examines them therein" (Sehling 1, p. 688).

Collects, responses and hymns. The sexton also gave the people's responses, led their singing, and at need closed the office with the collect:

- Responses. "The sexton answereth: And with thy spirit" (Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1557, Sehling 18, p. 212; Lüneburg 1564, Sehling 6/1, p. 553; Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel 1569, Sehling 6/1, p. 155).
- Hymns. The sexton sings the Lord's Prayer with the people (the villages of Brunswick, Sehling 6/1, p. 473), the communion hymn (Ritschenhausen 1566, Sehling 2, p. 346), and the closing Sei Lob und Ehr (Steuerwald and Peine 1561, Sehling 7/2.1, p. 783).
- The collect. At the maidens' convent of Kolberg the sexton read the closing collect when the preacher was absent. Kolberg, Statuten für das Jungfrauenkloster, 1586 (Sehling 4, p. 502):

> Idt schal ock de prediger des klosters, wo he nicht behindert, bi den ceremonien wesen und tom beschlute eine collecte lesen, edder der koster, de stedes die psalmen anfangen singen schall helpen und mit der collecte beschluten, so der pastor nicht gegenwartig ist.

The preacher of the convent also shall, where he is not hindered, be at the ceremonies, and read a collect at the close; or the sexton, who shall always help to begin the singing of the psalms, [shall] close with the collect, if the pastor be not present.

Daily prayer led by the schoolmaster. The Reformed lordship of Homburg had the schoolmaster hold a daily evening prayer in church. Homburg (Wittgenstein), Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1605 (Reformed; Sehling 22, p. 142):

> Weiter, so soll in jeder pfarkirchen uff alle tagh den abendt zu vier uhren die klocke geleutet werden, und soll alßdan der schulmeister mit den schulern in die kirch gehen, da man ein psalm singen und ein gebett sampt dem vatter unser vor die nodt der christlichen kirchen sprechen, auch ein capitell auß der bibell offentlich leßen soll. Und sollen alßdan die > leut, so in den kirchdorffern wohnen, oder jhe zum wenigsten auß jederm hauß ein mensch in die kirch gehen, dem gebett und singen beiwohnen und, waß auß der bibell geleßen wirtt, fleißig anhoeren und zu gemut fuhren.

Further, in every parish church the bell shall be rung every day in the evening at four o'clock; and then the schoolmaster shall go into the church with the scholars, where a psalm shall be sung, and a prayer with the Lord's Prayer said for the need of the Christian church, and a chapter out of the Bible read publicly. And then the people who dwell in the church villages, or at the least one person out of every house, shall go into the church, be present at the prayer and singing, and diligently hear and take to heart what is read out of the Bible.

In the Hohenlohe filial village of Herbsthausen the schoolmaster held the daily prayer, and the pastor complained in 1588 that he sang hymns other than those appointed (Sehling 15, p. 596, editors' note).

Boys as readers. At Naumburg (1537/38) the cantor appointed each Saturday the boys who would serve the coming week as "monitors, readers, catechists, versicle-singers and intoners" (Sehling 2, p. 89). Boys read the epistle at Vespers in Rostock (§16.3.5), and at Hof a chapter of Sirach "within the rails of the altar" (§16.9.6).

Laymen in the "prophecy". The Lutheran orders let no layman preach. Micron's Reformed order for London gave laymen a voice in the weekly "prophecy", the public examination of the week's doctrine, but only chosen men. Micron, Ordinancien (1554), German edition, 1565 (Reformed; Sehling 7/1, pp. 608–609):

> so wird nicht einem jedern zugelassen, die fragen in der prophecey vorzubringen, sonder es sind auß den eltesten und diaken, auch auß dem andren teil der gemein, gottsfürchtige und geschickte menner verordnet, von welchen man zeugnuß hat, daß sie anders nichts suchen dann die ehre Gottes und die erbauung der gemeine, denen ist allein geurlaubet, in der prophecey etwas vorzubringen. […] Es ist noch ein ander ordnung der prophecey, welche in etlichen gemeinen gebraucht wird, nemlich daß ein buch der schrift ordentlich erkleret wird, nit durch den diener des worts allein, sonder auch durch die eltesten, diaken und andere geschickte menner auß der gemeine, darzu verordnet, welche, wenn ein ort der h. schrift vorgelesen, eins nach dem andern erklären, ein jeder nach seiner gabe, die gemein lerende, vermanende und tröstende it is not permitted to every one to bring forward questions in the prophecy; but there are appointed, out of the elders and deacons and also out of the rest of the congregation, god-fearing and able men, of whom there is testimony that they seek nothing else than the honour of God and the edifying of the congregation; to them alone is it allowed to bring forward anything in the prophecy. […] There is yet another order of the prophecy, which is used in some congregations: namely, that a book of Scripture be expounded in order, not by the minister of the word alone, but also by the elders, deacons and other able men out of the congregation appointed thereto; who, when a place of holy Scripture hath been read, expound it one after another, each according to his gift, teaching, admonishing and comforting the congregation.

Sehling's editors think this second form peculiar to the Dutch church in London (Sehling 7/1, p. 609, note 16).

16.9.9 Who read the prayer bids

The minister. The general prayer and its bids belonged to the minister: the pastor, or the deacon, from the pulpit (§6.1.2). The orders that name the reader name a minister. Nördlingen, Ordnung der ceremonien, 1544, revised 1555 (Sehling 12, p. 318):

> 3. Darauf list der diacon ainer zum volk die vermanung zum gemainen gebet, beicht und absolution.

3. Thereupon one of the deacons readeth to the people the exhortation to the common prayer, confession and absolution.

Prussia, Kirchenordnung, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 79):

> singet die ganze kirche nach dem Benedictus oder Te deum laudamus: Wir glauben etc., nach welchem der caplan das gemeine gebet ablieset und wird auf das gebet gesungen : Nun bitten wir den heiligen geist etc., damit gehet der pfarrherr auf die kanzel und predigt das evangelium de tempore.

after the Benedictus or Te Deum laudamus the whole church singeth "We All Believe in One True God", etc.; after which the chaplain readeth off the common prayer, and after the prayer is sung "To God the Holy Spirit Let Us Pray", etc.; therewith the pastor goeth into the pulpit and preacheth the gospel of the day.

Aschersleben, Kirchen agenda, 1575 (Sehling 2, p. 480), at the weekday early service:

> 2. Darauf folget die lection eines capitels des alten testaments mit den summariis Viti Dieterichs, thuet der diacon, so wöchener ist. 3. Darauf thuet er die vermahnung des hern Petri Plateani zum gebet, und so für kranken zu bitten, geschicht solches auch.

2. Thereupon followeth the lesson of a chapter of the Old Testament with Veit Dietrich's summaries; the deacon who is of the week doeth it. 3. Thereupon he maketh Master Petrus Plateanus's exhortation to prayer; and if there are sick to be prayed for, that is done also.

The Litany: the bids sung by laymen. The exception was the Litany, "the common prayer for all estates" (Regensburg 1542), whose petitions boys, the schoolmaster or the sexton sang (§16.9.8). Hohenlohe's editors call Luther's German Litany "a special form of the general prayer of intercession", sung where there were scholars to sing it (Sehling 15, p. 611, note 57).

Requests for prayer. Laypeople, women among them, asked for the church's prayer, and the minister named them in the general prayer. Augsburg, Kirchenordnung, 1537 (Sehling 12, p. 70):

> Und in sonderhait erbarm dich etlicher die unsers fürbitts diser zeit in irem leiden, krankhait und trübsal begeren! Hie soll er die verkündigen, so des gemainen bets begeren, und darauf dann sprechen: Laß inen, treuer Gott, alles das väterlich widerfaren, das si nach deinem wilen durch unser fürbitt von dir begeren zu erlangen!

And in especial have mercy upon certain which at this time desire our intercession in their suffering, sickness and tribulation! Here he shall announce those which desire the common prayer, and thereupon say: Let all that befall them fatherly, faithful God, which according to thy will they desire to obtain of thee through our intercession!

The requests came in by word or on slips laid on the pulpit. Stade allowed slips for the sick only in cases that could not wait, and the first it names is a woman's. Stade, Kirchenordnung, about 1620/22 (Sehling 7/1, p. 55):

> 4. Nach den fest- und sontäglichen epistolenpredigten soll für keine kranken auf der kanzelen zettel gelesen oder gebeten werden, es sey dan, daß ein weib in kindesnot arbeidet oder einer mit den tote ringet oder zwischen den predigten am mittage gestorben, dafür Gott zu danken.

4. After the epistle sermons on feast days and Sundays no slips shall be read on the pulpit, nor prayers made, for any sick, unless it be that a woman laboureth in the pangs of childbirth, or one wrestleth with death, or hath died at midday between the sermons, for which God is to be thanked.

The visitation recess for Bardenfleth in Oldenburg (1609) speaks of the common prayer being "profaned and unhallowed with such frivolous things". The editors explain that people laid anonymous slips on the pulpit, asking the pastor to pray about thefts and losses, insults, and lawsuits against their opponents (Sehling 7/2.1, pp. 1198–1199). Even the council's notices were to be read by the clergy, not by its own servants. Stendal, Visitations-Abschied, 1578 (Sehling 3, p. 331):

> Es wirdet auch von den visitatoren, um allerlei nachreden und ubelstandes willen, vor guete angesehen, das der erbar rath ire mengele den pfarrern oder caplenen in ein zettel ubergeben, und durch sie ablesen, aber dogegen die stadtdiener vom predigstuel pleiben lassen.

It is also thought good by the visitors, for the avoiding of all manner of evil talk and unseemliness, that the honourable council deliver its complaints to the pastors or chaplains on a slip, and have them read off by them, but on the other hand keep the town servants off the pulpit.

So the bids were the minister's from first to last. Women and laymen appear in them as those who asked, or as those prayed for: "women with child" is a standing bid of the general prayer (Chapter 6).

Chapter 17. Confessional Subscription

This chapter covers how the evangelical church orders of the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries bound people to the confessions, as printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts. It asks five questions:

- Which documents did each order name as its rule of doctrine, its corpus doctrinae or norma doctrinae? Was it Scripture alone, the Augsburg Confession, the Apology, the Smalcald Articles, Luther's catechisms, Melanchthon's Loci and Corpus doctrinae, a territorial corpus, the Formula of Concord or the Book of Concord, or a local confession?
- How was a minister bound to these documents? By a list of books to buy, a question at the visitation, an examination, a written Revers, a sworn oath, a "Yea" at ordination, or a subscription with his own hand?
- How did this differ from one territory to another, and how did it change over time? The main stages are the 1530s, the Interim years, the age of the territorial corpora doctrinae in the 1560s and 1570s, the Formula of Concord campaign of 1577–1580, and the refusals and Reformed reorientations that followed.
- Were lay people ever bound in the same way? This covers the profession and vow at confirmation, admission to communion, godparents, admission as a burgher, and magistrates and other officials.
- What did the orders say about refusers and dissenters?

The findings are summarised in §17.1, and the method and its cautions are described in §17.2. §17.3 is a glossary of the documents the orders name. §17.4 sets out the forms of binding. §§17.5–17.16 go through the territories region by region, each in date order. §17.17 covers the laity. §17.18 is a table by order, and §17.19 a concordance of every order quoted.

17.1 Summary of findings

17.1.1 The main findings

1. There was no single confessional standard until 1580, and not everywhere after it. Every territory had a rule of doctrine, but what that rule held varied a great deal. In outline it moved through five stages:

- To about 1540: Scripture and the prince. The earliest oaths bound a pastor to preach "the holy gospel and word of God" purely, together with obedience to his lord. Brandenburg-Ansbach's priest's oath of 1528 is the model (§17.14.1). Heilbronn's council swore in 1530 to stand together in matters "of the gospel" (§17.17.5). Confessions are not yet named.
- About 1540 to 1560: the Augsburg Confession and Melanchthon. The CA and its Apology become the measure of preaching. The orders add Melanchthon's Loci communes as the textbook from which ministers are examined. This is so in Albertine Saxony in 1540 and 1557 (§17.5.1), Württemberg in 1547 (§17.13.1), Pomerania (§17.7.4) and Strasbourg's examination of 1549, issued under the Interim (§17.15.1). The norm is still given chiefly as a list of books a parish must buy.
- The 1560s and 1570s: territorial corpora doctrinae. Princes and cities gathered their own bodies of doctrine, which pastors had to own, follow and often subscribe. These were the Philippist Corpus doctrinae of 1560 (adopted in Electoral Saxony, Kurland, Brieg, Oldenburg, Bremen and Hesse, the last two Philippist), the Pomeranian, the Prussian (1567), the Thuringian, the Wolfenbüttel Corpus Julium (1576), the Brunswick city corpus (1571), the Ansbach-Nürnberg norma doctrinae (1573) and the Hohenlohe corpus (1578). Some local confessions also served as corpora: Mansfeld 1565, the Lüneburg Articles of 1561, Danzig's Notel of 1562, the Strasbourg Concord of 1563 and Ravensburg's local "formula concordiae" of 1578.

- 1577 to about 1600: the Formula and the Book of Concord. The FC was put to every minister for signature in Electoral Saxony, Brandenburg, Württemberg, Mecklenburg, Henneberg, Mansfeld, Pfalz-Neuburg, the Upper Palatinate, Ansbach and many Swabian and Franconian cities, and it was written into church orders such as Hoya's (1581). Later orders made signing the BoC a condition of admission to office (§§17.5.3, 17.6.2, 17.9, 17.13, 17.14). Ordination questions took the FC into the vow itself, answered with "Yea" (Henneberg 1582, Waldeck, Frankfurt 1589 and Strasbourg 1598).
- The refusers and the Reformed turn. Some refused the FC outright: Anhalt (§17.6.6), Hesse (Philippist), Danzig, Nürnberg and its neighbours, Gottorp and the Danish lands, Colmar (Moderate Reformed) and Bremen (Philippist). Pomerania kept its own corpus and took only three points of the FC against the Calvinists, in 1593. Some ceased to require it when they turned Reformed: Kurpfalz after 1583 and the Upper Palatinate in 1585. Others kept a pre-1577 norm or replaced the FC with a local formula, such as Hohenlohe's Gründlicher Bericht of 1603–1605. Where the Reformed took over, the CA variata or Scripture alone became the stated norm. The CA was understood in the Frankfurt Recess and Naumburg sense, and the Heidelberg Catechism replaced Luther's.

2. The canon grew by accretion. The usual sequence of additions to Scripture and the three creeds was:

- the CA, from 1530;
- the Apology;
- the SA, named increasingly from the 1550s, often "as signed at Smalcald 1537";
- Luther's catechisms;
- then either Melanchthon's corpus or a territorial corpus;
- and finally the FC or the whole BoC.

Many orders show this growth inside their own textual history. Ansbach's 1528 oath carries apparatus variants for 1570, 1573 and 1588 (§17.14.1). The Hohenlohe KO of 1578 gained a handwritten "7. Die formulam concordiae" (§17.13.3). The Kurpfalz formula of 1556 was rewritten in 1580 and 1586 (§17.12.1).

3. "Unaltered" and "in its true sense" are the signs of party.

- Gnesio-Lutheran or FC party. Adjectives such as unverändert, ungeändert, uralt, wie anno 30 übergeben, "in its right, true sense" and "as explained in the Apology, the SA and the catechisms" mark the Gnesio-Lutheran or FC party. Examples are Wolfenbüttel 1569 (§17.9.1), Verden 1606, Osnabrück 1610 and Hoya 1581.
- Philippist or Reformed party. Phrases such as "as repeated at Frankfurt and Naumburg", the Corpus doctrinae Philippi and the Repetitio (Confessio Saxonica) mark the Philippist or Reformed party. Examples are Bremen 1572 (Philippist), the Upper Palatinate 1585 (Reformed) and Kurland 1570 (Lutheran).

4. The form of binding hardened. The forms run from a book list, through a question at the visitation and a promise, to a sworn oath and a signature in one's own hand. In the oldest orders the confession appears as books a parish must buy (Ernestine Saxony 1554, Albertine Saxony 1557). Later orders demand:

- a public confession at admission (Ernestine Saxony 1569, Strasbourg from 1562);
- a written promise or Revers (Nassau-Diez 1564);
- an oath on the confessions (Ansbach, Peine/Gottorp 1574, Wimpfen, Hessen-Darmstadt 1617, Transylvania);
- subscription "with his own hand" (Electoral Saxony 1580, Regensburg 1572/88, Hildesheim 1593, Wimpfen).

The Kurpfalz (Lutheran and Reformed in turn) and Pfalz-Neuburg Bestallungen bind "with fealty given by the hand in the stead of a bodily sworn oath" (§17.12.1). §17.4 gives the forms in full.

5. Subscription reached beyond the clergy, but not to the common people. Superintendents, consistorial assessors and professors were bound as a matter of course. So in some cities were burgomasters, syndics, physicians and secretaries (Hildesheim 1593), the chamberlain and council (Regensburg 1572/88), and schoolmasters in many places. No order requires ordinary lay people to subscribe the CA or the FC. The laity were bound in other ways (§17.17):

- by the catechism examination before first communion and before marriage;
- by a public profession and vow at confirmation, chiefly in Hesse from 1539 and Strasbourg (both Moderate Reformed), the Reformed refugee churches and Electoral Saxony's confirmation of the baptismal faith;

- by the confession and exploration required before each communion (Schweinfurt 1543, after the CA itself);
- by rules for godparents and for admission as a burgher.

The Reformed orders alone required an explicit "confession of the Reformed doctrine" before the Supper (Nassau-Dillenburg 1582, Reformed, §17.17.2).

17.2 Scope, sources and method

17.2.1 What was searched

The whole of `eko.db` was searched for the vocabulary of confessional obligation:

- the names of the confessions, in German and Latin and with their OCR variants (augspurgische confession, apologia, schmalkaldische artikel, catechismus Lutheri, formula concordiae, concordienbuch, corpus doctrinae, norma doctrinae, loci communes, repetitio);
- the verbs of binding (unterschreiben, subscribieren, schwören, geloben, angeloben, verpflichten, zusagen, Revers, Eid, Pflicht, iuramentum, subscribo, promitto);
- the occasions of binding: ordination, examination, vocation, Bestallung, visitation, synod, admission to the consistory, and appointment as schoolmaster, superintendent or assessor.

Every hit was read in context. Each was sorted by whether it was the text of an order, Sehling's introduction or a footnote. For the laity the search covered confirmation, first communion, admission to the Supper (exploration, verhör), godparents (gevattern, paten, susceptores), admission as burgher (bürger, hintersäß), and oaths of councils and officials.

17.2.2 What the chapter does not do

- It does not give the full text of each confession, nor the history of the FC's making. It records only what the church orders themselves say.
- It does not list every signature. The great lists of subscribers in the archives are beyond the edition. Sehling sometimes reports their numbers, for example 444 signatures in Mecklenburg in 1577 (Sehling 5, pp. 142–143), and these are noted where he does.
- A book list is not a subscription. Many orders tell a parish to buy the CA, the Loci or a Corpus doctrinae, and tell the pastor to read it. That makes the book a standard of preaching, but it is not an oath or a signature. Where an order lists books only, this is said.
- A territorial norm is not always a personal obligation. A preface may say that "our churches" hold the CA without saying how a pastor was bound to it. The chapter marks which kind of statement each quotation is.

17.2.3 Cautions

- Sehling's introductions and apparatus. Several of the best statements about subscription, such as the Hildesheim decision of 1593 or the Anhalt refusal of the FC (Anhalt was still Lutheran), are found only in Sehling's introductions or footnotes, which quote or summarise archival sources. They are marked as such.

- Apparatus variants. Some orders were reissued, and the editors print the later wording in the apparatus. Examples are the Ansbach priest's oath (1528, with forms of 1570, 1573 and 1588), the Hohenlohe KO of 1578 (with a handwritten addition naming the FC) and the Kurpfalz KO of 1556 (with variants of 1577). These are quoted as variants with their dates.
- Record headings. The database's record headings sometimes name the first order in a volume section rather than the order on the page. So document 1844 is headed "Diese erste Danziger Ordnung … 1557", but its p. 234 is the Thorn KO of 1575, and its p. 210 the Danzig KO of 1612. Each order is named here from Sehling's running head. Where the running head is itself misleading, this is said (as at Anhalt, p. 579, where a passage of the 1588 Instructio runs onto a page headed with the next order).
- OCR errors. OCR errors are quoted as printed. Thus Calenberg's "Gorpus doctrinae Julium" is printed as such, and the Kassel KO of 1539 (Moderate Reformed) carries the running head "1589".

17.2.4 How to read the regional sections

Each regional section goes through its orders in date order. For each it says:

- what the norm was: which documents the order names, in what order, and with what qualifiers ("unaltered", "as delivered in 1530", "in its true sense");
- who was bound: ordinands, pastors, superintendents, schoolmasters, assessors, councils;
- how they were bound: book list, visitation question, examination, promise, Revers, oath, ordination "Yea", or subscription.

The table in §17.18 gathers these by order.

17.3 The documents the orders name

This glossary gives the documents in the form the orders name them. Where an order's wording identifies a particular edition or reading (the invariata or the variata, the first print of the Apology), this is noted. For dates and contents the standard editions are the Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche (BSLK, BSELK), which the editors of the later volumes cite in their footnotes.

17.3.1 The ancient creeds

- The three creeds (drei Hauptsymbola, symbola oecumenica): the Apostles', the Nicene and the Athanasian. They come first after Scripture in almost every list.
- The four councils (Nicaea, Constantinople, Ephesus and Chalcedon). These are named in Kurland (1570), the Katzenelnbogen pastors' oath (1598, Philippist, together with Leo's Tome to Flavian), Strasbourg (1598) and the Upper Palatinate (1585, Reformed). In Hessen-Kassel and the Upper Palatinate they are aimed against the ubiquity doctrine.

17.3.2 The Lutheran confessions

- Augsburg Confession (CA), 1530. Named in nearly every order from the 1530s on. The qualifiers matter:
  - wie anno 30 übergeben, ungeändert, unverändert, uralt, rein, unverfälscht, invariata, "the first edition";
  - against "as repeated at Frankfurt and Naumburg" (§17.12.2) and the variata of 1540. Ansbach (1573) names both "the last" and "the first edition" as signed at Naumburg in 1561 (§17.14.1).
- Apology of the CA (Apol). Usually paired with the CA. Goslar names it "in the first print" (§17.9.6). Anhalt dates the CA and the Apology "anno 30 und 33" (§17.6.6).
- Smalcald Articles (SA), 1537. Often "written by Dr Luther for the council at Mantua, and subscribed at Smalcald" (Albertine Saxony 1580, Ernestine Saxony 1569).
- Luther's Small and Large Catechisms (SC, LC). Hoya calls them "the laymen's Bible" (§17.9.5).
- Wittenberg Concord, 1536. Named in Pfalz-Neuburg (1564) and in Osnabrück (1610), which calls it "Formula Concordiae, anno 1536 aufgerichtet". This should not be confused with the FC of 1577.
- Formula of Concord (FC), 1577, and the Book of Concord (BoC), 1580. The FC is also called the Bergisches Buch, the einigungs und erklerungs notel (Henneberg), the einigungs formul (Henneberg, Waldeck) and the Concordibuch. The BoC is the whole corpus printed in 1580.

- Erfurt Apology of the BoC, 1582. Signed with the FC in Hildesheim (§17.10.1).

17.3.3 Melanchthon and the Philippist corpora

- Loci communes*. Melanchthon's doctrinal handbook. It was the examination textbook in Albertine Saxony (1540), Württemberg (Loci recentiores, 1547), Pomerania, Nassau-Diez (1564) and Ansbach (1573).
- Repetitio* or Confessio Saxonica, 1551. Written for the Council of Trent. Albertine Saxony (1557), Ansbach (1573) and Bremen (1570, Philippist) name it.
- Examen ordinandorum (Melanchthon's examination of ordinands, 1552) and the Responsiones* to the Bavarian articles.
- Corpus doctrinae Philippicum* (or Misnicum), 1560. Melanchthon's collected doctrinal works, printed by Vögelin in Leipzig. It was official in Electoral Saxony until 1574 and was adopted in Kurland (1570), Silesia (Brieg 1592), Oldenburg (1573), Bremen (1570–1575) and Hesse (1571), both Philippist, and Pfalz-Zweibrücken.

17.3.4 Territorial corpora and local confessions

- Corpus doctrinae Pomeranicum (1564): Melanchthon's works with Luther's catechisms and confession, in Low German and Latin (§17.7.4).
- Corpus doctrinae Prutenicum (1567), the Prussian corpus (§17.7.2).
- Corpus doctrinae Thuringicum (1570), and the Weimar Confutationsbuch (1558/59) against the sects, which Ernestine Saxony made binding in 1569 (§17.6.1).
- Corpus doctrinae Julium (Wolfenbüttel, 1576), signed in Calenberg-Göttingen (§17.9.4).
- Corpus doctrinae Wilhelminum (Lüneburg, 1576). This is named only in Sehling's introduction (Sehling 6/1, pp. 487–489).
- The Brunswick city corpus (1571) (§17.9.2).
- The Lüneburg Articles (1561), against the Philippists. Rostock (1573) names them, and Brunswick (1571) condemns what they condemn.
- The confession of Lübeck, Hamburg and Lüneburg against the Interim (1548). Part of the Lüneburg city corpus (1575).
- The Lower Saxon Confession (1571). In Goslar's corpus (1591/95).
- The Mansfeld confession (1565) (§17.6.3).
- The Danzig *Notel (1562). The city's own formula, signed by its clergy (§17.7.3).
- The Ansbach-Nürnberg *Norma doctrinae (1573) (§17.14.1).
- The Strasbourg Concord (1563) (§17.15).
- The Ravensburg "formula concordiae" (1578, renewed 1617), a local formula of the city's preachers (§17.13.5).
- The Württemberg Confession (Confessio Virtembergica), presented at Trent in 1552 (§17.13.1).
- The Hohenlohe *Gründlicher Bericht (1603/05), which took the place of the FC (§17.13.3).
- The Confessio Anhaltina and the Anhalt Supper confession of 1585. These are named in Sehling's introduction (§17.6.6).

17.3.5 Reformed documents

- The Heidelberg Catechism (1563, Reformed), which replaced Luther's catechism in the Reformed Kurpfalz Bestallung of 1586 (§17.12.1).
- The CA as "repeated" at Frankfurt (1558) and Naumburg (1561): the CA read in the variata sense, in the Upper Palatinate (1585, Reformed) and in Bremen (the Frankfurt Recess, 1575, Philippist).
- "The confession of the Reformed doctrine" required for admission to the Supper in Nassau-Dillenburg (1582, Reformed) (§17.17.2).

17.4 The forms of binding

The orders bind ministers to their confessions in seven ways. They range from the weakest, a list of books, to the strongest, an oath confirmed by one's own signature. Most orders use several of them at once.

1. The book list. The parish must buy the named books, keep them in the inventory, and the pastor must read them. Examples are Ernestine Saxony 1554, Albertine Saxony 1540 and 1557, Pomerania 1563/69 and Brieg 1592 (§§17.5.1, 17.6.1, 17.7.1, 17.7.4). It sets a standard of preaching but requires no personal act.
2. The visitation question. The visitor asks the pastor whether he holds the named confessions as his norma doctrinae and renounces all contrary opinions. Examples are Henneberg 1574, Magdeburg 1583 and Nassau-Weilburg 1576 (§§17.6.2, 17.6.4, 17.11.5).
3. The examination. The candidate is examined from the Loci, the CA or the corpus. Examples are Württemberg 1547, Strasbourg 1549 and Ansbach 1594, where he must first have read the whole BoC (§§17.13.1, 17.15.1, 17.14.1).
4. The promise, Revers or Bestallung. The minister promises in writing or by handshake to teach according to the named books. Examples:
   - the Nassau-Diez Revers (1564, §17.11.4);
   - the Pomeranian synodal formula "per dexteram societatis" (1574, §17.7.4);
   - the Kurpfalz Bestallungen "with fealty given by the hand in the stead of a bodily sworn oath" (1580–1601, Lutheran in 1580 and Reformed from 1586, §17.12.1).
5. The oath. The minister swears by God's name to the named books. Examples:
   - Ansbach, glob und schwer (1528 and later, §17.14.1);
   - the Peine and Gottorp preachers' oath (1574, §§17.8.4, 17.10.1);
   - the Wimpfen iuramentum (after 1577, §17.13.5);
   - Colmar (1575, §17.15.3);
   - Hessen-Darmstadt (1617, §17.11.1);
   - the Transylvanian superintendent (1601, §17.16). The Hohenlohe oath of 1588 swears to the church order rather than to named confessions (§17.13.3).
6. The ordination vow. At the laying on of hands the ordinand is asked whether he will direct his faith and confession by the named books and answers "Yea". This is so in Henneberg 1582, Waldeck, Frankfurt 1589 and Strasbourg 1598 (§§17.6.2, 17.11.2, 17.11.3, 17.15.2). In Mecklenburg in 1552 the promise is to remain in "the pure Christian doctrine which he hath confessed in this hearing", and no book is named (§17.8.1).
7. Subscription. The minister signs the corpus or the FC "with his own hand". Examples:
   - Albertine Saxony 1580 (§17.5.3);

For the laity see §17.17.

The ordination and installation rites in which the vows were taken are given in Chapter 13, §§13.10–13.11.

17.5 Albertine (Electoral) Saxony

Albertine Saxony moved further than any other territory: from the CA and Melanchthon's Loci (1540), through the Corpus doctrinae Philippicum (official from 1566 by Sehling's account, Sehling 1, pp. 124–125), to the Book of Concord. In 1580 a signature to the BoC was the condition of admission to every parish.

17.5.1 The CA and the Loci as a book list (1540, 1557)

The visitors' general instruction of 1540 tells pastors to preach nothing but what agrees with the CA and Apology, and to buy the books by which they will be measured. Albertine Saxony, Gemeiner bericht der visitatorn an die pfarrer und dorfschaften, 1540 (Sehling 1, p. 285):

> Und letzlich nichts anders lehren, denn das der confession und apologia keiserlicher mai. zu Augspurg uberantwortet, und bevorn dem heiligen evangelio gemes ist; darzu wil von nöten sein, das sie ihnen keufen die biblien und dieselbe confession etc. locos communes d. Philip., postillam Lutheri und andere christliche reine bücher, und darinnen vleissig studiren.

And lastly let them teach nothing else than that which is agreeable to the confession and apology delivered to his imperial majesty at Augsburg, and above all to the holy gospel; whereto it will be needful that they buy for themselves the Bible and the same confession, etc., the Loci communes of Dr Philip, Luther's postil, and other Christian pure books, and study diligently therein.

By 1557 the parish was to buy the Repetitio (Confessio Saxonica) of 1551 with the CA. Albertine Saxony, General-Artikel und gemeiner Bericht, 8 May 1557 (Sehling 1, p. 325):

> Bei den kirchen-vätern sol er anhalten, das sie von der kirchen-einkommen eine deutsche biblia, augspurgische confession, und deren obgemelte repetition, agenda, auch die deutsche locos communes erkaufen, die bei der pfarr bleiben und in das inventarium vorzeichnet werden, dieselbe sol er und der cüster fleissig zu lesen schuldig sein.

He shall urge the churchwardens that they buy out of the church's income a German Bible, the Augsburg Confession and the repetition thereof above mentioned, the agenda, and also the German Loci communes, which shall remain with the parish and be written into the inventory; and the same shall he and the sexton be bound diligently to read.

The norm here is wholly Melanchthonian. The CA is read with its Repetitio and the Loci; the Smalcald Articles are not named.

17.5.2 The Corpus doctrinae Philippicum (1560–1574)

The 1560 Corpus doctrinae (§17.3.3) was the official norm in Electoral Saxony from 1566 until the fall of the Philippists in 1574 (Sehling's introduction, Sehling 1, pp. 124–125). Outside Saxony it was named as a norm in Kurland, Silesia, Oldenburg, Bremen and Hesse, and Melanchthon's Loci in Nassau (§§17.7.1, 17.8.2, 17.10.4, 17.10.5, 17.11.1, 17.11.4).

17.5.3 The Book of Concord as the condition of office (1580)

Elector August's church order of 1580 makes a signature to the BoC the condition of being sent to a parish. Electoral Saxony, Kirchenordnung of Elector August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 380):

> Wann eine person auf gehalten examen und beschehene probpredigt zum kirchendienst tüchtig erkant, und durch die kirchen ördentlich vocirt und berufen ist, auch das buch der concordien mit eigener hand unterschrieben hat, das ihm der lehr halben zutrauen, sol ihm vor endlicher abfertigung auf die verordente pfarr, durch den presidenten oder directorem des consistorii nachfolgende erinnerung mit ernst fürgehalten werden.

When a person, after the examination held and the trial sermon done, is found fit for the ministry of the church, and is orderly called and summoned by the church, and hath also subscribed the Book of Concord with his own hand, so that he may be trusted as touching doctrine, then before his final dispatch to the parish appointed the admonition following shall be earnestly set before him by the president or director of the consistory.

The same order sets out the whole norm, in the sequence that became standard. The Smalcald Articles are now in, and the Corpus Philippicum is gone (Sehling 1, p. 420):

> ist unser ernstlicher wille und meinung, das hinfüro in allen kirchen unserer churfürstenthumb und landen, in massen wir anfangs in der Vorrede uber diese verfaste ordnung uns erkleret, sich alle pfarrer und kirchendiener anders nicht, denn den biblischen prophetischen und apostolischen schriften und denselben nach der unverenderten confession und der darauf erfolgten apologia und den zu Schmalkalden durch d. Luthern geschriebenen und die daselbsten versandete fürneme theologen approbirten und unterschriebenen artikeln, so dem concilio zu Mantua uberantwortet werden sollen, > auch beiden christlichen catechismis d. Luthers und der jüngst darauf zu Torgau von allen streitigen artikeln gestelter und hernach aus aller andern kirchen eingebrachtem bedenken verbesserter einhelliger declaration und christlichen erklerung durchaus gemess verhalten und denselben zuwider weder heimlich noch offentlich, nichts leren sollen.

It is our earnest will and meaning that henceforth in all the churches of our electorate and lands, as we declared at the beginning in the preface to this ordinance, all pastors and ministers of the church shall in all things behave themselves according to none other than the Biblical, prophetic and apostolic Scriptures; and after them according to the unaltered confession and the apology that followed thereon; and the articles written by Dr Luther at Smalcald, approved and subscribed by the chief theologians there assembled, which were to have been delivered to the council at Mantua; and also both Christian catechisms of Dr Luther; and the unanimous declaration and Christian explanation of all the articles in controversy, lately drawn up thereupon at Torgau and afterwards amended from the judgments brought in from all other churches; and shall teach nothing contrary to the same, neither secretly nor openly.

The FC is not named by its title. It is described as the declaration made at Torgau and amended from the judgments of the other churches. The same order's teaching on confirmation is quoted in §17.17.1.

17.6 Ernestine Saxony, Henneberg, the Harz counties, Magdeburg, Halberstadt and Anhalt

The Ernestine dukes were the Gnesio-Lutheran counterweight to Albertine Saxony. Their norm adds the Smalcald Articles early, and in 1569 the Weimar Confutationsbuch against the "sects". Around them the smaller territories of central Germany (Henneberg, Mansfeld, the archbishopric of Magdeburg, Halberstadt) followed with local confessions and, after 1577, with the FC. Anhalt alone refused it.

17.6.1 Ernestine Saxony: from the book list to the public confession (1554, 1569)

The 1554 instruction puts the Smalcald Articles beside the CA in the parish's library. Ernestine Saxony, Instruction Johans Friderichen des mittlern, Johans Wilhelm und Johans Friderichen d. j., 1554 (Sehling 1, p. 227):

> so sollen die visitatores mit den kirchvetern iedes orts vorfugen, das sie von dem kirchen oder anderm gemainen gut eine deutsche biblien und doctor Luthers hauspostil, Augspurgische confession, Schmalkaldische artikel, so Lutherus uf das concilium zu Mantua anno 38, zusampt der unterrichtung der visitatorn welche auch letzlich anno 38 ausgangen, kaufen, und dieselbigen erblichen zu der pfar widemen, in das pfar inventarium vorzeichen

the visitors shall order with the churchwardens of every place that they buy out of the church's or other common goods a German Bible and Doctor Luther's house postil, the Augsburg Confession, the Smalcald Articles, [which] Luther [made] for the council at Mantua in the year 38, together with the Instruction of the Visitors, which likewise came forth lastly in the year 38; and endow them in perpetuity to the parish, and write them into the parish inventory.

By 1569 no one could sit in the consistory at Jena unless he openly confessed the norm and condemned the errors named in the ducal Confutationes of 1558. Ernestine Saxony, Ordnung und reformation ecclesiastici consistorii zu Jena, 1569 (Sehling 1, p. 234):

> so ist unser gemüht und meinung, und wollen das kein person daran angenommen, noch geduldet werde, die sei dann eines christlichen erbarn wandels und bekenne sich offentlich und klar zu der h. schrift, des alten und neuen testaments, den dreien symbolis, apostolico, niceno und Athanasii, der augspurgischen confession, wie die anno 30. keiser Carol dem fünften, von unserm herren grosvater, und genedigen herrn vater herzog Johansen, und herzog Johans Fridrichen zu Sachsen, churfürsten, hochlöblicher christlicher gedechtnus, und etlich andern fürsten und stedten, ubergeben, sampt deren apologia, auch den artikeln, welche durch obgenanten d. Martin Luther seliger, auf das concilium zu Mantua gestellt, […] und widersprochen dargegen allen alten und neuen secten und corruptelen, so gottes reinen wort zu wider, und sonderlich denen die in unsern fürstlichen confutationibus, nach gehabtem synodo zu Weimar im 1558. jar im druck ausgangen, begriffen sind.

it is our mind and meaning, and we will, that no person be received thereto nor suffered, except he be of a Christian and honest conversation, and confess himself openly and clearly to the holy Scripture of the Old and New Testaments; to the three creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's; to the Augsburg Confession, as it was delivered in the year 30 to the emperor Charles the Fifth by our lord grandfather and gracious lord father, Duke John and Duke John Frederick of Saxony, electors of most laudable Christian memory, and certain other princes and cities; together with the apology thereof; and also to the articles which the aforenamed Dr Martin Luther of blessed memory set forth for the council at Mantua […]; and except he gainsay all old and new sects and corruptions which are contrary to God's pure word, and especially those that are comprehended in our princely confutations, which came forth in print after the synod held at Weimar in the year 1558.

This is the first order in this chapter to make a negative confession part of the obligation. The minister must not only hold the books but condemn, by name, the errors a particular book condemns. Brunswick (1571, §17.9.2), Regensburg (1567, §17.14.3) and Hessen-Darmstadt (1617, §17.11.1) do the same. In 1580 the Ernestine pastors were told to read the coming Book of Concord, on which they would be examined (Sehling 1, p. 254).

17.6.2 Henneberg: the visitation question, subscription and the ordination vow (1574–1582)

The Henneberg visitation of 1574/77 asks every pastor whether he holds the confessions as his norma doctrinae. Henneberg, Visitations- und Consistorial-Ordnung, 1574, 1577 (Sehling 2, p. 291):

> Jedes orts pfarrherr ist erstlich zu befragen, ob sich derselbe mit seinem glauben, lehr und bekäntniss zu h. göttl. schrift, den drei haupt symbolis, augspurgischer confession, apologia, schmalkaldischen artikeln und catechismo Lutheri durchaus in ihrem rechten, natürlichen, klaren verstande gelassen beipflicht, und pro norma doctrinae halten, auch dabei beständig verharren, hingegen aber alle widrigen meinungen absagen wolle.

The pastor of every place is first to be asked whether he, with his faith, doctrine and confession, assenteth wholly to the holy divine Scripture, the three chief creeds, the Augsburg Confession, the Apology, the Smalcald Articles and Luther's catechism, in their right, natural and plain sense, and will hold them pro norma doctrinae and continue steadfastly therein, and on the other hand renounce all contrary opinions.

The church order of 1582 recalls that Henneberg's ministers had always been "appointed, examined, ordained and made to subscribe" on these books, and lately also on the FC. Henneberg, Des durchlauchtigen hochgebornen fürsten und herrn, herrn Georg Ernsten, kirchen ordnung, 1582 (Sehling 2, p. 300):

> solche bücher und schriften jederzeit fur unserer kirchen normam gehalten, unsere kirchendiener auch darauf bestellen, examiniren, ordiniren, und unterschreiben lassen, […] wie wir uns denn auch, sampt den kirchendienern unserer fürstlichen grafschaft, hiebevor neulich auf eben dieselbige normam in unterschreibung der gemeinen einungs und erklerungs notel, sonsten die formula concordiae genant, als die aus solchem grund hergeflossen, gleichsfals referiret und gezogen.

[we have] at all times held such books and writings for the norm of our churches, and have also caused our ministers of the church to be appointed, examined, ordained, and to subscribe thereupon […]; as we also, together with the ministers of the church of our princely county, have lately referred and drawn ourselves likewise to this same norm in the subscription of the common note of union and declaration, otherwise called the Formula of Concord, as that which hath flowed from the same ground.

The same order puts the whole norm, the FC included, into the ordination itself. The ordinand answers "Yea" before hands are laid on him (Sehling 2, p. 324):

> Wollet ihr nu, wie euch nach lenge aus gottes wort vorgehalten, auch in demselbigen euch in euerm ampt weiter mass gegeben, halten, besonders aber euren glauben und bekentnus richten nach gottes wort, wie dasselbige in prophetischer und apostolischer heiliger schrift verfasset, desgleichen nach den dreien haupt symbolis, auch hieraus hergenomener, wolgegründter, warer augspurgischen confession, apologia, schmalkaldischen artikeln, kleinem und grossem catechismo Lutheri, sampt jetziger christlichen einigungs formul, so saget es hiermit gott und seiner heiligen christlichen kirchen, auch uns von ampts wegen, zu. Antwort: Ja. So befehlen wir euch das ampt des heiligen evangeliums, in dem namen gottes des vaters, sons, und heiligen geistes, amen. Imponite manus.

Will ye now keep that which hath been set before you at length out of God's word, and the further measure given you therein for your office; but especially direct your faith and confession according to God's word, as the same is contained in the prophetic and apostolic holy Scripture, and likewise according to the three chief creeds, and the true, well-grounded Augsburg Confession taken therefrom, the Apology, the Smalcald Articles, Luther's Small and Large Catechism, together with the present Christian formula of union? Then promise it hereby to God and his holy Christian church, and to us by virtue of our office.

Answer: Yea. So we commit unto you the office of the holy gospel, in the name of God the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, amen. Lay on hands.

Waldeck copied this question word for word (§17.11.2).

17.6.3 Mansfeld: the county's own confession of 1565 and the Book of Concord (1580, 1586)

Mansfeld's corpus included its own confession of 1565. Mansfeld, Kirchen-agenda für die prediger der grafschaft Mansfeld, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 215):

> Was aber gleichwol die lere anlanget, so bezeugen wir auch hiemit kürzlich und offentlich, das wir durch gottes gnade bei der waren und richtigen einhelligkeit der rechtgleubigen christlichen kirchen gottes bestendiglich verharren, wie dieselbige in gottes des allmechtigen unwandelbaren worte der heiligen schrift, als in den büchern der heiligen propheten und aposteln, in den allgemeinen symbolis apostolico, Athanasiano, und Niceno, in der ersten reinen, unverenderten augspurgischen confession, wie die anno 1530. weiland keiser Carolo dem fünften etc. zu Augspurg ubergeben, derselben apologia, in den schmalkaldischen artikeln, den beiden catechismis, grossen und kleinen, und in den andern schriften des teuren mannes gottes Lutheri, auch in unsern, in offenem druck, sonderlich des 1565. jars, ausgegangenen bekentnissen, begriffen und verfasset ist.

But as touching doctrine, we testify also hereby briefly and openly that by God's grace we continue steadfastly in the true and right unanimity of the orthodox Christian church of God, as the same is comprehended and set down in the unchangeable word of Almighty God, the holy Scripture, that is, in the books of the holy prophets and apostles; in the universal creeds, the Apostolic, the Athanasian and the Nicene; in the first, pure, unaltered Augsburg Confession, as it was delivered at Augsburg in the year 1530 to the late emperor Charles the Fifth, etc.; in the Apology thereof; in the Smalcald Articles; in the two catechisms, the Large and the Small; and in the other writings of the dear man of God, Luther; and also in our confessions that have come forth in open print, especially those of the year 1565.

The consistory order of 1586 then sets the BoC beside the county's own confession as the rule by which disputes are decided. Mansfeld, Gräflich mansfeldische geistliche consistorial ordnung, 1586 (Sehling 2, p. 201):

> so soll derselbige aus der h. bibel, den schriften der propheten und aposteln, aus den symbolis und erkäntnüssen der wahren kirchen, aus der augspurgischenconfession und apologia, aus d. Luthers schriften und catechismis, aus unserer kirchen anno 1565 ausgegangenen bekäntnüss geortert und entschieden werden. Weil auch das anno 1585 in druck ausgegangene concordien buch jeztgedachter und erzehlter norma einstimmet, und wir dasselbige in allen unsern kirchen durch die ganze grafschaft haben deponiren, niederlegen und den pfarr herren darnach zu lehren befehlen lassen, then shall the same be discussed and decided out of the holy Bible, the writings of the prophets and apostles, out of the creeds and confessions of the true church, out of the Augsburg Confession and Apology, out of Dr Luther's writings and catechisms, [and] out of our church's confession that came forth in the year 1565. And forasmuch as the Book of Concord that came forth in print in the year 1585 [variant: 1580] agreeth with this norm just now named and recounted, and we have caused the same to be deposited and laid up in all our churches throughout the whole county, and the pastors to be commanded to teach thereafter,

The consistory was to admit no one who "will not be at one with the others" in this norm.

17.6.4 Archbishopric of Magdeburg: the visitation question (1583)

The archbishopric's visitation instruction of 1583 calls the confessions "the right corpus doctrinae", and makes the FC rest on them. Archbishopric of Magdeburg, Instruktion zur Visitation, 25 May 1583 (Sehling 2, p. 419):

> Welche gemeine offentliche schriften und confessiones neben den prophetischen und apostolischen schriften und den dreien haupt symbolis das rechte corpus doctrinae, das ist summarischer inhalt, furbilt und richtschnur der reinen lehr sei, ob er seine lehr in allen seinen offentlichen predigten, auch in bericht bei den schwachgleubigen und kranken, vormuge prophetischer und apostolischer schriften, den dreien haupt symbolis, der augspurgischen unvorenderten confession, welche Carolo quinto anno etc. 30 ubergeben, derselben apologia, schmalkaldischen artikeln, grossen und > kleinen catechismos Lutheri, darauf sich die anno etc. 80 publicirte formula concordiae grundet, fur sich selbst halte und gleube und seiner bevohlenen kirchen vortrage und lehre.

Which common public writings and confessions, beside the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures and the three chief creeds, are the right corpus doctrinae, that is, the summary content, pattern and rule of pure doctrine. Whether he himself holdeth and believeth, and propoundeth and teacheth to the church committed to him, his doctrine in all his public sermons, and also in instructing the weak in faith and the sick, according to the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures, the three chief creeds, the unaltered Augsburg Confession which was delivered to Charles the Fifth in the year 30, the Apology thereof, the Smalcald Articles, and Luther's Large and Small Catechisms, upon which the Formula of Concord published in the year 80 is grounded.

17.6.5 Halberstadt: the Brunswick corpus (1588)

Halberstadt, ruled by the Wolfenbüttel dukes as administrators, takes over the Corpus doctrinae printed in the Brunswick church order. Bishopric of Halberstadt, Instruktion für die Visitation, 8 August 1588 (Sehling 2, pp. 468–469):

> darneben die biblia, augsburgische confession, derselben apologia, schmalkaldische articul, catechismos Lutheri, wie auch das corpus doctrinae in der braunschweigischen kirchen ordnung nicht allein fleissig zu lesen und in kopf zu fassen, sondern auch nach derselben richtschnur und regul ihre predigten anzustellen, and besides, not only diligently to read and get into their heads the Bible, the Augsburg Confession, the Apology thereof, the Smalcald Articles, Luther's catechisms, and also the corpus doctrinae in the Brunswick church order, but also to order their sermons according to the rule and line thereof.

17.6.6 Anhalt: the refusal

Anhalt never signed the FC. By Sehling's account, Prince Joachim Ernst "could not be moved" to sign it. From 1578 Anhalt's ordinands were no longer sent to Wittenberg but ordained at Zerbst (Sehling 2, pp. 525, 528–529). After his death the visitation instruction of 1588 still named a norm without the FC. It dates the CA and the Apology "anno 30 und 33" and names the late Prince Wolfgang's signature to them. Anhalt, Instructio commissariorum in potestate executionis der vorgenommenen Visitation, 21 September 1588 (Sehling 2, p. 579, a page that bears the running head of the next order):

> damit sie einige normam haben christlicher lehre und bekenntnüss, thun wir ihnen darzu folgende bücher benennen, als die heilige biblia des alten und neuen testaments, die drei haupt symbola, apostolicum, Nicaenum et Athanasianum, die augspurgische confession und derselben apologia, wie die anno 30 und 33 heiser Carln den fünften allerhochlöblichster, christlicher gedächtnüss übergeben und in offenen druck ausgangen, welche auch weiland der hochgeborne fürst herr Wolfgang, fürst zu Anhalt etc. hochlöblicher christseligster gedächtnüss etc. unser geliebter vater mit eigener hand neben andern chur und fürsten und ständen unterschrieben, die schmalkaldischen artikul von d. Martino Luthero anno 37 verfertiget, und itzt gemeldes herren doctoris klein und grossen catechismos, welches sie pro confessione und norma sanctorum verborum halten und dabei in christlicher einfalt bleiben, that they may have one norm of Christian doctrine and confession, we name to them for that purpose the following books: namely the holy Bible of the Old and New Testaments; the three chief creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and the Athanasian; the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof, as they were delivered in the years 30 and 33 to the emperor Charles the Fifth of most laudable Christian memory, and came forth in open print, which also the late high-born prince, Lord Wolfgang, prince of Anhalt, etc., of most laudable and blessed Christian memory, etc., subscribed with his own hand beside other electors, princes and estates; the Smalcald Articles made by Dr Martin Luther in the year 37; and the said doctor's Small and Large Catechisms; which they shall hold pro confessione and as the norm of sound words, and abide therein in Christian simplicity.

The canon here is that of the 1570s, before the FC: CA, Apol, SA and the catechisms. It is held "pro confessione", not signed.

17.7 Silesia, Prussia, the Polish cities and Pomerania

The eastern territories kept to the norms they had made before the FC. Brieg in Silesia still named the Corpus Philippicum in 1592. Prussia had its own Corpus doctrinae of 1567. The cities of Royal Prussia had a corpus confirmed by the Polish king, and Danzig a city formula, the Notel. Pomerania had a Melanchthonian corpus of its own. None of the orders quoted here makes the FC a condition of office, and Danzig forbade it to be "canonised".

17.7.1 Silesia: Brieg (1592)

The Brieg church order of 1592 names, beside the CA and Apology, Luther's writings, the Corpus doctrinae Philippi and the Mecklenburg agenda. Brieg, Kirchenordnung für Brieg, 1592 (Sehling 3, pp. 444–445):

> Die lehre betreffend: Soll diese rein ohne irrige meinung, wie sie in den prophetischen und apostolischen schriften und approbirten symbolis, deren grund und inhalt in der Augspurgischen confession und ihrer apologia, den scriptis Lutheri, corpore doctrinae Philippi, der Mecklenburg, agenda, und was hiemit stimmet, begriffen, geführet und wie viel der zeit gepflanzet werden,

Touching doctrine: this shall be carried on pure, without erroneous opinion, as it is comprehended in the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures and the approved creeds, whose ground and content [is set down] in the Augsburg Confession and its Apology, in the writings of Luther, the corpus doctrinae of Philip, the Mecklenburg agenda, and whatsoever agreeth herewith; and [so shall it be] planted, so far as the time [alloweth].

A later chapter of the same order, headed De corpore doctrinae, tells every preacher what to read. The database files this page under the next territory, Jägerndorf, but it is the end of the Brieg order (Sehling 3, p. 448):

> De corpore doctrinae. Es soll ein jeder praedicant in städten und dörfern neben der Heil, bibel haben und fleissig lesen das Corpus doctrinae Philippi Melanchtonis, die postillen des herrn Lutheri, die Thomos Lutheri und Philippi, auch anderer gelehrter leute fügliche scripta.

Of the corpus doctrinae. Every preacher in towns and villages shall have, beside the holy Bible, and diligently read, the Corpus doctrinae of Philip Melanchthon, the postils of Master Luther, the Tomes of Luther and of Philip, and also the fitting writings of other learned men.

This is a book list, not a subscription.

17.7.2 Ducal Prussia: the Corpus doctrinae Prutenicum (1567) and the assessors' oath (1584)

Prussia's corpus of 1567 was made after the Osiandrian controversy. Pastors are to keep strictly to it. Prussia, Von Erwehlung der beiden bischoff, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 111):

> Darinnen sollen sie gestracks bleiben bei dem Corpore Doctrinae, wie dasselbige in diesem fürstenthumb anno 1567 aus den prophetischen und apostolischen schriften, den alten symbolis, auch der lehre Lutheri zusamen getragen und publiziret ist, und sollen sie sonderlich den heiligen catechismum Lutheri gar fleissig dem volk einbilden.

Therein they shall abide strictly by the Corpus doctrinae, as the same was gathered together and published in this duchy in the year 1567 out of the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures, the ancient creeds, and also the doctrine of Luther; and they shall especially imprint the holy catechism of Luther very diligently upon the people.

The consistory order of 1584 binds its president and assessors by oath to "our church's unanimous Christian confession", without naming its parts. Prussia, Consistorialordnung, 1584 (Sehling 4, p. 125):

> Eid des präsidenten und der assessorum. Ich schwöre, dass ich in allen und jeden dieses konsistorii vorfallenden sachen, beneben den andern hiezu verordneten assessorn, getreulich und fleissig nach meinem besten verstand und vermögen rathen, bedenken, suchen und befördern helfen wolle, was dem seelig machenden göttlichen worte, unserer kirche einhelligen christlichen bekenntniss, der ehrbarkeit, und beschriebenen rechten gemäss,

Oath of the president and of the assessors. I swear that in all and every matter coming before this consistory I will, together with the other assessors appointed thereto, faithfully and diligently, according to my best understanding and ability, counsel, consider, seek and help to further that which is agreeable to the saving divine word, to our church's unanimous Christian confession, to honesty, and to the written laws,

17.7.3 Thorn, Elbing and Danzig: a royal corpus and the city Notel (1575, 1586, 1612)

The three great cities of Royal Prussia needed the king's leave for their religion. Thorn's church order names the corpus that King Sigismund Augustus had allowed them: Luther's two catechisms and the CA, "given both to teachers and hearers". Thorn,

Kirchenordnung für Thorn*, 1575 (Sehling 4, p. 234):

> Darumb gedachte obrickeit fur nützlich und nöthig geachtet, ihren kirchen ein gewisses corpus doctrinae, aus den schriften der h. propheten und aposteln zusammengetragen, furzulegen, nemlich den kleinen und grossen catechismum Lutheri und die confessionem Augustanam, welche auch Sigismundus Augustus, könig in Polen, hochlöbl. und seel. gedächtniss, allergnädigster herr den dreien städten Thorn, Elbing und Dantzig auf ihr demütiges und emsiges ansuchen allergnädigst erlaubet und zugelassen hat, darumb auch beide den lehrern und zuhörern mitgegeben worden, über gedachtem corpore doctrinae vest zuhalten und nichts daran zuendern,

Therefore the said magistrates have held it profitable and needful to set before their churches a certain corpus doctrinae, gathered out of the writings of the holy prophets and apostles, namely Luther's Small and Large Catechism and the Augsburg Confession; which also Sigismund Augustus, king of Poland, of most laudable and blessed memory, [our] most gracious lord, most graciously permitted and allowed to the three cities of Thorn, Elbing and Danzig upon their humble and earnest suit; wherefore it hath also been given both to the teachers and to the hearers, to hold fast by the said corpus doctrinae and to change nothing therein.

Danzig had besides its own formula, the Notel of 1562, signed by its clergy. By Sehling's account it remained the city's confessional basis until 1793 (Sehling 4, p. 172). When the FC came, the council forbade it. Danzig, Decret des Senats, 23 October 1586 (Sehling 4, p. 192):

> sich keiner art und form zu reden gebrauchen sollen, die wieder die augspurgische confession und notel streiten. Des sollen auch weder publice noch privatim des Calvini, Zwinglii schriften, das concordienbuch und dergleichen buecher, von imands der herrn predicanten canonisiret oder imgeringsten defendiret, vielweniger irkeinerley streitschriften von ihnen in dieser stadt oder kirchen eingefueret werden.

[they] shall use no manner nor form of speech that striveth against the Augsburg Confession and the Notel. Neither shall the writings of Calvin [or] Zwingli, the Book of Concord and the like books be canonised, or in the least defended, by any of the lords preachers, either publicly or privately; much less shall any controversial writings whatsoever be brought by them into this city or church.

The Book of Concord is here set beside Calvin and Zwingli as a party book. In 1612 the norm was still the CA of 1530 and the Notel, which each preacher had signed. Danzig, Kirchenordnung für Danzig, 1612 (Sehling 4, p. 210):

> Dieser vier predicanten lehr und predigtampt belangend, seind sie semptlich pflichtschuldig, ihrer bestellung nach bei der einmal erkannten und bekanten wahrheit gotlichs worts nach inhalt. der prophetischen und apostolischen schriften, der einmal von den protestierenden stenden keiser Carole quinto anno 1530 zu Augspurg übergebenen confession, und der von ihnen selbst unterschriebenen der stadt formula concordiae oder notel zu lehren zu predigen und die hochwürdigen sacramenta zu administrieren.

As touching the doctrine and preaching office of these four preachers, they are all bound in duty, according to their appointment, to teach, to preach and to administer the most worthy sacraments according to the truth of God's word once known and confessed, after the content of the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures, of the confession delivered once for all by the protesting estates to the emperor Charles the Fifth at Augsburg in the year 1530, and of the city's formula of concord or Notel, subscribed by themselves.

Here "formula concordiae" means Danzig's own Notel, not the FC of 1577.

17.7.4 Pomerania: the Melanchthonian corpus (1563/69) and the synodal handshake (1574)

The Pomeranian order refers its churches to Luther's writings and to Melanchthon's Loci and Apology. It requires every parish to buy the book in which Melanchthon's works are printed "together with the catechisms and confession of Luther", the Corpus doctrinae Pomeranicum. Pomerania, Kerckenordeninge, 1569 (Sehling 4, p. 382):

> Dise unde andere artikel der christlicken lere schölen in den kercken unser lande rein unde vlitich geleret unde mer erkleret werden, in dem vorstande, darin se hen unde wedder van doctore Martino Luthero in sinen schritten, unde van Philippo Melanthone in den locis communibus unde in der apologien der augsborgischen confession utgelecht unde vorvatet sint, darup de pamerischen kercken sick refereren unde to merer declaration erbeden. Unde dewile dorch den > ehrwerdigen Philippum Melanthonem de vörnemesten artickel unser waren christliken lere des evangelii mit raht Martini Lutheri seligen unde anderer vörnemen theologen in etlicke böker ganz richtich, godtsalich unde christlick begrepen unde vorvatet, ock allrede tovörn in ein boeck samt den catechismis unde confession Lutheri, up unsen bevel unde vorordeninge tosamende gedrücket sind, willen, ordenen unde gebeden wi hir mit, dat in einer iedern parkercken in unsen landen, in steden effte dörpern, vörgedachte böke, […] schölen geköfft unde vorwaret unde van den kerckendenern vlitich gelesen werden.

These and other articles of Christian doctrine shall be purely and diligently taught in the churches of our lands, and further explained, in the sense in which they are expounded and set down here and there by Doctor Martin Luther in his writings, and by Philip Melanchthon in the Loci communes and in the Apology of the Augsburg Confession; whereunto the Pomeranian churches refer themselves, and offer [themselves] to further declaration. And forasmuch as the chief articles of our true Christian doctrine of the gospel have been comprehended and set down by the reverend Philip Melanchthon, with the counsel of Martin Luther of blessed memory and other chief theologians, in certain books, very rightly, godly and Christianly, and have already before been printed together into one book, together with the catechisms and confession of Luther, at our command and ordinance: we will, ordain and command herewith that in every parish church in our lands, in towns or villages, the aforesaid books […] shall be bought and kept, and diligently read by the ministers of the church.

The personal bond came at the synod, by a handshake modelled on Galatians 2:9. The minister promises obedience to the superintendent and synod "in retaining the godly consensus of heavenly doctrine". No confession is named. Pomerania, Statuta synodica, 1574 (Sehling 4, p. 492):

> Formula, Obedientiae et fidelitatis pastorum et omnium ministrorum ecclesiae, praestanda in synodo, data dextera societatis, qua et apostoli inter se sunt usi. Gal. 2. vers. 9. Ego N. N. promitto, per dexteram societatis, obedientiam et fidelitatem reverendo superintendenti nostro, et venerabili synodo N. in retinendo pio consensu doctrinae coelestis, in toto ministerio rite peragendo, in regendis moribus vitae, in tuenda conjunctione et concordia, et in rebus omnibus, juxta statuta synodi, ordinationem ecclesiasticam et agendam. Quae omnia fideliter bona […] conscientia praestabo, pro posse et nosse, et falsus frater non ero,

Form of the obedience and fidelity of the pastors and all ministers of the church, to be performed in the synod, the right hand of fellowship being given, which the apostles also used among themselves, Gal. 2, verse 9. I, N. N., promise by the right hand of fellowship obedience and fidelity to our reverend superintendent and to the venerable synod of N., in retaining the godly consensus of heavenly doctrine, in rightly performing the whole ministry, in governing the manners of life, in maintaining union and concord, and in all things according to the statutes of the synod, the church order and the agenda. All which I will perform faithfully with a good […] conscience, as far as I am able and know, and will not be a false brother.

Pomerania never adopted the FC as such. By Sehling's account a ducal mandate of 10 May 1593 accepted only "the synodal decision in three chief points out of the Formula Concordiae against the Calvinists" (Sehling 4, p. 321).

17.8 Mecklenburg, Kurland, Lauenburg and Schleswig-Holstein

The Baltic territories show the widest spread of all:

- Mecklenburg signed the FC in 1577.
- Kurland bound its preachers to the Wittenberg Corpus Philippicum in 1570.
- Lauenburg (1585) named the FC as an alternative ("or").
- Gottorp, under the Danish king's lead, rejected the Concord. It bound its preachers by oath to the CA, Apology, SA and catechisms in 1574, and then in 1607 to Scripture alone.

17.8.1 Mecklenburg and Rostock (1552, 1573)

Mecklenburg's church order of 1552 was the work of Melanchthon's circle, and its examination was Melanchthon's Examen ordinandorum. The ordinand's promise names no book. He promises to remain in the doctrine he has just confessed in his examination. Mecklenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1552 (Sehling 5, p. 192):

> Nach dieser vermanung sol eine christliche zusage von im genomen werden. Nemlich, das er in diesem heiligen amt, mit gottes furcht, glauben und anrufung zu gott dienen wolle, und wolle züchtiglich leben und vleissig lernen. Item, das er in > der reinen christlichen lere, die er in dieser verhör bekant hat, und die durch gottes gnad in diesen kirchen eintrechtiglich geprediget wird, mit gottes hülf bestendig bleiben wolle, und wolle im amt treue und vleissig sein. Darauf spricht der ordinandus, er wolle durch gottes gnad dieses treulich thun und halten.

After this admonition a Christian promise shall be taken of him: namely, that he will serve God in this holy office with the fear of God, with faith and calling upon God, and will live soberly and learn diligently. Item, that he will by God's help abide steadfastly in the pure Christian doctrine which he hath confessed in this hearing, and which by God's grace is preached with one accord in these churches, and will be faithful and diligent in the office. Whereupon the ordinand saith that by God's grace he will faithfully do and keep this.

Twenty years later the Rostock ministerium wrote a full list into its statutes. It includes the Mecklenburg church order, the Lüneburg Articles of 1561 against the Philippists, and the FC, "which they approved by their subscription in 1577". Rostock, Statuta et decreta, 1573 (Sehling 5, p. 285):

> I. Ut amplectatur sanam incorruptamque doctrinam caelestem, traditam in scriptis prophetarum apostolorum et evangelistarum, in ea sententia quae expressa est in symbolis, in confessione Augustae exhibita Carolo V. imperatori anno M. D. XXX. ejusque apologia, in Smalcaldicis articulis, in libro legum ceremonialium hujus ducatus, ut vocant, megapolensis, in catechismis majori et minori, caeterisque divini Lutheri scriptis omnibus, in articulis Luneburgensibus et in libro concordiae seu consensionis inter docentes in ecclesiis doctrinam caelestem a doct. Martino Luthero instauratam amplectentibus, quem anno M. D. LXXVII. (sed leges conditae an. 73) subscriptione sua comprobarunt.

I. That he embrace the sound and uncorrupt heavenly doctrine delivered in the writings of the prophets, apostles and evangelists, in that sense which is expressed in the creeds; in the confession exhibited at Augsburg to the emperor Charles V in the year 1530, and the apology thereof; in the Smalcald Articles; in the book of the ceremonial laws of this duchy, the Mecklenburg [book], as they call it; in the Large and Small Catechisms, and all the other writings of the divine Luther; in the Lüneburg Articles; and in the book of concord or agreement among those who teach in the churches and embrace the heavenly doctrine restored by Doctor Martin Luther, which in the year 1577 they approved by their subscription (but the laws were made in the year 73).

The editor's parenthesis shows that the FC was added to a statute of 1573. By Sehling's account, 444 Mecklenburg ministers signed the FC in 1577 (Sehling 5, pp. 142–143).

17.8.2 Kurland: the Wittenberg Corpus doctrinae (1570)

Kurland's church order of 1570 binds its new preachers to the CA and Apology, the creeds, the "oldest, unfalsified councils", the SA and "the whole Wittenberg corpus doctrinae" of 1560. Kurland, Kurländische Kirchenordnung, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 70):

> Wenn nun die neuen prediger also introducirt und zum lehramte bestetiget worden seind, sollen sie sich höchstes vermügens befleissigen, das allein seligmachende wort gottes, biblischer, das ist prophetischer und apostolischer schrift, den rechten verstand des gesetzes und evangelii, nach der Augspurgischen confession und apologia, woran wir nicht zweifeln, sonder die gewissheit haben, das sie die rechte, einige und warhaftige lehre der prophetischen und apostolischen zeugnusse sei, der dreien Symbolen, eltisten, unvorfelschten concilien, Schmalkaldischen artickeln und dem ganzen Wittenbergischen corpore doctrinae von dem seligen herrn Philippo Melanthone anno 1560 vice cygneae cantionis in den druck verfertigt, ihrer gemeine, vermüge derselbigen richtigen lehr auf Christi bevelich ohne scheu fürhalten,

When now the new preachers have been thus introduced and confirmed in the office of teaching, they shall endeavour to the utmost of their power to set before their congregation without fear, at Christ's command and according to the right doctrine thereof, the only saving word of God of the Biblical, that is, of the prophetic and apostolic Scripture, [and] the right understanding of the law and the gospel; according to the Augsburg Confession and Apology (whereof we doubt not, but have the certainty, that it is the right, only and true doctrine of the prophetic and apostolic testimony), the three creeds, the oldest unfalsified councils, the Smalcald Articles, and the whole Wittenberg corpus doctrinae made ready for the press by the late Master Philip Melanchthon in the year 1560, in the stead of a swan-song.

The Philippist corpus stands here beside the Smalcald Articles, a combination that the FC party would not allow after 1574.

17.8.3 Lauenburg: the FC as an alternative (1585)

Lauenburg's church order of 1585 makes each pastor promise to teach according to the creeds, the "ancient and unaltered" CA, the Apology, the SA, Luther's writings and catechisms, "or the formula concordiae, touching the points of doctrine in dispute". Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 402):

> Zum andern, dass er nichts, denn was gott in seinem heiligen beschriebenen worte der bibel offenbart hat, lehren und predigen solle, nach erklerunge der dreien vorgenanten symbolorum ecclesiae, der uhralten und ungeanderten Augspurgischen confession, apologia, schmalcaldischen artikeln, der schriften D. Martini Lutheri und cathechismi gross und kleins, oder formulae concordiae, belangend die streitige lehr puncta, und derwegen diese bücher fleissigen und alle tage durchsehe, evolvire, und ihm bekandt mache,

Secondly, that he shall teach and preach nothing but what God hath revealed in his holy written word of the Bible, according to the explanation of the three aforenamed creeds of the church, the ancient and unaltered Augsburg Confession, the Apology, the Smalcald Articles, the writings of Dr Martin Luther, and the Large and Small Catechism, or the formula concordiae as touching the points of doctrine in dispute; and that he therefore diligently look through these books every day, turn them over, and make himself acquainted with them.

The FC is not a further book in a list. It is the authorised explanation of the older books where they are disputed.

17.8.4 Schleswig-Holstein (Gottorp): an oath instead of the Concord (1574, 1607)

The Danish king and the dukes in Schleswig-Holstein would not take the Torgau Book or the Bergen Book. By Sehling's account, the Gottorp theologians asked instead for a new edition of the Corpus Philippicum, with the SA and Luther's catechisms added (Sehling 23, p. 298). Instead of the Concord, Superintendent Paul von Eitzen drew up a preacher's oath against the Calvinists, centred on the Lord's Supper (Sehling 23, p. 309). Schleswig-Holstein-Gottorp, Predigereid, 1574 (Sehling 23, p. 365; Low German):

> gelieck wo dusse lehre vam hochwerdigen sacrament is erkleret in der Augsborgischen Confession, Apologia, Schmalkaldischen Artickelen und beiden Catechismis des hilligen lehrers und vaders Martini Lutheri, welchers böker, schriffte und bekentnisse ick ock in dussem artickel holde und gelöve recht und warhafftig. Und by dussem minem ede vorplichte my, dorch de hulpe und gnade Gottes, desulve wäre, einfoldige lehre vam hilligen aventmahl miner befahlen gemeine getruwliken, unvorfelschet und unverändert vorthoholden und tho leren beth an minen ende.

even as this doctrine of the most worthy sacrament is declared in the Augsburg Confession, the Apology, the Smalcald Articles and both Catechisms of the holy teacher and father Martin Luther; which books, writings and confessions I also hold and believe in this article to be right and true. And by this my oath I bind myself, through the help and grace of God, faithfully to set forth and to teach the same true and simple doctrine of the holy Supper to the congregation committed to me, unfalsified and unaltered, until my end.

The same oath was used in the duke's pledged district of Peine, in the bishopric of Hildesheim (§17.10.1).

In 1607 Duke Johann Adolf abolished the oath and put a new one in its place. Schleswig-Holstein-Gottorp, Mitteilung über den Erlaß eines neuen Predigereides, 4 January 1607 (Sehling 23, p. 415):

> Nachdem wir aus hochwichtigen, bewegenden uhrsachen den bißhero in gebrauch gehaltenen priester eydt verendern lassen, wie ihr aus anliegender formul zu vornehmen, also, daß nun hinfortan nach dieser neuen eydt formul die ordinanden den priesterlichen eidt schwehren und der vorige eyd cassiret unnd auffgehoben seyn soll,

Forasmuch as we, for very weighty and moving causes, have caused the priest's oath hitherto held in use to be altered, as ye may perceive from the form enclosed, so that henceforth the ordinands shall swear the priestly oath after this new form of oath, and the former oath shall be cassated and abolished,

The new oath names no confession at all, only "the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures". Schleswig-Holstein-Gottorp, Neuer Predigereid, 4 January 1607 (Sehling 23, p. 416):

> Ich, N.N., schwere zu Gott, daß ich mein anbefohlen Lehrambt mit hbgsten Trewen und gepuerenten Eiver ahne fleischliche Adfecten fhuren, das lauter, reine Wortt Gottes unvervelscht, wie solches in den Prophetischen unnd Apostolischen Schrifften begriffen, ohne menschliche, verfuhrische Anhenge und Opinion lehren unnd predigen,

I, N.N., swear to God that I will conduct the office of teaching committed to me with the highest faithfulness and due zeal, without carnal affections; [and] teach and preach the clear, pure word of God unfalsified, as the same is contained in the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures, without human, seductive additions and opinions;

The change from 1574 to 1607 is the plainest case in the corpus of a confessional oath being withdrawn. A Lutheran oath against the Calvinists gave way to a Scripture-only oath under a prince of Reformed sympathies.

17.9 Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel, Lüneburg, Calenberg-Göttingen, Hoya and Goslar

Lower Saxony was the home ground of Chemnitz and Mörlin. It produced the most precise statements of the norm: the CA understood "as explained" by the Apology, the SA and Luther's catechism. It also produced the densest set of local corpora:

- the Lüneburg Articles of 1561;
- the Brunswick city corpus of 1571;
- the Lower Saxon Confession of 1571;
- the Wolfenbüttel Corpus Julium and the Lüneburg Corpus Wilhelminum, both of 1576.

Subscription to the corpus was the condition of admission in the cities as well as in the duchies.

17.9.1 Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel: the CA "in the sense" of the Apology, the SA and the catechism (1569)

Duke Julius's church order of 1569 defines the corpus doctrinae and adds a "declaration" to shut out those who shelter under the name of the CA. Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung of Duke Julius, 1569 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 91–92):

> So ist nun diß die summa, daß das corpus doctrinae, die form und das fürbild der reinen lehr, wie dieselbig in den kirchen dieses fürstenthumbs hinfuro geprediget und gelehret soll werden, sein soll die heilige, prophetische und apostolische schrift in dem einfeltigen, wahren, eigentlichen, gesunden verstand, wie die schrift sich selbs erkleret, und wie derselbig verstand auß und nach Gottes wort kurzlich zusammengezogen ist in den alten, bewehreten symbolis apostolico, nicaeno, athanasiano und in den artickeln der augspürgischen confession. Weil aber auch leider in diesen letzten betrübten zeiten der welt etliche rotten und sekten ihre corruptelas unter dem nahmen der augspürgischen confession zu bedecken und zu beschönen sich understehen […] muß diese declaration deutlich dabey gesetzt werden, das wir die augspürgische confession annhemen, verstehen und behalten in dem verstand, wie sie in der erfolgten und angeheften apologia, nachmals in den schmalkaldischen artickeln und entlich im catechismo und andern schriften Lutheri auß Gottes wort expliciert und verkleret worden ist.

This then is the sum: that the corpus doctrinae, the form and pattern of pure doctrine, as the same shall henceforth be preached and taught in the churches of this principality, shall be the holy, prophetic and apostolic Scripture, in the simple, true, proper and sound sense, as Scripture expoundeth itself, and as the same sense is briefly drawn together out of and according to God's word in the ancient approved creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and the Athanasian, and in the articles of the Augsburg Confession. But forasmuch as, alas, in these last troubled times of the world certain factions and sects take upon them to cover and colour their corruptions under the name of the Augsburg Confession […], this declaration must be plainly set thereby: that we accept, understand and hold the Augsburg Confession in the sense in which it hath been expounded and declared out of God's word in the Apology that followed and is annexed thereto, afterwards in the Smalcald Articles, and lastly in the catechism and other writings of Luther.

The editors' footnote at "the name of the Augsburg Confession" points to the variata of 1540. This formula, the CA read through the Apology, the SA and the catechism, was taken up almost word for word in Verden in 1606 (§17.10.2). It is also the rule by which the FC itself reads the CA.

17.9.2 Brunswick city: articles to be subscribed (1571)

The city of Brunswick's ministerium put to every new minister a set of Latin articles for subscription. They name the city's corpus doctrinae and condemn whatever the Lüneburg Articles condemn. Brunswick, Articuli, qui subscribendi proponuntur illis qui ad ministerium in hac ecclesia recipiuntur, 1571 (Sehling 6/1, p. 471):

> Articuli, qui subscribendi proponuntur illis qui ad ministerium in hac ecclesia recipiuntur. […] Formam purae doctrinae et sanorum verborum sicut in scriptis propheticis et apostolicis et probatis symbolis explicata et in confessione augustana et apologia eiusdem sicut anno 1530 exhibita et anno 1531 edita sunt atque in articulis schmalcaldicis et catechismis Lutheri declarata sunt fideliter et constanter nobiscum profiteatur et retineat. Hoc enim est corpus doctrinae huius ecclesiae. § 2. Corruptelas cum hoc corpore doctrinae pugnantes sive olim damnatae sive recens exortae sint sive imposterum oriantur non amplectatur nec spargat sed fugiat et damnet praecipue vero quae in articulis lyneburgicis damnatae sunt.

Articles which are set forth to be subscribed by those who are received into the ministry in this church. […] [§ 1.] That he faithfully and constantly profess and retain with us the form of pure doctrine and of sound words, as it is set forth in the prophetic and apostolic writings and the approved creeds, and in the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof, as they were exhibited in the year 1530 and published in the year 1531, and as it is declared in the Smalcald Articles and Luther's catechisms. For this is the corpus doctrinae of this church. § 2. That he embrace not nor spread the corruptions that fight with this corpus doctrinae, whether they were condemned of old or have lately arisen or shall arise hereafter, but flee and condemn them; and especially those that are condemned in the Lüneburg Articles.

The city's order for calling preachers, of the same year, sets the subscription in the procedure. The new man subscribes and vows before he is admitted to the "colloquy", the city's assembly of ministers. Brunswick, Vokationsordnung für die Prediger, 1571 (Sehling 6/1, p. 457):

> Zum siebenden: Wen nach diesem allen die vocatio volzogen, so soll die angenommen person durch einen erbaren rath und kastenherren des weichbildes dem colloquio presentiert und darselbst mit ihme gehandelt werden, das ehr dem corpori doctrinae dieser loblichen kirchen unterschreibe und angelobe, das ehr sich der wolhergebrachten christlichen ordnunge des colloquii uhterwerfe, alsdan soli ehr vor ein membrum des colloquii auf und angenommen werden.

Seventhly: when after all this the call hath been completed, the person accepted shall be presented to the colloquy by an honourable council and the treasurers of the ward, and there it shall be dealt with him that he subscribe the corpus doctrinae of this laudable church, and vow that he will submit himself to the well-established Christian order of the colloquy; and then shall he be received and accepted as a member of the colloquy.

By Sehling's account, the city council later sided against the duke over the signing of the FC (Sehling 6/1, p. 341).

17.9.3 Lüneburg: the duchy's confession (1564) and the city's corpus (1575)

The Lüneburg church order of 1564 states the duchy's doctrine as a confession of the prince, in its preface. It names the creeds, Luther's catechism, and the CA and Apology of 1530. Principality of Lüneburg, Kirchenordnung, 1564 (Sehling 6/1, p. 534):

> sondern wir bekennen, das wir die lere vorrecht halten, die in unserm fürstenthumb geprediget wird, die Gott selbs hat durch seinen Son Jhesum Christum geoffenbaret und die in der propheten und aposteln schrift gefasset in dem verstande, der in den symbolis apostolico, niceno und Athanasii, auch in D. Martini Lutheri seliger catechismo, auch in der confession und apologia, welche der römi. kei. maj. zu Augspurg anno etc. 1530 uberantwortet, verfasset und erholet ist. Und gedenken, bey solcher erkanten lere mit göttlicher hülf bestendig zu bleiben, but we confess that we hold for right the doctrine that is preached in our principality, which God himself hath revealed through his Son Jesus Christ, and which is contained in the writings of the prophets and apostles, in the sense that is set down and repeated in the creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's, and also in the catechism of Dr Martin Luther of blessed memory, and also in the confession and apology which were delivered to the Roman imperial majesty at Augsburg in the year 1530. And we purpose by God's help to abide steadfastly by such acknowledged doctrine.

The city of Lüneburg had its own corpus. Besides the usual books it held the confession of Lübeck, Hamburg and Lüneburg against the Interim of 1548. Each ordinand had to write his own confession, which was examined against it. Lüneburg city, Kirchenordnung der Stadt Lüneburg, 1575 (Sehling 6/1, p. 654):

> so befhelt ehr ihnen ihre bekantnus von den vornembsten und nottwendigsten artickeln der kirchenlehre, die da mit den schriften der heiligen propheten, Christi und der apostolen mit den dreyen symbolis apostolico, niceno und Athanassi, mit der confession, so rö[mische] kay[serliche] ma[]este]tt Carolo V. anno etc. 30 auf dem reichstage zu Augspurg von etlichen des heiligen römischen reichs stenden ubergeben, sampt der apologia, so kurz darauf gestellet, mit den > smalchaldischen artickeln, catechismis Lutheri und dieser dreyer erbaren stette Lubeck, Hamburg und Luneburg bekantnusse, so anno 1548 wider das interim im druck ausgangen, welche scripta vor das corpus oder fundamentum doctrinae huius ecclesiae gehalten werden, durchaus ubereinstimme, mit dem furderligsten schriftlich zu vorfassende und uberantwortende.

then he [the superintendent] commandeth them with all speed to set down in writing and deliver their confession of the chiefest and most necessary articles of the church's doctrine, which [must] agree throughout with the writings of the holy prophets, of Christ and of the apostles; with the three creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's; with the confession which was delivered in the year 30 by certain estates of the holy Roman Empire to the Roman imperial majesty Charles V at the diet at Augsburg, together with the Apology that was set forth shortly after; with the Smalcald Articles, Luther's catechisms, and the confession of these three honourable cities, Lübeck, Hamburg and Lüneburg, which came forth in print in the year 1548 against the Interim; which writings are held for the corpus or foundation of the doctrine of this church.

In 1576 the duchy received Chemnitz's Corpus doctrinae Wilhelminum. By Sehling's account it was still signed with the church order of 1643 (Sehling 6/1, pp. 487–489).

17.9.4 Calenberg-Göttingen: the Corpus Julium (1601) and Göttingen's own order (1568)

When the Wolfenbüttel dukes inherited Calenberg-Göttingen, its four great towns came under their corpus. A preacher presented for a town where the duke was patron had to subscribe the ducal church order and the Corpus doctrinae Julium, and then the town's own church order. Calenberg-Göttingen, Gandersheimer Landtagsabschied, 1601 (Sehling 6/2, p. 894):

> auch, wann die praesentirte person in lehr und leben genugsamb qualificirt befunden und die fürstliche kirchenordnunge und Gorpus doctrinae Julium unterschrieben, sol dieselbige person dem rath und ministerio alda zur probpredigt, und da die vocatio aus erheblichen ursachen nicht abgeschlagen wirdet, zugleich zur immission und subscription ihrer sonderbaren vor vielen jahren aufgerichteten kirchenordnunge, and when the person presented hath been found sufficiently qualified in doctrine and life, and hath subscribed the princely church order and the Corpus doctrinae Julium, the same person shall be sent over to the council and ministry there for the trial sermon, and, if the call be not refused for weighty causes, at the same time for induction and for subscription of their particular church order set up many years ago.

Göttingen's own order had made the norm in 1568. It runs: the CA of 1530, the Apology, the SA, Luther's catechism and "our old church order of the city of Göttingen, reviewed and approved by Luther". Göttingen, Christliche und in Gottes wort … gegründte kirchenordnung der stadt Göttingen, 1568 (Sehling 6/2, p. 916):

> daß man, wie in annemung des evangelii, anno 30 allhie auß Gottes genediger heymsuchung geschehen, auch forthin gedenke einhelliglich und einfeltiglich zu bleiben bey der rechten augspurgischen confession, wie dieselbige anno 30 der rhömischen keyserlichen majestat von protestierenden stenden uberantwortet, auch eiusdem apologia, schmalkaldischen artickeln, catechismo Lutheri und der alten von Luthero ubersehener und approbierter unser, der stadt Göttingen, kirchenordnung, wie dieselbige gründlichen genommen auß den schriften der propheten und aposteln und in Lutheri büchern weiter erkleret werden, und alles, das denselbigen entgegen, es habe namen, wie es wölle, es komme her, von wem es wölle, solle verworfen werden, that, as was done here in the year 30 at the receiving of the gospel through God's gracious visitation, so henceforth also [they] purpose to abide with one accord and in simplicity by the right Augsburg Confession, as the same was delivered in the year 30 by the protesting estates to the Roman imperial majesty, and by the Apology thereof, the Smalcald Articles, Luther's catechism, and our old church order of the city of Göttingen, reviewed and approved by Luther, as the same are grounded thoroughly on the writings of the prophets and apostles and further explained in Luther's books; and that all that is contrary to the same, be its name what it will, and come it from whom it will, shall be rejected.

17.9.5 Hoya: the FC in the church order (1581)

The county of Hoya's church order of 1581 sets the FC at the end of the list. It calls Luther's catechisms "the laymen's Bible". Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1131):

> das sie in allen ihren predigten und Lehren durchaus den prophetischen und apostolischen schriften altes und neues testaments, den dreyen allgemeinen heuptsymbolen, als dem apostolico, nicaeno und athanasiano, der reinen, ungeenderten augspurgischen confession, so keyser Carolo dem V. zu Augspurg anno 30 in der grossen reichsversamlung ubergeben, sampt derselben apologia und articulen zu Schmalkalden, anno 37 gestellet, und von den fürnembsten theologen damals unterschrieben worden, den catechismis, grossen und kleinen, des herrn D. Martini Lutheri, als der leyen bibel, darinnen alLes kurz begriffen, was in heiliger schrift weitleuftig gehandelt und einem fromen, gottseligen Christen zu seiner seligkeit zu wissen von nöten ist, und auch der formulae concordiae, das ist, der christlichen, wiederholten, einmütigen bekentnis der churfürsten, fürsten und stende augspurgischer confession, anno 80 voilzogen und publiciert, sich sollen gleichförmig und einhellig gemeß verhaiten.

that in all their sermons and teachings they shall behave themselves throughout conformably and with one accord according to the prophetic and apostolic writings of the Old and New Testaments; the three universal chief creeds, namely the Apostolic, the Nicene and the Athanasian; the pure, unaltered Augsburg Confession, which was delivered to the emperor Charles V at Augsburg in the year 30 in the great diet of the empire, together with the Apology thereof, and the Articles set forth at Smalcald in the year 37 and subscribed at that time by the chief theologians; the catechisms, Large and Small, of Master Dr Martin Luther, as the laymen's Bible, wherein is briefly comprehended all that is handled at large in holy Scripture, and is needful for a godly, devout Christian to know for his salvation; and also the formula concordiae, that is, the Christian, repeated, unanimous confession of the electors, princes and estates of the Augsburg Confession, completed and published in the year 80.

The order goes on to threaten anyone found not to hold by "these writings, as the right rule … the only touchstone".

17.9.6 Goslar: a city corpus signed "with our own hands" (1591/95)

The imperial city of Goslar adopted its corpus on 9 November 1591 and signed the list in 1595. The list is notable for three things:

- it names the Apology "as it first came forth in print";
- it includes the Lower Saxon Confession of 1571 "in its right Saxon sense";
- it holds the FC "in its right Saxon sense" as signed by the council and ministry in 1577.

No minister or schoolmaster is to be admitted unless he has signed. Goslar, Verzeichnis der in Goslar gültigen Lehrschriften, 11 May 1595 (Sehling 7/2.2, pp. 339–340):

> Wir, ein gantzes ministerium der kirchen und gemeinde Gottes der kayserlichen freyen reiches stadt Gosslar, thun kund und bekennen mit dieser unser eigen unterschrifft, das wir im jar nach Christi, unsers herrn, seligen geburt 1591, am 9. tage Novembris, in beysein unser christlichen obergkeit, […] diese nachfolgende bucher, schriffte und bekentnisse zu einem Corpore doctrinae auffund angenomen haben, […] Zum funfften bekennen wir uns auch zu der Apologia derselbigen Auspurgischen Confession, wie sie zum ersten mal im druck ist ausgangen. […] Zum siebenden bekennen wir uns auch zu der Sechsischen Kirchen Confession in irem rechten Sechsischen verstande, wie sie anno Christi 1571 einhelliglich mit der Sechsischen kirchen subscription und unterschrifft in den druck gegeben worden. […] Zum achten halten wir uns auch stet und feste an die Formulam concordiae unser evangelischen kirchen in irem rechten Sechsischen verstande, wie sie auff- und angenomen, auch eintregtiglich unterschrieben ist worden, insonderheit auch von einem ehrbaren rath und ministerio alhie zu Goslar anno Christi 1577. […] Es sol auch in kunfftiger zeit niemand zu einem ministro ecclesiae oder schueldiener auff- und angenomen oder darinnen geduldet werden, er habe den so wol alse wir diesem itzt genanten, unserm Corpori doctrinae sich mit eigener hand unterschrieben, […] Zu mehrer uhrkund der warheit haben wir uns mit eigenen hemden unterschrieben.

We, the whole ministry of the church and congregation of God of the imperial free city of Goslar, do make known and confess with this our own subscription that in the year after the blessed birth of Christ our Lord 1591, on the 9th day of November, in the presence of our Christian magistrates […], we accepted and received these books, writings and confessions following for a corpus doctrinae, […] Fifthly, we confess ourselves also to the Apology of the same Augsburg Confession, as it came forth in print the first time. […] Seventhly, we confess ourselves also to the Confession of the Saxon Churches in its right Saxon sense, as it was given to the press in the year of Christ 1571 with one accord, with the subscription and signature of the Saxon churches. […] Eighthly, we hold ourselves also steadfastly and firmly to the Formula concordiae of our evangelical churches in its right Saxon sense, as it hath been received and accepted, and also subscribed with one accord, and especially also by an honourable council and ministry here at Goslar in the year of Christ 1577. […] Neither shall anyone in time to come be received and accepted as a minister of the church or schoolmaster, or be suffered therein, unless he, as well as we, have subscribed this our corpus doctrinae now named with his own hand, [...] For the greater witness of the truth we have subscribed with our own hands.

"hemden" ("shirts") is the OCR's reading of henden, "hands".

17.10 Hildesheim, Verden, Osnabrück, Oldenburg, Bremen, East Frisia and Soest

The north-west was confessionally divided. The Lutheran cities and counties (Hildesheim, Verden, Osnabrück, Oldenburg, Soest) held to the FC, or reached it late. Bremen went over to the Philippist and then the Reformed side. East Frisia settled its quarrel in 1599 by naming nothing but "the Augsburg Confession".

17.10.1 Hildesheim: the Peine oath (1574/89) and the subscription of the city's officials (1593)

The ducal oath used in Gottorp (§17.8.4) was also used in Peine, a district of the bishopric of Hildesheim held in pledge by the dukes of Schleswig-Holstein. It is printed here in High German, sworn "by the holy name of God". The first two articles bind to Scripture and the creeds and are aimed at the Calvinist Christology. Peine, Eid und obligation der prediger im herzogtumb Schleswiegk wie auch in ihren fürstl. gn. pfandgericht und ampt Peina, [1574/89] (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 787):

> 1. Ich N. prediger des h. evangelii, ordentlicherweise durch den willen Gottes geeschet und berufen, schwere bei dem h. namen Gotteß und meines erlösers Jesu Christi, daß ich die göttliche, biblische schrift in allen punkten, artikeln und worten halte und gläube warhaftig.
> 2. Zum anderen, daß ich auch daß h. apostolische symbolum und die anderen waren symbola, so von der h. allgemeinen christl. kirchen seind approbiret und angenomen, halte und geläube warhaftig in allen artikeln unseres christlichen glaubenß nach dem richtschnur göttliches wortß und also auch in dem artikel von der unzertrenlichen vereinigung der zweien naturen, göttlicher und menschlicher, in der einigen ungeteileten person Christi, welche unzertrenliche vereinigung keine zeit noch stunde in ewigkeit kan auflosen oder teilen.

1. I, N., preacher of the holy gospel, orderly called and summoned by the will of God, swear by the holy name of God and of my Redeemer Jesus Christ that I hold and believe the divine, Biblical Scripture to be true in all points, articles and words.
   2. Secondly, that I also hold and believe the holy Apostolic Creed and the other true creeds, which have been approved and received by the holy universal Christian church, to be true in all articles of our Christian faith according to the rule of God's word; and so also in the article of the inseparable union of the two natures, divine and human, in the one undivided person of Christ, which inseparable union no time nor hour can dissolve or divide in eternity.

Its third and fourth articles go on to the CA with the Apology, the SA and the catechisms, and to the Lord's Supper "as declared in the Augsburg Confession, Apology, Smalcald Articles and both Catechisms" (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 788).

The city of Hildesheim had signed the FC on 10 April 1580 (Sehling's apparatus, Sehling 7/2.1, p. 909). In 1593 its government extended the subscription to the city's lay officials. The council's decision is known only from Sehling's introduction, which quotes it from the council's records. Hildesheim, council decision on the subscription of the Formula Concordiae, 30 August 1593, quoted in Sehling's introduction (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 817):

> Als am 18. Junii neigst verschienen die lobliche sambtregierunge dero stadt Hildesheim sich einhellich beraten, das der herr superintendens, die hern burgermeister, syndici, physici, secretarien, wie auch alle prediger und schuldiener beider stette die Formulam Concordiae und deren Apologiam mit ihrer subscription corroboriren solten, so ist demnach sollicher radtschlag erneuert und nochmalig von der loblichen regierunge geschlossen, das von ihnen und ihren successorn allermassen, wie der her superintendens den anfank gemacht, ein jeder ohne allen anhank zu sollicher Formula Concordiae und deren Apologia mit eigner hand sich bekennen und dieselbe unterschreiben solle. Actum den 30. Augusti anno etc. 93.

Whereas on the 18th of June last past the laudable joint government of the city of Hildesheim took counsel with one accord that the lord superintendent, the lords burgomasters, the syndics, the physicians, the secretaries, and also all preachers and schoolmasters of both towns should confirm the Formula Concordiae and the Apology thereof with their subscription; therefore the said resolution hath been renewed and once more concluded by the laudable government: that by them and their successors, every one without any reservation, even as the lord superintendent hath made the beginning, shall confess himself to the said Formula Concordiae and the Apology thereof with his own hand, and subscribe the same. Done the 30th of August in the year, etc., 93.

The "Apology" is the Erfurt Apology of the BoC (1582). Sehling adds that the last signature under the Hildesheim Concord dates from 1824. The city's school order binds every teacher in the same way. Hildesheim, Schulordnung, 1574/1618 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 909):

> Und weil zu dem ende die Formula Concordiae zusampt derselben Apologij bei unß angenommen, so sollen alle unser collegen nicht allein zur subscription solcher bucher verknupft und verbun[den]

And forasmuch as to that end the Formula Concordiae, together with the Apology thereof, hath been received among us, all our colleagues shall not only be tied and bound to the subscription of such books,

17.10.2 Verden: the CA "in the sense" of the Apology, the SA and the catechisms (1606)

The Verden church order of 1606 takes over the Wolfenbüttel "declaration" of 1569 (§17.9.1) almost word for word. Bishopric of Verden, Kirchenordnung, 1606 (Sehling 7/1, p. 149):

> so soll und muß dabey die declaration in acht genomen werden, das wir die Augßburgische Confession und derselben lehr und inhalt annehmen und behalten in dem verstand, wie sie in der darauf erfolgeten Apologia und dan ferner in den Smalcaldischen Articulen und endlich im Grossen und Kleinen Catechismo Lutheri und andern büchern und schriften dieses teuren und werden mannes Gottes außgeleget und erkläret worden.

then shall and must the declaration be observed therewith: that we accept and hold the Augsburg Confession and the doctrine and content thereof in the sense in which it hath been expounded and explained in the Apology that followed thereon, and further in the Smalcald Articles, and lastly in the Large and Small Catechism of Luther, and the other books and writings of this dear and worthy man of God.

17.10.3 Osnabrück: the Wittenberg Concord and the Book of Concord (1610)

The city of Osnabrück's ordinance for its superintendent and preachers names, between the Apology and the SA, "the Formula Concordiae set up in the year 1536", that is, the Wittenberg Concord on the Supper. It ends with the Book of Concord. Osnabrück, Superintendenten- und Predigerordnung, 1610 (Sehling 7/1, pp. 296–297):

> Daß sie nemblich und furirst in ihren pfarkirchen reyne und gesunde lehre führen nach dem corpore doctrinae alter, unveranderter Außpurgischer Confession, wie die der römischen kay[serlich]en may[este]tt Carolo quinto, hochsähligsten angedenkens, ufm reichstage zu Außpurgh anno tausentfunfhundertunddreißig uberreicht worden, dazu wir und unser gemaind unß bekennen, in dem verstand, wie sie in der darauf erfolgten Apologia, item Formula Concordiae, anno 1536 aufgerichtet, wie auch denn Smalkaldischen Articulen und im Großen und Kleinen Catechismo Lutheri, dan auch in Libro Concordiae oder christlichen wiederholeten einmutigen bekentnuß der weltlichen chur-, fursten und stette außgelägt und erkleret worden.

That namely and first of all they conduct pure and sound doctrine in their parish churches according to the corpus doctrinae of the old, unaltered Augsburg Confession, as it was delivered at the diet at Augsburg in the year fifteen hundred and thirty to the Roman imperial majesty Charles the Fifth, of most blessed memory, whereunto we and our congregation confess ourselves; in the sense in which it hath been expounded and explained in the Apology that followed thereon, item [in] the Formula Concordiae set up in the year 1536, as also in the Smalcald Articles and in Luther's Large and Small Catechism, and also in the Book of Concord, or the Christian repeated unanimous confession of the secular electors, princes and cities.

The confession here is made by the council ("we and our congregation"). The duty is laid on the preachers.

17.10.4 Oldenburg: the Corpus Philippicum (1573), then the FC (1586–1609)

Oldenburg's church order of 1573 adds to the Lutheran confessions the books "inserted and incorporated" in Melanchthon's Corpus doctrinae. Oldenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, pp. 987–988):

> Die ganze christliche lere ist und heist gesetz und evangelium, vorfasset in den biblischen, prophetischen und apostolischen schriften, die wir nennen das Alte und Neue Testament, derer kurze summa und begriff stehet in den > dreien symbolis: Apostolico, Niceno et Athanasiano, und in den artikeln der Augspurgischen Confession und derselben Apologia, Smalcaldischen Artikeln, Catechismus Lutheri und darauf erfolgten und angeheften büchern, so dem Corpori Doctrinae, vom herrn Philippo seligen geschrieben, inseriert und einverleibet seind, als da sind die repetition der Augsspurgischen Confession, Loci communes, Examen der ordinanden und widerlegung der papistischen bairischen artikel. Diese lehr und bücher sollen die pastores selbst wissen und haben und nach denselben die christliche lere dem volk verstendlich, ordentlich und ungefelscht fürtragen

The whole Christian doctrine is and is called law and gospel, set down in the Biblical, prophetic and apostolic writings which we call the Old and New Testament, whereof the short sum and compass standeth in the three creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and the Athanasian; and in the articles of the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof, the Smalcald Articles, Luther's catechism, and the books following thereon and annexed, which are inserted and incorporated in the Corpus doctrinae written by Master Philip of blessed memory, such as are the repetition of the Augsburg Confession, the Loci communes, the Examination of the Ordinands, and the refutation of the papistical Bavarian articles. This doctrine and these books shall the pastors themselves know and have, and according to them set forth the Christian doctrine to the people understandably, orderly and unfalsified.

The FC came in by way of the Bestallungen, the letters of appointment. Sehling's apparatus quotes them:

- 1574 (Hamelmann): Scripture, the CA, the catechism and the church order.
- 1586 (Johannes Judex): adds the FC.
- 1608 (Superintendent Gottfried Schlüter): the full later norm, with a clause against the Calvinists. Oldenburg, Bestallung of Superintendent Gottfried Schlüter, 1608, quoted in Sehling's apparatus (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 964):

> Gottes heiliges seligmachentes wort nach den biblischen schrieften Alten und Neuen Testaments, darauf gegrundten, unverfalschten im jahr 1530 auf dem großen reichstage zue Auspurgh kaiser Carln dem funften uberreichten und der Formulae Concordiae einverleibten Auspurgischen Confession, denen darauf erfolgten Schmalkaldischen Articuln, dem Großen und Kleinen Catechismo Lutheri, der Formulae Concordiae und unßer kirchenordnung rein und lauter ohne einige corruptelen lehren,

[that he shall] teach God's holy saving word purely and clearly, without any corruptions, according to the Biblical writings of the Old and New Testaments, the Augsburg Confession grounded thereon, unfalsified, delivered in the year 1530 at the great diet at Augsburg to the emperor Charles the Fifth and incorporated in the Formula Concordiae, the Smalcald Articles that followed thereon, Luther's Large and Small Catechism, the Formula Concordiae, and our church order,

The phrase "the CA … incorporated in the FC" identifies the invariata by the text printed in the BoC. The visitation articles of 1609 ask each pastor to confess the FC and the church order and to "condemn the Calvinist doctrine of election, of the person of the Lord Christ and of the most worthy sacraments" (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1175).

17.10.5 Bremen: the Corpus Philippicum and the road to the Reformed (1570–1575)

The Bremen texts of these years are Philippist orders; the city's Reformed orders begin in 1582.

Bremen's ministerium (Philippist) agreed in 1572 on a "simple confession", by which all future ministers were to be bound. It names Scripture, the creeds, the CA and the Corpus doctrinae of Melanchthon, "which the Electoral Saxon and other churches have received". Bremen, Einigung des geistlichen Ministeriums über die in Bremen gültige Lehre, 1572 (Philippist; Sehling 7/2.2, p. 548):

> sind wir auff folgende einfältige bekändtnuß (darnach sich auch alle kirchendiener, so noch hinforder anzunehmen sein, umb jetztgedachten uhrsachen willen zu verhalten hetten) einig worden: Alß daß wir für allen dingen uns zur heiligen schrifft und hernach zu den christlichen Symbolen, Augustana confessione und dem Corpore doctrinae christianae Philippi Melanthonis (so die churfurstliche Sachsische und andere kirchen angenommen und im rechten verstande nach Gottes wort sich darauff beruffen) bekennet haben und noch bekennen. Ja, daß wir auch dem Vehrdischen abscheide, so weit derselbige neben dem Corpore doctrinae mit Gottes wort richtig und gleichformig übereinstimmet […]

we have agreed upon the following simple confession (whereby all ministers of the church who are yet to be received hereafter should also have to govern themselves, for the causes now mentioned): namely, that above all things we have confessed and do still confess ourselves to the holy Scripture, and after it to the Christian creeds, the Augustana confessio, and the Corpus doctrinae christianae of Philip Melanchthon (which the Electoral Saxon and other churches have received, and appeal thereto in its right sense according to God's word). Yea, that we also [hold] to the Verden recess, so far as the same, together with the Corpus doctrinae, agreeth rightly and conformably with God's word […]

The call of Markus Mening in 1570 adds the Apology and the Confessio Saxonica (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 544). The settlement of 1575 adds the Frankfurt Recess of 1558 (p. 566). None of these Bremen texts names the SA. This is the Philippist canon, and from it the city went over to the Reformed confession.

17.10.6 East Frisia: "the Augsburg Confession" and nothing more (1593, 1599)

In East Frisia, Lutheran and Reformed congregations lived side by side. Count Edzard II's church order for Marienhafe (1593) is fully Lutheran. It names the "unfalsified" CA and Apology, the catechisms "as the laymen's Bible" and the FC of 1580, in words close to Hoya's (§17.9.5). East Frisia, Marienhafer Kirchenordnung, 1593 (Sehling 7/1, p. 684):

> so wollen wir allen unsern pastorn, predigern und kirchendienern ernstlich hiemyt aufehrlegt und bevolen haben, das sie yn allen ihren predigten, religionshandel und -gesprech durchaus den prophetischen und apostohschen geschriften, yn der heiligen bibel verfasst, sampt den dreien symbolis: Apostolico, Nicaeno et Athanasii, der ungevalschten Auspurgischen Confession und derselben Apologia, den catecismus, großen und kleinen, Lutheri (als der leyen bibel) und der Formulae Concordiae, anno 1580 wiederholet, volzogen und gepublicieret, sich gleichformich und einhellich gemaes verhalten sollen etc.

so we will that it be earnestly laid upon and commanded hereby to all our pastors, preachers and ministers of the church, that in all their sermons, religious dealings and conversations they behave themselves throughout conformably and with one accord according to the prophetic and apostolic writings set down in the holy Bible, together with the three creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's; the unfalsified Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof; Luther's catechisms, Large and Small (as the laymen's Bible); and the Formula Concordiae, repeated, completed and published in the year 1580, etc.

The treaty between the count and the estates in 1599, a Reformed–Lutheran treaty, named only the CA. The editors' footnote at this point discusses the variata. The treaty goes on to admit that, from the beginning of the Reformation, both "opinions" about the CA's sense had been preached and suffered in the land (Sehling 7/1, p. 422). East Frisia, Die Konkordaten, 1599 (Reformed–Lutheran treaty; Sehling 7/1, p. 421):

> daß in unserm lande, kirchen und schuelen, keine andere lehre dem volke solle offentlich vorgetragen, beschutzet oder gehandhabet werden, alß welche den prophetißchen und apostolißchen schriften gemeß, in die christliche bekentnuß der Augspurgißchen Confession zusamengetragen und vorfaßet that in our land, churches and schools no other doctrine shall be publicly set before the people, defended or maintained, than that which, agreeably to the prophetic and apostolic writings, is gathered together and set down in the Christian confession of the Augsburg Confession.

17.10.7 Soest: "our corpus doctrinae", subscribed before admission (1590)

The preachers of Soest agreed on articles in 1590, "without whose subscription no one shall henceforth be admitted into our ministry". The first article lists the corpus on which they had themselves been examined and ordained. Soest, Artikel der Prediger, 1 September 1590 (Sehling 22, p. 480):

> ohn wellicher articul subscription hinfurder niemandt in unnser ministerium soll zugelassen werden, unnd sindt die articule diese nachfolgende: 1. Unnser corpus doctrinae ist unnd soll sein die heilige bibel, prophetische unnd apostolische schrifft, die drey bewehrten symbola, als Apostolicum, Nicenum unnd Athanasii, die Augspurgische Confession unnd derselben Apologia, wie dieselbige anno funffzehenhundert unnd dreissigk rom. key. majestet ist uberandtwortet worden, die Schmalkaldischen Articul, der kleine unnd grosse catechismus Lutheri unnd Formula Concordiae, auff wellichs corpus doctrinae wir examinirt, ordinirt unnd in das heilige predigampt getreten sein, dabey wir auch biß in unnsere gruben vormittelst gottlicher hulff wollen bestendig beharren.

without the subscription of which articles no one shall henceforth be admitted into our ministry; and the articles are these following: 1. Our corpus doctrinae is and shall be the holy Bible, the prophetic and apostolic Scripture; the three approved creeds, namely the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's; the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof, as the same was delivered in the year fifteen hundred and thirty to the Roman imperial majesty; the Smalcald Articles; the Small and Large Catechism of Luther; and the Formula Concordiae: upon which corpus doctrinae we have been examined and ordained and have entered into the holy preaching office, and whereby we will also abide steadfastly unto our graves, by means of God's help.

Soest was biconfessional in other respects. In 1583 it admitted godparents of both religions (§17.17.4).

17.11 Hesse, Waldeck, Frankfurt, Nassau and Ysenburg

By the editors' account the Hessian landgraves (Philippist) together rejected the FC (Sehling 8, p. 344; Sehling 9, p. 33), although the introduction to Hessen-Darmstadt speaks of Darmstadt's signature in 1577 (Sehling 9, p. 45). After Philip's death (1567) its general synods held to the CA, the Apology, the SA, Luther's catechism and the Wittenberg Corpus doctrinae. The Agende of 1574 called the CA "the symbol of this our time". Once the landgraviate was divided, the two halves went separate ways. Hessen-Kassel bound its pastors by oath against the ubiquity doctrine (1598) and turned Reformed. Hessen-Darmstadt made every minister, professor and schoolmaster swear to the unaltered CA and renounce the Calvinists (1617). The neighbouring counties show the same spread:

- Waldeck took the FC into its ordination question.
- Frankfurt took the Book of Concord into its ordination question.
- Nassau went from Melanchthon's Loci to an explicitly Reformed order (Dillenburg 1582).
- Nassau-Weilburg and Ysenburg held to the unaltered CA.

17.11.1 Hesse: the synod, the Agende, and the divided landgraviate (1571–1617)

The general synod's Abschied of 1571 (Philippist) records the pastors' undertaking to teach according to a mixed norm: the SA beside the Wittenberg Corpus doctrinae. Hesse, Abschied of the general synod, 1571 (Philippist; Sehling 8, p. 355):

> und nicht allein vor sich selbst nach der heiligen gottlichen geschrift und darein begrundten dreien symbolis, der Augspurgischen Confession, daruf gevolgter Apologien, Schmalkaldischen Articulis, dem catechismo Lutheri und zu Wittenberg ausgangenem corpore doctrinae zu lehren, sondern auch eußersten vleiß dahin zu arbeiten, urbutig und von herzen willig, daß von andern, beide in schulen und kirchen, dergleichen beschehe,

[they declared themselves] ready and willing from the heart not only themselves to teach according to the holy divine Scripture and the three creeds grounded therein, the Augsburg Confession, the Apology following thereon, the Smalcald Articles, Luther's catechism and the corpus doctrinae that came forth at Wittenberg, but also to labour with the utmost diligence that the like be done by others, both in schools and in churches.

The Agende of 1574 (Philippist) puts Scripture alone as the norma iudicii, with the creeds and the CA as "the symbol of this our time". One witness of the text (B) adds the Apology and the Corpus doctrinae of "P. M." (Philip Melanchthon). Hesse, Agende, 1574 (Philippist; Sehling 8, p. 415):

> so söllen in allen und jeden punkten christlicher lehr die prophetischen und apostolische schriften das rechte fundament, die einige norma iudicii, regel und richtschnur sein, nach welcher alle fürfallende streit und irrung dirimirt und hingelegt werden mögen, und nechst der heiligen göttlichen schrift die drei bewerte symbola Apostolicum, Nicenum und Athanasianum, dergleichen die Augspurgische Confession, dieser unser zeit symbolum, als die in den prophetischen und apostolischen schriften warhaftig fundirt und gegründet und zum eigentlichen und notwendigen bericht von einem jeden artikel gnugsam seind, then in all and every point of Christian doctrine the prophetic and apostolic writings shall be the right foundation, the only norma iudicii, rule and line, according to which all controversies and errors arising may be decided and laid aside; and next to the holy divine Scripture the three approved creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and the Athanasian, and likewise the Augsburg Confession, the symbol of this our time, as being truly founded and grounded in the prophetic and apostolic writings and sufficient for proper and needful instruction concerning every article.

After the division, the pastors of the Lower County of Katzenelnbogen, under Hessen-Kassel (still Philippist in 1598), swore a service oath with a long Christological section. It names the four councils and Leo's Tome alongside the CA, the Apology, the SA and the Hessian synodal Abschiede, and it rejects the "newly introduced bodily ubiquity". Hessen-Kassel, Diensteid der Pfarrer in der Niedergrafschaft Katzenelnbogen, 20 February 1598 (Philippist; Sehling 9, p. 54):

> In sonderheit aber bekennen wir uns mit mund und hertzen zu der reinen lehr von der person unsers hernn Jesu Christi und mit namen dero newlich eingeführter leiblicher ubiquitet und allenthalbenheit halben zu dem claren wort Gottes, non stolide, sed dextre intellecto, den dreien hauptsymbolis Apostolico, Niceno, Athanasiano, desgleichen denen vier in der kirchen Gottes approbirten heuptconciliis und sonderlich dem concilio Chalcedonense undt der epistola Leonis ad Flavianum wie auch Augustana Confessione, deren Apologia und [...] Schmalcaldicis Articulis und darauff erfolgten Synodalabschieden etc. und wollen in crafft deren auch bei den gewönlichen reden bleiben

But in especial we confess ourselves with mouth and heart to the pure doctrine of the person of our Lord Jesus Christ, and namely, as touching the newly introduced bodily ubiquity and omnipresence, to the plain word of God, understood not stupidly but rightly; to the three chief creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and the Athanasian; likewise to the four chief councils approved in the church of God, and especially to the council of Chalcedon and the epistle of Leo to Flavian; as also to the Augsburg Confession, the Apology thereof, and [...] the Smalcald Articles, and the synodal recesses that followed thereon, etc.; and will by virtue of the same abide also by the customary forms of speech

The oath goes on to reject, as "monstrous and portentous propositions", the teaching that Christ's humanity is "almighty, all-knowing, infinite and everywhere present".

Hessen-Darmstadt, which stayed Lutheran, answered with a mandate that made the unaltered CA a sworn condition of office. It also required a negative declaration against every other confession. Hessen-Darmstadt, Mandat zur Beibehaltung der Confessio Augustana, 28 July 1617 (Sehling 9, p. 152):

> Derowegen soll auch in kirchen und schuelen kein theologus, professor, praedicant oder schuelmeister ufgenommen werden, er gelobe unnd schwere dann zuevorderst, daß er anderst nicht lehren wölle, dann waß Gotteß wortt und erwehntter wahren unverenderttenn Augspurgischenn Confession gemeeß sey, sonderlich aber auch sich mit mundt und hertz in affirmativa et negativa erklehre, das er in confessione richtigk und rein unnd nichtt catholisch oder papistisch, zwinglich oder calvinisch, widerteufferisch oder andern irrigen unnd widerigen secten verwanth unnd zugethann sey,

Wherefore also no theologian, professor, preacher or schoolmaster shall be received in churches and schools, except he first vow and swear that he will teach nothing else than what is agreeable to God's word and the aforesaid true, unaltered Augsburg Confession; and especially also declare himself with mouth and heart, in affirmativa et negativa, that he is right and pure in confession, and not catholic or papist, Zwinglian or Calvinist, Anabaptist, nor related or addicted to other erroneous and contrary sects.

17.11.2 Waldeck: the FC in the ordination vow

Waldeck's ordination form, in a manuscript revision of the church order of 1556 that the editors date to about 1584 and record in their apparatus (Sehling 9, p. 173), copies Henneberg's question of 1582 (§17.6.2). The editors gloss the "formula of union" as the FC of 1577. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung 1556, ordination form in the revision of about 1584 (Sehling 9, p. 292):

> Zum andern fragen wir, ob ihr auch ewern glauben und bekentnis richten wollet nach Gottes wordt, wie dasselbige in prophetischer und apostolischer heiliger schrifft verfasset, desgleichen nach den dreien hauptsymbolis, auch hierauß hergenommener wolgegrundeter wahrer Augspurgischen Confession, Apologia, Schmalkaldischenn Artickeln, kleinem und großem catechismo Lutheri sampt jeziger christlichen einigungsformul [=Konkordienformel von 1577], so saget es hiermit Gott und seiner heiligen christlichen kirchen, auch uns

Secondly we ask whether ye will also direct your faith and confession according to God's word, as the same is contained in the prophetic and apostolic holy Scripture, and likewise according to the three chief creeds, and the true, well-grounded Augsburg Confession taken therefrom, the Apology, the Smalcald Articles, Luther's Small and Large Catechism, together with the present Christian formula of union [= the Formula of Concord of 1577]? Then promise it hereby to God and his holy Christian church, and to us.

17.11.3 Frankfurt: the Book of Concord in the ordination vow (1589)

The imperial city of Frankfurt put the Book of Concord into the questions of its ordination rite. The ordinand answers "Yea". Frankfurt, Agende, 1589 (Sehling 9, p. 541):

> Wollet ir aber auch mit Gottes Hülff und Gnaden bey dem klaren, hellen und außgetruckten Wort Gottes, so in den Schrifften Mose, der Propheten und Aposteln begriffen und newlicher zeit in der Augspurgischen Confession, Schmalkaldischen Articuln, beyden Catechismen Lutheri und dem Christlichen Concordibuch widerholet und erklärt worden, trewlich und fleissig bleiben, auch allen Christlichen Ordnungen dieser Franckfurtischen Kirchen trewlich nachkommen? Antwort: Ja.

But will ye also, with God's help and grace, abide faithfully and diligently by the clear, bright and express word of God, which is contained in the writings of Moses, of the prophets and of the apostles, and hath lately been repeated and declared in the Augsburg Confession, the Smalcald Articles, both Catechisms of Luther and the Christian Book of Concord; and also faithfully follow all the Christian ordinances of this church of Frankfurt? Answer: Yea.

The confessions are presented as a recent repetition of Scripture, not as a separate norm.

17.11.4 Nassau: from Melanchthon's Loci to the Reformed confession (1564–1582)

The Nassau-Diez Revers of 1564 names the creeds, the CA and "Philip's Loci". It is a promise ("angeloben und versprechen"), not an oath. Nassau-Diez, Revers der Kirchendiener, [1564] (Sehling 10, p. 103):

> Puncten, welche diejenige, so zum predigampt in des wolgebornen u[nseres] g[nädigen] h[errn] etc. kirchen angenomen werden, angeloben und versprechen muß[en] laut der ordnung 1. Das sie die h[eilige] lahr nach der h. propheten und aposteln schriften in dem verstandte, wie der in symbolis Apostolico, Nicaeno und Athanasii, auch in der Augspurgischen Confession und locis Philippi ausgedruckt ist, rein und lauter treiben wollen und keine newe dogmata seen oder eigene und besondere formulas zureden, dardurch etwa uneinigkeitt und spaltung zwischen uns selbst oder ergernis bei dem volck entstehen mochte, gebrauchen,

Points which those who are received into the preaching office in the churches of the well-born, our gracious lord, etc., must vow and promise according to the ordinance: 1. That they will set forth the holy doctrine purely and clearly according to the writings of the holy prophets and apostles, in the sense expressed in the creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's, and also in the Augsburg Confession and Philip's Loci; and will sow no new dogmas, nor use their own and peculiar forms of speech whereby disunity and division might arise among ourselves, or offence among the people.

By 1582 Nassau-Dillenburg had adopted the Reformed confession (Reformed). Its church order of that year required, before the Supper, a confession of "the Reformed doctrine" (§17.17.2).

17.11.5 Nassau-Weilburg and Ysenburg: the unaltered CA (1576, 1588)

Nassau-Weilburg's visitors asked each pastor whether he taught the chief articles "as they are briefly set down in the unaltered Augsburg Confession". Nassau-Weilburg, Kirchenordnung, 1574/1576 (Sehling 10, p. 306):

> Articul, darauff die Pfarrer und Kirchendiener zu befragen 1. Ob er die vornembste Articul unserer Christlichen Religion vermög Prophetischer und Apostolischer Schrifften, wie die in der ungeenderten Augspurgischen Confession, so in Anno [15]30 Keyser Carolen, dem V. dieses Namens, ubergeben worden, kürtzlich verfasset und in andern bewehrten Symbolis der reinen Evangelischen Kirchen (so der ungeenderten Augspurgischen Confession zugethan und verwandt seynt) widerholet werden, seiner befolhenen Gemeine fleissig und trewlich fürtrage.

Articles upon which the pastors and ministers of the church are to be asked: 1. Whether he set forth diligently and faithfully to the congregation committed to him the chief articles of our Christian religion according to the prophetic and apostolic writings, as they are briefly set down in the unaltered Augsburg Confession which was delivered in the year [15]30 to the emperor Charles, the Fifth of that name, and repeated in other approved symbols of the pure evangelical churches (which are addicted and related to the unaltered Augsburg Confession).

The Agende of 1618 adds the Apology, the SA and the catechisms (Sehling 10, p. 233). In 1609 the same territory told its pastors to admit, with discretion, godparents who did not hold the unaltered CA in every point (§17.17.4).

The county of Ysenburg-Birstein gave its pastors a norma doctrinae of the creeds, the unaltered CA, the Apology, the SA and both catechisms. Ysenburg-Birstein, Kirchenordnung, 1588 (Sehling 10, p. 619):

> Erstlich sollen die Pfarrherrn und Kirchendiener eine gewisse normam Doctrinae haben, darnach sie sich in Erkanntnuß und Underscheidt der rechten und falschen Lehr richten mögen. Sollen auch nichts anders lehren, dann was der Propheten und Apostel Schrifft, den bewerthen Symbolis unnd der unverenderten Augspurgischen Confession, Anno 1530 uberantwort, sampt derselbigen Apologi, So wol auch den Schmalkaldischen Artickeln und beyden Catechismis Lutheri gemeß ist.

First, the pastors and ministers of the church shall have a certain norma doctrinae, whereby they may govern themselves in knowing and distinguishing right and false doctrine. They shall also teach nothing else than what is agreeable to the Scripture of the prophets and apostles, the approved creeds, and the unaltered Augsburg Confession delivered in the year 1530, together with the Apology thereof, as also to the Smalcald Articles and both Catechisms of Luther.

The FC is not named. The order goes on to tell pastors to read Luther and Philip.

17.12 The Palatinates: Kurpfalz, the Upper Palatinate, Pfalz-Neuburg, Pfalz-Zweibrücken and Sponheim

The Wittelsbach Palatinates show more clearly than anywhere else how a single binding formula could carry different confessions in turn. The Kurpfalz Kirchendienerbestallung kept its wording through four reigns while its content changed:

Reign	Confessional content
Ottheinrich (1556)	Lutheran: CA, Apol, SA and Luther's catechism
Ludwig VI (1580)	Lutheran: the Book of Concord
Johann Casimir (1586)	Reformed: the Heidelberg Catechism, with the CA and Apol "in their right sense"
Friedrich IV (1601)	Reformed: bound "with fealty given by the hand in the stead of a bodily sworn oath"

The Upper Palatinate, which had signed the FC in 1581–82, was released from it in 1585 under the Reformed regent. Pfalz-Neuburg stayed Lutheran and signed. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, then Lutheran, drew up its own Latin subscription in 1564, which Strasbourg also used. The Hintere Grafschaft Sponheim took the FC as "the symbol" of the Lutheran churches in 1608.

17.12.1 Kurpfalz: one formula, four confessions (1556–1601)

Ottheinrich's church order of 1556 binds pastors to the creeds, the CA and Apology of 1530 "in their right, unfalsified sense", the SA and Luther's catechism. Kurpfalz, Kirchenordnung of Ottheinrich, 1556 (Sehling 14, pp. 114–115):

> daß ihr in euerer lehr, predigt und gantzem kirchenampt bey der richtschnur göttlichs worts bleiben und davon weder zur rechten noch zur linkken abweichen, […] und in eurem lehren, predigen und conferieren etc. den alten bewerten symbolis Apostolico, Niceno und Athanasiano, der Augspurgischen Confession und deren Apologia (wie dieselb von den christlichen churfürsten und stendenkeyser Carolo dem fünften anno etc. 1530 in ihrem rechtem, unverfelschtem verstand, darauf wir uns jederzeit und noch mit mund und hertzen berufen und biß an unser ende mit verleihung göttlicher gnaden darbey bestendiglichen zu bleiben gedencken überantwort), deßgleichen bey den Schmalkäldischen Artickeln, dem Catechismo Lutheri, wie solcher diser unser kirchenordnung einverleibt, euch gemäß verhalten und nichts ungleichs oder widerwertigs einmengen oder einfüren.

that ye abide by the rule of God's word in your doctrine, preaching and whole church office, and turn not aside therefrom to the right hand nor to the left […]; and that in your teaching, preaching and conferring, etc., ye behave yourselves agreeably to the old approved creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and the Athanasian, and to the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof (as the same was delivered by the Christian electors and estates to the emperor Charles the Fifth in the year 1530, in its right, unfalsified sense, whereunto we have at all times appealed and do still appeal with mouth and heart, and purpose by the grant of divine grace to abide steadfastly thereby to our end), and likewise to the Smalcald Articles and Luther's catechism as it is incorporated in this our church order; and mingle or bring in nothing unlike or contrary.

Under Ludwig VI (1576–1583), who restored Lutheranism after his father's Reformed reign, the formula was extended to the Book of Concord. Kurpfalz, Kirchendienerbestallung, 1580 (Sehling 14, p. 507):

> Und nachdem die streitigen religionspuncten wider das bapstthumb und die secten in der Augspurgischen Confession und derselbigen Apologia nach rechtem verstandt der prophetischen und apostolischen schriften erklährt, sollet und werdet ihr bey gedachter Confession und Apologia, deßgleichen bey dem von churfürstlicher Pfaltz, auch etlicher ander churfürsten, fürsten, grafen, herrn und ständen deß reichs, deren kirchen und schulen approbiertem Concordibuch bleiben und kein alte oder neue opinion oder secten, so derselbigen zuwider, eynführen noch vertheidingen,

And forasmuch as the points of religion in controversy against the papacy and the sects are declared in the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof according to the right understanding of the prophetic and apostolic writings, ye shall and will abide by the said Confession and Apology, and likewise by the Book of Concord approved by the Electoral Palatinate and also by certain other electors, princes, counts, lords and estates of the empire, [and] their churches and schools; and shall neither bring in nor defend any old or new opinion or sect contrary thereto.

Six years later, under the Reformed administrator Johann Casimir, the same sentence returns without the Book of Concord. The catechism that "directs" the pastor to the CA is now the large and small Heidelberg Catechism, as the editors note. Kurpfalz, Kirchendienerbestallung, 1586 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 525):

> Und nachdem die streitigen religionspuncten wider das papstumb und die secten in der Augspurgischen Confession und derselbigen Apologia nach rechtem verstandt der prophetischen und apostolischen schriften erklärt, sollet und wedet ihr bey gedachter Confessio und Apologia, inmassen euch dahin der groß und klein catechismus, von neuem ubersehen und der kirchenordnung eynverleibt, weisen, endlich bleiben

And forasmuch as the points of religion in controversy against the papacy and the sects are declared in the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof according to the right understanding of the prophetic and apostolic writings, ye shall and will abide finally by the said Confession and Apology, in such measure as the Large and Small Catechism, newly revised and incorporated in the church order, directeth you thereto.

The 1586 text is thus a Reformed subscription to the CA, read through the Heidelberg Catechism. By 1601 the schoolmasters' Bestallung was written in the first person. It ends with a pledge "with fealty given by the hand in the stead of a bodily sworn oath", confirmed by the man's own signature. Kurpfalz, Schuldienerbestallung, 1601 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 593):

> Dieses alles stedt, fest und unverbruchlich zu halten, auch alles ander zu leisten, was einem getreuen schuldiener und gehorsamen underthanen gebüret und wol anstehet, thue ich mit handgebner treu an eines leiblichen geschwornen eids statt hiemit geloben und mich dessen mit eigner underschrift verpflichten und verbinden, getreulich und sonder gefehrde.

All this to hold steadfast, firm and inviolable, and also to perform all else that becometh and well beseemeth a faithful schoolmaster and obedient subject, I do hereby vow with fealty given by the hand in the stead of a bodily sworn oath, and do oblige and bind myself thereto with my own signature, faithfully and without guile.

The same handfast pledge "in the stead of an oath" appears in Pfalz-Neuburg's Bestallung of 1555 (Sehling 13, p. 108).

17.12.2 The Upper Palatinate: released from the Book of Concord (1585)

The instruction of 1585 is a Reformed order.

The Upper Palatinate's clergy signed the FC in 1581–82 (Sehling's introduction, Sehling 13, p. 269). When Johann Casimir took over the regency, his instruction to the church council of 1585 defined the CA by its later repetitions at Frankfurt (1557/58) and Naumburg (1561). The editors' footnote calls this "entirely in the sense of the so-called Variata". The instruction then released the ministers from their obligation to the BoC. Upper Palatinate, Kirchenratsinstruktion, 3 March 1585 (Reformed; Sehling 13, pp. 328–329):

> dann der confession, uf dem reichstag zue Augspurg anno [15]30 keiser Carolo ubergeben, und angehafter apologien, in dem rechten und gesunden verstand, wie sie damals von den christlichen chur- und fürsten gemeint und hernacher auf etlichen underschiedlichen ver[…]Besamblungen - als anno [15]57 und [15]58 zu Frankfurt - und [15]61 zu Naumburg - von churfürsten und stenden vorbesagter augspurgischen confession repetirt, widerholet und ercleret, auch von deren > theologis ausgefueret und verteidingt worden ist, […] Weilen man allein uf Gottes wort als die unteilbare richtschnur sehen und auf keine menschenschriften oder autoritet sich verbünden soll, so befelhen und wöllen wir, das alle unsers obigen fürstentumbs zu Bayern kirchen- und schuldiener ihrer des concordibuch getoner pflichten halber allerdings erlassen und fürbas allein zu Gottes wort und zu dem obgesetzten verbunden und in pflicht genomen werden.

then [according to] the confession delivered to the emperor Charles at the diet at Augsburg in the year [15]30, and the apology annexed, in the right and sound sense, as it was then meant by the Christian electors and princes, and afterwards at sundry assemblies (as in the years [15]57 and [15]58 at Frankfurt, and [15]61 at Naumburg) repeated, rehearsed and declared by the electors and estates of the aforesaid Augsburg Confession, and also set forth and defended by their theologians, […] Forasmuch as we ought to look to God's word alone as the indivisible rule, and bind ourselves to no writings or authority of men, we command and will that all ministers of church and school in our aforesaid principality in Bavaria be wholly released from the duty they took upon them to the Book of Concord, and henceforth be bound and taken into duty to God's word alone and to the [norm] set down above.

The phrase "to bind ourselves to no writings of men" is the Reformed answer to subscription as such.

17.12.3 Pfalz-Neuburg: the Wittenberg Concord against the Calvinists (1564), the corpus doctrinae (1576)

Duke Wolfgang's mandate of 1564 against the Calvinists prescribed the "phrases and ways of speaking" for the Supper. They were to be taken from the CA, the Apology, the Wittenberg Concord of 1536, the SA and the church order. Pfalz-Neuburg, Mandat gegen die Kalvinisten, 1564 (Sehling 13, p. 148):

> so wollen und bevelhen wir hiemit ernstlich, das alle unsere kirchendiener hinfur in iren predigen, auch privatunderrichtungen sonderlich, wan si den handl des Herren nachtmals erklern sollen - nicht neu, ungewondliche phrases und weis zu reden einfuren, sonder sich der phrases und weis zu reden allermaist gebrauchen, so in Gottes wort, augspurgischer confession, derselbigen apologia und zu Wittemberg in anno [15]36 aufgerichter concordia de caena Domini, auch in den schmalcaldischen artikln und unserer kirchenordnung gesetzt und begriffen sein.

we will and command hereby earnestly that all our ministers of the church henceforth, in their sermons and also in private instructions, especially when they are to explain the matter of the Lord's Supper, bring in no new, unwonted phrases and ways of speaking, but use most of all the phrases and ways of speaking that are set and contained in God's word, the Augsburg Confession, the Apology thereof and the concordia de caena Domini set up at Wittenberg in the year [15]36, and also in the Smalcald Articles and our church order.

By 1576 these books were called the territory's corpus doctrinae, with the CA as "the symbol of the right, true church of our time". Pfalz-Neuburg, Generalartikel, 1576 (Sehling 13, p. 171):

> das dieselbige zuvorderst der heiligen schrift selbst und dann auch den dreien symbolis apostolico, nicaeno, Athanatiano, desgleichen auch der augspurgischen confession, wie si anno 1530 kaiser Carolo Quinto ubergeben, als unserer zeit der rechten, wahrhaftigen kirchen symbolo, derselben apologien, schmalkaldischen artikeln und catechismo Lutheri nicht zuwider, sonder in allweg als dem reinen corpori doctrinae gemeß gefüert und, da jemand solchem zuwider geleret und uf seiner gefaßten irrigen opinion verharren, im furstentumb keineswegs geduldet werden solle.

that the same [exposition of Scripture] be conducted first of all agreeably to holy Scripture itself, and then also not contrary to the three creeds, the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's, nor likewise to the Augsburg Confession as it was delivered in the year 1530 to the emperor Charles the Fifth, as the symbol of the right, true church of our time, [nor] to the Apology thereof, the Smalcald Articles and Luther's catechism, but in every way agreeably [to them] as to the pure corpus doctrinae; and that if anyone teach contrary thereto and persist in the erroneous opinion he hath conceived, he shall in no wise be suffered in the principality.

Pfalz-Neuburg later signed the BoC (Sehling's introduction, Sehling 13, p. 35).

17.12.4 Pfalz-Zweibrücken: "mente atque manu subscribo" (1564)

Pfalz-Zweibrücken's Latin Bekenntnisverpflichtung of 1564 is the most elaborate personal subscription in the corpus. It is written in the first person and goes article by article:

- Scripture;
- four creeds: the Apostles', the Nicene, the Athanasian, and the Te Deum "thought to have been made by Augustine and Ambrose";
- the four councils;
- the CA of 1530, as understood by those who presented it;
- the history of its later editions;
- the SA, each with its own act of assent.

Strasbourg used the same text in 1565, and Sickingen in 1564. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Bekenntnisverpflichtung der Kirchendiener, 1564 (Sehling 18, pp. 328–329):

> 1. Itaque amplector ex animo, omnia scripta Prophetarum et Apostolorum veteris et novi testamenti, quae sunt ipsum certum et indubitatum verbum Dei, […] 2. Deinde credo, amplector et confiteor quatuor illa catholicae ecclesiae symbola: Apostolicum, Nicenum, Athanasianum et quod ab Augustino atque Ambrosio confectum putatur. […] 4. […] toto pectore amplector et recipio eam doctrinae religionis formulam et summam, quae scripto exhibita est ab Illustrissimi Saxoniae Electore et aliis Principibus et duabusque civitatibus Nurnberga et Reutlinga Imperatori Carolo V. Augustae Vindelicorum anno 1530, quae inde Augustana confessio est nominata. […] Ego igitur his Smalcaldicis articulis quos veros et sacras scripturae conformes esse agnosco et confiteor (habent enim certa et indubitata Propheticorum et Apostolicorum librorum testimonia) ex animo, ut sunt κατα το ρητον positi, assentior et sine ulla sophistica his mente atque manu subscribo.

1. Therefore I embrace from my heart all the writings of the prophets and apostles of the Old and New Testaments, which are the very certain and undoubted word of God […] 2. Then I believe, embrace and confess those four creeds of the catholic church: the Apostolic, the Nicene, the Athanasian, and that which is thought to have been made by Augustine and Ambrose. […] 4. […] with my whole heart I embrace and receive that form and sum of the doctrine of religion which was exhibited in writing by the most illustrious Elector of Saxony and other princes, and the two cities of Nürnberg and Reutlingen, to the emperor Charles V at Augsburg in the year 1530, which is thence named the Augsburg Confession. […] I therefore assent from my heart to these Smalcald Articles, which I acknowledge and confess to be true and conformable to the holy Scriptures (for they have the certain and undoubted testimonies of the prophetic and apostolic books), as they are set down according to the letter; and without any sophistry I subscribe them with mind and hand.

"κατα το ρητον", "according to the letter", excludes any reservation. Pfalz-Zweibrücken did not go on to the FC. By Sehling's account, Duke Johann announced the official rejection of the Book of Concord in 1580 (Sehling 18, p. 40).

17.12.5 Sponheim: the FC as "the symbol of all pure churches" (1608)

The Hintere Grafschaft Sponheim, a condominium of Baden and the Palatine house, had made the CA, Melanchthon's Loci and his Examen its corpus doctrinae in 1560 (Sehling 18, p. 636). In 1608 the visitors complained that some pastors had neither bought nor read the FC. Hintere Grafschaft Sponheim, Generalartikel, 1608 (Sehling 18, p. 671):

> Es haben etliche pfarrer in der hindern Graveschaft Sponheim formulam concordiae nicht allein in ihre Bibliothecas nicht erkaufft, sondern auch zum theil nicht gelesen, welche doch nunmehr pro symbolo aller reinen kirchen der unverfelschten Augspurgischen Confession gehalten wirdt, auch weilandt H[errn] Carol, Pfalzgravens christmilter gedechtnuß, eigentlicher will gewesen, daß so wol s.f.gn. kindere alß auch die landtsunderthanen dahin gewiesen werden sollen.

Certain pastors in the Hinder County of Sponheim have not only not bought the formula concordiae for their libraries, but also in part have not read it; which is nevertheless now held pro symbolo of all pure churches of the unfalsified Augsburg Confession; and it was also the express will of the late Lord Charles, Count Palatine, of Christian and gentle memory, that both his princely grace's children and the subjects of the land should be directed thereto.

The article goes on to require every pastor to buy the octavo edition within a year and to declare in writing to both chancelleries whether he assented to all its articles (Sehling 18, pp. 671–672).

17.13 Württemberg, Hohenlohe and the Swabian cities

Württemberg had its own confession, the Confessio Virtembergica, which Brenz drew up for the Council of Trent in 1552. From the 1550s it set that confession beside the CA. Its theologians, Andreae above all, were the authors of the Concord, and in 1577 the duke ordered every minister to sign the FC. Hohenlohe, Württemberg's neighbour, shows a different path. In 1578 it made its own corpus doctrinae. In 1581, on Andreae's advice, it cut that corpus down to the CA. From 1603 it bound its ministers to a local Gründlicher Bericht in place of the FC. The free cities of Swabia (Hall, Wimpfen, Ravensburg, Ulm) mostly signed. Some had their own local formula as well.

17.13.1 Württemberg: the CA and the Loci (1547), the CA and "our Confession" (after 1559)

Duke Ulrich's visitation order of 1547 directs preaching to the CA and Apology, and sends the ordinary preachers to Melanchthon's later Loci, "for they are examined out of the same in the synods". Württemberg, Visitationsordnung, 1547 (Sehling 16, p. 155):

> Die Leer unnd das Predig Ambt belanngenndt, sollenn sie dieselbigen alle auff die mainung unnd Innhallt der Augspurgischen Confession unnd darauff gevolgte Apologia richten unnd darwider nichts news oder widerwertigs fürgeen lassenn, unnd sonnderlich die gemeinen predicanten zu solhen, desgleichen auf die Locos Communes philippi recentiores weisen, dann sie in den Sinodis aus denselbigenn examinirt werden.

As touching doctrine and the preaching office, they shall direct them all according to the meaning and content of the Augsburg Confession and the Apology that followed thereon, and suffer nothing new or contrary thereto to go forth; and especially they shall direct the common preachers to the same, and likewise to the later Loci communes of Philip, for they are examined out of the same in the synods.

Under Duke Christoph the Iuramentum und Promissio of the ministers named two confessions: the Augsburg and "our Confession", the Württemberg Confession of 1552. Württemberg, Eid der Kirchendiener, [after 1559] (Sehling 16, p. 424):

> Iuramentum und Promissio der Kirchendiener Unsers Fürstenthumbs. […] Und nach dem die erklärung solcher Artickel, darinn man in Glaubens sachen zu diser zeit strittig, in der Augspurgischen und unser Confession kurtz und klar, nach anweisung des rechten, waren, catholischen verstands der prophetischen und apostolischen Schrifft begriffen und verfaßt seind, so erfordert die notturfft des Kirchenampts, das der Kirchendiener in solchen Artickuln sein Lehr nach der erklärung und inhallt der zweien bemelten Confessionen getrewlich verrichte.

Oath and promise of the ministers of the church of our principality. […] And forasmuch as the explanation of such articles as are at this time in controversy in matters of faith is comprehended and set down briefly and plainly in the Augsburg Confession and in our Confession, according to the direction of the right, true, catholic sense of the prophetic and apostolic Scripture, the need of the church's office requireth that the minister of the church perform his teaching in such articles faithfully according to the explanation and content of the two said Confessions.

17.13.2 Württemberg: the mandate to sign the FC (1577)

Duke Ludwig's mandate of 1577 sent the FC to the church and told every theologian and every minister of church and school to sign it. The FC is described as wholly conformable to the earlier norm, the Württemberg Confession "delivered at Trent" included. The duke notes that the electorates of Saxony and Brandenburg had already signed. Württemberg, Mandat zur Unterzeichnung der Konkordienformel, 1577 (Sehling 16, p. 445):

> das sie zuvorderst der hailigen, göttlichen schrifft, den dreyen alten unnd bewerten Symbolis, der christlichen Augspurgischen Confession, derselben Apologi, auch unnser vor diser Zeit publicierter unnd zu Trient überraichter christlicher Confession, den Schmalkaldischen Articuln, auch Katechismus Lutheri durchaus gleichförmig […] unnd nunmehr vielgedachte formula Concordie in baiden Churfürstenthumb, Sachsen unnd Brandenburg, von allen Theologen, Kirchen- unnd schuldienern albereit unnderschriben wurdt. […] das wir auch in unserm Fürstenthum vilgemelte, hiemit uberschickte Schrifften durch alle unsere Theologen, Kürchen- unnd Schuldienern (zue gezeugnuß des christlichen Consensus) unnderzaichnen lassen sollen that they are first of all wholly conformable to the holy divine Scripture, the three old and approved creeds, the Christian Augsburg Confession, the Apology thereof, and also our Christian Confession published before this time and delivered at Trent, the Smalcald Articles, and also Luther's Catechism […]; and the oft-mentioned formula Concordiae is now already subscribed in both electorates, Saxony and Brandenburg, by all theologians and ministers of church and school. […] that we also in our principality should cause the oft-mentioned writings herewith sent to be signed by all our theologians and ministers of church and school (in witness of the Christian consensus).

The Limpurg church order of 1610 likewise binds its ministers to the CA and the FC (Sehling 16, p. 611).

17.13.3 Hohenlohe: an own corpus (1578), cut down (1581), and the Gründlicher Bericht (1603–1615)

Hohenlohe's church order of 1578 opens with a corpus doctrinae. The church is to hold it "affirmatively and negatively", and so are both "teachers and hearers". Hohenlohe, Kirchenordnung, 1578 (Sehling 15, p. 260):

> bekennen sich diser grafschaft kirchen zu nachfolgenden schriften und büchern, als darinnen die ewige und unwandelbare göttliche warheit in allen und jeden stücken unserer warhaften, christlichen rehgion begriffen und erklert ist. Sollen auch dieselben beides lehrer und zuhörer pro corpore cloctrinae affirmative und negative halten, nembhchen: 1. Die schriften der heiligen propheten und apostel altes und newes testaments, fals die eiihge normam iudicii in allen controvershs. […] 2. Die drey alten symbola, als apostolicum, nicenum und Athanash. 3. Die augspurgische confession, wie sie anno etc. [15]30 keiser Carolo V. zu Augspurg auf clem the churches of this county confess themselves to the writings and books following, as wherein the eternal and unchangeable divine truth is comprehended and declared in all and every part of our true Christian religion. And both teachers and hearers shall hold the same pro corpore doctrinae, affirmatively and negatively, namely: 1. The writings of the holy prophets and apostles of the Old and New Testament, as the only norma iudicii in all controversies. […] 2. The three old creeds, namely the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's. 3. The Augsburg Confession, as it was [delivered] in the year [15]30 to the emperor Charles V at Augsburg at the …

The apparatus records the order's later life:

- In the printer's copy the CA is qualified "unaltered in words and meaning".
- A hand in the Stuttgart copy added "7. Die formulam concordiae".
- The reissue of 1688 reads "7. The formula concordiae, published and subscribed in the year 1580".

The apparatus also quotes the Verzeichnis of 4 November 1581, in which Andreae himself advised dropping the Repetitio and Melanchthon's Loci from the list. As the editors note, FC II had condemned the teaching of the Loci on free will. The corpus was cut down to Scripture, the creeds and the CA. Hohenlohe, Verzeichnis of 4 November 1581, quoted in the apparatus to the Kirchenordnung of 1578 (Sehling 15, p. 261):

> dieweil es aber mit gedachter repetition augspurgischer confession und den locis Philippi ein solche gelegenheit, wie im protocoll fol. 17 und 18 zu befinden, so vermeinet demnach D. Jacob [Andreä], zank, zwitracht, auch kunftige gefahr der khchen zu verhuetten, das ermelte bucher außzulaßen, und man sich in disem ersten capitel nach Gottes wort zum buch der concordien bekennet, darin obgesetzte reyne bucher sambt gruntlicher erklerung der strittigen articul begriffen. Daruff ist verabschiedt worden, das man sich nach der bibel und die 3 symbola simpliciter nur [!] uf die augspurgische confession, wie sie anno etc. [15]30 kayser Carolo zu Augspurg ubergeben in der kirchenordnung referiren und solche pro corpore doctrinae halten solle.

but since the matter standeth so with the said repetition of the Augsburg Confession and the Loci of Philip, as is to be found in the protocol, fol. 17 and 18, Dr Jacob [Andreae] is therefore of opinion, in order to prevent strife, discord and also future danger to the church, that the said books be left out, and that in this first chapter [the church] confess itself, after God's word, to the Book of Concord, wherein the aforesaid pure books are comprehended, together with a thorough explanation of the articles in controversy. Whereupon it was resolved that, after the Bible and the three creeds, [the church] should refer itself in the church order simply and only [!] to the Augsburg Confession as it was delivered in the year [15]30 to the emperor Charles at Augsburg, and hold the same pro corpore doctrinae.

Sehling's "[!]" marks the outcome. Andreae advised confessing the BoC, but the counts decided to name the CA alone. The ministers' oath of 1588 binds to the church order and its ceremonies rather than to any confession by name. Hohenlohe, Eid der gemeinsamen Kirchendiener, 1588 (Sehling 15, p. 562):

> Ir werdet geloben und schweren, das ir euer anbevolhen arnbt des heihgen ministerii bestes und getreues vlais auswarten, euch der graveschaft küchenordnung allerdings gemes verhalten, in derselben ohne sembthcher graven von

> Hohenloe etc. vorwissen und bevelich nichzit endern, weder ichtwas davon oder darzu tun,

Ye shall vow and swear that ye will wait upon the office of the holy ministry committed to you with your best and faithful diligence; behave yourselves altogether agreeably to the church order of the county; and change nothing therein without the foreknowledge and command of all the counts of Hohenlohe together, etc., neither take anything therefrom nor add anything thereto;

From 1603 the counts made a local doctrinal book, the Gründlicher Bericht (printed 1605), the norm in place of the FC. The partition treaties of 1609–1615 bound every minister to it by signature, oath and Revers. Hohenlohe, Erb- und Teilungsverträge, 1609–1615 (Sehling 15, p. 674):

> Insonderheit aber unß mit allem vleiß angelegen sein laßen, damit in allen und jeden kirchen und schulen nach anleitung jungstern in anno etc. 1605 under unßer grave Wolffgangs namen außgangenen büchleins (so intituhrt ist: Gründlicher bericht auß heiliger, göttlicher sclnfft von den vornembsten articuln christlicher lehr) daß lauter und rein wort […] Gottes durch alle und jede dießer graveschaft kirchendiener den zuhörern und undertanen ohnverfälscht vorgetragen und geprediget und unnöttiger zank und spaltungen destomehr verhüettet werden. But in especial [we will] let it be our care with all diligence that in all and every church and school, according to the direction of the little book lately put forth in the year, etc., 1605 under the name of our Count Wolfgang (which is entitled: A thorough report out of the holy divine Scripture of the chiefest articles of Christian doctrine), the clear and pure word […] of God be set forth and preached unfalsified to the hearers and subjects by all and every minister of the church of this county, and unnecessary strife and divisions be so much the more prevented. Subscriptions and duty of the ministers of the church. Insomuch that, to fulfil all this, all ministers of the church and teachers shall promise with mouth and hand, and also subscribe such formula doctrinae purely with their own hands, and thereupon actually perform the customary bodily oath of duty, together with the delivery of their written Revers, and promise therewith

By Sehling's account, the FC was restored in Hohenlohe in 1630 (Sehling 15, pp. 17, 675–679).

17.13.4 Ulm and Limpurg

Ulm's instructions for the officials of its rural territory (1567) bound the pastors to the CA, the Apology and Ulm's own "subscribed" confession on the Lord's Supper, "which came forth publicly in print" (Sehling 17/2, p. 270). In 1586 the preachers reported that doctrine was taught throughout Ulm's territory according to Scripture, the CA, the Apology, the SA "and the Concord lately subscribed" (Sehling 17/2, p. 277).

17.13.5 Schwäbisch Hall, Wimpfen and Ravensburg

At Schwäbisch Hall, ordinands subscribed the Book of Concord together with the city's church order. Schwäbisch Hall, ordination, Kirchenordnung 1614/15 (Sehling 17/1, p. 184):

> Zum vierdten sollen die ordinierten Personen ernstlich ermahnet werden, daß sie sich beydes, in der Lehr unnd im Leben, unverweißlich verhalten wöllen etc. Dessen zu mehrer caution sollen sie dem Concordi Buoch [Konkordienbuch 1580, BSLK S. 735-1100] und diser Kirchen Ordnung subscribieren und underschreiben [„und underschreiben" fehlt Entwurf 1614].

Fourthly, the ordained persons shall be earnestly admonished that they will behave themselves without reproach both in doctrine and in life, etc. For the greater security thereof they shall subscribe and underwrite the Book of Concord [the Book of Concord of 1580] and this church order ["and underwrite" is wanting in the draft of 1614].

The imperial city of Wimpfen bound its clergy by oath and then by a written Notula subscriptionis. In it the signer confesses the CA of 1530 and the FC "with this my own handwriting", "by virtue of the oath performed". A passage struck through in the manuscript speaks of laying three fingers on the BoC printed at Tübingen in 1580. Wimpfen, Eid und Pflichten der Geistlichen, [after 1577] (Sehling 17/2, p. 530):

> Notula subscriptionis Ich, N. N. von N., bekhenne mit dieser meiner aigenen hanndschrifft, die in anno aintausendt fünffhundert unnd dreyzig zu Augspurg kayser Carolo dem fünfften uberantwortter confession zusampt die Formula Concordiae mit allen ihren einverleibten puncten unnd articuln, khein außgenommen, in affirmativa der hayligen, göttlichen schrifft gemes unnd recht sein, will auch mit Gottes hilff darbey beständig (crafft gelaisten juraments) bleiben unnd darwider nichts heimblichs noch offentliches die zeit meines lebens zu lehren, zu predigen, zu thun mich understehen noch auch andern, die solches thun werden, beyfall thun. Actum den etc.

Note of subscription. I, N. N. of N., confess with this my own handwriting that the confession delivered at Augsburg to the emperor Charles the Fifth in the year one thousand five hundred and thirty, together with the Formula Concordiae, with all the points and articles incorporated in them, none excepted, are in the affirmative agreeable to the holy divine Scripture and right; and I will also with God's help abide steadfastly thereby (by virtue of the oath performed), and will not undertake to teach, preach or do anything secret or open against it all the time of my life, nor give assent to others who shall do so. Done the, etc.

Ravensburg, a city of mixed confession, had its own local "formula concordiae", drawn up by the evangelical preachers in 1578. Every preacher signed it under the terms of his Bestallung, and it was renewed in 1617. Ravensburg, Konkordie und Kirchenordnung, 28 January 1578, renewal of 1617 (Sehling 17/2, p. 500):

> Allßdann in dem verschinen fünffzehenhundert achtunndsibentzigisten jahr durch die herren prediger deß heyligen evangelii nach Augspurgischer Confeßion alhie zue Ravenspurg etwelcher darinnen angezogner motiven und ursachen wegen ein formula concordiae verfasset unnd von allen bißheero bestellten predigern innhallt ihrer bestallungen subscribirt worden,

Whereas in the past year fifteen hundred and seventy-eight, for certain motives and causes alleged therein, a formula concordiae was drawn up by the lords preachers of the holy gospel according to the Augsburg Confession here at Ravensburg, and hath been subscribed by all the preachers appointed hitherto according to the tenor of their Bestallungen,

Here, as at Danzig (§17.7.3), "formula concordiae" names a local agreement among the city's own preachers, not the FC of 1577.

17.14 Franconia and Regensburg

Franconia gives the longest single record in the corpus. The Brandenburg-Ansbach priest's oath of 1528 survives with its later forms recorded in the apparatus, so that one text shows the whole development:

1. In 1528, an oath to the prince to preach "the holy gospel and word of God".
2. From 1570, an oath to the creeds, the CA, the Apology, the SA and a local "formula of concord".
3. From 1573, a printed norma doctrinae shared with Nürnberg.
4. From 1588, the Book of Concord.

Nürnberg refused the FC and kept the 1573 norma doctrinae. By the editors' account it remained Nürnberg's confessional standard into the nineteenth century. Its neighbours Windsheim and Weißenburg also refused the FC (Sehling 11, pp. 486, 656, 673). The imperial city of Regensburg, by contrast, made every minister sign the BoC with his own hand before the consistory.

17.14.1 Brandenburg-Ansbach: the priest's oath (1528, 1570, 1573, 1588)

The base text of 1528 is an oath of allegiance. It is sworn to the margrave and confirmed "by this my own handwriting", and it binds the pastor to nothing but the gospel. Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Der evangelische Priestereid, 1528 (Sehling 11, p. 107):

> Ich, N., erwelter oder berufner pfarher zu N., glob und schwer dem durchleuchtigen hochgeborenen fürsten herrn Georgen, markgrafen zu Brandenburg..., hiemit und in kraft dieser meiner aigen handschrift, daß ich das heilig evangelion und wort Gottes alts und neus testaments lauter und clar predigen soll und will und nichts, das dawider ist,

I, N., elected or called pastor at N., vow and swear to the most serene, high-born prince, Lord George, margrave of Brandenburg…, hereby and by virtue of this my own handwriting, that I shall and will preach the holy gospel and word of God of the Old and New Testaments purely and clearly, and nothing that is against it,

The editors print the later wording from the surviving sworn copies. From 1570 to 1588 the clause reads (Sehling 11, p. 107):

> 1570 bis 1588: das heilig evangelion und wort Gottes alts und neus testaments, der apostel und propheten schriften, den drei hauptsymbolis, der augsburgischen confession und derselben apologia, den schmalkaldischen artikeln und deren nächstverschiedenen siebenzigsten jahrs zwischen hochgedachten meines gnädigen herrn theologen und prädikanten verglichenen formulen concordiae gemäß lauter und clar

1570 to 1588: [that I shall preach] purely and clearly the holy gospel and word of God of the Old and New Testaments, agreeably to the writings of the apostles and prophets, the three chief creeds, the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof, the Smalcald Articles, and the formula of concord agreed upon in the seventieth year last past between the theologians and preachers of my aforesaid gracious lord.

The "formula of concord" of 1570 is again a local one, an agreement among the margrave's own clergy. From 1573 the oath was followed by a list of books "of the corpus doctrinae and norma judicii". This is the list that Ansbach shared with Nürnberg. It names the CA in both its last edition and its first, "as ratified and subscribed at Naumburg in the year 61", and keeps the whole Melanchthonian canon. From 1577 the Concord was added (Sehling 11, p. 109):

> 1573-1588:+Verzeichnis der bücher corporis doctrinae et normae judicii Die 3 hauptsymbola — das apostolisch, nicänisch und Athanasii. Herrn D. M. Lutheri kleiner und großer katechismus. Die augsburgische konfession und sonderlich auch neben der letzten die 1. edition - lateinisch und deutsch -, so zu Naumburg anno 61 von kur- und fürsten ratifiziert und unterschrieben worden. Die apologia der augsburgischen konfession. Die schmalkaldischen artikel. Die repetitio der augsburgischen konfession, so zu dem concilio zu Trient vom kurfürsten von Sachsen übergeben worden. Die loci communes Philippi Melanchthonis. Das examen theologicum Philippi Melanchthonis. Die definitio appellationum Philippi Melanchthonis. Die responsiones Philippi Melanchthonis ad impios articulos bavaricos. Die responsiones Philippi Melanchthonis de controversia Stancari. Die brandenburgische kirchenordnung. […] 1577-1588: + und sonderlich das concordiabuch 1573–1588, added: Register of the books of the corpus doctrinae and norma judicii. The three chief creeds: the Apostolic, the Nicene and Athanasius's. Master Dr M. Luther's Small and Large Catechism. The Augsburg Confession, and especially, beside the last [edition], also the first edition, Latin and German, which was ratified and subscribed by electors and princes at Naumburg in the year 61. The Apology of the Augsburg Confession. The Smalcald Articles. The Repetition of the Augsburg Confession, which was delivered by the Elector of Saxony to the council at Trent. The Loci communes of Philip Melanchthon. The Examen theologicum of Philip Melanchthon. The Definitio appellationum of Philip Melanchthon. The Responsiones of Philip Melanchthon to the impious Bavarian articles. The Responsiones of Philip Melanchthon on the controversy of Stancarus. The Brandenburg church order. […] 1577–1588, added: and especially the Book of Concord.

From 1588 the oath itself names the creeds, the CA, the Apology, the SA, both catechisms and the FC of 1580, "wherein the books just recounted are comprehended" (Sehling 11, p. 107):

> Seit 1588: das heilige evangelium und wort Gottes alten und neuen testaments, der propheten und apostel schriften, den drei hauptsymbolis, der augspurgischen confession und derselben apologia, den schmalkaldischen articuln, kleinen und großen catechismo Lutheri, der anno 1580 zwischen den evangelischen chur- und fürsten augsburgischer konfession verglichenen und in druck verfertigten formula concordiae, darinnen jetzt erzählte bücher samt gründlicher erklärung der zwischen etlichen theologen augsburgischer confession vorgefallenenen streitigen artikel verfaßt und begriffen, auch ihrer fürstlichen gnaden vor der zeit publizierten kirchenordnung gemäß lauter und klar.

Since 1588: [that I shall preach] purely and clearly the holy gospel and word of God of the Old and New Testaments, agreeably to the writings of the prophets and apostles, the three chief creeds, the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof, the Smalcald Articles, Luther's Small and Large Catechism, the formula concordiae agreed upon in the year 1580 between the evangelical electors and princes of the Augsburg Confession and made ready in print, wherein the books just recounted are comprehended, together with a thorough explanation of the articles in controversy that arose between certain theologians of the Augsburg Confession, and also the church order published aforetime by his princely grace.

The Ansbach consistory order of 1594 made the BoC the subject of the candidate's first examination question. A man who had not read the whole book was given it to read, and examined only afterwards. Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, Konsistorialordnung, 1594 (Sehling 11, p. 388):

> sollen die verordneten unsers consistorii ihne zuvorderst befragen, ob er das buech der christlichen concordi, zwischen den christlichen churfürsten und stenden augspurgischer confession wie auch derselben theologen im 1580. jar > publiciert, darinnen unserer kirchen einhellig bekanntnus vermög Gottes wort als der ainigen regul, norma und richtschnur, nach welcher alle lehrer und lehren gerichtet werden sollen, verfaßt, gelesen, nemblich die augspurgische confession, anno 30 Carolo V.dem römischen keyser ubergeben, sambt derselben apologia, den dreien symbolis, schmalkaldischen articuln und catechismis Lutheri mit angehengter christlicher und gründlicher erklerung etlicher strittigen articuln und unser kirchenordnung als unser corpus doctrinae und ob er mit allen diesen erzehlten schriften, so wir fur die göttliche ungezweifelte warheit halten, in allen und jeden articuln durchaus ainig und solche fur christlich und Gottes wort in allweg gemees erkenne und halte. Im fall er aber solche schrieften zuvor nicht gelesen hette, soll ime das ganze buech alsobald zu lesen zugestellt und, do solches von ime beschehen, alsdann erst zum examen zugelassen werden.

the appointed [members] of our consistory shall first of all ask him whether he hath read the Book of Christian Concord, published in the year 1580 between the Christian electors and estates of the Augsburg Confession and their theologians, wherein the unanimous confession of our churches is set down according to God's word as the only rule, norm and line by which all teachers and doctrines are to be judged, namely the Augsburg Confession delivered in the year 30 to Charles V, the Roman emperor, together with the Apology thereof, the three creeds, the Smalcald Articles and Luther's catechisms, with the Christian and thorough explanation of certain articles in controversy annexed; and our church order, as our corpus doctrinae; and whether he is wholly at one with all these writings recounted, which we hold for the divine undoubted truth, in all and every article, and acknowledgeth and holdeth them for Christian and in every way agreeable to God's word. But in case he hath not read such writings before, the whole book shall be given him straightway to read, and when he hath done so, then first shall he be admitted to the examination.

The same order binds the consistorial assessors by oath to the FC (Sehling 11, p. 384).

17.14.2 Nürnberg and its neighbours: the 1573 norma doctrinae and the refusal of the FC

The Ansbach-Nürnberg norma doctrinae of 1573 has been given above. By Sehling's introduction, it had to be signed by all the clergy in both territories in 1573 (Sehling 11, p. 486). By the editors' note it was the confessional standard of Brandenburg-Ansbach and Nürnberg from 1573 to 1588, and of Nürnberg from 1573 "into the nineteenth century" (Sehling 11, p. 109). By Sehling's introductions:

- Refused the FC: Nürnberg (Sehling 11, p. 486), Weißenburg (p. 656) and Windsheim (p. 673).
- Split: at Wertheim the clergy refused, but the count signed for himself (p. 706).
- Signed: Rothenburg (p. 565). So did the Swabian cities of Kaufbeuren, Kempten, Lindau and Memmingen, and the clergy of Nördlingen and Oettingen (Sehling 12).

17.14.3 Regensburg: the CA "in its right sense" (1567), the BoC signed before the consistory (1572/1588)

The imperial city's church order of 1567 receives the CA "in its right, true sense, which the letter giveth it". It condemns by name the Anabaptists, Zwinglians, Schwenckfelders, Antinomians and Osiandrians. Every minister is to be asked at his admission whether he holds the CA in this sense. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung (of 1567?) (Sehling 13, p. 453):

> Und wie wir also annemen dieselbig confession in ihrem rechten, waren verstand, welchen ihr gibt der buchstabe, und apologia desselben 1530. jhars und hernach anno 1537 die artikel, zu Smalkalden gestelt und unterschrieben, auch allgemeiner christlicher consens unserer kirchen der augspurgischen confession und erklerung Lutheri, also verwerfen wir dagegen als irrig alles, was demselben verstand der augspurgischen confession zuwider ist, beide altes und neues, gegenwertiges und künftiges, als izt auch sind der widertaufer, zwingler, schwenckfelder, antinomer und osianderer etliche leren, bis solang wir eines andern aus heiliger schrift göttlichs worts überzeugt werden. Damit auch solche lere raine in unser kirchen bleibe und auf unsere nachkommen mit göttlicher verleihung möge gepflanzt werden, so ist versehen, das erstlich die kirchendiener alle darauf angenommen und austrücklichen gefragt werden, ob sie der reinen augspurgischen confession in ermeltem verstand und mit keiner andern widerwertigen lere behaft sind.

And as we thus receive the same confession in its right, true sense, which the letter giveth it, and the apology thereof of the year 1530, and afterward, in the year 1537, the articles set forth and subscribed at Smalcald, and also the general Christian consensus of our churches of the Augsburg Confession, and Luther's explanation; so on the other hand we reject as erroneous all that is contrary to that same sense of the Augsburg Confession, both old and new, present and to come, such as are now also certain doctrines of the Anabaptists, Zwinglians, Schwenckfelders, Antinomians and Osiandrians, until we be convinced otherwise out of the holy Scripture of God's word. And that such doctrine may remain pure in our church, and by divine grant be planted upon our descendants, it is provided that first of all the ministers of the church be all received thereupon, and be expressly asked whether they [hold] the pure Augsburg Confession in the said sense and are tainted with no other contrary doctrine.

The church government order of 1572, in its form of 1588, first records the confession of the chamberlain and council themselves (§17.17.5). It then requires every minister and schoolmaster, at the start of his appointment, to read the BoC, sign it "with his own hand" before the consistory, and declare himself on each disputed article before the council and the whole congregation. Regensburg, Kirchenregimentsordnung, 1572/1588 (Sehling 13, p. 495):

> soll ein jeder kirchen- und schuldiener gleich anfangs seiner bestallung ermelt buch der concordien, nachdem er solches mit fleiß gelesen, vor den consistorialen mit 'eigener hand underschreiben und allda in specie aller secten, rotten und strittigen articuln halben inhalts ermelts buchs der Concordien unterschidlich und lauter erklären, vor einem erbaren rat und ganzen christlichen gemain, auch dessen ein offentliche bekentnus und zeugnus von sich geben.

every minister of church and school shall, at the very beginning of his appointment, after he hath read the said Book of Concord with diligence, subscribe it with his own hand before the consistorials, and there declare himself severally and plainly in particular concerning all sects, factions and articles in controversy according to the content of the said Book of Concord; and before an honourable council and the whole Christian congregation he shall also give a public confession and testimony thereof.

The order adds a note particular to a mixed city: "since we must, alas, dwell in this city within one ring wall with the papists", polemic is to be kept within bounds.

17.15 Strasbourg and Alsace

Strasbourg, which had signed the Tetrapolitana in 1530 as a Moderate Reformed city, had subscribed the CA by 1532. Its path then ran in four steps:

1. 1549: the CA in the examination of ministers, an order issued under the Interim.
2. 1562: a public confession at admission according to the CA and the Apology, promised "stipulata manu".
3. 1563: the Strasbourg Concord.
4. 1577: the FC signed "corde et manu".

In 1598 the FC was put into the ordination vow. Colmar, by contrast, swore its preachers to the CA and Apology in 1575 and, now Moderate Reformed, refused to add the FC in 1578.

17.15.1 The CA in the examination (1549)

The eighth question of Strasbourg's examination order asks whether the candidate acknowledges the church of Strasbourg as a true church and the CA as "the sum of right Christian doctrine". Strasbourg, Examensordnung, 1549 (under the Interim; Sehling 20/1, p. 365):

> Der achte: Erkennet ir auch disse jetzige unsere kirche zu Straßburg für ain ware kirch Christi, unsers lieben herrn, und den inhalt unser Augspurgischen Confession für die summa recht Christlicher lehre?

The eighth: Do ye also acknowledge this present church of ours at Strasbourg for a true church of Christ our dear Lord, and the content of our Augsburg Confession for the sum of right Christian doctrine?

17.15.2 "Stipulata manu" (1562) and "corde et manu" (1577); the FC in the ordination vow (1598)

The order of service of 1577 tells the history in brief. In 1562 the council ordered that no one be admitted to the ministry who had not first made a public confession according to the CA and Apology, as newly approved at Naumburg. In 1577 the ministers agreed to admit no one who would not sign the FC "with heart and hand". Strasbourg, Gottesdienstordnung, [after August 1577] (Sehling 20/1, p. 512):

> Die formulam doctrinae belangend ist anno 1562 durch ettliche abgeordnete herren vom rath einem ehrwurdigen kirchen convent, pfarrern und helffern befohlen worden, hinfurter keinen in den kirchen convent auffzunemen oder in das Strasburgische ministerium einzulassen, der nit zuvor sein bekentnuß von allen artickeln christlicher religion, wie die in der Augspurgischen confession und der selbigen Apologia (welche dazumal von den chur- und fursten und andern stenden Augspurgischer confession zur Naumburg auffs newe war approbirt und underschriben worden), offentlich gethan hette, welchem decreto senatus dazumal alle kirchendiener nachzukomen stipulata manu zusagten und versprachen. Demnach, als anno 1577 die Formula concordiae einem ehrsamen rath zu Straßburgk durch des […] hertzogs von Wirtenbergk legaten ist zugestelt und einhendig gemacht worden und die kirchen diener von andern orten derselben abschrifft bekomen und sie mit vleiß durchlesen und erwogen, haben sie sich alle einmütiglich verglichen, nit allein derselben gleichformig sich zu verhalten, sondern auch hinfort keinen in den convent auffzunemen, er underschreybe dan auch beyde corde et manu solch formula concordiae,

As touching the formula doctrinae: in the year 1562 it was commanded by certain lords deputed from the council to a reverend church convent, pastors and helpers, henceforth to receive no one into the church convent nor admit him into the ministry of Strasbourg who had not first made public his confession of all the articles of the Christian religion, as they are in the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof (which had at that time been approved anew and subscribed at Naumburg by the electors and princes and other estates of the Augsburg Confession); which decree of the senate all the ministers of the church then promised and undertook stipulata manu [with hand given in pledge] to obey. Afterwards, when in the year 1577 the Formula concordiae was delivered and handed to an honourable council at Strasbourg by the legate of the […] duke of Württemberg, and the ministers of the church had received a copy of it from other places and had read and weighed it with diligence, they all agreed with one accord not only to behave themselves conformably thereto, but also henceforth to receive no one into the convent unless he also subscribe the said formula concordiae both corde et manu [with heart and hand].

The footnote records that the council was more reserved than its ministers. In May 1578 it told the duke that it would not be drawn into new controversies, and it appealed to the Strasbourg Concord of 1563. In 1565 the Strasbourg clergy had also used the Pfalz-Zweibrücken Latin subscription (§17.12.4).

The church order of 1598 put the FC into the ordination questions. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 9 April 1598 (Sehling 20/1, pp. 640–641):

> II. Glaubt ihr auch steiff alles, das uns die heilige Göttliche Schrifft fürgibt Und was in den Symbolis oder Summen unsers Christlichen Glaubens, als im gemeinen Symbolo Apostolorum, den vier großen haubt Concilien, Auch in der Confession und Apologia, von Chur- und Fürsten auf dem Reichstag zu Augspurg anno 1530 ubergeben, und derselben einhelliger in anno 1580 publicierten Erklärung, welche die Formula Concordiae genennet wirdt, begriffen und widerholet ist? Begehret ihr auch, diesen Glauben zubekennen und zulehren mit besten Trewen biß an ewer Ende? […] Antwort: Ich glaub und halt diß alles Und bitte Gott, das Er mich darinn ohn alles wancken biß in sein himmlischs Reich erhalten wolle.

II. Do ye also believe steadfastly all that the holy divine Scripture setteth before us, and that is comprehended and repeated in the creeds or sums of our Christian faith, namely in the common Creed of the Apostles, the four great chief councils, and also in the Confession and Apology delivered by electors and princes at the diet at Augsburg in the year 1530, and the unanimous explanation thereof published in the year 1580, which is called the Formula Concordiae? Desire ye also to confess and teach this faith with your best faithfulness unto your end? […] Answer: I believe and hold all this, and pray God that he will preserve me therein without any wavering unto his heavenly kingdom.

17.15.3 Colmar: an oath on the CA, and the refusal of the FC (1575, 1578)

Colmar introduced the Reformation in 1575. Its preachers swore, besides their citizen's oath, to preach "agreeably to the Biblical Scriptures, together with the Fathers who agree with them, the Augsburg Confession and its Apology". They also swore not to condemn publicly those "who are still at variance in certain points in the reformed church". Colmar, Eid der Prediger, 22 October 1575 (Sehling 20/2, p. 501):

> Es sollen die predicannten neben irem burger aydt schweren, das sy allein die byblische, hailige Altes unnd Newes Testamennts schrifften sampt den Patribus, so deren durchaus ubereinstymmen, der Augspurgischen confession und deren Apologi gemeß one schmahen, schennden unnd lestern Iheren [sic], predigen unnd die heiligen sacrament außteylen wellen. Item, das sy auch niemannden, der sey was religion der wolle, furnemblich die, so noch inn der reformierten kirchen ettlicher puncten streyttig, offennlich verdammen,

The preachers shall swear, beside their citizen's oath, that they will teach, preach and administer the holy sacraments only agreeably to the Biblical, holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, together with the Fathers who agree with them throughout, [and] to the Augsburg Confession and the Apology thereof, without reviling, defaming and blaspheming. Item, that they will also openly condemn no one, be he of what religion he will, and especially those who are still at variance in certain points in the reformed church.

The words "and the Apology thereof" are a later addition in the margin. When the FC was urged on the city in 1578, the council, by now Moderate Reformed, declined. It had already tendered its preachers an oath, and it would not press the FC on them against that oath. Colmar, Ablehnung des Beitritts zur Konkordienformel, 10 May 1578 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/2, p. 509):

> jedoch so will unnß auß vorangeregten unnd erzelten ursachen, binn unnserm ann e[wer] f[urstlich] g[naden] außgangenen schreiben vermeldet, hochbedencklich sein, Formulam concordie wider von unnß unsern predigern einmal deferierdt und prestierdt juramentum (dessen inhalt e[wer] f[urstlich] g[naden] wir hievor zugeschickt) zu tringen. Bitten e[wer] f[urstlich] g[naden] darauff underthenigs vleiß, e[wer] f[urstlich] g[naden] wollenn unnß dißfalß fur entschuldiget halten unnd mit der subscribtion gnediglichen yet for the causes aforesaid and recounted, set forth in our letter to your princely grace, it will seem to us a very grave matter to press the Formula concordiae [upon our preachers], against the oath once tendered by us to our preachers and performed by them (the content whereof we have sent to your princely grace before). We therefore beseech your princely grace with humble diligence that your princely grace will hold us excused herein, and graciously [spare us] the subscription.

The sworn oath is here the reason for refusing the further subscription.

17.16 Transylvania

The Saxon church of Transylvania, outside the Empire, bound its ministers by oath to the CA. The Burzenland chapter resolved in 1573 that newly received ministers should be taught the CA so thoroughly that they could "swear to it solemnly with a good conscience" at the next convention. Burzenland, Beschlüsse des Burzenländer Kapitels zum Eid auf die Confessio Augustana, 1573 (Sehling 24, p. 371):

> 5. Pastores, qui recens ad ministerium receperunt ministros, lectionem et cognitionem [Augustanae] [Confessionis] ita inculcent eis, ut in proximo conventu exemplo pastorum bona conscientia solenniter in eam iurare possint.

5. Let the pastors who have lately received ministers into the ministry so inculcate upon them the reading and knowledge of the [Augsburg] [Confession], that at the next convention, after the example of the pastors, they may with a good conscience solemnly swear to it.

In 1601 the newly elected superintendent swore before the altar to keep and defend the religion "contained in the CA … the Smalcald Articles and the ecumenical creeds". Transylvanian Saxons, Ordnung der Superintendentenwahl, 1601 (Sehling 24, p. 480):

> Electus superintendens coram altari aperte, praeeunte voce sua domino Laurentio Kosch pastori Requiniensi iuramentum praestitit, se hactenus usitatam in ecclesiis Saxonicis Transsylvaniae religionem, in scriptis propheticis et apostolicis comprehensam, in confessione Augustana Carolo V. exhibitam et repetitam, articulis denique Schmalcaldicis et symbolis oecumenicis contentam constanter conservaturum ac defensurum.

The superintendent elect, before the altar, openly, Master Laurentius Kosch, pastor Requiniensis, going before with his voice, performed the oath that he would constantly keep and defend the religion hitherto used in the Saxon churches of Transylvania, comprehended in the prophetic and apostolic writings, exhibited and repeated in the Augsburg Confession to Charles V, and contained finally in the Smalcald Articles and the ecumenical creeds.

The FC is not named. The norm is the CA, the SA and the creeds, sworn to as the received religion of a church that lived alongside Catholics, Reformed and Unitarians.

17.17 The laity: confirmation, communion, godparents, citizenship and office

No order in the corpus requires ordinary lay people to subscribe the CA, the FC or any corpus doctrinae. Where an order speaks of "teachers and hearers" being bound to the corpus, as at Thorn (1575, §17.7.3) and in Hohenlohe (1578, §17.13.3), it means the corpus is the standard of what the hearers are taught. It does not mean they are to sign it. The laity were bound in five other ways:

1. by confirmation, where a confirmation rite existed: a public profession of the catechism, a vow to remain in it, and, in the Hessian (Moderate Reformed) and Reformed forms, a submission to church discipline;
2. by the examination before communion, and in Reformed churches by an explicit confession of the Reformed doctrine;
3. by the catechism test before marriage, and in one case before admission as a burgher;
4. by rules for godparents;
5. for magistrates and officials, by oaths and, in some cities, by subscription.

17.17.1 Confirmation: profession, vow and discipline

The Hessian church orders of 1539 (Moderate Reformed), written with Bucer's help, created the evangelical confirmation. The children are questioned on the chief articles before the congregation and "give themselves publicly to Christ the Lord and his church". The pastor lays hands on them and "confirms them to Christian fellowship". Hesse, Ziegenhainer Zuchtordnung, 1539 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 104):

> Es sollen auch die eltesten und prediger versehen, daß die kinder, so nun durch die catechismos im christlichen verstande so weit bracht sein, daß man sie billich solle zum tisch des Herren zulassen, uf ein fürnemes fest, als Ostern, Pfingsten und Weihnachten, für aller gemein dem pfarherr an darzu verordnetem ort von ihren eltern und pettern dargestellet werden, umb den die eltesten und alle ander diener des worts stehen sollen. Da solle der pfarherr dieselbigen kinder die fürnemsten stücke des christlichen glaubens befragen, und nachdem die kinder darauf geantwort, sich auch da offentlich Christo dem Herren und seiner kirchen ergeben haben, soll der pfarherr die gemein vermanen, den Herrn diesen kindern umb bestendigkeit und merung des h. Geistes zu bitten und solches gebet mit einer collect beschließen. Dem allem nach soll dann der pfarherr denselbigen kindern die hende auflegen und sie also im namen des Herrn confirmieren und zu christlicher gemeinschaft bestetigen, auch darauf zum tisch des Herren gehen heißen,

The elders and preachers shall also provide that the children who have now been brought so far in Christian understanding by the catechisms that they may rightly be admitted to the Lord's table, be presented on some chief feast, as Easter, Whitsuntide and Christmas, before the whole congregation, by their parents and godparents, to the pastor at a place appointed for it, about whom the elders and all other ministers of the word shall stand. There the pastor shall question the same children on the chief parts of the Christian faith; and after the children have answered thereto, and have also there given themselves publicly to Christ the Lord and his church, the pastor shall exhort the congregation to pray the Lord for these children for steadfastness and the increase of the Holy Ghost, and shall close such prayer with a collect. After all this the pastor shall lay hands on the same children, and so confirm them in the name of the Lord and establish them in Christian fellowship, and thereupon bid them go to the Lord's table,

The Kassel church order of the same year (Moderate Reformed) gives the questions. The child professes that he is in the church by baptism and vows to remain in its fellowship. He also promises to obey God's word and to accept rebuke from the elders. The running head of the page is misprinted "1589". Hesse, Kasseler Kirchenordnung, 1539 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 125):

> Frag: Bistu auch in der kirch und gemein Christi ? Antwort: Ja - Frag: Wie bistu darein kommen? Antwort: Durch den heiligen tauf. — Frag: Was ist der? Antwort: Das bad der widergeburt, dadurch ich von der angebornen sund gewaschen, Christo meinem Herren eingeleibet und mit ihm bekleidet worden bin. — Frag: Wiltu in der gemeinschaft erharren ? Antwort: Ja, durch die hülf des Herren in ewigkeit. — Frag: Was vermag diese gemeinschaft der kirchen Christi ? Antwort: Daß ich mich in aller gehorsam halt göttlichs worts, dasselbig von den verordeneten dienern der kirchen zun gesetzten zeiten und vornemlich uf die sontag mit recht gleubigem herzen höre, auch so mich die eltesten der kirchen oder auch andere christen, welche ja die seien, der sunde straffen, daß ich das in aller demut zur besserung aufnehm,

Question: Art thou also in the church and congregation of Christ? Answer: Yea. Question: How camest thou thereinto? Answer: Through holy baptism. Question: What is that? Answer: The washing of regeneration, whereby I have been washed from inborn sin, incorporated into Christ my Lord, and clothed with him. Question: Wilt thou continue in the fellowship? Answer: Yea, by the help of the Lord, for ever. Question: What requireth this fellowship of the church of Christ? Answer: That I keep myself in all obedience to God's word, and hear the same with a rightly believing heart from the appointed ministers of the church at the set times, and chiefly on the Sundays; and also, if the elders of the church or other Christians, whosoever they be, rebuke me for sin, that I receive it in all humility for amendment,

This is a vow of membership, not of confession. The child binds himself to the church's fellowship and discipline, and no book is named. Strasbourg's church order of 1553 introduced the same rite, "after confession made and free surrender to the discipline and obedience of the church". Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung von Johannes Marbach, 1553 (Sehling 20/1, p. 396):

> Solche christliche und gantz notwendige ceremoni in der kirchen wider anzurichten, die getaufften kinder, nach dem sie jetz den catechismum erlernett, offentlich der kirchen furzustellen und die nach gethoner bekantnuß und freywilligem ergeben in die zucht und gehorsame der kirchen mit hennd aufflegung unnd dem gleubigen gebett dem herren, unserm Gott, und seiner lieben gemeind zubefelhenn,

To set up again in the church this Christian and altogether needful ceremony: to present publicly to the church the baptized children, after they have now learned the catechism, and, after confession made and free surrender into the discipline and obedience of the church, to commend them to the Lord our God and to his dear congregation with the laying on of hands and believing prayer,

The Reformed refugee church order of Marten Micron (Reformed), used in East Frisia, has three questions. They ask for answers on the chief parts of the catechism, for a vow to remain in "this confession of faith" and renounce the world and Satan, and for a vow to submit to Christian discipline. East Frisia (Reformed), Microns Ordinancien (1554), 1565 (Sehling 7/1, p. 607):

> Zum ersten, daß sie auf die sonderlichste haupstücken der christlichen religion (von welchen sie nach der ordnung des kleinen catechismi gefraget werden), ein jeder besonder, aufs kürzest antwort geben. Zum andern, ob sie auch durch die gnade Gottes in diser bekentnuß des glaubens bestendig bleiben, darnach ihr leben richten und die welt und dem satan mit allem ihrem pracht verleugnen wollen ? Antwort: Ja, wir. Zum dritten, ob sie nicht auch sich der christlichen straffe (nach dem wort Gottes) willigklich unterwerfen wollen ? Antwort: Ja, wir.

First, that they give answer, each one severally and most briefly, upon the most special chief parts of the Christian religion (whereupon they are asked after the order of the small catechism). Secondly, whether they will also by the grace of God abide steadfast in this confession of faith, order their life thereafter, and renounce the world and Satan with all their pomp? Answer: Yea, we [will]. Thirdly, whether they will not also willingly submit themselves to Christian correction (according to the word of God)? Answer: Yea, we [will].

Electoral Saxony's order of 1580 has no laying on of hands. It teaches that the catechism examination is itself the "right Christian confirmation": the confirming of the faith that the godparents confessed at baptism in the child's stead. Electoral Saxony, Kirchenordnung of Elector August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 425):

> Und sollen die pfarrer und kirchendiener das volk fleissig unterweisen, und. mit gutem grund berichten, das dis sei die rechte christliche confirmation oder firmung, das ist die bestetigung des glaubens, so die paten an stadt des neugetauften kindleins bekant, darauf auch das kind getauft worden, wann sie nemlich solches in diesem examine erinnert, und demselben in ihrem ganzen leben nachzukommen, fleissig ermanet werden.

And the pastors and ministers of the church shall diligently instruct the people, and inform them with good ground, that this is the right Christian confirmation or firming, that is, the confirming of the faith which the godparents confessed in the stead of the newly baptized child, and whereupon also the child was baptized: namely when they are reminded of the same in this examination, and are diligently exhorted to follow it all their life long.

The confirmation rites themselves are treated in Chapter 13, §13.6, and the instruction before first communion and confirmation in Chapter 15, §§15.11.2–15.11.3.

17.17.2 Admission to communion

The Lutheran orders required every communicant to be "explored", that is, examined and absolved, beforehand. Schweinfurt grounds this rule in the CA and the Apology themselves. Schweinfurt, Kirchenordnung, 1543 (Sehling 11, p. 640):

> soll niemand zum hochwirdigen sacrament gelassen werden, er habe sich denn des abents zuvor oder des morgens unter oder nach der mettin dem caplan angezeigt in aller mas, wie davon die unseren in der augspurgischen confession > mit klaren, hellen, dürren worten eraus sagen und bekennen, nemlich in dem artikel von der messe: Nulli admittuntur nisi antea explorati, und in der apologia: Porrigitur sacramentum, his qui uti volunt, postquam sunt explorati atque absoluti.

no one shall be admitted to the most worthy sacrament unless he have announced himself to the chaplain the evening before, or in the morning during or after matins, in every manner as our [divines] say out and confess concerning it in the Augsburg Confession with clear, bright, plain words, namely in the article of the Mass: None are admitted unless they have first been examined; and in the Apology: The sacrament is given to those who will use it, after they have been examined and absolved.

Pfalz-Neuburg's general articles of 1576 apply the same rule to the young. They add a catechism test before marriage. Pfalz-Neuburg, Generalartikel, 1576 (Sehling 13, p. 176):

> 2. Es sollen auch die pfarrer und kirchendiener under dem jungen volk niemand zum hochwürdigen sacrament zulassen, der nicht sein catechismum gelernet und aus demselben seines glaubens notturftige rechenschaft geben kan. 3. Da si auch in den ehestand sich begeben, dieselbige beede, so lang nicht verkundiget oder eingesegnet werden sollen, bis si die sex haubtstuk christlicher lehr wol gelernet haben.

2. The pastors and ministers of the church shall also admit no one among the young people to the most worthy sacrament who hath not learned his catechism and cannot give a sufficient account of his faith out of the same. 3. When they also enter into the state of marriage, the two shall not be proclaimed nor blessed until they have well learned the six chief parts of Christian doctrine.

The Württemberg visitation order of 1557 deals with those who stay away from the Supper "on account of Zwinglian, Schwenckfeldian, Anabaptist or other sects". They are not refused a confession they never offered. They are visited privately, twice, and then a third time before two or three of the discipline-men. Württemberg, Visitationsordnung, 1557 (Sehling 16, p. 331):

> oder da ainer sich der Zwinglischen, Schwenckhfeldischer, widerteufferischenn oder annderer secten halber des nachtmals Christi enteussern wöltte, so soll ain jeder Khirchendiener schuldig sein, dieselbige Person zum ersten unnd andern malen allain für sich zubeschikkhen unnd allso sie privatim mit allen gutten, christenlichen Leeren und ermanungen beschaidenlich berichtenn.

or if anyone would withdraw himself from the Supper of Christ on account of Zwinglian, Schwenckfeldian, Anabaptist or other sects, every minister of the church shall be bound to send for the same person alone, the first and the second time, and so instruct him privately and discreetly with all good Christian teachings and exhortations.

The Reformed orders went further. Nassau-Dillenburg (1582), once it had turned Reformed, admitted to the Supper only those who had made a confession of "the Reformed doctrine". This applied to strangers as well. Nassau-Dillenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1582 (Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 163):

> 43. Nemo ad coenam Domini admittatur, nisi qui confessionem doctrinae reformatae pro more ecclesiae ediderit et habeat testimonium honestae vitae, sine quibus non admittendi sunt etiam exteri.

43. Let no one be admitted to the Lord's Supper unless he have made a confession of the Reformed doctrine after the custom of the church, and have the testimony of an honest life; without which not even strangers are to be admitted.

This is the nearest thing in the corpus to a lay confessional test, and it is Reformed.

The examination of communicants in place of private confession is treated in Chapter 13, §13.17.4, and confession and communion as a duty of the laity in Chapter 15, §15.8.3.

17.17.3 Marriage and citizenship

A test of catechism knowledge could be a condition of civil standing. In the Reformed Kurpfalz in 1599 couples who could not recite the chief parts were not to be married. No such "ignorant" was to be received as a burgher or member of the commune without a written certificate from his pastor. Kurpfalz, Mandat zum Katechismusunterricht, 1 February 1599 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, p. 890):

> keine neue eheleute, welche die capita nicht erzehlen können, proclamiren oder einsegnen, wie dan zue diesem ende auch unser gnedigster herr den hiervorigen befelch an die amptleute renoviren lassen, das solcher ignoranten keiner zum bürger oder gemeinßman angenommen werden solle, er habe dan von dem pfarrer des orts (alda er sich gedencke niderzulassen) ein schriftlich urkund und zeugnuß ufzulegen, das er dieselbe zum wenigsten erzelen könne.

[ye shall] proclaim or bless no new married couple that cannot recite the chief parts; as to this end also our most gracious lord hath caused the former command to the officials to be renewed, that none of such ignorant persons shall be received as a burgher or member of the commune, unless he have a written certificate and testimony to show from the pastor of the place (where he purposeth to settle) that he can at the least recite them.

Earlier, the Margraviate of Baden's mandate against the Anabaptists (1543) had made a negative test a condition of settlement. One version, C in the apparatus, adds a clause: no one is to be received as burgher or Hintersasse unless it was first certain that he did not belong to the sect, with a sealed certificate of his former conduct. Baden, Wiedertäufermandat, 1543, version C (Sehling 16, p. 515):

> Es sollen auch hinfür die ambtleut kheinen zu [bu]rger [Text zerstört] oder hindersäßen aufnhemen oder gedülden, man seie denn zuvor vergwist, das er diser verfürischen Sect nit anhengig, sich auch zuvorn an verdechtlichten orten nit gehalten, und er beneben seinem Manrecht [war]haffte unnd versigelte urkhund seines hievorigen verhaltens und wesens khonne auflegen.

The officials also shall henceforth receive or suffer no one as burgher [text destroyed] or as Hintersasse, unless it be first made certain that he is not an adherent of this seducing sect, nor hath kept himself before in suspected places, and that he can show, beside his certificate of free birth, a true and sealed certificate of his former conduct and life.

The catechism examination before marriage is treated in Chapter 15, §15.11.4.

17.17.4 Godparents

The godparent was the one lay office in the Church's rites, and the orders differ on whether he must share the parish's confession.

Excluded. The Limpurg visitors (1611) were to ask whether the pastor "admits ignorant children and heterodox persons to be godparents". Limpurg, Visitationsordnung, 1611 (Sehling 16, p. 629):

> 23. Ob er auch unverständige kinder undt Heterodoxos zue Gevatterschafften admittire.

23. Whether he also admit children without understanding and heterodox persons to be godparents.

Examined first. The synod of Wied (1564, Reformed) barred "men of another religion, who detest our evangelical doctrine", unless they had first been examined by the ministers and given an account of their faith. Wied, Synodalbeschlüsse, 5 June 1564 (Reformed; Sehling 19/1, p. 466):

> 6. Ne pueri pro susceptoribus infantium in S. baptismatis administratione admittantur neve etiam alienae religionis homines, qui nostram doctrinam Evangelicam detestantur, nisi prius a ministris Ecclesiae examinati suae fidei rationem reddiderint.

6. That boys be not admitted as sponsors of infants in the administration of holy baptism, nor yet men of another religion who detest our evangelical doctrine, unless they have first been examined by the ministers of the church and have given an account of their faith.

Admitted with discretion. Nassau-Weilburg (1609) told its pastors that people who did not hold the unaltered CA in every point were not to be driven from the font, unless they were open blasphemers. The reason given is that the institution of godparents is "not an express command of God". Nassau-Weilburg, Erläuterungspunkte zur Kirchenordnung, 1609 (Sehling 10, p. 329):

> Nachdem es sich bißweilen begibet, das personen, so noch zur zeit der papisten aberglauben in vielen stucken zugethan oder sonsten sich nicht in allen puncten der reinen evangelischen lehr vermog der ungeenderten, in anno 30 ubergebenen Au[g]spurgischen Confession richtig finden konnen, zu gevattern gebetten werden, sollen die > kirchendiender, weyl ohnedas die verordnung der gevattern nicht eben ein ausgetruckter befelch Gottes, sondern uß guten, erheblichen ursachen von menschen verordnet, in solchem fall vernunfftig und fursichtig handeln und nicht balt jemant, der nicht ein offentlicher lesterer Gottes, seines h. worts und der hochwurdigen sacramenten, von der h. tauf allerdings abtreiben und abhalten, Forasmuch as it sometimes happeneth that persons who are still addicted in many things to the superstition of the papists, or otherwise cannot find themselves right in all points of the pure evangelical doctrine according to the unaltered Augsburg Confession delivered in the year 30, are asked to be godparents: the ministers of the church shall in such case deal reasonably and prudently (since the ordinance of godparents is not an express command of God, but was ordained by men for good and weighty reasons), and not hastily drive away and keep altogether from holy baptism anyone who is not an open blasphemer of God, of his holy word and of the most worthy sacraments.

Both religions admitted. In biconfessional Soest the council confirmed in 1583 that, for the sake of peace, godparents of both religions, Roman and Augsburg, had been freely admitted, and it left the practice unchanged. Soest, Anweisung zu den Taufpaten, 8 June 1583 (Sehling 22, p. 478):

> Nachdem biß anhero zu erhaltungh guttenn freidtstandtz unnd einigkeitt zwischenn beider religion, so woll der romischenn kirchenn alß dero Augßpurgischer unverfelscheter Confession, anno drißigh kay[serlicher] ma[jes]t[ä]tn ubergebenn, verwandtenn stenden das sacrament der hilger tauff einer mitt dem anderen zu haltenn, zubestehenn unnd zubekleidenn ohn underscheidt frey unnd zugelaßenn wordenn,

Forasmuch as hitherto, for the preserving of good peace and unity between the estates related to both religions, as well the Roman church as the unfalsified Augsburg Confession delivered in the year thirty to the imperial majesty, it hath been free and permitted without distinction for the one to hold, to stand at and to attend the sacrament of holy baptism with the other,

Godparents at baptism are treated in Chapter 13, §13.3.8. The wider dispute over papist and Calvinist godparents is set out in §18.4.3.

17.17.5 Magistrates and officials

Lay office-holders were bound more strictly than the common people:

- Councils. The Heilbronn council swore in 1530, soon after the Diet of Augsburg, to stand by the council's majority "whether in the matter of the gospel or otherwise". The accompanying council ordinance says that the whole citizenry had been asked its mind and found willing.
- The council as confessor. The council of Regensburg made its own confession to the creeds, the CA, the Apology, the SA and Luther's catechism (1572).
- Assessors. Consistorial assessors swore to the church's confession in Ernestine Saxony (1569, §17.6.1), Prussia (1584, §17.7.2) and Ansbach (1594, §17.14.1).
- City officials. At Hildesheim in 1593 the burgomasters, syndics, physicians and secretaries signed the FC and its Apology "with their own hand" (§17.10.1).
- Elders. The Reformed Kurpfalz had its elders vow to the presbytery order (about 1601).

Heilbronn, Eid des Heilbronner Rates auf den neuen Glauben, 18 November 1530 (Sehling 17/1, p. 290):

> Es solle ein yeder globen und schwern, was gemaine stat und ein ersamen radt, es sey von des ewangeliums oder in ander weg, angee und anlange, bey einem ersamen radt und desselben mers sten und bleiben, leib und gut dar strecken wolle und nach seinem besten vermogen zu nutz gemainer stat handeln.

Every one shall vow and swear that, in whatsoever concerneth and toucheth the common city and an honourable council, be it of the gospel or in other ways, he will stand and abide by an honourable council and the majority thereof, and will stake body and goods [thereon], and will act to the profit of the common city according to his best ability.

Regensburg, Kirchenregimentsordnung, 1572/1588 (Sehling 13, p. 494):

> Nachmals bekennen sich auch ein erbar cammerer und rate zu den dreien symbolis oder glaubensbekantnussen: nemlich der aposteln, nicenischen und Athanasii, item zu der rainen, unverfelschten augspurgischen confession, wie die keiser Caroln dem fünften auf gehaltenem reichstag zu Augspurg, der wenigern zahl im dreißigsten, überraicht, zu der darüber > gestellten apologia, den schmalkaldischen articuln und catechismo des teuren manns Gottes Martini Lutheri, als solchen schriften und bekentnussen, die aus grund Gottes wort gezogen, mit den schriften altes und neues testaments gleichförmig und überainstimmen, inmaßen alle christliche churfürsten und stände augspurgischer confession in rechtem, aigentlichen verstand derselben zugetan, sich sambt ihren kirchen- und schuldienern einhellig und christlich mit herzen, hand und mund bekent und dieselbige underschrieben haben.

Afterwards an honourable chamberlain and council also confess themselves to the three creeds or confessions of faith, namely the Apostles', the Nicene and Athanasius's; item to the pure, unfalsified Augsburg Confession, as it was delivered to the emperor Charles the Fifth at the diet held at Augsburg in the lesser number [of years] in the thirtieth; to the Apology set forth thereupon; to the Smalcald Articles and the catechism of the dear man of God, Martin Luther; as such writings and confessions as are drawn from the ground of God's word, and agree and accord with the writings of the Old and New Testament; even as all Christian electors and estates of the Augsburg Confession, attached to the same in its right and proper sense, together with their ministers of church and school, have confessed it with one accord and Christianly with heart, hand and mouth, and have subscribed the same.

Kurpfalz, Presbyterordnung, about 1601 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 598). The inspectors are to have the newly chosen elders vow to the published order, which they must first have read or heard read, and so confirm them:

> auch uf diese unsere publicirte ordnung (die sie zuevor entweder gelesen oder lesen gehört sollen haben) angeloben laßen und sie also confirmirn und mit pflichten annehmen sollt.

and ye shall cause them to vow upon this our published ordinance (which they shall before have either read or heard read), and so confirm them and receive them under duty.

The oaths of homage and the prayer for the magistrate are treated in Chapter 13, §13.13, and the magistrate's church duties in Chapter 15, §15.10.

Chapter 18. Church Fellowship Between the Traditions

This chapter covers the rules of church fellowship between the confessional traditions in the evangelical church orders of the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries, as printed in Emil Sehling's Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts. It asks six questions, and three that follow from them:

- Who could pray with whom, and for whom?
- Who could commune with whom? Who was admitted to the Supper, and where might a Lutheran receive it?
- Who could baptize whom? Whose baptism was valid, whose children were baptized, and who could stand as godparent?
- Who could absolve whom?
- Who could ordain whom, and whose orders were accepted?
- Who could preach where?
- How were those of another religion buried, and what became of a marriage between spouses of unequal religion?
- What did the orders say about going out to the worship of another confession?
- What agreements did the traditions make with one another?

The other confessions the orders deal with are the Roman Catholics (in the orders' word, "papists"), the Zwinglians and Calvinists (often "Sacramentarians"), the Anabaptists, Schwenckfelders and other "sects", and, in Poland and Prussia, the Bohemian Brethren. The rules also changed with time and differed from territory to territory. Where an order is not Lutheran, its tradition is named, as everywhere in the book.

The findings are summarised in §18.1, and the method is described in §18.2. §18.3 sets out the language of fellowship. §§18.4–18.10 take the acts one by one: baptism, the Supper, absolution, ordination, preaching, prayer, burial and marriage. §18.11 covers the agreements between traditions, and §18.12 how the rules changed. §18.13 is a table by order, and §18.14 a concordance of the orders quoted.

18.1 Summary of findings

18.1.1 The main findings

1. No order sets out a doctrine of church fellowship as such. The rules are given act by act, under baptism, godparents, the Supper, confession, ordination, the pulpit and burial. Where the orders speak in general terms, they speak of "having fellowship" (gemeinschaft haben) with heretics and sects, and they forbid it:

- Kurland in 1570 forbade fellowship with papists, Jesuits, Calvinists, Sacramentarians, Anabaptists and others, and forbade inviting them to stand as godparents, to feasts or to christenings (§18.3).
- Hohenlohe in 1579 forbade its ministers to have fellowship with Jews and with obstinate papist priests.
- Pfalz-Zweibrücken in 1564 forbade fellowship and the exchange of letters with any "Sacramentarian fanatic".
- The visitors of Württemberg and of the many orders that copied its visitation order asked who "harboured, lodged or had fellowship with" Anabaptists, Schwenckfelders and Sacramentarians.

The warrant is 2 John 10–11 and Titus 3:10: not to receive such a man into the house, nor greet him.

2. Baptism crossed every line, and no order rebaptizes.

- Baptism given in the papacy is "a right and complete baptism", because it rests on Christ's word and not on the priest (Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel 1569, Oldenburg 1573).
- The baptism of a midwife stands, "though the Calvinists reject" it (Wolfstein 1574).

- Honterus's Transylvanian order of 1543 adds the baptism of laymen, of heathen and of heretics in the faith of the Trinity, and forbids the rebaptism of the Orthodox Romanians.

The limits lay elsewhere (§18.4.2):

- Thorn refused baptism to papists who sought it only for rich Lutheran godparents and then had the child anointed by their own priests, unless they would use the Lutheran ministry in everything.
- The Transylvanian synod of Mediasch (1578) sent the children of Gypsies and Romanians back to their own congregations, "since they are not of our religion".

3. Godparents were the most disputed point (§18.4.3). The orders give three answers.

- Exclude papists, Calvinists and all of another religion: Ernestine Saxony 1542, Magdeburg 1554, the Bremen preachers in 1561, Regensburg 1567, Kurland 1570, Soest 1590, and the Wild- and Rhinegraviate 1597 and 1603. At Landau in 1582 the pastor refused a Calvinist godmother. Bremen's reasons were that papists "cannot pray" and that admitting one is a false witness that he is a member of the church.
- Admit with discretion, because godparenthood is a human ordinance and a papist who stands at a Lutheran font "acknowledgeth our holy baptism to be Christian and right". This was the rule of Hesse 1556 (Moderate Reformed), of Electoral Saxony 1580 and the orders that copied it, of Pfalz-Neuburg 1576, and of the Schwäbisch Hall draft of 1614.
- Both religions freely admitted: Soest 1583 (§17.17.4).

On the reverse question the orders agree: no Lutheran is to stand at a papist baptism, since that confirms its "sorcerous ceremonies" (Electoral Saxony 1580, Pfalz-Neuburg 1576). At Strasbourg in 1601 the magistrate declined to bar Calvinists from the font.

4. The Supper was closed to those of another confession (§18.5.1).

- Reutlingen (c. 1531) bars papists and those who deny the presence of Christ's body and blood.
- Waldeck 1556 bars those of papist, Anabaptist and Sacramentarian doctrine until they revoke it.
- Prussia 1568 refuses absolution and the sacrament to those who defend the errors of the papists, Sacramentarians and Anabaptists.

Strangers were heard on their faith before the seniors (Hesse 1574 and its copies). To commune with a church was to belong to it: "whatever man communicateth … with the Lutherans, Zwinglians, papists, Anabaptists etc., he is reckoned for one of them" (Wild- and Rhinegraviate 1597).

5. Yet the Lutherans gave the sacrament across the papal line (§18.5.3).

- From 1528 the Brandenburg-Nürnberg orders ministered to people from Catholic parishes whose pastors refused them the sacraments "against the word of God". So did Prussia 1568, Wolfstein 1574 and Schwäbisch Hall, by a chapter decree of 1564 repeated in 1570 and 1615.
- Pfalz-Neuburg in 1576 let its pastors give the Supper to sick Calvinists who attended Lutheran sermons, "if the lordship can suffer it".

6. Going out to another church (Auslaufen) was forbidden on all sides, and practised on all sides (§18.5.4).

- Evangelical bans: Strasbourg forbade going out to hear Mass in 1531, and sermons and sacraments in "foreign lordships" in 1597, this time against the Reformed. Frankfurt in 1542 forbade running to Masses in the villages. Leiningen in 1566 forbade the Supper or baptism outside one's own parish.
- Reformed bans: Nassau-Diez (1585) had foreign pastors who gave the Supper arrested. Kurpfalz (1595) fought its people's running to the neighbouring "Lutheran and Ubiquitist" pastors. Hanau (1599/1602), Ysenburg (1598), Homburg (1605) and Sayn (1606, 1619) issued bans of their own.
- A Catholic council: Colmar tried in 1554 to stop its burghers from going to services in Lutheran Horburg.

In practice the bans did not hold. In 1606 the Lutheran pastor of Lambrechtsneukirchen had 1,765 communicants, of whom 694 came from the Reformed Upper Palatinate. Sehling's editor reports that when the Lutheran Elector of the Palatinate forbade his Calvinists in 1578 to go to the Reformed Supper, Beza and Ursinus approved their receiving it at Lutheran altars.

7. Absolution came only from a called minister, and normally from one's own (§18.6).

- Not from monks or priests. Bugenhagen's Hamburg order of 1529 gave confession to those who preach. The Upper German catechisms called the priests' absolution "a deceit" (Capito's Strasbourg catechism, Sam's Ulm catechism).
- Not for defenders of error. Prussia 1568 refused it to them.
- From one's own pastor. Prussia 1568 and Soest 1590 tied confession to the parish. Lippe 1571 complained of excommunicates who went to another parish and "stole" the absolution there.
- Within one city, from any minister. Regensburg 1572 let people choose their confessor from the whole ministry, "since they all have one office and equal power".

8. Orders received from the Roman bishops were accepted (§18.7).

- The Wittenberg Reformation of 1545 would have taken ordination from bishops who accepted right doctrine (§13.10.1).
- The orders ordain those "not ordained" (Hoya 1581), and do not ordain again one ordained elsewhere (Brunswick 1571, Strasbourg 1598).
- Hannover in 1536 insisted that its preachers had been ordained in the very church that cast them out.
- Buxtehude in 1552 and Hamburg in 1556 gave up the bishops' consecration as given "only for the godless service", and ordained with prayer and the laying on of hands.

There are two exceptions on the Lutheran side and one on the Catholic:

- Pfalz-Neuburg 1576 re-ordained priests coming from the papacy "in the stead of a recantation".
- Magdeburg 1554 would not hold for Christians those who took orders or prebends from papists.
- The Count Palatine made Amberg dismiss a preacher in 1539, because he had been ordained by Luther and not by a bishop.

9. No one preached without a call, and no stranger entered a pulpit without the superintendent or the ministry (§18.8).

- Hedge preachers were forbidden everywhere.
- Disputes: Wolfstein forbade its pastors to dispute with foreign Calvinist or papist pastors.
- Mixed cities and territories bound their preachers not to revile the other religion: the Augsburg preacher's oath of 1591, the Upper Palatinate's mandatum de non calumniando of 1598, and the Reformed Kurpfalz mandate against condemnations of 1584.

10. Prayer (§18.9).

- No joint worship with another confession is provided for anywhere outside Poland. But at Wimpfen in 1568 the hearers of each religion might attend the other's sermon in silence. And Pfalz-Neuburg in 1576 let its people go with a Catholic wedding party as far as the church door.
- For and against. The orders pray for heretics and the erring (Heilbronn 1530, Ulm 1531, the Ansbach Auctuarium of 1548), and against them (Regensburg 1567, Kurland 1570, Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1565).
- Could papists pray? The Bremen preachers held that a papist's prayer is "nothing but sin and curse". The Hessian visitors of 1556 held that papists "confess one faith with us, and are separated from us only in certain abuses".

11. Burial and marriage (§18.10).

- Burial. Obstinate papists and heretics were refused the churchyard (Magdeburg 1554, Hoya 1581, Mansfeld 1580). Magdeburg pointed out that the papists refused it to "us evangelicals".
- Marriage. A marriage was not to be broken because one spouse was of "unequal religion" (Lauenburg 1585, after 1 Corinthians 7).

12. Agreements were made between traditions (§18.11).

- The Wittenberg Concord (1536) joined the Saxon and Upper German churches. The Reformed Kurpfalz of 1584 recalled that its makers "acknowledged one another as brothers".
- Prussia, 1549. Duke Albrecht admitted the Bohemian Brethren after examining their confession, judging their ceremonies indifferent.
- Sandomierz, 1570. The Consensus of Sandomierz and the Posen articles let Lutheran, Reformed and Brethren ministers preach and give the sacraments in each other's churches. The synods renewed this until 1595.

- Rappoltstein, 1561. The Lutheran congregation demanded that the Reformed French congregation sign the Augsburg Confession, take its ceremonies and own it as "the head". Their lord let each keep its own.

18.2.2 Cautions

- Lists are not rules. Many orders list papists, Zwinglians, Anabaptists and others in a condemnation, a visitation question or a list of forbidden books. These show who the church held to be outside it, but they are not rules of fellowship. They are cited only where the order draws a consequence for one of the acts.
- "Fellowship" is the orders' own word. The orders use gemeinschaft in two senses: the Christian fellowship of the church, and dealings with heretics. Neither is the modern technical term "church fellowship". The chapter keeps their words.
- Editors' introductions. Several statements are found only in Sehling's introductions and footnotes, which summarise archival sources. These include the Prussian reception of the Bohemian Brethren, the Reformed theologians' opinion on communing at Lutheran altars, and the communicant figures at Lambrechtsneukirchen. They are marked as the editors' accounts.
- Record headings. As elsewhere, a database record may hold several orders. So document 1844 is headed with Danzig's order of 1557, but its p. 230 is the Thorn order of after 1560. Each order is named here from Sehling's running head and the inventory of Chapter 1.
- Traditions. The Upper Palatinate, Nassau-Dillenburg and Diez, Hanau, Ysenburg, Wied, Moers, Sayn after 1605, Homburg after 1605 and Kurpfalz after 1583 were Reformed. So were the French congregations of Rappoltstein and Frankfurt. Hesse under Philip was Moderate Reformed and Philippist afterwards. The early orders of Strasbourg and Ulm are Moderate Reformed. The Polish synods belong to the Sandomierz consensus. Their rules are given beside the Lutheran ones, labelled, because they show the same questions from the other side.

18.3 The language of fellowship

Why the evangelicals had parted from Rome. The Hannover order of 1536 answers the charge that the evangelicals had left the church. They did not leave it over the papists' evil life, "so that we would therefore have no fellowship with them in Christian things", but over their doctrine; and it was the papists who cast them out with the ban. Hannover, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 6/2, p. 999):

> Wir haben uns auch nicht von papisten gethan oder getrennet umb ihres bösen lebens willen, also das wir derhalben nicht mit ihnen gemeinschaft haben wolten in christlichen dingen, sondern ihre lere wöllen wir nicht annemen, und sie stossen uns von sich mit ihrem bann.

We have also not withdrawn or separated ourselves from the papists for the sake of their evil life, so that we would therefore have no fellowship with them in Christian things; but their doctrine we will not accept, and they thrust us from them with their ban.

No fellowship with the sects. The fullest list is Kurland's church reformation of 1570. It names every party then known and draws the practical consequence: no invitation to stand as godparent, to a feast or a christening, or to any other "Christian gathering". Kurland, Kurländische Kirchenreformation, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 64):

> Zum sechsten und letzten. Sollen die frommen christen vermeiden alle ergernus, der lehr und des lebens, und alle verhindernus des rechten gottesdiensts, wie die mügen genennet werden, das man von allen corruptelen frei, keine gemeinschaft habe, mit den epicureern, pelagianern, osiandristen, papisten, iesuitern, enthusiasteen wiederteufern , calvinisten, sacramentirern, aller andern schwermern, rotten und ketzern, sie zu keiner gefatterschaft, kösten und kindtauf oder andern christlichen geselschaften bitte oder lade.

Sixthly and lastly. The godly Christians shall avoid all offence, of doctrine and of life, and all hindrance of the right service of God, by whatsoever name they may be called; that a man be free from all corruptions and have no fellowship with the Epicureans, Pelagians, Osiandrists, papists, Jesuits, enthusiasts, Anabaptists, Calvinists, Sacramentarians, and all other fanatics, sects and heretics; and that he bid or invite them to no standing as godparent, to no feasts and christenings, nor to other Christian gatherings.

The ministers first. Hohenlohe's chapter and visitation order of 1579 lays the rule on the clergy. Hohenlohe, Kapitels- und Visitationsordnung, 1579 (Sehling 15, p. 380):

> 10. Es soll auch kein kirchendiener mit unglaubigen uncl unchristlichen leuten, als iuden, papistischen halßstarrigen pfaffen, lasterhaft und ubel berichtigten menschen gemeinschaft haben oder mit ihnen handlen, dieweil dardurch unsere christenliche religion nicht wenig verkleinert, sie gesterkt und frommen christen geergert werden

10. Also no minister of the church shall have fellowship with unbelieving and unchristian people, such as Jews, obstinate papist priests, and vicious and ill-instructed persons, or have dealings with them; since thereby our Christian religion is not a little belittled, they are strengthened, and godly Christians are offended.

Pfalz-Zweibrücken's mandate against the Calvinists of 1564 forbids its ministers to "have fellowship with any Sacramentarian fanatic, nor exchange writings with them", without leave from the duke or his councillors and the superintendents. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Mandat gegen die Calvinisten, 1564 (Sehling 18, p. 316):

> auch dagegen, so offt es die Nodturfft erfordert, die Zwinglische unnd Calvinische verdambte Opinion, auch alle anndere schedliche Secten ausfuerlich aus Gottes wortt ableinen unnd Confutieren unnd mit kainem Sacramentschwermer gemeinschafft haben, auch kaine schriffte[n] mit ihnen wechsseln, es geschehe dann uff gnuegsamen, vorgehennden bericht mit unnserm oder unserer Stathalters und Rethe unnd etlicher Superintendenten vorwissen unnd erlaubnus.

and also, as often as need requireth, refute and confute at length out of God's word the Zwinglian and Calvinist condemned opinion, and all other harmful sects; and have fellowship with no Sacramentarian fanatic, nor exchange writings with them, unless it be done upon sufficient previous report, with the foreknowledge and leave of us, or of our governor and councillors and certain superintendents.

The visitation question. Württemberg's visitation order for the superintendents asked of every parish whether anyone there "harboured, lodged or had fellowship" with the sectaries. Württemberg, Visitationsordnung für die Superintendenten, 1559 (Sehling 16, p. 387):

> Item, ob jemant mit dem Widertauff, Schwenckfelder, Sacramentiererw und anderer Secten behafft were oder solliche Schwermer underschleiffte, herbergte oder gemeinschafft mit inen hette.

Item, whether anyone be infected with Anabaptism, the Schwenckfelders, the Sacramentarians and other sects, or harbour, lodge or have fellowship with such fanatics.

The same question was taken into the Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel order of 1569 (Sehling 6/1, p. 196), Hohenlohe's visitation of 1571 (Sehling 15, p. 164) and Limpurg's visitation order of 1611 (Sehling 16, p. 626). The Transylvanian Saxons asked it of the Arians and Anabaptists in 1577 (Sehling 24, p. 422). Their common order of 1578 forbade a pastor to have "fellowship" with the open enemies of God and his church, "or lodge them" (Sehling 24, p. 434).

The warrant: 2 John and Titus 3. Mansfeld's agenda of 1580 gives the texts on which the rule rests. Mansfeld, Kirchen-agenda für die prediger der grafschaft Mansfeld, 1580 (Sehling 2, p. 247):

> Zum andern sagen S. Johannes und S. Paulus in der andern Johannis, und zu Tito am dritten capitel, das man die leute, welche von der reinen heilsamen lere abgewichen, zu ketzern und falschen lerern oder derselben anhenger und mitgenossen wurden, wenn sie davon abzustehen, vermanet worden sein, meiden, sie nicht zu hause nehmen, auch gar nicht grüssen solle, damit man sich irer sünden nicht theilhaftig mache.

Secondly, St John and St Paul say, in the second of John and to Titus in the third chapter, that one shall avoid the people who have departed from the pure, wholesome doctrine and become heretics and false teachers, or their adherents and fellows, when they have been admonished to desist therefrom; and shall not receive them into the house, nor greet them at all, that one make not himself partaker of their sins.

Wolfstein's instruction of 1574 quotes 2 John 10–11 in Latin for the same purpose (§18.8.3). The Polish general synod of Kraków in 1573 used the same words of the Arian Anabaptists, who had gone out from the Reformed churches of Poland. Synod of Kraków, 1573 (Sandomierz consensus; Sehling 4, pp. 261–262):

> Siquidem arrianabaptistae ex nobis egressi non manent in doctrina Christi ac fide de vero deo, patre et filio cum spiritu sancto adeoque deum non habent, et jam a nobis saepissime colloquiis ac scriptis admoniti pertinaciter in errore manent, nullum jam amplius cum ipsis commercium (quamdiu sententiam suam tuentur) habeamus, nullas disputationes ipsorum admittamus, sed eos librosque illorum plasphemos, secundum praeceptum spiritus sancti vitemus,

Since the Arian Anabaptists, who went out from us, abide not in the doctrine of Christ and the faith of the true God, the Father and the Son with the Holy Ghost, and so have not God, and, having been very often admonished by us already in conferences and writings, remain obstinately in their error: let us have no further dealings with them (so long as they defend their opinion), let us admit no disputations of theirs, but let us avoid them and their blasphemous books according to the precept of the Holy Ghost,

18.4 Baptism

18.4.1 Baptism given by others

Baptism in the papacy. No order in the corpus repeats a baptism given by a Roman priest. Chemnitz's instruction in the Braunschweig-Wolfenbüttel order of 1569 states the ground: the "substantials of baptism" remained in the papacy, and baptism rests on Christ's word, not on the priest. The passage was taken word for word into Oldenburg's order of 1573 (Sehling 7/2.1, p. 1045). Wolfenbüttel, Kirchenordnung, 1569 (Sehling 6/1, p. 124):

> Hieneben muß auch der bericht geschehen, ob woll im bapstumb viel superstitiones mit untergelaufen, weil aber dennoch die substantialia baptismi geblieben sind, das diejenigen, so im bapstumb getauft sind, eine rechte, volnkommene taufe haben, weil dieselbige stehet und berhuet nicht auf des priesters unwirdigkeit oder mißbrauch, sondern auf dem worte des Herrn Christi, Eph. 5 [26].

Herewith also must instruction be given that, although in the papacy many superstitions crept in, yet because the substantials of baptism remained, those who were baptized in the papacy have a right and complete baptism; for the same standeth and resteth not on the priest's unworthiness or misuse, but on the word of the Lord Christ, Eph. 5 [26].

Baptism by laymen, heathen and heretics. Honterus's Reformationsbüchlein for the Transylvanian Saxons (1543) goes furthest. It keeps the midwife's emergency baptism and cites the canons: baptism given by a layman, a heathen or a heretic "in the faith of the Holy Trinity" is not to be repeated. Then it applies the rule to the Orthodox Romanians (Walachen), whose baptism the Saxon churches also recognised. Transylvanian Saxons, Honterus, Reformationsbüchlein, 1543, German version (Sehling 24, p. 193):

> Aber dy kynder, so wyslich zu zeit der nott durch dy amme fraw rechtlich getaufft werdenn nach der meynung aller rechtschaffener kyrchen lerer, willen myr yn keynerlay weg zum andrenn mall wider lassenn tauffenn, wanwarumb den sacramenten weder zu nach abgeen kan durch die qualitet ader eygenschafft der personenn des dyeners. Dan auch dye canones gepyetenn, das dy tauff, so durch eyn layen ader heyden geschycht, zum andren mal nicht wider gescheen soll, der gleychenn auch dy tauff, so durch keczer und ubelthetter ym glaubenn der heiliger Dryffeltikeit geschycht; Ittem wider zu tauffenn eyn keczer, so dy czeichen der heiliger Dryffaltikeit nach Christlicher leer entpffangenn hat, ist genczlich sunde, ader wider zu tauffenn eyn Christen, ist eyn unausprechliche sundt. Darumb weder dy kynder nach Walachen, eyns mals recht getaufft, sollenn nicht widertaufft werdenn

But the children who in time of need are wisely and rightly baptized by the midwife, according to the mind of all right teachers of the church, we will in no wise let be baptized again a second time; for the sacraments can neither gain nor lose anything through the quality or property of the person of the minister. For the canons also command that the baptism which is done by a layman or a heathen shall not be done again a second time; and likewise also the baptism which is done by heretics and evildoers in the faith of the Holy Trinity. Item, to baptize again a heretic who hath received the sign of the Holy Trinity according to Christian doctrine is altogether sin; or to baptize again a Christian is an unspeakable sin. Therefore neither the children nor the Wallachians, once rightly baptized, shall be baptized again.

The midwife's baptism against the Calvinists. The Lutheran orders kept emergency baptism by any Christian (§13.3.7). The Reformed rejected it and kept baptism for the called minister alone:

- Hesse's Kassel order of 1539 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 8, p. 119, editor's note);
- the Kurpfalz order of 1563 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 337, editor's note);
- the Moers order of 1581 (Reformed; Sehling 22, p. 190, editor's note).

Wolfstein's instruction of 1574 names the difference. Wolfstein, Christliche Instructio of Thomas Stieber, 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 580):

> Dieweil bishero in der christlichen kirchen ein löbliche und wolgegründte ordnung gewesen und gehalten worden ist, daß alle christliche personen, nicht allain menner, sondern auch weiber, sonderlich die hebammen, weil sie auch miterben seind der gnaden Gottes, als Petrus leret [1.Petr. 3, 7], und die not der gemainen regel nicht unterworfen ist, zur zeit der not in abwesen der menner die kindlein getauft haben, welches man ein jahetauf oder gehetauf genennet hat, so soll dieselbe auch nicht aufgehoben sein, sondern bleiben und gehalten werden und soll uns nicht irren, obschon die calvinisten aus großer unzeitiger klueghait solche jahetauf verwerfen, als soll sie unrecht sein.

Forasmuch as hitherto there hath been and been kept in the Christian church a laudable and well-grounded order, that all Christian persons, not only men but also women, especially the midwives (since they also are heirs together of the grace of God, as Peter teacheth [1 Pet. 3:7], and necessity is not subject to the common rule), have baptized the little children in time of need in the absence of the men, which hath been called a hasty or sudden baptism: so shall the same not be done away, but remain and be kept; and it shall not mislead us, though the Calvinists, out of great untimely cleverness, reject such hasty baptism, as though it were wrong.

The Transylvanian synod of Mediasch (1578) kept the midwives' baptism too, but told them not to baptize "rashly", and to send for the minister whenever they could (Sehling 24, p. 427).

Exorcism as a mark of confession. The exorcism in the baptismal rite became a sign of confession. Henneberg kept it in 1582 so that "the Zwinglians and Calvinists be not gratified or humoured in the least" (Sehling 2, p. 305). Soest's order of 1609 left it free. But if the Sacramentarians should try to bring in their fanaticism "by abolishing the exorcism", the preachers were to defend and use it (Sehling 22, p. 492). The Polish churches of the Sandomierz consensus took the opposite course: the Posen articles of 1570 listed exorcism among the "papistical" rites to be done away (Sehling 4, p. 259).

18.4.2 The children of others

The orders baptized the children of all who asked, with two exceptions.

Papists who used the font only for gifts. At Thorn the papists, who otherwise "revile and avoid our whole office of preaching", sought Lutheran baptism for the rich gifts of Lutheran godparents. Afterwards they had the child anointed by their own priests. They were refused, unless they promised to use the Lutheran ministry "in all points". Thorn, Kirchenordnung, after 1560 (Sehling 4, p. 230):

> Die weil auch viel papisten alhier unser ganz predigamt sonst lestern und meiden, alleine die tauf bisweilen fur ire kinder begeren, aus geiz, das sie unsers theils gefattern zur reichen einlegung mögen haben, hernach aber die getaufte kinder von uns, oelen und schmieren lassen bei ires theils pfaffen, so soll inen die taufe nicht gereichet werden, sie sagen den zu in allen stucken unsers predigamts zugebrauchen, und die papistische abgotterei zuvorlassen, damit wir inen nicht mit der heiligen tauf zu ihrem geiz dienen und sonst das predigamt von inen lestern lassen,

And forasmuch as many papists here otherwise revile and avoid our whole office of preaching, and only sometimes desire baptism for their children, out of greed, that they may have godparents of our side for the rich christening gift, but afterwards let the baptized children be oiled and smeared by the priests of their side: baptism shall not be given them, unless they promise to use our preaching office in all points, and to forsake the papist idolatry; lest we serve their greed with holy baptism and otherwise let the preaching office be reviled by them,

The same order would not admit "to baptism or any Christian work" anyone who stayed away from the Supper for long "out of Sacramentarian and Schwenckfeldian or otherwise profane opinion". Here baptism means standing at the font (Sehling 4, p. 230).

Children of another people. The Transylvanian synod of Mediasch in 1578 sent the children of the Gypsies and of the Orthodox Romanians back to their own congregations. Mediasch synod, 1578 (Sehling 24, p. 427):

> XXI. Ziganorum et Valachorum infantes relegentur ad suos coetus. Nec baptizentur in nostris ecclesiis, cum non sint nostrae religionis, ne hanc ludibrio exponant.

XXI. Let the infants of the Gypsies and the Wallachians be sent back to their own congregations. Nor let them be baptized in our churches, since they are not of our religion, lest they expose it to mockery.

The ground of the refusal is the parents' religion, not the validity of the baptism. Honterus's order of 1543 had recognised the Romanians' baptism (§18.4.1).

Sacramentarian parents. The Bremen preachers in 1561 would baptize the children of Sacramentarians "as we have said of the illegitimate" ones, but not with Sacramentarian godparents (§18.4.3). If such parents carried the child out unbaptized rather than give up their godparents, the preachers would report it to the council, as keeper of discipline (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 527).

Anabaptists who returned. Württemberg's visitation order of 1557 required an Anabaptist who returned to have his children baptized and to receive the Supper "with other Christians in his parish church" (Sehling 16, p. 335).

18.4.3 Godparents of another confession

The godparent was the one lay share in the rites. Whether a papist or a Calvinist could stand at a Lutheran font is the fellowship question the orders discuss most. The cases already set out in §17.17.4 are not repeated here: Limpurg 1611, Wied 1564 (Reformed), Nassau-Weilburg 1609 and Soest 1583.

Excluded. Ernestine Saxony's consistory constitution of 1542 admitted no godparent who was not "of our true and Christian religion" (Sehling 1, p. 202). Magdeburg's pastors in 1554 barred "obstinate, blaspheming papists" from both the sacrament and the font (Sehling 2, p. 451). The Regensburg order gives the reason: the godparent stands at the font "as a true member of the Christian church", who prays with the congregation. Regensburg, Kirchenordnung, 1567(?), appendix (Sehling 13, p. 489):

> [Anhang.] Das papisten und anderer secten verwante personen nit mögen zu gevattern bei der tauf zugelassen werden. Der gevatter stehet da bei der tauf vor den andern, nit allein als ein zeuge, sondern auch als ein wares glied der christlichen kirchen, so Gott mitbeten kan und sol, das kind auch helfen zu warem, christlichen glauben auferziehen.

[Appendix.] That persons related to the papists and other sects may not be admitted as godparents at baptism. The godparent standeth there at the baptism before the others, not only as a witness, but also as a true member of the Christian church, who can and shall pray to God with [the church], and help to bring up the child also in the true Christian faith.

The Bremen preachers, answering the city's questions in 1561, gave the longest argument. Papists cannot pray, cannot bear witness, and cannot teach the catechism. A minister who admits one gives "a false witness against the eighth commandment", acknowledging a papist as a member of the church and of its fellowship. Bremen, Stellungnahme der Prediger zu den Anfragen der Wittheit, 1561 (Sehling 7/2.2, pp. 526–527):

> Item, wo die gefattern auch papistisch sind, wißen wir sie keines weges zur heiligen tauffe zulaßen, und das aus diesen unvermeidtlichen ursachen: Erstlich, weil man die gefattern umbs gelts willen bittet, so konnen die papisten nicht beten, sondern weil sie on glauben an Christum sind, so ist ir gebet nichts den eitel sunde und fluch. […] Letzlich versundigen sich auch greulich die kirchendiener, die durch zulaßung der papisten sie von den christen nicht unterscheiden, stercken sie in irem irthumb, ergern andere christen, das sie dencken, es sey eine lere so gut als die ander, und gibt ein falsch zeugnis wider das achte geboth, indem er einen papisten offentlich erkent als ein glied der kirchen unnd in irer gemeinschafft, so er doch nicht darein gehort, auch selbs nicht gegleubet, was er fur das kindt mit der heiligen dreyfaltigkeit redet.

Item, where the godparents also are papist, we know in no wise to admit them to holy baptism, and that for these unavoidable reasons. First, because the godparents are asked for prayer's sake, the papists cannot pray; for since they are without faith in Christ, their prayer is nothing but mere sin and curse. […] Lastly, the ministers of the church also sin grievously who by admitting the papists do not distinguish them from the Christians, strengthen them in their error, and offend other Christians, so that they think one doctrine is as good as the other; and [such a minister] giveth a false witness against the eighth commandment, in that he publicly acknowledgeth a papist as a member of the church and in its fellowship, though he belongeth not therein, and himself believeth not what he speaketh for the child with the Holy Trinity.

The print reads umbs gelts willen, "for money's sake". The sense, and the two reasons that follow ("for the witness of baptism", "for instruction in the catechism"), require "for prayer's sake". The preachers would no more suffer Sacramentarian godparents "than the papist, for the reasons alleged above" (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 527).

Kurland in 1570 (§18.3) and Soest in 1590 excluded the godparents of every other religion. Soest, Artikel der Prediger, 1 September 1590 (Sehling 22, p. 480):

> 3. Papisten, Calvinisten unnd alle andere, sie sein geistlichs oder weldtlichs standts, unnserer religion wiederwertige, sollen zur gefatterschafft bey der tauffe nicht geduldet oder zugelassen werden.

3. Papists, Calvinists and all others, be they of spiritual or temporal estate, who are contrary to our religion, shall not be suffered or admitted to stand as godparents at baptism.

To commune with a church is to belong to it. The Wild- and Rhinegraviate's order for godparents of 1597 gives fourteen reasons against erring godparents. One rests on what communion means: whoever takes part in another body's rite is reckoned to it. Wild- and Rhinegraviate, Patenordnung, 1597 (Sehling 19/2, p. 574):

> Darnach ist solches auch communis opinio aller lehrer undt zuehörer, den wer sich von juden beschneiden lasset undt die beschneidung mit andacht bey ihnen hilfft verrichten, den haltt jederman vor einen juden, welcher jud sich aber tauffen last, der wirdt oder ist zum christen worden und wirdt darvor gehaltenn. Welcher man sich bey den Lutheranen, Zwinglern, Pap[isten], widertauffern etc. communicirt oder communiciren hilfft, der wirdt fur einen solchen geachtet.

Moreover this is also the common opinion of all teachers and hearers: for whoever letteth himself be circumcised by the Jews and helpeth devoutly to perform the circumcision among them, him everyone holdeth for a Jew; but whichever Jew letteth himself be baptized, he becometh or is become a Christian, and is held for one. Whatever man communicateth, or helpeth to communicate, with the Lutherans, Zwinglians, papists, Anabaptists etc., he is reckoned for one of them.

The church order of the same county (after 1603) asks the parents and pastors to see that "erring people, who condemn our doctrine and religion and will not be converted" are not taken as godparents (Sehling 19/2, p. 605).

Admitted with discretion. The Hessian visitation of April 1556 took the opposite view. Sehling's editor quotes its article on the "papists" in a note to the Abschied of the first general synod. Hesse, visitation article of 1556, quoted in the editor's note to the Abschied der ersten Generalsynode, Marburg, 1568 (Moderate Reformed; the Abschied Philippist; Sehling 8, p. 349):

> Dieweil auch dieselbigen mit uns einen glauben bekennen und allein in etlichen mißbreuchen von uns sind abgesondert, wo die von den unsern zu gevattern gebeten würden, und dieselbigen in den gemeinen und vornehmsten artikeln unsers christlichen glaubens gefragt, ziemliche antwurt geben, sollen sie zur gevatterschaft zugelassen werden.

Since the same also confess one faith with us, and are separated from us only in certain abuses: where they be asked by ours to be godparents, and, being questioned on the common and chief articles of our Christian faith, give a fitting answer, they shall be admitted to stand as godparents.

The question came back to the general synod of 1568. An evangelical had asked the cathedral provost of Mainz to stand as godfather, and the superintendent at Darmstadt had refused him, "although he had offered to make the confession of his faith, had it been desired". The synod had the superintendents draw up an opinion for the princes (Sehling 8, pp. 349–350, with the editor's notes).

The Electoral Saxon order of 1580 made the milder rule the norm for a large family of orders. Its reasons are pastoral. To drive a papist from the font embitters him. Godparenthood is a human ordinance, not God's command. A papist who stands at a Lutheran font "acknowledgeth in deed our holy baptism to be Christian and right". The reverse is not allowed: no Lutheran is to stand at a papist baptism. Electoral Saxony, Kirchenordnung of Elector August, 1580 (Sehling 1, pp. 432–433):

> Desgleichen, weil sich auch zutregt, das etliche personen, so noch zur ' zeit der papisten aberglauben in vielen stücken zugethan, wann sie zur gevatterschaft gebeten, das sie bei der heiligen taufe abgetrieben werden, dardurch sie soviel desto mehr wider die reine lehr des heiligen evangelii verbittert, so dargegen, wann sie zugelassen, vermittelst der wirkung gottes des heiligen geistes nicht allein ihrer selbst, sondern auch anderer mehr verfürten bekerung daraus erfolget, demnach dann die verordnung der gevattern nicht ein göttlicher befehl, sondern aus guten und erheblichen ursachen von menschen verordnet, sollen die pfarrer und kirchendiener in solchem fall vernünftig und vorsichtig handeln und nicht bald jemand, der nicht ein offentlicher lesterer gottes und seines heiligen worts, da er gleich in einem oder mehr artikeln sich nach der zeit nicht finden könte, von der heiligen tauf abhalten, sondern sich Christi spruchs erinnern, da er saget, wer nicht wider uns ist, der ist mit uns, auf das erste mal sich an dem genügen lassen, das solche person durch ire gegenwart mit der that unser heilige taufe für christlich und recht erkennet, so dargegen keinem unserer religion verwandten zu raten, das er bei einer papistischen tauf stehen, und hiermit ihren papistischen greuel, so sie bei der heiligen taufe treiben, bestetigen sol, gleichwol aber darneben nicht unterlassen, solche personen ihres irrthumbs > halben, mit aller sanftmut fürzunemen zuberichten und dafür zuwarnen und abzumanen und also die gradus der vermanung halten.

Likewise, since it also happeneth that certain persons who are still at this time addicted in many points to the superstition of the papists, when they are asked to be godparents, are driven away from holy baptism, whereby they are so much the more embittered against the pure doctrine of the holy gospel; whereas, when they are admitted, there followeth thereby, through the working of God the Holy Ghost, the conversion not only of themselves but also of more others who are led astray: therefore, since the ordinance of godparents is not a divine command, but ordained by men for good and weighty reasons, the pastors and ministers of the church shall in such case deal reasonably and prudently, and not hastily keep from holy baptism anyone who is not an open blasphemer of God and his holy word, even though he could not yet at this time find himself [right] in one or more articles; but shall remember Christ's saying, where he saith, He that is not against us is with us; and for the first time be content with this, that such a person by his presence acknowledgeth in deed our holy baptism to be Christian and right. On the other hand, it is to be counselled to none related to our religion that he stand at a papist baptism, and thereby confirm their papist abomination which they practise at holy baptism. Nevertheless they shall not omit withal to take such persons in hand with all gentleness on account of their error, to instruct them, to warn and dissuade them therefrom, and so keep the degrees of admonition.

The order extends the same patience to the Sacramentarians who are "imprisoned in their consciences" but do not blaspheme. It gives the theological ground: a child is baptized on Christ's command, not on the godparents' faith. Electoral Saxony, Kirchenordnung of Elector August, 1580 (Sehling 1, p. 433):

> Zum vierden, hat es auch gleiche gestalt mit den andern verfürten, armen, irrigen leuten, so nicht recht vom heiligen sacrament gleuben und gleichwol nicht mutwillig sündigen noch lestern, sondern allein noch in ihren gewissen gefangen liegen, welche auch nicht von der heiligen taufe abgehalten, sondern zu gleich den andern auch mit inen die gradus admonitionum vorgenommen, und so viel müglich, wie auch die auslendischen und einlendischen papisten, zu unser warhaftigen religion gebracht und darvon durch unordentliche handlung nicht abgehalten werden sollen, weil doch die kinder nicht auf der gefatter glauben, der gestalt die taufe ungewiss were, sondern auf den befehlich und auf das wort Christi getauft werden, darumb den kindern, so getauft werden sollen, der gevattern unglaube im herzen an der kraft der heiligen taufe nichts benimpt, welche allein auf dem befehl und der ordnung Christi bestehet, und nach seiner verheissung mit sich bringet, was im wort derselben begriffen ist.

Fourthly, it is also the same case with the other misled, poor, erring people who do not believe rightly of the holy sacrament, and yet do not sin wilfully nor blaspheme, but only still lie captive in their consciences: they also shall not be kept from holy baptism, but the degrees of admonition shall be undertaken with them as with the others; and, so far as possible, they, as also the foreign and native papists, shall be brought to our true religion, and not be kept therefrom by disorderly dealing. For the children are not baptized upon the godparents' faith, in which manner baptism would be uncertain, but upon the command and the word of Christ. Therefore the unbelief of the godparents in their hearts taketh nothing from the children who are to be baptized as to the power of holy baptism, which standeth alone on the command and ordinance of Christ, and bringeth with it, according to his promise, what is comprised in his word.

The Saxon text was taken into:

- Hohenlohe's church and school orders of 1582, in their consistory order, on Jakob Andreae's advice (Sehling 15, pp. 474–476);
- Sayn's church order of 1590 (Sehling 19/1, p. 414);
- Nassau-Weilburg's order of 1576, and its explanatory points of 1609 (Sehling 10, p. 329; §17.17.4).

Pfalz-Neuburg's general articles of 1576 reach the same rule on their own. They also draw the line that runs through all these orders: a papist at a Lutheran font confirms the Lutheran sacrament, and a Lutheran at a papist font confirms the papist one. Pfalz-Neuburg, Generalartikel, 1576 (Sehling 13, p. 188):

> In welchem allem vil sicherer zu wenig dan zuvil getan, weil der menschen herzen allain Gott bekennen und ein großer underscheid ist, wann papisten bei unser tauf zur gevatterschaft zuegelassen, mit welcher handlung si unser sacrament bestetigen; dann so aus unsern kirchen etliche zur bapstischen gevatterschaft sich gebrauchen lassen, die mit irer gegenwertigkait die bäpstischen zauberische ceremonien bestetigen, darvor sich ein jeder christ hueten solle.

In all which it is much safer to do too little than too much, since God alone knoweth the hearts of men; and there is a great difference when papists are admitted as godparents at our baptism, by which act they confirm our sacrament, and when some of our churches let themselves be used as godparents at a papist baptism, who by their presence confirm the papist sorcerous ceremonies, from which every Christian shall guard himself.

Schwäbisch Hall's draft of 1614 distinguished two kinds of papist. It cites Felix Bidembach's Consilia theologica. The passage was struck out and is missing from the order of 1615. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung 1543/1615, draft of 1614 (Sehling 17/1, p. 123, apparatus):

> Es fragt sich aber hie, ob man auch päpstische Gevattern bei unser tauff möge stehen laßen, legatur consil. 9. Dec. 2. Consil. Theolog. D. Felicis Bidemb. Darauff ist zuwißen, daß man zwar grobe, gottlose, unverständige und böse gifftige papisten, welche unsere verfolger und lästerer seind, nit zulaßen soll, Aber guthertzige und solche papisten, welche gegen unser Religion nit ubel affectioniert sind, soll man zur Gevatterschafft zulaßen, dann sonsten nit vermutlich, daß sie sich bei der unserigen tauff einstellen würden

But here it is asked whether one may let papist godparents also stand at our baptism; let the ninth consilium of the second decade of the Consilia theologica of D. Felix Bidembach be read. Thereupon it is to be known that one shall indeed not admit gross, godless, ignorant and evil, venomous papists, who are our persecutors and blasphemers; but good-hearted papists, and such as are not ill affected toward our religion, one shall admit to stand as godparents; for otherwise it is not to be expected that they would present themselves at our baptism.

Calvinist godparents at Strasbourg. In 1601 the Strasbourg church convent asked the magistrate what to do with "those in Calvinism" who were asked to be godparents. Such people either could not answer the questions to the godparents for conscience' sake, or stood silent and said neither yea nor nay. The magistrate told the preachers to keep to the church order, which, as the editor notes, had not limited godparents to the Augsburg Confession. Strasbourg, Stellungnahme des Magistrats zur Anfrage des Kirchenkonvents wegen der reformierten Taufpaten, 28 March 1601 (Sehling 20/1, p. 700):

> Anno 1601, den 28. Martii, erschienen von eines ehrwürdigen kirchenconvents wegen herr d. Pappus, h. Pancratius Kefelius, h. Bartholomaeus Nasserus undt ettliche andere prediger vor rhätt unnd 21, begertten zuwissen, weßen sie sich sollen verhalten gegen denen im Calvinismo, wan dieselben zu gevattern gebetten würden, in ansehung, wan dieselben zu gevattern gebetten werden, entweder ihres gewissens halben nicht könten anttwortt geben oder, da sie antwortt geben soltten, gar still schweigen und weder ja noch nein sagten, […] Wardt ihnen befohlen, bey der kirchenordnung zuverpleiben, wie es darin bey der h. tauff geordnet.

In the year 1601, on the 28th of March, there appeared, on behalf of an honourable church convent, Doctor Pappus, Master Pancratius Kefelius, Master Bartholomaeus Nasserus and certain other preachers, before the council and the Twenty-one, desiring to know how they should behave toward those in Calvinism when the same were asked to be godparents; seeing that, when the same are asked to be godparents, they either could not answer for their conscience' sake, or, if they should answer, keep altogether silent and say neither yea nor nay; […] It was commanded them to abide by the church order, as it is ordained therein concerning holy baptism.

18.5 The Lord's Supper

18.5.1 Closed to those of another confession

Every order that names the other confessions at the altar closes it to them. The orders give two grounds:

- Doctrine. The Supper is for those who believe the words of institution. One who denies the presence of Christ's body and blood cannot discern the body.
- The minister's conscience. A minister who admits those who defend error makes himself "partaker of other men's sins" (1 Timothy 5:22), and casts the pearl before swine (Matthew 7:6).

Reutlingen's order bars papists, strangers and those who deny the presence in one list. Reutlingen, Kirchenordnung, c. 1531 (Sehling 17/2, p. 43):

> Derhalben sollen die diener flissig auffmerckung haben, das niemandts, der noch dem evangelio zuwider, als die papisten und unchristen, diß sacrament des leybs und pluts geraicht werden, deßgleichen auch keinem fremden, unbekanten, item den kindern und die von natur thoricht unnd nit bey vernunfft sind, welche dann den leyb Christi nit underschaiden künden, darzu die jhenigen, so die gegenwürtigkeit des leybs und pluts Christi verneinen und dissem wort nit glauben, deßgleichen auch keinem, der in offentlichen schanden und laster verhafft ist und zur bösserung noch nit begeben hat noch will.

Therefore the ministers shall diligently take heed that this sacrament of the body and blood be given to no one who is still contrary to the gospel, as the papists and unchristian people; likewise also to no stranger or unknown person; item, to the children and those who are by nature foolish and not in their right mind, who cannot discern the body of Christ; moreover to those who deny the presence of the body and blood of Christ and believe not this word; likewise also to none who is held fast in open shame and vice, and hath not yet given himself to amendment, nor will.

Waldeck's order of 1556 names the parties and sets the condition of return: a revocation of the error. Waldeck, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 9, p. 250):

> Eß sollen auch die pastores alß fideles administratores mysteriorum et sacramentorum Divinorum die edle perle nicht den sewen unndt daß heyligthumb den hunden aufftragenn [Mt 7,6], derwegenn, wo jemandt papistischer, wiedertaufferischer, sacramentirischer oder in andere wege sectirischer, ihrriger lehr, so mit unser kirchen confession nicht ubereinstimmet oder auch ärgerlichen sunden unndt lastern ergeben wehre, der soll zue dem h. tisch des herrn Christi nichtt zuegelaßenn werden, es seye dann, das er seine irrige lehr revocire, daß ärgerliche leben abstelle unndt gewiße indicia verae poenitentiae vonn sich sehenn laße.

The pastors also, as faithful stewards of the divine mysteries and sacraments, shall not set the noble pearl before the swine, nor the holy thing before the dogs [Matt. 7:6]. Therefore, if any man be of papist, Anabaptist, Sacramentarian or otherwise sectarian, erring doctrine, which agreeth not with our church's confession, or be given to offensive sins and vices, he shall not be admitted to the holy table of the Lord Christ, unless he revoke his erring doctrine, put away the offensive life, and let sure tokens of true repentance be seen in him.

Prussia's church order of 1568 gives the minister's side of the rule. Confession is kept so that the preacher may "know to whom he giveth the most worthy sacrament". Prussia, Kirchenordnung und ceremonien, 1568 (Sehling 4, pp. 76–77):

> sondern auf das erstlich der prediger recht fahre, das gute von dem bösen scheide, Jerem. 15, und wisse, wem er das hochwirdige sakrament reichet, damit er sich nicht fremder sünde theilhaftig mache, 1. Tim. 5, Ezech. 3, und die perle vor die seu werfe, Matth. 7, wenn er die absolviret und lesst zugehen, die von gottes wort nichts halten, verteidingen falsche, greuliche irrthümer, als die papisten, sakramentschwermer, wiederteufer und andere ihres gleichen rotten, […] Solche soll man bis auf ihre besserung und rechte ware buss abweisen und ihnen das sakrament nicht reichen, weil sie es doch empfahen zu ihrem gericht und verderben but first, that the preacher may proceed rightly, separate the good from the evil (Jer. 15), and know to whom he giveth the most worthy sacrament; lest he make himself partaker of other men's sins (1 Tim. 5, Ezek. 3) and cast the pearl before the swine (Matt. 7), if he absolve and let come those who hold nothing of God's word and defend false, horrible errors, as the papists, the Sacramentarian fanatics, the Anabaptists and other sects like them, […] Such shall one turn away until their amendment and right, true repentance, and not give them the sacrament, since they would yet receive it to their judgment and ruin.

The rule is the same elsewhere:

- Magdeburg 1554. The pastors' articles admit neither to the sacrament nor to the font "obstinate, blaspheming papists who will not be converted" (Sehling 2, p. 451).
- Rostock 1557. The visitors' instruction tells the preachers to turn away from the Supper and from baptism those whom they can convict openly of blasphemy, "as those who hold stubbornly to the papist idolatries and revile our religion as heresy or sects" (Sehling 5, p. 283).
- Württemberg 1557 and Nassau-Dillenburg 1582. Württemberg visits privately those who keep from the Supper out of Zwinglian or other opinion. Reformed Nassau-Dillenburg admits only those who have confessed "the Reformed doctrine", strangers included (§17.17.2).

Two limits run through these rules:

- Defenders, not the erring. The orders exclude those who "defend" error, the "obstinate" and the "blasphemers". The misled and the weak are taught, not turned away (Electoral Saxony 1580, §18.4.3; Pfalz-Neuburg 1576, §18.5.3).
- Communion makes a man a member. Whoever communicates "with the Lutherans, Zwinglians, papists, Anabaptists etc." is reckoned one of them (Wild- and Rhinegraviate 1597, §18.4.3).

18.5.2 Strangers and the parish

Each Christian was to receive the Supper from his own pastor, who knew him and could judge his fitness. A stranger was not refused outright. He was first examined, and the orders require a reason.

Not without cause. The Albertine visitors' report of 1540 gives the rule in its shortest form: the pastors shall give the sacrament "to no stranger's parishioner without cause, so that each pastor may watch over his own sheep" (Sehling 1, p. 286). The visitors' order for Meissen of the same year repeats it (Sehling 2, p. 52). Henneberg's order of 1582 adds the reason. Henneberg, Kirchen-Ordnung of Georg Ernst, 1582 (Sehling 2, p. 309):

> Und eben aus diesem grunde sol kein pfarrherr einem frembden pfarrkinde, ausserhalb der not, dieweil er dessen gelegenheit nicht wissen, und sich sonsten allerlei unrichtigkeit daraus begeben kan, das nachtmal des herrn reichen.

And for this very reason no pastor shall give the Lord's Supper to a stranger's parishioner, except in need; since he cannot know his circumstances, and all manner of disorder may otherwise come of it.

Heard on their faith. Hesse's agenda of 1574 provides for foreigners who settle in a place. They are heard on their faith before the elders and admitted if they are found sound. If they are not, they are taught. Hesse, Agende, 1574 (Philippist; Sehling 8, p. 435):

> Nachdem sich aber auch oftmals begibt, daß auslendische frembde und unbekante leute sich an einen ort begeben, daselbst ihre wonung oder aufenthalt zu haben, der heiligen sacramenten neben andern bekanten christgleubigen zu gebrauchen gedenken, so söllen die kirchendiener zuvor, ehe dann sie zum brauch der heiligen sacramenten zugelassen werden, was ihr glaub und bekantnus sei, von solchen leuten in jegenwertigkeit der seniorn anhören und vernemen, und, wofern sie rechtschaffen erfunden, mit andern zur communion annemen, im fall sie aber der lehr noch nicht genugsam berichtet, oder irgend in einem stück irrig und unrecht dran weren, soll man sie christlich und brüderlich underrichten, und wann sie sich lehren und zum besten anweisen lassen, hernach auf vorgehende exploration und befindung, daß ihr bekantnus und glaube gnugsam und rechtschaffen sei, mit andern christen bei der tauf stehen und das abendmal des Herrn gebrauchen lassen.

But since it also often happeneth that foreign, strange and unknown people betake themselves to a place to have their dwelling or abode there, and think to use the holy sacraments beside other known believing Christians: the ministers of the church shall first, before they be admitted to the use of the holy sacraments, hear and learn from such people, in the presence of the elders, what their faith and confession be; and, if they be found sound, take them to the communion with the others. But in case they be not yet sufficiently instructed in the doctrine, or be erring and wrong in any point, one shall instruct them in a Christian and brotherly way; and when they let themselves be taught and directed for the best, then, after examination first made and finding that their confession and faith is sufficient and sound, let them stand at baptism with other Christians and use the Lord's Supper.

The same paragraph stands in Nassau-Weilburg's order of 1576 (Sehling 10, p. 261) and in the order for the Corvey village of Bruchhausen of 1603 (Sehling 21, p. 262). The Nassau-Weilburg agenda of 1618 gave it the heading "How to proceed with strange, unknown persons, before they be admitted to the holy Supper". The Reformed synod of Wied (1564) has the same rule and gives its reason. Wied, Synodalbeschlüsse, 1564 (Reformed; Sehling 19/1, p. 466):

> 11. Nemo ad Coenam Domini admittatur, presertim peregrini, quorum professio et vita nobis non est cognita et explorata, nisi prius coram pastore comparuerint et suae fidei rationem reddiderint. Alioqui nullus erit anathematis locus, immo nostrae Ecclesiae erunt improborum perfugium.

11. Let no one be admitted to the Lord's Supper, especially strangers whose profession and life is not known to us and examined, unless they have first appeared before the pastor and given an account of their faith. Otherwise there will be no place for the anathema; nay, our churches will be the refuge of the wicked.

Not to escape one's own pastor. Leiningen's discipline order of 1566 forbade its subjects to receive the Supper anywhere else, even within the county, without their pastor's consent. Some had gone to "strange, even papist places" to spite a pastor with whom they were at odds. Leiningen, Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1566 (Sehling 19/1, p. 228):

> XIII. Von frembden Kirchen. Wollen Wir auch gantz und gar von Unsern Unterthanen diß gehabt haben, daß keiner an keinem andern Ort Unserer Graveschafft ohn seines Pfarherrs verwilligung das Heilige Abendtmal entpfahe oder auch anderstwo Kinder tauffen lasse, dann ihr etliche zur verachtung ires Pfarherrn, wo sie im abgünstig, an frembde, auch wol Bäpstische Ort gelauffen, ehe sie sich mit irem Pfarherrn versönet, unnd dann das Hochwürdige Abendtmal unsers Herrn Jesu Christi zu irem selbst eigenem gericht und verdamnuß entpfangen, bey straff 20 gulden unnachleßlich zu erlegen.

XIII. Of strange churches. We will also have this altogether observed by our subjects: that none receive the holy Supper at any other place in our county without his pastor's consent, nor have children baptized elsewhere. For certain of them, in contempt of their pastor, where they bore him ill will, have run to strange, and even to papist, places before they were reconciled with their pastor, and have then received the most worthy Supper of our Lord Jesus Christ to their own judgment and damnation. On pain of twenty gulden, to be paid without remission.

Other orders asked about it at visitation or dealt with it in other ways:

- Hohenlohe 1579 asks "whether anyone have his children baptized at other places, or go elsewhere to the Supper of our Lord Christ" (Sehling 15, p. 369).
- Ulm 1586 admonishes "the foreign strangers from the peasantry", who come to the Supper in the city churches at the high feasts, to appear first for the examination (Sehling 17/2, p. 284).
- Soest 1590 would not admit to the Supper without public penance those who had gone "to strange places" to be married without banns (Sehling 22, p. 480).

18.5.3 Communicants from Catholic and Reformed parishes

The rule of the own parish had one great exception. Where a person's own pastor was a papist who refused the Supper in both kinds, the Lutheran orders gave it to him. The Brandenburg-Nürnberg order of 1528 made this a rule. Brandenburg-Nürnberg, Kirchenordnung, 1528 (Sehling 11, p. 138):

> Von frembden pfarrkindern. Frembden pfarrkindern, die unter pfarherrn sein, die inen die christlichen sacrament abschlugen, soll man nach guter erkundigung irer narration und glaubens alles ministrirn, das in also daheim wider das wort Gottes abgeschlagen wirt.

Of strangers' parishioners. To strangers' parishioners who are under pastors that refuse them the Christian sacraments, one shall minister, after good inquiry into their account and their faith, everything that is thus refused them at home against the word of God.

The printed order of 1533 kept the rule and fenced it. No pastor is to give the sacraments "lightly or without honest Christian cause" to those of other parishes, and he must first ask why they do not seek them at home. But if he knows the person, or the person "is under such a pastor, from whom he cannot obtain all Christian services", and a Christian mind is found in him, "nothing shall be refused him" (Sehling 11, pp. 198–199).

Forty years later Wolfstein repeated the rule and cited "our church order" for it. Sehling's editor identifies the passage as the Brandenburg-Nürnberg order of 1533. Wolfstein, Christliche Instructio of Thomas Stieber, 1574 (Sehling 13, p. 572):

> Zum zehenden sollen die pfarhern zuesehen, daß sie nicht leichtfertiglich und ohne redliche ursachen frembden pfarkindern die heiligen sacrament und andern gottesdienst erzaigen. So aber bekante und christliche leut kemen, so von ihren bäbstischen pfarhern rechten gebrauch der heiligen sacrament nicht haben können, sollen wir ihnen solchen dienst in kainen weg abschlagen, wie in unser kirchenordnung gemeldet wird (pag: 171).

Tenthly, the pastors shall see to it that they do not lightly and without honest causes show the holy sacraments and other divine service to strangers' parishioners. But if known and Christian people come who cannot have the right use of the holy sacraments from their papist pastors, we shall in no wise refuse them such service, as is set down in our church order (page 171).

Prussia's order for the two bishops (1568) adds devout people "from the papacy", the sick and travellers. Prussia, Von Erwehlung der beiden bischoff, 1568 (Sehling 4, p. 122):

> das ein jeder pfarrherr sich seines befohlenen kirchspiels allein halte, keinem andern ohn sein wissen und guten willen in sein ambt greife, noch sich darzu vermügen lasse, desgleichen auch keines anders kirchspiel kinder aufneme zu der beicht oder reichung der heiligen tauf und sacramenta, sondern ein jeder auf die seinen sehe, wie ihm dieselben mit gottes wort zu weiden auferlegt ist. Were es aber sache, das etwa gutherzige fromme leut aus dem bapstumb zu einem pfarrherrn in unserrn fürstenthumb kömen, oder auch einer aus einem frembden kirchspiel, der orth mit schwachheit befiele, oder sonst im durchreisen zu christlicher andacht bewogen, ohne verachtung seines eigenen pfarrherrens, und da er seines glaubens und wesens guten bescheid, aus was ursachen er das sacrament des orts begeret, geben würde, soll der pfarrherr solcher keinem in seiner pfarr seine dienst weigern, sondern mit trost und reichung der sacrament sich gutwillig erzeigen.

that each pastor keep himself to the parish committed to him alone, and reach into no other's office without his knowledge and good will, nor let himself be persuaded thereto; and likewise receive no children of another's parish to confession or to the giving of holy baptism and the sacraments, but that each look to his own, as it is laid upon him to feed them with God's word. But if it should come to pass that good-hearted, godly people out of the papacy came to a pastor in our principality; or also one from a strange parish who fell sick in the place, or who was otherwise moved to Christian devotion in passing through, without contempt of his own pastor; and if he gave good account of his faith and condition, and for what cause he desired the sacrament in that place: the pastor shall refuse his service to none of these in his parish, but show himself willing with comfort and with the giving of the sacrament.

Pure sacraments. Schwäbisch Hall's order of 1615 turns the rule into a principle. The margin dates it to a decree of the chapter in 1564, repeated in 1570. A pastor gives the Supper to strangers whose own parishes "have not the holy sacraments pure and unalloyed". He sends back those whose parishes have them. The parishioner may do the same in reverse. Schwäbisch Hall, Kirchenordnung 1543/1615 (Sehling 17/1, p. 141):

> Es fragt sich auch hie, ob ein Pfarrer frembden Pfarrkindern das H. Abendtmal geben oder nit geben soll, Und dargegen, ob die Pfarrkinder bey einem frembden Pfarrer communicieren mögen oder nit. Darauff ist zuwissen, daß ein Pfarrer frembden Pfarrkindern, so in ihren Pfarren die H. Sacramenta nit rein und lauter haben, das H. Abentmal, wann sie kommen und solches begeren, nit abschlagen, sondern geben soll. Denen Pfarrkindern aber, so in ihren Pfarren die H. Sacramenta rein und lauter haben, soll ein Pfarrer das H. Abendtmal nit geben, sondern abschlagen und sie zu ihrem Pfarrer weisen. […] Also sollen auch die Pfarrkinder, wann sie daheim in ihren Pfarren die H. Sacramenta rein und lauter haben, das H. Abendtmal daselbst bey ihren ordentlichen Pfarrer suochen. Im widrigen Fall aber das H. Abendtmal an denen Orthen suochen, da es rein und lauter gefunden wirdt. Diß soll auch von der Predigt Göttliches Worts verstanden werden.

It is also asked here whether a pastor shall give the holy Supper to strangers' parishioners or not; and on the other hand, whether the parishioners may communicate with a strange pastor or not. Thereupon it is to be known that a pastor shall not refuse, but give, the holy Supper to strangers' parishioners who have not the holy sacraments pure and unalloyed in their parishes, when they come and desire it. But to those parishioners who have the holy sacraments pure and unalloyed in their parishes, a pastor shall not give the holy Supper, but refuse it, and send them to their pastor. […] So also the parishioners, when they have the holy sacraments pure and unalloyed at home in their parishes, shall seek the holy Supper there with their ordinary pastor; but in the contrary case, seek the holy Supper at those places where it is found pure and unalloyed. This shall also be understood of the preaching of God's word.

The order cites Porta's Pastorale Lutheri and Felix Bidembach's Consilia theologica for the rule.

Sick Calvinists. Pfalz-Neuburg bordered on the Reformed Upper Palatinate. Its general articles of 1576 tolerate the papist ministers of foreign lordships while they give no offence. They let the pastor give the Supper to a sick Calvinist who has attended the evangelical sermons, "if the lordship can suffer it". Pfalz-Neuburg, Generalartikel, 1576 (Sehling 13, p. 230):

> Uf den fall auch etliche personen, so aus calvinischen und andern kirchen in unserm furstentumb die evangelischen kirchen und predigten besuechen und, da einer under denselben krank, des evangelischen pfarrers, ime das heilige nachtmal ze raichen, begeren wurde, soll der pfarrer denselben, wanns die herrschaft leiden und ohne gevar geschehen mage, mit dem heiligen sacrament versehen. Da es aber geverlich und der herrschaft zewider oder verboten, soll er dergleichen zuehörer mit grund göttlichs worts underrichten und also sterken, damit si im fall zutragender leibsschwachhait sich selbst trösten kunden.

In case also certain persons from Calvinist and other churches visit the evangelical churches and sermons in our principality, and one among them, being sick, should desire the evangelical pastor to give him the holy Supper: the pastor shall provide him with the holy sacrament, if the lordship can suffer it and it may be done without danger. But if it be dangerous, and against the will of the lordship or forbidden, he shall instruct such hearers with the ground of God's word and so strengthen them, that they may comfort themselves in case of bodily weakness befalling.

The next paragraph asks patience with those of the land who are "still contrary to the religion out of unequal understanding and simplicity". The pastors are to bear with them "as with the weak in faith, after the teaching of St Paul", and not set their conversion "for a certain, fixed time" (Sehling 13, p. 230).

Sehling's editor shows what this meant in practice. The Upper Palatinate forbade the going out, yet "the pastor of Lambrechtsneukirchen (near Burglengenfeld) in 1606 had among his 1,765 communicants, besides his 325 souls, 694 from the Upper Palatinate!" (Sehling 13, p. 230, editor's note).

18.5.4 Going out to another church (Auslaufen)

Wherever a territory bordered on another confession, its people went across the border to hear sermons and receive the sacraments. The orders call it auslaufen, "running out". Every confession forbade it, and every confession's people did it.

Lutheran and Upper German cities against the Mass. Strasbourg forbade its people to go out to the Mass two years after abolishing it. Strasbourg, Verbot, an anderen Orten die Messe zu hören, 3 April 1531 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 224):

> Unnsere herrn, meister unnd rathe unnd die eynundzwentzig, gebieten allen unnd yeden, burgern, hyndersassen unnd verwanten, es sey mann, wyb, jung oder alt, was wurden, stadts oder wesens die syen, nyemands ußgenommen, das ir keyner uß dieser statt Strasburg weder zu der Aich gen Lingelßheim, Wiverßheim oder derglichen ort, an anndere umbligende stett, flecken oder dorffer, mesß zuheren, reyten, faren oder gan sollt by eyner pene funff pfundt pfening, so dick unnd vil das beschicht

Our lords, master and council and the Twenty-one, command all and every burgher, resident and dependant, be it man or woman, young or old, of whatsoever dignity, estate or condition they be, none excepted, that none of them shall ride, drive or go out of this city of Strasbourg, neither to the Eich at Lingolsheim, nor to Wiwersheim, nor to such places, to other surrounding towns, market towns or villages, to hear Mass, on pain of five pounds of pennies, as often and as many times as it happeneth.

Frankfurt's council resolved the same in 1542. It also forbade the Catholic clergy of the city's three chapters to go out to the villages to preach and give the sacraments. Frankfurt, Resolution auf die Gravamina der Prediger, 3 March 1542 (Sehling 9, p. 509):

> Das auch den burgern, man und frawen, zu undersagen were, nit, wie bisher beschehen, zu papistischen messen und predigen auf die dorff zulauffen oder, welcher sich des nit wolt massen, das der ain halb jar auß Franckfurt pleiben solt.

That the burghers also, men and women, should be forbidden to run out to the villages to papist Masses and sermons, as hath been done hitherto; or, whoever would not refrain from it, that he should stay half a year out of Frankfurt.

Friedberg's council had forbidden the going out to the Masses at Rüsbach and Johannisberg in 1535, on pain of ten gulden (Sehling 9, p. 620, editor's note).

Strasbourg against the Reformed. By the end of the century Lutheran Strasbourg faced the other way. Its mandate of 1597 forbade going to "foreign lordships" for sermons and sacraments. Sehling's editor notes that the "contrary religion" meant chiefly the Reformed, who went to Bischweiler in Pfalz-Zweibrücken. Strasbourg, Verbot der Konventikel und des auswärtigen Gottesdienstbesuchs, 10 December 1597 (Sehling 20/1, p. 535):

> Dem aber entgegen und zuwider ist uns glaublich angelangt und fürbracht worden, das etliche unsere bürger sich nit allein durch außlendische prediger, die mit unserer confession und kirchenbekanntniß nit stimmen, zu frembder und widriger religion verleyten und verführen, sondern das sie auch in ihren häusern sonderbare conventicula und zusamenkunfften zuhalten oder auch mit großem ergerniß ihres nechsten ane sonderen festtagen in frembde herrschaften zu anhörung der predigten und gebrauch der sacramenten außer der statt zu fahren gelüsten laßen

But contrary and against this it hath credibly come to us and been reported that certain of our burghers not only let themselves be misled and seduced by foreign preachers, who agree not with our confession and our church's profession, to a strange and contrary religion; but also lust to hold particular conventicles and assemblies in their houses, or, to the great offence of their neighbour, to drive out of the city on particular feast days into foreign lordships, to hear the sermons and use the sacraments.

The evangelicals of Catholic towns. Evangelicals living under a Catholic council or chapter went out to the evangelical villages round about:

- Colmar. The Catholic council tried in 1554 to stop its people going to the services in the neighbouring Württemberg lordship of Horburg, and renewed the mandate ten years later (Sehling 20/2, p. 475, editor). In 1560 the Horburg pastor wrote: cives multi Colmarienses me adeunt ("many citizens of Colmar come to me").
- Hagenau. The magistrates gave the going out as a reason for admitting evangelical worship in the city in 1565 (Sehling 20/2, p. 408, editor).
- Wimpfen. The burghers asked for the Supper in both kinds at home, so that they need not run "across the country to the villages or market towns of a foreign lordship" for it (Sehling 17/2, p. 513, editor).
- Dinkelsbühl. After 1559 more than a thousand people went out of the city each holy day (Sehling 12, p. 123, editor).
- Dortmund. The council freed the sacrament in both kinds in 1562, because many burghers had gone out "in great crowds to foreign places" to receive it.

Dortmund, Mandat zur Freigabe des Abendmahls unter beiderlei Gestalt, 1562 (Sehling 21, p. 216):

> darauß sich dann vielerley Zerspaltungen der gemeiner Burgerschaft zugetragen, also auch, daß etliche, beyde, Mans- und Frauenpersohnen, sich von Empfangung des theuern Schatzes des H. Sacraments viele Jahr gantz und all enthalten, Etliche mit großen Hauffen an frembde Örter mit ihren Weibern, Kindern und Gesinde, umb das Sacrament, wie vorgen[annt], zu empfangen, ausgezogen.

whereof many divisions have arisen among the common burghers; so also that certain persons, both men and women, have abstained altogether and entirely for many years from receiving the precious treasure of the holy sacrament, and certain have gone out in great crowds to foreign places, with their wives, children and servants, to receive the sacrament, as aforesaid.

In Reformed Bremen the Lutherans who had lost their last pastor in 1582 went out "to clergy outside the city and its territory, such as the pastor of Seehausen" (Sehling 7/2.2, p. 399, editor).

The Reformed territories against the Lutheran altars. The Reformed counties and the Reformed Palatinate forbade their people to go to Lutheran or Catholic neighbours. Nassau-Diez went furthest: a foreign pastor who gave the Supper in its villages was to be arrested. Nassau-Diez, Visitationspunkte, 1585 (Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 178):

> 7. Wer under frembter herschafft das abendtmall des herrenn sucht oder seine kinder in außlendischen kirchen tauffenn lest, derselbig soll in den ruhezettell pracht oder nach gelegenheitt der sachen der obrigkeit anpracht werden. Im fall aber einer oder mehr ein frempten, außlendischen pfharherr zu sich fordern unndt von ihm das nachtmall empfangen würden oder ihre kinder von ihm tauffen laßen woltenn, daruber wirdt ein gemeiner bevelch von der hohen obrigkeit an alle unndt jedere schultheiß ergehen, das sie demselbigen pfarher sambt dem, so ihn erfordert, an stundt gefenglich annehmen unndt naher Dietz in hafft lieffern sollen.

7. Whoever seeketh the Lord's Supper under a foreign lordship, or letteth his children be baptized in foreign churches, the same shall be put in the presentment roll, or, as the matter requireth, be reported to the authorities. But in case one or more should send for a strange, foreign pastor and receive the Supper from him, or would let their children be baptized by him, a general command shall go out from the high authority to each and every bailiff, that they take the same pastor, together with him who sent for him, prisoner forthwith, and deliver them into custody at Diez.

The Palatine church council complained in 1595 that "the running out of the hearers to foreign places for communion with the neighbouring Lutheran and Ubiquitist pastors" was becoming common. Kurpfalz, Mandat zur Institution und Polizeiordnung, 16 August 1595 (Reformed; Sehling 19/2, p. 869):

> Darnach, das daß außlaufen der zuhörer an frembde örter zur communion bei den benachbarten lutherischen und ubiquitistischen pfarrern zu gemein werde und je lenger je mehr uberhand neme [...] Uf die außlaufende personen aber > zur frembden communion sollen sie fleißige achtung haben und von den kirchendienern und eltesten jedes orts die verzeichnuß solcher personen abfordern

Further, that the running out of the hearers to foreign places, to the communion with the neighbouring Lutheran and Ubiquitist pastors, is becoming too common and gaining the upper hand more and more, [...] But upon the persons who run out to the foreign communion they shall keep diligent watch, and require a list of such persons from the ministers and elders of each place.

Other Reformed bans:

- Hanau-Münzenberg. A fine of three batzen for those "who run out into foreign lordships to the sermon or Supper" (Kirchenzuchtordnung, 1599/1602; Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 424). The visitors of 1599 asked "whether the people run elsewhere to the communion and have their children baptized elsewhere" (Sehling 10, p. 433).
- Ysenburg. The pastor is to announce each communion a week ahead, and to warn the people faithfully against "running out to foreign places under another lordship for baptism and the Supper" (Kirchenordnung, 1598; Reformed; Sehling 10, p. 646).
- Sayn. The elders were to report those "addicted to idolatry, who therefore run out elsewhere" (Sendschöffenordnung, 1606; Reformed; Sehling 19/1, p. 449). In 1619 the count forbade going to the "idolatrous, papal Mass" and pilgrimages at Marienstatt and elsewhere (Sehling 19/1, p. 454).
- Homburg. The people of Wiel were told in 1605 not to run to Marienhagen for the Supper, but to keep to their mother church (Beschlüsse zu Homburger Kirchensachen; Reformed; Sehling 22, p. 149).

A Calvinist in a Lutheran town. The Landau council's minutes of 1582 show the rule applied to one man. Dr Andreas Gottwald declared that he did not agree with "our churches" on the Supper. The pastor would not let Gottwald's wife lift a child from the font. The council told Gottwald, if he would live in the town, to keep from disputing and from using the Supper under foreign lordships. Landau, Verhandlungen gegen Calvinisten, 26 June 1582 (Sehling 19/1, p. 65):

> das nemblich er, doctor Gottwald, wölle er alhie wohnen, sich solle enthalten nit allein unnötiger tisputation, sondern auch bei frembden herschafften, ausserhalb der stat, des heiligen nachtmal zu geprauchen, sondern wolle er alhie wohnen, das solchs geschehe on ergernus meniglichs. [...] Darauff er sich erklert, das er sich alles desjenigen wölle meydten, was man möchte erachten, das seiner person halb auch in glaubens sachen möchte gemeynte bürgerschafft zu ergernus gereychen. Er wölle auch die predig, sovil das geschehen kündte, alhie besuchen. Das er aber das nachtmal alhie solle empfangen, das wiße er nit zu thun.

namely, that he, Doctor Gottwald, if he would dwell here, should refrain not only from unnecessary disputation, but also from using the holy Supper under foreign lordships, outside the city; but if he would dwell here, that this should be done without offence to any man. [...] Thereupon he declared that he would avoid all that which might be judged likely, on account of his person, to give offence to the common burghers, even in matters of faith. He would also attend the sermons here, so far as that could be done. But that he should receive the Supper here, that he knew not how to do.

The council answered that it "would prescribe him no measure in matters of religion", if only he gave no offence. In December the council ordered the preachers to examine the Calvinists, Schwenckfelders and Anabaptists, and resolved not to tolerate those who would not hear the sermons (Sehling 19/1, p. 65).

Reformed communicants at Lutheran altars. The Reformed theologians did not all forbid the Lutheran Supper. Sehling's editor reports their opinion from the Palatinate under the Lutheran Elector Ludwig VI. Kurpfalz, Sehling's introduction (Sehling 14, p. 67):

> Dabei zeigt sich, daß sich im Lande trotz der Konfessionsänderung vor fünf Jahren immer noch zahlreiche Calvinisten finden, obwohl ihnen 1578 das Auslaufen zum reformierten Abendmahl in das Gebiet Johann Casimirs verboten worden war. Daraufhin hatten reformierte Theologen wie Beza und Ursinus in Gutachten die Teilnahme reformiert Gesinnter an lutherischen Abendmahlsfeiern geprüft und grundsätzlich gebilligt.

It is shown thereby that, despite the change of confession five years before, numerous Calvinists were still to be found in the land, although the running out to the Reformed Supper in the territory of Johann Casimir had been forbidden them in 1578. Thereupon Reformed theologians such as Beza and Ursinus had examined in opinions the participation of the Reformed-minded in Lutheran celebrations of the Supper, and approved it in principle.

The same account is repeated in the introduction to the supplement (Sehling 19/2, p. 684).

18.6 Confession and absolution

The question "who could absolve whom" has two sides in the orders. One is whose absolution counted. The other is from whom a Christian might seek it.

18.6.1 Not from monks and priests

The first evangelical orders took confession away from the monks. Bugenhagen's Hamburg order of 1529 gives it to those who preach. Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1529 (Sehling 5, p. 508):

> Bicht horen und dat sacramente geven. De dat wort gades uns apenbar vordregen, de scholen ock de sacramente vorreken und bicht horen, besundergen in den lesten noden. Wente van anderen besundergen van monneken mochten wi vordechtnisse hebben, dat se nicht recht mit den luden umme gingen in der lere des hilligen evangelii, besundergen in hemeliker bicht und lesten noden.

Hearing confession and giving the sacrament. Those who openly set forth God's word to us shall also minister the sacraments and hear confession, especially in the last necessities. For of others, and especially of monks, we might have suspicion that they would not deal rightly with the people in the doctrine of the holy gospel, especially in secret confession and in the last necessities.

The Upper German catechisms are sharper. They deny that the papists' absolution has any force at all. Strasbourg, Wolfgang Capito's Kinder bericht, 1527 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 20/1, p. 193):

> Frag: Was ist der pfaffen verzeyhung oder absolution? Ant.: Fast ein böser trug, dann die Bepstler, die weil sy auff ir menschen sündlin tringen, haben selbs kein teyl am reych Gottes. Wie möchten dann sy es ander leuten auffschliessen?

Question: What is the priests' forgiveness or absolution? Answer: A very evil deceit; for the papists, since they insist on their little human sins, have themselves no part in the kingdom of God. How then might they open it to other people?

Konrad Sam's catechism for Ulm says the same, and draws the practical consequence. Ulm, Konrad Sam's catechism, 1528/1536 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, p. 108):

> Der Münch oder Pfaffen Absolution oder verzeyhung ist ain trug, sy seind nit Christen, dann sy nit auff die wort Christi, sonder auff ire menschen sündlin tringen, darumb gang weyt von inen, als von den ergsten Gotts feynden.

The monks' or priests' absolution or forgiveness is a deceit. They are not Christians, for they insist not on the words of Christ but on their little human sins. Therefore go far from them, as from the worst enemies of God.

18.6.2 Not to the defenders of error

The orders also refuse their own absolution to those who defend another confession's errors:

- Prussia 1568. The order keeps confession so that the preacher may refuse absolution and the sacrament to "the papists, Sacramentarian fanatics, Anabaptists and other sects like them" who defend their errors (§18.5.1).
- Lippe 1571. The minister is to see that "proven, convicted heretics and persecutors or falsifiers of the truth" are not absolved (Sehling 21, p. 380).
- Posen 1570. On the Polish side, those excommunicated in one congregation are not admitted to the Supper in the other until they are reconciled with the church they offended (art. XV, §18.11.3).

18.6.3 One's own confessor

One's own pastor. Most orders tie confession to the parish, so that discipline may hold. The Prussian order for the bishops (1568) forbids a pastor to receive another parish's people to confession (§18.5.3). Soest's preachers agreed on the same in 1590. Soest, Artikel der Prediger, 1 September 1590 (Sehling 22, p. 480):

> 5. Weil ein pastor seine schaffe unnd derer gelegenheit am besten weiß, auch damit disciplina ecclesiastica möge erhalten werden, soll einer des andern beichtkinder ohn ihres pastors furwissen unnd willen nicht annhemen.

5. Since a pastor knoweth his sheep and their circumstances best, and also that church discipline may be maintained, no one shall accept another's penitents without the foreknowledge and will of their pastor.

Absolution stolen elsewhere. Lippe's order of 1571 describes what the rule prevented. Lippe, Kirchenordnung, 1571 (Sehling 21, p. 380):

> Nachdem sichs auch vielmals zutregt, das etliche Excommunicirte oder von der Communion abgewiesene Leute aus irer Pfarr in eine andere Gemein lauffen und daselbst dem Seelsorger abstelen die Absolution und empfahen mit andern Gottfürchtigen Christen (auff das sie from und heilig von den Leuten geachtet mögen werden) das Sacrament des Altars, weil es in irer Pfarre neben andern Kirchen rechten ihnen von wegen ires Gottlosen Lebens und unbußfertigkeit geweigert und versagt ist, Dieses soll fürsichtiglich von den Predigern als trewen Wechtern der Seelen verhütet und unterlassen werden, damit niemand andern Pfarrhern in das Ampt falle

Since it also often happeneth that certain excommunicated people, or people turned away from the communion, run out of their parish into another congregation, and there steal the absolution from the pastor and receive the sacrament of the altar with other God-fearing Christians (that they may be held godly and holy by the people), because it is refused and denied them in their own parish, together with other rights of the church, on account of their godless life and impenitence: this shall be prudently prevented and forborne by the preachers, as faithful watchmen of souls, so that no one break into another pastor's office.

Any minister of the city. Regensburg had one evangelical ministry in several churches. Its order of 1572 took for granted that people chose their confessor from the whole ministry, "since they all have one office and equal power". It asked only that they confess where they meant to commune, so that the number of communicants in each church might be known. Regensburg, Kirchenregimentsordnung, 1572/1588 (Sehling 13, p. 509):

> zudeme etliche bei einem kirchendiener sich häufig finden, da inmittelst der ander müßig sitzet, dieweil gemeiniglich jedes ihme einen sondern beichtvater erwehlet, da sie doch alle ein amt und gleichen gewalt haben, so sollen die herrn ministri, wann sie einen zweifel haben, ob einer person in der kirchen, darinnen sie beichtet, communiciren werde, sie deswegen fragen und ermahnen, hinfüro an dem ort, da sie jederzeit zu communiciren pflege, die confession zu tun moreover, many gather to one minister of the church while meantime the other sitteth idle, since commonly each chooseth for himself a particular father confessor, though they all have one office and equal power: therefore the reverend ministers, when they are in doubt whether a person will communicate in the church in which he confesseth, shall ask and admonish him on that account, henceforth to make his confession at the place where he is always wont to communicate.

The pastor's own confessor. Henneberg's order of 1582 asks the country pastors, who had no second minister beside them, to seek absolution "once or several times a year" from their neighbouring pastors (Sehling 2, p. 307).

18.7 Ordination

The evangelical ordination, and why it was begun, are treated in §13.10. This section takes up the fellowship side: whose orders the evangelical churches accepted, and whose they did not.

18.7.1 Orders received from the bishops

The evangelical preachers were ordained in the old church. The first generation of preachers had been ordained priests by the bishops. The Hannover order of 1536 makes this a point of its defence: it was the papists who cast out men they had themselves ordained. Hannover, Kirchenordnung, 1536 (Sehling 6/2, p. 997):

> Da unsere christliche prediger das bepstische wesen angegriffen und gestrafft haben, sind sie von papisten verbannet und also durch den bann aus der papisten kirchen gestossen worden, darin sie doch ordiniert und zum predigampt, welchs sie mit gutem gewissen nicht verlassen möchten, beruffen worden sind.

When our Christian preachers attacked and rebuked the papist ways, they were banned by the papists, and so thrust out by the ban from the papists' church, in which they had yet been ordained and called to the office of preaching, which they might not forsake with a good conscience.

Ordination for those not yet ordained. When the evangelical churches began to ordain, they ordained only those who had no orders. Sehling's editor reports the Electoral Saxon decree of 12 May 1535. The superintendents were to send candidates "so far as they had not yet received episcopal consecration" to Wittenberg to be ordained. "This ordination was conceived as a parallel to, or a substitute for, episcopal ordination to the priesthood" (Sehling 7/1, p. 728, editor). The Hoya order of 1581 still speaks of ordaining "the persons who are not ordained" (Sehling 6/2, p. 1132).

The later orders did not ordain again one already ordained:

- Brunswick 1571. The city's order of calling, signed by Chemnitz, says that if the person called "was ordained before elsewhere", he needs "no further ordination", only a public presentation to the congregation (Sehling 6/1, p. 458).
- Strasbourg 1598. A pastor who had been examined and ordained before in the Strasbourg ministry was not ordained again. Only one new to the ministry was examined and ordained (Sehling 20/1, pp. 661–662).

The bishop of Breslau. In Silesia the line between the old ordination and the new was drawn late. Silesia, Sehling's introduction (Sehling 3, p. 391):

> Noch lange haben die Liegnitzer Superintendenten Heinrich Dietrich und Georg Seiler die iurisdictio des Bischofs anerkannt und das Recht zur Ordination ihm nicht bestritten. In Pless wurde sogar noch 1592 die iurisdictio des Bischofs für die Entscheidungen in zweiter Instanz anerkannt.

For a long time the Liegnitz superintendents Heinrich Dietrich and Georg Seiler recognised the bishop's jurisdiction and did not dispute his right of ordination. In Pless the bishop's jurisdiction was recognised for decisions in the second instance even as late as 1592.

The bishops' consecration refused. In the north the evangelical churches gave up waiting for the bishops. The Hamburg order of 1556 gives the reason: the bishops ordained only for the Mass. The text follows Buxtehude's order of 1552 (Sehling 7/1, p. 84). Hamburg, Kirchenordnung, 1556 (Sehling 5, p. 549):

> Nademe der bischoppe wihinge to düsser tidt alleine to den afgödischen papistischen missbruken und alleine tom gottlosen denste gegeven wert, unde doch einer ehrliken und göttliken ordination und institution nödich iss, mach de institution nicht unbillick geschehn, alse de hilligen apostolen gegeven hebben, unde alse wente nuher in unser kercken gewontlick iss gewest, nemlick mit dem gebede unde upleggінge der hende.

Forasmuch as the bishops' consecration is at this time given only for the idolatrous papist abuses and only for the godless service, and yet an honourable and godly ordination and institution is needful, the institution may not unfittingly be done as the holy apostles gave it, and as hath been customary in our church until now, namely with prayer and the laying on of hands.

Einbeck's chapter order of 1543 makes the same point about benefices: the duke's presentees were to be admitted to their prebends "though they be not smeared with oil and chrism after the papist manner, nor consecrated, or otherwise have a defect of birth" (Stiftsordnung of Duke Philip I; Sehling 6/2, p. 1117).

18.7.2 Re-ordination, and orders taken from the papists

The orders accepted Roman orders. They did not re-ordain a priest who came over to them. The corpus has one exception. Pfalz-Neuburg, Generalartikel, 1576 (Sehling 13, p. 198):

> daß prister aus dem bapstumb kommen und sich zu unser wahrhaftigen christlichen religion bekennen und kirchendienst begeren und sich kunftiger zeit noch zutragen möcht und dergleichen personen umb dienst anhalten wurden, soll derselbig, unangesehen er im babstumb seine ordination und formata empfangen, bei seiner ime bevolhenen kirchen loco revocationis widerumb ordinirt und dessen ihme ein testimonium mitgetailt werden.

that priests come out of the papacy, confess our true Christian religion and desire a ministry of the church, and since it may yet come to pass in time to come that such persons apply for service: the same, notwithstanding that he received his ordination and formata in the papacy, shall be ordained again at the church committed to him, in the stead of a recantation, and a certificate thereof given him.

The order does not call the Roman orders void. The new ordination stands "in the stead of a recantation": the priest renounced the papacy by being ordained again before his new congregation.

Taking orders from the papists. Magdeburg's pastors in 1554 went the other way: they would not hold for Christians those who took orders or prebends from the papists. Magdeburg, Etliche artikel zu notwendiger kirchenordnung, 1554, fifth article (Sehling 2, p. 452):

> Der fünfte artikel. Von denen, so von den papisten ordines oder weihe oder prebenden für sich, ire kinder oder freundschaft empfahen. […] Derhalben welche von dem antichrist oder denen, die noch ganz unbekeret papisten sein, ordines, weihe, prebenden, pfründe annemen für sich, ire kinder oder freunde, dieselbigen können wir nicht für christen halten, sintemal sie von dem antichrist besoldung nemen und sich mit im und seinen gliedern verpflichten

The fifth article. Of those who receive orders or consecration or prebends from the papists, for themselves, their children or their kin. […] Therefore those who accept orders, consecration, prebends or benefices from the Antichrist, or from those who are still wholly unconverted papists, for themselves, their children or friends, we cannot hold for Christians; since they take wages from the Antichrist, and bind themselves to him and his members.

The Catholic side. The Roman side, in turn, did not accept Wittenberg orders. In 1539, on the complaint of Amberg's Catholic town pastor, the Count Palatine demanded the removal of all clergy "who were married or not ordained in the Roman way". The city "had at last to let Hügel go, because he was ordained by Luther and not by a bishop" (Sehling 13, p. 258, editor).

18.7.3 Proof of orders

Because orders were accepted across territories, they had to be proved. Most orders gave the new minister a certificate. Lauenburg's says why. Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 408):

> Nach der communion sol alsbald dem ordinato sein zuverlessiges testimonium ordinationis von dem superintendente vorsiegelt, und neben den andern anwesenden pastoribus unterschrieben gegeben werden, zum zeugniss seines ordentlichen berufs, und dass er zum heiligen predigampt zugelassen und kein falscher prediger sei.

After the communion the one ordained shall forthwith be given his trustworthy certificate of ordination, sealed by the superintendent and signed beside him by the other pastors present, for a witness of his orderly calling, and that he hath been admitted to the holy office of preaching, and is no false preacher.

A certificate could also state the confession of the man ordained. Pfalz-Zweibrücken's of 1567 names the errors he renounced, and puts Calvin's doctrine of the Supper first. Pfalz-Zweibrücken, Ordinationszeugnis, 7 September 1567 (Sehling 18, p. 343):

> testatus est se ab omnibus fanaticis opinionibus pugnantibus cum verbo Dei (qualis est Calvini error de Caena domini, Schwenckfeldii blasphemia contra ministerium verbi, furor Anabaptistarum impugnantium baptismum infantum et Magistratum politicum, Origenis et aliorum figmentum de libero arbitrio et similes corruptelae) alienum esse.

he hath testified that he is a stranger to all fanatical opinions that fight against the word of God (such as is Calvin's error concerning the Lord's Supper, Schwenckfeld's blasphemy against the ministry of the word, the madness of the Anabaptists who assail the baptism of infants and the civil magistrate, the fiction of Origen and others concerning free will, and like corruptions).

Other orders show how far the certificates travelled:

- Visitation questions. The visitors asked by whom and where each minister was ordained. The Sponheim articles of 1608 require each minister to report to the chancery "where, when and by whom he was ordained" (Sehling 18, p. 672).
- Brunswick's ministry. Under Mörlin and Chemnitz it was often asked by other territories for a testimonium ordinationis for their preachers. Certificates survive from 1558 to 1568 for men called to Tating in Holstein, to Hannover and elsewhere (Sehling 6/1, p. 343, editor).
- Danzig. In 1586 the council took the right of ordination from the city's quarrelling clergy, and had the necessary ordinations done by the consistory at Stolp in Pomerania (Sehling 4, pp. 172–173, editor).

Poland: a minister of either confession. The Polish union let a congregation call a minister ordained in the other confession. Synod of Petrikau, 1–3 June 1578 (Sandomierz consensus; Sehling 4, p. 263):

> VI. Constitutum est, ut nullus patronus recipiat ac in ecclesia docere patiatur ullum ministrum, nisi qui esset a superattendentibus ac senioribus nostrarum ecclesiarum legitime ordinatus ac missus, bonumque et certum testimonium ab iis haberet. VII. Siquidem unio facta est inter nos Helveticae Augustanae et Bohemicae confessioni addictos, liberum erit ecclesiae seu partonis coetus unius confessionis, justis causis ac bono ordine, a superattendentibus alterius confessionis ministrum petere ac ad se vocare.

VI. It is decreed that no patron shall receive any minister, or suffer him to teach in the church, unless he have been lawfully ordained and sent by the superintendents and seniors of our churches, and have a good and sure testimony from them. VII. Since a union hath been made among us who are devoted to the Helvetic, Augsburg and Bohemian confessions, it shall be free for the church or patron of a congregation of one confession, for just causes and in good order, to ask a minister from the superintendents of the other confession and to call him.

The synod of Thorn in 1595 added that no minister was to be received "unless he be rightly ordained, have a sure testimony, and subscribe the Consensus and conduct himself according to it" (art. IV; Sehling 4, p. 265).

18.8 Preaching

18.8.1 No preaching without a call

Every order requires a call for the pulpit:

- Brandenburg-Ansbach 1536. The visitors were to tell the ministers to let no one "who is not called and examined" preach or give the sacraments (Sehling 11, p. 323).
- Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1567. The certificate of ordination sets against the called minister those who "without awaiting a lawful calling, by private choice invade the public office of teaching in the church", with Jeremiah 23:21: "they ran, and I sent them not" (Sehling 18, p. 343).

The rule was not only evangelical. The Roman Catholic humanist order of Jülich-Cleves-Berg used it against the evangelical preachers. Jülich-Cleves-Berg, Deklaration zur Kirchenordnung, 8 April 1533 (Roman Catholic humanist; Sehling 21, p. 61):

> dat in unseren Furstendommen, Landen und gebieden obgedachte frembde und winckelprediger in geynen wech langer geduldet oder underhalden, Ouch sunst gheyne andere Prediger noch anderer gestalt angenomen werden, dann die rechte Pastoere und ire furweser, die durch unsere verordente Rede zugelassen, und dat geiner die frembde oder nit zugelassene forderen, hoelen, hoeren, huysen, herbergen oder underhalden sall.

that in our principalities, lands and territories the aforesaid strange and hedge preachers be in no wise tolerated or maintained any longer; and that no other preachers be accepted in any other manner than the rightful pastors and their vicars, admitted by our appointed councillors; and that none shall send for, fetch, hear, house, lodge or maintain the strangers or those not admitted.

18.8.2 Strangers in the pulpit

No pastor might let a strange preacher into his pulpit without leave. Reuss gives the rule its shortest form. Reuss, Kirchen-Ordnung of Heinrich IV, 1552 (Sehling 2, p. 157):

> Kein pfarher sol keinen frembden unbekanten prediger ohne vorwissen des superattendenten uf die canzel lassen, denn daraus vielmals grosser unrath entstanden.

No pastor shall let any strange, unknown preacher into the pulpit without the foreknowledge of the superattendent, for great mischief hath often arisen thereof.

The leave came from different bodies in different places:

- The superintendent and the lord. Nassau-Dillenburg 1550: no "young or strange predicant" without the lord and the superintendent (Sehling 10, p. 91).

- The whole ministry. Wismar's settlement of 1572: no unknown preacher "without the knowledge and consent of the whole ministry". The superintendent might preach in the other parish churches except on the highest feasts, after warning the local pastor (Sehling 5, p. 313).
- The council. Aschersleben 1575: "no strange person into the pulpit" without the council's consent (Sehling 2, p. 477).
- The chancery or the inspectors. Sponheim 1608, under the heading "No stranger shall preach": no minister may let "another and strange theologian" preach in his church or its filials without the chancery or the inspectors knowing (Sehling 18, p. 672).
- Certificates. Wittgenstein's order of 1555 admits a foreign preacher to a vacant parish only with certificates "both of his honourable and chaste life and of the soundness of his doctrine" from the places where he served before (Sehling 22, p. 83).

By the end of the century the rule served the confession. The Soest preachers would let no one into the pulpit until they knew "to which body of doctrine each one confesseth". Soest, Artikel der Prediger, 1 September 1590 (Sehling 22, p. 480):

> 2. Weil auch grosser unrath hiraus entstehen kan, wen man junge unnd auch unbekante leute auff den predigestuel komen lesset unnd weiß nicht, zu wellichem corpori doctrinae sich ein jeder bekennet, als soll keiner unter unns hinfurt jemandt zu predigen auff die cantzel komen lassen, er sey den fur das gantze ministerium gestellet unnd mit ihme nach nottorfft geredet worden.

2. Since great mischief may also arise from letting young and also unknown people come into the pulpit, without knowing to which body of doctrine each one confesseth: none among us shall henceforth let anyone come into the pulpit to preach, unless he have been set before the whole ministry and spoken with as need requireth.

Only the Polish union opened the pulpit to the other confession. Its ministers preached in each other's churches (§18.11.3). In mixed Wimpfen the hearers of each religion might go to the other's sermon (§18.9.2).

18.8.3 The other confession's ministers, and the pulpit

No fellowship, no disputes. Wolfstein's instruction of 1574 lays two rules on its pastors. They are to have no fellowship with the papist priests, citing 1 Timothy 6 and 2 John 10–11. And they are not to dispute with foreign pastors, Calvinist or papist. Wolfstein, Christliche Instructio of Thomas Stieber, 1574 (Sehling 13, pp. 590–591):

> Zum zwelften sollen alle pfarhern unter unserm genedigen herren sich aller papistischen pfaffen enthalten und entschlahen und kaine gemainschaft mit ihnen haben, auf das unsere zuehörer mögen mit der tat sehen und erkennen, daß unser predigen wider das abgöttisch babstumb aus rechtschaffenem herzen und inprünstigem eifer rainer lere herfließe [...] Es schickt sich seer übel und ist ergrelich, daß wir vil gemainschaft haben sollen mit denen, die wir in unsern predigen für feinde unsers Hern Christi ausrufen und als götzendiener verdammen. [...] Si quis venit ad vos et hanc doctrinam non adfert, ne recipiatis eum in domum nec ave ei dixeritis. Qui enim illi dicit ave, communicat operibus eius malis [2.Joh. 10f.]. Zum dreizehenden sollen alle pfarhern und kürchendiener, in unsers genedigen hern land und herrschaft wohnent, sich enthalten, mit fremden pfarherren, sie seien calvinisch oder papistisch, in disputationes und ergerliches gezenk einzulassen, daraus wenig gutes erfolget, auch solche unsere widersacher sich schwerlich weisen lassen und dadurch auch oft weltliche herrschaft aneinander gehetzt und zu unfriedlichen widerwillen beweget und geraizt werden.

Twelfthly, all pastors under our gracious lord shall abstain and keep themselves from all papist priests, and have no fellowship with them; that our hearers may see and know in deed that our preaching against the idolatrous papacy floweth from an upright heart and a fervent zeal for pure doctrine [...] It is very unseemly and offensive that we should have much fellowship with those whom in our sermons we proclaim enemies of our Lord Christ and condemn as idolaters. [...] If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds [2 John 10–11]. Thirteenthly, all pastors and ministers of the church dwelling in our gracious lord's land and lordship shall refrain from engaging in disputations and offensive quarrels with foreign pastors, be they Calvinist or papist; from which little good followeth, and such adversaries of ours will hardly let themselves be taught, and thereby worldly lordships are also often set against one another and moved and provoked to unpeaceable ill will.

Sehling's editor glosses the Calvinist pastors as those "for instance in Electoral Palatine Amberg". If a Wolfstein pastor was asked for an account of his faith, he was to give it briefly "in all fear of God" (1 Peter 3:15).

Naming without reviling. Where the lord was of another religion, or the town held two, the pulpit was bridled:

- Sponheim 1599. The pastor of Kastellaun, where the margravine resided, asked whether he might name "the papists and the ass, the pope". He was told he might expound the orthodox doctrine "in thesis and antithesis" and name the other party. But he was to keep from odious epithets and preach "to edify and not to destroy". All pastors were to name the adversaries in the disputed articles, "so that the hearers know of which party one speaketh": papists, Anabaptists, Schwenckfelders, Calvinists. But they were to do it without epithets joined "with injury and contumely" (Sehling 18, p. 663).
- Colmar. The magistrate summoned the deacon Johann Georg Magnus over an Ascension sermon against the Zwinglians. He was told to leave such "subtleties" off the pulpit and not to use the names "Zwinglians" and "Calvinists" (Sehling 20/2, p. 485, editor).
- Augsburg 1591. The preacher's oath in the biconfessional city (§18.9.3).
- Wimpfen 1568. Both pastors were to keep from "reviling, scolding and slandering" (§18.9.3).

The Reformed side: no condemnations. The Reformed governments made the same rule in their own interest. In the Upper Palatinate no one was admitted to a church or school office "unless he vow upon the mandatum de non calumniando". Upper Palatinate, Generalanweisung, 20 March 1598 (Reformed; Sehling 13, p. 348):

> 13. Ingleichen soll keiner zu einiger kirchen- oder schuldienst zugelassen werden, er gelobe dann an uf das mandatum de non calumniando, über welchem mandato kirchenräte bei beederseits religionsverwanten steif und fest zu halten, schuldig sein sollen und den orthodoxis diesfals ebensowenig als den andern durch die finger sehen.

13. Likewise no one shall be admitted to any church or school office unless he vow upon the mandate against calumny; over which mandate the church councillors shall be bound to hold stiffly and fast among those related to both religions, and in this case to wink no more at the orthodox than at the others.

The Reformed recess for Lutheran Amberg (1593) admitted Jacob Schopper as city preacher on the same condition. He was to refrain "from all reviling and bitter calumny and condemnation (salva tamen thesi et antithesi)" (Sehling 13, p. 336). In Hessian Katzenelnbogen in 1600 the ministers were told to leave off "the calumnies, insults and condemnations" in the points still disputed "between the evangelical churches", on both sides. They were not to bring onto the pulpit new phrases of the omnipresence of Christ's flesh, or of its "corporal and real in-existence in or under the bread and wine" (Reformed; Sehling 9, p. 60).

The Reformed Kurpfalz grounded its mandate against condemnations of 1584 on the Lutheran fathers themselves (§18.11.1).

18.9 Prayer and worship side by side

18.9.1 Prayer for, and against, the other confessions

No order outside Poland provides for common worship with another confession. But the orders pray about the others in the general prayer and the litany, both for them and against them.

For the heretics. The early Upper German and Franconian orders pray for their conversion. Heilbronn's order of 1530 has the preacher pray in the general prayer "for heretics and the obstinate, always a special prayer for each". Heilbronn, Confessio Heilbronnensis and Kirchenordnung, 1530 (Sehling 17/1, p. 286):

> Nach demselben hellt der prediger das gemein gebett, vleissig bittende fur die Cristenlichen hurtten, fur die weltlich oberkaitt, keiser, konig, fursten etc., fur krankh und schwach, fur gemeinen friden, fur die finnd Cristenlichs plutts, fur die Frucht der erden, fur ketzer und halsterrig, allweg ein sonder gebett fur jedeß.

After the same the preacher holdeth the common prayer, praying diligently for the Christian shepherds, for the temporal magistrates, emperor, king, princes etc., for the sick and weak, for the common peace, for the enemies of Christian blood, for the fruit of the earth, for heretics and the obstinate: always a special prayer for each.

Ulm's handbook of 1531 bids prayer for heretics and apostates beside the Jews and heathen. Ulm, Handbüchlein, 1531 (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, p. 176):

> Bitten für all unglaubig Juden, hayden, ketzer und von der kirchen Christi abtrünnig, das Got, der herr, allen falschen, irrigen unglauben außreutten, sein reych täglich mehren und weittern wölle, das Christus, unser herr, alle die, so im der vatter geben hatt, durch sein gnadenreych, krefftig wort beruffe unnd herzubring, damit wir alle ain schaffstall, und er, unnser ayniger hirt unnd haylandt, auch den hayden und allen menschen bekandt werde.

To pray for all unbelieving Jews, heathen, heretics and apostates from the church of Christ: that God the Lord would root out all false, erring unbelief, and daily increase and enlarge his kingdom; that Christ our Lord would call and bring hither, through his gracious, mighty word, all whom the Father hath given him, that we may all be one sheepfold, and he, our only shepherd and saviour, be made known also to the heathen and to all men.

The Brandenburg-Ansbach Auctuarium of the Interim (1548) puts prayers "for unbelievers, sects and factions" in the place of the minor and major canon (Interim order; Sehling 11, p. 327).

Against them. The later Lutheran orders pray against the other confessions as enemies of the word:

- Regensburg 1567. The general prayer asks that God's word may remain pure "against all the tyranny and falsification of the Turk, the pope, the heretics, tyrants and false brethren" (Sehling 13, p. 479).
- Pfalz-Zweibrücken 1565. The duke sent the parishes a prayer "against the Turk and the sectaries", that is, "the heretics, sectaries and fanatics" (Sehling 18, p. 311).
- Kurland 1570. The general instruction drops the Ave Maria. It has the litany sung on Sundays "very vehemently against the pope, the Turk", the devil and all his members.

Kurland, Instructio generalis, 1570 (Sehling 5, p. 80):

> Das ave Maria, aus papistischer gewonheit gebraucht, sol mit der zeit abgebracht werden, und gemeinlich des sontags die letania gesungen, ganz heftigen wider den babst, türk, gog und magog, mesech und die tabernackel kedar, den teufel selbst und alle seine glieder, tyrannen und ketzer gebeten werden.

The Ave Maria, used out of papist custom, shall be done away in time; and commonly on Sunday the litany shall be sung, and prayer made very vehemently against the pope, the Turk, Gog and Magog, Meshech and the tents of Kedar, the devil himself and all his members, tyrants and heretics.

The same instruction has the prayer bell rung three times a day, with prayer "against the devil and his members, tyrants and heretics, pope, Turks and their consorts" (Sehling 5, p. 92).

Could the others pray? The godparent rules turned on this question (§18.4.3). For the Bremen preachers a papist's prayer was "nothing but mere sin and curse", since it was without faith in Christ. For the Hessian visitors of 1556 the papists "confess one faith with us". Regensburg asked of the godparent that he be one "who can and shall pray to God with" the church.

18.9.2 At the other confession's worship

The orders say little about a Christian present at the worship of another confession on a single occasion. Two texts give opposite answers.

To the church door. Pfalz-Neuburg's general articles of 1576 deal with subjects invited to a wedding in a Catholic territory. They may attend the wedding but not the Mass. Pfalz-Neuburg, Generalartikel, 1576, art. LXIV.3 (Sehling 13, p. 231):

> 3. Truege sich dann zue, daß jemand aus disem furstentumb ins pabstumb zun hochzeiten beruefen, derselbig neben andern der bäbstischen meß aus unverstand beiwonen möchte, sollen die pfarrer dergleichen personen auch vor sich erfordern und mit inen beschaidenlich handlen, auch, was die meß vor ein abgötterei und greul vor Gott sei, mit guetem grund heiliger schrift genugsamben bericht geben und darvon abmanen. Im fall si aber bei der hochzeit gern sein wollt, si anweisen, daß si weiter nicht weder bis fur die kirchtür gee oder, da si mit andern in die kirchen komen, alsbald wider umbkeren und herausgeen und kainesweg mit verletzung ires gewissens und ander leut ergernus bei der abgötterei bleiben noch dieselbigen mit irer gegenwart bestetigen.

3. If it should then come to pass that anyone from this principality be invited to weddings in the papacy, and might, with others, be present at the papist Mass out of want of understanding, the pastors shall summon such persons also and deal with them discreetly, and give them sufficient instruction, on the good ground of holy Scripture, of what an idolatry and > abomination before God the Mass is, and dissuade them from it. But in case such a person would gladly be at the wedding, they shall direct him to go no further than the church door; or, if he come into the church with the others, to turn back at once and go out, and in no wise to stay at the idolatry, to the wounding of his conscience and the offence of other people, nor confirm it by his presence.

The same article deals with children placed in service in the papacy. The pastor is to warn such a child to keep to what it has learned, to stay clear of idolatry, and to come to him when it wishes to communicate (Sehling 13, p. 231).

Into the other's sermon. At Wimpfen, where the Catholics and the Augsburg Confession shared one parish church, the council's agreement of 1568 let each side hear the other. Wimpfen, Regelung der Predigtzeiten und Festtage beider Konfessionen, 23 July 1568 (Sehling 17/2, p. 520):

> Gleichsfalls sollenn auch beede pfarverweser sich inn iren predigenn der beschaidenhait bevleissen, des schmehens, schelltens unnd hollhippens messigen unnd enthallten, sonder ir jeder die notturfft seiner leher also furtragen, damit der annder und dessen pfarrkinder darunder schmehelichenn nit angetzogenn noch schumpffieret werdenn. Es mögen auch die pfarverweser selbst unnd ire zuhörer inn des andern predigen unverhindert woll geen, doch wie sich gepurth stillschweigenn, dem prediger nit inreden noch inn ainigen weg mit geberden zu wider handlen, auch sonsten selbige pfarrkinder mit wortten unnd der tadt unbelästigt lassenn.

Likewise also both parish vicars shall be diligent in modesty in their sermons, and moderate and refrain from reviling, scolding and slandering; but each of them shall so set forth the necessary things of his doctrine, that the other and his parishioners be not touched with reviling nor put to shame thereby. The parish vicars themselves and their hearers may also go unhindered into the other's sermons; yet, as is fitting, keep silence, not interrupt the preacher, nor act against him in any way with gestures, and otherwise leave his parishioners unmolested in word and deed.

18.9.3 Two religions in one town

The Peace of Augsburg (1555) left the imperial cities where both religions were then practised to keep both. A number of the orders are the settlements by which councils, chapters and lords divided the churches, the hours and the pulpits.

Wimpfen. The 1568 agreement divides the Sunday morning between the two parish vicars. The Catholic preacher and ceremonies are to end by eight, or at the latest half past eight, in summer, and by half past eight or nine in winter. Then the Augsburg Confession has the church. After the midday meal the evangelical catechism is held at one, and the Catholic vespers after it. The agreement also lists the feasts both sides keep (Sehling 17/2, pp. 519–521).

Augsburg. The city held "both the old religion and the Augsburg Confession". Its preachers swore to keep the peace between them. Augsburg, Einzelbestimmungen zu den Berufungsverhandlungen, 1591 (Sehling 12, p. 115):

> und, weil in der stadt Augspurg beede, die alt religion und augspurgische confession, gehalten werden, mich lästerns, schändens, schmähens der personen und alles desjenigen, das zu unrueh, widerwillen und verbitterung des gemeinen manns dienen kan, gänzlich enthalten, bei auslegung und erklärung des heiligen evangelii nach dem verstand der augspurgischen confession bleiben and, since in the city of Augsburg both the old religion and the Augsburg Confession are kept, I will wholly refrain from blaspheming, disgracing and reviling persons, and from all that may serve to the unrest, ill will and embitterment of the common man; and will abide, in expounding and declaring the holy gospel, by the sense of the Augsburg Confession.

Amberg. The Reformed Elector's recess of 1593 for Lutheran Amberg left every inhabitant free to choose between the two churches. Upper Palatinate, Amberger Rezeß, 8 June 1593 (Reformed; Sehling 13, p. 337):

> Und soll nunmehr allen burgern, inwohnern und fremden ohne einigs schmehen, ufrucken, furwerfen oder entgeltung frei- und bevorstehen, zu einer oder der andern kirchen, predigten und sacramenten sich zu bekennen, die zu besuchen und zu gebrauchen, wie nit weniger ir einer gegen dem andern, was religion der auch sei, sich schidlich, fridlich und freundlich als einer statt burger und inwohner erzaigen und verhalten, auch eim wie dem andern schutz und schirm gehalten werden.

And it shall now be free and open to all burghers, inhabitants and strangers, without any reviling, reproach, upbraiding or penalty, to confess themselves to the one church or the other, its sermons and sacraments, and to visit and use them; and no less shall each of them, of whatever religion he be, show and conduct himself toward the other peaceably, quietly and kindly, as burghers and inhabitants of one city; and protection and defence shall be held for the one as for the other.

Hagenau. The council of 1614 separated the two religions "in churches and also in schools", and gave each its own buildings. Hagenau, Fundationsbrief, 3 June 1614 (Sehling 20/2, p. 463):

> dann weil wir in dießer unßerer statt die zwo im Heiligen römischen reich zugelaßene religionen, wie sie genant sindt: die alte oder Catholische und die Augspurgische confession, beyeinander haben, sie auch ohn allen zwang oder gewissens betrengnuß zuerhalten, ein yeden bey der einen oder andern, darzu ihn sein gewissenn treibt, zulaßen, zuschützen und handtzuhaben uns erclärеht, das wir beede theil oder partheyen wie in kirchen also auch in schuolen von einander sonderten for since we have in this our city the two religions admitted in the Holy Roman Empire, as they are named, the old or Catholic and the Augsburg Confession, side by side, and have declared ourselves to maintain them without any compulsion or oppression of conscience, and to admit, protect and uphold each man in the one or the other to which his conscience driveth him: [we resolved] that we would separate the two sides or parties from one another, in churches as also in schools

Other settlements:

- Wetzlar. The town and the chapter shared the collegiate church after an agreement of 1561 (Sehling 9, p. 674). In 1586 the council received some sixty families of the Walloon Reformed refugee congregation from Wesel. Sehling's editor adds that they used the choir of the former Franciscan church and the Lutherans its nave. This made a second shared church, "of the Lutherans and Reformed" (Sehling 9, p. 670, editor).
- Leutkirch. In the calendar dispute of 1603 the council held all burghers "of the Catholic Roman or of the Augsburg Confession religion" in equal protection. It declared the calendar "for no religious but a political matter" (Sehling 17/2, p. 546).
- The Wild- and Rhinegraviate. The Wild- and Rhinegraves shared the lordship of Vinstingen with Catholic co-lords. Their treaty of 13 January 1584 let the co-lords' subjects in the villages have Catholic worship, with churches and priests at the co-lords' cost. The Rhinegraves promised to protect the Catholic pastors, priests, schoolmasters and subjects "in their church usages, ceremonies and exercise of their religion" (Sehling 19/2, p. 551).
- Samter. In Greater Poland the two lords of Samter agreed in 1575 on the common use of the parish church for Catholic and Protestant worship (Sehling 4, p. 255, editor).

Schools. The Transylvanian synod of Mediasch (1578) recalled the Saxon scholars "from the schools of Klausenburg", which Sehling's editor calls "dominated by another confession". The obstinate were to have no office in the Saxon schools or churches (art. XVIII; Sehling 24, p. 427). The Kraków synod of 1573 held it "wrong" for evangelical parents to send their children "to the schools of blasphemers and idolaters" (Sehling 4, p. 261).

18.10 Burial and marriage

18.10.1 Burial

The churchyard closed to obstinate papists. Christian burial was refused to those who died outside the church. Magdeburg's pastors in 1554 gave the Catholic practice as their warrant. Magdeburg, Etliche artikel zu notwendiger kirchenordnung, 1554, fourth article (Sehling 2, p. 451):

> Der vierde artikel. Von denen, so lautere papisten sein und bis an ir ende bleiben. Welche als pure verstockte papisten und feinde des evangelii Christi des rechten gebrauchs der sacramenten und der rechten kirchen versterben, denen solte man billich unsern kirchhof, da die christen auf ligen und schlafen, genzlich abschlagen, damit man nicht eine vermengung machete zwischen den gepeinen der christen und der offentlichen abgesagten und endlichen feinden Christi. […] Dazu brauchen die papisten gegen uns evangelische solchen ernst, das sie uns nicht wollen auf ire vermeinte geweihete kirchof lassen begraben, das, wie sie fürgeben, ire heilige orter nicht mit unsern leiben möchten verunreiniget werden. Wieviel mehr sollen wir christen in solchem stücke einen christlichen eifer erzeigen.

The fourth article. Of those who are mere papists and remain so to their end. Those who die as pure, hardened papists and enemies of the gospel of Christ, of the right use of the sacraments and of the right church, ought rightly to be wholly refused our churchyard, where the Christians lie and sleep; lest a mingling be made between the bones of the Christians and of the open, declared and final enemies of Christ. […] Moreover the papists use such earnestness against us evangelicals that they will not let us be buried in their supposed consecrated churchyards, so that, as they pretend, their holy places might not be defiled with our bodies. How much more shall we Christians show a Christian zeal in this point.

The Hoya order of 1581 sends to "the common field" the impenitent despisers of the word, the heretics, and "hardened papist people, if they die without repentance". Hoya, Kirchenordnung, 1581 (Sehling 6/2, p. 1172):

> ferner ketzer, gotteslesterer und verfolger der warheit, so in ihrem gottlosen wesen bleiben, endlich verstockte papistische leute, so dieselben ohne busfertigkeit verstürben und verfielen, sollen sie von der Christen begrebnis abgesondert, ins gemeine feld begraben werden; denn sie nicht wirdig sein, auf den gemeinen gottsäckern zu ruhen, da andere fromme Christen ihre schlaffkämmerlein haben und in Christo ruhen.

further, heretics, blasphemers and persecutors of the truth who remain in their godless ways; and lastly, hardened papist people, if they should die and depart without repentance: they shall be set apart from the burial of the Christians, and buried in the common field; for they are not worthy to rest in the common God's acres, where other godly Christians have their little sleeping chambers and rest in Christ.

Other orders on burial:

- Mansfeld 1580. The agenda refuses Christian burial, with bells and singing, to those held fast in "false, heretical and condemned doctrine", who avoid the church and the sacraments and revile pure doctrine, if they die unrepentant. The grounds are 2 John and Titus 3 (§18.3; Sehling 2, pp. 246–247).
- Regensburg 1567. The church order makes separate provision for "those who are not of our doctrine and confession", and for those who "desire to be buried among the papists" (Sehling 13, p. 483).
- Wied 1564 (Reformed). Whoever dies in obstinate contempt of God and his gospel is to be "deprived of the common burial of the faithful" (Sehling 19/1, p. 466).

18.10.2 Marriage between spouses of unequal religion

The orders did not dissolve a marriage for difference of religion. Lauenburg's order of 1585 applies 1 Corinthians 7, and makes the one exception that Paul makes. Lauenburg, Kirchenordnung, 1585 (Sehling 5, p. 441):

> Aber wenn ohn wissen des andern teils das eine unrichtiger religion von anbeginne gewesen, oder hernach in stehender ehe falscher unchristlicher religion worden were, ist klar, dass, welche wegen ungleicher religion und glauben die ehe zwischen solchen eheleuten zerreissen und scheiden wollen, offentlich wieder Paulum, auch viele exempel und historien handeln, es were denn, dass das eine theil das ander derwegen bösslichen vorliesse und vorliefe, wie bei den widerteufern oft geschicht. Denn in solchem fall muss dem unschüldigem theile vermüge der lehre des apostels Pauli hülfe geleistet werden.

But if, without the knowledge of the other party, the one had been of an unsound religion from the beginning, or had afterwards become of a false, unchristian religion while the marriage stood, it is clear that those who would tear apart and separate the marriage between such spouses on account of unequal religion and faith act openly against Paul, and also against many examples and histories; unless the one party should therefore maliciously forsake and run from the other, as often happeneth among the Anabaptists. For in such a case help must be given to the innocent party, according to the doctrine of the apostle Paul.

The Anabaptist side is stated in Pfalz-Zweibrücken's order of 1557, among the Anabaptist errors: "if an Anabaptist is in marriage, and the other person will not hold to the Anabaptists' error, he may leave her and take another" (Sehling 18, p. 147).

Marriages into the other confession were discouraged, not forbidden. Pfalz-Neuburg's articles of 1576 tell the pastors to preach "with all discretion" against parents who "marry their children into the papacy". Such parents are to be summoned and warned of the danger. If the children are "defiled with idolatry", the superintendent is to admonish the parents to help them out of the papacy again (art. LXIV.1; Sehling 13, pp. 230–231).

18.11 Agreements between the traditions

18.11.1 The Wittenberg Concord and its memory

Strasbourg's account. The Strasbourg church order of 1598 tells the history of its own fellowship with Saxony. It begins with the Elector at Augsburg in 1530, who "had no fellowship with those commonly held to be Zwinglian, nor afterwards, until they declared their mind" (Sehling 20/1, p. 557). Then it comes to the Concord. Strasbourg, Kirchenordnung, 1598 (Sehling 20/1, p. 558):

> Hierauff ist nun endlich in anno 1536 die Vergleichung zwischen den Sächsischen und Oberländischen Kirchen erfolget, In deren sie sich dann nit allein uber dem Articul vom heiligen Abendmal, der Kindertauff und Privat Absolution mit einander vergleichen, Sondern auch auff beiden theilen zu der Chur- und Fürsten Augspurgischen Confession und Apologia, welche damaln noch ungeändert waren, sich rund erkläret haben.

Hereupon at last, in the year 1536, the agreement between the Saxon and the Upper German churches followed. In it they not only agreed with one another on the article of the holy Supper, infant baptism and private absolution, but also on both sides declared themselves roundly for the Augsburg Confession and Apology of the electors and princes, which were at that time still unaltered.

The Concord was taken into the orders of the Upper German cities. Ulm's visitation articles of 1537 bind the preachers to teach of the sacrament "according to the council's order and also its declaration on the Wittenberg Concord" (Moderate Reformed; Sehling 17/2, p. 198). In 1564 Pfalz-Neuburg and Pfalz-Zweibrücken prescribed the Concord's phrases for preaching on the Supper against the Calvinists (§17.12.3; Sehling 13, p. 148; 18, p. 317).

The Reformed reading. The Reformed Palatinate read the same history the other way. Its mandate of 1584 against condemnations argued that the makers of the concords had acknowledged one another as brothers. Kurpfalz, Mandat gegen Kondemnationen, 1584 (Reformed; Sehling 14, p. 512):

> sinthemal es an deme und gewiß ist, daß solche gelehrte männer und kirchendiener laut deren miteinander nicht allein anno etc. [15]29 zu Marpurg, sonder vilmehr anno etc. [15]36 zu Wittenberg gemachten concordien und brüderlichen vereynbarung in allen haubtpuncten unsers christlichen glaubens, auch im handel von heyligen tauf und vom heyligen abendmal in fundamento einig gewesen und einander für brüder erkennt since it is certain and sure that such learned men and ministers of the church, according to the concords and brotherly agreement made with one another not only in the year [15]29 at Marburg, but much more in the year [15]36 at Wittenberg, were one in the foundation in all the chief points of our Christian faith, also in the matter of holy baptism and of the holy Supper, and acknowledged one another as brothers

18.11.2 Prussia and the Bohemian Brethren, 1549

Duke Albrecht received the Bohemian Brethren who fled to Prussia in 1549, after examining their confession. Sehling's editor summarises the archival record. Prussia, Sehling's introduction (Sehling 4, p. 22):

> Wir erfahren aus diesem Akte, dass die Böhmen, die man auch Pikarden und Waldenser nenne, nach Preussen gekommen seien, dass man zur Prüfung ihres Glaubens ihre Prediger nach Königsberg citirt und verhört habe; sie hätten ihr Glaubensbekenntniss, gedruckt zu Wittenberg durch Georg Rau 1538, überreicht, und man habe ihre Lehre untadelhaft gefunden; zwar stimmten sie in den Ceremonien nicht mit Preussen überein, das seien aber Mitteldinge, und sie wollten sich in der Zukunft nach der Landesordnung halten. Sie wurden deshalb aufgenommen und es wurden ihnen 21 Artikel vorgeschrieben, deren Verfasser Staphylus war

We learn from this act that the Bohemians, who are also called Picards and Waldensians, had come to Prussia; that their preachers had been summoned to Königsberg and examined for the testing of their faith; that they had handed over their confession of faith, printed at Wittenberg by Georg Rau in 1538, and their doctrine had been found blameless; that they did not, it is true, agree with Prussia in the ceremonies, but these were things indifferent, and they would keep in future to the order of the land. They were therefore received, and twenty-one articles were prescribed to them, whose author was Staphylus.

The visitation of Soldau in 1578 shows the later aim: that the Bohemians should be absorbed into the native church (Sehling 4, p. 22, editor).

18.11.3 Poland: the Consensus of Sandomierz and its synods

In Poland the Lutherans, the Reformed and the Bohemian Brethren made a union in 1570. It is the only text in the corpus in which churches of different confessions grant one another fellowship in word and sacrament. Each side recognised the other's doctrine of the chief articles as orthodox. Synod of Sandomierz, 14 April 1570 (Sandomierz consensus; Sehling 4, p. 257):

> Primum quemodmodum et nos qui in praesenti synodo nostram confessionem edidimus et fratres, nunquam credidimus, eos, qui Augustanam confessionem amplectuntur, aliter quam pie et orthodoxe sentire de deo et sacra trinitate atque incarnatione filii dei, et justificatione nostra, aliisque praecipuis capitibus fidei nostrae. Ita etiam ii, qui Augustanam confessionem sequuntur, professi sunt candide et syncere, se vicissim tam de nostrarum ecclesiarum quam de fratrum Bohemicorum (quos quidam rerum ignari Waldenses vocant) confessione de deo et sacra triade, incarnatione filii dei, justificatione, et aliis primariis capitibus fidei christianae, nil agnoscere, quod sit absonum ab orthodoxa veritate, et puro verbo dei.

First, as we who have published our confession in the present synod, and the Brethren, have never believed that those who embrace the Augsburg Confession think otherwise than piously and orthodoxly of God and the holy Trinity, and of the incarnation of the Son of God, and of our justification, and of the other chief heads of our faith: so also those who follow the Augsburg Confession have professed candidly and sincerely that they in turn acknowledge nothing in the confession, both of our churches and of the Bohemian Brethren (whom certain men ignorant of the facts call Waldensians), concerning God and the holy Triad, the incarnation of the Son of God, justification, and the other primary heads of the Christian faith, that is discordant with the orthodox truth and the pure word of God.

The Consensus binds the churches to maintain the union by hearing the word and using the sacraments in each other's congregations. Synod of Sandomierz, 14 April 1570 (Sandomierz consensus; Sehling 4, p. 258):

> Adhaec recipimus mutuo consensu, omni studio nostris fratribus omnibus persuasuros, atque eos invitaturos ad hunc christianum et unanimem consensum amplectendum, colendum et conseruandum, illumque alendum et obsignandum praecipue auditione verbi (frequentando tam hujus, quam alterius cujusque confessionis caetus) et sacramentorum usu, observato tamen recto ordine, et gradu tam disciplinae quam consuetudinis uniuscujusque ecclesiae.

Moreover we undertake by mutual consent that we will persuade all our brethren with all zeal, and invite them, to embrace, cherish and preserve this Christian and unanimous consensus, and to nourish and seal it, chiefly by the hearing of the word (frequenting the assemblies both of this and of each other confession) and by the use of the sacraments; yet keeping the right order and degree both of the discipline and of the custom of each church.

The Posen articles. The synod of Posen in May 1570 turned the Consensus into rules. They answer most of this chapter's questions for Poland. Synod of Posen, Consignatio, 20 May 1570 (Sandomierz consensus; Sehling 4, p. 259):

> II. Ministri partis utriusque, cum conciones in templis, tum sacramenta administrent et dispensent, ea forma et ritu eodem qui usitatus iisdem est, idque absque ulla offensionis suspitione. III. Si in loco aliquo fuerint duo utriusque coetus ministri, vel si casu aliquo alter alterum convenerit fueritue vocatus, debent absque ulla offensionis suspitione et conciones et sacramenta administrare, eodem et quidem puro et candido animo gloriam dei promoventes. IV. Ubicunque fuerit pastor coetus unius, patronus loci illius non debet pastorem coetus alterius ad conciones peragendas et administranda sacramenta, absque consensu sui proprii ministri vocare et suscipere [...] VI. Ministros auditoresque partis unius, pars altera nulla vel ratione vel occasione abstrahat, sed eos in eadem coetus societate confirmet et promoveat. VII. Utriusque partis ministri auditores suos doceant, admoneant, illisque sua pastorali autoritate injungant, ne ecclesias confessionis alterius in omnibus doctrinae et rituum punctis damnare, verbis vel scriptis ullis perstringere audeant, sed ut bene de illis sentiant et loquantur. [...] XIV. Utriusque partis ministri ad usum sacramentorum auditores ab altera parte venientes non admittant, absque testimonio pastoris illius, cujus propriae subjacent curae. Exceptis comitiis, synodo generali, aut forte aliqua peregrinatione. XV. Excommunicati autoritate clavium Christi ab uno coetu non admittantur ad sacram coenam in altero coetu, nisi prius cum ecclesia quam offenderunt reconcilientur.

II. Let the ministers of both parts both preach sermons in the churches and administer and dispense the sacraments, in the same form and rite as is customary with them, and that without any suspicion of offence. III. If in any place there be two ministers, one of each congregation, or if by any chance the one meet the other or be called, they ought without any suspicion of offence to administer both sermons and sacraments, promoting the glory of God with the same, and that a pure and candid, mind. IV. Wherever there is a pastor of the one congregation, the patron of that place ought not to call and receive a pastor of the other congregation to preach sermons and administer the sacraments without the consent of his own minister [...] VI. Let neither part by any means or occasion draw away the ministers and hearers of the other part, but confirm and further them in the fellowship of the same congregation. VII. Let the ministers of both parts teach and admonish their hearers, and enjoin them by their pastoral authority, that they dare not condemn the churches of the other confession in all points of doctrine and rites, nor touch them with any words or writings, but think and speak well of them. [...] XIV. Let the ministers of neither part admit to the use of the sacraments hearers coming from the other part, without the testimony of the pastor under whose own care they lie; except at diets, at a general synod, or perhaps on some journey. XV. Let those excommunicated by one congregation by the authority of Christ's keys not be admitted to the holy Supper in the other congregation, unless they have first been reconciled with the church which they offended.

Article XVIII of the same articles lists exorcism first among the "papistical ceremonies and rites" to be done away by degrees. Then follow images, relics, the superstitious use of candles, the consecration of herbs, banners, and gold and silver crosses (Sehling 4, p. 259).

The later synods renewed the union and adjusted it:

- Kraków 1573. The synod renewed the Consensus and the Posen articles. It left the Brethren and the Augsburg churches free to keep "their own rites and customs", especially concerning the superintendent, the seniors and synods (Sehling 4, p. 260). It broke off all dealings with the Arian Anabaptists (§18.3).
- Petrikau 1578. A congregation might call a minister from the superintendents of the other confession (§18.7.3). Standing or kneeling at the Supper was left free, and sitting rejected (§2.15.3).
- Włocławek 1583. The synod judged it "superfluous" to subscribe the new Harmony of confessions published in Switzerland, since Poland had its own "sure norm and bond" of concord.

Synod of Włocławek (Wladislaw), 20 June 1583 (Sandomierz consensus; Sehling 4, pp. 263–264):

> IV. De harmonia confessionum evangelicarum (pio studio et solerti labore apud helvetios nuper edita) in eam sententiam itum est. Siquidem nos in Polonia et Lithuania etc. divino favore, habemus certam concordiae nostrae normam ac vinculum, consensum Sendomiriensem etc. quo tanquam vexillo pacis in unum domini exercitum conjuncti, foeliciter utimur, proinde isti harmoniae coeterisve concordiae formulis subscribere, ac eas in nostras ecclesias inferre, supervacaneum esse censemus.

IV. Concerning the Harmony of the evangelical confessions (lately published among the Swiss with godly zeal and skilful labour), the decision went to this opinion: since we in Poland and Lithuania etc. have by divine favour a sure norm and bond of our concord, the Consensus of Sandomierz etc., which we happily use as a banner of peace, joined in one army of the Lord, we judge it superfluous to subscribe that Harmony or other formulas of concord, and to bring them into our churches.

Thorn 1595. The last synod of the union in the corpus explained article XIII of the Posen articles. A Christian is not so bound to his own minister that he may never use the other's, for instance when the other's church is nearer. But no minister may receive those who leave their own pastor to escape his discipline. Synod of Thorn, 1595 (Sandomierz consensus; Sehling 4, p. 266):

> Declarando decimum tertium consignationis articulum, sic sentimus oviculas Christi, nullius ministri, dominio et jugo ita subjici debere ut justis intercedentibus causis et circumstantiis, non liceat ipsis alterius coetus et ordinis ministrorum opera uti; verbi gratia, ratione habita circumstantiae loci, et propinquitatis templi, et in similibus occasionibus, aequisque rationibus et causis. Quod si vero aliqui auditores scandala excitantes et impie viventes, offensi disciplina et reprehensione proprii pastoris, ab eo secedere et alterius pastoris majoris licentiae et impunitatis peccandi causa, curae se committere velint, hujusmodi, nulla ratione alterius coetus minister recipere debet

Declaring the thirteenth article of the Consignatio, we judge thus: that the little sheep of Christ ought not to be so subjected to the dominion and yoke of any minister that it be not lawful for them, when just causes and circumstances intervene, to use the services of the ministers of the other congregation and order; for example, having regard to the circumstance of the place and the nearness of the church, and on like occasions, and for fair reasons and causes. But if any hearers who stir up offences and live impiously, offended at the discipline and rebuke of their own pastor, would depart from him and commit themselves to the care of another pastor for the sake of greater licence and impunity in sinning, the minister of the other congregation ought by no means to receive such.

The same synod set common days of public prayer and fasting for "all our evangelical churches", on the four Ember days of the year (art. XV; Sehling 4, p. 267).

Before the union. Five years before Sandomierz the Lutheran synod of Gostyń had bound its ministers to the Augsburg Confession. Synod of Gostyń, 1565 (Sehling 4, p. 268):

> Art. 1. Puritatem doctrinae evangelicae, nec non administrationis sacramentorum uno spiritu profitemur omnes; abhorremusque, ac damnamus, qui diversum sentiunt ac docent.

Art. 1. We all profess with one spirit the purity of the evangelical doctrine and also of the administration of the sacraments; and we abhor and condemn those who think and teach otherwise.

18.11.4 Two congregations under one lord

Rappoltstein, 1561. In the Leber valley under the lords of Rappoltstein there were two congregations: a Lutheran German one and a Reformed French one. In May 1561 their lord had them meet to see whether they could agree in confession and ceremonies. The French pastor, Arnaud Banc, offered to sign the Augsburg Confession if articles 10 and 11 were rightly interpreted. The German side then put four demands. Rappoltstein, Vergleich zwischen der deutschen und der französischen Gemeinde, 28 May 1561 (Reformed; Sehling 20/2, p. 133):

> Als auff solches der richter die assidenten befragt, hatt er dem pfarher angezeigt, es sey der teutschen meinung, das er seyner gemein dise vier artickel fürhielt: 1. Ob dieselbig die Augspurgische Confession anhnemen [sic] unnd underschreiben wöll, 2. Ob sy mitt den teutschen gleiche ceremonien halten wöll, 3. So etwas zuendern sey, das dasselb ohn bewilligung der teutschen kirchen nicht gschech, 4. Ob die welsch kirch die teutsche für das haupt erkennen wöl.

When thereupon the judge had asked the assessors, he declared to the pastor that it was the Germans' mind that he should put these four articles to his congregation: 1. Whether the same would accept and subscribe the Augsburg Confession; 2. Whether they would keep like ceremonies with the Germans; 3. If anything were to be changed, that the same should not happen without the consent of the German church; 4. Whether the French church would acknowledge the German as the head.

The French congregation accepted the Augsburg Confession, with articles 10 and 11 "godly and rightly interpreted". It kept its freedom in ceremonies and refused to be subordinate. On 8 June 1561 the lord, Egenolph IV, decided that both churches might keep their own ceremonies and usages. The Germans had the Mattenkirche near Markirch, the French the church at Eckerich (Sehling 20/2, pp. 102–103, editor). The editor adds that the Strasbourg ministry's president, Marbach, had found "a Genevan phrase" in the French confession. He objected to its articles on predestination, its rejection of emergency baptism and its exclusion of unbelievers from the Supper (Sehling 20/2, p. 100, editor).

The strangers' church at Frankfurt, 1554. The Walloon refugees whom Valérand Poullain brought to Frankfurt in 1554 had the council's leave to use the church of the Weißfrauen convent (Sehling 9, p. 489, editor). Their Liturgia sacra (Reformed) requires every member to subscribe the congregation's confession first. The confession's title says it must be approved and subscribed "before they are either reckoned to the church or communicate in any part of the sacraments in the church of strangers at Frankfurt". The English exiles signed it "in the name of their whole church" (Sehling 9, p. 586). The council had let the English share the Weißfrauen church only on condition that they "joined the ceremonies of the Walloons and formed no separatist congregation" (Sehling 9, p. 490, editor).

18.12 How the rules changed

The rules moved with the confessional map. In the first decades the other church was Rome. From the 1560s the Lutheran orders turned against the "Sacramentarians". From the 1580s the Reformed territories turned the same rules against the Lutherans.

1520s and 1530s: separation from Rome.

- Absolution. The first orders took confession from the monks (Hamburg 1529) and called the priests' absolution a deceit (Capito 1527, Sam 1528) (§18.6.1).
- The Supper. It was closed to papists and to those who denied the presence (Reutlingen c. 1531). It was opened to the evangelical-minded parishioners of papist pastors (Brandenburg-Nürnberg 1528, 1533) (§18.5).

- Going out. The cities forbade their people to go out to the Mass (Strasbourg 1531; Friedberg 1535; Frankfurt 1542) (§18.5.4).
- Prayer. The orders prayed for heretics and the obstinate (Heilbronn 1530, Ulm 1531) (§18.9.1).
- Ordination. The preachers still held Roman orders, and their churches defended them (Hannover 1536). From 1535 Wittenberg ordained only those who lacked episcopal orders (§18.7.1).
- Agreements. The Wittenberg Concord of 1536 joined the Saxon and the Upper German churches (Ulm 1537) (§18.11.1).
- The Catholic side. Jülich-Cleves-Berg (1533) shut out the strange preachers, and the Count Palatine's government at Amberg (1539) would not have a minister ordained by Luther.

1540s and 1550s: the evangelical churches order their own.

- The parish. The Albertine visitors (1540) bound the Supper to the parish.
- Ordination. The Wittenberg Reformation (1545) would still have taken ordination from bishops who accepted the gospel (§13.10.1). Buxtehude (1552) and Hamburg (1556) gave up the bishops' consecration as given "only for the godless service" (§18.7.1).
- The Interim. Brandenburg-Ansbach's Auctuarium (1548) prayed for unbelievers and sects in place of the canon.
- The Brethren. Prussia received the Bohemian Brethren (1549) after examining their confession (§18.11.2).
- Hard and soft lines. Magdeburg (1554) closed sacrament, font and churchyard to obstinate papists, and would not hold for Christians those who took papist orders. Hesse (1556; Moderate Reformed) admitted papists as godparents. Waldeck (1556) and Rostock (1557) shut the papists, Anabaptists and Sacramentarians out of the Supper (§18.5.1).
- The Peace of Augsburg (1555). It is the frame for the later settlements in towns of two religions (§18.9.3).

1560s and 1570s: against the Sacramentarians.

- Fellowship. The Sacramentarians became the chief "other" of the Lutheran orders. Bremen (1561) would have no Sacramentarian godparents. Pfalz-Zweibrücken (1564) forbade fellowship with them, and its ordinands renounced "Calvin's error" (1567). Kurland (1570) and Hohenlohe (1579) listed every sect with which a Christian might have no fellowship (§18.3).
- Baptism. Lay baptism and exorcism became marks of confession (Wolfstein 1574; later Henneberg 1582, Soest 1609) (§18.4.1).
- Ministers. Wolfstein (1574) forbade disputes with Calvinist and papist pastors alike (§18.8.3).
- Mixed towns. Settlements were made at Wetzlar (1561), Rappoltstein (1561), Hagenau (1565) and Wimpfen (1568) (§18.9.3, §18.11.4).
- Poland. The Lutheran synod of Gostyń (1565) still condemned those who thought otherwise. Five years later the Consensus of Sandomierz (1570) and the Posen articles opened pulpit and altar between Lutherans, Reformed and Brethren. Kraków (1573) and Petrikau (1578) renewed them (§18.11.3).
- Patience. Pfalz-Neuburg (1576) and Electoral Saxony (1580) admitted papists and erring Sacramentarians as godparents, and Pfalz-Neuburg gave the Supper to sick Calvinists. The same Pfalz-Neuburg re-ordained priests from the papacy "in the stead of a recantation" (§18.7.2).

1580s to the 1610s: the Reformed territories and the Lutheran answer.

- Reformed rules. The counties of the Wetterau and the Rhine and the Palatinate turned Reformed, and made their own fellowship rules. Nassau-Dillenburg (1582) admitted to the Supper only those who confessed "the Reformed doctrine". Nassau-Diez (1585) had foreign pastors arrested. Kurpfalz (1595), Hanau (1599/1602), Ysenburg (1598), Sayn (1606, 1619) and Homburg (1605) forbade going out to Lutheran or Catholic neighbours (§18.5.4).
- Reformed pulpits. Kurpfalz (1584), the Upper Palatinate (1598) and Katzenelnbogen (1600) forbade condemnations of the other evangelicals (§18.8.3).
- Lutheran rules. The Lutheran orders answered:
  - Landau (1582) refused a Calvinist godmother and kept a Calvinist doctor from the Supper abroad.
  - Soest (1590) asked for the "body of doctrine" before admitting a preacher to the pulpit.
  - The Wild- and Rhinegraviate (1597) held that to commune with a church is to belong to it.
  - Strasbourg (1597) forbade its burghers to go to the Reformed at Bischweiler.
  - Schwäbisch Hall (1615, after decrees of 1564 and 1570) let the people seek "pure" sacraments where they were to be found.

- Exceptions. Strasbourg's magistrate (1601) would not bar Calvinist godparents. Beza and Ursinus approved Reformed communion at Lutheran altars. Lambrechtsneukirchen gave the Supper to 694 people from the Reformed Upper Palatinate in 1606.
- Cities of two religions. Augsburg (1591), Amberg (1593), Leutkirch (1603) and Hagenau (1614) bound their preachers to keep the peace (§18.9.3).
- Poland. Włocławek (1583) and Thorn (1595) renewed the union. Thorn let Christians use the other confession's minister for just cause, and set common days of prayer and fasting for all the united churches (§18.11.3).

What did not change was the baptism. No order in the corpus repeats a baptism given in the name of the Trinity, whether by a priest, a midwife or a heretic (§18.4.1).

18.13 Table by order

The table lists every order quoted or cited above, grouped by region and in date order within each region. Rule gives the order's rule on fellowship in a few words. Orders that are not Lutheran are labelled, and the editors' accounts are marked as Sehling's introduction or note.

Scripture index

This index lists the passages of Scripture that the book cites by book and chapter: in its own text, in the orders it quotes and in the translations. Each passage is followed by the sections that cite it, and each section number is a link. A section that cites a passage more than once is listed once, and a reference to a whole chapter is listed apart from references to its verses. A reference in the opening pages of a chapter, before its first section, is listed under the chapter.

Books are named and psalms numbered as in the Authorized Version, with the Apocrypha between the Testaments. Where an order numbers a psalm as the Vulgate does, as "the 42nd psalm" for Iudica me, the passage is listed under its English number. Texts named only by their titles, such as the Magnificat or the Aaronic blessing, are not indexed unless a chapter is given.

Index of persons

This index lists the historical persons whom the book names: the reformers, princes, prelates, pastors, schoolmasters and musicians of the period, in the orders it quotes, in Sehling's titles of them and in its own text, and the Fathers and other persons of earlier centuries. Each person is followed by the sections that name them, and each section number is a link. A section that names a person more than once is listed once. A person named in the opening pages of a chapter, before its first section, is listed under the chapter.

Biblical persons, saints named for their feast days, and later editors and scholars are not indexed. Rulers are as a rule entered under their first names, with title and territory, as "August, Elector of Saxony", and others under their surnames. Each person is listed under one heading, whatever form of the name the text uses: "Doctor Martinus" is listed under Luther and "Pomeranus" under Bugenhagen.

Glossary

This glossary explains the rarer terms of liturgy, church order and church life that the book uses, in English, German and Latin. Where the book treats a term at length, the entry ends with a link to that section. The usual English renderings of the orders' German terms are listed under Translations in the Conventions, and the traditions and the abbreviations under Traditions and the Interim and Abbreviations. They are not repeated here.

A

- accessus (Latin). The priest's private preparation for Mass, an office of psalms and prayers said before he went to the altar. Several orders recast it as the congregation's Veni Sancte Spiritus before the introit. See §3.3.1, §3.3.7.
- acolyte. The highest of the four minor orders, who carried the candles and served the wine and water at the altar. Only the Bohemian Brethren kept acolytes. See §16.3.4, and minor orders.
- acted ceremonies. The dramatic ceremonies of the medieval year: the Palm Sunday ass (Palmesel), the Good Friday grave, the Easter image, the Ascension figure, the Whitsun dove and the rocking of the Christmas cradle (Kindelwiegen). The orders abolished them. See §12.10.10.
- adiaphora (Greek). "Things indifferent": ceremonies neither commanded nor forbidden by God, which a church may keep or drop for good order. The orders treat vestments, images and many ceremonies as such. See §14.3.
- Adiutorium (Latin). The versicle Adiutorium nostrum in nomine Domini, "Our help is in the name of the Lord", which opened the priest's preparation and many offices. It is the one opening versicle that survives widely in the evangelical orders. See §3.3.1.
- Agende (German; also Agenda, Agendbüchlein). The service book of a church: the forms for the Mass, baptism, marriage, burial and the other rites, printed with the church order or apart from it. See §1.2.4.
- alb (Latin alba). The long white linen tunic worn under the other vestments. See §14.7.1.
- alternatim (Latin). Performance in alternation: the organ takes a verse or stanza in turn with the choir or the people, and the verse it takes is played, not sung. See §9.3.3.
- amice (Latin amictus). The linen cloth put on round the neck before the alb.
- Amt (German). (1) The service, above all the communion service (das Amt, Hochamt). (2) A district of a territory under the prince's officer, the Amtmann, as "Amt Wittenberg".
- Anabaptists. The radical movement that rejected infant baptism and baptized believers. The orders proceed against it, save the Münster council's mandate of 1534, which tolerated it. See §1.3.6.
- angelicum (Latin). See Kyrie chants.
- antiphon. A short sung text, usually from Scripture, sung before and after a psalm or canticle in the office, or on its own.
- antiphoner. The choir book of the chants of the office: antiphons, responsories and hymns. The Lutheran antiphoners of Spangenberg (1545) and Lossius (1553) purged and reprinted the old chant. See §10.11.2.
- Auctuarium (Latin). The Mehrung der vorigen Kirchenordnung of Brandenburg-Ansbach (1548), the adaptation of its church order to the Interim, and one of the Interim orders in the set. See §1.4.
